TEACHER'S EDITION

PEARSON

This work is protected by United States copyright laws and is provided solely for the use ofteachers and administrators in teaching courses and assessing student learning in their classes and schools. Dissemination or sale of any part of this work (including on the World Wide Web) will destroy the integrity of the work and is not permitted.

Acknowledgments appear on pages $861-864$, which constitute an extension of this copyright page.
Copyright © 2009 by Mary Magruder Smith. All rights reserved. Printed in the United States of America. This publication is protected by copyright, and permission should be obtained from the publisher prior to any prohibited reproduction, storage in a retrieval system, or transmission in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or likewise. For information regarding permission(s), write to Pearson Curriculum Rights and Permissions Department, One Lake Street, Upper Saddle River, New Jersey 07458.

Pearson ${ }^{\circ}$ is a trademark, in the U.S. and/or in other countries, of Pearson plc or its affiliates.
Prentice Hall ${ }^{\circ}$ is a trademark, in the U.S. and/or in other countries, of Pearson Education, Inc., or its affiliates.

Revised yearly by William A. McClenaghan,

Professor Emeritus, Oregon State University

Magruder's American Government, first published in 1917 and revised annually, is an enduring symbol of the author's faith in American ideals and American institutions. The life of Frank Abbott Magruder (1882-1949) was an outstanding example of Americanism at its very best. His career as a teacher, author, and tireless worker in civic and religious undertakings remains an inspiring memory to all who knew him.

Grant Wiggins, Program Consultant

Grant Wiggins is the President of Authentic Education in Hopewell, New Jersey. He earned his Ed.D. from Harvard University and his B.A. from St. John's College in Annapolis. Grant consults with schools, districts, and state education departments on a variety of reform matters; organizes conferences and workshops; and develops print materials and Web resources on curricular change. He is the co-author, with Jay McTighe, of Understanding By Design and The Understanding By Design Handbook, the award-winning and highly successful materials on curriculum published by ASCD. His work has been supported by the Pew Charitable Trusts, the Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation, and the National Science Foundation.

Over the past twenty years, Wiggins has worked on some of the most influential reform initiatives in the country, including Vermont's portfolio system and Ted Sizer's Coalition of Essential Schools. He has established statewide Consortia devoted to assessment reform for the states of North Carolina and New Jersey. Grant is the author of Educative Assessment and Assessing Student Per formance, both published by Jossey-Bass. His many articles have appeared in such journals as Educational Leadership and Phi Delta Kappan.

Academic Consultants

George C. Edwards, II
Department of Political Science
Texas A&M University College Station, Texas

Peter Woll

Department of Politics
Brandeis University
Waltham, Massachusetts

Daniel M. Shea

Department of Political Science
Allegheny College
Meadville, Pennsylvania

Michele Swers

Department of Government
Georgetown University
Washington, D.C.

Teacher Reviewers

C. Patrick Collins

Belen Jesuit Preparatory School
Miami, Florida
Susan W. Constantinides
York High School
Yorktown, Virginia
Kathy DeForge
Marcellus Central Schools
Marcellus, New York

Gary Ford

Mt. Lebanon High School
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Todd Gibson

Muncie Central High School
Muncie, Indiana

Judy Givens

Smoky Hill High School
Denver, Colorado
Van Hadley
Roy High School
Roy, Utah

Cathy McCaffrey

Bolingbrook High School
Bolingbrook, Illinois

Juan Price

West Seattle High School
Seattle, Washington

Melissa Richards

Hobbs Municipal Schools
Hobbs, New Mexico

Greg Snoad

Mauldin High School
Mauldin, South Carolina

ELL/ESL Consultant

Joe Berkowitz
John Ferguson High School
Miami, Florida
Program Advisor
Michal Howden
Social Studies Consultant
Zionsville, Indiana

Foundations of American Government

Essential Question What should be the goals of government?

|  | Professional Development Constitution of the United States Skills Handbook | T1 C1 SH1 |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| Chapter | Principles of Government | 2 |
| Is government necessary? | 1 Government and the State | 4 |
|  | 2 Forms of Government | 18 |
|  | - Citizenship 101: Volunteering | 19 |
|  | 3 Basic Concepts of Democracy | 20 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 25 |
| Chapter | Origins of American Government | 28 |
| How does the Constitution reflect the times in which it was written? | 1 Our Political Beginnings | 30 |
|  | - Issues of Our Time: Adopting a Constitution | 35 |
|  | 2 The Coming of Independence | 36 |
|  | Declaration of Independence | 43 |
|  | 3 The Critical Period | 48 |
|  | 4 Creating the Constitution | 52 |
|  | 5 Ratifying the Constitution | 59 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 63 |
| Chapter | The Constitution | 66 |
| How has the Constitution lasted through changing times? | 1 The Six Basic Principles | 68 |
|  | Landmark Decisions: Marbury v. Madison, 1803 | 76 |
|  | 2 Formal Amendment | 78 |
|  | Citizenship 101: Identifying Political Roots and Attitudes | 84 |
|  | 3 Constitutional Change by Other Means | 85 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 89 |
| Chapter | Federalism | 92 |
| Is the federal system the best way to govern the United States? | 1 Federalism: The Division of Power | 94 |
|  | 2 The National Government and the 50 States | 103 |
|  | - Issues of Our Time: The Environment and States' Rights | 110 |
|  | 3 Interstate Relations | 111 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 115 |

Inite? Politioal Behavior: Goveriment by the People

Essential Question In what ways should people participate in public affairs?

| Chapter | Political Parties | 120 |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| Does the two-party system help or harm democracy? | 1 The Two-Party System and What They Do | 123 |
|  | 2 The Two-Party System in American History | 130 |
|  | 3 The Minor Parties | 137 |
|  | $ Citizenship 101: Working On a Political Campaign | 141 |
|  | 4 Party Organization | 142 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 147 |
| Chapter | Voters and Voter Behavior | 150 |
| Why do voters act as they do? | 1 The Right to Vote | 152 |
|  | 2 Voter Qualifications | 156 |
|  | 3 Suffrage and Civil Rights | 164 |
|  | $ Citizenship 101: Casting Your Vote | 169 |
|  | 4 Voter Behavior | 170 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 179 |
| Chapter | The Electoral Process | 182 |
| How fair and effective is the electoral process? | 1 The Nominating Process | 184 |
|  | 2 Elections | 193 |
|  | $\rangle$ Issues of Our Time: Campaign Finance | 200 |
|  | 3 Money and Elections | 201 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 209 |
| Chapter | Mass Media and Public opinion | 212 |
| What is the place of the media and public opinion in a democracy? | 1 The Formation of Public Opinion | 214 |
|  | 2 Measuring Public Opinion | 220 |
|  | $ Citizenship 101: Conducting a Poll | 227 |
|  | 3 The Mass Media | 228 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 237 |
| Chapter | Interest Groups | 240 |
| To what extent do interest groups advance or harm democracy? | 1 The Nature of Interest Groups | 242 |
|  | 2 Types of Interest Groups | 247 |
|  | Issues of Our Time:  Lobbying in the Federal Government | 253 |
|  | 3 Interest Groups at Work | 254 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 261 |

Go online with Unit 2
Find these interactive resources at
PearsonSuccessNet.com

GOVERNMENT ONLINE
How Government Works

- Minor Parties in History
- Five Methods of Nomination
- What Happens to a Ballot
- Grass-roots Organizing

GOVERNMENT ONLINE
Government on the Go

- Political Dictionary
- Audio Review
- Downloadable

Interactivities

GOVERNMENT ONLINE
WebQuest
Explore Essential Questions online
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Government Online

- Interactivities
- In the News

Citizenship Activity
Pack

- Online Self-Test
- Audio Tours
- Updates
- Documents

Essential Question What makes a successful Congress?

| Chapter | Congress | 266 |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| Whose views should members of Congress represent when voting? | 1 The National Legislature | 268 |
|  | - Citizenship 101: Writing a Letter to a Public Official | 272 |
|  | 2 The House of Representatives | 273 |
|  | 3 The Senate | 281 |
|  | 4 The Members of Congress | 285 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 291 |
| Chapter | Powers of Congress | 294 |
| What should be the limits on the powers of Congress? | 1 The Expressed Powers of Money and Commerce | 296 |
|  | 2 The Other Expressed Powers | 305 |
|  | - Landmark Decisions: McCulloch v. Maryland, 1819 | 310 |
|  | 3 The Implied Powers | 312 |
|  | - Issues of Our Time: Congressional War Powers | 317 |
|  | 4 The Nonlegislative Powers | 318 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 325 |
| Chapter | Congress in Action | 328 |
|  | 1 Congress Organizes | 330 |
| Can and should the | 2 Committees in Congress | 338 |
| lawmaking process be | 3 How a Bill Becomes a Law: The House | 343 |
| improved? | $\cdots$ Issues of Our Time: Minority Rights | 350 |
|  | 4 The Bill in the Senate | 351 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 357 |

Go online with Unit 3 Find these interactive resources at PearsonSuceessNet.com

GOVERNMENT ONLINE How Government Works

- Gerrymandering: Choosing Their Voters
- The Impeachment Process
- Congressional Checks on the Presidential TreatyMaking Power
- How a Bill Becomes a Law

GOVERNMENT ONLINE Government on the Go

- Political Dictionary
- Audio Review
- Downloadable Interactivities

GOVERNMENT ONLINE WebQuest

- Explore Essential Questions online Government Online
- Interactivities
- In the News
- Citizenship Activity Pack
- Online Self-Test
- Audio Tours
- Updates
- Documents

Essential Question What makes a good President?

| Chapter | The Presidency | 362 |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| Does the current electoral process result in the best candidates for President? | 1 The President's Job Description | 364 |
|  | - Citizenship 101: Evaluating Leadership | 369 |
|  | 2 Presidential Succession and the Vice Presidency | 370 |
|  | 3 Presidential Selection: The Framers' Plan | 374 |
|  | 4 President Nominations | 377 |
|  | 5 The Election | 386 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 395 |
| Chapter | The Presidency in Action | 398 |
|  | 1 The Growth of Presidential Powers | 400 |
| How much power should the President have? | - Issues of Our Time: Expanding President Powers | 404 |
|  | 2 The President's Executive Powers | 405 |
|  | - Landmark Decisions: United States v. Nixon, 1974 | 410 |
|  | 3 Diplomatic and Military Powers | 412 |
|  | 4 Legislative and Judicial Powers | 417 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 421 |
| Chapter | Government at Work: The Bureaucracy | 424 |
|  | 1 The Federal Bureaucracy | 426 |
| Is the bureaucracy essential to good government? | 2 The Executive Office of the President | 431 |
|  | 3 The Cabinet Departments | 435 |
|  | 4 Independent Agencies | 441 |
|  | - Issues of Our Time: The Size of Government | 450 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 451 |
| Chapter | Financing Government | 454 |
|  | 1 Taxes and Other Revenue | 456 |
| How should the federal budget reflect Americans' priorities? | 2 Borrowing and the Public Debt | 463 |
|  | 3 Spending and the Budget | 467 |
|  | - Citizenship 101: Analyzing Television News Programs | 472 |
|  | 4 Fiscal and Monetary Policy | 473 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 477 |
| Chapter | Foreign Policy and National Defense | 480 |
|  | 1 Foreign Affairs and National Security | 482 |
| How should the United States interact with other countries? | 2 Other Foreign and Defense Agencies | 488 |
|  | 3 American Foreign Policy Overview | 495 |
|  | - Issues of Our Time: America's Role in the World | 504 |
|  | 4 Foreign Aide and Alliances | 505 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 513 |

Go online with Unit 4 Find these interactive resources at PearsonSuccessNet.com

GOVERNMENT ONLINE How Government Works

Presidential Succession

- The Race to the Presidency
- Confirmation Process
- The Executive Branch
- The Executive Departments
- Regulatory Commissions
- Creating the Federal Budget
- The State Department
- Civilian Control of the Military
- Department of Homeland Security

GOVERNMENT ONLINE Government on the Go

- Political Dictionary
- Audio Review
- Downloadable

Interactivities

GOVERNMENT ONLINE
WebQuest
Explore Essential Questions online

(.) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Government Online

- Interactivities
- In the News
- Citizenship Activity Pack
- Online Self-Test
- Audio Tours
- Updates
- Documents

1) $\left[\begin{array}{l}1 \\ \hline\end{array}\right.$  The Judicial Branch

Essential Question What should be the role of the judicial branch?

| Chapter | The Federal Court System | 518 |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| Does the structure of the federal court system allow it to effectively administer justice? | 1 The National Judiciary | 520 |
|  | - Issues of Our Time: Judicial Activism v. Judicial Restraint | 527 |
|  | 2 The Inferior Courts | 528 |
|  | 3 The Supreme Court | 532 |
|  | 4 The Special Courts | 538 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 541 |
| Chapter | Civil Liberties: First Amendment Freedoms | 544 |
| How can the judiciary balance individual rights with the common good? | 1 The Unalienable Rights | 546 |
|  | 2 Freedom of Religion | 551 |
|  | 3 Freedom of Speech and Press | 559 |
|  | - Citizenship 101: Participating in Public Debate | 568 |
|  | 4 Freedom of Assembly and Petition | 569 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 573 |
| Chapter | Civil Liberties: Protecting Individual Rights | 576 |
| To what extent has the judiciary protected the rights of privacy, security, and personal freedom? | 1 Due Process of Law | 578 |
|  | 2 Freedom and Security of the Person | 583 |
|  | Wrssues of Our Time: Balancing Security and Liberty | 591 |
|  | 3 Rights of the Accused | 592 |
|  | - Landmark Decisions: Miranda v. Arizona, 1966 | 600 |
|  | 4 Punishment | 602 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 607 |
| Chapter | Civil Liberties: Equal Justice Under Law | 610 |
| Why are there ongoing struggles for civil rights? | 1 Diversity and Discrimination in American Society | 612 |
|  | 2 Equality Before the Law | 618 |
|  | ") Landmark Decisions: Brown v. Board of Education, 1954 | 624 |
|  | 3 Federal Civil Rights Laws | 626 |
|  | $\cdots$ Citizenship 101: Writing a Letter to An Editor | 631 |
|  | 4 American Citizenship | 632 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 639 |

Bomparative Politipal anil Ebonomio systems

Essential Question How should a government meet the needs of its people?

| Chapter | Comparative Political Systems | 644 |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| How should you measure different governments? | 1 Historical Political Systems | 646 |
|  | - Citizenship 101: Using the Internet As A News Service | 652 |
|  | 2 Ideas and Revolutions | 653 |
|  | 3 Transitions to Democracy | 661 |
|  | 4 World Democracies Today | 666 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 673 |
| Chapter | Comparative Economic Systems | 676 |
| To what extent should governments participate in the economy? | 1 Capitalism | 678 |
|  | 2 Socialism and Communism | 685 |
|  | - Issues of Our Time: Globalization and Free Trade | 692 |
|  | 3 The Global Economy | 693 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 701 |

Go online with Unit 6

Find these interactive resources at PearsonsuchessNet.enm

GOVERNMENT ONLINE

How Government Works

- Amending State Constitutions
- Initiative and Referendum
- Choosing Executive Officers
- Criminal and Civil Law
- Municipalities and Townships
- Alternate Forms of City Government
- State and Local Spending
- State and Local Revenues

GOVERNMENT ONLINE
Government on the Go

- Political Dictionary
- Audio Review
- Downloadable Interactivities

GOVERNMENT ONLINE
WebQuest

- Explore Essential Questions online

GOVERNMENT ONLINE
Government Online

- Interactivities
- In the News
- Citizenship Activity Pack
- Online Self-Test
- Audio Tours
- Updates
- Documents

Essential Question What is the right balance of local, State, and federal government?

| Chapter | Governing the States | 706 |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| How much power should State government have? | 1 State Constitutions | 708 |
|  | 2 State Legislatures | 714 |
|  | 3 The Governor and State Administration | 720 |
|  | 4 In the Courtroom | 727 |
|  | - Citizenship 101: Serving On A Jury | 731 |
|  | 5 The Courts and Their Judges | 732 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 737 |
| Chapter | Local Government and Finance | 740 |
| How local should government be? | 1 Counties, Towns, and Townships | 742 |
|  | 2 Cities and Metropolitan Areas | 749 |
|  | 3 Providing Important Services | 756 |
|  | W Issues of Our Time: State Taxation and Spending | 760 |
|  | 4 Financing State and Local Government | 761 |
|  | Quick Study Guide and Assessment | 767 |
| Reference |  | 771 |
|  | The United States: A Statistical Profile | 772 |
|  | Presidents of the United States | 774 |
|  | Map of the United States | 776 |
|  | Map of the World | 778 |
|  | Historical Documents | 780 |
|  | Supreme Court Glossary | 805 |
|  | English/Spanish Glossary | 815 |
|  | Index | 836 |
|  | Acknowledgments | 861 |

Learning With Essential Questions

Magruder's American Government is organized around Essential Questions. An essential question is a launching pad for exploring ideas. It doesn't have just one right answer. The answer to an essential question changes as you learn more or as circumstances change.

GOVERNMENT ONLINE Webquest
To complete the Chapter Essential Question Webquest, visit
PearsonSuccessNet.com

xii Special Features

Learning Online

Online Student Center

It all starts with the Online Student Center! There you can access a wide array of 21 st century learning tools to help personalize learning.

Access Magruder's American Government Online

Go to the Online Student Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com to find your textbook.

Connect with content using Government • on the Go Audio and Video Study anywhere, anytime with downloadable audio and video files.

- Political Dictionary Audio in English
- Political Dictionary Audio in Spanish
- Audio Review in English
- Audio Review in Spanish
- Audio Tour Animations

4 Interact with online activities
Online features such as "How Government Works" help you visualize key concepts and information.

Research online with Wehquests
Research current and relevant information using a wide range of preselected, reliable Web sites.

Monitor progress with online assessment

Online self-tests help you monitor your learning.

Study Skills

- Prepare To Read

Get more from your reading by answering the guiding questions and filling in notetaking graphic organizers that appear at the beginning of each section.

Graphic organizers help you answer the guiding question at the beginning of each section.

Quick Study Guide

Review for tests with charts that organize unit and chapter Essential Questions, political dictionary terms, and the key concepts of each chapter.

A graphic organizer helps you see how the guiding questions for each chapter help you answer the chapter's Essential Question.

Charts, diagrams, and tables summarize key information.

SDCBEA Fatilues

Issues Of Our Time

Confront key issues from new perspectives. Learn the facts behind today's debates.

Adopting a Constitution
35
The Environment and States' Rights ....................... 110
(1) Campaign Finance 200
(a) Lobbying in the Federal Government...................... 253
(5) Congressional War Powers317
(2) Minority Rights ..... 350
(7) Expanding Presidential Powers ..... 404
(5) The Size of Government ..... 450
(1) America's Role in the World ..... 504
(T) Judicial Restraint vs. Activism ..... 527
(1) Balancing Security and Liberty ..... 591
(T) Globalization and Free Trade ..... 692
(1) State Taxation and Spending ..... 760

A timeline shows the connection between today's debate and past events.

Many charts, graphs, diagrams, and illustrations are expanded online with interactivities, audio tours, and updates. To view these enhanced graphics, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com The on these pages indicates an online

$\underset{\text { Track no }}{\text { Bancer }}$ Security and Liberty

Considef the viewpoints of prominent Americans on the issues that impact our lives.

Citizenship 101

Learn to to be an active citizen.

(4) Volunteering19
(5) Identifying Political Roots and Attitudes.................... 84
(T) How to Work on a Political Campaign141
(1) Casting Your Vote ..... 169
(a) Conducting a Pol ..... 227
(7) Writing a Letter to a Public Official ..... 272
(7) Evaluating Leadership ..... 369
(1) How to Analyze Television News Programs ..... 472
(5) Participating in Public Debate ..... 568
(4) Writing a Letter to the Editor ..... 631
(7) Using the Internet as a News Source ..... 652
Serving on a Jury ..... 731 skills with online activities.

Focus on the Supreme Court

Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court

Learn the complete story behind groundbreaking decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Supreme Court-at-a-Glance

Identify the defining facts of important Supreme Court cases.

Ex Parte Milligan,1866....................................................... 22
Bush v. Gore, 2000....................................................... 388
Near v. Minnesota, 1931 ................................................. 562
Mapp v. Ohio, 1961 ..................................................... 588
Gideon v. Wainwright, 1963 .......................................... 597
Plessy v. Ferguson, 1896.............................................. 619
See the Supreme Court Glossary for summaries of key cases, p. 805.

- From The Constitution

Trace enduring government concepts to the words of the U.S. Constitution.

The Connecticut Compromise ......................................... 57 Term Limits ..... 368
The State of the Union ..... 86
Reserved Powers ..... 95
1st Amendment ..... 553
4th Amendment ..... 586
The Commerce Clause ..... 298

Focus on passages from the United States Constitution.

Learn the significance behind key constitutional principles.

4th Amendment
endile
The right of the people to be secure inable searches and seipapers, and effects, agaiated, and no Warrants shall issue, but zures, shall not be vo, supported by Oath or affirmation, and upon probable cause, suppored the be searched, and the perparticularly descrime seized.
min
FROM THE CONSTITUTION Probable Cause The 4th Amendmen warrant. However, officers may stop and frisk a person without a warrant if they hat constitutes suppicion that a crime is about to be comm Chief Justice William probable cause and reasonable suspicion? "They are commonsense, Rehnquist answered that question with the factual and practical con nontechnical conceptions in which reasonable and prudent men siderations of everyday ife." Actions that the Court has accepted as not legal tech no and frisk include fleeing from the police, "and justifying and officer's belief that a person is armed and "or Constitutional Principles Howle cause? changed the scope of probable cause?

[^0]Recall the words and ideas behind today's government with excerpts from the Constitution throughout the text.
25th Amendment, Section 1 ..... 370
5th Amendment ..... 373
Article II, Section 1 ..... 400
Article II, Section 1, Clause 8 ..... 405
Article II, Section 2, Clause 2 ..... 406
Article II, Section 3 ..... 417
Article II, Section 2, Clause 1 ..... 419
Article I, Section 8, Clause 1 ..... 456
Article I, Section 9, Clause 4 ..... 458
16th Amendment ..... 458
Article I, Section 9, Clause 7 ..... 469
Article III, Section 1 ..... 520
Article II, Section II, Clause 2 ..... 524
14th Amendment, Section 1 ..... 549
9th Amendment ..... 550
2nd Amendment ..... 585
5th Amendment ..... 594
6th Amendment ..... 596
8th Amendment ..... 602
14th Amendment, Section 1 ..... 632

- How Government Works

Find out about the processes by which our government functions through detailed diagrams and infographics.

The Three Powers of Government............................. 5
Choosing a Chief Executive....................................... 17
(5) Checks and Balances 73
(1) Amending the Constitution ....................................... 79 Concurrent Powers ................................................... 100Louisiana Becomes a State ....................................... 106 Three Types of Federal Grants................................. 108 How Parties Communicate ..................................... 125
(5) Minor Parties in History 139
Registering to Vote ..... 159
Five Methods of Nomination ..... 186
(T) What Happens to a Ballot ..... 194
(1) Grass-roots Organizing ..... 258
(1) Gerrymandering: Choosing Their Voters.................. 276
How Does Copyright Law Affect Me? ..... 306
Electoral Duties of Congress ..... 319The Impeachment Process321
(1) Congressional Checks on the Presidential Treaty-Making Power ..... 322
A Bill in the House ..... 339
(1) How a Bill Becomes a Law ..... 354
(1) Presidential Succession ..... 371
(5) The Race to the Presidency ..... 382
(1) Confirmation Process ..... 407
(1) The Executive Branch ..... 429
Federal Budget ..... 433
(5) The Executive Departments ..... 436
(T) Regulatory Commissions ..... 447
(1) Creating the Federal Budget ..... 470
(1) The State Department ..... 484
(a) Civilian Control of the Military ..... 489
(9) Department of Homeland Security ..... 493
Types of Federal Courts ..... 521
(1) The Appellate Path in the Federal Courts ..... 530
(5) How a Case Reaches the Supreme Court ..... 535
(1) The Lemon Test. ..... 555
(1) Freedoms of Speech and Press ..... 564
(1) Exceptions to the Exclusionary Rule ..... 589
(1) Rights of the Accused ..... 594
Acquiring Citizenship ..... 634
(1) The Federal Reserve System ..... 694
(5) Amending State Constitutions ..... 712
(2) Initiative and Referendum ..... 718
(1) Choosing Executive Officers ..... 725
(1) Criminal and Civil Law ..... 729
County Government Structure ..... 744
(1) Municipalities and Townships ..... 747
(5) Alternate Forms of City Government ..... 752
(T) State and Local Spending ..... 757
State and Local Revenues ..... 763

Infographics, Charts, Graphs, And Tables

Visualize key government concepts and interpret relevant data through infographics, charts, graphs, and tables.

Four Characteristics of the State 6(2) How the State Formed 8
Direct and Indirect Democracy ................................... 13
(3) Democracies and Dictatorships15
Distribution of Power ..... 16
Duties and Responsibilities of Citizenship ..... 23
Elements of a Democratic Government. ..... 25
Major Political Ideas ..... 25
(2) Foundations of American Rights ..... 32
(2) The Road to Independence ..... 38
Common Features of State Constitutions ..... 42
(2) Framers of the Constitution ..... 53(1) The Enlightenmentand American Government................................... 55
(1) The Federalist/Anti-Federalist Argument ..... 60
Ratification of the Constitution ..... 61
Key Facts for Key Documents ..... 63
The Road to the Revolution ..... 63
The Seven Articles of the Constitution ..... 69
(1) Basic Principles of the Constitution ..... 70
Federalism ..... 74
(2) The 27 Amendments ..... 80
The First 10 Amendments ..... 82
The Six Basic Principles ..... 89
The Formal Amendment Process ..... 89
The Nation's Obligations too the States ..... 115
Reserved and Concurrent Powers ..... 115
(1) Political Spectrum ..... 126
Multiparty Versus Two-Party Systems ..... 128
(2) Political Parties from 1800 to Today ..... 134
Strong Minor Party Efforts, 1848 to Today ..... 139
(2) Raising Money for Public Office ..... 144
Local Party Organization ..... 145
Two-Party System in American Government ..... 147
Political Parties in the United States ..... 147
The Five Stages of Expanding Suffrage ..... 153
Residence Requirements ..... 157
(1) Voter Identification ..... 160
Literacy Tests ..... 162
(1) African Americans and the Vote ..... 166
Voter Turnout, 1968-2008 ..... 171
Voter Apathy ..... 172
(1) Voting by Groups in PresidentiaElections174
Expansion of Voting Rights in the U.S. ..... 179
Influences on Voter Behavior ..... 179
Nominating a President. ..... 189 diagrams help deepen your understanding of important concepts.
(T) Office-Group and Party-Column Ballots. ..... 197
(1) Internet Fundraising ..... 202
Overseeing Federal Elections ..... 203
(1) Rising Campaign Costs ..... 204
Path to Elected Office ..... 209
Campaign Donations ..... 209
Regulating Campaign Finance ..... 209
(4) Public Opinion in the United States ..... 215
Political Socialization ..... 217
Using Public Opinion ..... 221
The Effect of Poll Wording on Reliability ..... 223
(1) Evaluating Polls ..... 225
Where Do We Learn About Presidential Campaigns? ..... 229
(1) The Transformation of Mass Media ..... 232
The Mass Media's Impact on Public Opinion ..... 237
Media Influence on American Politics ..... 237
(1) Early Interest Groups ..... 244
(1) The Changing State of Labor ..... 249
Influencing International Events ..... 251
(2) Lobbying in Action ..... 256
How Lobbying Works ..... 261
Features of Interest Groups ..... 261
(1) The Capitol ..... 269
Paths to Congress ..... 279
Senators: Policy and Prestige ..... 282
How Representative Is Congress? ..... 286
How Should Members of Congress Vote? ..... 287
Comparing the House and Senate ..... 291
Reasons for a Bicameral Congress ..... 291
When Your Representative Votes ..... 293
Inherent, Implied, and Expressed Powers ..... 297
The Americans With Disabilities Act ..... 299
(5) Federal Spending ..... 301
(1) What Is Personal Bankruptcy? ..... 302
The Expressed Powers of Congress ..... 305
(1) The Implied Powers of Congress ..... 313
Congress and Education ..... 314
Legislative Checks and Balances ..... 325
Comparing the House and Senate ..... 325
(7) Leadership in the 111 th Congress ..... 333
(7) Party Strength of House and Senate ..... 334
(7) Representation by State, 111 th Congress ..... 335
(1) House Standing Committee Chairs ..... 340
(1) Senate Standing Committee Chairs ..... 341
(1) Congressional Committee Staffers ..... 347
Comparing the House and Senate ..... 357
Types of Bills and Resolutions ..... 357
The Electoral College: Crisis Causes Change ..... 375
Election of 1800 ..... 376
Winner-take-all vs. Proportional Representation ..... 380
(5) Presidential Election Results (1984) ..... 390
(7) Presidential Election Results (2008) ..... 391
The Electoral College Today ..... 392
How the Electoral College Works ..... 395
The Presidency ..... 395
(7) Expanding Executive Power ..... 414
(2) The Power of the Veto ..... 419
The Powers of the President ..... 421
The West Wing ..... 432
Modifying Space Innovations ..... 443
Careers in the Civil Service ..... 444
Staff and Line Agencies ..... 451
Executive Branch ..... 451
(7) Taxes at a Glance ..... 459
(1) Progressive Taxes ..... 461
(1) Surpluses and Deficits ..... 464
(1) Who Owns the Public Debt? ..... 465
(1) Federal Spending Comparison ..... 468
Sources of Government Revenue ..... 477
Influencing the Economy ..... 477
Diplomatic Immunity ..... 486
Passport/Visa ..... 487
(7) Major Military Departments ..... 491
Remember the Maine ..... 496
(1) Cold War Conflicts (1947-1991). ..... 499
(5) The UN by the Numbers ..... 508
(2) The Economic and Social Council ..... 510
Key American Foreign Policies ..... 513
U.S. Foreign Policy Positions ..... 513
(1) Types of Jurisdiction ..... 523
How a Judge Decides ..... 525
(1) Who Is On the Court Today? ..... 536
The Federal Courts ..... 541
How Cases Reach the Court ..... 541
(The 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause ..... 549
Establishment Clause Cases ..... 556
First Amendment Freedoms ..... 573
Due Process ..... 579
(1) Capital Punishment Debate ..... 605
Protections of Freedom and Security ..... 607
Limits on Punishment ..... 607
(1) Diversity in the United States ..... 614
Median Weekly Earnings of Men and Women ..... 616
De Jure Segregation ..... 621
Equal Rights Amendment ..... 627
Equal Rights and Affirmative Action ..... 628
Person's Naturalized, 1908-2006 ..... 633
Segregation in American Society ..... 639
Affirmative Action ..... 639
(1) Roots of the Sovereign State ..... 649
Two Revolutions ..... 654
(1) Latin American Independence ..... 656
(4) Fascism and Communism ..... 659
Democratic Consolidation ..... 663
(5) Divisions in Iraq ..... 664
(7) United Kingdom ..... 668
(1) Mexico ..... 670
Timeline of the Modern State ..... 673
Characteristics of Government ..... 673
(1) Supply and Demand ..... 683
National Healthcare ..... 687
(1) Marxist Economies ..... 688
(a) The Federal Reserve System ..... 694
U.S. Imports and Exports ..... 696
(5) Top U.S. Trade Partners ..... 698
Selected Fast-Growing Occupations ..... 700
Free Enterprise ..... 701
Socialism and Communism ..... 701
Major Economic Institutions ..... 701
Indicators of Prosperity. ..... 704
Elements of State Constitutions ..... 710
Juvenile Justice ..... 734
State Government ..... 737
Legal Terms ..... 737
County Official Duties ..... 744
What Does a Mayor Do? ..... 751
Farms, Cities, Suburbs ..... 754
Local Government Responsibilities ..... 767
Revenues and Expenditures ..... 767
Priorities of Governors ..... 770
Political Cartoons
Examine historical and modern political cartoons for insights into American government.
Forming a Government ..... 9
Securing the Blessings of Liberty ..... 11
Voting in a Monarchy ..... 26
Taxing the Colonists ..... 37
Join or Die ..... 38
Ratification of the Constitution ..... 61
King George Thrown From His Horse ..... 64
The Six Principles of Government ..... 70
"He's got a warrant!" ..... 83
Checks on Congress ..... 90
The Supremacy Clause ..... 101
The Eagle Spreads Its Wings ..... 116
Balancing Liberty and Justice ..... 118
Dictatorship ..... 129
Federalists and AntiFederalists ..... 131
Party Identity: Past and Present ..... 133
Decentralized Nature of Political Parties ..... 143
Party Identity ..... 148
Political Parties ..... 149
Voter Behavior ..... 172
"I Voted" ..... 176
Motor Voter ..... 180
Uncle Sam's Thanksgiving Dinner ..... 181
Perot in Third Place ..... 185
Contribution Cafe ..... 207
Unity ..... 210
Spin ..... 218
Political Pollster ..... 222
Mass Media Influence ..... 234
Opinion Polls ..... 238
Interactive TV News ..... 239
"Welcome to AARD!" ..... 243
Kiss the Baby, Senator ..... 260
Lobbyist ..... 262
No Public Access ..... 263
"I'm Undecided" ..... 264
The Gerrymander ..... 278
Cost of a Campaign ..... 284
Congressional Pay Raises ..... 289
Money in Elections ..... 292
Taxes and the IRS ..... 300
War Powers ..... 316
Congressional Oversight ..... 324
The Size of Government ..... 327
Committees in Congress ..... 336
Congressional Hearings ..... 348
Filibusted ..... 358

Divided Congress ..... 359
Compromise ..... 360
Balancing the Ticket ..... 372
Ye Olde Electoral College ..... 392
The Means of Gaining Power ..... 402
Presidential Appointee Waiting Room ..... 408
Separation of Power Then and Now ..... 422
Government Bureaucracy ..... 427
Books on Red Tape ..... 448
Untangling Bureaucracy. ..... 452
Diplomatic Efforts ..... 483
"The New Diplomacy" ..... 497
"Holding up the World. ..... 514
Packing the Court. ..... 533
Military Tribunals. ..... 539
Supreme Court Chaos ..... 542
Club House. ..... 574
Due Process ..... 580
"Illl say it's overcrowded!" ..... 603
By-the-Book Search. ..... 608
"I need to get a bigger bat" ..... 609
"Another day, another eighty cents" ..... 616
Immigration Issue ..... 638
King Bee. ..... 640
Legitimacy ..... 650
"Afrique" ..... 658
Human Rights. ..... 674
Cost of Free Healthcare ..... 687
Steel Tariffs ..... 702
Turning Rocks into Gold ..... 703
California Recall ..... 722
"My basic judicial philosophy is 'Guilty'" ..... 735
Streamlining the Judicial Process ..... 738
Ballot Questions ..... 739
Concerned Citizens Want to Know ..... 768

Document-Based Assessment

Analyze enduring issues and prepare for high-stakes tests by examining documents, data, and political cartoons.

(1) Greek Roots of Democracy ..... 27
(7) The Constitution and the Revolutionary War Era ..... 65
(1) Amendments for a Growing City ..... 91
Dational and State Powers Debated ..... 117
(1) Political Parties ..... 149
( The American Electorate ..... 181
(2) Nominating Candidates in Our Electoral System ..... 211
(3) the Impact of Television Media on Political Events ..... 239
(1) Regulating Special Interests ..... 263
(4) Members of Congress Cast Their Votes ..... 293
Strict v. Liberal Construction of the Constitution ..... 327
(2) Divided Government ..... 359
(1) The President's Term of Office ..... 397

Maps

Explore the intersection of government and geography.

The Thirteen Colonies, 1775 ..... 33
Meeting Places of the Delegates ..... 50
Slavery in the United States, 1790 ..... 56
Territorial Expansion of the U.S. ..... 105
Women's Suffrage in 1919 ..... 154
(1) Forms of Primaries in State Elections, 2008 ..... 191
(2) Representation in Congress ..... 270
(2) Congressional Apportionment, 2003-2013 ..... 274
(1) Representation by State, 111th Congress ..... 335
Election of 1800 ..... 376
(1) Electoral Votes by State ..... 389
Presidential Election (1984) ..... 390
Presidential Election (2008) ..... 391
Cold War Conflicts (1947-1991) ..... 499
(1) NATO Expansion ..... 506
Federal Court Circuits and Districts. ..... 529
(1) ..... 636
Latin American Independence ..... 656
(2) Divisions in Iraq ..... 664
(1) United Kingdom ..... 668
(1) Mexico ..... 670
(2) The Federal Reserve System ..... 694
(1) Top U.S. Trade Partners ..... 698
(1) Party Control of Governorships, 2009 ..... 723
Native American Reservations ..... 746
(1) Presidential Signing Statements ..... 423
(7) Protecting the Environment ..... 453
(1) Addressing the Rising Cost of Healthcare ..... 479
(4) Deterrence and Foreign Policy ..... 515
(1) Term Limits for Federal Judges ..... 543
(1) Freedom of Speech and Assembly ..... 575
(1) The Patriot Act ..... 609
(J) Liberty, Equality, and Justice ..... 641
(2) Fascism and Communism ..... 675
(4) Government and the Economy ..... 703
(2) Direct Democracy in the States ..... 739
(1) State Safety Laws and the Police Power ..... 769

Divisions in Iraq

- Interpreting Maps A large majority of Iraq's inhabitants are Muslim, but they adhere to different forms of Islam and belong to many different ethnic groups speaking different languages. How can religious and linguistic divides pose challenges for a new democracy?

Primary Sources

Gain insights as you read through the words of people who shaped American government.

Alexander Hamilton, The Federalist 51 ..... 3
Benjamin Franklin ..... 10
Essay on Man ..... 12
Response to a Serenade, November 10, 1864 ..... 23
Abraham Lincoln, July 1, 1854 ..... 24
Aristotle, Politics ..... 27
Plato, Republic ..... 27
Patrick Henry, Speech at the Virginia Convention ..... 29
Petition of Right ..... 31
English Bill of Rights ..... 32
Resolution of June 7, 1776 ..... 40
The Unanimous Declaration of the Thirteen United States of America ..... 40
The United States in Congress Assembled February 21, 1787 ..... 51
Edmund Randolph, Delegate from Virginia ..... 54
Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787, James Madison ..... 58
Abigail Adams ..... 65
Patrick Henry ..... 65
Thomas Jefferson ..... 67
The Federalist No. 51 ..... 75
The Federalist No. 11 ..... 93
McCulloch v. Maryland ..... 102
Collected Legal Papers ..... 102
Abraham Lincoln, Message to Congress in Special Session, July 4, 1861 ..... 118
Sen. Henry Clay, Speech at Ashland, KY, 1829 ..... 118
Clinton Rossiter ..... 121
George Washington, "Farewell Address" ..... 149
Walter H. Judd, Wit and Wisdom of Politics. ..... 151
Justice Hugo Black, Opinion of the Court. ..... 162
Justice William O. Douglas, Opinion of the Court ..... 163
President Lyndon Johnson, Address to Congress ..... 181
President Dwight D. Eisenhower ..... 183
Charles Francis Adams (ed), The Works of John Adams ..... 186
R.M. Easley, The Sine Qua Non of Caucus Reform ..... 187
Barack Obama ..... 211
The New York Times, Feb. 19, 1992 ..... 211
The New York Times, June 12, 1920
Guideo H. Stempell, III, Media and Politics in America ..... 213
Benjamin Ginsberg, Theodore Lowi, and Margaret Weir, We the People ..... 216
President Gerald R. Ford ..... 327
David Halberstam, The Powers That Be ..... 231
Greg Botelho, "JFK, Nixon usher in marriage of TV, politics" ..... 239
Shanto Iyengar, "Is Anyone Responsible?: How Television Frames Political Issues ..... 239
James Cortada and Edward Wakin. ..... 241
Alexis de Tocqueville ..... 244
Alexis de Tocqueville ..... 245
John F. Kennedy ..... 255
Ed Rollins ..... 256
Taxpayers for Common Sense ..... 263
Senator Jim DeMint ..... 263
Nancy Pelosi ..... 263
Edward R. Murrow. ..... 264
Harry S Truman ..... 264
Lee H. Hamilton ..... 266
The Federalist No. 51 ..... 269
Davy Crockett ..... 293
Lee Hamilton ..... 293
Representative Thaddeus Stevens. ..... 295
Chief Justice John Marshall ..... 298
Woodrow Wilson ..... 329
Sherrod Brown, Congress From the Inside ..... 330
Peter Ferrara, National Review ..... 359
CBS News Poll, Nov 14, 2006 ..... 359
Lloyd Cutler, Letter to The New York Times ..... 359
Barbara Sinclair ..... 360
Grover Cleveland ..... 363
The Federalist No 72 ..... 397
Lyndon Johnson ..... 399
James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 ..... 401
John F. Kennedy, radio broadcast (1961) ..... 412
Senator Patrick Leahy ..... 423
Michelle E. Boardman, Deputy Assistant Attorney General ..... 423
Joseph A. Schumpeter ..... 425
The Federalist No. 51 ..... 427
William Howard Taft, Our Chief Magistrate and His Powers ..... 440
Larry J. Sabato, A More Perfect Constitution ..... 543
The Federalist No. 78 ..... 543
Stephan Johnson, EPA Administrator ..... 453
Rachel Carson, Silent Spring ..... 452
Ben S. Bernanke ..... 479
Katherine Baicker ..... 479
Speech by President James Monroe to Congress, December 2, 1823 ..... 496
Speech by President Harry S Truman to Congress, March 12, 1947 ..... 499
Charter of the United Nations ..... 508
President Harry S Truman ..... 515 ..... 617
Declaration of Sentiments
President Ronald Reagan 515 Chief Justice Earl WarrenPresident George W. BushAmerican Psychological Association51
Franklin D. Roosevelt
John Marshall, Marbury v. Madison 519 Martin Luther King, Jr, "I Have a Dream" ..... 641
Eleanor Roosevelt
Eleanor Roosevelt ..... 545
Declaration of Independence ..... 546
547 ..... 47
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 1943
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 1943
Schenck v. United States, 1919 ..... 548
Justice Hugo L. Black ..... 552
Justice Abe Fortas ..... 55
Justice Robert H. Jackson ..... 55
Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes ..... 560
Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson ..... 56
Justice William J. Brennan, Jr. ..... 567
Thomas Jefferson ..... 575
Whitney v. California, 1927 ..... 575
Brandenburg v. Ohio, 1969 ..... 527
Ronald Reagan ..... 577
Justice Felix Frankfurter ..... 579
Civil Rights Act of 1866 ..... 58
Justice Potter Stewart ..... 58
President George W. Bush ..... 609
American Civil Liberties Union ..... 609
U.S. Department of Justice ..... 6096206236417
515 Justice Joseph P. Bradley ..... 622
Martin Luther King, Jr, "Letter from Birmingham Jail" ..... 641
Alexander Hamilton, The Federalist No. 78. ..... 642
Joseph Tussman, Judicial Activism and the Rule of Law ..... 624
Premier Wen Jiabao ..... 644
Benito Mussolini ..... 675
Declaration of Independence ..... 675
State of lowa v. John Hartog, 1989 ..... 769
Milton Friedman ..... 677
The Communist Manifesto ..... 685
FDR, "The Four Freedoms" ..... 703
George W. Bush ..... 703
U.K. Conservative Party Manifesto ..... 704
Mao Zedong, 1945 ..... 704
Governor Bob Riley ..... 707
The Populist Party Platform, 1892 ..... 739
Mayor Michael Nutter ..... 741
The Wealth of Nations ..... 762
Ronald Reagan, First Inaugural Speech, 1981 ..... 770
Mayor Douglas Palmer ..... 770
Justice John Marshall Harlan ..... 611

Chapter 1:
Principles of Government
Chapter 2:
Origins of American Government
Chapter 3:
The Constitution
Chapter 4:
Federalism
(1) Sournal

Essential Question What should be the goals of government?

Government Online Resources

Government Online Teacher Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes

- Online Teacher's Edition with lesson planner and lecture notes
- Teacher's Resource Library with All-in-One Resources, Color Transparencies, Adequate Yearly Progress Monitoring, and an alternative lesson plan for each chapter
- SuccessTracker Assessment

Government Online Student Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes

- Interactive textbook with audio
- American Government Essential Questions Video
- Chapter-level WebQuests
- Guided Audio Tours and Interactivities
- Student Self-Tests

ESSENTIAL QUESTION PERSPECTIVES

Essential questions frame each unit and chapter of study, asking students to consider big ideas about government. The question for this unit-What should be the goals of government?-demands that students ask further questions. How large or small should government be? How much should government regulate our lives? Does government have a responsibility to provide a safety net for the poor? Should government attempt to regulate the economy?
To begin this unit, assign the Unit 1 Warmup Activity on page 2 of the Essential Questions Journal. This will help students start to consider their position on the Unit 1 Essential Question: What should be the goals of government?
Show the Unit 1 American Government Essential Questions Video to help students begin thinking about the unit Essential Question and designate a classroom bulletin board for students to post news articles related to the unit Essential Question. Use the Conversation Wall strategy (p. T27) to encourage students to post articles and comments on other students' postings.
Later, students will further explore the chapter-level essential questions:
Chapter 1: Is government necessary?
Chapter 2: How does the Constitution reflect the times in which it was written?
Chapter 3: How has the Constitution lasted through changing times?
Chapter 4: Is the federal system the best way to govern the United States?
Use the Essential Questions Journal throughout the program to help students consider these and other big ideas about government.

Introduce the Chapter

Essential Questions:

UNIT 1

What should be the goals of government?

CHAPTER 1

Is government necessary?

ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE

Have students examine the photo and quotation on these pages. Ask: What is the purpose of government? (Students might suggest that government maintains order in society, provides services, maintains a military to defend the country, and performs functions that generally benefit everyone, such as building roads and making laws to protect the environment.) In this chapter, students will learn about the purpose and forms of government and about the fundamental principles of democracy. Then tell students to begin to further explore the basic characteristics of government by completing the Chapter 1 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

beFore reading

$\square$ L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 1 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 7)

SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

NOTETAKING AND ACTIVE LISTENING

You may wish to teach notetaking and active listening as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 1 Skills Worksheet (Unit 1 All-inOne, p. 33) to help students learn to take notes selectively and practice active listening. The worksheet asks students to read an excerpt of John F. Kennedy's inaugural address, identify the general topic and main ideas, and identify transitions, repetition, and emphasis. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 34).

WebQuest

online The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about principles of government.

Block Scheduling

bLock 1: Teach Section 1, omitting Extend the Discussion.
block 2: Teach Sections 2 and 3. Omit the Cartoon Mini-Lesson from Section 2. Choose one of the Extend activities from Section 2 or Section 3, depending on your preference and State standards.

Pressed for Time

To cover this chapter quickly, review the Section 1 Reading Comprehension Worksheet, items 1 though 4 on characteristics of the state, and the Section 3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet on the five concepts of democracy. Then have students complete the Section 1 Core Worksheet, analyzing the Preamble to the Constitution, establishing its relevance today, and giving an opinion about the Framers' idea that government is necessary to keep order and guarantee freedom. Finish by having students make a table comparing the features of democracy versus dictatorship in Section 2.

Lesson Goals

SECTION 1

Students will...

- assess what they know and what they would like to learn about key concepts in American government by completing a chart.
- recall characteristics of states and theories of government by completing a worksheet.
- examine the purposes of American government by completing a chart about the Preamble of the Constitution.

SECTION 2

Students will.

- use a checklist to identify terms that describe the United States government, and define each term.
- compare and contrast democracies and dictatorships by predicting their responses in different situations.
- analyze different forms of government through discussion questions.

SECTION 3

Students will...

- identify and explain the five concepts of democracy by completing a chart.
- identify real-world examples of the five concepts by brainstorming and filling out a table.
- discuss the responsibilities and duties of citizenship.
A. Definition of Government
a. Institution through which society makes and enforces public policies
b. Legislative, judicial, and executive power
c. Dictatorship-power held by a person or small group
d. Democracy-power held by the people
B. Characteristics of State
a. Population
b. Territory-land with known and recognized boundaries
c. Sovereignty-supreme power within its territory
d. Government-agency through which the state exerts its will and works toward its goals
C. Purposes of Government
a. Form a more perfect union
b. Establish justice
c. Insure domestic tranquility
d. Provide for the common defense
e. Promote the general welfare
f. Secure the blessings of liberty

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will

- assess what they know and what they would like to learn about key concepts in American government by completing a chart.
- recall characteristics of states and theories of government by completing a worksheet.
- examine the purposes of American government by completing a chart about the Preamble of the Constitution.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

ANALYZE SOURCES

To help students learn to analyze primary sources, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S14, and use the information there to work with the primary sources referenced in this lesson.

SECTION 1

Government and

 the State

Guiding Question

What is government and what is its purpose? Use an outline like the one below to take notes on the definition and purposes of government.
A. Definition of Government
a.
b.
B. Characteristics of a State
a.
b.
C. Purposes of Government
a.
b.
Political Dictionary

- government $\quad$ - judicial power
- public policies $\quad$ - constitution
- legislative $\quad$ - dictatorship power
- executive $\quad$ - democracy
power

Objectives

1. Define government and the basic powers every government holds.
2. Describe the four defining characteristics of a state.
3. Identify four theories that attempt to explain the origin of the state.
4. Understand the purpose of government in the United States and other countries.

Image Above: Flags representing several countries fly outside of the European Parliament in Strasbourg, France.

This is a book about government-and, more particularly, about government in the United States. Why should you read it? Why should you study government? These are legitimate questions, and they can be answered in several different ways-as you will see throughout the pages of this book. But, for now, consider this response: you should know as much as you possibly can about government because government affects you in an uncountable number of very important ways. It does so today, it did so yesterday, and it will do so every day for the rest of your life.

Think of the point in this light: What would your life be like without government? Who would protect you, and all of the rest of us, against terrorist attacks and against other threats from abroad? Who would provide for education, guard the public's health, and protect the environment? Who would pave the streets, regulate traffic, punish criminals, and respond to fires and other human-made and natural disasters? Who would protect civil rights and care for the elderly, the poor, and those who cannot care for themselves? Who would protect consumers and property owners?

Government does all of these things, of course-and much more. In short, if government did not exist, we would have to invent it.

What Is Government?

Government is the institution through which a society makes and enforces its public policies. Government is made up of those people who exercise its powers, all those who have authority and control over people.

The public policies of a government are, in short, all of those things a government decides to do. Public policies cover matters ranging from taxation, defense, education, crime, and healthcare to transportation, the environment, civil rights, and working conditions. Indeed, the list of public policy issues handled by government is nearly endless.

Governments must have power in order to make and carry out public policies. Power is the ability to command or prevent action, the ability to achieve a desired end.

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: - Society makes and enforces public policies through the institution of government. - A state has a population, a defined territory, sovereignty, and a government. - Basic concepts of American government evolved from the Social Contract Theory. - The Preamble of the Constitution established the basic goals of American government.
CONCEPTS: purpose and role of government, values and principles of civil society, popular sovereignty, justice, liberty ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Government affects our daily lives by maintaining civil society, safeguarding rights, and preventing anarchy. • Liberty is not absolute; one person's freedom cannot infringe on the rights of others.

Every government has and exercises three basic kinds of power: (1) legislative power-the power to make laws and to frame public policies; (2) executive power-the power to execute, enforce, and administer laws; and (3) judicial power-the power to interpret laws, to determine their meaning, and to settle disputes that arise within the society. These powers of government are often outlined in a country's constitution. A constitution is the body of fundamental laws setting out the principles, structures, and processes of a government.

The ultimate responsibility for the exercise of these powers may be held by a single person or by a small group, as in a dictatorship. In this form of government, those who rule cannot be held responsible to the will of the people. When the responsibility for the exercise of these powers rests with a majority of the people, that form of government is known as a democracy. In a democracy, supreme authority rests with the people.

Government is among the oldest of all human inventions. Its origins are lost in the mists of time. But, clearly, government first appeared when human beings realized that they could not survive without some way to regulate their own actions, as well as those of their neighbors.

The earliest known evidences of government date from ancient Egypt and the sixth century b.c. More than 2,300 years ago, the Greek philosopher Aristotle observed that "man is by nature a political animal."1 When he wrote those words, Aristotle was only recording a fact that, even then, had been obvious for thousands of years.

What did Aristotle mean by "political"? That is to say, what is "politics"? Although people often equate the two, politics and government are very different things. Politics is a process, while government is an institution.

More specifically, politics is the process by which a society decides how power and resources will be distributed within that society. Politics enables a society to decide who

1 In most of the world's written political record, the words man and men have been widely used to refer to all of humankind. This text follows that form when presenting excerpts from historical writings or documents and in references to them.
will reap the benefits, and who will pay the costs, of its public policies.

The word politics is sometimes used in a way that suggests that it is somehow immoral or something to be avoided. But, again, politics is the means by which government is conducted. It is neither "good" nor "bad," but it is necessary. Indeed, it is impossible to conceive of government without politics.

The State

Over the course of human history, the state has emerged as the dominant political unit throughout the world. The state can be fundamental adj. basic, essential, primary

The Three Basic Powers of Government

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 1, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 7)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 10)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 11)
L3 L2 Core Worksheets (pp. 12, 14)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheets (pp. 16, 17)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 18)
L3 Quiz A (p. 19)
L2 Quiz B (p. 20)

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 10) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 11)

BELLRINGER

Begin a two-column chart on the board with the headings "Prior Knowledge" at the top of one column and "Making Predictions" at the top of the other column. Write the following on the board:
Write what you already know about these topics in column one: democracy, federalism, separation of powers, balance of power, constitutional government, Enlightenment thinkers. In column two, predict what you expect to learn about each topic.

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

ASSESS PRIOR KNOWLEDGE

Draw a horizontal line on the board with markings from 0 to 10 . Have students copy the scale in their notebooks and assess what they know about each of the topics in the Bellringer activity by assigning themselves a number on the scale for each topic. Then invite students to share their prior knowledge and predictions. Encourage students to keep their charts and scales; tell them that they will reassess their knowledge at the end of the unit.

Answers

The Three Powers of Government Possible response: to prevent one branch of government from gaining too much power, which might lead to dictatorship

COVER THE BASICS

Ask students to take out their Reading Comprehension Worksheets. First, review the four basic characteristics of the state, asking volunteers to identify and define each one. (1. population: the people who live within the boundaries of the state; 2. territory: land with known and recognized boundaries; 3. sovereignty: the supreme and absolute power within a state's own territory; 4. government: the institution through which society makes and enforces public policies) Follow the same process with Part 2, calling on volunteers to explain each theory about the origin of the state. (5. Force Theory: The state was born when one person or a small group took control over people in an area. 6. EvolutionaryTheory. The state evolved from the early families that united to form clans. Later, clans united to form tribes. As tribes settled into agricultural groups over time, they formed states. 7. Divine Right Theory: God created the state and gave those of royal birth the right to rule. 8. Social Contract Theory: People voluntarily agreed to create a state and give up to the government just enough power to promote the safety and well-being of all. Government exists to serve the will of the people and the people are the sole source of political power.)

EXTEND THE DISCUSSION

Use these questions to continue a discussion about the origin theories and characteristics of the state.

1. Does a church qualify as a state? Why or why not? (A church is not a state, as it does not possess all four characteristics of a state; a church does not hold the supreme power within a territory.)
2. Does the largest State in the U.S. qualify as a sovereign state? Does the smallest? Why or why not? (Any State, regardless of its size, does not qualify as a state, although it does have population, territory, and government. However, a State does not have the fourth characteristic of a state: sovereignty. That power is reserved to the United States Government.)
3. Which of the following islands, or groups of islands, qualify as a state: Hawaii, Japan, Cuba, Australia? Explain. (Japan, Cuba, and Australia are all states that possess population, territory, sovereignty, and government. Hawaii, however, is part of the United States, and, therefore, it does not have sovereignty.)
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the four characteristics of a state.

populous
adj. relating to the number of people in a given region defined as a body of people, living in a defined territory, organized politically (that is, with a government), and with the power to make and enforce law without the consent of any higher authority.

There are more than 200 states in the world today. They vary greatly in size, military power, natural resources, and economic importance. Still, each of them possesses all four of the characteristics of a state. That is, each of them has population, territory, sovereignty, and government.

Note that the word state describes a legal entity. In popular usage, a state is often called a "nation" or a "country." In a strict sense, however, the word nation is an ethnic term, referring to races or other large groups of people. The word country is a geographic term, referring to a particular place, region, or area of land.

Population Clearly, a state must have peo-ple-a population. The size of that population, however, has nothing directly to do with the existence of a state. One of the world's smallest states, in population terms, is San Marino. Bound on all sides by Italy, it has only some 30,000 people. The People's Republic of China is the world's most populous state, with more than 1.3 billion people-just about one fifth of all of the world's population. The more than 300 million people who live in the United States make it the world's third most populous state, after China and India.

The people who make up a state may or may not be homogeneous. The adjective homogeneous describes members of a group who share customs, a common language, and ethnic background. Today, the population of the United States includes people from a wide variety of backgrounds. Still, most Americans think of themselves as exactly that: Americans.

Territory Just as a state cannot exist without people, so it must have land-territory-with known and recognized boundaries. The states in today's world vary as widely in terms of territory as they do in population. Here, too, San Marino ranks among the world's smallest states. It covers less than 24 square miles, and so is smaller than thousands of cities and towns in the United States. The United States also recognizes the state of Vatican City, which is completely surrounded by the city of Rome. It has a permanent population of less than 900 and an area of only 109 acres.

Debate

Ask: Which theory of the origin of the state is most logical? Have students hold a roundtable debate on this question. To prepare for the debate, small groups should each take one of the theories and brainstorm arguments in its favor. They might also research proponents of that theory to find additional support for their ideas.

Answers

Four Characteristics of a State The characteristic of territory is denoted by the lines drawn to distinguish individual countries.

Russia, the world's largest state, stretches across some 6.6 million square miles. The total area of the United States is slightly less than 3.8 million square miles.

Sovereignty Every state is sovereign-that is, it has supreme and absolute power within its own territory and can decide its own foreign and domestic policies. It is neither subordinate nor responsible to any other authority. Sovereignty is the one characteristic that distinguishes the state from all other, lesser political units in the world.

Thus, as a sovereign state, the United States can determine its form of government, frame its own economic system, and shape its own foreign policies. The States within the United States are not sovereign and so are not states in the international, legal sense. Each State is subordinate to the Constitution of the United States. ${ }^{2}$

Government Every state is politically organized. That is, every state has a government. Recall, a government is the institution through which society makes and enforces its public policies. A government is the agency through which the state exerts its will and works to accomplish its goals. Government includes the machinery and the personnel by which the state is ruled.

2 In this book, state printed with a small $s$ denotes a state in the In this book, state printed with a small $s$ denotes a state in the family of nations, such as the United States, Great Britain, and Mexico. State printed with a capital $S$ refers to a State in the American union.

Government is necessary to avoid what the English philosopher Thomas Hobbes ( $1588-1679$ ) called "the war of every man against every man." Without government, said Hobbes, there would be "continual fear and danger of violent death and the life of man [would be] solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short." The world has seen a number of examples over recent years of what happens when a government disappears: In Lebanon, Bosnia, Somalia, and many other places, life became "nasty, brutish, and short."

Major Political Ideas

For centuries, historians, philosophers, and others have pondered the question of the origin of the state. What set of circumstances first brought it into being?

Over time, many different answers have been offered, but history provides no conclusive evidence to support any of them. However, four theories have emerged as the most widely accepted explanations for the origin of the state.

The Force Theory Many scholars have long believed that the state was born of force. They hold that one person or a small group claimed control over an area and forced all within it to submit to that person's or group's rule. When that rule was established, all the basic elements of the state-population, territory, sovereignty, and government-were present.

Checkpoint What is the definition of sovereignty?

personnel

n. people who work for an organization

Background

States of the world Geographic boundaries have been changing since the creation of the state. Throughout the ancient world, conquerors created vast empires, and new states rose as these empires fell. Beginning in the sixteenth century, many European nations colonized other continents, carving out territories that would later become states of their own. Wars have always played a role in redrawing the map. In the twentieth century, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Hungary, and Yugoslavia were born out of the aftermath of WWI. After WWII, Israel was created, and Germany split in two. Between 1990 and 2008, 28 new states were formed. The Soviet Union, for example, broke into 15 states. Czechoslovakia peacefully separated into the Czech Republic and Slovakia. East and West Germany merged into a single state. It is likely that this pattern will continue: old states will fall, and new states will rise.
4. Why do you think many scholars have long believed that the state was born of force? (Possible answer: History reveals a long record of conquest, conflict, and war in the struggle for power and dominion.)
L4 Differentiate Have students research Andorra and report on whether it qualifies as a state.

DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET

Distribute the Chapter 1 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 12), which asks students to analyze the Preamble to the Constitution and to establish its relevance today. It also asks students whether they agree with the Framers that government is necessary to keep order and guarantee freedoms. Allow time for students to respond to this question after they complete the rest of the activity. First, have students fill out the middle column on the worksheet, explaining why the Framers may have included each statement in the Preamble. You might ask students to share their responses before they complete the right-hand column. Then, have partners brainstorm ideas about how the Preamble is relevant to today's society. Encourage them to include questions and current examples that show how our Constitution continues to hold practical value today.
ELL Differentiate For these students, distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 14), which includes an explanation of selected vocabulary.Differentiate Have students memorize the Preamble. Encourage them to give a dramatic recitation to the class.

Answers

Checkpoint the supreme and absolute power a state holds within its own territory and the ability to decide its own foreign and domestic policies

CONTINUE THE DISCUSSION

In The Federalist No. 51, James Madison wrote: "If men were angels, no government would be necessary. " Write this quotation on the board, and call on a volunteer to read it. Invite students to share their reactions to this statement, based on their thinking about the Preamble and their reading of this section. Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of how the state formed.

Government
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

The Evolutionary Theory Others claim that the state developed naturally out of the early family. They hold that the primitive family, of which one person was the head and thus the "government," was the first stage in political development. Over countless centuries, the original family became a network of related families, a clan. In time, the clan became a tribe. When the tribe first turned to agriculture and gave up its nomadic, wandering ways, tying itself to the land, the state was born.

The Divine Right Theory The theory of divine right was widely accepted in much of the Western world from the fifteenth through the eighteenth centuries. It held that God created the state and that God had given those of royal birth a "divine right" to rule. The people were bound to obey their ruler as they would God; opposition to "the divine right of kings" was both treason and a mortal sin

During the seventeenth century, philosophers began to question this theory. Much of the thought upon which present-day democracies rests began as a challenge to the theory of divine right.

The notion of divine right was not unique to European history. The rulers of many ancient civilizations, including the Chinese, Egyptian, Aztec, and Mayan civilizations, were held to be gods or to have been chosen by the gods. The Japanese emperor, the mikado, governed by divine right until 1945 .

The Social Contract Theory In terms of the American political system, the most significant of the theories of the origin of the state is that of the "social contract." Philosophers such as Thomas Hobbes, James Harrington (1611-1677), and John Locke (1632-1704) in England and Jean Jacques Rousseau (17121778) in France developed this theory in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

Hobbes wrote that in earliest history humans lived in unbridled freedom, that is in a "state of nature," in which no government existed and no person was subject to any superior power. That which people could take by force belonged to them. However, all people were similarly free in that state of nature. No authority existed to protect one

Answers

Origins of the State Possible response: the social contract theory, because the Constitution represents the social contract where the people gave some power to the government in exchange for security

Background

the divine right of kings King James I of England was a firm believer in the divine right of kings. In 1598, James set forth his views in a document entitled The True Law of Free Monarchies, in which he declared: "The State of monarchy is the supreme thing on Earth . . . As to dispute what God may do is blasphemy, so is it treason in subjects to dispute what a king may do. . . . " In James's Basilikon Doron (1599), he stated that God gave political power directly to a monarch; that the monarch's power was absolute; and that those who opposed the monarch were guilty of treason, which was punishable by death. After England's "Glorious Revolution" of 1688, the theory of the divine right of kings was no longer taken seriously. However, the coronation ceremony for British monarchs still retains some of the divine right symbolism. The monarch is anointed with holy oils and crowned in a Christian ceremony.
person from the aggressive actions of another. Thus, individuals were only as secure as their own physical strength and intelligence could make them.

Human beings overcame their unpleasant condition, says the social contract theory, by agreeing with one another to create a state. By contract, people within a given area agreed to give up to the state as much power as was needed to promote the safety and well-being of all. In the contract (that is, through a constitution), the members of the state created a government to exercise the powers they had voluntarily given to the state.

In short, the social contract theory argues that the state arose out of a voluntary act of free people. It holds that the state exists only to serve the will of the people, that they are the sole source of political power, and that they are free to give or to withhold that power as they choose from the government. The theory may seem somewhat far-fetched today. The great concepts that this theory promoted, however-popular sovereignty, limited government, and individual rightswere immensely important to the shaping of the American governmental system.

The Declaration of Independence (see pages 43-47) justified its revolution through the social contract theory, arguing that King George III and his ministers had violated the contract. Thomas Jefferson called the document "pure Locke."

- Interpreting Cartoons This cartoon pokes fun at organized government. Which types of government might restrict people from "having it as good as this"? Why?

The Purpose of Government

What does government do? You can find a very meaningful answer to that question in the Constitution of the United States. The American system of government was created to serve the purposes set out there.

FROM THE CONSTITUTION

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.
-Preamble to the Constitution

Form a More Perfect Union The United States, which had just won its independence from Great Britain, faced an altogether uncertain future in the postwar 1780s. In 1781, the Articles of Confederation, the nation's first constitution, created "a firm league of friendship" among the 13 States. That league soon proved to be neither very firm nor very friendly. The government created by the Articles was powerless to overcome the intense rivalries and jealousies among the States that marked the times.

The Constitution of today was written in 1787. The original States adopted it in order to link themselves, and the American people, more closely together. That Constitution was built in the belief that in union there is strength.

Checkpoint What is the Social Contract Theory?

Constitutional Principles

the enlightenment In many ways, the U.S. Constitution was a product of the Enlightenment, a seventeenth- and eighteenth-century intellectual movement. Scientific advances led European thinkers to realize that reason could uncover the best method in which to organize society. They began to question authoritarian rule and consider new ways to govern through natural rights and democracy. The idea of government as a social contract with the governed conflicted with the prevailing concept of government by divine right. As colonists arrived in America, they brought these radical ideas with them. Europeans viewed the Declaration of Independence and American Revolution as enlightened ideas put into practice for the first time. These ideas became the Constitution's basic principles: individual rights, popular sovereignty, limited government, separation of powers, and checks and balances.

EXTEND THE LESSON

L3 Differentiate Write on the board the following quotation from John Locke's Second Treatise, Chapter 9:
"But though men when they enter into society, give up the equality, liberty and executive power they had in the state of nature, into the hands of the society, to be so far disposed of by the legislature, as the good of the society shall require; yet it being only with an intention to everyone the better to preserve himself his liberty and property."
Have partners read and paraphrase the quotation together. Then ask them to identify John Locke's main ideas about the need for and role of government.
L1 L2 Differentiate Write on the board the following quote from Locke's First Treatise, Chapter 9, for students to analyze: "Government being for the preservation of every man's right and property, by preserving him from the violence or injury of others, is for the good of the governed."

L1 L2Differentiate For these students, distribute the Extend Activity entitled "Concerns About Rules and Laws" (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 18), which has students research rules and laws that people are concerned about today.
L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 1 Section 1 Extend Worksheet on "Government and the State" (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 16). Have students analyze Locke's essay and answer the questions on their own.
L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 1 Section 1 Extend Worksheet entitled "Assess Prior Knowledge" (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 17), which has students answer questions to assess their prior knowledge about constitutions in general and the U.S. Constitution in particular. Explain to students that they will learn about the U.S. Constitution in the next two chapters and throughout this book. Encourage them to return to these questions periodically to see how their understanding evolves.

Answers

Checkpoint The Social Contract Theory holds that people within a given area agreed with one another to create a state and give up to the state as much power as needed to promote the safety and wellbeing of all. The state exists only to serve the will of the people, and the people are the sole source of the government's power.

Assess and Remediate

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 19)Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 20)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

A Coast Guard cutter stands guard in New York Harbor. Against what kinds of threats does the Coast Guard defend the nation?

Establish Justice To provide justice, said Thomas Jefferson, is "the most sacred of the duties of government." No purpose, no goal of public policy, can be of greater importance in a democracy.

But what is justice? The term is difficult to define, for justice is a concept-an idea, an invention of the human mind. Like other concepts, such as truth, liberty, and fairness, justice means what people want it to mean.

As the concept of justice has developed over time in American thought and practice, it has come to mean this: The law, in both its content and its administration, must be reasonable, fair, and impartial. Those standards of justice have not always been met in this country. We have not attained our professed goal of "equal justice for all." However, this must be said: The history of this country can be told largely in terms of our continuing attempts to reach that goal.
"Injustice anywhere," said Martin Luther King, Jr., "is a threat to justice everywhere." You will encounter this idea again and again in this book.

Insure Domestic Tranquillity Order is essential to the well-being of any society, and keeping the peace at home has always been a prime function of government. Most people can only imagine what it would be like to live in a state of anarchy-without government, law, or order. In fact, people do live that way in some parts of the world today. For years now, Somalia, located on the eastern tip of Africa, has not had a permanent functioning government; rival warlords control different parts of the country.

In The Federalist No. 51, James Madison observed: "If men were angels, no government would be necessary." Madison, who was perhaps the most thoughtful of the Framers of the Constitution, knew that most human beings fall far short of that standard.

Provide for the Common Defense Defending the nation against foreign enemies has always been one of government's major responsibilities. You can see its importance in the fact that defense is mentioned far more often in the Constitution than any of the other functions of government.

The nation's defense and its foreign policies are but two sides of the same coin: the security of the United States. To provide this security, the nation maintains an army, navy, air force, and coast guard. Departments such as the Department of Homeland Security keep watch for threats to the country and its people.

The United States has become the world's most powerful nation, but the world remains a dangerous place. This country must maintain its vigilance and its armed strength. Just a glance at today's newspapers or at one of this evening's television news programs will furnish abundant proof of that fact.

Promote the General Welfare Few people realize the extent to which government acts as the servant of its citizens, yet you can see examples everywhere. Public schools are one illustration of government's work to promote the general welfare. So, too, are its efforts to protect the quality of the air you breathe, the water you drink, and the food you eat. The list of tasks government performs for your benefit goes on and on.

Some governmental functions that are common in other countries-operating steel mills, airlines, and coal mines, for exampleare not carried out by government in this country. In general, the services that government provides in the United States are those

Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson

Display Transparency 1 A, Security, when you discuss the purpose of government. This cartoon suggests that government creates security at a cost. Ask: What government responsibilities stated in the Preamble does this cartoon portray? (establish jstice, secure liberty, provide for the common defense) How does this cartoon suggest that the government is providing for the common defense? (by taking pieces away from liberty, justice, equality, and freedom) How do you think the cartoonist feels about the government's policies for providing security? (The cartoonist likely opposes government policies for providing security at the expense of the other important responsibilities of preserving liberty, justice, freedom, and equality.)

Answers

Caption possible response: terrorist threats, illegal activity that benefit all or most people. Many of them are the services that are not very likely to be provided by the voluntary acts of private individuals or groups.

Secure the Blessings of Liberty This nation was founded by those who loved liberty and prized it above all earthly possessions. They believed with Thomas Jefferson that "the God who gave us life gave us liberty at the same time." They subscribed to Benjamin Franklin's maxim: "They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

The American dedication to freedom for the individual recognizes that liberty cannot be absolute. It is, instead, a relative matter. No one can be free to do whatever he or she pleases, for that behavior would interfere with the freedoms of others. As Clarence Darrow, the great defense lawyer, once said: "You can only be free if I am free."

Both the Federal Constitution and the State constitutions set out many guarantees of rights and liberties for the individual in this country. That does not mean that those guarantees are so firmly established that they exist forever, however. To preserve and protect them, each generation must learn and understand them anew, and be willing to stand up for them when necessary.

For many people, the inspiration to protect our rights and liberties arises from deep feelings of patriotism. Patriotism is the love of one's country; the passion that drives one to serve one's country, either by defending it from invasion or by protecting its rights and maintaining its laws and institutions. Patriotism is the characteristic of a good citizen, the noblest passion that animates a man or woman in the character of a citizen. As a citizen, you, too, must agree with Jefferson: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

1) Analyzing Political Cartoons In this cartoon, some of the liberties secured by the Constitution are written on the flag. What is the phrase "thank your lucky stars" referring to?
maxim
$n$. a general truth or rule of conduct

Essential Questions To continue to build a

 Journal Essential Question, go to your
SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT

1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: What is government and what is its purpose?
Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the difference between a state and a nation?
3. (a) How is government conducted under a dictatorship? (b) How does a dictatorship differ from a democracy?
4. How does a constitution help to make it possible for a government to carry out its public policies?

Critical Thinking

5. Summarize (a) Summarize the four leading theories of the origin of the state. (b) Which two best describe the origin of dictatorships?
6. Draw Inferences (a) What is meant by "standards of justice have not always been met"? (b) What are some examples of efforts made to reach the goal of justice for all?

Quick Write

Expository Writing: Ask Questions When explaining a topic, you want to answer Who, What, When, Where, Why, and How. Develop these questions to explain the origins of either dictatorship or democracy. For example, if you choose dictatorship, you may ask these questions: Who are some well-known dictators? When did dictatorships first develop? You will answer these questions as you research the topic.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The purposes of  government  (Questions 1, 6) | Write the eight phrases that make up the  Preamble onto strips of paper, along with  four unrelated phrases. Have students  eliminate the unrelated phrases, recon-  stitute the Preamble from the remaining  strips, and highlight the six strips contain-  ing purposes of government. |
| The five characteristics  of the state (Question 4) | Write each characteristic and its definition  on separate cards. Have students match  characteristics with definitions. |
| The four theories of  origin of the state  (Question 5) | Write each theory and its definition on  separate cards. Have students match  theories with definitions. |

Answers

Analyzing Cartoons The liberties are written on the flag to show that they are as much a part of our symbolism as are the stars and stripes. The phrase refers to the fact that Americans are fortunate to have these iberties secured.

Assessment Answers

1. Government is used by society to create and carry out its public policies. The purposes of government are to form a union, provide justice, keep the peace, defend the state, promote general welfare, and secure liberty.
2. A state is a legal entity, whereas a nation is an ethnic entity.
3. (a) In a dictatorship, the ruler or rulers are not held responsible to the will of the people.
(b) In a democracy, the government derives its power from the people. The people hold the government responsible for its actions.
4. A constitution is the body of laws that sets out the principles, structures, and processes of a government. It creates the framework on which government conducts public policies.
5. (a) Force: One person, or a small group, claimed control of an area and forced all within it to submit to that person's or group's rule.
Evolution: Family units banded together into clans and later clans formed tribes. Eventually tribes formed states as they became agricultural. Divine Right: God bestowed the right to rule on an individual. The people obeyed their ruler as they would God. Social Contract: The people voluntarily agreed to create a state and give the government just enough power to promote the safety and well-being of all. (b) force theory and divine right theory
6. (a) Discrimination and oppression have deprived certain groups of justice. (b) Efforts to change the law, such as the suffrage movement and the abolition movement are examples of efforts to attain justice for all.
QuICK WRITE While researching, students should take notes to make sure they answer each question.

What are some forms of government in the world today?

| Forms of Government |  |
| :---: | :---: |
| Democracy | Dictatorship |
| - Political authority rests with the people  - Direct or indirect  - Presidential-powers separated into executive and legislative branch  - Parliamentary-executive branch part of legislature  - Federal-power shared by local and national government  - Confederate-power centered in local governments  - Unitary-power centered in national government | - Rulers not responsible to the people  - Government not accountable for policies or how they are carried out  - Autocracy-one person rules  - Oligarchy-small group rules  - All are authoritarian  - Most are totalitarian  - Militaristic  - Unitary Government |

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will.

- use a checklist to identify terms that describe the United States Government, and define each term.
- compare and contrast democracies and dictatorships by predicting their responses in different situations.
- analyze different forms of government through discussion questions.

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 21) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 22)

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS

Before the political cartoon mini-lesson in this section, you may want to review tips on analyzing political cartoons in the Skills Handbook, p. S22.

SECTION 2

Forms of Government

Guiding Question
What are some forms of government in the world today? Use a table like the one below to take notes on the different kinds of government in the world today.

Political Dictionary

| - autocracy | - division of |
| :--- | :--- |
| - oligarchy | powers |
| - unitary | - confederation |
| government | - presidential |
| - federal | government |
| government | - parliamentary         government |

Objectives

1. Classify governments according to three sets of characteristics
2. Define systems of government based on who can participate.
3. Identify different ways that power can be distributed, geographically, within a state.
4. Describe a government by the distribution of power between the executive branch and legislative branch.

Image Above: Members of the House of Lords in the British Parliament wear traditional robes and wigs.

D
 any importance? Political scientists, historians, and other social commentators have long argued that question. The English poet Alexander Pope weighed in with this couplet in 1733:

PRIMARY SOURCE

For Forms of Government let fools contest; Whate'er is best adminster'd is best. . . ."
-Essay on Man
Was Pope right? Does it matter what form a government takes? Pope thought not. You can form your own opinion as you read this section.

Classifying Governments

No two governments are, or ever have been, exactly alike, for governments are the products of human needs and experiences. All governments can be classified according to one or more of their basic features, however. Over time, political scientists have developed many bases upon which to classify (and so to describe, compare, and analyze) governments.

Three of those classifications are especially important and useful. These are classifications according to (1) who can participate in the governing process, (2) the geographic distribution of governmental power within the state, and (3) the relationship between the legislative (lawmaking) and the executive (law-executing) branches of the government. ${ }^{3}$

Who Can Participate

To many people, the most meaningful of these classifications is the one that depends on the number of persons who can take part in the governing process.

3 Note that these classifications are not mutually exclusive. For example, the government of the United Sates is federal in form, and it is also presidential and democratic.

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: • Political scientists classify governments based on who participates, geographic distribution of power, and the relationship between the legislative and executive branches. - In a democracy, supreme political authority rests with the people. - In representative democracies, citizens choose representatives who act on their behalf. - In dictatorships, rulers are not accountable to the people.

CONCEPTS: federalism, limited government, popular sovereignty, dictatorship, separation of powers, checks and balances

ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The geographic distribution of power determines whether a government is unitary, federal, or confederate. - In presidential government, the executive and legislative branches share power. • In parliamentary government, the legislative branch dominates.

Here there are two basic forms to consider: democracies and dictatorships.

Democracy In a democracy, supreme political authority rests with the people. The people hold the sovereign power, and government is conducted only by and with the consent of the people. ${ }^{4}$

Abraham Lincoln gave immortality to this definition of democracy in his Gettysburg Address in 1863: "government of the people, by the people, for the people." Nowhere is there a better, more concise statement of the American understanding of democracy.

A democracy can be either direct or indirect in form. A direct democracy, also called a pure democracy, exists where the will of the people is translated into public policy (law) directly by the people themselves, in mass meetings. Clearly, direct democracy can work only in small communities, where the citizenry can meet in a central place, and where the problems of government are few and relatively simple.

Direct democracy does not exist at the national level anywhere in the world today. However, the New England town meeting, which you will read about in Chapter 25, and the Landsgemeinde in a few of the smaller Swiss cantons is an excellent example of direct democracy in action. ${ }^{5}$

Americans are more familiar with the indirect form of democracy-that is, with representative democracy. In a representative democracy, a small group of persons, chosen by the people to act as their representatives, expresses the popular will. These agents of the people are responsible for carrying out the day-to-day conduct of govern-ment-the making and executing of laws and so on. They are held accountable to the people for that conduct, especially at periodic elections.

At these elections, the people have an opportunity to express their approval or 4 The word democracy is derived from the Greek words demos meaning "the people" and kratia meaning "rule" or "authority 5 The Greek word demokratia means "rule by the people." The Landsgemeinde, like the original New England town meeting, is an assembly open to all local citizens quali fied to vote. In a more limited sense, lawmaking by initiative petition is also an example of direct democracy; see Chapter 24.
disapproval of their representatives by casting ballots for or against them. To put it another way, representative democracy is government by popular consent-government with the consent of the governed.

Some people insist that the United States is more properly called a republic rather than a democracy. They hold that in a republic the sovereign power is held by those eligible to vote, while the political power is exercised by representatives chosen by and held responsible to those citizens. For them, democracy can be defined only in terms of direct democracy $\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ How does a direct democracy differ from an indirect democracy?

concise

 adj. brief, to the point
canton n. a local governmental unit in Switzerland

Direct

 Democracy- Also called pure democracy Occurs when the will of the people translates directly into public policy Works only on a small, local level

Image: Town meeting
Direct and Indirect Democracy
Who governs?

Democratic government derives its power from the people. The picture above shows citizens of a small town voting. Below, a representative casts her vote. The board behind her records the votes of each representative. Why might direct democracy be more appropriate for a smaller population? Why might indirect democracy be better for a larger population?

Indirect  Democracy

- Also called representative democracy - A group of persons chosen by the people express the will of the people. - Widely used on a national, State, and local level

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 1, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 21)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 22)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 23)
L3 Quiz A (p. 25)
L2 Quiz B (p. 26)

BELLRINGER

Write on the board: direct democracy, indirect democracy, dictatorship, unitary government, federal government, confederation, presidential government, parliamentary government. Have students copy the list, circle each term that describes the U.S. Government, and define each circled term.

L2 ELL Differentiate Write these terms and definitions in scrambled order on the board: direct democracy (all citizens meet to make the laws); indirect democracy (laws made by representatives chosen by the citizens); dictatorship (one person or a small group holds all the power); unitary government (all government powers belong to a single, central agency); federal government (the powers of government are divided between a central government and several local governments); confederation (an alliance of independent states); presidential government (the executive and legislative branches are separate, independent, and equal with one another); parliamentary government (the chief executive and cabinet are chosen by the legislature and are members of the legislature). Have students match each term to its definition.

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS

Invite volunteers to share their classifications of the U.S. Government. (The U.S. Government is an indirect democracy that is federal and presidential. ) Then have them define each term. (Indirect, or representative, democracy is a system of government in which a small group of officials, chosen by the people, act as the people's representatives and express the people's will. A federal government divides power between a central government and local governments. A presidential government separates power between coequal executive and legislative branches.)
L4 Differentiate Have students discuss recent U.S. issues, how they have been addressed here, and how they might be treated under other systems of government.

Answers

Checkpoint In a direct democracy, the people transform their will into public policy directly through mass meetings. In an indirect democracy, the people elect representatives to create public policy.
Direct and Indirect Democracy Direct democracy is practical only when the population is small enough for all citizens to meet in one place. When mass meetings are not possible, then ruling through a smaller number of representatives is more practical.

DISCUSS FORMS OF GOVERNMENT

Review students' definitions and examples on the Reading Comprehension Worksheet. Then use the following questions to discuss forms of government:

1. Many dictatorships endure for a decade or longer. What characteristics of this form of government contribute to the longevity of dictators? (Dictators are often supported by strong groups, such as the army, religious leaders, and industrialists.)
2. In the parliamentary governments of some countries, the prime minister remains in office only a short time. What characteristics of this form of government contribute to the short duration of some prime ministers? (The prime minister is chosen by parliament. If parliament defeats the prime minister on an important matter, it can force the prime minister to resign by a vote of no confidence.)
3. Why do you think that the majority of governmental systems today are parliamentary? (Possible response: The parliamentary form of government predates the presidential form, which was invented in the United States.)
4. Why do you think dictatorships generally go hand-in-hand with military power? (The military provides the force to take and maintain control of the government for the dictator.)

5. What kinds of organizations other than states have some form of government? (Possible response: Most large groups have leaders who make policies for the group. For example, superintendents, principals, and school boards govern schools. Sports teams might be dictatorships, with the coach making all team rules. Religious organizations have a governing hierarchy. For example, the Pope and other top Catholic leaders make policy for Catholics. )L4 Differentiate Assign each student a country and have them research its form of government. Encourage them to use their findings to create charts that show the relationship between the people and the leader, leaders, or representatives.

Checkpoint What is the difference between an oligarchy and an autocracy?
regimes
n. particular governments prestige
n. a reputation based on achievement

elite

$n$. a select group, a privileged class

Many Americans use the terms democracy, republic, representative democracy, and republican form of government interchangeably, although they are not the same. Whatever the terms used, remember that in a democracy the people are sovereign. They are the only source for any and all of government's power. In other words, the people rule.

Dictatorship A dictatorship exists where those who rule cannot be held responsible to the will of the people. The government is not accountable for its policies, nor for how they are carried out. Dictatorship is probably the oldest, and it is certainly the most common, form of government known to history. ${ }^{6}$

Dictatorships are sometimes identified as either autocracies or oligarchies. An autocracy is a government in which a single person holds unlimited political power. An oligarchy is a government in which the power to rule is held by a small, usually selfappointed elite.

All dictatorships are authoritarian; those in power hold absolute and unchallengeable authority over the people. Modern dictatorships have tended to be totalitarian, as well. That is, they exercise complete power over nearly every aspect of human affairs. Their power embraces all matters of human concern.

The leading examples of dictatorship in the modern era have been those in Fascist Italy (from 1922 to 1943), in Nazi Germany (from 1933 to 1945), in the Soviet Union (from 1917 until the late 1980s), and one that still exists in the People's Republic of China (where the present regime came to power in 1949).

Although they do exist, one-person dictatorships are not at all common today. A few close approaches to such a regime can now be found in Libya, which has been dominated by Muammar al-Qaddafi since 1969, and in some other Arab and African states.

Most present-day dictatorships are not nearly so absolutely controlled by a single person or by a small group as may appear to be the case. Outward appearances may 6 The word dictatorship comes from the Latin dictare, meaning "to dictate, issue orders," "to give authoritative commands." Dictator was the ancient Roman republic's tite for the leader who was given extraordinary powers in times of crisis. Julius hide the fact that several groups-the army, religious leaders, industrialists, and otherscompete for power in the political system.

Dictatorships often present the outward appearance of control by the people. The people often vote in popular elections; but the vote is closely controlled, and ballots usually contain the candidates of but one political party. An elected legislative body often exists, but only to rubber-stamp the policies of the dictatorship.

Typically, dictatorial regimes are militaristic in character. They usually gain power by force. The military holds many of the major posts in the government. After crushing all effective opposition at home, these regimes may turn to foreign aggression to enhance the country's military power, political control, and prestige.

Geographic Distribution of Power

In every system of government, the power to govern is located in one or more places geographically. From this standpoint, three basic forms of government exist: unitary, federal, and confederate.

Unitary Government A unitary government is often described as a centralized government. All powers held by the government belong to a single, central agency. The central (national) government creates local units of government for its own convenience. Those local governments have only those powers that the central government chooses to give them.

Most governments in the world are unitary in form. Great Britain is a classic illustration. A single central organization, the Parliament, holds all of the government's power. Local governments do exist-but solely to relieve Parliament of burdens it could perform only with much difficulty and inconvenience. Though unlikely, Parliament could do away with all local government in Britain at any time.

Be careful not to confuse the unitary form of government with a dictatorship. In the unitary form, all of the powers held by the government are concentrated in the central government.

Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson

Display Transparency 1B,Robert Mugabe, President of Zimbabwe, when you discuss dictatorships. This cartoon shows the difference between elections in a democracy and in a dictatorship. Ask: What is the woman doing? (voting) Why is the man holding up a sword? (to force the woman to vote in a certain way) What form of government does this cartoon illustrate? (a dictatorship)How do elections in a dictatorship differ from elections in a democracy? (Elections in a dictatorship are controlled by those in power. In a democracy, people are free to vote for the candidate of their choice.)

Answers

Checkpoint An autocracy is a dictatorship by one person, whereas an oligarchy is a dictatorship by a small group.

Democracies and Dictatorships

Every country has a different approach to government. Below are four examples: two democracies and two dictatorships. In each image, the people are expressing their will. How are the people's methods and the governments' reactions different in each image?

Background

Choosing a system of government The Framers of the Constitution had to deal with several critical matters as they drafted a new Constitution for the United States. None of the Framers favored a government based on the British model. The Revolutionary War had been fought in the name of local self-government, and the Framers were determined to preserve that cherished principle. But how could they create a central government that was strong enough to be effective and, at the same time, preserve the powers of the existing States? Having tried a confederation first, they realized that it had failed. Their solution: federalism. The powers of government would be divided between the new Federal Government and the States.

DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET

Number index cards 1 through 6. Write the word Democracy on cards 1 through 3 and Dictatorship on cards 4 through 6. Distribute the Chapter 1 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 23) and divide the class into six teams. Give each team one of the cards. Explain that teams should predict what would happen in the scenarios assigned to their team, under the form of government on their card. When students finish their worksheets, ask them to share their predictions. Invite students to generalize about how different forms of government react to disasters and challenges.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of democracies and dictatorships.

Answers

Democracies and Dictatorships In the democracy image, the people have sent representatives to discuss issues, and the government is holding a vote. In the dictatorship image, the people are protesting in the street, and the government is reacting with violence.

CONTINUE CORE ACTIVITY

Have students investigate the effects of dictatorship. Ask small groups to research modern dictators, such as Joseph Stalin, Vladimir Lenin, Benito Mussolini, Adolf Hitler, Mao Zedong, Ho Chi Minh, Muammar al-Qaddafi, Robert Mugabe, Augusto Pinochet, and Kim Jong-il. They should find out how each dictator came to power and held power and what effect dictatorship has had on each country. Invite students to share their findings. Based on this information, help them to create a chart showing similarities and differences. End the activity with the following discussion questions:

1. What circumstances are most likely to create dictatorship? (possible response: an unhappy, economically depressed population)
2. Can dictatorships be prevented? How? (Possible response: Dictatorships can be prevented only when a government is established in which the people have a voice and their basic needs are met.)
3. Should democracies take action to help prevent dictatorship? Why or why not? If so, under what circumstances should they act? What actions should they take? (Some students might say no. Democracy is an evolutionary process. Removing a dictator by force, before the society is ready for democracy, will only lead to another dictatorship. Other students might say that democracies have a moral obligation to help oppressed people throw off their oppressors. Democratic governments can support dissenters in those countries with money, arms, and education about democratic processes.)
L4 Differentiate Have students research a dictator on their own.

Distribution of Power

Power can be distributed between central (national) and local governments in three different ways. Which diagram best describes the distribution of power in the United States?

That government might not have all power, however. In Great Britain, for example, the powers held by the government are limited. British government is unitary and, at the same time, democratic.

Federal Government A federal government is one in which the powers of government are divided between a central government and several local governments. An authority superior to both the central and local governments makes this division of powers on a geographic basis; and that division cannot be changed by either the local or national level acting alone. Both levels of government act directly on the people through their own sets of laws, officials, and agencies.

In the United States, for example, the National Government has certain powers and the 50 States have others. This division of powers is set out in the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution stands above both levels of government; and it cannot be changed unless the people, acting through both the National Government and the States, agree to the change.

Australia, Canada, Mexico, Switzerland, Germany, India, and some 20 other states also have federal forms of government today. In the United States, the phrase "the Federal Government" is often used to identify the National Government, the government headquartered in Washington, D.C. Note, however, that each of the 50 State governments in this country is unitary, not federal, in form.

Confederate Government A confederation is an alliance of independent states. A central organization, the confederate government has the power to handle only those matters that the member states have assigned to it. Typically, confederate governments have had limited powers and only in such fields as defense and foreign affairs.

Most often, confederate governments have not had the power to make laws that apply directly to individuals, at least not without some further action by the member states. A confederate structure of government makes it possible for the several states to cooperate in matters of common concern and, at the same time, retain their separate identities.

Debate

Display Transparency 1C, Choosing a Chief Executive. Ask: What basic initial step does the population take to choose the chief executive of a presidential or parliamentary democracy? (vote) Point out to students that voting is crucial in any democratic government. Present the following question for debate: Should citizens be required by law to vote? Divide students into two groups, and have them brainstorm benefits and drawbacks. Allow time for representatives from each group to debate the question.

Answers  Distribution of Power federal

Confederations have been rare in the modern world. The European Union (EU) is the closest approach to one today. The EU, formed by 12 countries in 1993, has established free trade among its now 27 membernations, launched a common currency, and seeks to coordinate its members' foreign and defense policies.

In our own history, the United States under the Articles of Confederation (17811789) and the Confederate States of America (1861-1865) also provide examples of this form of government

Legislative and Executive Branches

Political scientists also classify governments based on the relationship between their legislative and executive agencies. This grouping yields two basic forms of government: presidential and parliamentary.

Presidential Government A presidential government features a separation of powers between the executive and the legislative branches of the government. The two branches are independent of one another and coequal. The chief executive (the president) is chosen by the people, independently of the legislature. He or she holds office for a fixed term, and has a number of significant powers that are not subject to the direct control of the legislative branch.

The details of this separation of the powers of these two branches are almost always spelled out in a written constitution-as they are in the United States. Each of the branches is regularly given several powers with which it can block actions of the other branch.
$\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ How is the executive branch related to the legislative branch in a presidential government?

coequal

adj. equal with one another, of the same rank

Choosing a Chief Executive

In a presidential democracy, the people choose their representatives as well as their President. In a parliamentary democracy, the representatives (members of parliament) choose the prime minister. Which method seems best for choosing a chief executive? Why?

Teacher-to-Teacher Network

alternative lesson plan Chemists use the periodic table to classify the elements. Biologists classify organisms into species. Political scientists classify governments of the world by their common characteristics. As students study this chapter, have them devise a classification system for governments and insert various governments into their system. They will need to define each classification using specific criteria.

To see this lesson plan, go to

EXTEND THE LESSON

At the beginning of this section, students read the following quote from Pope's "Essay on Man ":

"For Forms of Government let fools contest Whate'er is best adminster'd is best."

Write the quote on the board, and call on volunteers to paraphrase it. (People are foolish to argue about the form of government; the best government is one that is well run.) Ask students if their opinion has changed about whether the form of government matters. After a short discussion, assign students who hold similar opinions to small groups. Have each group write a response to Pope.
L4 Differentiate Have students create a poem in response to Pope's assertion.

Assess and Remediate

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 25). 2 Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 26)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

Answers

Checkpoint The executive branch and the legislative branch are separate and coequal.
Choosing a Chief Executive Answers will vary. Students might note that popular election of the president makes the chief executive more accountable to the people and enables checks and balances between the branches. However, selection of the chief executive by the parliament avoids the prolonged conflict and deadlock that sometimes occurs between the executive and legislative branches in the presidential form.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The features of  democracy versus  dictatorship  (Questions 1, 4) | Have students create word webs for democ-  racy and dictatorship. |
| The geographic  distribution of power  (Questions 1, 2, 5) | Have students write and exchange quizzes  about unitary, federal, and confederate forms  of government. |
| The differences  among presidential  and parliamentary  governments  (Questions 3, 5) | Write individual features of each type of  government on index cards. Have teams take  turns picking cards and identifying the form  of government. |

$\Delta$ Members of the South African parliament are sworn into office.

The United States is the world's leading example of presidential government. In fact, the United States invented the form. Nearly all of the other presidential systems in the world today are also found in the Western Hemisphere.

Parliamentary Government In a parliamentary government, the executive branch is made up of the prime minister or premier, and that official's cabinet. The prime minister and cabinet are themselves members of the legislative branch, the parliament. The prime minister is the leader of the majority party or of a like-minded group of parties (a coalition) in parliament and is chosen by that body. With parliament's approval, the prime minister selects the members of the cabinet from among the members of parliament. The executive is thus chosen by the legislature, is a part of it , and is subject to its direct control.

The prime minister and the cabinet (often called "the government") remain in office only as long as their policies and administration have the support of a majority in parliament. If the parliament defeats the prime minister and cabinet on an important matter the government may receive a "vote of no confidence," and the prime minister and his cabinet must resign from office. Then a new government must be formed. Either parliament chooses a new prime minister or, as often happens, all the seats in parliament go before the voters in a general election.

A majority of the governmental systems in the world today are parliamentary, not presidential, in form-and they are by a wide margin. Parliamentary government avoids one of the major problems of the presidential form: prolonged conflict and sometimes deadlock between the executive and legislative branches. However, the protections against arbitrary government found in the checks and balances of presidential government are not a part of the parliamentary system.

Essential Questions $\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a }\end{aligned}$
Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.

1. Guiding Question Use your com pleted table to answer this question: What are some forms of government in the world today?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) How is power distributed in a federal government? (b) How does a federal state differ from a confederate state?
3. What is the relationship between the executive and legislative branches in a parliamentary government?

Critical Thinking

4. Draw Inferences (a) What are some of the characteristics of democracy that dictatorships adopt? (b) Are these characteristics of a true dictatorship? Why or why not? (c) Why might the rulers of a dictatorship choose to take on these charac teristics?
5. Draw Conclusions Explain how a unitary government might be either democratic or dictatorial in form.

Quick Write

Expository Writing: Research Your Topic Use several sources to find the answers to the questions you posed in Section 1. The answers will help you gather details you will need to fully explain either a democracy or a dictatorship. Then put all of your facts and details in chronological order to help the reader follow the growth of democracy or dictatorship.

Assessment Answers

1. democracy (direct and indirect), dictatorship (autocracy and oligarchy), unitary, federal, confederate, presidential, parliamentary
2. (a) In a federal government, power is distributed between the central government and several local governments. (b) In a confederation, the central government is weak, and most of the power is held by the member states. In a federal government, the power is distributed equally among levels of government.
3. In a parliamentary government, the chief executive is chosen by the legislature, is a part of it, and is subject to its direct control. The chief executive selects the cabinet from among the members of the legislature. The legislature may remove the executive branch by a vote of no confidence.
4. (a) Some dictatorships hold elections and have a legislative branch. (b) No. In a true dictatorship, the ruler or ruling party does not share power with the legislature or allow free elections. (c) Rulers might choose to take on these characteristics to appease their people and other nations, in order to remain in power.
5. In a unitary government, elections are held, and power resides in the citizens of the state. In the case of a dictatorship, all power is held by one person, or a small group of people.
QUICK WRITE Students should use several sources to research their topics. Putting their notes in chronological order will help them write their essays later.

CITIZENSHIP  101  Volunteering

> In one of his State of the Union addresses, President George W. Bush called on Americans to volunteer. He also announced the creation of USA Freedom Corps, an organization that links Americans to thousands of volunteer opportunities. USA Freedom Corps has helped many volunteer organizations-including Learn and Serve America, which supports student volunteers - gain recognition and support for their causes.

Asubstantial number of students volunteer their time and skills every year. According to the Department of Labor, about one in five citizens between the ages of 16 and 24 has volunteered in recent years

While volunteering is not required of U.S. citizens, it is an important responsibility that many students fulfill in their spare time. More recently, the number of volunteers between 16 and 24 years old has fallen. Many essential programs suffer when the number of people willing to give time and money declines.

All citizens of the United States benefit from services provided by the government. Citizens can attend public schools, receive mail, and enjoy national parks. However, sometimes the government lacks funding or manpower to provide these services to their greatest extent.

Volunteers provide services that the government may not have the time or the resources to offer. A student may tutor a younger student after school. A volunteer group might maintain hiking trails in a national park.

In addition, volunteers fulfill services that the government is not required to provide. These include visiting the elderly or providing community theater. Volunteers are particularly necessary in times of war. The United Service Organizations (USO) support troops overseas with comforts such as entertainment, packages from home, and phone cards to call the United States.
. Make a List To volunteer, make a list of activities that interest you and talents that you possess. Many people find it rewarding to share their talents and interests with others. For example, if you like to play soccer, you may be able to coach for a children's team.
Seek Out Opportunities Look for volunteer opportunities that are connected to your interests and strengths. Ask your teacher or use the Internet to find organizations that fit your criteria.
3. Make Contact Write an e-mail to or call the contact person for your chosen organization. Some organizations require a resume, references, or a list of past experiences. Make sure you have these on hand.

What do you think?

1. How does volunteering benefit all citizens? Why is volunteering an important civic responsibility?
2. The United States has seen a drop in the number of volunteers in the last few years. How could teen agers be persuaded to volunteer? Brainstorm two ways to get people interested in volunteering.
3. You Try It Locate some volunteer opportunities in your community. Make a list of the ones that interest you, and how you would get involved. Is it easy or difficult to get involved in these organizations? What are the steps that you must take? Are these causes ones to which you would give some of your time?
(.) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Citizenship Activity Pack
For an activity to help you explore volunteering, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com

LESSON GOAL

- Students will brainstorm personal interests and talents that might lead to volunteer opportunities.

Teach

READ

Have a volunteer read the introduction aloud. If students have Internet access, have them research USA Freedom Corps and Learn and Serve America to find out about student-volunteer experiences.

SURVEY PRIOR EXPERIENCE

Make a list of organizations students have worked for. Was their experience rewarding? Why or why not? Invite students to tell about what they did and what they learned from their volunteer experience.

MAKE A PLAN

Encourage students to create a step-by-step plan for finding a volunteer job. Offer the following chart as a sample that students might customize.

| Brainstorm Interests: |
| :--- |
| Investigate Opportunities: |
| Narrow Prospects: |
| Follow Up: |

Assess and Remediate

Collect and grade students' plans. You may also have them answer the What Do You Think questions.

Answers

1. A strong answer will show an understanding that volunteers extend services provided by the government and promote the general welfare.
2. Point out to teenagers that volunteering rewards the volunteer. It adds value to a resume, helps teenagers find a career, and brings satisfaction.
3. Student lists should reflect their personal interests and talents.

GUIDING QUESTION

What are the basic concepts of democracy?

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will

- identify and explain the five concepts of democracy by completing a chart.
- identify real-world examples of the five concepts by brainstorming and filling out a table.
- discuss the responsibilities and duties of citizenship.

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 27) before class.Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 28)

SECTION 3

Basic Concepts of Democracy

Guiding Question

What are the basic concepts of democracy? Use a concept web like the one below to take notes on the basic concepts of democracy.

Political Dictionary

- majority rule - free enterprise - compromise system
- citizen

Objectives

1. Understand the foundations of democracy.
2. Analyze the connections between democracy and the free enterprise system.

Image Above: Children gather to celebrate Flag Day in New York City.

What do you make of this assessment of democracy by British statesman James Bryce: "No government demands so much from the citizen as Democracy, and none gives so much back"? What does democratic government demand from you? What does it give you in return?

Foundations

Democracy is not inevitable. It does not exist in the United States simply because Americans regard it as the best of all possible political systems. Rather, democracy exists in this country because the American people believe in its basic concepts. It will continue to exist only for as long as we, the people, continue to subscribe to and practice those concepts.

Sir Winston Churchill (1874-1965) once put the argument for democracy this way: "No one pretends that democracy is perfect or all-wise. Indeed, it has been said that democracy is the worst form of government except all those other forms that have been tried from time to time."

The American concept of democracy-what we believe democracy means-rests on these basic notions:

1. Recognition of the fundamental worth and dignity of every person;
2. Respect for the equality of all persons;
3. Faith in majority rule and an insistence upon minority rights;
4. Acceptance of the necessity of compromise; and
5. Insistence upon the widest possible degree of individual freedom;

Of course, these concepts can be worded in other ways. No matter what the wording, however, they form the very minimum with which anyone who professes to believe in democracy must agree.

Worth of the Individual Democracy is firmly based upon a belief in the fundamental importance of the individual. Each individual, no matter what his or her station in life, is a separate and distinct being.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

NOTETAKING AND ACTIVE LISTENING

20 Principles of Government

To practice notetaking and active listening in this section, use the Chapter 1 Section 3 Skills Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 33). You may teach the skill before the debate in this lesson. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 34).

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: • Democracy is based on the concepts of individual worth, equality, majority rule with minority rights, compromise, and individual freedom. • Equality means all are entitled to equality of opportunity and equality before the law. - Individuals are free to do as they please as long as they do not violate the rights of others.
CONCEPTS: democratic principles, equality, majority rule, minority rights, freedom, citizenship, duties and responsibilities of citizens
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Democracy depends on citizens' commitment and participation • Democratic governments work to balance the needs of society with individual rights. - Both democracy and free enterprise are based on individual freedom.

This concept of the dignity and worth of the individual is of overriding importance in democratic thought. At various times, of course, the welfare of one or a few individuals is subordinated to the interests of the many in a democracy. People can be forced to do certain things whether they want to or not. Examples range from paying taxes to registering for the draft to stopping at a stop sign.

When a democratic society forces people to pay a tax or obey traffic signals, it is serving the interests of the many. However, it is not simply serving the interests of the many who as a mass of people happen to outnumber the few. Rather, it is serving the many who, as individuals, together make up that society.

The distinction we are trying to make here between an individual and all individuals may be difficult to grasp. It is, however, critically important to a real understanding of the meaning of democracy.

Equality of All Persons Hand in hand with the belief in the worth of the individual, democracy stresses the equality of all individuals. It holds, with Jefferson, that "all men are created equal."

Certainly, democracy does not imply an equality of condition for all persons. Thus, it does not claim that all are born with the same mental or physical abilities. Nor does it hold that all persons have a right to an equal share of worldly goods.

Rather, the democratic concept of equality means that every person is entitled to (1) equality of opportunity and (2) equality before the law. That is, the democratic concept of equality holds that no person should be held back for any such arbitrary reasons as those based on race, color, religion, or gender. It states that each person must be free to develop himself or herself as fully as he or she wishes to, and that each person should be treated as the equal of all other persons under the law.

We have come a great distance toward the goal of equality for all in this country. It is clear, however, that we are still a considerable distance from a genuine, universally recognized and respected equality for all of America's people.

Majority Rule, Minority Rights In a democracy, the will of the people and not the dictate of the ruling few determines public policy. But what is the popular will, and how is it determined? Some device must exist by which these crucial questions can be answered. The only satisfactory device within democracy is that of majority rule. Democracy holds that a majority will be right more often than it will be wrong, and that the majority will also be right more often than any one person or small group will.
$\checkmark$ checkpoint To what are citizens entitled under the democratic concept of equality?

subordinate

v. made less importan

arbitrary

adj. unsupported

inevitable

 adj. sure to happenIn Brown v. Board of
In Brown v. Board of Education, the SuEducation, the Supreme Court ruled that segregation denied African Americans equality guaranteed by the Constitution and the democratic system. Arkansas fought the integration of its schools. Elizabeth Eckford (inset) was one of nine African Americans who enrolled at Central High School in Little Rock. Below, seven of the students known as the Little Rock Nine sit with Thurgood Marshall, who argued the case.

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 1, Section 3: L3 L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheets (pp. 27, 28)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 29)
L2 ELL Bellringer Worksheet (p. 30)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 31)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 35)
L3 L2 Skills Worksheets (pp. 33, 34)
L3 Quiz A (p. 36) L2 Quiz B (p. 37)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 38) $\quad \mathbf{L 2}$ Chapter Test B (p. 41)

BELLRINGER

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 1 All-inOne, p. 29), which is a passage about the role of the Internet in democracy. Have students read the selection and answer the questions.
L2 ELL Differentiate Have students complete the adapted Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One,
p. 30), which presents a simpler version of the passage and has students match vocabulary words and determine the main ideas of the text.

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

COVER THE BASICS

Tell students that today you will discuss the five basic concepts of democracy. You will return to their Bellringer answers later in the lesson. Then ask them to take out their Reading Comprehension Worksheets.
First, call on a volunteer to identify the five basic concepts of democracy. (individual worth, equality, majority rule and minority rights, compromise, individual freedom) Then have volunteers tell what each concept means to them. (possible answers: individual worth: all people have value and deserve to be treated with dignity; equality: every individual is entitled to an equal chance to take advantage of life's opportunities and to the same treatment before the law as everyone else; majority rule and minority rights: decisions of the majority hold, but the majority must be willing to listen to the views of the minority; compromise: a process of give-and-take among conflicting views to come to a decision that is acceptable to most people; individual freedom: all individuals may do as they like as long as their actions do not violate the rights of others)
Ask students the meaning of the term free enterprise system. Write this term on the board with student definitions. (free enterprise system: an economic system characterized by private ownership of capital goods; investments made by private decision, not by government directive; and success or failure determined by competition in the marketplace)

Answers

Checkpoint All citizens are entitled to equality of opportunity and equality before the law.

DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET

Distribute the Chapter 1 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 31). Direct students' attention to Part 1, which asks students to identify real-world situations from daily life, showing the five concepts of democracy in action. Then have students fill in the chart in Part 2, which has them consider differences between the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.
L1 L2 Differentiate For Part 1, use the Jigsaw strategy (p. T27) and have students work in groups of three to focus on one concept. Have the students jigsaw into a second group with students who reviewed each of the other concepts and have them review their ideas together. For Part 2, have students meet as one group to discuss duties and responsibilities of citizenship.
L4 Differentiate Have students work individually to find real-world situations from history for each concept of democracy. An historical example that reflects the ideal for equality: the Civil Rights Act of 1964. An historical example that shows reality falling short of the ideal of equality: the Japanese-American internments during World War II.

[^1] ment or a trial-and-error process designed to find satisfactory ways to order human relations. Democracy does not dictate that the majority will always arrive at the best decisions on public matters. In fact, the democratic process is not meant to come up with "right" or "best" answers. Rather, the democratic process is a search for satisffictory solutions to public problems.

Of course, in a democracy the majority's decisions will usually be more, rather than less, satisfactory. Democracy does admit the possibility of mistakes; there is the possibility that "wrong" or less satisfactory answers will sometimes be found. Democracy also recognizes that seldom is any solution to a public problem so satisfactory that it cannot be improved upon, and that circumstances can change over time. So, the process of experimentation, of seeking answers to public questions, is a never-ending one.

Certainly, a democracy cannot work without the principle of majority rule. Unchecked, however, a majority could destroy its opposition and, in the process, destroy democracy itself. Thus, democracy requires majority rule restrained by minority rights. The majority must always recognize the right of any minority to become, if it can by fair and lawful means, the majority. The majority must always be willing to listen to a minority's argument, to hear its objections, to bear its criticisms, and to welcome its suggestions.

- Analyzing Cartoons Who do the chefs represent in this cartoon?

Necessity of Compromise In a democracy, public decision making must be largely a matter of give-and-take among the various competing interests. It is a matter of compromise in order to find the position most acceptable to the largest number. Compromise is the process of blending and adjusting competing views and interests.

Compromise is an essential part of the democratic concept for two major reasons. First, remember that democracy puts the individual first and, at the same time, insists that each individual is the equal of all others. In a democratic society made up of many individuals and groups with many different opinions and interests, how can the people make public decisions except by compromise?

Second, few public questions have only two sides. Most can be answered in several ways. Take the apparently simple question of how a city should pay for the paving of a public street. Should it charge those who own property along the street? Or should the costs be paid from the city's general treasury? Or should the city and the adjacent property owners share the costs? What about those who will use the street but do not live in the city? Should they have to pay a toll?

Remember, compromise is a process, a way of achieving majority agreement. It is never an end in itself. Not all compromises are good, and not all are necessary.

Individual Freedom It should be clear by this point that democracy can thrive only in an atmosphere of individual freedom. However, democracy does not and cannot insist on complete freedom for the individual. Absolute freedom can exist only in a state of anarchy-the total absence of government. Anarchy can only lead, inevitably and quickly, to rule by the strong and ruthless.

Democracy does require that each individual must be as free to do as he or she pleases as far as the freedom of all will allow. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once had this to say about the relative nature of each individual's rights: "The right to swing my fist ends where the other man's nose begins."

Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson

Display Transparency 1D, Equality, when you discuss the democratic concept of equality. This cartoon illustrates equal opportunity. Ask: What is the setting of this cartoon? (a school civics class) Who is the woman? (teacher) To whom do the hands belong? (students) What is the significance of the colors of the hands? (The colors suggest that people of all races aspire to become president.) What is the significance of the jewelry? (The jewelry suggests gender-both boys and girls aspire to the presidency.) How does this cartoon reflect the democratic concept of equality? (The cartoon suggests equality of opportunity-in the United States, anyone, regardless of race or gender, can grow up to be President. ) Tell students that cartoon was published when Senator Hillary Clinton and President Barack Obama were competing for the Democratic nomination for President.

Drawing the line between the rights of one individual and those of another is not easy. Still, the drawing of that line is a continuous and vitally important function of democratic government. As John F. Kennedy put it: "The rights of every man are diminished when the rights of one man are threatened."

Striking the proper balance between freedom for the individual and the rights of society as a whole is similarly difficult-and vital. Abraham Lincoln described democracy's problem in these words:

PRIMARY SOURCES

Must a government, of necessity, be too strong for the liberties of its own people, or too weak to maintain its own existence?

-Message to Congress,

 July 4, 1861Human beings desire both liberty and authority. Democratic government must work constantly to strike the proper balance between the two. The authority of government must be adequate to the needs of society. At the same time, that authority must never be allowed to become so great that it restricts the individual beyond what is absolutely necessary.

Responsibilities and Duties of Citizenship

The rights of the individual are upheld by the duties and responsibilites of every citizen. Indeed, the very definition of a citizen is one who holds certain rights and responsibilities within a state.

The duties a citizen must fulfill include obeying the law, going to school, and paying taxes. These duties are to the benefit of all citizens. For example, taxes paid at the State level help fund essential government responsibilities, such as public schools and police departments.

Responsibilities in a democracy are a little different from duties. While duties are required ofeverycitizen, responsibilities are only strongly encouraged. For example, it is the responsibility of every citizen over the age of 18 to vote for public officials. If a citizen does not vote, that citizen cannot expect his or her concerns to be addressed by the government.

It is also the responsibility of all citizens to be active in their community. One can do this by volunteering for a cause, running for office, or simply writing to one's representative about an issue. These are yet more examples of the influence of the will of the people on a democratic government.

Democracy and the Free Enterprise System

The American commitment to freedom for the individual is deep-rooted, and it is as evident in the nation's economic system as it is in the political system. The American economic system is often called the free enterprise system. It is an economic system characterized by the private ownership of capital goods; investments made by private decision, not by government directive; and success or failure determined by competition in the marketplace. The free enterprise system is based on four fundamental factors: private ownership, individual initiative, profit, and competition.
$\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ Name two duties of every U.S. citizen. adequate
adi. enough to meet the needs of a situation initiative n. a leading action

Duties and Responsibilities of Citizenship

| Duties | Responsibilities  - Serving on a jury |
| :--- | :--- |
| - Voting |  |
| - Serving as a witness | - Volunteering |
| - Attending school | - Participating in civic life |
| - Understanding |  |
| - Paying taxes | - Une workings of |
| (men only) for the draft | our government |
| - Obeying local, State, |  |
| and national laws  - Respecting the rights of  others |  |

( Analyzing Charts Many duties and responsibilities come with being a citizen. Why might obeying the law be a duty rather than a responsibility?

Debate

Ask: Should the government support online elections? Divide students into two groups and have them list arguments, based on the discussion, about the risks and benefits of holding online elections. Use the Debate strategy (p. T25) to organize the groups. Allow time for representatives from each group to debate the question.

REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS

Invite volunteers to share their answers to the Bellringer questions. (Possible answers: 1. "Democracy and the Internet"; it is a simple statement of the basic idea. 2. With nearly 200 million Americans using it, the Internet holds great potential for keeping citizens informed about their government and for holding online elections. However, the reliability of information and integrity of results remain issues of concern. 3. "Democracy and the Internet would seem to be made for one another;" or "There is a vast amount of unverified, often unverifiable, and frequently false information and biased analysis in cyberspace.")

EXTEND THE DISCUSSION

Use these questions to continue the discussion about the duties and responsibilities of citizenship:

1. Why might going to school be a duty instead of a responsibility?
2. Should volunteering be a duty rather than a responsibility?
3. What would be the benefits of making voting a duty?
4. What might happen if serving on a jury was a responsibility rather than a duty?

EXTEND THE LESSON

L3 Differentiate Tell students that they will be submitting art for an exhibit. Students may work alone, with partners, or in small groups to create artwork about some aspect of the section, such as the meaning of democracy, the responsibilities and duties of citizenship, or the free enterprise system. Their works might contain relevant words from the section, as well as pictures and illustrations. Hold a gallery "opening" to display student art, and allow time for a question-and-answer session.
L2 Differentiate Distribute and have students complete the Extend Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 35), "Volunteering to Improve Your Community."

Answers

Checkpoint Possible answer: Every U.S. citizen must pay taxes and attend school to a certain age.
Analyzing Charts Possible answer: A duty is required of every citizen, while responsibilities are only strongly encouraged. Everyone has the duty to obey the law.

Assess and Remediate

L3  Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.

L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 36)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 37)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The five concepts of  democracy (Ques-  tions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5) | Have students create and exchange cross-  word puzzles that include clues about each  concept of democracy. |
| The free enterprise  system (Question 6) | Find real-world examples when the demand  for a product dictated the price (tickets to a  concert or sporting event). |

Checkpoint What are the four factors of the free enterprise system?

antitrust laws

n. laws that regulate business practices competition

zoning ordinances

 $n$. laws that regulate the uses of property in certain areasHow the System Works The free enterprise system is often called capitalism. It is also known as the private enterprise system and as a market-based system. It does not rely on government to decide what items are to be produced, how much of any particular item should be produced, or how much any item is to sell for. Rather, those decisions are left to millions of consumers and sellers exercising their freedom to make their own choices. When consumers demand a product or service, sellers will set a higher price. Conversely, when there is little demand, sellers will lower the price. This usually creates an economic system independent of the government.

Democracy and the free enterprise system are not the same thing. One is a political system, and the other is an economic system. However, both are firmly based on the concept of individual freedom. America's experience with both systems clearly suggests that the two reinforce one another in practice.

Government and the Free Enterprise System The basis of the American economic system is the free market. However, government does play a role in the American economy, and it always has. Government's participation in the economy serves a two-fold purpose: to protect the public and to preserve private enterprise.

Government's participation in the economy can be seen at every level in this country:
national, State, and local. Here are but a few examples: Economic activities are regulated by government through antitrust laws, pure food and drug laws, antipollution standards, and city and county zoning ordinances and building codes.

The nation's economic life is promoted in a great number of public ways. The government grants money for transportation systems and the growing of particular food crops, builds roads and operates public schools, provides services such as the postal system and weather reports, and much more.

Thus, some activities that might be carried out privately are in fact conducted by government. Public education, local fire departments, and city bus systems are examples of long-standing government programs.

How much should government participate, regulate, promote, police, and serve? Many heated debates in American politics center on that question, and we are often reminded of Abraham Lincoln's advice:

PRIMARY SOURCES

The legitimate object of government, is to do for a community of people, whatever they need to have done, but can not do, at all, or can not, so well do, for themselves-in their separate, and individual capacities.
-Abraham Lincoln

SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT

To continue to build a
Essential Questions response to the chapter
Journal Essential Question, go to your
Essential Question, go to your
Essential Questions Journal.

1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What are the basic concepts of democracy?

Key Terms and Comprehension

2. (a) In what two ways does democracy require the equality of all persons? (b) What kind of equality is not guaranteed by democracy?
3. Why is compromise so important in a democracy?
4. What does it mean to be a good citizen?

Critical Thinking

5. Predict Consequences (a) What must a good citizen do in order to help preserve democracy? (b) What might be the consequences if citizens were not required to pay taxes? To serve on a jury?
6. Draw Conclusions How might the government react to a bad economy?

Quick Write

Quick Write Expository Writing: Create an Outline Using the notes from the research you conducted in Section 2, create an outline to help you further organize your information. The outline should follow the chronological order you established.

Answers

Checkpoint private ownership, individual initiative, profit, and competition

Principles of Government

Assessment Answers

1. worth of the individual; equality of all persons; majority rule, minority rights; necessity of compromise; and individual freedom
2. (a) Citizens are guaranteed equality of opportunity and equality before the law.
(b) Democracy does not guarantee an equal share of goods. (c) Equality is achieved by protecting individual rights and by majority rule while respecting minority rights.
3. A democracy values the individual, yet a democratic society contains many individuals with various opinions. Compromise is necessary to blend and adjust competing views to find the position most acceptable to the majority.
4. Being a good citizen means fulfilling the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. Duties include paying taxes, obeying the law, and respecting the rights of others. Responsibilities include voting, volunteering, and participating in civic life.
5. (a) Democracy can exist only if citizens continue to practice democratic concepts. Citizens can do this by respecting the rights and equality of others, fulfilling their duties and responsibilities, accepting the will of the majority while respecting minority rights, and being willing to compromise. (b) If citizens were not required to pay taxes, the government would not have the money to provide essential services. If citizens did not serve on juries, the right to a fair trial by one's peers would be impossible.
6. The government might take steps to stimulate the economy.
QUICK WRITE Students' outlines should follow the chronological order of their notes.

Major Political Ideas

| Force Theory | Evolutionary Theory | Divine Right Theory | Social Contract Theory |
| :--- | :--- | :--- | :--- |
| One person or a small  group took control of a  population by force. | The state developed  naturally out of the early  family. | God created the state  and gave those of royal  birth the "divine right"  to rule. | People agreed to give up  as much freedom as  needed to create a state  that provided safety and  well-being for all (Hobbes). |

For More Information

To learn more about voting, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
$\square 1$ Fandel, Jennifer. Dictatorship. The Creative Company, 2007.
L2 Lindop, Edmund. Presidents Versus Congress: Conflict and Compromise. Scholastic Library Publishing, 1994.
L3 Butler, Nicholas Murray. Why Should We Change Our Form of Government? Girvin Press, 2007
L4 Diamond, Larry. The Spirit of Democracy: The Struggle to Build Free Societies Throughout the World. Times Books, 2008.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

STUDY TIPS

Essay Tests When faced with an essay test, students should scan the test and note the number of questions and the point value of each. They should then budget their time accordingly. Before beginning to write, encourage students to read the question carefully and be sure to do what it asks. Key words to look for include analyze, explain, identify, demonstrate, compare, contrast, and define. Jotting down an outline can help students organize their thoughts and may get them some points if they run out of time. Stress that if the test is handwritten, neatness counts. They may find it preferable to draw a line through mistakes rather than erasing. This tends to be quicker and easier to read. If students are having trouble understanding the question, suggest they try to put it in their own words. When they've finished writing, have students proofread their work if at all possible, and make sure they have answered all the parts of each question.

assessment at A glance

Tests and Quizzes

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

Performance Assessment

Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 6, 16, 23
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

Chapter Assessment

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

SECTION 1

1. legislative, judicial, and executive powers
2. (a) Every state possesses population, territory, sovereignty, and government. (b) Under the force theory, a single person or a group takes control of a territory and its population by force. Government is created when the person or group declares authority to rule. (c) The social contract theory seems best for fostering democracy, because the authority to rule comes from the people.
3. (a) According to the Constitution, the six purposes of government are to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, secure the blessings of liberty. (b) Answers will vary. Sample response: provides a postal service, maintains roads, and provides aid during natural disasters.
4. (a) The king represents a dictatorship. (b) The king is implying that he does not have any decision-making power because he does not have the right to vote. (c) This statement is misleading because under a dictatorship, the king makes all of the decisions. He doesn't have to vote.

SECTION 2

5. (a) In a democracy, the government rules by the consent of the people. Decisions are made by the rule of the majority. (b) In a republic, the sovereign power is held by those who are eligible to vote, and the will of the people is carried out by representatives elected by voters. The people do not rule directly. (c) For those people, democracy can be defined only in terms of direct democracy.
6. (a) In an autocracy, the power to rule is held by one person. In an oligarchy, the power to rule is held by a small group of people. (b) You are more likely to find oligarchies today.
7. (a) In a presidential government, the president and members of Congress are chosen separately, and are independent of one another. The president holds powers that are not under the control of the legislature. (b) In a parliamentary government, the prime minister and the cabinet belong to the legislative branch. He or she is chosen by the legislature and is under its direct control. (c) The parliamentary system seems to give more power to the legislative branch.

11 Chapter Assessment

Comprehension and Critical Thinking

Section 1

1. What are the three basic powers exercised by government?
2. (a) What four characteristics does every state possess? (b) How does the force theory account for those four characteristics? (c) Which of those theories best explains the rise of democratic states? Why?
3. (a) What are the six purposes of government established by the Constitution? (b) Cite three ways in which the Federal Government promotes the general welfare that are not listed in the text.
4. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) What form of government does the king represent? (b) What is the king implying when he says that he doesn't get to vote either? (c) Is this a misleading statement? Why or why not?

'So what? - I don't get to vote either, you know!"

Section 2
5. (a) Explain the fundamental ideas of democracy. (b) How is a republic different from a democracy? (c) Why do some people hold that the United States is more properly called a republic rather than a democracy?
6. (a) What is the difference between an autocracy and an oligarchy? (b) According to the text, which of these types of dictatorship are you more likely to find today?
7. (a) How is power distributed in a presidential government? (b) How is power distributed in a parliamentary government? (c) Which system seems to give the most power to the legislative branch?

Section 3

8. (a) When looking at majority rule versus minority rights, why would some people argue that the United States is not a true democracy? (b) How are the rights of the individual protected in a true democracy? (c) How are they protected in the United States?
9. (a) How might the application of purely democratic ideas to a functioning government cause a problem for a large federal state? (b) How might it cause a problem for minority groups within that state?
10. Explain how the following duties and responsibilities of citizenship contribute to the good of all: (a) paying taxes, (b) voting, and (c) volunteering. (d) Which do you think is most important? Why?

Writing About Government

11. Use your Quick Write activities to write an expository piece explaining democracy or dictatorship. Use your outine as a basis for your expository piece. See pp. S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

Apply What You've Learned

12. Essential Question Activity You are the leaders of a group of formerly independent states now coming together to form a new country. The new country will be large in area, with a large population. Choose a form of government (federal, confederate, or unitary) that you think would best suit this situation.
(a) Work out the details of your new government based on information from the chapter. Answer the following questions: Will the country run under a free enterprise system? Will it be a direct or representative democracy? What major functions will the government be required to perform?
(b) Write an organizational plan for your government and present it to the class. Allow time for questions. Revise your plan according to issues your classmates point out
13. Essential Question Assessment Use the work from the activity and the content of this chapter to help you write a paragraph that answers the Essential Question: Is government necessary? Then, as a class, discuss your responses. Discuss why or why not government is necessary.

Essential Questions $\begin{aligned} & \text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ & \text { Question, go to your Essential }\end{aligned}$ Journal Questions Journal.

26 Chapter 1 Assessment

SECTION 3

8. (a) Some people would say that the United States is not a true democracy because the rights and opinions of the minority are protected from possible abuses that could arise from majority rule. In other words, the majority can only rule as far as the minority's rights are not infringed. (b) The rights of the individual are protected by restricting individual freedoms. Individuals are free to do what they want as long as they don't infringe on the rights of other individuals. (c) In the United States, the rights of the individual are protected by various Constitutional amendments and Federal and State laws.
9. (a) In a pure democracy, the people would have direct control of the government. However, in a state with many people from different regions, it is impossible to have direct contact. (b) If the majority ruled unrestricted, minorities would become unequal and their individual rights might be infringed upon.
10. (a) By paying taxes, citizens are helping fund schools, police forces, and other gov-ernment-run programs. (b) When citizens vote, they are deciding who will represent

Document-Based Assessment

The Roots of Democracy

Its invention is usually attributed to ancient Greece, but democracy existed well before the Greeks coined the term around 2,500 years ago. However, the Greek philosophers wrote extensively on the subject. Some supported it, while others-like Plato-did not.

Document 1

Discussion on the mean condition

From Aristotle's Politics, Part XI
Thus it is manifest that the best political community is formed by citizens of the middle class, and that those states are likely to be well-administered in which the middle class is large, and stronger if possible than both the other classes, or at any rate than either singly; for the addition of the middle class turns the scale, and prevents either of the extremes from being dominant. Great then is the good fortune of a state in which the citizens have a moderate and sufficient property; for where some possess much, and the others nothing, there may arise an extreme democracy, or a pure oligarchy; or a tyranny may grow out of either extremeeither out of the most rampant democracy, or out of an oligarchy; but it is not so likely to arise out of the middle constitutions and those akin to them. . . . The mean condition of states is clearly best, for no other is free from faction; and where the middle class is large, there are least likely to be factions and dissensions [disagreements].
-Discussion on the mean condition From Aristotle's Politics, Part XI

Document 2

Discussion about democracy

From Plato's Republic, Book 8 How grandly does [democracy] trample all these fine notions of ours under her feet, never giving a thought to the pursuits which make a statesman, and promoting to honor any one who professes to be the people's friend. . . .
And when they [democratic principles] have emptied and swept clean the soul of him [the individual] who is now in their power and who is being initiated by them in great mysteries, the next thing is to bring back to their house insolence and anarchy [lawlessness, chaos] and waste and impudence [disrespect] in bright array having garlands on their heads, and a great company with them, hymning their praises and calling them by sweet names; insolence they term breeding, and anarchy liberty, and waste magnificence, and impudence courage.
-Discussion about democracy From Plato's Republic, Book 8

```
Use your knowledge of the concepts of democracy, other forms of government, and Documents 1 and 2 to answer Questions 1-3.
```

1. According to Aristotle, what is the best condition for political stability?
A. extreme democracy
B. moderate democracy
C. pure oligarchy
D. tyranny
2. Based on the excerpt from Plato's Republic, what is Plato's attitude toward democracy? Cite two supporting details from his writing.
3. Pull It Together How might Aristotle address Plato's concerns? Write a paragraph from the statesman's point of view.

DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT

1. $B$
2. Plato sees democracy as the next step toward anarchy. He writes about democracy "trampling the notions" of the statesman. Once the ideas of democracy have emptied the soul of the citizen, they bring anarchy to his house.
3. Possible response: Aristotle might tell Plato that the people of the middle class are best at ruling because they are the most moderate. Democracy would not lead to anarchy. There would be fair laws that all will obey. Democracy will not lead to a new ruling elite "having garlands on their heads." Instead, the people will rule together, making decisions by sharing ideas.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.
them or what policies the government should make. They are telling the government how to act in the citizens' best interest. (c) By volunteering, citizens provide services that help others, such as distributing food or building houses. (d) Answers will vary.

WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT

11. Students should explain the origins and basic ideas behind democracy or dictatorship. Their essays should cite details from the chapter and from their individual research.

APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED

12. Students should use what they have learned to set up a basic governmental system for their state. Details should include the kind of government, the restrictions on individual freedoms, and the kind of economic system.
13. Students should take either side of the question "Is government necessary?" They should back up their opinions with facts from the text and with what they learned in the activity.

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.

Introduce the Chapter

Essential Questions:

UNIT 1

What should be the goals of government?

CHAPTER 2

How does the Constitution reflect the times in which it was written?

ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the image and quotation suggest about the origins of American government? (that the colonists had to fight to establish the American government) In this chapter, students will learn how the American system of government came into being. Then tell students to begin to further explore American independence and the creation of the Constitution by completing the Chapter 2 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

BEFORE READING

L2
ELL Differentiate Chapter 2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 57)

SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

COMPARE VIEWPOINTS

You may wish to teach comparing viewpoints as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 2 Skills Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 76) to help students learn how to compare viewpoints. The worksheet asks students to read two opposing statements about the taxation of the American colonists by the British government, decide how the viewpoints differ, and consider how the viewpoints were influenced by frames of reference. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 77).

[^2]

Block Scheduling

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 and 2 lessons. Choose either the debate in Lesson 2 or one of the Extend options, depending on your preferences and State standards. You may wish to use the alternate lesson for Lesson 2.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3, 4, and 5 lessons, omitting one of the Extend options for Lesson 4.

Pressed for Time

To cover this chapter quickly, review the Bellringer flowchart in Section 1, and explain the rights found in each document. Then have students complete the Section 2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet, identifying the events that led to the Revolution. Explain that the colonists revolted when the rights under the English documents were taken away. Point out these rights in the Declaration of Independence. Have students answer the questions that appear after the Declaration of Independence. Review the Articles of Confederation, and have students fill out the Section 3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet. Review the New Jersey and Virginia plans and the compromises. Have students complete the Section 4 Extend options, creating a yearbook for the Framers and discussing the Enlightenment thinkers. Finally, have them complete the Section 5 Bellringer Worksheet and Extend option, comparing the Federalist and Anti-Federalist Papers.

Lesson Goals

SECTION 1

Students will

- examine early English concepts of government.
- analyze the influences of the Magna Carta, Petition of Right, and English Bill of Rights on American ideas about government and freedom.
- compare the structure of royal colony governments to our National Government.

SECTION 2

Students will

- analyze British policies and colonial reactions as causes and effects.
- examine events leading up to the Declaration of Independence through political cartoons and a first-hand account from that era.
- identify, define, and analyze propaganda in political cartoons

SECTION 3

Students will

- identify and analyze weaknesses of the Articles of Confederation by completing a worksheet.
- analyze the issue of land claims by examining a map.

SECTION 4

Students will

- use worksheets to analyze the different plans and compromises in creating the Constitution.
- use primary and secondary sources to evaluate the major compromises made at the Constitutional Convention.

SECTION 5

Students will

- analyze the positions of the Federalists and the Anti-Federalists, using primary sources.
- use primary sources to evaluate arguments in favor of and opposed to a bill of rights.

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
11 Sp
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

GUIDING QUESTION

What ideas and traditions influenced government in the English colonies?

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will

- examine early English concepts of government.
- analyze the influences of the Magna Carta, Petition of Right, and English Bill of Rights on American ideas about government and freedom.
- compare the structure of royal colony governments to our National Government.

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 62) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 63)

section 1

our Political Beginnings

Guiding Question

What ideas and traditions influenced government in the English colonies? Use a concept web like the one below to take notes on the ideas that shaped American colonists' concepts of government.

Political Dictionary

- limited - English Bill of government
- representative government
- Magna Carta
- Mue process
- Petition of Right

Objectives

1. Identify the three concepts of government that influenced the American colonies.
2. Explain the significance of three landmark English documents.
3. Describe the three types of colonies that the English established in the American colonies.

Image Above: King John signs the Magna Carta, limiting his own power.

T
 with the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776. Nor was it created by the Framers of the Constitution in 1787.

The beginnings of what was to become the United States can be found in the mid-sixteenth century when explorers, traders, and settlers first made their way to North America. The French, Dutch, Spanish, Swedes, and others came to explore and settle what would become this nation-and to dominate those Native Americans who were here for centuries before the arrival of the first Europeans. It was the English, however, who came in the largest numbers. And it was the English who soon controlled the 13 colonies that stretched for some 1,300 miles along the Atlantic seaboard.

Basic Concepts of Government

The earliest English settlers brought with them knowledge of a political sys-tem-of established laws, customs, practices, and institutions-that had been developing in England for centuries.

Some aspects of that governing system had come to England from other times and places. Thus, the concept of the rule of law that influenced English political ideas has roots in the early civilizations of Africa and Asia. ${ }^{1}$ More directly, the ancient Romans occupied much of England from A.D. 43 to 410 . They left behind a legacy of law, religion, and custom. From that rich political history, the English colonists brought to North America three basic notions that were to loom large in the shaping of government in the United States.

Ordered Government The English colonists saw the need for an orderly regulation of their relationships with one another-that is, a need for government. They created local governments, based on those they had known in England.

1 For example, King Hammurabi of Babylonia developed a system of laws known as Hammurabi's Code around 1750 b.c. Its 282 legal rules covered real estate, trade, and business transactions, as well as criminal law. The code distinguished between major and minor offenses, established the state as the authority to enforce the law, and tried to guarantee social justice. Because of the Babylonians' close contact with the Hebrews, many of their laws became part of Hebrew law and thus later a part of the Old Testament of the Bible-for example, "An eye for an eye." The English were quite familiar with and devoutly attracted to this Biblical concept of the rule of law.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS

To help students learn to draw inferences and conclusions, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S19, and use the steps, as they evaluate the importance of the landmark documents in their own lives and answer interpretive questions, in Parts 1 and 2 of the Core Worksheet. The steps are:

- summarize information;
- study the facts;
- apply other facts or prior knowledge;
- decide if the information suggests an unstated fact or conclusion.

Focus on the Basics

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: • Early English settlers brought with them the tradition of ordered, limited, and representative government. - The Magna Carta, the Petition of Right, and the English Bill of Rights established basic concepts of government and rights of individuals.

- The English colonies were of three types: royal, proprietary, and charter.

CONCEPTS: limited government, popular sovereignty, representative government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Early colonists in America benefited from English traditions of government. - The colonies served as a school for learning about government.

Many of the offices and units of government they established are with us yet today: the offices of sheriff and justice of the peace, the grand jury, counties, and several others.

Limited Government The colonists also brought with them the idea that government is restricted in what it may do, and every individual has certain rights that government cannot take away. This concept is called limited government, and it was deeply rooted in English belief and practice by the time the first English ships set sail for America. It had been planted in England centuries earlier, and had been developing there for nearly 400 years before Jamestown was settled in 1607.

Representative Government The early English settlers also carried another important concept across the Atlantic: representative government. This idea that government should serve the will of the people had also been developing in England for several centuries. With it had come a growing insistence that the people should have a voice in deciding what government should and should not do. As with the concept of limited government, the idea of "government of, by, and for the people" flourished in America.

Landmark English Documents

These basic notions of ordered government, limited government, and representative government can be traced to several landmark documents in English history.

The Magna Carta A group of determined barons forced King John to sign the Magna Carta-the Great Charter-at Runnymede in 1215. Weary of John's military campaigns and heavy taxes, the barons who prompted the Magna Carta were seeking protection against heavy-handed and arbitrary acts by the king.

The Magna Carta included guarantees of such fundamental rights as trial by jury and due process of law (protection against the arbitrary taking of life, liberty, or property). Those protections against the absolute power of the king were originally intended for the privileged classes only. Over time, however, they became the rights of all English people and were incorporated into other documents. The Magna Carta established the critical idea that the monarchy's power was not absolute.

The Petition of Right The Magna Carta was respected by some monarchs and ignored by others for 400 years. Over that period, England's Parliament slowly grew in influence. In 1628, when Charles I asked Parliament for more money in taxes, Parliament refused until he agreed to sign the Petition of Right.

The Petition of Right limited the king's power in several ways. Most importantly, it demanded that the king no longer imprison or otherwise punish any person but by the lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land. The document also insisted that the king may not impose martial law, or military rule, in times of peace, or require homeowners to shelter the king's troops without their consent. The Petition declared that no man should be compelled to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax, or such like charge, without common consent by act of parliament.

PRIMARY SOURCE

-Petition of Right

The Petition challenged the idea of the divine right of kings, declaring that even a monarch must obey the law of the land.

The English Bill of Rights In 1689, after years of revolt and turmoil, Parliament offered the crown to William and Mary of Orange. The events surrounding their ascent to the throne are known as the Glorious Revolution. To prevent abuse of power by William and Mary and all future monarchs, Parliament, in 1689, drew up a list of provisions to which William and Mary had to agree.

This document, the English Bill of Rights, prohibited a standing army in peacetime, except with the consent of Parliament, $\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ What is representative government?

Commemorative coin from the reign of Charles I

landmark

 adj. historical, pivotal, highly significant
arbitrary

$\frac{\text { arbitrary }}{\text { ad } j \text { not restrained or }}$ adj. not restrained or limited in the exercise limited in the exercise of power

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 2, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 57)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 62)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 63)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 64)
L3 Quiz A (p. 66)
L2 Quiz B (p. 67)

BELLRINGER

Display Transparency 2A, Three Basic Concepts of English Government. Write on the board: Copy this flowchart in your notebook. Then write a brief definition of each concept in the boxes.

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

INTRODUCE THE TOPIC

Tell students that today they will discuss the influence of English traditions and ideas on colonial governments. Have students share their definitions from the Bellringer in a brainstorm session. Write their ideas on the board and help students reach a consensus about each definition. (Ordered government: Government regulates affairs between people and maintains order and predictability. Limited government: Government is restricted in what it may do, and each individual has rights that the government cannot take away. Representative government: Government should serve the will of the people and people should have a voice in what the government can and cannot do. )Help students connect these concepts to their own experience. Ask: What kind of government do you live under? What rights do you have that the government cannot take away? How does the government help you in your everyday life?

DISCUSS LANDMARK DOCUMENTS

Point out that the three basic concepts of English government can be traced to three documents. Ask: What are these three landmark documents? (the Magna Carta, the Petition of Right, and the English Bill of Rights) Discuss the reforms established under each document. Students can take out their Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 62) at this time and use their answers to Part 1 to start the discussion. Help students connect the three basic concepts of government with the documents. (Magna Carta: limited government, ordered government; Petition of Right and English Bill of Rights: limited, ordered, and representative government)

DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET

Distribute the Chapter 2 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 64). Explain that students will assess the importance of the landmark documents in their own lives. Ask a student to read the introductory paragraph in Part 1 of the worksheet aloud.

Answers

Checkpoint government should serve the will of the people and people should have a voice in deciding what government should and should not do

Display Transparency 2B, Foundation of American Rights. Call on volunteers to define each right. (trial by jury: right to trial by a jury of peers; due process: prohibits unfair, arbitrary [random] actions by government; private property: prohibits taking property except for legitimate public purpose and only for a fair price; no cruel punishment: punishment must bear a reasonable relationship to the seriousness of the crime and should be humane; no excessive bail or fines: bail or fines must bear a reasonable relationship to the seriousness of the crime; right to bear arms: right of each State to maintain a militia for its own protection; right to petition: right to join with others in public meetings, political parties, interest groups, and other associations to discuss public affairs and influence public policy; no unreasonable searches and seizures: police cannot search, seize evidence, or arrest people without a warrant or probable cause; freedom of speech and of the press: right to speak, publish, and express views; freedom of religion: right to hold personal religious ideas and practices and also the separation of church and state)
L1 L2 Differentiate Pair less proficient students with more proficient students for Part 2.

REVIEW WORKSHEET AND SURVEY OPINIONS

Survey students' opinions about the importance of each right. Have them support their opinions.
L1 L2 Differentiate Ask students to look at the list of rights on the Core Worksheet. Have them choose between one and three rights that they consider most important and write a sentence explaining their reason. Write each of the rights on the board or on separate pieces of paper that can be posted around the room. Have students write their names under the rights that they chose. You will be able to see clearly which rights the class considers most important and then call on students to explain their answers.

L2
ELL Differentiate Have students use the list of rights on the Core Worksheet to create quizzes that they exchange with classmates.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the foundations of American rights.

Answers

Foundations of American Rights Possible answer: With sufficient public support, a petition could pressure a monarch to change a behavior viewed by the people as an abuse of power.
Checkpoint prohibited standing army in peacetime, suspension of laws, and taxes without consent of Parliament; banned excessive bail or fines and cruel punishment; guaranteed right to free elections, to petition, to bear arms, to trial by jury, and to due process

The rights established in these landmark documents were revolutionary in their day and influenced government in many countries. How might the right to petition, first granted in the English Bill of Rights, prevent abuse of power by a monarch?

Checkpoint
What were the limitations set by the English Bill of Rights?
$\frac{\text { venture }}{n \text { an un }}$
n. an undertaking involving risk levy
$v$. to impose, to collec
by legal authority and required that all parliamentary elections be free. In addition, the document declared that the pretended power of suspending the laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, without consent of Parliament is illegal . .

PRIMARY SOURCE

that levying money for or to the use of the Crown . . . without grant of Parliament . . . is illegal . . .
that it is the right of the subjects to petition the king . . . and that prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal...
—English Bill of Rights

The English Bill of Rights also included such guarantees as the right to a fair trial, as well as freedom from excessive bail and from cruel and unusual punishment.

Our nation has built upon, changed, and added to those ideas and institutions that settlers brought here from England. Still, much in American government and politics today bears the stamp of those early English ideas. Surely, this is not so strange when you recall that the colonial period of American history lasted for some 170 years and that the United States has existed as an independent nation for only a slightly longer period

The Thirteen Colonies

England's colonies in North America have been described as "13 schools of government." The colonies were the settings in which Americans first began to learn the difficult art of government. ${ }^{2}$

The 13 colonies were established, separately, over a span of some 125 years. During that long period, outlying trading posts and isolated farm settlements developed into organized communities. The first colony, Virginia, was founded with the first permanent English settlement in North America at Jamestown in 1607. ${ }^{3}$ Georgia was the last to be formed, with the settlement of Savannah in 1733.

Each of the colonies was born out of a particular set of circumstances. Virginia was originally organized as a commercial venture. Its first colonists were employees of the Virginia Company of London (also called the London Company), a private trading corporation. Massachusetts was first settled by

2 The English and other Europeans brought their own notions of government, but that is not to say that they introduced the idea of government to the Americas. Several Native America societies had developed systems of government. Some Native American political organizations were very complex. For example, five Native American tribes in what is now New York State-the Seneca Cayuga Oneida Onondag now New York State-the Seneca, Cayuga, Oneida, Onondaga, and Mohawk-formed a confederation known as the Iroquois League. The League was originally created to end conficts among the tribes. It proved so successful as a form of govern ment that it lasted for some 200 years.
3 St. Augustine, Florida, is the oldest continuously populated European settement in what is now the United States. St. to establish Spanish authority in the region.

32 Origins of American Government

Background

early colonial governments The earliest English settlers in America recognized the need to establish orderly societies under the rule of law. Before the Mayflower landed in 1620, the Pilgrims signed the Mayflower Compact, an agreement to enact laws and abide by them for the general good of the colony. The government of Plymouth Colony was later based on this document. In 1639, the Puritans in Connecticut adopted the Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, the first written constitution in the American colonies. The plan of government set out in the Fundamental Orders included a representative legislature and governor elected by male landowners. These founding documents reflected the concepts of ordered, limited, and representative government the colonists brought with them from England. people who came to North America in search of greater personal and religious freedom. King George granted Georgia to 21 trustees, who governed the colony.

But the differences among the colonies are of little importance. Of much greater significance is the fact that all of them were shaped by their English origins. The many similarities among all 13 colonies far outweighed their differences.

Each colony was established on the basis of a charter, a written grant of authority from the king. This grant gave colonists or companies a grant of land and some governing rights, while the Crown retained a certain amount of power over a colony. Over time, these instruments of government led to the development of three different types of colonies: royal, proprietary, and charter.

Royal Colonies The royal colonies were subject to the direct control of the Crown. On the eve of the American Revolution in 1775, there were eight: New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia.

The Virginia colony did not enjoy the quick success its sponsors had promised. In addition, the colony's government was evolving into one of popular rule. The king disapproved of the local government's methods, as well as their attempt to grow tobacco. So, in 1624, the king revoked the London Company's charter, and Virginia became the first of the royal colonies. Later, as the charters of other colonies were canceled or withdrawn for a variety of reasons, they became royal colonies.

A pattern of government gradually emerged for each of the royal colonies. The king named a governor to serve as the colony's chief executive. A council, also named by the king, served as an advisory body to the royal governor. Later, the governor's council became both the upper house of the colonial legislature and the colony's

4 The Virginia legislature held its first meeting in Jamestown on July 30,1619 , and was the first representative body to meet in the North American English colonies. It was made up of burgesses-that is, representatives-elected from each settlement (each borough) in the colony. Virginia called the lower house of its colonial legislature the House of Burgesses; South Carolina, the House of Commons; Massachusetts, the House of Representatives.
highest court. The lower house of a bicameral (two-house) legislature was elected by those property owners qualified to vote. ${ }^{4}$ It owed much of its influence to the fact that it shared with the governor and his council the power of the purse-the power to tax and spend. The governor, advised by the council, appointed judges for the colony's courts.

The laws passed by the legislature had to be approved by the governor and the Crown. Royal governors often ruled with a stern hand, following instructions from London. Much of the resentment that finally flared into revolution was fanned by their actions.

The Proprietary Colonies By 1775, there were three proprietary colonies: Maryland,

* Analyzing Maps Despite the differing government systems within the colonies, they were all influenced by their English roots. How many royal colonies were left at this time? How were royal colonies and charter colonies different?

Background

JOHN LOCKE The ideas of English philosopher John Locke were so radical that he could not publish his Treatises on Government until 1690, ten years after its completion. Locke believed that all people are born with natural rights, including life, liberty, and property. People establish governments to protect these rights. If the government fails in this duty, the people have a right to change the government. This idea challenged the divine right of kings, and was used to justify the Glorious Revolution. Locke's ideas of natural rights, government by and for the people, and religious toleration greatly influenced the Framers of the U.S. Constitution.
This information also appears on the Extend Worksheet for Section 4, along with information about other influential philosophers covered in this chapter.

L4 Differentiate Ask: What would happen if we didn't have these rights? Have partners or small groups work together to act out a scenario in which one of the basic rights does not exist. Assign one of the following scenarios: (1) A student is stopped for speeding, and protection against cruel punishment and excessive bail or fines does not exist. (2) A student's family home is in the middle of a spot planned for a new highway, and the right to private property does not exist. (3) A student has been unfairly accused of destroying parking meters, and the rights to trial by jury and due process do not exist. Alternatively, students could create a scenario of their own choosing.

REVIEW FACTS

Ask students to turn to the "Structure of the Royal Colonies" organization chart in Part 2 of the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 62). Re-create the flowchart on the board. Call on volunteers to fill in the information.
L2 Differentiate If students have a weak background in American history, pause and have them study the map of the colonies in the text.

L4 Differentiate Have partners create a comparecontrast chart, showing similarities and differences between the royal colony governments and our National Government today. (similarities: bicameral legislature and distinct executive and legislative branches; differences: today separate $\mu$ dicial and legislative branches and no king)

EXTEND THE LESSON

L3Provide copies of the Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, the first constitution in the American colonies. Assign a section to each pair of students to summarize the key points in their own words.
L3 L4 Ask small groups to debate the following idea: Had Britain allowed other colonies the same freedoms and self-government as Connecticut and Rhode Island enjoyed, the Revolutionary War might never have occurred.
L4 Have students talk about why Britain did not allow other colonies to govern themselves.

Answers

Analyzing Maps 8; A royal colony was subject to direct control of the monarch, who appointed the governor. A proprietor controlled a proprietary colony and appointed the governor.

Assess and Remediate

L3
Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing a Graph, Chart, or Table (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 217).

L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions
$L 3$
Section Quiz A (All-in-One, p. 66)

$L 2$Section Quiz B (All-in-One, p. 67)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The rights and protec-  tions in the three  landmark documents  (Questions 3, 5) | Create a chart on the board with a column  for each document. Have students work to-  gether and write the rights and protections  on note cards and then put the note cards  in the correct columns. |
| The three kinds of colo-  nies (Questions 4, 6) | Have pairs create concept webs with each  kind of colony in the center. Each pair  should write the characteristics of each  colony in the outlying circles. |

$\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$
What is the difference between a proprietary colony and a charter colony?
haven
n. a place of safety

Pennsylvania, and Delaware. These colonies were organized by a proprietor, a person to whom the king had made a grant of land. By charter, that land could be settled and governed much as the proprietor chose. In 1632, the king granted Maryland to Lord Baltimore, which was intended as a haven for Catholics. In 1681, Pennsylvania was granted to William Penn. In 1682, Penn also acquired Delaware. ${ }^{5}$

The governments of these three colonies were much like those in the royal colonies. The governor, however, was appointed by the proprietor. In Maryland and Delaware, the legislatures were bicameral. In Pennsylvania, the legislature was a unicameral body. It consisted of only one house. The Frame of Government, a constitution that William Penn drew up for that colony in 1682, was, for its time, exceedingly democratic. As in the royal colonies, appeals of decisions in the proprietary colonies could be carried to the king in London.

The Charter Colonies The Massachusetts Bay Colony was established as the first charter colony in 1629. Its charter was later revoked, and Massachusetts became a royal colony in 1691.

5 New York, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia also began as proprietary colonies. Each later became a royal colony.

Connecticut and Rhode Island were charter colonies founded by religious dissidents from Massachusetts. Connecticut was founded in 1633, and granted a charter in 1662. Rhode Island was founded in 1636 , and granted a charter in 1663 . Both colonies were largely self-governing.

The governors of Connecticut and Rhode Island were elected each year by the white, male property owners in each colony. Although the king's approval was required before the governor could take office, it was not often asked. Laws made by their bicameral legislatures were not subject to the governor's veto, nor was the Crown's approval needed. Judges in the charter colonies were appointed by the legislature, but appeals could be taken from the colonial courts to the king.

The Connecticut and Rhode Island charters were so liberal for their time that, after independence, they were kept with only minor changes as State constitutions until 1818 and 1843, respectively. In fact, many historians say that if Britain had allowed the other colonies the same freedoms and selfgovernment found in the charter colonies, the Revolution might never have occurred.

Answers

Checkpoint Proprietary colonies were organized by, and the governor was appointed by, a proprietor to whom the king had granted land. Charter colonies were self-governing, and the governors were elected.

Critical Thinking

5. Make Comparisons What principles do the Magna Carta, the Petition of Right, and the English Bill of Rights have in common?
6. Predict Consequences The English Crown gave Connecticut and Rhode Island many freedoms not enjoyed by sland other colonies. Do you agree with the historians who say that the Revoluhistorians who say that the Revolution may have never happened if all tion may have never happened if all colonies enjoyed the same freedoms? colonies enjoyed the same freedoms?
Why or why not?

Quick Write

Narrative Writing: Choose a Colony Choose one of the 13 colonies and write questions about its founding, its original government, and how it changed throughout the Revolutionary period. You will later research answers for these questions and write a narrative nonfiction piece. For example, if tive nonfiction piece. For example, if you choose Connecticut, you's reaction ask: What was Connecticut's reaction to the English government's treatment of the colonies?

Origins of American Government

Assessment Answers

1. ordered government; limited government; representative government; trial by jury; due process; private property; no cruel punishment; no excessive bail; right to bear arms; right to petition; no martial law in peacetime; no requirement to shelter troops; no levying money without consent
2. Government serves the will of the people, and the people have a voice in determining what their government can and cannot do.
3. The barons wanted to protect themselves from heavy-handed and arbitrary acts by the king. The document guaranteed trial by jury and due process of law.
4. (a) a legislature made up of two houses (b) elected by property owners qualified to vote
5. limited government, trial by jury, due process of law
6. Students should back up their responses with evidence from the text. Possible response: Yes, I agree. Connecticut and Rhode Island essentially governed themselves, while the governments of the other colonies were more restrictive. If the other colonies had been given representation and the ability to make their own laws, then perhaps they would not have objected to remaining a part of Great Britain.
QUICK WRITE A strong assignment will include in-depth questions that go beyond the scope of the text. These questions should lead to good research, and a well-planned narrative of the colony's story.

Adopting a Constitution

Track the Issue

The need for a constitution has been debated in different nations and international groups like the European Union (E.U.). Most have adopted constitutions, while a few have not.

The Constitution is ratified after nearly a year of heated debate.

The Confederate States of America ratifies a constitution that closely resembles the Constitution of the United States.

The Federal Republic of Germany adopts a constitution based on the principles of the American Constitution and the British government.

ก
Voters in France and the Netherlands reject the E.U. constitution; a new charter was written for new review.

The Iraqi people vote to approve their new constitution during U.S. occupation

Perspectives

On July 13, 2003, twenty-five individuals representing the many religious and ethnic groups in Iraq met to write a new constitution Called the Iraqi Governing Council, its goal was to create a federal and democratic government for its diverse population, much like our Constitutional Convention of 1787 . After more than two years of debate, a constitution was written and ratified, but not without opposition. Many people, including members of the Sunni Arab community in Kirkuk, feared a federal system would divide the nation rather than unite it.
"The constitution will not be complete or legitimate unless those who did not participate in the previous elections or those who are not represented in the National Assembly are involved in it Among these are the Sunni Arabs. If they do not take part in writing the constitution, the constitution will not be at all legitimate. It will be a lame constitution which will be met with objection and rejection by a large sector of the Iraqi society."
-Sheik Khalaf Salih al-Ulayyan, head of National Dialogue Council constitution that would divide the country by different names, which is at odds with Islam and with the Arabic nation of lraq." -Sheik Abdul Rahman Mished, leader of Kirkuk's Arab Assembly

Connect to Your World

1. Understand (a) Why does Sheik Abdul Rahman Mished oppose a federal system? (b) Do you agree or disagree with him?
2. Compare and Contrast (a) What were the arguments for and against the ratification of the American Constitution? (b) What similarities exist between the arguments of the Anti-Federalists and those of the Sunni Arabs?
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

In the News
For updates about the Iraqi
For updates about
Constitution, visit
PearsonSuccessNet.com

LESSON GOAL

- Students will examine the challenges of creating a constitution for a diverse nation, using a contemporary example.

Teach

ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE

Ask students to define what a constitution is. (possible answer: the body of fundamental laws setting out the principles, structures, and processes of government)Have them brainstorm ideas about the purpose of a written constitution. (Possible answers: A written constitution allows citizens to reach consensus about what form of government they will have and how power will be distributed, to agree on common principles that will unite them, and to protect the safety and interests of individuals.)

SUMMARIZE THE ISSUE

Have students read "Adopting a Constitution" and call on volunteers to summarize the issue. Ask them to identify the arguments for and against a constitution based on a federal system.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students look up the definition of federalism in the glossary.

PREDICT

Point out that the challenge of establishing a constitution that brings together diverse groups with different interests has been replayed throughout modern history, as the timeline indicates. Invite students to suggest what might be the universal hopes and fears behind this issue. Explain that in this chapter they will learn more details about the Federalist and Anti-Federalist debate over ratification of the U.S. Constitution.

Assess and Remediate

Have students write a short radio ad in support of one side of the issue, as stated in the quotes.

Answers

1. (a) He fears that a federal system will divide rather than unite the nation. (b) Sample answer: I disagree. The federal system has helped unite our country, which has many regional and ethnic differences.
2. (a) For: strong central government needed to solve nation's problems, separation of powers will prevent abuse; Against: States should hold more power, president or Congress could become too powerful (b) Both feared strong central government and preferred local identity.

GUIDING QUESTION

What events and ideas led to American independence?

SECTION 2

The Coming of Independence

Guiding Question

What events and ideas led to American independence? Use a flowchart like the one below to record major events that led to American independence.

Political Dictionary

$\begin{array}{ll}\text { - confederation } & \text { - delegate } \\ \text { - Albany Plan of } & \text { - popular } \\ \text { Union } & \text { sovereignt }\end{array}$

Objectives

1. Explain how Britain's colonial policies contributed to the growth of self-government in the colonies.
2. Identify the major steps that led to growing feelings of colonial unity.
3. Compare the First and the Second Continental Congresses.
4. Analyze the ideas in the Declaration of Independence.
5. Summarize the common features of the first State constitutions.

Image Above: Benjamin Franklin was a leading member of the Second Continental Congress.

"We must all hang together, or assuredly we shall all hang separately." Benjamin Franklin is said to have spoken these words on July 4, 1776, as he and the other members of the Second Continental Congress approved the Declaration of Independence. Those who heard him may have chuckled. But they also may have felt a shiver, for Franklin's humor carried a deadly serious message.

In this section, you will follow the events that led to the momentous decision to break with Great Britain. ${ }^{7}$ You will also consider the new State governments that were established with the coming of independence.

Britain's Colonial Policies

The 13 colonies were separately controlled under the king, largely through the Privy Council and the Board of Trade in London. Parliament took little part in the management of the colonies. Although it did become interested in matters of trade, it often left administrative matters to the Crown. ${ }^{8}$

Over the century and a half that followed the first settlement at Jamestown, the colonies developed within that framework of royal control. In theory, they were governed from London. But London was more than 3,000 miles away, and it took nearly two months to sail that distance. The colonists became used to a large measure of self-government.

Each colonial legislature began to assume broad lawmaking powers. Many found the power of the purse to be very effective. They often bent a royal governor to their will by not voting the money for his salary until he came to terms with them. As one member of New Jersey's assembly put it: "Let us keep the dogges poore, and we'll make them do as we please."

By the mid-1700s, the relationship between Britain and the colonies had become, in fact if not in form, federal. This meant that the central government

7 England became Great Britain by the Act of Union with Scotland in 1707
8 Much of British political history can be told in terms of the centuries-long struggle for supremacy between the monarch and Parliament. That conflict was largely settled by England's Glorious Revolution of 1688, but it did continue through the American colonial period and into the nineteenth century. However, Parliament paid little attention to the American colonies until very late in the colonial period.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

COMPARE VIEWPOINTS

To practice comparing viewpoints in this section, use the Chapter 2 Skills Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 76). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after filling out the Bellringer chart. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 77).

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: - Britain became more involved in trying to govern the colonies in the 1760 s.

- Delegates joined the First Continental Congress to plan opposition to British policy.
- The Second Continental Congress proclaimed independence and served as the first United States government. - After the Declaration of Independence, most of the 13 States adopted written constitutions, which later influenced the U.S. Constitution.
CONCEPTS: limited government, popular sovereignty, civil rights and liberties, constitutional government ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • More restrictive British policies ignited resentment in the colonies and led to the American Revolution. - Principles expounded in early State constitutions influenced the development of our current system of government.
in London was responsible for colonial defense and for foreign affairs. It also provided a uniform system of money and credit and a common market for colonial trade. Beyond that, the colonies were allowed a fairly wide amount of self-rule. Little was taken from them in direct taxes to pay for the central government. The few regulations set by Parliament, mostly about trade, were largely ignored.

This was soon to change. Shortly after George III came to the throne in 1760, Britain began to deal more firmly with its colonies. Restrictive trading acts were expanded and enforced. New taxes were imposed, mostly to support British troops in North America.

Many colonists took strong exception to those policies. They objected to taxes imposed on them from afar. That arrangement, they claimed, was "taxation without representation." They saw little need for the costly presence of British troops on North American soil, since the French had been defeated and their power broken in the French and Indian War (17541763). Yet, the colonists still considered themselves British subjects loyal to the Crown.

The king's ministers were poorly informed and stubborn. They pushed ahead with their policies, despite the resentments they stirred in America. Within a few years, the colonists faced a fateful choice: submit or revolt.

Growing Colonial Unity

A decision to revolt was not one to be taken lightly-or alone. The colonies would need to learn to work together if they wanted to succeed. Indeed, long before the 1770 s, several attempts had been made to promote cooperation among the colonies.

Early Attempts In 1643, the Massachusetts Bay, Plymouth, New Haven, and Connecticut settlements formed the New England Confederation, a "league of friendship" for defense against Native American tribes. A confederation is a joining of several groups for a common purpose. As the danger passed and frictions among the settlements grew, the confederation lost importance and finally dissolved in 1684.

In 1696, William Penn offered an elaborate plan for intercolonial cooperation, largely in trade, defense, and criminal matters. It received little attention and was very quickly forgotten.

The Albany Plan In 1754, the British Board of Trade called a meeting of seven of the northern colonies at Albany. The main purpose of the meeting was to discuss the problems of colonial trade and the danger of attacks by the French and their Native American allies. Here, Benjamin Franklin offered what came to be known as the Albany Plan of Union.

In his plan, Franklin proposed the creation of an annual congress of delegates (representatives) from each of the 13 colonies. That body would have the power to raise military and naval forces, make war and peace with the Native Americans, regulate trade with them, tax, and collect customs duties.

Checkpoint How did Britain's dealings with the colonies change? When did they change?

duty

n. a tax on imports

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 2, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 68)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 70)
L3 Core Worksheets A and B (pp. 72, 74)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 76)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 77)
L2 Extend Activities (pp. 78, 79)
L3 Quiz A (p. 80)
L2 Quiz B (p. 81)

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will.

- analyze British policies and colonial reactions as causes and effects.
- examine events leading up to the Declaration of Independence through political cartoons and a first-hand account from that era.
- identify, define, and analyze propaganda in political cartoons.

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 68) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 70)

beLLRINGER

Display Transparency 2C, The Road to Revolution. Write on the board: In your notebook, use a chart like this to identify each event leading to the Revolutionary War as a British or Colonial action or reaction. Use the Cause-Effect Chains from your Reading Comprehension Worksheet and the timeline in the text to help you.

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

INTRODUCE THE TOPIC

Tell students that today they will discuss the events that led to war and independence. Ask students to help fill out the Bellringer chart.

| British Actions/Reactions | Colonial Actions/Reactions |
| :--- | :--- |
| - British troops stay in America | - Outrage, anger, defiance |
| - Taxes on Colonies to pay for | - Stamp Act Congress |
| troops | - Boston Tea Party |
| - Stamp Act | - Mob violence |
| - Boston Massacre | - First Continental Congress |
| - Intolerable Acts | - Declaration of Rights |
| - Battles of Lexington and | - Battles of Lexington and |
| Concord | Concord |
| - Refusal to back down | - Second Continental Congress |
| - Stricter measures | - Declaration of Independence |
|  | - State Constitutions |

Answers

Checkpoint Shortly after George III became king in 1760, Britain began imposing restrictive trading acts and new taxes.
Analyzing Political Cartoons as a mob of bullies; each side makes the other side look foolish Point out that each action and reaction had momentous effects. Ask: What was the effect of the Stamp Act and other English taxes on the colonies? (colonists: outraged, sent delegates to Stamp Act Congress, organized boycotts; British. refused to back down, enacted further restrictions, Both: tension mounted) Why did the British adopt these taxes? (They needed money to support British troops in America. ) Why did the colonists oppose taxes for these troops? (They believed that British troops were unnecessary, and that "taxation without representation" was unfair.) Why did the colonists react so strongly to this tax? (The colonists had enjoyed a long history of self-government in America; these new taxes, levied by a distant Parliament that did not represent them, shocked and dismayed them. ) Discuss the causes and effects of each item on the chart. You may want to review students' cause-effect chains in the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 68) at this time.

L1 L2 Differentiate Review the timeline in the textbook. Ask: What events does the timeline show? (the events leading up to the War for Independence) What happened in 1773? (The Tea Act was passed, sparking the Boston Tea Party.) What happened in 1775? (The Battles of Lexington and Concord started the Revolutionary War.) You might want to compare and contrast timelines and causeeffect chains. (A timeline shows events in chronological order; a cause-effect chain shows the relationship of one event to another. A timeline is useful for visualizing and remembering a series of events; a cause-effect chart is helpful for understanding the impact of each event within a series and its influence on outcomes.)
L4 Differentiate Point out that by the end of the costly French and Indian War, Britain was in the midst of financial crisis, while the colonies were prospering As a result, Britain passed a series of acts that led to the Revolutionary War. Invite students to consider both sides of the growing crisis. Have students research Britain's financial woes as well as the taxes and other acts that Britain passed to ease this emergency at home (for example, Sugar Act, Stamp Act, Quartering Act, Declaratory Act, Townshend Acts, Tea Act, Intolerable Acts). Then have a roundtable discussion about this question: Was Britain justified in imposing taxes on the colonies?
After students discuss this question, have them create a journal entry about their findings. Ask them whether their understanding of Britain's viewpoint changed during this investigation.

Answers

Interpreting Timelines Colonists organized their own governments, and colonies moved toward unity. New taxes sparked protest and later armed conflict, resulting in the Declaration of Independence.

The Road to Independence

( Interpreting Timelines English colonists brought with them the ideas of the Enlightenment and limited government. In time, these ideas began to shape the ideals of American government and the actions of the colonists. How did early events contribute to the signing of the Declaration of Independence?

repeal

$v$. to cance boycott
n. a refusal to buy or sell certain goods

Franklin's plan was ahead of its time. It was agreed to by the representatives attending the Albany meeting, but it was turned down by the colonies and by the Crown.

The Stamp Act Congress Britain's harsh tax and trade policies fanned resentment in the colonies. Parliament had passed a number of new laws, among them the Stamp Act of 1765 . That law required the use of $\operatorname{tax}$ stamps on all legal documents, on certain business agreements, and on newspapers.

The new taxes were widely denounced, in part because the rates were perceived as severe, but largely because they amounted to "taxation without representation." In October of 1765, nine colonies-all except Georgia, New Hampshire, North Carolina, and Vir-ginia-sent delegates to a meeting in New York, the Stamp Act Congress. There, they prepared a strong protest, called the Declaration of Rights and Grievances, against the new British policies and sent it to the king. The Stamp Act Congress marked the first time a significant number of the colonies had joined to oppose the British government.

Parliament repealed the Stamp Act, but frictions still mounted. New laws were passed and new policies made to tie the colonies more closely to London. Colonists showed their resentment and anger by completely evading the laws. Mob violence erupted at several ports, and many colonists supported a boycott of English goods. On March 5, 1770, British troops in Boston fired on a jeering crowd, killing five, in what came to be known as the Boston Massacre.

Organized resistance was carried on through Committees of Correspondence, which had grown out of a group formed by political leader Samuel Adams in Boston in 1772. Those committees soon spread throughout the colonies, providing a network for cooperation and the exchange of information among the patriots.

Protests multiplied. The Boston Tea Party took place on December 16, 1773. A group of men, disguised as Native Americans, boarded

38 Origins of American Government

Debate

Divide the class into patriots and loyalists. Have them debate this question from their assigned point of view: Should we declare independence from Britain? Use the quotation below from loyalist clergyman Charles Inglis to start the debate.
"Suppose we were to revolt from Great-Britain, declare ourselves Independent, and set up a Republic of our own-what would be the consequence? - I stand aghast at the prospect - my blood runs chill when I think of the calamities, the complicated evils that must ensue

-Charles Inglis

The True Interest of America Impartially Stated (1776)

War Begins
1773 The Tea Act is passed. Colonists respond with the Boston Tea Party

1775 The battles of Lexington and Concord spark the Revolution

Independence

1776 The Declaration of Independence is signed.
three tea ships in Boston Harbor. They broke open the chests and dumped the cargo into the sea to protest British control of the tea trade.

First Continental Congress

In the spring of 1774, Parliament passed yet another set of laws, this time to punish the colonists for the troubles in Boston and elsewhere. These new laws, denounced in America as the Intolerable Acts, prompted widespread calls for a meeting of the colonies.

Delegates from every colony except Georgia met in Philadelphia on September 5, 1774. Many of the ablest men of the day were there: Samuel Adams and John Adams of Massachusetts; Roger Sherman of Connecticut; Stephen Hopkins of Rhode Island; John Dickinson and Joseph Galloway of Pennsylvania; John Jay and Philip Livingston of New York; George Washington, Richard Henry Lee, and Patrick Henry of Virginia; and John Rutledge of South Carolina

For nearly two months, the members of that First Continental Congress discussed the worsening situation and debated plans for action. They sent a Declaration of Rights, protesting Britain's colonial policies, to King George III. The delegates urged the colonies to refuse all trade with England until the hated taxes and trade regulations were repealed. The delegates also called for the creation of local committees to enforce that boycott.

The meeting adjourned on October 26, 1774, with a call for a second congress to be convened the following May. Over the next several months, all 13 colonial legislatures gave their support to the actions of the First Continental Congress.

Second Continental Congress

During the fall and winter of 1774-1775, the British government continued to refuse to compromise, let alone reverse, its colonial policies. It reacted to the Declaration of Rights as it had to other expressions of colonial discontent-with even stricter and more repressive measures

The Second Continental Congress met in Philadelphia on May 10, 1775. By then, the Revolution had begun. The "shot heard 'round the world" had been fired. The battles of Lexington and Concord had been fought three weeks earlier, on April 19.

ablest

ad $j$ the most talented capable, competent capab skillful

Teacher-to-Teacher Network

alternate lesson plan The Revolutionary War-era propaganda was crucial for uniting the colonies and for winning foreign support. Analyzing historical materials from institutions such as the Library of Congress or the National Archives can help students understand the role propaganda played before and during the Revolution. By learning about propaganda during the time period covered by this chapter, students can develop critical awareness in dealing with propaganda in their own lives.

To see this lesson plan, go to

DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET A

Distribute the Chapter 2 Section 2 Core Worksheet A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 72). Explain that students will now examine the people and events of the Revolutionary War era through the prism of political cartoons. Cartoons were important tools in the propaganda war, used to sway public opinion, strengthen unity, and promote both the colonial and British causes. By studying the cartoons closely, students will better understand both points of view. They will also appreciate what a potent weapon propaganda can be. Ask a student to read the directions and questions on the worksheet.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the Road to Independence timeline.

> Government
> All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Answers

Checkpoint It unified colonial response to British policies by organizing a boycott of trade, calling for local committees to enforce the boycott, and calling for a second congress.

DISCUSS THE IMPACT OF PROPAGANDA

Point out that political cartoons are a form of propaganda and that both the patriots and the British used this tool to promote their own agenda. Call on volunteers to define propaganda. (Propaganda is a form of persuasion that appeals to emotions in order to convince people about the truth of a particular idea or point of view. ) Ask: What are some kinds of propaganda? (advertisements, editorials, political speeches and writing, testimonials, other persuasive writing) How are political cartoons different from other forms of propaganda? (Political cartoons use visual humor and visual exaggeration as persuasive devices; cartoons seldom use reason or evidence to bolster opinions or point of view. ) How are political cartoons similar to other forms of propaganda? (Like all propaganda, political cartoons promote a point of view and use techniques such as exaggeration and emotional appeals. )
Students can work with partners or individually to answer the questions for each cartoon on the worksheet. They can also answer the same questions for the cartoons that appear in Chapter 2, Section 2 of the textbook or on Transparency 2D.
L1 L2 Differentiate Divide the class into three groups and assign each group one political cartoon. Have the groups complete the questions for their cartoons. Allow time for groups to share their findings with the class.

L44 Differentiate Ask students to write a brief persuasive argument in favor of the point of view presented in one of the cartoons they studied. They should use logic and evidence along with persuasive techniques to support their opinions. Students' written argument should get across the same idea as the cartoon.

DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B

Have a student read the article about the Boston Massacre in Core Worksheet B. Then call on volunteers to answer the questions.
L4 Differentiate Have students investigate the trial of Captain Preston and President John Adams's defense of the British soldier.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Preview difficult vocabulary from the article to support comprehension: circumstances (situation, condition); outrage (wrongdoing, crime); enormous (huge); slaughter (killing); issued (came out from); dispersed (went away, disappeared).
$\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ What was the purpose of the Declaration of Independence?

The Delegates Each of the 13 colonies sent representatives to the Congress. Most of those who had attended the First Continental Congress were again present. Most notable among the newcomers were Benjamin Franklin of Pennsylvania and John Hancock of Massachusetts.

Hancock was chosen president of the Congress. ${ }^{9}$ Almost at once, a continental army was created, and George Washington was appointed its commander-in-chief. Thomas Jefferson then took Washington's place in the Virginia delegation.

Our First National Government The Second Continental Congress became, by force of circumstance, the nation's first national government. However, it rested on no constitutional base. It was condemned by the British as an unlawful assembly and a den of traitors. But it was supported by the force of public opinion and practical necessity.

The Second Continental Congress served as the first government of the United States for five fateful years, from the formal adoption of the Declaration of Independence in July 1776 until the Articles of Confederation went into effect on March 1,1781. During that time, the Second Continental Congress fought a war, raised armies and a navy, borrowed funds, bought supplies, created a money system, made treaties with foreign powers, and did other things that any government would have had to do in those circumstances.

The unicameral Congress exercised both legislative and executive powers. In legislative matters, each colony-later, State-had one vote. Executive functions were handled by committees of delegates.

The Declaration of Independence

Slightly more than a year after the Revolution began, Richard Henry Lee of Virginia proposed to the Congress:

9 Peyton Randolph, who had also served as president of the First Continental Congress, was originally chosen to the office. He Burgesses of which he was the speaker had been called into session. Hancock was then elected to succeed him.

PRIMARY SOURCE

Resolved, That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States, that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved.
—Resolution of June 7, 1776
Congress named a committee of fiveBenjamin Franklin, John Adams, Roger Sherman, Robert Livingston, and Thomas Jefferson-to prepare a proclamation of independence. Their momentous product, the Declaration of Independence, was very largely the work of Jefferson.

On July 2, the final break came. The delegates agreed to Lee's resolution-but only after spirited debate, for many of the delegates had serious doubts about the wisdom of a complete separation from England. Two days later, on July 4, 1776, they adopted the Declaration of Independence, proclaiming the existence of the new nation.

At its heart, the Declaration proclaims:

PRIMARY SOURCE

We hold these truths to be selfevident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundations on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness.
-The Unanimous Declaration of the Thirteen United States of America

Background

baron de montesquieu In his work The Spirit of the Laws (1748), French philosopher Baron de Montesquieu examined different forms of government. He observed that corruption can creep into any government. ". . . [C]onstant experience shows us that every man invested with power is apt to abuse it . . . it is necessary from the very nature of things that power should be a check to power. " Montesquieu concluded that abuse of power can be prevented by separating legislative, executive, and judicial powers among different bodies. Each body would restrain the power of the others, and all would be bound by the rule of law.
This information also appears on the Extend Worksheet for Section 4, along with information about other influential philosophers covered in this chapter.

Answers

Checkpoint to proclaim the existence of a new nation

The members of the Second Continental Congress signed the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776. By signing this document, what were these men risking? Why were they willing to sign it?

No political system had ever been founded on the notion that the people should rule instead of being ruled, nor on the idea that every person is important as an individual, "created equal", and endowed with "certain unalienable rights." The Declaration was also groundbreaking because it was founded on the concept of "the consent of the governed," not divine right or tradition as the basis for the exercise of power.

With the adoption of the Declaration, the United States was born. The 13 colonies became free and independent States.

The First State Constitutions

In January 1776, New Hampshire adopted a constitution to replace its royal charter. Less than three months later, South Carolina followed suit. Then, on May 10 , nearly two months before the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, the Congress urged each of the colonies to adopt "such governments as shall, in the opinion of the representatives of the people, best conduce to the happiness and safety of their constituents."

Drafting State Constitutions In 1776 and 1777, most of the States adopted written constitutions-bodies of fundamental laws setting out the principles, structures, and processes of their governments. Assemblies or conventions were commonly used to draft and then adopt these new documents.

Massachusetts set a lasting example in the constitution-making process. There, a popularly elected convention submitted its work to the voters for ratification. The Massachusetts constitution of 1780 is the oldest of the present-day State constitutions, and the oldest written constitution in force in the world today. ${ }^{10}$

Common Features The first State constitutions differed, sometimes widely, in their details. Yet they were on the whole more alike than not. The most common features were the principles of popular sovereignty (a government that exists only with the consent of the governed), limited government, civil rights and liberties, separation of powers, and checks and balances.

Popular Sovereignty. Everywhere, the people were recognized as the only source of 10 From independence until that constitution became effective in 1780, Massachusetts relied on its colonial charter, in force prior to 1691 , as its fundamental law.

Background

CAPTAIN PRESTON'S ACCOUNT After students analyze the colonist's account of the Boston Massacre in Core Worksheet $B$, have them compare it to this account from Thomas Preston, the commander of the British troops: "The mob still increased and were more outrageous, striking their clubs . . . one against another, and calling out, come on you rascals, you bloody backs, you lobster scoundrels, fire if you dare. . . [I was] endeavouring all in my power to persuade them to retire peaceably, but to no purpose. They advanced to the points of the bayonets. . . . [O]ne of the soldiers having received a severe blow with a stick . . . instantly fired, on which turning to and asking him why he fired without orders, I was struck with a club on my arm. . . . On this a general attack was made on the men by a great number of heavy clubs and snowballs being thrown at them, by which all our lives were in imminent danger. "

REVIEW FACTS

Ask students to turn to the "Common Features of State Constitutions" chart in Part 2 of the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 68). Recreate the chart on the board. Call on volunteers to fill in the information.
L4 Differentiate Have students write a one-page essay on this question: Why did many first State constitutions share several common features?

EXTEND THE LESSON

L3f you have time, have students draw a political cartoon with a clear point of view, either pro-colonist or pro-British. It should describe one of the key events or concepts covered in this section. Their cartoon should use exaggeration and humor and should express a point of view about a specific idea or event. Ask students to annotate their cartoons, explaining who, what, when, and where

L3
Display Transparency 2E, Excerpt from a Letter to John Adams from Dr. Benjamin Rush, about the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Ask: What risk did the patriots face in defying Britain? (execution) Based on their reaction to Harrison's statement, did the patriots believe they really might be executed? Explain. (Yes. The macabre joke brought only a momentary smile.)
L1 L2 ELL Have these students complete one or both of the Extend Activities (Unit 1 All-in-One, pp. 78, 79), on the topics of "Making a Difference" and "Patriotism."
L4 Have students work in small groups to create outlines for the constitution of a fifty-first state. Allow time for students to compare their results.

Answers

Caption their lives, wealth, and honor; the members probably felt they had no other recourse

Assess and Remediate

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 80)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 81)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The events leading up  to the Declaration of | Have students work in pairs to create their  own timelines. Write a list of events from  the text on the board, including the First and  Independence  (Questions 2, 3, 4, 5)  Second Continental Congresses. Students  should plot the events in sequential order  and include a sentence or two describing  each event. |

Answers

Checkpoint executive, legislative, and judicial branches

Common Features of state Constituions

$>$ Popular Sovereignty $>$ Separation of Powers
$>$ Limited Government $>$ Checks and Balances
$>$ Civil Rights and Liberties

Once the seat of Massachusetts government, the Old State House in Boston has endured just as the State constitution has. Shown here: the Old State House as seen in 1870 and present day.

Checkpoint

How did the State constitutions separate governmental power?

unalienable

adj. cannot be surnsferred sacred governmental authority. Government could be conducted only with the consent of the governed.

Limited Government. The new State governments could exercise only those powers granted to them by the people through the constitution. The powers that were given were hedged with many restrictions.

Civil Rights and Liberties. In every State, it was made clear that the sovereign people held certain rights that government must at all times respect. Seven of the new documents began with a bill of rights, setting out the "unalienable rights" held by the people.

Separation of Powers, Checks and Balances. The powers granted to the new State governments were divided among three distinct branches: executive, legislative, and judicial. Each branch was given powers with which to check, or restrain the actions of, the other branches of the government.

Beyond those basics, the new State constitutions were rather brief documents. They were, for the most part, declarations of principle and statements of limitation on governmental power. Memories of the royal governors were fresh, and State governors were given little real power. Most of the authority that was granted to government was placed in the legislature. Elective terms of office were made purposely short, seldom more than one or two years. The right to vote was limited to those adult white males who could meet rigid qualifications, including property ownership.

We shall come back to the State constitutions later, in Chapter 24. For now, note this very important point: The earliest of those documents were, within a very few years, to have a marked impact on the drafting of the Constitution of the United States.

SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT

1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What events and ideas led to American independence?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What is a confederation? (b) What was the purpose of the New England Confederation?
3. In your own words, explain what "taxation without representation" means.

Critical Thinking

4. Summarize What major events led to the calling of the First Continental Congress?
5. Make Comparisons (a) What were the goals of the First and Second Continental Congresses? (b) How did the Framers achieve these goals? (c) What challenges did each meeting face?

Quick Write

Narrative Writing: Research Your Colony Using the questions you drafted in Section 1, conduct preliminary research to find the answers. Add any additional questions that you may have after reading Section 2. Browse the Internet or other sources and take notes on what you find. Use the information to begin a story about the information to begin a story shaping of the American government.

Assessment Answers

1. Albany Plan, Stamp Act, Boston Massacre, Boston Tea Party, Intolerable Acts, First Continental Congress, Second Continental Congress, Declaration of Independence
2. (a) A confederation is a joining of several groups for a common purpose. (b) The New England Confederation was formed to defend several settlements against Native Americans.
3. Parliament passed laws to tax the colonies, but the colonists had no elected representatives in Parliament to give them a voice in making the laws.
4. Britain's restrictive laws fueled unrest in the colonies. Protests, boycotts, and mob violence broke out. When Britain passed additional laws, called the Intolerable Acts, to punish the colonies, the First Continental Congress was called to discuss the situation.
5. (a) The goals of the First and Second Continental Congresses were to address the growing restrictions on the colonies by Britain. (b) The First Continental Congress sent a Declaration of Rights to the king, organized a boycott, and called for local committees to enforce the boycott. The Second Continental Congress created the Declaration of Independence and conducted the war. It raised a military, borrowed funds, bought supplies, created a money system, and made treaties. (c) Each meeting faced the challenge of attracting enough delegates, coming to a consensus on issues, and keeping their meetings secret.
QUICK WRITE A strong assignment will show research from reputable sources. Questions should lead to a basic summary of the colony's involvement in the Revolution.

The Declaration of Independence

IN CONGRESS, JULY 4, 1776

The Unanimous Declaration of the Thirteen United States of America

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will

- read and analyze the Declaration of Independence.
- analyze the reactions of different audiences to the Declaration of Independence.

BEFORE READING

L2 ELL Differentiate Declaration of Independence Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 58)

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the Declaration of Independence in the text and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 82) before class.
L2 ELL Differentiate Declaration of Independence Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-inOne, p. 83)

BELLRINGER

Display Transparency 2F, showing an especially stirring passage from the Declaration of Independence. Write these instructions on the board: Rewrite this passage in your own words.

L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students to paraphrase only the first sentence from the passage. Preview difficult vocabulary: self-evident (clear); endowed (given); unalienable (not to be taken away); pursuit of (search for).

Answers

Caption the right to petition the government, freedom from cruel punishment, the right to trial by jury, the right to due process, the right to private property

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

ANALYZE SOURCES

Before students begin this section's Core Worksheet, you may want to review tips on analyzing primary sources in the Skills Handbook, p. S14.

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: - The Declaration of Independence has four parts: the Preamble, the Declaration of Natural Rights, the List of Grievances, and the Resolution of Independence.

- The Preamble explains reasons for separating. - The Declaration of Natural Rights lists basic rights to which people are entitled. - The List of Grievances offers evidence that King George has violated the colonists' rights. - The Resolution of Independence asserts that the colonies are now independent from Britain.
CONCEPTS: popular sovereignty, civil rights and liberties
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The Declaration of Independence expresses the political ideals that underlie American democracy. - The Declaration of Independence has had an enduring influence on American government and culture.

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

INTRODUCE THE TOPIC

Tell students that today they will analyze one of the most important political documents in the world. Have students share their paraphrase from the Bellringer activity. (Possible answer: All people are born with basic rights that cannot be taken from them, including the freedom to live and search for happiness as they see fit. People establish governments to safeguard their basic rights. If a government does not protect these rights, people have the right to end that government and establish a new one.)
Point out that Thomas Jefferson was the principal author of the Declaration of Independence. Ask:
Why did Jefferson begin his case for independence with a statement of natural rights? (Jefferson wanted to establish a philosophical foundation for his argument that the colonies had the right and duty to sever their ties to England. In the eighteenth century, Enlightenment thinkers were famous, influential, and respected. Using a philosophical foundation based on Enlightenment thinking gave weight and influence to the colonial argument.)
Ask students to name Enlightenment thinkers who influenced Jefferson and the other Founders. (Locke, Rousseau, Montesquieu, Hobbes, Voltaire, Blackstone) Review the ideas of these philosophers. Information can be found in the Background notes in the Chapter 2 teacher's edition and on the Section 4 Extend Worksheet for students (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 101).

review reading comprehension worksheet

Have students take out their Reading Comprehension worksheets (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 82) and share their answers to be sure they understand the four parts of the Declaration.
L1 L2 Differentiate Write sentences from the Declaration of Independence on index cards. Have students take turns picking a card and identifying from which part of the document (Preamble, Declaration of Natural Rights, List of Grievances, or Resolution of Independence) each sentence comes.
L4 Differentiate Point out to students that Jefferson and many signers of the Declaration of Independence held slaves. Ask them to do research about one of these men and explain how he reconciled the ideals of the Declaration with his role as a slaveholder. Then ask them to explain what the Declaration left unsaid or unresolved.

Declaration of Natural Rights: This paragraph lists the basic rights to which all people are entitled. It describes those rights as being unalienable. They cannot be being unalienable. They cannot be taken away. The government gets taken away. The government gets its power from the people. When its power from the people. When the government usurps (takes) the government usurps (takes) power from the people and does not protect their rights, the people have the right and responsibility to throw off that government and to create a new one.

- List of Grievances: This section lists the colonists' 27 complaints against the British Crown. In essence, King George III had essence, King George inn rather than govern with the people's wellbeing in mind.

When in the Course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

- We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.
Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.
He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.
He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.
- He has refused to pass other Laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of Representation in the Legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.
He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their Public Records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.
$\rightarrow$ He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.
He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the Legislative powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the mean time exposed to all the dangers of invasions from without, and convulsions within.

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 2, Declaration of Independence:

Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 58)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 82)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 83)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 84)

wation thy the Bepresentatioes of the UMDIED STATES RICA，in Geneval Cingress a domil．2．

Even the Declaration of Independence had revisions．
－He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States；for that purpose obstructing the Laws for Naturalization of Foreigners；refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither，and raising the condi－ tions of new Appropriations of Lands．
He has obstructed the Administration of Justice，by refusing his Assent to Laws for establishing Judiciary powers．
－He has made Judges dependent on his Will alone for the tenure of their offices，and the amount and payment of their salaries．
He has erected a multitude of New Offices，and sent hither swarms of Officers to harass our people and eat out their substance．
He has kept among us in time of peace，Standing Armies，without the Consent of our legislatures．
He has affected to render the Military independent of，and superior to， the Civil Power．
He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitutions，and unacknowledged by our laws；giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation：
－For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us；
For protecting them，by a mock Trial，from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States；
For cutting off our Trade with all parts of the world；
For imposing Taxes on us without our Consent；
For depriving us，in many cases，of the benefits of Trial by Jury；
For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended offenses；
－For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighboring Province，establishing therein an Arbitrary government，and enlarging its Boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies；
For taking away our Charters，abolishing our most valuable Laws，and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments；

For suspending our own Legislatures，and declaring themselves invested with Power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever．
－The king had tried to slow popula－ tion growth by preventing indi－ viduals from other countries from becoming citizens of the colonies．

This grievance was later addressed in Article III，Section 1 of the Constitution，which states that federal judges shall hold office＂during good Behaviour．＂
－The king forced colonists to lodge British soldiers in their homes． The Bill of Rights addressed this in the 3rd Amendment，which states that no soldier can be lodged in＂any house＂without the consent of the owner．

Here，the Declaration refers to Canada．The colonists feared that they，too，would fall under absolute rule．Britain extended the border of Quebec to the Ohio Valley，cutting it off to colonia settlers．

Background

EQUALITY In 1775，reacting to colonial charges of British oppression，British author Samuel Johnson wrote，＂How is it that we hear the loudest yelps for liberty from the drivers of Negroes？＂Indeed，many signers of the Declaration of Independence， including its author－Thomas Jefferson－held slaves．Yet Jefferson＇s words＂all men are created equal＂would become a rallying cry for groups seeking equality．Abolition－ ists before the Civil War cited these words to support their calls to end slavery．Civil Rights leader Dr．Martin Luther King，Jr．，quoted these words in a 1963 speech：＂I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed：＇We hold these truths to be self－evident，that all men are created equal．＇＂The Women＇s Rights convention at Seneca Falls in 1848 adapted Jefferson＇s words，assert－ ing that＂all men and women are created equal．＂

DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET

Distribute the Chapter 2 Declaration of Indepen－ dence Core Worksheet（Unit 1 All－in－One，p．84）， which asks students to consider the role of the Dec－ Iaration as an idealistic statement of human rights， as a statement of grievances，and as propaganda． Students may work with partners or individually to complete Part 1 by rating the Declaration of Inde－ pendence in terms of its various purposes and then explaining their reasons for each ranking．
After students share their responses，have partners complete Part 2 of the Core Worksheet to analyze how different groups might have reacted to the Dec－ laration because of their differing viewpoints．

L1 L2 Differentiate Have groups of students represent each group listed in Part 2 of the Core Worksheet．Ask them to make a public statement about the Declaration from their perspective．You may extend the activity by letting the groups respond to each other＇s public statements．
L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students to represent another group：＂recently arrived colonials＂or＂new Americans．＂Encourage them to explain the view－ point of this group to the class．
L4 Differentiate Have students write a response to the Declaration of Independence from an opposing point of view in the form of a propaganda brochure．

EXTEND THE LESSON

Show a Revolutionary War movie in class, or assign a movie to students or partners to watch at home on a DVD. Encourage students to rate the movie with one to four stars, with four stars as the top rating. Have students write a review of the movie.

L4Differentiate Have groups of students prepare a script for an additional short scene for the movie. Tell them that they can plan their scene to go into any point in the movie, not just the beginning or end. They should use the same characters, and their scene should be consistent with the plot of the movie. After students in each group perform their scene, have the class discuss what the scene contributed to the plot or character development of the movie.

The king had forced captive sailors to fight against their own people, or die.

The colonists tried repeatedly to petition the king to correct his wrongs. However, their protests fore he by haws. fore, he does the colonies.

The colonists still felt a common identity with citizens of Britain identity with citizens of Britain
However, their fellow British subjects ignored their appeals for help.

- The Resolution of Independence: The colonies declare themselves free and independent States, by authority God Therefore the Stes and of God. Ther to , States have peace oreat alliances and trad with foreign pown and 1 other acts afforded to indepenrded to indepen dent States.

He has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our Coasts, burned our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large Armies of foreign mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation.
He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the executioners of their friends and Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers the merciless Indian Savages whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes, and conditions.
In every stage of these Oppressions We have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble terms. Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A Prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free People.

Nor have We been wanting in attentions to our British brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which, would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our Separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace Friends.
We, therefore, the Representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by the Authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be Free and Independent States; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved, and that as Free and Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do. And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor.

Background

John adams When the Second Continental Congress opened in May 1775, John Adams arrived ready for action. Armed conflict had already occurred at Lexington and Concord. Adams wanted Congress to prepare for war. Impatient with the slow progress, Adams took the floor. He proposed the formation of a Continental Army, under the command of George Washington. He also urged the colonies to form their own governments. As Congress debated the Declaration of Independence in June 1776, Adams's passionate support won over the hesitant delegates. On July 3, 1776, the day after Congress approved Richard Henry Lee's resolution to pursue independence, Adams wrote to his wife Abigail: "The Second Day of July . . . will be celebrated, by succeeding Generations, as the great anniversary Festival . . . with Pomp and Parade, . . . Guns, Bells, Bonfires and Illuminations.

| New Hampshire: | New Jersey: | Pennsylvania: |
| :--- | :--- | :--- |
| Josiah Bartlett | Richard Stockton | Robert Morris |
| William Whipple | John Witherspoon | Benjamin Rush  Benjamin Franklin |
| Mathew Thornton | Francis Hopkinson | John Morton  Massachusetts Bay: |
| John Hart | Abraham Clark | George Clymer |
| John Hancock | Delaware: | James Smith |
| Samuel Adams | Caesar Rodney | George Taylor |
| John Adams | George Read Wilson |  |
| Robert Treat Paine | Thomas M'Kean | George Ross |
| Elbridge Gerry | Maryland: | North Carolina: |
| Rhode Island: | Samuel Chase | William Hooper |
| Stephan Hopkins | William Paca | Joseph Hewes |
| William Ellery | Thomas Stone | John Penn |
| Connecticut: | Charles Carroll | South Carolina: |
| Roger Sherman | of Carrollton | Edward Rutledge |
| Samuel Huntington | Virginia: | Thomas Heyward, Jr. |
| William Williams | George Wythe | Thomas Lynch, Jr. |
| Oliver Wolcott | Richard Henry Lee | Arthur Middleton |
| New York: | Thomas Jefferson | Georgia: |
| William Floyd | Benjamin Harrison | Button Gwinnett |
| Philip Livingston | Thomas Nelson, Jr. | Lyman Hall |
| Francis Lewis | Francis Lightfoot Lee | George Walton |
| Lewis Morris | Carter Braxton |  |
|  |  |  |

Reviewing the Declaration

As president of the Second Continental Congress, John Hancock was the first to sign the Declaration of Independence, approving it with his now-famous signature.

Assess and Remediate

L3
Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 218).

L3 Assign the Declaration of Independence Assessment questions.
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The Declaration of  Natural Rights (Ques-  tions 1, 2) | Write in your own words the rights listed in  this section. Have students work in pairs to  find their location in the text. Have volunteers  read aloud the sentence that contains each  right |
| The List of Griev-  ances (Questions  4, 6) | Work with students to write the grievances in  their own words. List them on the board, and  provide any relevant historical information  that might clarify the grievances. |

Vocabulary

Choose ten unfamiliar words in the Declaration. Look them up in the diction ary. Then, on a piece of paper, copy the sentence in the Declaration in which nfamiliar word is used. After the sentence, write the definition of the unfamiliar word.

Comprehension

1. Name the three "unalienable rights" listed in the Declaration.
2. From what source do governments derive their "just powers"?
3. According to the Declaration, what powers belong to the United States as "Free and Independent States"?

Critical Thinking

4. Recognize Cause and Effect Why do you think the colonists were unhappy with the fact that their judges' tenure and salaries were dependent on the king?
5. Identifying Assumptions Do you think that the words "all men are created equal" were intended to apply to all those who lived in the colonies? Which groups were most likely not included?
6. Drawing Conclusions What evidence is there that the colonists had already and unsuccessfully voiced their concerns to the king?

Assessment Answers

Vocabulary answers should reflect an understanding of the selected words.

1. life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness
2. Governments derive their "just powers" from the consent of the governed.
3. They have the power to declare war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and do everything else that independent States have a right to do.
4. Judges were likely to favor the king over the colonists in order to keep their jobs.
5. Possible answer: No; many of the signers, including Jefferson, owned slaves and were unwilling to extend these basic rights to African Americans. In addition, Native Americans and women were also excluded.
6. Just before the Resolution of Independence, the Declaration claims that the colonists petitioned the king several times and that they also appealed to the British people for justice.

GUIDING QUESTION

What weaknesses in the Articles of Confederation made a lasting government impossible?

```
I. The Articles of Confederation
    A. Weaknesses
        1. Congress lacked power to tax, regulate trade between States, and make States obey its laws or the Articles
    2. Laws required approval of 9 of 13 States
    3. Change to Articles required approval of all }13\mathrm{ States
    B. Effects of the Weaknesses
        1. Congress had to ask States for funds or borrow, neither of which raised enough money
    2. States bickered among themselves; made treaties with other nations; raised own military; taxed one another's goods and banned some trade; and printed own money with little backing, causing economic chaos
    3. Violence-Shays' Rebellion
    4. Congress too weak to deal with problems
```

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will . .

- identify and analyze weaknesses of the Articles of Confederation by completing a worksheet.
- analyze the issue of land claims by examining a map.

SECTION 3

The Critical Period

Guiding Question

What weaknesses in the Articles of Confederation made a lasting government impossible? Use an outline like the one below to take notes on the reasons why the Articles of Confederation failed.

. The Articles of Confederation

A. Weaknesses
1.
B. Effects of the Weaknesses
1.

Political Dictionary  - Articles of - ratification  Confederation

Objectives

1. Describe the structure of the government set up under the Articles of Confederation.
2. Explain why the weaknesses of the Articles led to a critical period for the country in the 1780s.
3. Describe how a growing need for a stronger national government led to plans for a Constitutional Convention.

Image Above: Daniel Shays' rebellion made the need for a stronger government clear.

The First and Second Continental Congresses rested on no legal base. They were called in haste to meet an emergency, and they were intended to be temporary. Something more regular and permanent was clearly needed. In this section, you will look at the first attempt to establish a lasting government for the new nation.

The Articles of Confederation

Richard Henry Lee's resolution that led to the Declaration of Independence also called on the Second Continental Congress to propose "a plan of confederation" to the States. Off and on, for 17 months, Congress debated the problem of uniting the former colonies. Finally, on November 15, 1777, the Articles of Confederation were approved.

The Articles of Confederation established "a firm league of friendship" among the States. Each State kept "its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every Power, Iurisdiction, and right . . . not . . . expressly delegated to the United States, in Congress assembled." The States came together "for their common defense, the security of their Liberties, and their mutual and general welfare. . . ." In effect, the Articles created a structure that more closely resembled an alliance of independent states than a government "of the people."

The Articles did not go into effect immediately, however. The ratification (formal approval) of each of the 13 States was needed first. Eleven States approved the document within a year. Delaware added its approval in February 1779. Maryland did not ratify until March 1, 1781. The Second Continental Congress declared the Articles effective on that date.

Governmental Structure The government set up by the Articles was quite simple. A Congress was the sole body created. It was unicameral, made up of delegates chosen yearly by the States in whatever way their legislatures might direct. Each State had only one vote in the Congress, no matter its population or wealth.

The Articles established no executive or judicial branch. These functions were to be handled by committees of the Congress. Each year the Congress would choose one of its members as its president. That person would be its

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

ANALYZE MAPS

To teach the skills of analyzing maps, have students read Analyze Maps in the Skills Handbook, p. S27. Then have them examine the map in the Core Worksheet and answer the questions.

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: - The Second Continental Congress adopted the Articles of Confederation to establish a more lasting form of government. - Under the Articles, each State had one vote in Congress; no executive or judicial branches existed. - Congress did not have the power to tax, regulate commerce, or make the States obey the Articles.

- The Articles' weaknesses led to bickering among the States. - The growing need for a stronger National Government led to plans for a Constitutional Convention.
CONCEPTS: limited government, federalism, States' rights ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Articles of Confederation set up a central government that was too weak to solve the nation's problems. - The chaos of the 1780 s led to a movement favoring a more powerful central government.
presiding officer, but not the president of the United States. Civil officers such as postmasters were to be appointed by the Congress.

Powers of Congress Several important powers were given to the Congress. It could make war and peace, send and receive ambassadors, make treaties, borrow money, set up a money system, establish post offices, build a navy, raise an army by asking the States for troops, fix uniform standards of weights and measures, and settle disputes among the States.

State Obligations By agreeing to the Articles, the States pledged to obey the Articles and acts of the Congress. They promised to provide the funds and troops requested by Congress; treat citizens of other States fairly and equally within their own borders; and give full faith and credit to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. In addition, the States agreed to surrender fugitives from justice to one another, submit their disputes to Congress for settlement, and allow open travel and trade among the States.

Beyond those few obligations, the States retained those powers not explicitly given to the Congress. They, not the Congress, were primarily responsible for protecting life and property, and for promoting "the safety and happiness of the people."

Weaknesses The powers of the Congress appear, at first glance, to have been considerable. Several important powers were missing, however. Their omission, together with other weaknesses, soon proved the Articles inadequate for the needs of the time.

The Congress did not have the power to tax. It could raise money only by borrowing and by asking the States for funds. Borrowing was, at best, a poor source. The Second Continental Congress had borrowed heavily to support the Revolution, and many of those debts had not been paid. And, while the Articles remained in force, not one State came close to meeting the financial requests made by the Congress.

Nor did the Congress have the power to regulate trade between the States. This lack of a central mechanism to regulate the young jurisdiction n. legal authority presiding officer
n. the chair of a meeting

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 86) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 87)

BELLRINGER

Display Transparency 2G. Write on the board:
(1) Which government issued this currency?
(2) What problems did local currencies create?

Answer in your notebook.
L4
Differentiate Add to the directions: What features of the Articles of Confederation contributed to the currency disaster? (Lacking the power to tax, Congress had no funds to establish a national money system. Lacking the power to enforce the Articles, Congress could not stop the States from issuing their own currency.)

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

INTRODUCE THE TOPIC

Have students share their answers to the Bellringer activity. (1. Massachusetts; 2. Local currencies hampered interstate trade, because their value and acceptability varied from State to State. This would interfere with the development of a national economy.) The printing of State currency was one of many State actions that weakened the new government. Ask students what other State actions undermined national unity. (States refused to meet financial requests of Congress, made agreements with foreign governments, organized their own military forces, and taxed or banned goods from other States.)ELL Differentiate Write the answers on the board or print the worksheet onto a transparency to allow students to copy the correct answers.

Answers

Checkpoint make war and peace, send and receive ambassadors, make treaties, borrow money, set up a money system, establish post offices, build a navy, raise an army by asking the States for troops, fix uniform standards of weights and measures, settle disputes among States Weaknesses of the Articles of Confederation possible response: a loose alliance of independent States rather than a cohesive nation

DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET

Distribute the Chapter 2 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, page 88). The map shows land claims of the States and foreign nations after the Revolution. Have student pairs examine the map and answer the questions.

Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 2 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 91 ).

DISCUSS

Display Transparency 2 H . Ask why the Articles were adopted, given their many flaws. To what extent were colonists reacting to English abuses that led to war? Were the Articles appropriate for their time?
L2 ELL Differentiate Use the Think-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to allow students to verbalize their answers before starting the class discussion.

PREDICT CONSEQUENCES

Explain that Part 2 of the Core Worksheet asks students to consider what might have happened had the Articles of Confederation remained the national constitution. Students will make predictions about five scenarios on the worksheet. After they finish, allow time to compare and contrast predictions.

DISCUSS SHAYS' REBELLION

Ask students to explain the significance of Shays' Rebellion. (It showed the weakness of the National Government under the Articles and led to calls for a Constitutional Convention.) Then ask why some of Shays' contemporaries might have seen his rebellion as an extension of the War for Independence. (They might have said that he was rebelling against a government that was taxing people unfairly and using arbitrary power, $\mu s t$ as the colonists had rebelled against British abuses.)

L4 Differentiate Ask: Was Shays a traitor? Did he deserve to be pardoned? Students might work in teams to debate both sides of these questions.

EXTEND THE LESSON

Have students work in small groups to invent a game called "Government under the Articles." Their games might be board games, card games, or other games. Students' games should reflect the weaknesses and challenges presented by the Articles. For example, the point of the game might involve trying to pass a bill or act to benefit one or many States.
L1 L2 Differentiate Provide an outline of a game for students to work out in groups. For example: "Pass a bill to build an interstate road" card with 20 to 30 cards. A small number of cards would say "Nine states agree" or "Bill passes." The other cards would have actions allowed under the Articles, which worked against passage. The point of the game might be to get approval first, or some other variation.
nation's growing commerce was one of the major factors that soon led to the adoption of the Constitution.

The Congress was further limited by a lack of power to make the States obey the Articles of Confederation or the laws it made. Congress could exercise the powers it did have only with the consent of 9 of the 13 State delegations. Finally, the Articles themselves could be changed only with the consent of all 13 of the State legislatures.
arsenal
n. a store of arms or military military equipment

The Critical Period, the 1780 s

The long Revolutionary War finally ended on October 19, 1781. America's victory was confirmed by the signing of the Treaty of Paris in 1783. Peace, however, brought the new nation's economic and political weaknesses into sharp focus. Problems, made even more difficult by the weaknesses of the Delegates met first at Alexandria. They met again at Annapolis. The First and Second ConFirst and Second met at Philadelphia met at Philadelphia. $\qquad$

Articles, soon surfaced.

With a central government unable to act, the States bickered among themselves. They grew increasingly jealous and suspicious of one another. They often refused to support the new central government, financially and in almost every other way. Several of them made agreements with foreign governments without the approval of the Congress, even though that was forbidden by the Articles. Most organized their own military forces. George Washington complained, "...we are one nation today and 13 tomorrow. Who will treat with us on such terms?"

The States taxed one another's goods and even banned some trade. They printed their own money, often with little backing. Economic chaos spread throughout the colonies as prices soared and sound credit vanished. Debts, public and private, went unpaid. Violence broke out in a number of places.

The most spectacular of these events played out in western Massachusetts in a series of incidents that came to be known as Shays' Rebellion. As economic conditions worsened there, property holders, many of them small farmers, began to lose their land and possessions for lack of payment on taxes and other debts. In the fall of 1786, Daniel Shays, who had served as an officer in the War for Independence, led an armed uprising that forced several State judges to close their courts. Early the next year, Shays mounted an unsuccessful attack on the federal arsenal at Springfield. State forces finally moved to quiet the rebellion and Shays fled to Vermont. In response to the violence, the Massachusetts legislature eventually passed laws to ease the burden of debtors.

A Need for Stronger Government

The Articles had created a government unable to deal with the nation's troubles. Inevitably, demand grew for a stronger, more effective national government. Those who were most threatened by economic and political insta-bility-large property owners, merchants, traders, and other creditors-soon took the lead in efforts to that end. The movement for change began to take concrete form in 1785 .

Mount Vernon Maryland and Virginia, plagued by bitter trade disputes, took the first step in the movement for change. Ignoring the Congress, the two States agreed to a conference to resolve conflicts over commerce and navigation on the Potomac River and Chesapeake Bay. Representatives from the two States met at Alexandria, Virginia, in March 1785. At George Washington's invitation, they moved their sessions to his home at nearby Mount Vernon.

Their negotiations proved so successful that on January 21, 1786, the Virginia General Assembly called for "a joint meeting of [all of] the States to consider and recommend a federal plan for regulating commerce."

Annapolis That joint meeting opened at Annapolis, Maryland, on September 11, 1786. Turnout was poor, with representatives from only five of the 13 States attending: New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and voltaire François-Marie Arouet, known as Voltaire, was one of the most vocal of the French Enlightenment thinkers. He wrote scathing attacks on religious bigotry and fanaticism, for which he was jailed and eventually exiled. In place of traditional religion, Voltaire promoted deism-a religious philosophy that acknowledged God but rejected specific teachings of any church. Deists argued for religious freedom and toleration. As Voltaire wrote in A Treatise on Toleration (1763), "We ought to look upon all men as our brothers. " Deist views migrated to America and were adopted by leaders such as Thomas Jefferson, Ben jamin Franklin, and George Washington.

Background

This information also appears on the Extend Worksheet for Section 4, along with information about other influential philosophers covered in this chapter.

Virginia. Although New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and North Carolina had appointed delegates, none attended the Annapolis meeting. Disappointed but still hopeful, Alexander Hamilton, a delegate from New York, and Virginia's James Madison persuaded the gathering to call for yet another meeting of the States.

By mid-February of 1787 , seven of the States had named delegates to the Philadelphia meeting: Delaware, Georgia, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. On February 21, the Congress, which had been hesitating, also called upon the States to send delegates to Philadelphia

Primary Source

... for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation and reporting to Congress and the several legislatures such alterations and provisions therein as shall when agreed to in Congress and confirmed by the States render the [Articles] adequate to the exigencies of Government and the preservation of the Union.
-The United States in Congress Assembled, February 21, 1787
That Philadelphia meeting became the Constitutional Convention. What began as an assembly to revise the existing Articles Independence Hall served as the meeting place for both the Second Continental Congress and the Constitutional Convention. What significance might this building have had for the Constitutional Convention?

of Confederation would evolve into the creation of an entirely new kind of government. This government would derive its power from a constitution.

Essential Questions response to the the a $\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue }\end{aligned}$

SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT

Critical Thinking

4. Synthesize Information When the States ratified the Articles, they agreed to obey the Articles and all acts of Congress. (a) Did the States honor their agreement? (b) How do you know?
5. Identify Point of View Washington was referring to foreign affairs when he complained, "We are one nation today and 13 tomorrow. Who will treat with us on such terms?" (a) What did Washington fear would happen? (b) Do you agree with his point of view? Why or why not?

Quick Write

Narrative Writing: Details and Anecdotes When writing narrative nonfiction, it is important to have details and anecdotes to keep your reader's interest. Choose some important dates or events that you wish to highlight. Research them further to find personal accounts or interesting examples from that time.

Assess and Remediate

L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (All-in-One, p. 95)
2 Section Quiz B (All-in-One, p. 96)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The structure of the  government under  the Articles of  Confederation  (Question 3) | Draw a diagram that depicts the structure of  the Federal Government under the Articles of  Confederation, and create a list of its pow-  ers. Compare it with a diagram of the three  branches of the current Federal Government  and a list of their powers. Ask students to  point out differences. |
| The need for the  Framers to create a  stronger government  (Questions 4, 5) | Refer back to the diagrams. Ask students to  point out reasons why specific features of  the Federal Government under the Articles  of Confederation (such as the existence of  a Congress only) might make for a weak  government. |

Answers

Caption The Declaration of Independence was signed there.

Assessment Answers

1. Weaknesses: Congress lacked power to tax, regulate trade between States, or make States obey its laws or the Articles. Laws required approval of 9 of 13 States. Changes to Articles required approval of all 13 States. Effects of the weaknesses: Congress had to ask States for funds or borrow, neither of which raised enough money. States bickered among themselves, made treaties with other nations, raised their own military forces, taxed one another's goods and banned some trade, and printed their own money with little backing, causing economic chaos. Violence broke out, including Shays' Rebellion. Congress was too weak to deal with the problems.
2. The goal was to unite the colonies (now States) under one central, though weak, government. The States kept their sovereignty but came together for matters such as defense and trade.
3. (a) unicameral (b) chosen yearly from each State by whatever method the State chose
4. (a) no (b) The States failed to support the central government, made alliances with foreign countries, and created their own money.
5. (a) that foreign countries would see each State as sovereign, and deal with them individually, rather than with Congress (b) Possible response: I agree. Foreign nations would see the States, not the nation, as capable of entering and enforcing agreements. This would undermine the United States as a nation.
QUICK WRITE Students should find personal accounts or interesting examples for their chosen dates or events.

SECTION 4

Creating tine

Three-Fifths Compromise

- three fifths of slaves counted for representation
- three fifths of slaves counted for taxation

Connecticut Compromise

- bicameral Congress
- equal representation in Senate
- representation by State population in House

Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise

- Congress forbidden to tax exports
- Congress forbidden to interfere with slave trade until 1808
- Congress could regulate commerce

Constitution

Guiding Question
What compromises enabled the Framers to create the Constitution? Use a flowchart like the one below to record details about the

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will

- use worksheets to analyze the different plans and compromises in creating the Constitution.
- use primary and secondary sources to evaluate the major compromises made at the Constitutional Convention. Framers' compromises.

| Constitutional Compromises |  |  |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| Three-Fifths |  | $\lambda$ |
|  |  |  |
| Compromise | Compromise | Compromise |
| - |  | - |
| - |  |  |
| - | - |  |

Political Dictionary

| - Framers | - Three-Fifths |
| :--- | :--- |
| - Virginia Plan | Compromise |
| - New Jersey | - Commerce and |
| Plan | Slave Trade |
| - Connecticut | Compromise |
| Compromise |  |

- Virginia Plan

Connecticut Compromise

Objectives

1. Identify the Framers of the Constitution and discuss how they organized the Philadelphia Convention.
2. Compare and contrast the Virginia Plan and the New Jersey Plan.
3. Summarize the convention's major compromises and the effects of those decisions.
4. Describe the delegates' reactions to the Constitution.

Image Above: George Washington was president of the Constitutional Convention.

Picture the scene. It is hot-sweltering, in fact. Yet all of the windows of the State House are closed and shuttered to discourage eavesdroppers. Outside, soldiers keep curious onlookers and others at a distance. Inside, the atmosphere is frequently tense as 50 or so men exchange sometimes heated views. Indeed, some who are there become so upset that they threaten to leave the hall, and a few actually do so.

This was often the scene at the Philadelphia meeting, which finally began on May 25, 1787.11 Over the long summer months, until mid-September, the Framers of what was to become the Constitution worked to build a new government that could meet the needs of the nation. In this section, you will consider that meeting and its outcome.

The Framers

Twelve of the 13 States, all but Rhode Island, sent delegates to Philadelphia. ${ }^{12}$ In total, 74 delegates were chosen by the legislatures in those 12 states. For a number of reasons, however, only 55 of them actually attended the convention.

Of that 55, this much can be said: Never, before or since, has so remarkable a group been brought together in this country. Thomas Jefferson, who was not among them, later called the delegates "an assembly of demi-gods."

The delegates who attended the Philadelphia Convention, known as the Framers of the Constitution, included many outstanding individuals. These were men of wide knowledge and public experience. Many of them had fought in the Revolution; 46 had been members of the Continental Congress or the Congress of the Confederation, or both. Eight had served in constitutional conventions in their own States, and seven had been State governors. Eight had signed the Declaration of Independence. Thirty-four of the delegates had attended college in a day when there were but a few colleges in the land. Two were to become [^3] delayed mostly by lack of funds, did not reach Philadelphia until late July.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

GIVE A MULTIMEDIA PRESENTATION
Before the debate in this lesson, you may want to review tips on giving a multimedia presentation in the Skills Handbook, p. S21.

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: - The Constitutional Convention convened in Philadelphia to revise the Articles of Confederation. - The Virginia Plan and the New Jersey Plan each offered an approach to organizing a new government. - Delegates accepted compromises that led to agreement on the configuration of Congress and other issues.

CONCEPTS: compromise, constitutional government, limited government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Framers produced one of the world's landmark documents. - The new plan of government addressed the major concerns of the States. - While the Framers made significant compromises, they agreed on the fundamental principles of popular sovereignty, limited government, separation of powers, and checks and balances.

Presidents of the United States, and one a Vice President. Nineteen later served in the Senate and thirteen in the House of Representatives.

Is it any wonder that the product of such a gathering was described by the English statesman William E. Gladstone, nearly a century later, as "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man"?

Remarkably, the average age of the delegates was only 42 , and most of the leaders were in their 30s-James Madison was 36, Gouverneur Morris 35, Edmund Randolph 34, and Alexander Hamilton, 30. At 81, Benjamin Franklin was the oldest. His health was failing, however, and he was not able to attend many of the meetings. George Washington, at 55, was one of the few older members who played a key role at the Convention. Jonathan Dayton of New Jersey was, at 26, the youngest delegate.

By and large, the Framers of the Constitution were of a new generation in American politics. Several of the leaders of the Revolutionary period were not in Philadelphia. Patrick Henry said he "smelt a rat" and refused to attend. Samuel Adams, John Hancock, and Richard Henry Lee were not selected as delegates by their States. Thomas Paine was in Paris. So was Thomas Jefferson, as American minister to France. John Adams was the envoy to England and Holland at the time.

Organization and Procedure

The Framers met in the State House (now Independence Hall), probably in the same room in which the Declaration of Independence had been signed 11 years earlier.

They organized immediately on May 25, unanimously electing George Washington president of the convention. Then, and at the second session on Monday, May 28, they adopted several rules of procedure. A majority of the States would be needed to conduct $\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ What were some of the Framers' accomplishments?
$\frac{\text { envoy }}{n \text {. a rep }}$
n. a representative, especially in diplomatic affairs

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 2, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 97)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 98)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 99)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 101)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 103)
L3 Quiz A (p. 104)
L2 Quiz B (p. 105)

before CLASs
Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 97) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 98)

BELLRINGER

Display Transparency 2I. Write on the board: Answer these questions in your notebook: (1) What is Franklin's main point? (2) What does he mean by "local interests" and "selfish views"? (3) What does his statement suggest about the difficulties faced by the Convention? (4) How would you paraphrase this statement?

$L 2$

ELL Differentiate Read the quote aloud, and have students paraphrase each clause's meaning.

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessnet.com.

INTRODUCE THE TOPIC

Ask students to volunteer answers to the Bellringer questions. (1. To form a government, every delegate made compromises that ran counter to his personal and sectional interests. 2. He means that each delegate had different ideas based on the concerns, needs, and demands of his State. 3. The Convention faced significant conflict, and compromises were crucial to success in resolving these issues and forming a government. 4. Possible paraphrase: The Constitution may not be flawless, but I accept and embrace it, because we need a government and no group could produce a better constitution. When you bring together such a diverse group, you get the benefit of their combined intelligence and judgment; but you also get their biases and concerns. Thus, it is remarkable that the Constitution comes so close to ideal.)
L1 L2 Differentiate Review the text's photo essay about the Framers. Ask students what similarities, differences, and strengths they see in the background of these important people.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the Framers of the Constitution.

Answers

Checkpoint fought in the Revolution, served in Continental Congress or Congress of the Confederation, attended State constitutional conventions, served as State governors, signed Declaration of Independence, attended college
Framers of the Constitution Their accomplishments gave them the skills they needed to face such a task, and to consider the issues from various points of view.

Differentiate Which "local interests" and "selfish views" might this sampling of Framers reflect? Have students write a paragraph on this topic.

COVER THE BASICS

Ask students to take out the Reading Comprehension Worksheet. Review the New Jersey Plan and the Virginia Plan. Ask: What is the basic conflict underlying the differences between the two plans? (Should the States be represented in Congress equally or by population? ) What problem did small States have with the Virginia Plan? (States with large populations, which gave more money to the central government, would have more power to make laws that favored their own interests.) What problem did large States have with the New Jersey Plan? (States with small populations could thwart the will of the majority by blocking laws that did not benefit them.)

SUMMARIZE

On the board, recreate the chart of compromises in Part 2 of the Reading Comprehension Worksheet.
Call on volunteers to complete the chart. Point out that despite conflict, the Framers agreed on most basic principles. Ask students to identify these principles. (popular sovereignty, limited government, representative government, separation of powers, checks and balances)

L2 Differentiate Use the Jigsaw strategy (p. T27) and have students work in groups of three to become "experts" on one compromise. Have the students jigsaw into a second group with one "expert" on each compromise and have them review their answers together

Government
online
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
business. Each State delegation was to have one vote on all matters, and a majority of the votes cast would carry any proposal.

The Framers met on 92 of the 116 days from May 25 through their final meeting on September 17. They did most of their work on the floor of the convention. They handled some matters in committees, but the full body ultimately settled all questions. ${ }^{13}$

A Momentous Decision Remember, Congress had called the Philadelphia Convention "for the sole and express purpose" of recommending revisions to the Articles of Confederation. However, almost at once the delegates agreed that they were meeting to create an entirely new government for the United States. On May 30 they adopted this proposal:

PRIMARY SOURCE

Resolved, . . . that a national Government ought to be established consisting of a supreme Legislative, Executive and Judiciary.
-Edmund Randolph, Delegate from Virginia
With this momentous decision, the Framers redefined the purpose of the convention. From that point on, they set about writing a new constitution, intended to replace the Articles of Confederation. (However, much that would go into this new constitution would come directly from the Articles of Confederation.) Their debates were spirited, even bitter. At times the convention seemed near collapse. Once they had passed Randolph's resolution, however, the resolve of most of the delegates never wavered.

Proposals

Once the Framers resolved to replace the Articles of Confederation, two major plans were offered for the new government, the Virginia Plan and the New Jersey Plan.

13 Twenty-nine delegates from seven States were present on he first day. The full number of 55 was not reached until August 6 , when John Francis Mercer of Maryland arrived. In the meantime, some delegates had departed, and others were absent from time to time. Some 40 members attended most of the daily sessions of the convention.

Virginia Plan No State had more to do with the calling of the convention than Virginia. It was not surprising, then, that its delegates should offer the first plan for a new constitution. On May 29, the Virginia Plan, largely the work of Madison, was presented by Randolph.

The Virginia Plan called for a new government with three separate branches: legislative, executive, and judicial. The legislature-Con-gress-would be bicameral. Representation in each house was to be based either on each State's population or on the amount of money it gave for the support of the central government. The members of the lower house, the House of Representatives, were to be popularly elected in each State. Those of the upper house, the Senate, were to be chosen by the House from lists of persons nominated by the State legislatures.

Congress was to be given all of the powers it held under the Articles. In addition, it would have the power "to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent" to act, to veto any State law in conflict with national law, and to use force if necessary to make a State obey national law.

Under the proposed Virginia Plan, Congress would choose a "National Executive" and a "National Judiciary." Together, these two branches would form a "Council of revision." They could veto acts passed by Congress, but a veto could be overridden by the two houses. The executive would have "a general authority to execute the National laws." The judiciary would "consist of one or more supreme tribunals [courts], and of inferior tribunals."

The Virginia Plan also provided that all State officers should take an oath to support the Union, and that each State be guaranteed a republican form of government. Under the plan, Congress would have the exclusive power to admit new States to the Union.

The Virginia Plan, then, would create a new constitution by thoroughly revising the Articles. Its goal was the creation of a truly national government with greatly expanded powers and, importantly, the power to enforce its decisions.

The Virginia Plan set the agenda for much of the convention's work. But some delegates-especially those from New York

Background

JEAN-JACQUES ROUSSEAU "Man is born free, but everywhere is in chains." Thus began Rousseau's The Social Contract (1762). Rousseau believed that a social contract exists between a government and the governed. The people agree to obey the laws and submit to the general will of society. In exchange, government agrees to protect the rights and equality of all people. Current governments, he argued, broke this contract by protecting only the weal thy and powerful, enslaving the common people. In such cases, the people should change the government. This idea of social contract underlies the Bill of Rights and the concept of consent of the governed.
This information also appears on the Extend Worksheet for Section 4, along with information about other influential philosophers covered in this chapter.
and the smaller States of Delaware, Maryland, and New Jersey-found it too radical. ${ }^{14}$ Soon they developed their counterproposals. On June 15, William Paterson of New Jersey presented the position of the small States.

The New Jersey Plan Paterson and his colleagues offered several amendments to the Articles, but not nearly so thorough a revision as that proposed by the Virginia Plan. The New Jersey Plan retained the unicameral Congress of the Confederation, with each of the States equally represented. In addition to those powers Congress already had, the plan would add closely limited powers to tax and to regulate trade between the States.

The New Jersey Plan also called for a "federal executive" of more than one person. This plural executive would be chosen by Congress and could be removed by it at the request of a majority of the States' governors. The "federal judiciary" would be composed of a single "supreme Tribunal," appointed by the executive.

Among their several differences, the major point of disagreement between the two plans centered on this question: How should the States be represented in Congress? Would it be on the basis of their populations or financial contributions, as in the Virginia Plan? Or would it be on the basis of State equality, as in the Articles and the New Jersey Plan?

For weeks the delegates returned to this conflict, debating the matter again and again. The lines were sharply drawn. Several delegates on both sides of the issue threatened to withdraw. Finally, the dispute was settled by one of the key compromises the Framers were to make as they built the Constitution.

Compromises

The disagreement over representation in Congress was critical. The larger States expected to dominate the new government. The smaller States feared that they would not be able to protect their interests. Tempers flared on both sides. The debate became so

[^4]

Debate

Divide the class in half, with one group representing Framers in favor of the Virginia Plan and the other half representing Framers proposing the New Jersey Plan. Have students debate the following questions: How should States be represented in Congress? Should it be on the basis of their populations or financial contributions, or on the basis of State equality? After students have debated, ask them how the Connecticut Compromise finally settled the conflict.

DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET

Distribute the Chapter 2 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 99), which asks students to examine a population chart of the original States and to analyze in detail two issues that led to key constitutional compromises: size of population and slavery.

L1 L2 Differentiate Walk through the lesson as a class, rather than having students work alone.
L4 Differentiate James Madison reported that "The States were divided into different interests not by their differences of size, but principally from them having or not having slaves. . . . It did not lie between the large and small States: it lay between the Northern and Southern." Ask students to write a paragraph about how this difference in interests influenced the framing of the Constitution.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of Enlightenment thinkers' words.

Answers

The Enlightenment and American Government
Locke: purpose of law to protect freedom; Montesquieu: popular sovereignty, representative government; Rousseau: freedom, equality; Blackstone: natural rights

EXTEND THE DISCUSSION

Use these questions to continue a discussion about constitutional compromises:

1. In the Three-Fifths Compromise, the Constitution never uses the words "slave" or "slavery." Instead it refers to "free persons" and "three fifths of all other persons." Why do you think this was so? (Slavery was a contentious issue. Much of the deliberation at the convention was secret, but according to the book Founding Brothers: "If political leaders who had pushed through the constitutional settlement of 1787-1 788 had been permitted to speak, their somewhat awkward conclusion would have been that slaverywas too important and controversial a subject to talk about publicly." [p. 84])
2. What misgivings might each side of the Great Compromise and the Three-Fifths Compromise have held? Did their worries prove historically true? (Small States were worried that they could not protect their interests against the power of large States. States dependent on slavery feared that other States would push through laws banning slavery. The latter fear did prove valid, as sectional rivalries over slavery eventually led to the Civil War.)

Answers

Analyzing Maps Southern States wanted slaves counted for representation but not taxation. To win southern support of commerce power, northern States had to agree to forbid Congress to interfere with the slave trade for 20 years.
Checkpoint agreement establishing a bicameral Congress, with equal representation in the Senate and representation by State population in the House

Slavery in the United States, 1790

- Analyzing Maps The southern States had a larger slave population than did the northern States at the time of the Constitutional Convention. How might this have affected their stance on the Three-Fifths and Commerce and Slave Trade compromises?
intense that Benjamin Franklin was moved to suggest that "henceforth prayers imploring the assistance of Heaven . . . be held in this Assembly every morning before we proceed to business."

ConnecticutCompromise The conflict was settled by a compromise suggested by the Connecticut delegation. In the Connecticut Compromise, it was agreed that Congress should be composed of two houses. In the smaller Senate, the States would be represented equally. In the House, the representation of each State would be based upon its population.

By combining basic features of the plans, the convention's most seriousdispute was resolved. The agreement satisfied the smaller States in particular, allowing them to support the creation of a strong central government.

Checkpoint
What was the Connecticut Compromise?

The Connecticut Compromise was so pivotal to the writing of the Constitution that it has often been called the Great Compromise.

Three-Fifths Compromise Once it had been agreed to base the seats in the House on each State's population, this question arose: Should slaves be counted in figuring the populations of the States?

Again debate was fierce. Most delegates from the southern States argued that slaves should be counted. Most of the northerners took the opposing view. All could see the contradictions between slavery and the sentiments expressed in the Declaration of Independence, but slavery was legal in every State except Massachusetts. The slave population was concentrated in the southern States, however, as you can see from the map on this page.

Finally, the Framers agreed to the ThreeFifths Compromise. It provided that all "free persons" should be counted, and so, too, should "three fifths of all other persons" (Article I, Section 2, Clause 3). For "all other persons," read "slaves." For the three fifths won by the southerners, the northerners exacted a price. That formula was also to be used in fixing the amount of money to be raised in each State by any direct tax levied by Congress. In short, the southerners could count their slaves, but they would have to pay for them.

This odd compromise disappeared from the Constitution with the adoption of the 13th Amendment, abolishing slavery, in 1865. For nearly 150 years, there have been no "all other persons" in this country.

Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise The Framers generally agreed that Congress must have the power to regulate foreign and interstate trade. To many southerners, that power carried a real danger, however. They worried that Congress, likely to be controlled by northern commercial interests, would act against the interests of the agricultural South.

They were particularly fearful that Congress would try to pay for the new government out of export duties, and southern tobacco was the major American export of the time. They also feared that Congress would interfere with the slave trade.

Before they would agree to the commerce power, the southerners insisted on certain protections. So, according to the Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise, Congress was forbidden the power to tax the export of goods from any State. It was also forbidden the power to act on the slave trade for a period of at least 20 years. It could not interfere with "the migration or importation of such persons as any State now existing shall think proper to admit," except for a small head tax, at least until the year $1808 .{ }^{15}$ 15 Article I, Section 9, Clause 1. Congress promptly banned the importation of slaves in 1808, and, in 1820, it declared the slave trade to be piracy. The smuggling of the enslaved into this country continued until the outbreak of the Civil War, however.

Background

william blackstone William Blackstone was no fan of American independence. Yet his Commentaries on the Laws of England would greatly influence America's founding documents, including the Declaration of Independence and Constitution. In his Commentaries, he distilled the vast bulk on English common law into four clearly written, understandable volumes. Once Americans had won their rights on the battlefield, they turned to the Commentaries for a summary of those rights. Readers included John Adams, John Jay, and James Wilson. Despite their disdain for Blackstone's politics, the Framers often referred to his work as they laid the nation's legal foundation.
This information also appears on the Extend Worksheet for Section 4, along with information about other influential philosophers covered in this chapter.

The Connecticut Compromise

"All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." -Article 1, Section 1

FROM THE CONSTITUTION
The Great Compromise The Connecticut delegates Roger Sherman, Oliver Ellsworth, and William Samuel Johnson presented their compromise to the Philadelphia Convention as a means to end the deadlock between supporters of the rival New Jersey and Virginia Plans. The compromise incorporated parts of each plan in order to resolve the dispute over representation.

Constitutional Principles

In what ways did each plan propose to limit the powers of the legislative and executive branches?
$\Delta$ Seated at the table are William Samuel Johnson (lefi) and Roger Sherman at the signing of the Constitution.

A "Bundle of Compromises" The convention spent much of its time, said Franklin, "sawing boards to make them fit." The Constitution drafted at Philadelphia has often been called a "bundle of compromises." Those descriptions are apt, if they are properly understood.

There were differences of opinion among the delegates, certainly. After all, the delegates came from 12 different States widely separated in geographic and economic terms, and the delegates often reflected the particular interests of their own States. Bringing those interests together did require compromise. Indeed, final decisions on issues such as the selection of the President, the treaty-making process, the structure of the national court system, and the amendment process were all reached as a result of compromise.

But by no means did all, or even most, of what shaped the document come from compromises. The Framers were agreed on many of the basic issues they faced. Thus, nearly all the delegates were convinced that a new national government, a federal government, had to be created, and that it had to have the powers necessary to deal with the nation's grave social and economic problems. The Framers were also dedicated to the concepts of popular sovereignty and limited government. None questioned for a moment the wisdom of representative government. The principles of separation of powers and of checks and balances were accepted almost as a matter of course.

Many disputes did occur, and the compromises by which they were resolved came only after hours, days, and even weeks of heated debate. The point here, however, is that the differences were not over the most fundamental of questions. They involved, instead, such vital but lesser points as these: the details of the structure of Congress, the method by which the President was to be chosen, and the practical limits that should be put on the several powers to be given to the new central government.

For several weeks, through the hot Philadelphia summer, the delegates took up resolution after resolution. On September 8, a committee was named "to revise the stile of and arrange the articles which had been agreed to" by the $\frac{\mathrm{apt}}{\mathrm{p}} \mathrm{d}$ adj appropriate, correct, fit

Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson

Display Transparency 2K, Steps in the Establishment of a More Stable Government, as a wrap-up activity. This mid-20th century cartoon depicts the three conventions as steps taking America out of the morass of the Articles of Confederation up to higher, more stable ground with the Constitution. Ask: What do the steps represent? (the three conventions leading to the Constitution) How does the cartoonist depict the Articles of Confederation? Why? (as dark flowing water, to symbolize the instability of the Articles) How does the color of the sky change as Uncle Sam ascends? (from darker to lighter)How does this detail contribute to the message of the cartoon? (America is emerging out of the darkness, or turmoil, under the Articles into a brighter future under the Constitution.)

EXTEND THE LESSON

Display the "Selected Framers of the Constitution" chart on Transparency 2J. Survey students about how many names they recognize. Point out that all these Framers were distinguished in their day. Ask students what similarities they see in their backgrounds. What strengths did they bring to the Philadelphia convention? Assign partners or small groups one of the Framers. Allow time for students to find portraits and biographical information about each Framer. Much of this information is available from the National Archives Web site. They should use the information to create a "yearbook page" for the Framer of their choice. This page should include the following information: the Framer's State and occupation, his contribution to the Constitutional Convention, his attitude toward the different compromises, and his contribution to American politics and government before and after the convention.
L2 Differentiate Assign students one of the more recognizable Framers, who will be easier to research, such as Washington, Franklin, Madison, or Hamilton.
L2 L1 Differentiate For these students, distribute the Extend Activity entitled "We the People" (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 103).
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students review "The Enlightenment and American Government" feature in the text along with the Extend Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 101) on Locke, Montesquieu, Voltaire, Rousseau, and Blackstone. Have students create a chart identifying ideas from each philosopher that contributed to the framing of the Constitution.
L4 Differentiate Ask students how these philosophers would have viewed the process of framing a constitution. Which compromises would these philosophers have found out of step with Enlightenment thinking? Have students write a brief response to these questions from the point of view of one of the philosophers in this group.
L4 Differentiate Have students review the information on the Extend Worksheet about the philosophers. Then students should use the information to make a "superlatives" yearbook page, with categories such as "most likely to" and "best philosopher." Students should come up with the categories and explain them.

Answers

Constitutional Principles Each plan proposed separate branches, each with the power to veto acts of the other two.

Assess and Remediate

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (All-in-One, p. 104)
$L 2$
Section Quiz B (All-in-One, p. 105)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The identities of the  Framers | Divide students into small groups. Give each  group the name and picture of one of the  Framers. Have students create collages by  cutting and pasting words and  writing wordses or  Framer. Display around the picture of their |
| The plages.  promises and com-  Questions 1, 5) | Have groups become experts on one of the  plans or compromises. Then have them  explain it to the rest of the class. |
| The Enlightenment  philosophers | Write the quotes from the philosophers on the  board. Read through each one with students  and simplify any language that may be diffi-  cult to understand. Write next to the quotes a  list of concepts that the Framers derived from  these philosophers. Have the class match the  concept with each philosopher and quote. |

$\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ Why was the Constitucompromises"?
convention. That committee, the Committee of Stile and Arrangement, put the Constitution into its final form. Finally, on September 17, the convention approved its work and 39 names were placed on the finished document. ${ }^{16}$ Because not all of the delegates were willing to sign the Constitution, its final paragraph was very carefully worded to give the impression of unanimity: "Done in Convention by the Unanimous Consent of the States present. . . ."

Perhaps none of the Framers was completely satisfied with their work. Nevertheless, wise old Benjamin Franklin put into words what many of them must have thought on that final day:
"Sir, I agree with this Constitution with all its faults, if they are such; because I think a general Government necessary for us . . . I doubt . . . whether any other Convention we can obtain, may be able to make a better Constitution. For when you assemble a number of men to have the advantage of their joint wisdom, you inevitably assemble with those men, all their prejudices, their passions, their errors of opinion, their local interests, > 16 Three of the 41 delegates present on that last day refused to sign the proposed Constitution: Edmund Randolph of Virginia, who later supported ratification and served as Attorney General and then Secretary of State endder President Washington; Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts, who later became VVice President under Madison; and George Mason of Virginia, who continued to oppose the Constiution until his death in 1792 . George Read of Delaware signed both for himself and for his absent colleague John Dickinson.

and their selfish views. From such an assembly can a perfect production be expected? It therefore astonishes me, Sir, to find this system approaching so near to perfection as it does . . " "
-Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 , James Madison
On Franklin's motion, the Constitution was signed. Madison tells us that

PRIMARY SOURCE

. . . Doctor Franklin, looking towards the President's chair, at the back of which a rising sun happened to be painted, observed to a few members near him, that painters had found it difficult to distinguish in their art a rising sun from a setting sun. 'I have,' said he, 'often and often in the course of the Session . . . looked at that behind the President without being able to tell whether it was rising or setting: But now at length I have the happiness to know that it is a rising and not a setting Sun.'
-Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787, James Madison

1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer this question: What compromises enabled the Framers to create the Constitution?

Key Terms and Comprehension

2. (a) What was the goal of the Framers when they met at Independence Hall? (b) How did that goal change?
3. What was the purpose of keeping the discussions within the Constitutional Convention a secret?

Critical Thinking

4. Test Conclusions The Framers abandoned the Articles of Confederation in favor of an entirely new constitution. Do you agree with their decision? Why or why not?
5. Identify Central Issues Explain the differences between the Virginia Plan and the New Jersey Plan. How were these differences resolved?

Quick Write

Narrative Writing: Choose a Main Idea When writing narrative nonfiction, it is important to have a main idea. This idea will help you stay on track as you write the story of your colony. Look through your notes and write a main idea.

Assessment Answers

1. Connecticut Compromise: bicameral Congress, with States represented equally in the Senate and by population in the House; Three-Fifths Compromise: three fifths of all slaves counted for voting and taxing; Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise: Congress cannot tax exports or interfere with slave trade for at least 20 years
2. (a) to revise the Articles of Confederation
(b) They realized they needed to create an entirely new constitution.
3. The talks were kept secret to encourage the free exchange of ideas and to protect the delegates from outside pressures.
4. Possible response: I agree with the Framers' decision to abandon the Articles. The government set up under it was too weak to sustain a nation. For example, Congress did not have the power to tax, so it could not pay debts. States made their own money, which caused radical inflation.
5. The Virginia Plan called for a bigger central government with a bicameral legislature. Each State would be represented by population or by the amount of money it contributed. The New Jersey Plan proposed a central government with closely limited powers and a unicameral legislature. Each State would be equally represented. The Connecticut Compromise resolved the plans' differences by creating a Congress with two houses. Each State is represented equally in the Senate and by population in the House of Representatives.
QUICK WRITE Students should find a central idea that unites their facts and details into one story.

SECTION 5

Ratifying the Constitution

Guiding Question

What issues aroused the vigorous debate over the ratification of the Constitution? Use an outline like the one below to keep track of the issues debated during ratification.

I. Ratification of the Constitution

A. Federalist Arguments
1.
2.
. Anti-Federalist Arguments
1.
2.

Political Dictionary

- Federalist - Anti-Federalist

Objectives

1. Identify the opposing sides in the fight for ratification and describe the major arguments for and against the proposed Constitution
2. Describe the inauguration of the new government of the United States of America.

Image Above: This poster celebrates the bicentennial of Virginia's ratification of the Constitution.

Today, the Constitution of the United States is the object of unparalleled admiration and respect, both here and abroad. But in 1787 and 1788, it was widely criticized, and in every State there were many who opposed its adoption. The battle over the ratification of the document was not easily decided.

The Fight for Ratification

Remember, the Articles of Confederation provided that changes could be made to them only if all of the State legislatures agreed. But the Framers had determined that the new Constitution would replace, not amend, the Articles. They had seen how crippling the requirement of unanimity could be. So, the new Constitution provided that

FROM THE CONSTITUTION

The ratification of the conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same.

The Congress of the Confederation agreed to this irregular procedure. On September 28, 1787, it sent copies of the new document to the States.

Federalists and Anti-Federalists The Constitution circulated widely and was debated vigorously. Two groups quickly emerged in each of the States: the Federalists, who favored ratification, and the Anti-Federalists, who opposed it.

The Federalists were led by many of those who attended the Philadelphia Convention. Among the most active were James Madison and Alexander Hamilton. The opposition was headed by such well-known Revolutionary War figures as Patrick Henry, Richard Henry Lee, John Hancock, and Samuel Adams.

The Federalists stressed the weaknesses of the Articles. They argued that the many difficulties facing the Republic could be overcome only by the creation of new government based on the Constitution.

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: - The Constitution took effect after 11 States voted for ratification. - The Federalists promoted ratification of the Constitution. - The Anti-Federalists opposed the Constitution for its strong central government and lack of a bill of rights. • Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, and John Jay wrote essays known as the Federalist Papers, supporting the Constitution. • In March 1789, the new Congress convened in New York City, the temporary capital.
CONCEPTS: limited government, compromise
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The Federalists supported a strong central government while the Anti-Federalists opposed increasing the powers of central government.

- The Federalist papers influenced public opinion in favor of ratification.

GUIDING QUESTION

What issues aroused the vigorous debate over ratification of the Constitution?

I. Ratification of the ConstitutionA. Federalist Arguments1. Articles too weak2. strong government needed to solve nation's problems3. liberties protected in State constitutions4. separation of powers would prevent abuseB. Anti-Federalist Arguments1. ratification process flawed2. presidency could become monarchy3. Congress could become too powerful4. lacked bill of rights5. States lacked power to print money

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will. .

- analyze the positions of the Federalists and the Anti-Federalists, using primary sources.
- use primary sources to evaluate arguments in favor of and opposed to a bill of rights.

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 106) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 107)

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS

To help students learn to analyze political cartoons when the class discusses the cartoon in the textbook, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S22, and use the steps explained there.

BELLRINGER

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 1 All-inOne, p. 108). Ask students to study the chart about ratification and answer the questions.

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

INTRODUCE THE TOPIC

Today students will discuss the struggle for ratification of a new constitution and the establishment of a new government. Point out that the table from the Bellringer reflects how contentious and tightly fought the battle for ratification was. Have students share their answers.

DISCUSS

Display Transparency 2L and ask: What important issues divided the Federalists and the Anti-Federalists? (Federalists believed that a strong central government with powers divided among executive, legislative, and judicial branches was necessary to hold the new country together. The Anti-Federalists favored a weaker central government, more power for State governments, and strong protections of individual rights.)
Direct students' attention to the text's cartoon showing columns with State labels. What point is the cartoon making? (The proposed Constitution will form a strong foundation for the nation. If the States don't ratify it, the nation will fail.)
L1 L2 Differentiate Write the Federalist and AntiFederalist positions on the board in a table format.
L4 Differentiate Have students create a cartoon that presents the Anti-Federalist position and answers the cartoon on this page.

DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET

Distribute the Chapter 2 Section 5 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 109), which asks students to analyze primary source excerpts about ratification of the Constitution. Students can work with partners or individually to complete Part 1. After students share their answers, have them complete the ranking activity in Part 2.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the ratification arguments.

Answers

Checkpoint Ratification would require approval of nine instead of all thirteen States.
Two Sides of Ratification The Federalists emphasized the nation as a whole, while the Anti-Federalists wanted to preserve more power for the States.
$\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ What change did the Framers make to the ratification process?

amend

$v$. to change or modify for the better

The Anti-Federalists attacked nearly every part of the document. Many objected to the ratification process. Several worried that the presidency could become a monarchy and that Congress would become too powerful. In Massachusetts, Amos Singletary, a delegate to the ratifying convention, condemned the Federalists:
"These lawyers, and men of learning, and monied men, that talk so finely and gloss over matters so smoothly, to make us poor illiterate people, swallow down the pill, expect to get into Congress themselves; they expect to . . . get all the power and all the money into their own hands, and then they will swallow up all us little folks. just as the whale swallowed up Jonah." ${ }^{17}$
-Amos Singletary
17 S.B. Harding, "The Contest Over the Ratification of the Federal Constitution in the State of Massachusetts," 1896 , as quoted in Carl Van Doren, The Great Rehearsal, 1948.

The lack of one major feature of the proposed Constitution drew the heaviest fire: a bill of rights. The new document did contain some protections of individual rights-for example, a provision for the writ of habeas corpus, which is a protection against arbitrary arrest. The Framers had made no provision for such basic liberties as freedom of speech, press, and religion, however-largely because those matters were covered by the existing State constitutions. They also believed that because the powers to be granted to the new government would be fragmented among three branches, no branch of the government could become powerful enough to threaten the rights of the people.

Everywhere, the Anti-Federalists bore down on the absence of a bill of rights. At Virginia's ratifying convention, Patrick Henry said of the proposed Constitution, "I look on that paper as the most fatal plan that could possibly be conceived to enslave a free

The Federalist/Anti-Federalist Argument Two Sides of Ratification

Both the Federalists and Anti-Federalists felt very strongly about the Constitution. The issue of ratification was fiercely debated in letters, articles, cartoons, and public forums. Read the arguments for each side and the comments of Alexander Hamilton and Patrick Henry. What do the quotations tell about the sentiments of the time?

60
60 Origins of American Government

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 2, Section 5 :
L $\mathbf{L}$ Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 106)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 107)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 108)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 109)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 113)
L3 Quiz A (p. 114) L2 Quiz B (p. 115)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 116)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 119)

Audio Tour
Listen to a guided audio tour of these arguments at PearsonSuccessNet.com

(1) Columns representing the States that had ratified the Constitution are placed in a row by the hand of God. Is this a Federalist or Anti-Federalist cartoon? In which States was ratification won by only a narrow margin?

| Ratification of the |  |  |
| :---: | :---: | :---: |
| Constitution |  |  |
| State | Date | Vote |
| Delaware | Dec. 7, 1787 | 30-0 |
| Pennsylvania | Dec. 12, 1787 | 46-23 |
| New Jersey | Dec. 18, 1787 | 38-0 |
| Georgia | Jan. 2, 1788 | 26-0 |
| Connecticut | Jan. 9, 1788 | 128-40 |
| Massachusetts | Feb. 6, 1788 | 187-168 |
| Maryland | April 28, 1788 | 63-11 |
| South Carolina | May 23, 1788 | 149-73 |
| New Hampshire | June 21, 1788 | 57-46 |
| Virginia | June 25, 1788 | 89-79 |
| New York | July 26, 1788 | 30-27 |
| North Carolina* | Nov. 21, 1789 | 195-77 |
| Rhode Island | May 29, 1790 | 34-32 |
| *Second vote; ratifi August 4, 1788, by a | was originally def of 184-84. |  |

people." Stung by the criticism, the Federalists promised that the Constitution, once adopted, would be amended to overcome this fault.

Over the course of the struggle for ratification, an extraordinary number of essays, speeches, letters, and other commentaries were printed. Of them all, the most remarkable were a series of 85 essays that first appeared in various newspapers in New York in the fall of 1787 on into the spring of 1788 . Those essays, supporting the Constitution, were written by Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, and John Jay, and they were soon published in book form as The Federalist: A Commentary on the Constitution ofthe United States. All of the essays bore the pen name "Publius" (Latin for "Public Man"), and they were reprinted throughout the 13 States. They remain an excellent commentary on the Constitution and rank among the finest of all political writings in the English language.

The Anti-Federalists' attacks were also published widely. Among the best of their works were several essays usually attributed to Robert Yates, who had been one of New York's delegates to the Philadelphia Convention; they were signed by "Brutus" and appeared in the New York Journal at the same time that the paper carried several of the Federalist essays. The Anti-Federalists' views were also presented in pamphlets and letters written by Richard Henry Lee of Virginia, who used the pen name "The Federal Farmer."

Nine States Ratify Ratification came fairly quickly in a few States and only after a bitter struggle in others. Delaware was the first to approve the Constitution, on December 7 . Pennsylvania followed five days later. In Pennsylvania, however, where the legislature had been slow to call a ratifying convention, several Federalists, angered by Anti-Federalist delays, took matters into their own hands. They broke into a Philadelphia boarding house, seized two legislators hiding there, and forcibly marched them to the State house so the assembly could vote to schedule the convention.

The contest for ratification was close in several States, but the Federalists finally prevailed in all of them. On June 21, 1788, New Hampshire brought the number of ratifying States to nine.

Under Article VII, New Hampshire's ratification should have brought the Constitution into effect, but it did not. Neither Virginia nor New York had yet ratified. Without either of those key States the new government could not hope to succeed.

Virginia's Ratification Virginia's vote for ratification followed New Hampshire's by just four days. The brilliant debates in its convention were followed closely throughout the Checkpoint Why did the Framers not include a bill of rights in the original Constitution?

Constitutional Principles

federalism and states' rights The delegates to the Constitutional Convention agreed on the fundamental principle of federalism-power divided between the central government and the States. But controversy emerged over how much power each should have. Anti-Federalists preferred more power to the States, a position later known as States' rights. States' rights advocates favored limiting the powers of the National Government to those specifically assigned to it in the Constitution. The States would retain all powers not explicitly forbidden them. This controversy would not be solved with ratification of the new Constitution. Because the issue of States' rights was tightly intertwined with slavery, it would continue to cause heated debate and violent clashes, culminating in the Civil War. Today, States' rights advocates try to limit national power through strict interpretation of the terms in the Constitution.

L2 Differentiate The excerpts by Thomas Jefferson and Charles Cotesworth Pinckney are most appropriate for lower-level students. Have them work with partners or in small groups to read these two excerpts and answer the questions.
L2 ELL Differentiate Preview vocabulary from the Jefferson and Pinckney excerpts to support student comprehension: omission (lack); unremitting (never stopping); are entitled to (deserve); insertion (addition); consists (is made of).

$\llcorner 4$

Differentiate Have students write an editoria that would appear in the Providence Journal on May 28,1790 , the day before Rhode Island voted for ratification. The editorial should argue one of the following points: (1) The Constitution should be ratified with a bill of rights. (2) The Constitution should be ratified without a bill of rights.

EXTEND THE LESSON

Have partners research the positions expressed in either the Federalist or Anti-Federalist papers on one of these issues: checks and balances, reserved powers, absence of the mention of God in the Constitution, the denial of the power to print money, or the power of the presidency. If the position resulted in a compromise or resolution, they should explain that as well. Encourage partners to share and compare their findings on their issue.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "Influence of the Press" (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 113).

Answers

Interpreting Tables Federalist cartoon; Rhode Island, New York, Virginia
Checkpoint They believed liberties were protected by the State constitutions.

Assess and Remediate

L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 5 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (All-in-One, p. 114)
L2 Section Quiz B (All-in-One, p. 115)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION

| If Your Students  Have Trouble With | Strategies  For Remediation |
| :--- | :--- |
| The Federalist and Anti-  Federalist arguments  (Questions 2, 3, 4) | Hold a debate, in which one group takes  the side of the Federalists and the other  group takes the side of the Anti-Federalists.  Act as mediator to keep students on track. |
| The ratification process  (Question 5) | List the States in no particular order. As  a class, create a timeline on the board,  plotting when each State ratified the  Constitution. |

$\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ Why was New York such a key ratification State?
inauguration
n. a ceremonial induction into office

quorum

n. a majority

unanimous  adj. having the approval or consen

State. The Federalists were led by Madison, John Marshall, and Governor Edmund Randolph (even though he had refused to sign the Constitution at Philadelphia). Patrick Henry, leading the opposition, was joined by James Monroe, Richard Henry Lee, and George Mason (another of the nonsigners).

Although George Washington was not one of the delegates to Virginia's convention, his strong support for ratification proved vital. With Madison, he was able to get a reluctant Thomas Jefferson to support the document. Had Jefferson fought as did other Anti-Federalists, Virginia might never have ratified the Constitution.

New York, The Last Key State In New York, the ratifying convention was bitterly divided. The Anti-Federalists were led by Governor George Clinton and two of the State's three delegates to the Philadelphia convention: Robert Yates and John Lansing, who had quit Philadelphia in late July, claiming that the convention had gone beyond its authority.

New York's approval of the Constitution was absolutely necessary, for that large commercial State effectively separated New England from the rest of the nation. Its ratification of the Constitution, on July 26, brought the number of ratifying States to 11 . The victory there was largely won by Alexander Hamilton.

Inauguration

On September 13, 1788, with 11 of the 13 States "under the federal roof," the Congress of the Confederation paved the way for its successor. ${ }^{18}$ It chose New York City as the temporary capital. ${ }^{19}$ It set the first Wednesday in January as the date on which the States would choose presidential electors. The first Wednesday in February was set as the date on which those electors would vote, and the first Wednesday in March as the date for the inauguration of the new government.

The new Congress convened on March 4, 1789. It met in Federal Hall, on Wall Street in New York City. But because it lacked a quorum, it could not count the electoral votes until April 6. Finally, on that day, it found that George Washington had been elected President by a unanimous vote. John Adams was elected Vice President by a large majority.

On April 30, after a historic trip from Mount Vernon to New York, Washington took the oath of office as the first President of the United States.

[^5]
Answers

Checkpoint New York was a large commercial State that effectively separated New England from the rest of the nation.

Critical Thinking

4. Identify Point of View Reread the quote by Amos Singletary in this section. According to Singletary, why did the Federalists support ratifying the Constitution?
5. Make Inferences Recall Virginia's role in writing the Declaration of Independence and in the Second Continental Congress. Why do you think it was important for Virginia to ratify the Constitution?

Quick Write

Narrative Writing: Create an Outline When writing a narrative nonfiction piece, it helps to have an outline of your thoughts and ideas. Create an outline using your main ideas and supporting details. Revise your outline as needed to make sure that the story progresses in an interesting and clear way.

Assessment Answers

1. Federalists and Anti-Federalists divided over these key issues: how much power to give the central government versus the States, how to prevent the president or Congress from becoming too powerful, and whether or not the Constitution needed a bill of rights to protect individual liberties.
2. The Anti-Federalists feared that a presidency would become a monarchy.
3. A bill of rights guarantees citizens certain basic rights, such as the right to free speech and the right to a fair trial. These rights were not guaranteed explicitly in the Constitution itself, and some feared that their basic rights could, therefore, be threatened.
4. Singletary accused the Federalists of using the ratification of the Constitution to satisfy their own ends. He feared that the Federalists would use their victory as a way to gain power and money from the new government.
5. Virginia played an important role in calling for the Constitutional Convention and in creating the Constitution itself. Several of America's most prominent leaders were Virginians, including George Washington, James Madison, and Thomas Jefferson, the author of the DecIaration of Independence. Because Virginia was so large and influential, the new government needed Virginia's support to succeed.
QUICK WRITE Students' outlines should tell a clear and comprehensive story of their State.

Key Documents

| Declaration of |
| :--- |
| Independence: Key Facts |
| In 1776, the Second |
| Continental Congress |
| approved the Declaration |
| of Independence. |
| Written by Thomas |
| Jefferson, the Declaration |
| proclaimed the natural |
| rights of all citizens, and |
| outlined how the king had |
| violated those rights. |
| With the approval of |
| the Declaration, the |
| 13 colonies became free |
| and independent States. |

Political Dictionary

limited government p. 3 representative government $p$. 31 Magna Carta p. 37 due process p. 31 Petition of Right $p$. 31 English Bill of Rights p. 31 charter p. 33 bicameral $p .33$ proprietary p. 33 unicameral p. 34 confederation p. 37 Albany Plan of Union p. 37 delegate $p .37$ popular sovereignty $p .41$ Articles of Confederation p. 48 ratification $p .48$
Framers p. 52
Virginia Plan p. 54
New Jersey Plan p. 55
Connecticut Compromise p. 56 Three-Fifths Compromise p. 56 Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise p. 56
Federalist $p .59$
Anti-Federalist $p .59$

The Road to the Constitution

The Connecticut Compromise: A bicameral Congres with each State equally represented in the Senate and represented by population in the House

The Three-Fifths Compromise Three fifths of the slave population was counted for representation in the House and for taxation.

The Constitution was hotly debated by Federalists and Anti-Federalists. The Virginia Plan: A bicameral Congress with representation based on population or the amount of money each State contributed to Congress each year Al-Federalists.

1215: Magna Carta
1628: Petition of Right
1689: English Bill of Rights
1765: Parliament passes the Stamp Act. 1774: The First Continental Congress meets. 1775: The American Revolution begins. 1776: The Declaration of Independence 1777: Articles of Confederation approved.

1787: The Framers sign the Constitution. 1789: The Constitution takes effect.

For More Information

To learn more about the origins of American government, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Fradin, Dennis Brindell. The Founders: The 39 Stories Behind the U.S. Constitution. Walker Books for Young Readers, 2005.
L2 Jordan, Terry L. The U.S. Constitution: And Fascinating Facts About It. Oak Hills Publishing Company, 1999.
L3 Ellis, Joseph. Founding Brothers: The Revolutionary Generation. Vintage Books, 2002.

L4 Shaara, Jeff. Rise to Rebellion. Ballantine Books, 2001.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

STUDY TIPS

Choosing a Place to Study Explain to students that where they study can be as important as how they study. A good study spot has several important features. It should be a quiet place, with a minimum of distractions. Distractions can come in many forms, including noise, conversation, visitors, and telephone calls. Studying in a place where temptations to play video or computer games exist can make it harder to concentrate. Instead, students should choose a spot in which there is little else to do besides study. In addition, the study area should have good lighting and not be too comfortable. Studying in bed can prompt even those with the best intentions to drop off to sleep! Have students make a list of five possible study spots and ask them to try each one. Have them rate each spot on a scale from one to ten.

ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE

Tests and Quizzes

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

Performance Assessment

Essential Questions Journal
Extend the Lesson, p. 56
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

Chapter Assessment

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

SECTION 1

1. (a) Ordered government: When the colonists first arrived, they saw the need to regulate relationships among one another. They created governments like they had known in England. Limited government: People have certain rights that cannot be taken away, and the government's power is restricted. Representative government: Government may rule only with the consent of the people. (b) The colonists rebelled against taxation without representation and what they saw as violations of their rights by the British government. These ideas formed the basis of the Articles of Confederation and the Constitution.
2. (a) Magna Carta: trial by jury, due process, private property (b) Petition of Right: king may not punish citizens without trial by peers, declare martial law in peacetime, require homeowners to house troops without their consent, or impose taxes without act of Parliament (c) English Bill of Rights: no standing army in peacetime; free parliamentary elections; king may not suspend laws or levy taxes without consent of Parliament; subjects have right to petition king; right to a fair trial; freedom from excessive bail or fines and from cruel and unusual punishment; right to bear arms
3. In royal colonies, the colonists elected the lower house, but the king or his appointed governor could strike down any laws passed. This lack of power to shape their own laws led to resentment.

SECTION 2

4. This kind of government is representative government.
5. (a) high tax rates and taxation without representation (b) The colonists had no representatives in Parliament and therefore no say in the tax laws imposed on them.
6. (a) as wild and bucking, trying to throw off its rider (b) as wild and uncontrollable

SECTION 3

7. (a) make war and peace, send and receive ambassadors, make treaties, borrow money, set up a money system, establish post offices, build a navy, raise an army by asking the States for troops, fix uniform standards of weights and measures, settle disputes among States. (b) The States began to make treaties with foreign coun-

Comprehension and Critical Thinking

Section 1

1. (a) Name and explain the three concepts of government that the English brought with them to the colonies. (b) How did these ideas shape the creation of the 13 colonies?
2. Describe the limitations on the monarchy imposed by these documents: (a) the Magna Carta, (b) the Petition of Right, (c) the English Bill of Rights.
3. In the royal colonies, why might the colonists resent the "stern hand" of a royal governor?

Section 2

4. The Declaration of Independence states, "Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." What kind of government is this?
5. (a) What were the complaints of the Stamp Act Congress? (b) What was meant by "taxation without representation"?
6. Analyze Political Cartoons Look at the cartoon below. (a) How has the artist drawn the horse "America"? (b) How does this reflect British attitudes toward the American colonies?

Section 3
7. (a) Explain the responsibilities of Congress under the Articles of Confederation. (b) Which of these responsibilities were taken over by the States? (c) Why did this cause a problem?

Section 4
8. (a) Why did the Framers consider it necessary to replace the Articles of Confederation? (b) What obstacles did they face in creating a strong central government?
9. How did the Constitution improve upon the Articles of Confederation? Give examples from the text.
10. Look at the population density map in Section 4 and reread the paragraphs concerning the Three-Fifths Compromise. Why, in addition to moral reasons, might the northern States have wished to abolish slavery?

Section 5

11. (a) Why was a bill of rights excluded from the original Constitution? (b) Why might the Anti-Federalists have wanted a bill of rights included at the national level?

Writing About Government

12. Use your Quick Write exercises to write a narrative nonfiction piece about a State's role in the formation of the national government. Make sure that you use your outline as the frame of your story. Include interesting details and anecdotes wherever possible. See pp. S1-S2 in the Skills Handbook.

Apply What You've Learned

13. Essential Question Activity Research a recently created constitution for a foreign nation or international association.
(a) Identify the writer(s) of the constitution, and what their qualifications were.
(b) Research the process through which the constitution was created. How did the writers decide on what to include? What did they think were the most important rights to protect?
(c) Did the constitution go through a ratification process? How was the process conducted?
14. Essential Question Assessment Based on your research and this chapter, make a chart comparing the process used to create the U.S. Constitution with a more recently written constitution. This comparison will help you answer the Essential Question: How does the Constitution reflect the times in which it was written? Include details such as the concerns of the creators, and the process of ratification in your chart.

| Essential Questions |  |
| :---: | :--- |
| Journal | To respond to the chapter Essential  Question, go to your Essential  Questions Journal. |

64 Chapter 2 Assessment
tries, make their own money, and settle disputes among themselves. (c) Foreign countries began to see the States, not the nation, as sovereign, weakening national unity. Trade disputes among States and unrestrained production of money led to inflation and economic chaos. Sound credit vanished and debts went unpaid. Violence broke out in many places.

SECTION 4

8. (a) The central government was too weak to solve the nation's problems. (b) reconciling a diversity of opinions, overcoming State and sectional biases, overcoming fear of a strong central government after just throwing off the oppressive British government
9. The Constitution created a more powerful central government. It gave the federal government the power to tax and to regulate foreign and interstate commerce. Tax revenue would enable the federal government to operate without depending on State funding. The commerce power would reduce trade disputes among States and provide national unity in dealing with foreign nations. The Constitution also established three separate branches of government, creating

Document-Based Assessment

The Constitution and the Revolutionary War Era

The Declaration of Independence espoused the highest principles of Enlightenment thinking. However, a significant percent of the new nation's population remained disenfranchised under their new Constitution. The text below refers to two of those groups.

DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT

1. C
2. The War for Independence touted the ideals liberty and equality for all. However, slaves were not included in these ideals. While many people opposed slavery, the Framers saw it as a necessary evil they could not address at that time.
3. Students' answers should give a clear opinion, supported by what they have learned in the chapter.

L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.

L3
Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.
checks and balances, and established fair State representation in Congress.
10. Most slaves lived in the South. Under the compromise, three fifths of a State's slave population counted toward the total popuIation. This allowed States like Virginia to send more representatives to Congress. The North may have wanted to abolish slavery to gain more representatives and thus more power in Congress.

SECTION 5

11. (a) The Framers believed that State constitutions already protected basic rights and that separation of powers would prevent government from becoming powerful enough to threaten people's rights. (b) to ensure that this new, stronger central government would not overstep its powers, as Britain had

writing about government

12. Students should combine their research and outline to write a short narrative piece about a State's role in creating the new American government.

APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED

13. Students should thoroughly research the process of writing the constitution of another country. Students may want to look back at Issues of Our Time for ideas.
14. The Constitution is a collection of the beliefs and laws of England, philosophies of the Enlightenment, and solutions to grievances against the Crown that led to the American Revolution. Students should use their research on a more recently written constitution to compare the process to that of the U.S. Constitution. They should explain how the constitution they researched reflects its times.

Introduce the Chapter

Essential Questions:

UNIT 1

What should be the goals of government?

CHAPTER 3

How has the Constitution lasted through changing times?

ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE

Have students examine the photo and quotation. Ask: What do the photo and quotation suggest about the Constitution? (The historical principles on which the Constitution was created provided guidance for the Framers. ) In this chapter, students will learn about the articles and amendments that make up the Constitution, as well as how the Constitution is changed and interpreted. Tell students to explore the Constitution by completing the Chapter 3 Essential Question Warmup Activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

BEFORE READING

L2
ELL Differentiate Chapter 3 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 129)

SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

ANALYZE SOURCES

You may wish to teach analyzing sources as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 3 Skills Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 149) to help students learn the steps in analyzing sources. The worksheet asks students to read source excerpts about women's suffrage and then answer questions about the sources. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 150).

[^6]

Block Scheduling

BLock 1: Teach Section 1, omitting the Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson.
block 2: Teach Sections 2 and 3, choosing either the Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson or the Debate in Section 2.

Lesson Goals

SECTION 1

Students will

- identify a key problem facing the Framers, as expressed from different viewpoints in two primary source quotes.
- define the six basic principles around which the Constitution is built.
- read the Constitution and identify where in the document the basic principles are reflected.

SECTION 2

Students will

- compare the process of ratification of amendments by studying a chart.
- examine the meaning of several amendments by creating and performing a skit.
- debate the merits of three unsuccessful amendments, using primary sources.

SECTION 3

Students will

- identify the informal methods of change used in example scenarios.
- apply the informal methods of change by writing example scenarios.

Pressed for Time

To cover this chapter quickly, explain the six basic principles of the Constitution, and have students work through the Section 1 Reading Comprehension Worksheet. Use the chart in Section 2 of the textbook to describe the methods of formal amendment. Then have students work through the Section 2 Bellringer Worksheet and the Section 2 Core Worksheet. Finally, distribute the Section 3 Core Worksheet to students, and work through it with them to identify the methods of change by other means.

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

GUIDING QUESTION

What are the six main principles on which the Constitution is based?

Get Started

LESSON GOALS

Students will

- identify a key problem facing the Framers, as expressed from different viewpoints in two primary source quotes.
- define the six basic principles around which the Constitution is built.
- read the Constitution and identify where in the document the basic principles are reflected.

BEFORE CLASS

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 133) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 135)

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

PROBLEM SOLVING

Guiding Question
What are the six main principles on which the Constitution is based? Use a concept web like the one below to take notes on the six basic principles of the Constitution.

Political Dictionary

- popular
- checks and sovereignty balances
- limited
- veto
- judicial review
- constitutionalism
- unconstitutional
- rule of law
- federalism
- separation of powers

Objectives

1. Understand the basic outline of the Constitution.
2. Understand the six basic principles of the Constitution: popular sovereignty, limited government separation of powers, checks and balances, judicial review, and federalism.

Image Above: Voters express their will to the government. This concept is called popular sovereignty.

The Constitution of the United States dates from the latter part of the eighteenth century. Written in 1787, it took effect in 1789 . The fact that it is more than 220 years old does not mean, however, that in the twenty-first century, it is only an interesting historical artifact, best left to museums and dusty shelves. On the contrary, it remains a vitally important and vibrant document.

The Constitution is this nation's fundamental law. It is, by its own terms, "the supreme Law of the Land"-the highest form of law in the United States.

An Outline of the Constitution

The Constitution sets out the basic principles upon which government in the United States was built and operates today. The document lays out the ways in which the Federal Government is organized, how the leaders of that government are selected, and many of the procedures those leaders must follow as they perform their duties. Of utmost importance, it sets out the limits within which government must conduct itself.

The Constitution also lays out the basic rules of American politics. By doing so, it helps to determine who wins and who loses in the political arena. To really understand government and politics in this country, we must know a good deal about the Constitution and how it has been interpreted and applied thoughout our history.

Even with its 27 amendments, the Constitution is a fairly brief document. Its little more than 7,000 words can be read in half an hour. You will find the text of the Constitution at the beginning of the book. As you read it, remember that this document has successfully guided this nation through more than two centuries of tremendous growth and change. One of the Constitution's greatest strengths is that it deals largely with matters of basic principle. Unlike most other constitutions-those of the 50 States and those of other nations-the Constitution of the United States is not weighted down with detailed and cumbersome provisions.

As you read the Constitution, you will also see that it is organized in a simple and straightforward way. It begins with a short introduction, the Preamble. The balance of the original document is divided into seven numbered Before students do the Bellringer activity, you may want to review tips on problem solving in the Skills Handbook, p. S17.

Focus on the Basics

FACTS: - The Constitution is the supreme law of the land. - It sets the framework of government. - The people are sovereign and government is limited. - The Constitution distributes powers among three branches of government. • Each branch has the power to check the other branches.
CONCEPTS: separation of powers, popular sovereignty, federalism, limited government, judicial review, checks and balances, constitutionalism, rule of law ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Constitution has guided American government for more than 200 years. - The Constitution is based on six principles: limited government, popular sovereignty, separation of powers, checks and balances, judicial review, and federalism.
sections called articles. The first three articles deal with the three branches of the National Government: Congress, the presidency, and the federal court system. These articles outline the basic organization and powers of each branch, and the methods by which the members of Congress, the President and Vice President, and federal judges are chosen. Article IV deals mostly with the place of the States in the American Union and their relationships with the National Government and with one another. Article V indicates how formal amendments may be added to the document. Article VI declares that the Constitution is the nation's supreme law; Article VII provided for the ratification of the Constitution.

The seven articles of the original document are followed by 27 amendments, printed in the order in which each provision was adopted.

The Constitution is built around six basic principles. They are popular sovereignty, limited government, separation of powers, checks and balances, judicial review, and federalism.

Popular Sovereignty

In the United States, all political power resides in the people, a concept known as popular sovereignty. The people are the only source for any and all governmental power. Government can govern only with the consent of the governed.

The principle of popular sovereignty is woven throughout the Constitution. In its opening words-the Preamble-that document declares: "We the People of the United States . . . do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

The people have given the United States Government whatever powers it has, through the Constitution. That government exercises those powers through popularly elected leaders who are chosen by the people to represent them in the exercise of the people's power.

Limited Government

The principle of limited government holds that no government is all-powerful. That government may do only those things that the people have given it the power to do.

Checkpoint What is the purpose of the Preamble of the Constitution?
political arena $n$. the setting in which political activity occurs provision $n$. a clause in a document or agreement

The Seven Articles Outline of Government

Differentiated Resources

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 3, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 129)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 133)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 135)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 137)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 139)
L3 Quiz A (p. 141)
L2 Quiz B (p. 142)

BELLRINGER

Display Transparency 3A, A Question of Power, showing quotations from both a Federalist and an Anti-Federalist perspective. Write on the board:
(1) What problem do both of these quotations address? (2) Which of the six principles help to solve this problem? Answer in your notebook.
L2 ELL Differentiate Define these words on the board to help students understand the quotes: denied (declared untrue), encroaching (intruding), effectually (effectively), restrained (limited), assigned (given), discriminating (noting differences in), invasion (intrusion), vested in (given to), annihilate (destroy), absorb (swallow up), consolidated (combined), iron-handed (powerful), despotism (tyranny), and supremacy (domination).

Teach

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

INTRODUCE THE TOPIC

Tell students that today they will discuss the six important ideas upon which the Constitution is based. You will return to their Bellringer answers later in the lesson.

Answers

Checkpoint to state the Constitution's purpose The Seven Articles to lay out the powers of the three branches: legislative, executive, and judicial

DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET

Distribute the Chapter 3 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 137), which lists the six principles. Display Transparencies 3C, Popular Sovereignty and Limited Government, 3D, Separation of Powers and Checks and Balances, and 3E, Judicial Review and Federalism, and ask students to interpret each cartoon. Have students offer definitions of the principles in a brainstorming session. Write down a definition next to each principle and have students record these on the Core Worksheet. (Possible definitions are shown in the Core Worksheet solutions. )

L1 L2 Differentiate Have students label six index cards with one principle on each card. In pairs, have them write a simple definition of each term on the back of the card. Ask students to share their definitions and try to reach a consensus about each one. Based on this discussion, write a definition on the board for them to record on the Core Worksheet. They may keep these cards to refer to throughout their study of American government.
L4 Differentiate Ask students to think of an example of each principle in action.

Answers

Basic Principles of the Constitution judicial branch: to act as a check on the other branches and to be the referees who determine when the government has overstepped the bounds of the Constitution; citizens: to communicate their will to the government and to keep the government in check

Basic Principles of the Constitution

These cartoons illustrate the six principles of government, some of which are explained on the following pages. According to the cartoons, what is the role of the judicial branch? What are the roles of citizens?

enshrined
v. set out with respect;
honored prohibition
n. a denial; a ban

In effect, the principle of limited government is the other side of the coin of popular sovereignty. It is that principle stated the other way around: The people are the only source of any and all of government's authority; and government has only that authority the people have given to it.

The concept of limited government can be put another way: Government must obey the law. Stated this way, the principle is often called constitutionalism-that is, government must be conducted according to constitutional principles. The concept of limited government is also frequently described as the rule of law, which holds that government and its officers, in all that they do, are always subject to-never above-the law.

In large part, the Constitution is a statement of limited government. Much of it reads as prohibitions of power to government. For example, notice the Constitution's guarantees of freedom of expression. Those great guarantees-of freedom of religion, of speech, of the press, of assembly, and of petition-are vital to democratic government. They are enshrined in the 1st Amendment, which begins with the words: "Congress shall make no law. . . ."

Separation of Powers

Recall from Chapter 1 that in a parliamentary system, the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of government are all gathered in the hands of a single agency. British government is a leading example of the form. In a presidential system, these basic powers are distributed-separated-among three distinct and independent branches of the government.

This concept is known as separation of powers. The idea had been written into each of the State constitutions adopted during the Revolution. A classic expression of the doctrine can be found in the Massachusetts constitution written in 1780 (Part the First, Article XXX ):
"In the government of this commonwealth, the legislative department shall never

Myths and Misconceptions

POPULAR SOVEREIGNTY Not every Framer enthusiastically embraced the great principle of popular sovereignty set forth in the Constitution. In fact, the idea of granting the people as a whole too much say in government frightened many of them. Alexander Hamilton, for example, wrote that the "turbulent and changing" opinions of the masses "seldom judge or determine right," and referred to the "imprudence of democracy." Thomas Jefferson held a different opinion, however. "I know no safe depository of the ultimate powers of the society but the people themselves," he wrote in 1820, "and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them, but to inform their discretion by education. This is the true corrective of abuses of constitutional power."

Checks and Balances

Judicial Review

Federalism
exercise the executive and judicial powers, or either of them: The executive shall never exercise the legislative and judicial powers, or either of them: The judicial shall never exercise the legislative and executive powers, or either of them: to the end it may be a government of laws and not of men."

The Constitution of the United States distributes the powers of the National Government among the Congress (the legislative branch), the President (the executive branch), and the courts (the judicial branch). This separation of powers is clearly set forth in the opening words of each of the first three Articles of the Constitution.

Article I, Section 1 declares: "All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States. . . ." Thus, Congress is the lawmaking branch of the National Government.

Article II, Section 1 declares: "The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America." Thus, the President is given the law-executing, law enforcing, and law-administering powers of the National Government.

Article III, Section 1 declares: "The judicial Power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Thus, the federal courts, and most importantly the Supreme Court, interpret and apply the laws of the United States in cases brought before them.

Remember, the Framers intended to create a stronger central government for the United States. Yet they also intended to limit the powers of that government. The doctrine of separation of powers was designed to accomplish just that.

In The Federalist, No. 47, James Madison wrote of this arrangement: "The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many ... may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny."

The earliest of the State constitutions provided for a separation of powers among the $\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}$ How does the separation of powers kepa tion of powers k government from

Constitutional Principles

GOVERNMENT BY THE PEOPLE Our representative government arises from the principle of popular sovereignty. The people exercise their sovereignty by electing representatives to carry out their will. However, the Constitution left the decision of who could vote up to the States. The Constitution says only that those entitled to vote for the "most numerous Branch of the State Legislature" can also vote for members of the House of Representatives (Article I, Section 2, Clause 1). At first, our government represented only some of the people, for the States allowed only white male property owners to vote. Hard times in the early nineteenth century led men to demand an end to the property requirement. Over time, immigrants, African Americans, Native Americans, and women gained voting rights, creating a government more truly "by the people. "

MAKE CONNECTIONS

Ask students to review the list of six basic principles and identify patterns. Ask: What issues do the principles address, as a group? (Possible answer: All six principles are concerned with the power of government, with limiting that power, with protecting individual rights and States' rights, and with preventing abuse and corruption of power. ) Then ask them to think back to what they know about the causes of the Revolutionary War and the weaknesses of the Articles of Confederation. Ask: What experiences made the Framers build these six principles into the Constitution? (Possible answer: King George undermined the colonial judiciary and suspended their legislatures; he imposed taxes without representation, abolished laws arbitrarily, and deprived colonists of jurytrials; under the Articles of Confederation, Congress was the sole body created; there was no executive or judicial branch; the Congress itself was hobbled by restrictions on its power.)
Finish by asking students to read their Bellringer answers aloud. (1. Both quotes address the problem of preventing the central government from becoming too powerful. 2. limited government, separation of powers, checks and balances, federalism)

ANALYZE THE CONSTITUTION

Explain that students will be using the Constitution itself as a primary source to find where in the document the major principles are reflected. Remind them that the principle of judicial review does not appear specifically in the Constitution. However, Federalist writings suggest that the Framers intended for the federal courts to have this power. Direct students to the Constitution reproduced in the textbook. Have them work in pairs to find statements in the Constitution that relate to each principle, and record the locations in the Core Worksheet. Then call on partners to share their responses for each section.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students work in small groups. Assign each group one principle to locate in the Constitution. Call on groups to present information about their principle to the class.
L4 Differentiate Have students work individually to find as many places as possible where each principle is addressed.
Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive version of Basic Principles of the Constitution.

Answers

Checkpoint by preventing the concentration of legislative, executive, and judicial powers in one group

EXTEND THE LESSON

L3
Differentiate Use these questions to continue students' search of and discussion about the Constitution.

1. Which section and clause of Article I contains the Three-Fifths Compromise? (Section 2, Clause 3) What other compromise related to slavery appears in Article I? In what Section and Clause is it located? (Section 9, Clause 1: Congress may not interfere with the importation of enslaved people until 1 808.) Why did the Framers include these compromises in Article I? (The Three-Fifths Compromise relates to representation in the House of Representatives, the subject of Article I. The agreement that Congress would not interfere with the slave trade helped to win the South's agreement to the Three-Fifths Compromise.)
2. What military power does Article II grant the President? (Commander in Chief)
3. According to Article III, how long is the term for a federal judge? (for life) Why do you think the Framers saw fit to make the terms of judges different from those of other offices? (probablyto allow judges to make objective decisions, free of the influence of politics and public opinion)
4. Which section of Article IV deals with the formation of new States? (Section 3)
5. According to Article V, what fraction of the States must approve an amendment before it becomes part of the Constitution? (two thirds)
6. What is the purpose of Article VI, Section 2? (to establish the Constitution as the supreme law of the land)

Checkpoint Name one of the ways in which the President can check the powers of Congress.
override
$v$. to overturn, reverse, cancel partisan
n. loyalty to a particular political party
legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the new governments they established. This was a reflection of the mistrust and suspicion toward any government common to the people of the new United States in the late 1700 s . Thus, the inclusion of the doctrine of separation of powers was both natural and inevitable in the writing of the Constitution.

Checks and Balances

The National Government is organized around three separate branches. As you have just seen, the Constitution gives to each branch its own field of governmental authority: legislative, executive, and judicial.

These three branches are not entirely separated nor completely independent of one another. Rather, they are tied together by a complex system of checks and balances. This means that each branch is subject to a number of constitutional checks, or restraints, by the other branches. In other words, each branch has certain powers with which it can check the operations of the other two.

Congress has the power to make laws, but the President may veto (reject) any act of Congress. In its turn, Congress can override a presidential veto by a two-thirds vote in each house. Congress can refuse to provide funds requested by the President, or the Senate may refuse to approve a treaty or an appointment made by the President. The chief executive is the commander in chief of the armed forces, but Congress provides that military force; and so on.

The system of checks and balances links the judicial branch to the legislative and the executive branches. The President has the power to name all federal judges. Each appointment, however, must be approved by a majority vote in the Senate. At the same time, the courts have the power to determine the constitutionality of acts of Congress and of presidential actions, and to strike down those they find unconstitutional.

Head-on clashes between the branches of government do not often happen. The check-andbalance system operates all the time, however, and in routine fashion. The very fact that it exists affects much of what happens in Washington, D.C.

For example, when the President picks someone to serve in some important office in the executive branch-as, say, secretary of state or director of the Office of National Intelligence-the President is quite aware that the Senate must confirm that appointment. So, the chief executive is apt to pick someone who very likely will be approved by the Senate. In a similar sense, when Congress makes a law, it does so with a careful eye on both the President's veto power and the power of the courts to review its actions Spectacular clashes-direct applications of the check-and-balance system-do sometimes occur, of course. The President does veto some acts of Congress. On rare occasions, Congress does override a veto. And, even more rarely, the Senate does reject a Presidential appointee. Twice in our history, the House of Representatives has impeached (brought charges against) a President, seeking his removal: Andrew Johnson in 1868 and Bill Clinton in 1998. On both occasions the President was acquitted by the Senate.

But, again, these and other direct confrontations are not common. Congress, the President, and even the courts try to avoid them. The check-and-balance system makes compromise necessaryand, remember, compromise is a vital part of democratic government.

Over time, the check-and-balance system has worked quite well. It has done what the Framers intended it to do; it has prevented "an unjust combination of a majority." At the same time, the system of checks and balances has not often forestalled a close working relationship between the executive and legislative branches of the Federal Government.

Note, however, that that working relationship runs more smoothly when the President and a majority in both houses of Congress are of the same political party. When the other party controls one or both houses, partisan friction and conflict play a larger-than-usual part in that relationship.

Through most ofour history, the President and a majority of the members of both houses of Congress have been of the same party. Over the past 50 years or so, however, the American people have become quite familiar with divided government-that is, a political

[^7]
Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson

Display Transparency 3F, Road to Nowhere, when you discuss the system of checks and balances. The cartoon shows that the system is intended to force the branches to work together toward compromise. Ask: In this cartoon, which branch of government is being checked? (legislative branch) Which branch is doing the checking? (executive branch) How? (by veto) What does the cartoon suggest must happen for the government to get its work done? (Branches must work together toward compromise.) At the time this cartoon was created, do you think the presidency and Congress were controlled by the same party? How do you know? (No.
The direct confrontation between the branches depicted in this cartoon suggests that the President's agenda differs significantly from that of the congressional majority, suggesting that they are from different parties.)

- Interpreting Diagrams Under the system of checks and balances, each branch of government can check the actions of the others. In what ways can the power of the executive be checked by the other two branches?
environment in which one party occupies the White House and the other controls one or both houses of Congress.

Most recently, Republican President George W. Bush faced an opposing Congress in the last two years of his eight-year presidency. In 2008, Barack Obama recaptured the White House for the Democrats, and the Democratic party strengthened their slim majorities in both houses on Capitol Hill.

Judicial Review

One aspect of the principle of checks and balances is of such importance in the American constitutional system that it stands by itself, as one of that system's basic principles. The power of judicial review may be defined as the power of a court to determine the constitutionality of a governmental action.

In part, then, judicial review is the power to declare unconstitutional-to declare illegal, null and void, of no force and effect-a governmental action found to violate some provision in the Constitution. The power of judicial review is held by all federal courts and by most State courts, as well. ${ }^{1}$

The Constitution does not provide for judicial review in so many words. Yet it seems

1 Generally, the power is held by all courts of record. These are courts that keep a record of their proceedings and have the power to punish for contempt Usually, only the lowest courts in a State-justice of the peace courts-are not courts of record.

How Government Works

Checks and balances After students have compiled their lists of checks and balances on their Core Worksheet, begin a flow chart on the board. Write "Executive Branch," "Legislative Branch," and "Judicial Branch" on the board in a triangular pattern, in the same positions as they appear in the textbook diagram. Have students read each description of a check from their Core Worksheet and identify the branch that holds this power. For example, Article I, Section 2, Clause 5, assigns the power to impeach to the House of Representatives. Write the description under that branch on the board. Then have students identify the branch(es) being checked. Draw an arrow from each description to the affected branch(es). In the impeachment example, draw arrows to both the executive and judicial branches, since the House may impeach judges as well as members of the executive branch.

13 Differentiate What might happen if the system of checks and balances did not exist? Have students work together to develop a scenario in which this principle was not a part of American government. Ask them to create a short radio broadcast describing the situation. Alternatively, students might base their scenario on one of the other six principles.
L1 Differentiate The Preamble to the Constitution is an eloquent statement of the purpose and ideals of the United States government. Have small groups work together to set the Preamble to music. Encourage them to consider carefully their choice of musical style, keeping in mind the subject matter and significance of the document. The words might serve as lyrics; or they might be read, with music as background. Allow time for students to perform their creations for the class.
4 Differentiate To what extent do the six basic principles address weaknesses of the Articles of Confederation? Have students create a poster or write a brief essay to answer this question.
L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 3 Section 1 Extend Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 139), which asks students to read excerpts from The Federalist and decide which basic principles are the subject of each excerpt.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of Checks and Balances.

Answers

Interpreting Diagrams The judicial branch may declare executive acts constitutional. The legislative branch may override the President's veto, may impeach the President, approves appointments, and approves treaties.

Assess and Remediate

Display Transparency 3G, Who Has the Power? Have students draw conclusions about why this diagram represents the principle of federalism. Students should then present their conclusions to the class. (The powers show a division among a central government and several regional [State] governments.)Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' work.Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 141)Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 142)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

Who Has the Power?

D Interpreting Diagrams The Constitution divides power among the State and Federal governments. Why might the Constitution give the power to regulate trade among the States to the Federal Government?

```
auxiliary
adj. extra; supportive;
ad). extra; sup
clear that the Framers intended that the federal courts, and in particular the Supreme Court, should have that power. In The Federalist No. 51, James Madison described the judicial power as one of the "auxiliary precautions" against the possible domination of one branch of the government over another.

In The Federalist No. 78, Alexander Hamilton wrote:
"The interpretation of the laws is the proper and peculiar province of the courts. A constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges as a fundamental law. It therefore belongs to them to ascertain its meaning, as well as the meaning of any particular act proceding from the legislative body. If there should happen to be an irreconcilable variance between the two, that which has the superior obligation and validity ought, of course, to be preferred; or, in other words, the Constitution ought to be preferred to the statute. . ."
In practice, the Supreme Court established the power of judicial review in the landmark case of Marbury v. Madison in 1803. Since Marbury, the Supreme Court and other federal and State courts have used the power in thousands of cases. For the most part, those courts have upheld challenged governmental actions. That is, in most cases in which the power of judicial review is exercised, the actions of government are found to be constitutional.

That is not always the case, however. To date, the Supreme Court has decided some 150 cases in which it has found an act or some part of an act of Congress to be unconstitutional. It has struck down several presidential and other executive branch actions as well. The Court has also voided hundreds of actions of the States and their local governments, including some 1,200 State laws and local ordinances.

\section*{Federalism}

As you know, the American governmental system is federal in form. The powers held by government are distributed on a territorial basis. The National Government holds some of those powers. Others belong to the 50 States.

Government online

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

74 The Constitution

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}
alternate lesson plan Have students learn about our nation's constitutional foundation by playing the "Constitution Game." Teams will study the Constitution and prepare game cards containing clues to facts in the Constitution. During the game, teams will alternate giving clues and identifying constitutional facts from the clues. After a team identifies a fact, it will look up the passage in the Constitution where the fact is revealed. Then a team member will read the passage aloud.

To see this lesson plan, go to

The principle of federalism - the division of power among a central government and several regional governments-came to the Constitution out of both experience and necessity. At Philadelphia, the Framers faced a number of difficult problems, not the least of them: How to build a new, stronger, more effective National Government while preserving the existing States and the concept of local self-government.

The colonists had rebelled against the harsh rule of a powerful and distant central government. They had fought for the right to manage their own local affairs without the meddling and dictation of the king and his ministers in far-off London. Surely, the colonists would not now agree to another such government.

The Framers found their solution in federalism. In short, they constructed the federal arrangement, with its division of powers, as a compromise. It was an alternative to both the system of nearly independent States, loosely tied to one another in the weak Articles of Confederation, and to a much feared, too powerful central government.

We shall explore the federal system at length in the next chapter. For now, keep in mind that among so many other reasons, federalism is an important part of the Constitution's web of protections of individual freedom. Remember, the Framers were dedicated to the concept of limited government. They were convinced (1) that governmental power poses a threat to individual liberty, (2) that, therefore, the exercise of governmental power must be restrained, and (3) that to divide governmental power, as federalism does, is to curb it and to prevent its abuse. Alexander Hamilton addressed this in his Federalist Papers:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

In the compound republic of America, the power surrendered by the people is first divided between two distinct governments, and then the portion allotted to each is subdivided among distinct and separate departments. Hence a double security arises to the rights of the people. The different governments will control each other, at the same time that each will be controlled by itself.
—The Federalist No. 5
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Identify two powers that the States hold, but that the Federal Government does not.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What are the six main principles on which the Constitution is based?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. How do the first three articles differ from the other four articles?
3. (a) Into what three branches are the powers of the Federal Government separated? (b) Give a brief summary of the checks and balances in place for each of the three branches.
4. (a) Explain the concept of rule of law. (b) Why would this concept have been important for the Framers? (c) What might happen if there were no rule of law?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Summarize (a) Explain the concept of judicial review. (b) How was this power formally established?
6. Express Problems Clearly What issues might arise when the legislative and executive branches are controlled by different parties?

\section*{Quick Write}

Writing for Assessment: Develop a Main Idea Some essay tests provide a list of topics from which you must choose. Try to select a topic for which you can quickly develop a main idea. For example:
(a) The relationship between the separation of powers, checks and balances, and judicial review (b) The importance of federalism to the survival of the U.S. governmen (c) The importance of separating powers between the State and Federal governments

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The articles of the Con- \\ stitution (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Work with students to create an outtine \\ of the articles, breaking down their most \\ important elements.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The six principles of the \\ Constitution (Questions \\
\(3,5,6)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Look at the cartoons representing the \\ principles on pages 70 and 71. Work with \\ students to understand how each cartoon \\ represents a principle, and how the ele- \\ ments of each principle are depicted.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The separation of pow- \\ ers among the three \\ branches of government \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Divide students into three groups, and \\ assign each group a branch of the \\ government. Have each group become \\ an "expert" in their branch, and teach the \\ other groups about it
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. popular sovereignty, limited government, separation of powers, checks and balances, judicial review, federalism
2. The first three articles are the only ones that deal specifically with the organization of the Federal Government.
3. (a) executive, judicial, and legislative
(b) judicial: may declare a law or presidential action unconstitutional; executive: appoints judges, may veto a law, may call special sessions of Congress; legislative: may override a veto, may impeach a president or a judge, approves treaties and appointments of judges, creates lower courts
4. (a) The government and its officers are always subject to the law. (b) The Framers wanted to avoid absolute rule similar to that exercised by the British government over the colonists.
(c) Government would have unlimited power. It could act arbitrarily and for its own interests.
5. (a) the power of the judicial branch to declare acts of Congress or the President unconstitutional (b) Although intended by the Framers, the concept became official when the Supreme Court decided Marbury v. Madison in 1803.
6. Possible response: Conflict between party agendas would make checks and balances more apparent, with more frequent vetoes and battles over judicial appointees. The legislative process could become gridlocked as confrontations between the branches prevent legislation on politically charged issues from passing into law.
QUICK WRITE Sample main idea: Constitutional change by other means has allowed branches of government to work around checks and balances.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will discuss the Supreme Court case Marbury v. Madison, and then write a letter to the editor of a 19th-century newspaper.

\section*{Teach}

Write judicial review on the board. Ask students to define the term, and write their answers on the board. Judicial review is the power of a court to determine the constitutionality of a government action. Point out that most courts may exercise judicial review. Emphasize that judges cannot rule against a legislative or executive action based on their own ideas of fairness or morality; they must decide based on whether or not the Constitution allows the action.

L2 ELL Differentiate To help students define the key term, have them define judge (a public official authorized to decide questions put before a court). Then have students apply their definition to judicial (of or relating to a judgment). Next, have them define review (a critical evaluation). Finally, have them define the key term judicial review.

\section*{CREATE A CONCEPT WEB}

Draw a concept web on the board. Write Marbury v. Madison in the center circle. Have students identify the results of the Court's decision, and write them in circles around the center circle. For example, students might suggest that the Supreme Court reprimanded the President, but did not order him to do anything; and that the Supreme Court struck down the Judiciary Act of 1789. Ask: What was the significance of the Court's decision? (The Court established the power of judicial review.)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

Before students begin the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 1 AiO, pp. 163-166), you may want to review tips on drawing inferences and conclusions in the Skills Handbook p. S19.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

FLetcher V. PECK, 1810 In Marbury v. Madison, the Supreme Court first asserted its power to strike down a federal law. Seven years later, the Court extended the power of judicial review to State laws. In 1795, the Georgia State legislature passed a law granting land to four companies but later repealed the law. John Peck acquired some land under the original grant. He later sold the land to Robert Fletcher. Fletcher sued, arguing that Peck had no legal right to sell the land. The case reached the Supreme Court. Noting that the Constitution does not allow ex post facto (after the fact) laws, the Court ruled that the Georgia legislature could not void grants made by the previous law. Thus Georgia's repeal of its law was unconstitutional. By asserting the power of judicial review over both federal and State laws, the Supreme Court secured its authority as chief interpreter of the Constitution.

When Marbury went to the Supreme Court seeking a writ of mandamus-a court order directing a public official to perform his or her duty-to force delivery of the commission, Chief Justice John Marshall faced a dilemma. If he granted the writ to force Madison to deliver the commission, the President would likely ignore it. This would create a precedent under which the authority of the judicial branch would suffer. On the other hand, a refusal to issue the writ would deny Marbury his commission, which was legally his. Rather than choose either option, Marshall devised a brilliant maneuver.

In a unanimous opinion written by the Chief Justice, the Court refused Marbury's request. It did so, however, not because Marbury was not entitled to his commission, but rather because it found the section of the Judiciary Act on which Marbury had based his case to be in conflict with the Constitution and, therefore, void. Specifically, the Court found the statute, which allowed cases to be heard by the Supreme Court without moving through the lower courts, in conflict with Article III, Section 2, Clause 2 of the Constitution, which stated that cases such as Marbury's must come to the Supreme Court only by way of the lower courts.

Marshall's powerful opinion asserted that: "The powers of the legislature are defined and limited; and that those limits may not be mistaken or forgotten, the Constitution is written." With this ruling, the Court asserted its power to determine the constitutionality of government actions and placed itself on an equal footing with the executive and legislative branches. The power of judicial review established in Marbury has been used in hundreds of significant cases since 1803, including those concerned with segregation (Brown v. Topeka Board ofEducation, 1954), the rights of the accused (Miranda v. Arizona, 1966), and the right to privacy (Roe v. Wade, 1973).

\section*{Think Critically}
1. Should the Supreme Court have the power to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional? Why or why not?
2. Constitutional Principles Explain why the power of judicial review is an important part of the system of checks and balances Marshall's decision paved the way for the Supreme Court to declare other acts of Congress and the President unconstitutional. In New York Times v. U.S., the Supreme Court ruled that President Nixon could not prevent the New York Times from publishing classified documents about United States activity in Vietnam.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

JUDICIARY ACT OF 1789 Article III, Section 1, of the new Constitution left to Congress the responsibility to "ordain and establish" a federal court system. Congress wasted little time. Senate Bill Number One of the First Session of the First Congress became the Judiciary Act of 1789 . This act established the federal district and circuit courts and the authority of judges and court officials. Section 13 of the act authorized the Supreme Court to issue writs of mandamus in original jurisdiction, rather than upon appeal from a lower court. In Marbury v. Madison, John Marshall pointed out that Article III, Section 2, of the Constitution lists specific situations in which the Court has original jurisdiction, and issuing writs of mandamus was not one of them. Therefore, he concluded, anything not listed in this section of the Constitution must go through the lower courts first. Section 13 of the Judiciary Act was unconstitutional.

\section*{RESEARCH}

Ask students to form pairs and find other cases where the court exercised judicial review. (Examples include Miranda v. Arizona and Plessy v. Ferguson.) Have students present their findings and explain how the Supreme Court exercised judicial review.

\section*{LETTER TO THE EDITOR}

Divide the class into five groups, and assign each group an important figure from the case (Jefferson, Marbury, Madison, Adams, or Marshall). Give each group time to further research Marbury v. Madison and how their historical figure related to the case. Distribute the Rubric for Assessing Letters to the Editor (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 219). Then, have students assume the role of their historical figure and individually write letters to the editor discussing the outcome of the case. Each student should write a reaction to the case as their figure would have reacted.
L1 L2 Differentiate Make sure each group is a mix of lower-level and higher-level students. Circulate among the groups to ensure that lower-level students understand and are participating in the research. Encourage higher-level students to help lower-level students as they write their letter. Have students assess the work of another student in his or her group, using the rubric. Allow students to revise their work before submitting it for a grade.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}
\(\qquad\) Differentiate Assign the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 1 All-inOne, p. 163).
L2 Differentiate Assign the adapted Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 165).
Assess the letters to the editor using the Rubric for Assessing Letters to the Editor (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 219).

Assess students' answers to the Think Critically questions.

\section*{Answers}
1. Sample answer: Yes. The Constitution is a set of basic principles, not a detailed list covering all situations. Someone must interpret and apply its meaning. The principles of separation of powers and checks and balances both suggest that the interpreter should be a different branch from those that make and execute the laws.
2. The judicial branch can invalidate laws passed by Congress and executive orders or other acts of the executive branch. This power enables the courts to keep the Constitution-not Congress or the President-as the supreme law of the land.

\title{
How has the Constitution been amended through the formal amendment process?
}

\section*{I. Formal Amendment Process \\ A. First Method}
1. proposed by two-thirds vote of each house of Congress
2. ratified by three fourths of State legislatures
B. Second Method
1. proposed by two-thirds vote of each house of Congress
2. ratified by conventions in three fourths of States
C. Third Method
1. proposed by national convention called by Congress at request of two thirds of State legislatures
2. ratified by three fourths of State legislatures
D. Fourth Method
1. proposed by national convention called by Congress at request of two thirds of State legislatures
2. ratified by conventions in three fourths of States

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- compare the process of ratification of amendments by studying a chart.
- examine the meaning of several amendments by creating and performing a skit.
- debate the merits of three unsuccessful amendments, using primary sources.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Formal}

\section*{Amendment}

Guiding Question
How has the Constitution been amended through the formal amendment process? Use an outline like the one below to take notes on how the Constitution can be amended.
I. Formal Amendment Process
A. First Method

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- amendment - Bill of Rights
- ratification
- formal amendment

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify the four different ways by which the Constitution may be formally changed.
2. Explain how the formal amendment process illustrates the principles of federalism and popular sovereignty.
3. Understand that several amendments have been proposed, but not ratified.
4. Outline the 27 amendments that have been added to the Constitution

Image Above: Inez Milholland fought to amend the Constitution to allow women's suffrage.

The Constitution of the United States has now been in force for more than 200 years-longer than the written constitution of any other nation in the world. \({ }^{2}\)

When the Constitution became effective in 1789 , the United States was a small agricultural nation of fewer than four million people. That population was scattered for some 1,300 miles along the eastern edge of the continent. The 13 States, joined together mostly by travel on horseback and sailing ships, struggled to stay alive in a generally hostile world.

Today, well over 300 million people live in the United States. The now 50 States stretch across the continent and beyond, and the country has many farflung commitments. The United States is the most powerful nation on Earth, and its modern, highly industrialized and technological society has produced a standard of living that has long been the envy of many other countries.

How has the Constitution, written in 1787, endured and kept pace with that astounding change and growth? The answer lies in this highly important fact: The Constitution of today is, and at the same time is not, the document of 1787. Many of its words are the same, and much of their meaning remains the same. But some of its words have been changed, some have been eliminated, and some have been added. And, very importantly, the meanings of many of its provisions have been modified, as well.

This process of constitutional change, of modification and growth, has come about in two basic ways: (1) by formal amendment and (2) by other, informal means. In this section, you will look at the first of them: the addition of formal amendments to the Constitution.

\section*{Formal Amendment Process}

The Framers knew that even the wisest of constitution makers cannot build for all time. Thus, the Constitution provides for its own amendment-that is, for changes in its written words.

2 The British constitution dates from well before the Norman Conquest of 1066 , butit is not a single, written document Rather, it is an "unwritten constitution," a collection of principles, customs, traditions, and significant pariiamentary acts that guide British government and practice. Israel, which has existed only since 1948, is the only other state in the world without a written constitution.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

To practice analyzing sources in this section, use the Chapter 3 Skills Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 149). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after beginning the chapter. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 150).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The formal amendment process established in Article V emphasizes federalism. - An amendment may be proposed by a two-thirds vote in both houses of Congress or by a national convention called by Congress at the request of two thirds of State legislatures. - An amendment may be ratified by three fourths of State legislatures or by conventions in three fourths of the States.
CONCEPTS: constitutional government, federalism, popular sovereignty
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The amendment process enables constitutional modification as the nation changes. - The Bill of Rights guarantees freedom of belief and expression, security, and fair and equal treatment before the law.

Article \(V\) sets out two methods for the proposal and two methods for the ratification of amendments. So, there are four possible methods of formal amendment-changes or additions that become part of the written language of the Constitution itself. The diagram below sets out these two methods of proposal and two methods of ratification.

First, an amendment may be proposed by a two-thirds vote in each house of Congress and ratified by three fourths of the State legislatures. Today, at least 38 State legislatures must approve an amendment to make it a part of the Constitution. Of the Constitution's 27 amendments, 26 were adopted in this manner.

Second, an amendment may be proposed by Congress and ratified by conventions, called for that purpose, in three fourths of the States. Only the 21 st Amendment (1933) was adopted in this way.

When Congress proposes an amendment, it chooses the method of ratification.

State conventions were used to ratify the 21 st Amendment, largely because the lawmakers felt that the conventions' popularly elected delegates would be more likely to reflect public opinion on the question of the repeal of nationwide prohibition than would State legislators.

Third, an amendment may be proposed by a national convention, called by Congress at the request of two thirds of the State leg-islatures-today, 34. As you can see in the diagram, it must then be ratified by three fourths of the State legislatures. To this point, Congress has not called such a convention. \({ }^{3}\)

\footnotetext{
3 The calling of a convention was a near thing twice over the past 40 years or so. Between 1963 and 1969, 33 State legislatures, one short of the necessary two thirds, sought an amendment to erase the Supreme Court's "one-person, onevote" decisions; see Chapter 24. Also, between 1975 and 1983, 32 States asked for a convention to propose an amendment that would require that the federal budget be balanced each year, except in time of war or other national emergency.
}

\section*{convention n. a meeting to discuss} matters of common concern

\section*{How Government Works}

Interpreting Diagrams There are two ways to propose an amendment, each with two means of ratification. Which method has been used to ratify the most amendments?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 3, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 143)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 145)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 147)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 148)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 149)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 150)
L3 Quiz A (p. 151)
L2 Quiz B (p. 152)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 143) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 145)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 1 All-inOne, p. 147) and instruct students to answer the questions about the constitutional amendments.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that today they will discuss the formal amendment of the Constitution. Before reviewing answers to the Bellringer worksheet, have students divide into teams for a "Quick-Check" game. Instruct the teams to consult on each question, and have a team captain raise a hand when the team has the answer. The first team with the correct answer wins one point. Ask: How many amendments to the Constitution are there? (27)How many formal methods of amendment does the Constitution provide? (4) Which method of amendment has been used most frequently? (The Amendment is proposed in Congress and ratified by State legis/atures.) How many amendments were ratified this way? (26 of 27) Which amendment was ratified differently? (the 21 st Amendment) What method was used to ratify the 21st Amendment? (The 21 st Amendment was proposed in Congress and ratified by State conventions.) What was the purpose of the 21st Amendment? (repeal of Prohibition) What are the other two methods of amendment? (The Amendment is proposed at a national convention called by Congress and ratified by State legislatures or State conventions.) How many amendments have been ratified by these methods? (0) You may want students to take out their Reading Comprehension worksheets (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 143) at this time. Then review students' answers to the Bellringer worksheet.
Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive version of the processes of formal amendment.

\section*{Answers}

Amending the Constitution Most successful amendments have been proposed by Congress by a two-thirds vote in both houses and ratified by three fourths of the State legislatures

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute Chapter 3 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 148), and divide the class into teams. Assign each team one of the following amendments: \(3 \mathrm{rd}, 11\) th, 14 th, 15 th, 16 th, 19 th, 22 nd, 24 th, 26 th, or 27 th. Instruct them not to reveal their amendment to other teams. Explain that each team will create a skit to act out the subject of their assigned amendment. The rest of the class will try to guess the amendment being depicted. Tell students that the skits may be set in the past or present and may depict a real event or realistic fictional event. Explain that when they serve as the audience, they will use their Core Worksheet to record the number of the amendment depicted in each skit and evidence from the skit that led them to that conclusion.
L1 L2 Differentiate Some amendments are easier to address than others. Assign less-skilled students one of these more concrete amendments: 14 th, 15 th, 19 th, 24 th, or 26 th.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Use these questions to continue the discussion of the amendments to the Constitution.
1. What changes in the United States made the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments necessary? (The Civil War ended slavery.) Do these amendments help to explain the Constitution's durability? Give your reasons. (Possible response: Yes. Slavery was reflected in the original Constitution in the Three-Fifths Compromise. When slavery ended, the Constitution needed to be adjusted to guarantee full voting rights and citizenship for the newly freed African Americans.)
2. Did your skit, or another team's skit, change the way you think about an amendment? Give your reasons.
3. How did the two world wars and the Vietnam War contribute to the passage of the 26th Amendment? (Many Americans felt that if 18 -year-olds were old enough to fight, they should be old enough to vote.)
4. Which amendment affects you most today? Why?
5. Which amendment affects you least today? Why?

\section*{Answers}

The Amendments Amendments provide a way to update the Constitution to conform to changes in American society.

\section*{The 27 Amendments}

(1) The Amendments As the U.S. changed, amendments were added to the Constitution. How do the amendments keep the Constitution relevant to the times?

And fourth, an amendment may be proposed by a national convention and ratified by conventions in three fourths of the States. Remember, the Constitution itself was adopted in much this same way.

\section*{Federalism and Popular Sovereignty}

Note that the formal amendment process emphasizes the federal character of the governmental system. Proposal takes place at the national level and ratification is a State-by-State matter. Also note that when the Constitution is amended, that action represents the expression of the people's sovereign will.

Some criticize the practice of sending proposed amendments to the State legislatures rather than to ratifying conventions, especially because it permits a constitutional change without a clear-cut expression by the people. The critics point out that State legislators, who do the ratifying, are elected to office for a mix of reasons: party membership; name familiarity; and their stands on certain issues. They are almost never chosen because of their stand on a proposed amendment. On the other hand, the delegates to a ratifying convention would be chosen by the people on the basis of only one factor: a yes-or-no stand on the proposed amendment.

The Supreme Court has held that a State cannot require an amendment proposed by Congress to be approved by a vote of the people of the State before it can be ratified by that State's legislature. It made that ruling in Hawke v. Smith, in 1920. However, a State legislature can call for an advisory vote by the people before it acts, as the Court held in Kimble v. Swackhamer, in 1978.

\section*{Proposed Amendments}

The Constitution places only one restriction on the subjects with which a proposed amendment may deal. Article V declares

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 3H, Equal Rights Amendment, when you discuss the amendment ratification process. Point out that Congress may place time limits on the ratification of an amendment. The Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) was set to expire in 1979. Ask: Was the ERA close to ratification before the deadline expired? How do you know? (Yes. The runner representing the amendment is inches from the finish line.) According to the cartoon, would the ERA pass if the deadline is extended? (Probably not. Ratification had stalled for so long that the ERA runner in the cartoon grew roots.)

1933 Amendment 20 Change of dates for presidential and congressional terms Amendment 21 Repeal of Prohibition (18th Amendment 1951 Amendment 22 Limit on presidential terms that "no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate." When both houses of Congress pass a resolution proposing an amendment, Congress does not send it to the President to be signed or vetoed, though the Constitution would seem to require it \({ }^{4}\)-because when Congress proposes an amendment, it is not making law (not legislating). Although the chief executive has no formal role in the amendment process, his or her political influence can affect the success or failure of any attempt to amend the Constitution, of course.

If a State rejects a proposed amendment, it is not forever bound by that action. It may later reconsider and ratify the proposal. Most constitutional scholars agree that the reverse is not true, however. Once a State has approved an amendment, that action cannot be undone; and no governor's veto power

\footnotetext{
See Article I, Section 7, Clause 3. This practice of not submiting proposed amendments to the President is an example of the many changes in the Constitution that have been made by means other than formal amendment, a matter addressed in the next section.
}
extends to the ratification of a proposed amendment.

Some 15,000 joint resolutions calling for amendments to the Constitution have been proposed in Congress since 1789 . Only 33 of them have been sent on to the States. Of those, only 27 have been finally ratified. One of the unratified amendments had been offered by Congress in 1789-along with 10 other proposals that became the Bill of Rights in 1791, and another that became the 27th Amendment in 1992.

The unratified amendment of 1789 dealt with the distribution of seats in the House of Representatives. A second, proposed in 1810, would have voided the citizenship of anyone accepting any foreign title or other honor. Another, in 1861, would have prohibited forever any amendment relating to slavery. A fourth, in 1924, was intended to give Congress the power to regulate child labor. A fifth one, proclaiming the equal rights of women (ERA), was proposed in 1972; it fell three States short of ratification and died in 1982. An amendment to give the District of

Checkpoint
How does the formal amendment process reflect the concept of federalism?

\section*{Debate}

In 2006, the Senate defeated a constitutional amendment, preventing it from passing to the States for a ratification vote. Known as the Flag Desecration Amendment, the measure would have banned the burning of the American flag. Supporters intended the amendment as a way to overrule the Supreme Court, who had twice struck down similar laws. In Texas v. Johnson (1989), the Court overturned a Texas law, arguing that burning a flag in protest is symbolic speech. "[l]f there is a bedrock principle underlying the First Amendment, it is that the Government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable. " Today, the debate continues over whether flag burning is hate speech and should be banned, or is simply a distasteful exercise of free expression. Have students debate the issue. Ask: Should flag burning be banned?

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Display Transparency 31, Unsuccessful Amendments, which shows three proposed amendments that failed to win ratification. Have partners examine each amendment and provide an argument for and against each of these proposed amendments. Point out that the first two amendments are still ongoing and not ratified, while the Equal Rights Amendment expired, unratified.
L3 Differentiate Have individuals or partners propose an amendment, explain why it is necessary, make arguments for it, and anticipate and address arguments against it.
L4 Differentiate Have students research current proposals, like those for electoral college reform or regulating corporations. Evaluate their merits and chances for success.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the 27 Amendments.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint In all four methods of amending the Constitution, proposals occur at the national level and ratification at the State level.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3
Display Transparency 3J, Changing Views of Free Speech. Ask: What are some of the debates resulting from the guarantees of freedom of speech and press? (possible answer: debates over the right to criticize the government or over the right to wear protest armbands in school)

L3Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing Role Play (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 220).
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 151)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 152)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

The First Ten Amendments These rights were not included in the original Constitution. They were added to make sure they were guaranteed, as well as to appease Anti-Federalists.
Checkpoint Anti-Federalists feared that a strong central government would trample individual rights. They wanted the protection of rights written into the Constitution.

\section*{The First Ten Amendments}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline Amendment 1 & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Freedom of religion, speech, and the press \\
- Freedom to peaceably assemble and to petition the government
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Amendment 2 & \begin{tabular}{l}
- The right to maintain a militia \\
- The right to bear arms
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Amendment 3 & - Protection from having to quarter (house) soldiers in time of peace without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war except as provided by law \\
\hline Amendment 4 & - Protection against arbitrary searches and seizures without probable cause \\
\hline Amendment 5 & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Protection from prosecution without an indictment \\
- Protection from being tried for the same crime twice \\
- Protection from having to testify against oneself \\
- Protection from the loss of life, liberty, or property without due process of law \\
- Protection from loss of property without just compensation
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Amendment 6 & \begin{tabular}{l}
- The right to a speedy trial by an imparial jury \\
- The right to be informed of the charges, to cross-examine witnesses, and to present favorable witnesses \\
- The right to an attorney
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Amendment 7 & - The right to a trial by jury in any civil case where the amount of money involved is \($ 20\) or more \\
\hline Amendment 8 & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Protection from excessive bail or fines \\
- Protection from cruel and unusual punishment
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Amendment 9 & - The fact that the Constitution spells out a number of civil rights does not mean that there are not other, unwritten, rights held by the people. \\
\hline Amendment 10 & - The powers not delegated to the Federal Government may be exercised by the States, as long as they are not prohibited by the Constitution. \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
- The first ten amendments protect many fundamental and basic rights held by the people. Why is it important to spell out these rights?
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is the purpose of the Bill of Rights?

Columbia seats in Congress was proposed in 1978; it died in 1985.

When Congress proposed the 18th Amendment in 1917, it set a seven-year deadline for its ratification. The Supreme Court held that Congress can place "a reasonable time limit" on the ratification process, in a case from California, Dillon v. Gloss, in 1921. Congress has set a similar limit on the ratification period for each of the amendments (except the 19th) that it has proposed since then. It also granted a three-year extension of the deadline for the Equal Rights Amendment in 1979.

\section*{The 27 Amendments}

The Constitution's 27 amendments are summarized on pages 80 and 81 , and in the table above. As you review them, note this important fact: As significant as they are, those 27 amendments have not been responsible for the extraordinary vitality of the Constitution. That is to say, they have not been a major part of the process by which the Constitution has kept pace with more than two centuries of change.

The Bill of Rights The first ten amendments were added to the Constitution less than three years after it became effective. They were proposed by the first session of the First Congress in 1789 and were ratified by the States in late 1791. Each of these amendments arose out of the controversy surrounding the ratification of the Constitution itself. Many people, including Thomas Jefferson, had agreed to support the Constitution only if a listing of the basic rights held by the people were added to it, immediately.

Collectively, the first ten amendments are known as the Bill of Rights. They set out the great constitutional guarantees of freedom of belief and expression, of freedom and security of the person, and of fair and equal treatment before the law.

The first ten amendments were added to the Constitution so quickly that, for all intents and purposes, they might just as well be regarded as a part of the original Constitution. In point of fact, they were not. We shall look at the 1st through the 9th amendments at some length in Chapters 19 and 20. The 10th Amendment does not deal with civil rights, as such. Rather, it spells out the concept of reserved powers in the federal system.

The Later Amendments Each of the other amendments that have been added to the Constitution over the past 200 years also grew out of some particular, and often interesting, set of circumstances. For example, the 11 th Amendment declares that no State may be sued in the federal courts by a citizen of another State or by a citizen of any foreign state. It was proposed by Congress in 1794 and ratified in 1795 , after the State of Georgia had lost a case in the United States Supreme Court. The case (Chisholm v. Georgia, decided by the Court in 1793) arose out of a dispute over the ownership of some land in Georgia.

\section*{Background}

27TH AMENDMENT The remarkable history of the 27th Amendment began during the debate over ratification of the Constitution. Pointing out that the Constitution was silent on congressional pay, James Madison proposed an amendment that forbade Congress from voting itself a pay raise during that term. It failed to win ratification. The amendment remained dormant until college student Gregory Watson made it the topic of his research paper in 1982. Watson began to lobby State legislatures to ratify this forgotten amendment. Eventually he succeeded, and the 27 th Amendment took effect in 1992, nearly 203 years after it was proposed. In 1989, however, Congress passed a law that established automatic cost-of-living pay increases for Congress. Twice, in 1994 and 2001, federal courts ruled that the automatic raises did not violate the 27 th Amendment. This finding has yet to be tested in the Supreme Court.

It had been brought to the brand new federal court system by a man who lived in South Carolina.

The 12 th Amendment was added in 1804 after the electoral college had failed to produce a winner in the presidential election of 1800 . Thomas Jefferson became the third President of the United States in 1801, but only after a long, bitter fight in the House of Representatives.

The 13th Amendment, added in 1865, provides another example. It abolished slavery in the United States and was a direct result of the Civil War. The 14th Amendment, with its definition of citizenship (in 1868), and the 15 th Amendment on the right to vote (in 1870) also resulted from that conflict.

The 18th Amendment, establishing a nationwide prohibition of alcohol, was ratified in 1919. Known as "the noble experiment," it lasted fewer than 14 years. The 18th Amendment was repealed by the 21 st in 1933.

The 22nd Amendment (1951), limiting the number of terms in which a President may serve to two, was proposed in 1947, soon after the Republican Party had gained control of Congress for the first time in 16 years. Over that period, Franklin D. Roosevelt, a Democrat, had won the presidency four times.

The 26th Amendment was added in 1971. It lowered the voting age to 18 in all elections in the United States. Many who

- Analyzing Political Cartoons This cartoon illustrates the 4th Amendment. What is this cartoon conveying about that amendment?
backed the amendment began to work for its passage during World War II, creating the slogan "Old enough to fight, old enough to vote." Its ratification was spurred by the war in Vietnam.

The most recent amendment, the 27th, was written by James Madison and was among the first to be offered by Congress, in 1789. It forbids members of Congress from raising their own pay during that term. It finally became a part of the Constitution in 1992, when the 38th State, Michigan, ratified it.

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\) \(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Journal } & \begin{array}{l}\text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal. }\end{array} \text {. } n \text { ( }\end{array}\)}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: How has the Constitution been amended through the formal amendment process?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. (a) Which method of formal amendment has been used only once? (b) For which amendment was it used?
3. Explain how the ratification process is an example of popular sovereignty.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Predict Consequences (a) Why was the Bill of Rights added to the Constitution? (b) What rights do these amendments protect? (c) How might news reports differ if freedom of speech and the press were not part of the Constitution?
5. Identify Central Issues Some people have criticized the ratification of amendments by State legislatures instead of by popularly elected delegates. (a) Why has this process been criticized? (b) Do you agree? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Writing for Assessment: Gather Details Reread the topic you chose in the previous section. What is this question asking for? For example ques you the word effect in when you see the word effect in a question, you know you are looking or a cause-and-effect relationship. Gather details from the reading that specifically answer the question. Leave out unnecessary details.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The 27 Amendments \\
(Questions 2, 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Provide historic background to give each \\ of the amendments context.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The Bill of Rights \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review Chapter 2 to give students an \\ understanding of the purpose of the Bill \\ of Rights. Work through each amend- \\ ment to simplify the wording.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The Formal Amendment \\
Process (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Create a "timeline" for each method of \\ ratification. Have volunteers place the \\ steps for each method on their respec- \\ tive timelines.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons The 4th Amendment prohibits searches without probable cause. In the cartoon, the warrant satisfies the requirement of probable cause, requiring the people to admit the bear into the tent.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Method 1: amendment proposed by a two-thirds vote in Congress and ratified by three quarters of State legislatures; Method 2: amendment proposed by two-thirds vote in Congress and ratified by conventions in three quarters of States; Method 3: amendment proposed by national convention called by Congress at request of two thirds of State Legislatures and ratified by three quarters of State legislatures; Method 4: amendment proposed by national convention called by Congress at request of two thirds of State Legislatures and ratified by conventions in three quarters of the States
2. (a) amendment proposed by two-thirds vote in Congress and ratified by conventions in three quarters of States (b) 21 st
3. Popularly elected Congressional representatives propose amendments, which are ratified by elected representatives in State legislatures or elected delegates to State conventions.
4. (a) to gain support from Anti-Federalists who wanted a list of basic rights (b) guarantees of freedom of belief and expression, of freedom and security of the person, and of fair and equal treatment before the law (c) The government could dictate to the media the stories to report.
5. (a) because people elect convention delegates based solely on the delegates' views on the proposed amendment; the people elect State legislators for many other reasons (b) Sample response: I agree. Ratification by delegates chosen by the people for that purpose would better represent the people's will.
QUICK WRITE Details should support the topic.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will research an issue of interest and conduct an opinion poll.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{SURVEY}

Have students read the introduction to Citizenship 101. Ask students to rate each question in terms of its significance to their lives, giving the most significant issue three points and the least significant one point. Record their responses. Invite students to comment on why each issue was more or less significant to them as a group.

\section*{RESEARCH}

Have students research in groups or on their own one of the issues. They should find information on both sides of the issue, as well as recent national opinion polls. Ask: What do people in different parts of the country think about this issue? How do different political parties react to this issue? Ask them to create a chart of their findings, detailing the results of the opinion polls.

\section*{CONDUCT A POLL}

Have students who conducted research on the same issue work together to create polling questions. Have students ask their questions of a sample of students in the school, and record responses. Allow time for groups to share the results of their polls. Did these results differ from or reflect national polls that they found in their research? Can they explain why?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students write two or three paragraphs on what they learned about how political roots affect public opinion. Students should be able to extrapolate a response from their research and responses to their poll questions.

\section*{Answers}
1. A strong answer will show an understanding of how family, friends, party affiliations, geography, or other sources influenced the student's political attitudes.
2. A strong answer will show an understanding of how a family's party affiliation or cultural background influenced the student's political attitudes.
3. Interview questions should address the influence of family, friends, party affiliations, geography, and cultural background.

\(Y\)
our position on these issues probably reflects a number of factors, especially your background and personal experiences. Family, friends, and teachers, as well as their party affiliations, may also influence you. The part of the country in which you live may be at the root of your political attitudes, as well.

Political attitudes evolve from a variety of sources. People settle in different parts of the country. They belong to different ethnic and cultural groups. Career paths and education also have a major impact.

These political attitudes affect the way a citizen votes. They also affect the way senators and representatives vote, and how Presidents choose the issues they support or oppose. Use these steps to determine where your classmates stand on one of the above issues.
1. Choose a Question Look at the questions above. Do you have opinions about these issues? Where do you think your opinions came from? Have you read articles about these issues? Have you heard others talking about them?
2. Choose One Question Choose one of these questions and look at opinion polls from various sources to see how people across the country feel about the issue. Do you notice trends? For example, how do people in the city feel about the environment and how do people from rural areas feel about it? What is the opinion of each of the political parties?
3. Create and Ask Polling Questions Now, create your own polling questions on the issue. Ask fellow students their opinion on the subject. Make sure your questions are neutral in nature.

Ask them how much they have read or heard about the matter, as well as how they think of themselves politically. Are they conservative? Liberal? With which party do they most often identify? How did they come to identify with this party?

Collect your information to present to the class. Then, review what you've learned. Where do your political roots originate? Has your opinion on this issue changed? Understanding your own political roots and attitudes can help you judge where you stand on an issue, and how you would make the best choice when voting.

\section*{, What do you think?}
1. What personal experiences and individuals have influenced your political attitudes?
2. What has had the greatest effect on your political attitudes: the place where you live, your family's party affiliation, or your cultural background? Explain your answer.
3. You Try It Write five interview questions about political roots and attitudes. Answer each question yourself. Then interview a friend or family member about their views.
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE Citizenship Activity Pack For an activity on political For an activity on political roots and attitudes, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson Political Roots and Attitudes. It includes a lesson plan for you and materials to help students understand how political roots and attitudes are formed. First, students will take a self-test to identify their existing views on three important issues: public assistance, capital punishment, and immigration. You can tabulate the results and write them on a poster showing the spectrum of political views-from far left to far right. In the core activity, students will assess their views based on additional information about the issues provided on card handouts. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on Political Roots and Attitudes at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{section 3}

\section*{Change by Other Means}

Guiding Question
How have the day-to-day workings of government affected how we interpret the Constitution? Use a cause-and-effect chart like the one below to take notes on the workings of government.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Cause \\
- Congress passes \\ laws
\end{tabular} \\
-
\end{tabular}\(\rightarrow\)\begin{tabular}{l} Effect \\
- Vague parts of the \\ Constitution are \\ clarified
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- executive & - Cabinet \\ agreement & - senatorial \\
- treaty & courtesy \\
- electoral & \\ college &
\end{tabular}

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify how basic legislation has added to our understanding of the Constitution over time.
2. Describe the ways in which the executive and judicial branches have interpreted the Constitution.
3. Analyze the role of party practices and custom in interpreting the Constitution.

Image Above: Delegates, like the one above, play an important role in shaping the U.S. government.

Surely, the Framers would be surprised to learn that only 17 amendments have been added to their handiwork since the adoption of the Bill of Rights more than two centuries ago. That so few formal changes have been made is, in part, a tribute to the wisdom of the Framers. But it is also due, in no small part, to the fact that many of the Constitution's provisions are cast in almost outline-like form; they are brief and seldom very detailed or specific. In short, their skeletal nature virtually guarantees interpretation.

So, to understand the Constitution, you must grasp this key point: There is much in that document-in fact, a great deal-that cannot be seen with the naked eye.

To put this essential point another way: Over time, many interpretations have been made in the Constitution that have not involved any changes in its written words. This vital process of constitutional change by means other than formal amendment has taken place-and continues to occur-in five key ways: through (1) the passage of basic legislation by Congress; (2) actions taken by the President; (3) key decisions of the Supreme Court; (4) the activities of political parties; and (5) custom and usage.

\section*{Basic Legislation}

Congress has been a major agent of constitutional change in two important ways. First, it has passed a number of laws to clarify several of the Constitution's brief provisions. That is, Congress has added flesh to the bones of those sections of the Constitution that the Framers left purposely skeletal—provisions they left for Congress to detail as circumstances required.

Take the structure of the federal court system as an example. In Article III, Section 1, the Constitution provides for "one supreme Court, and . . . such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Beginning with the Judiciary Act of 1789, all of the federal courts, except the Supreme Court, have been created by acts of Congress. Or, similarly, Article II creates only the offices of President and Vice President. The many departments, agencies, and offices in the now huge executive branch have been created by acts of Congress.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Over time, change has occurred through interpretation and practice. • There are five informal means of change: basic legislation, executive action, court decisions, party practices, and custom and usage.
CONCEPTS: judicial review, checks and balances, constitutional government, rule of law ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The provisions of the Constitution are cast in almost outline-like form. - Over the years, the Constitution's brief provisions have been fleshed out and reshaped as a result of the day-to-day workings of government, without formal amendment.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 153) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 155)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 1 All-inOne, p. 157), and write on the board: Identify each statement on the worksheet as true or false and explain your answer.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that today they will discuss the process of change by means other than formal amendment. Before reviewing the Bellringer questions, ask students to use their Reading Comprehension Worksheets to review the five ways in which informal changes occur. Then encourage students to give examples of each method. (basic legislation: Judiciary Act of 1789 created a federal court system; executive action: the President can send troops without a formal declaration of war from Congress; court decisions: Marbury v. Madison established the power of judicial review; party practices: parties nominate candidates for office; custom and usage: Cabinet is made up of the 15 department heads)
Review answers to the Bellringer activity. (1. false; 2. true; 3. true; 4. false; 5. true; 6. true; 7. false)

\section*{Answers}

Constitutional Principles The constitutional requirement that the President report to Congress about the state of the Union establishes a check on executive power by the legislative branch.
Checkpoint by passing laws that spell out brief provisions in the Constitution and by using its powers in ways that help define the meaning of the broad terms in the Constitution

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 3, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 153)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 155)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 157)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 158)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 159)
L3 Quiz A (p. 161) L2 Quiz B (p. 162)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 167)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 170)
define those words, however, by exercising its commerce power with the passage of literally thousands of laws. As it has done so, Congress has, in a very real sense, expanded the Constitution.

\section*{Executive Action}

The manner in which various Presidents, especially the more vigorous ones, have used their powers has also contributed to the growth of the Constitution. For example, the document says that only Congress can declare war. \({ }^{6}\) But the Constitution also makes the President the commander in chief of the nation's armed forces. \({ }^{7}\) Acting under that authority, several Presidents have made war without a declaration of war by \(\begin{array}{ll}\mathbf{6} & \text { See Article I, Section 8, Clause } 11 . \\ 7 & \text { See Article ll, Section 2, Clause } 1 .\end{array}\)

As an additional example, the Constitution deals with the matter of presidential succession, but only up to a point. The 25th Amendment says that if the presidency becomes vacant, the Vice President automatically succeeds to the office. Who becomes President if both the presidency and the vice presidency are vacant? Thus, the Constitution leaves the answer to that question to Congress.

Second, Congress has added to the Constitution by the way in which it has used many of its powers. The Constitution gives to Congress the expressed power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce. \({ }^{5}\) But what is "foreign commerce" and "interstate commerce"? What, exactly, does Congress have the power to regulate? The Constitution does not say. Congress has done much to 5 See Article I , Section 8 , Clause 3.

Checkpoint by which Congress has shaped the government.

\section*{succession}
n. the process by which one follows in order (succeeds) to an ordain
\(v\). to order, direct, decree

The State of the Union
The President shall from time to time give to Congress information of the State of the Union and recommend to their Consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.
- Article II, Sec. 3

FROM THE CONSTITUTION required by the Constitution, the method of address is le to each President. George Washington spoke to Congress, but Thomas Jefferson wrote his report, and a written address was customary for the next 112 years. Woodrow Wilson revived the speech in 1913. Calvin Coolige's address in 1923 was the first to be broadcast on the radio. Harry Truman's State of the Union was televised in 1947. Today, the State of the Union is an annual televised address to Congress and all Americans.

Constitutional Principles How does the State of the Union address reflect the checks and balances between Congress and the President?

Congress. In fact, Presidents have used the armed forces abroad in combat without such a declaration on several hundred occasions in our history.

Take the use of executive agreements in the conduct of foreign affairs as another example. An executive agreement is a pact made by the President directly with the head of a foreign state. A treaty, on the other hand, is a formal agreement between two or more sovereign states. The principal difference between agreements and treaties is that executive agreements need not be approved by the Senate. They are as legally binding as treaties, however. Recent Presidents have often used them in our dealings with other countries, instead of the much more cumbersome treaty-making process outlined in Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution.

Aditionally, most Presidents have insisted that the phrase "executive Power" in Section 1 of Article II includes much more than the particular presidential powers set out in that article. Thus, Thomas Jefferson engineered the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, doubling the size of the United States-even though the Constitution does not say that the President has the power to acquire territory.

\section*{Court Decisions}

The nation's courts, most tellingly the United States Supreme Court, interpret and apply the Constitution in many of the cases they hear. You have already encountered several of these instances of constitutional interpretation by the Court, most notably in Marbury v. Madison, 1803.

Recall that the Court established the power of judicial review-which is not specifically mentioned in the Constitution. You will find many more instances throughout the pages of this book-for the Supreme Court is, as Woodrow Wilson once put it, "a constitutional convention in continuous session."

\section*{Party Practices}

The nation's political parties have been a major agent of constitutional change over the course of our political history, despite the fact that the Constitution makes no mention of them. In fact, most of the Framers were opposed to political parties. In his Farewell Address in 1796, George Washington warned the people against what he called "the baneful effects of the spirit of party." He and many others feared the divisive effect of party politics on government. Yet, even as he spoke, parties were developing. They have had a major place in the shaping of government and its processes ever since. Illustrations of that point are almost endless.

Neither the Constitution nor any law provides for the nomination of candidates for the presidency. From the 1830s on, however, the major parties have held national conventions to do just that. The parties have converted the electoral college, the body that makes the formal selection of the nation's President, from what the Framers intended into a "rubber stamp" for each State's popular vote in presidential elections. Both houses of Congress are organized and conduct much of their business on the basis of party. The President makes appointments to office with an eye to party politics. In short, government in the United States is in many ways government through party.

\section*{Custom and Usage}

Unwritten customs may be as strong as written law, and many of them have developed in our governmental system. Again, there are many examples. By custom, not because the Constitution says so, the heads of the 15 executive departments make up the Cabinet, an advisory body to the President.

On each of the eight occasions when a President died in office, the Vice President succeeded to that office-most recently Lyndon Johnson, following John Kennedy's assassination in 1963. Yet, the written words of the Constitution did not provide for this practice until the adoption of the 25 th Amendment in 1967. Until then, the Constitution said only that the powers and duties of the presidency-but not the office itself—should be transferred to the Vice President. \({ }^{8}\)

8 Read carefully Article II, Section 1, Clause 6, and then read
Section 1 of the 25th Amendmen
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
How have political parties changed the way we interpret the Constitution?
tellingly adv. striking, with marked effect

\section*{Background}

TITLE IX Display Transparency 3K. The role of women in American society has expanded dramatically, exposing the need to extend constitutional protections to the rights of women. Congress passed a landmark law that helped open to women the full range of educational opportunities. Title IX of the Higher Education Act (1972) states that "No person . . . shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in . . . any educational program or activity. " Now, more women are attending college and serving on faculties. Medical schools and law schools are accepting women on an equal basis with men. Support for the law remains strong. Before Title IX, only 300,000 high school girls participated in the few competitive sports available to them. By 2005, 2.95 million girls were playing sports of all kinds. Title IX has helped extend to women the constitutional protections against discrimination.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 3 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 158), which asks students to consider scenarios involving informal change. Students can work individually to identify the informal method of change used in each scenario in Part 1. Then have partners work together to complete Part 2. Encourage them to come up with examples not given in the text. Have students read their scenarios aloud to the class.
L2 LPR Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 3 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 159) to these students.

L4 Differentiate Have students do research to come up with specific, real examples of change for each informal method.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Remind students that Woodrow Wilson once described the Supreme Court as "a constitutional convention in continuous session. " Call on volunteers to explain his meaning. Then direct students to the Supreme Court Glossary at the back of the textbook. Have them read the brief descriptions of these First Amendment cases: Dennis v. United States, 1951; Schenck v. United States, 1919; and United States v. Eichman, 1990. After they read each case description, ask: In what way does this decision reflect Wilson's description?
L1 L2 Differentiate Have a student read the description of the Court's ruling in Schenck v. United States, 1919, aloud. Then ask students to explain how this decision interpreted the Constitution.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Political parties have determined the system for nominating candidates, changed the original intent of the electoral college, and influenced the way the government operates.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 221).Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 161)Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 162)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Change by other means \\
(Questions 2, 3, 4, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review each subhead with students. \\
Write each method on the board. Create \\ scenarios for each method and read them \\ alour to students. Have students match \\ each scenario with the method under \\ which it falls.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint 22nd: limit on presidential terms; 25th: presidential succession aloud to students. Have students match each scenario with the method under which it falls.

\(\triangle\) President George W. Bush sits with Cabinet members Gale Norton (far left), Colin Powell (left), and Donald Rumsfeld. The Cabinet is made up of the President's advisors.

\section*{Checkpoint}

Which two customs did the 22nd and 25th amendments establish as law?

It is a long-established custom that the Senate will approve only those presidential appointees, such as a federal judge or a United States marshal, who are acceptable to the senator or senators of the President's party from the State involved. This practice is known as senatorial courtesy, and it amounts to an unwritten rule that is closely followed in the Senate. Notice that its practical effect is to shift a portion of the appointing power from the President, where the formal wording of the Constitution puts it, to certain members of the Senate.

Both the strength and the importance of unwritten customs can be seen in the reaction to the rare circumstances in which one of them has not been observed. For nearly 150 years, the "no-third-term tradition" was a closely followed rule in presidential politics. The tradition began in 1796, when George Washington refused to seek a third term as President, and several later Presidents followed that lead. In 1940, and again in 1944, however, Franklin Roosevelt broke the no-third-term custom. He sought and won a third and then a fourth term in the White House. As a direct result, the 22nd Amendment was added to the Constitution in 1951, limiting the President to two terms. What had been an unwritten custom, an informal rule, became part of the written Constitution itself.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed cause-and-effect chart to answer this question: How have the day-to-day workings of government affected how we interpret the Constitution?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. (a) Did the Framers lay out the provisions of the Constitution in a general or specific manner? (b) In what way has the Framers' plan eased change throughout the last two centuries?
3. In what two ways has Congress "added flesh to the bones" of the Constitution? Give an example of each.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Predict Consequences Several Presidents have deployed troops to various conflicts without asking Congress for a declaration of war. What might be the consequences of setting aside this check (a) on the executive branch? (b) on Congress? (c) How might it change the interpretation of the Constitution?
5. Draw Conclusions (a) Name two examples of customs that have endured despite their absence in the Constitution. (b) How important is custom in the workings of the Federal Government? Why?

\section*{Quick Write}

Writing for Assessment: Outline and Answer Once you have gathered the details you need for the topic you selected in Section 1, write an outline to organize the information. Remembor you may nothave much time bare your outline brief and to the Make your out point. Use the outline as a framework to write your response.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Legislation, executive action, court decisions, political parties, and customs can influence our interpretation of the Constitution. Laws passed by Congress flesh out and define broad provisions in the Constitution. The President's use of executive agreements, power as commander in chief, and other interpretations of powers granted under the Constitution can expand executive power. By interpreting and applying the Constitution to cases, the courts clarify what actions are and are not permissible. Parties nominate candidates and influence much of the work of government. Government follows unwritten customs that take on the force of written law.
2. (a) general (b) This enabled the flexibility to change through interpretation and practice.
3. First, Congress has passed laws to spell out the provisions of the Constitution. For example, the Judiciary Act of 1789 set up the federal court system. Second, Congress has added to the Constitution by the way it has used its powers. For example, Congress has defined what commerce it has the power to regulate by the way it exercises its commerce power in laws.
4. (a) broadens the President's powers as commander in chief (b) reduces Congress's ability to control use of troops (c) It could negate the constitutional power Congress holds to declare war.
5. (a) sample response: the makeup of the Cabinet and senatorial courtesy (b) Very important. Custom provides rules that were not laid down in the Constitution but are still important to a smoothly-running government.
QUICK WRITE Students should write an outline using the details they gathered, and then use the outline to write their assessment essay.

The Six Basic Principles
\begin{tabular}{|ll|}
\hline Popular Sovereignty & The people give the government its power. \\
\hline Limited Government & \begin{tabular}{l} Government has only those powers that the people \\ give it.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Separation of Powers & \begin{tabular}{l}
The powers of government are split among the \\ judicial, legislative, and executive branches.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Checks and Balances & \begin{tabular}{l}
Each branch has the power to check the other two \\ branches.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Judicial Review & \begin{tabular}{l}
The courts have the power to determine if \\ government actions violate the Constitution.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Federalism & \begin{tabular}{l}
The powers of government are divided between the \\ Federal Government and the States.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary} popular sovereignty \(p .69\) limited government \(p .69\) constitutionalism \(p .70\) rule of law \(p .70\) separation of powers p. 70 checks and balances p. 72 veto \(p\). 72 judicial review p. 73 unconstitutional \(p .78\) federalism \(p .75\) amendment \(p .78\)
ratification \(p .79\) formal amendment \(p .79\) Bill of Rights \(p .82\) executive agreement \(p, 87\) treaty \(p .87\) electoral college \(\rho .87\)
Gabinet p. 87
senatorial courtesy \(p\). 88

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the Constitution, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Sobel, Syl. The U.S. Constitution and You. Barron's Educational Series, 2001
L2 B jornlund, Lydia. The U.S. Constitution: Blueprint for Democracy. Lucent Books, Inc., 1999.
L3 Lane, Eric and Michael Oreskes. The Genius of America: How the Constitution Saved Our Country—and Why It Can Again. Bloomsbury USA, 2007.
L4 Amar, Akhil Reed. America's Constitution: A Biography. Random House, 2005.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Test-Taking Skills A few simple strategies should help most students improve their performance on tests. A positive attitude toward the test and their own abilities is top priority. Beyond that, students should scan the entire test before beginning to work. Using this approach, they should answer the easiest questions first, and then focus on the more difficult ones. This strategy boosts confidence, and the simpler questions may contain information that helps with the more difficult ones. When answering questions, students should be sure to read the entire question before answering and to read any instructions thoroughly. If they find a question confusing, they should ask the teacher for clarification. Focusing on one question at a time can help with concentration. Finally, if students find themselves getting anxious, they should stop working and take a few deep breaths to help them relax.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debate, p. 81
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) The executive branch may veto legislation and call special sessions of Congress. The legislative branch may override a President's veto, impeach a President, and approve appointments and treaties. (b) The Framers feared that one branch would gain too much power, or that the presidency would become a monarchy. These checks protect against such abuses of power.
2. (a) The Massachusetts constitution restricts each branch of government from performing the duties of the other two branches. (b) By preventing the concentration of power in any one group, this separation of powers will require government officials to operate within the law.
3. (a) The Framers wanted to make sure that the people would be the source of government power and that government would remain under the rule of law. (b) judicial branch (c) through presidential power to name federal judges and the Senate's right to approve those appointments
4. (a) It suggests the judicial branch's ability to declare laws made by Congress as unconstitutional. (b) The members of Congress are not above the law of the Constitution when they create legislation.

\section*{SECTION 2}
5. (a) through proposal by a two-thirds vote in each house of Congress and ratification by three fourths of the State legislators (b) Both national and State levels are involved in the amendment process.
6. (a) the Civil War (b) election of Franklin D. Roosevelt to four terms as President
7. (a) When Congress proposes an amendment, it is not making law, so the proposal need not go to the President to sign or veto. (b) Possible response: I agree. Ratification of an amendment requires popular support. A veto is a check by the President on the power of Congress. It was not intended as a check on the will of the people.
8. The Framers provided an amendment process to give the Constitution flexibility to meet future needs. They promoted federalism by including both the national and State levels in the amendment process. Their goal of popular sovereignty is reflected in the fact that an amendment requires broad popular support to win ratification by 38 of the 50 States.

Chapter Assessment

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) What checks exist between the legislative and executive branches? (b) How do these checks represent the intentions of the Framers?
2. Reread the excerpt from the Massachusetts Constitution in Section 1. (a) What restrictions does it put on the three branches of the State government? (b) What is meant by "a government of laws and not of men"?
3. (a) Why were the Framers so careful to limit the powers of the Federal Government? (b) Which branch of the Federal Government seems to have the least amount of Federal Government seems to have the least amount of checks against its power? (c) How might the power of checks against its power? (c) this branch be further limited?
4. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) Which checks on government does this cartoon suggest? (b) How does it reflect "a government of laws and not of men"?

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity Propose your own amendment to the Constitution.
(a) Research a current government issue, something that you feel should be made a permanent part of the Constitution.
(b) Create an outline of arguments for and against your proposed addition to the Constitution. (c) Create a plan detailing which method you would use to get your amendment proposed and ratified.
(d) Bring your amendment before the class and explain why it should be passed.

Section 2
5. (a) Of the four methods of formal amendment, which has been used the most to amend the Constitution? (b) How does this method preserve the intention of the Framers to create a federal government?
6. In most cases, amendments have been added as the result of a specific issue. What issue gave rise to (a) the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments? (b) the 22nd Amendment?
7. (a) When an amendment is proposed, why is it not sent to the President to sign or veto? (b) Do you agree with this practice? Why or why not?
8. How does the process of constitutional amendment reflect the goals of the Framers?

\section*{Section 3}
9. (a) How have party practices changed the way we interpret the Constitution? (b) How did the Framers-in particular, George Washington - feel about political parties? (c) Do you agree with Washington's assessment of political parties? Why or why not?
10. (a) List two ways in which custom has influenced government. (b) How important is custom to our government?
Writing About Government
11. Use your Quick Write exercises to write a brief essay answering the question you chose. Make sure that you use your outine as the frame for your essay. Try to make your point in three or four paragraphs, with an introduction, a body, and a conclusion. See pp. S11-S12 in the Skills Handbook.

90 Chapter 3 Assessment

\section*{SECTION 3}
9. (a) Political parties have determined the system for nominating candidates, changed the original intent of the electoral college, and influenced the way the government operates. (b) The Framers were against political parties. (c) Possible response: I agree. Political parties influence the government without having a constitutional check on their power.
10. (a) Possible response: The president's cabinet was established; presidents choose only those appointees that the Senate will approve. (b) Possible response: Custom is very important to our government. Though it doesn't really affect the processes of government, it has affected the way in which the government carries out its processes.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Students should follow their outline to answer their chosen essay question.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Students should clearly describe the intent of their amendment and choose one of the formal amendment methods. They should present persuasive arguments for adopting

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Amendments for a Growing City}

In 1790, Congress chose a site along the Potomac River for the nation's capital. The map illustrates the plan for the new city. This site would belong to no State. It would be under the authority of Congress. The image reflects the city's small population at its beginnings. In 1950, Washington, D.C., was home to over 800,000 residents, who could not vote for their President. Document 1 shows the amendment that changed that situation.

\section*{Document 1}

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of Amendment.

Section 2. Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
-23rd Amendment

\section*{Use your knowledge of the Constitution, the amendment process, and} Documents 1 and 2 to answer Questions 1-3.

What was the purpose of the 23 rd Amendment to the Constitution?
A. to include voters of Washington, D.C., in all elections
B. to include voters of Washington, D.C., in presidential elections
C. to include members of Congress, living in Washington, D.C., in presidential elections
D. to include members of Congress, living in Washington, D.C., in all elections
2. Why did the Constitution not address the issue of voters in the national capital?
3. Pull It Together How does the example of Wash ington, D.C., help to explain why the Constitution has endured through changing times?

\section*{(9) GOVERNMENT ONLINE}

Online Documents
\begin{tabular}{|l|}
\hline Online Documents \\
\hline To find more primary sources on \\
\hline
\end{tabular} To find more prima amendments, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com
2. At the time it was built, Washington, D.C., was a sparsely populated town. The votes of its citizens would not amount to very much.
3. Because Washington, D.C., grew and its citizens wanted the right to vote, the Constitution had to be amended. The flexibility of the Constitution allowed for an amendment to allow Washington, D.C., citizens to vote in presidential elections.

L2Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.
their amendment and have prepared arguments to counter anticipated objections.
13. Possible discussion points: The Framers created the Constitution to be a flexible document. They formed it around basic principles rather than try to detail every possible situation. Therefore, changes can be made based on enduring principles rather than on specifics that could become outdated. The formal amendment process reflects two of these principles: popular sovereignty and federalism. Also, the almost-outline form of the Constitution leaves room for change through interpretation and practice to reflect growth and change in the nation.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 1}

What should be the goals of government?

\section*{CHAPTER 4}

Is the federal system the best way to govern the United States?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: What governments in our country make laws that you must obey? (National and State) How do these different governments know which responsibilities belong to them? (The Constitution divides powers between the National and State governments. ) In this chapter, students will learn about our nation's dual system of government called federalism. Then tell students to begin to further explore federalism by completing the Chapter 4 Essential Question Warmup Activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 4 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 180)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

You may wish to teach problem solving as a distinct skill within Section 1 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 4 Skills Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 186) to help students learn how to solve a problem. The worksheet asks students to read information about the Framers of the Constitution, determine the main problem they had to solve at the Philadelphia Convention of 1787, and choose possible solutions to the problem. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 187).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online The chapter WebQuest challenges} students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about federalism.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach Section 1, omitting the debate.
bLock 2: Teach Sections 2 and 3, and choose one Extend the Lesson feature

\section*{Pressed for Time}

To cover this chapter quickly, have students write definitions only for the powers in Section 1 and the grants in Section 3 Reading Comprehension worksheets, skipping the examples (Section 1) and location (Section 3). Then have students complete the first half of each chart on the Section 1 and Section 3 Core worksheets, identifying the power or clause covered by each scenario. Finish by drawing a flowchart on the board and having students fill in the seven steps in the process of admitting States to the Union (from the Section 2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet).

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will.
- define and give examples of national and State powers by completing a chart.
- examine scenarios and identify the type of power.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will..
- analyze the process of admission to the Union.
- identify and define types of federal aid to the States.
- understand how federal grants blur the division of power in our federal system by analyzing an article about the No Child Left Behind law.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will...
- define and give the location of the constitutional provisions that deal with States' interrelations.
- analyze scenarios in which States interact with other States to identify the constitutional provision that prohibits each action.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
\(\boxed{ } 1\)
Special Needs
L2
Basic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How is power divided between the Federal Government and the States?

\section*{section 1}

\section*{Federalism: Powers Divided}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How is power divided between the Federal Government and the States? Use a Venn diagram like the one below to take notes on the powers of the Federal and State Governments.

Political Dictionary
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- federalism & - reserved \\
- division of & powers \\
powers & - exclusive \\
- delegated & powers \\
powers & - concurrent \\
- expressed & powers \\
powers & - Supremacy \\
- implied powers & Clause \\
- inherent powers &
\end{tabular}
- inherent powers

Objectives
1. Define federalism and explain why the Framers chose this system.
2. Identify powers delegated to and denied to the National Government, and powers reserved for and denied to the States
3. Explain the difference between exclusive and concurrent powers.
4. Examine the Constitution as "the supreme Law of the Land."

Image Above: Members of the New York National Guard

Y
 vice at age 18, that most employers must pay their workers at the least a minimum wage set by act of Congress, and that no person can be denied a job on the basis of his or her race or ethnicity.

You also know that State law says that you must have a driver's license in order to drive a car, that it is illegal for anyone under 21 to buy alcoholic beverages, and that only those persons who can satisfy certain requirements can buy or own firearms.

Those three examples illustrate a very complex matter: the division of the powers of government in this country between the National Government, on the one hand, and the 50 States on the other. This section will help you to better understand that sometimes complicated, but very important, arrangement.

\section*{The Framers Choose Federalism}

When the Framers of the Constitution met at Philadelphia in 1787, they faced a number of difficult questions. Not the least of them: How could they possibly create a new central government that would be strong enough to meet the needs of the day and would, at the same time, preserve the already existing States?

Few of the Framers favored a strong central government based on the British model, and all of them knew that the Revolution had been fought in the name of local self-government. They also knew that the government established under the Articles of Confederation had proved too weak to deal with the new nation's many problems.

While the Framers favored a stronger national government, they also knew firsthand the importance of limiting federal powers. They were convinced that (1) governmental power inevitably poses a threat to individual liberty, (2) that therefore the exercise of governmental power must be restrained, and (3) that to divide governmental power, as federalism does, is to prevent its abuse.

\section*{Federalism Defined}

Federalism is a system of government in which a written constitution divides the powers of government on a territorial basis, between a central government and several regional governments, usually called states or provinces. Each of

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

To practice problem solving in this section, use the Chapter 4 Skills Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 186). You may wish to teach the skill explicitly before you discuss the Framers and the Constitutional Convention of 1787. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 187).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - The Framers created a federal system, with two levels of government: national and State. - The Constitution delegates powers to the National Government.
- The States exercise reserved powers-those not assigned to the National Government nor denied to the States. - The National Government and the States exercise some concurrent powers. - The Constitution is the supreme law of the land.
CONCEPTS: federalism, limited government, division of power, judicial review ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Dividing the powers of government helps prevent abuse of power. • Federalism promotes national unity, while giving States control over State and local matters.
those basic levels of government has its own substantial set of powers. Neither level, acting alone, can change the basic division of powers the constitution has created. Additionally, each level of government operates through its own agencies and acts directly through its own officials and laws.

The American system of government stands as a prime example of federalism. The basic design of that system is set out in the Constitution. The document provides for a division of powers between the National Government and the governments of the 50 States. That is, it assigns other powers to the National Government and certain powers to the States. This division of powers was implied in the original Constitution and then spelled out in the 10 th Amendment.

In effect, federalism produces a dual system of government. That is, it provides for two basic levels of government, each with its own field of authority, and each operating over the same people and the same territory at the same time.

In the American federal system, each of the two basic levels of government can make certain decisions and do certain things that the other level cannot. For example, only the Federal Government can regulate interstate commerce-that is, trade conducted between and among the various States. On the other hand, each of the States decides for itself whether those who commit certain crimes in that State can be put to death.

Federalism's major strength lies in this certain fact: It allows local action in matters of local concern and national action in matters of wider concern. Local traditions, needs, and desires vary from one State to another, and federalism allows for differing circumstances among the States.

Illustrations of this point are nearly endless. For example, in 48 States most gas stations are self-service; in New Jersey and Oregon, the law forbids motorists to pump their own gas. Only one State-North Dakota-does not require voters to register in order to cast their ballots. Only Nebraska

\section*{Reserved Powers}

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.
-10th Amendment

\section*{FROM THE CONSIITUTION}

Regulating Driving Issuing driver's licenses is a power reserved to the States, and every State has its own set of rules and requirements. Most States require a written, on-road, and vision test. However, the age at which teenagers can get a license and the rules new drivers must follow vary from State to State. Thus, in California, drivers under 20 must be accompanied by someone age 25 or older between the hours of 11 P.M and 5 A.M. In Massachusetts, a teenager cannot get a driver's license until age 16-and-a-half, at which point the new driver is given a restricted Junior Operator's License until age 18.
Constitutional Principles Under which of the six basic principles do the reserved powers fall?

States usually require driver's license applicants to take driving lessons.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 4, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 180)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 183)
\(\boxed{L 2}\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 184)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 185)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 186)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 187)
L3 Quiz A (p. 188)
L2 Quiz B (p. 189)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- define and give examples of national and State powers by completing a chart.
- examine scenarios and identify the type of power.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 183) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 184)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: Read Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution in your text and note the clause(s) granting Congress each of these powers:
1. raise and maintain armed forces
2. decide how citizens of other countries can become U.S. citizens
3. mint money
4. set up a court system
5. borrow money
6. declare war
7. set up a mail system
8. impose taxes
9. make laws as needed to carry out expressed powers
10. regulate foreign and interstate trade

\section*{Answers}

Constitutional Principles federalism

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that today they will discuss different types of powers assigned to the National Government and to the States under the federal system. You will return to their Bellringer answers later in the lesson.

\section*{COVER THE BASICS}

Ask students to take out the Reading Comprehension Worksheet. Point out that the first three powers listed on the chart are types of delegated powers. Call on a volunteer to define delegated powers. (powers granted to the National Government by the Constitution) Then have students define each power listed on the chart. (expressed powers: specific powers assigned to the National Government; implied powers: powers that are not expressly stated in the Constitution but that are reasonably suggested by the expressed powers; inherent powers: powers that belong to the National Government because it is a sovereign state in the world community; reserved powers: powers that the Constitution does not grant to the National Government nor deny to the States; concurrent powers: powers that both the National Government and the States possess and exercise; exclusive powers: powers that can be exercised by the National Government alone) Call on volunteers to give examples for each power and write these on the board. Display Transparency 4A, Establishing Federal Reserve Districts. Ask: What type of delegated power does the map represent? (implied power-It falls under the "Necessary and Proper Clause," which gives Congress the right to establish the Federal Reserve System of banks.)

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The 10th Amendment delegates those powers not given to the Federal Government and not denied to the States by the Constitution to the States.

\section*{reprieve}
n. postponement or delay in the execution of a sentence
has a unicameral (one-house) legislature Oregon is the only State that has legalized physician-assisted suicide. Only five States-Alaska, Delaware, New Hampshire, Montana, and Oregon-do not impose a general sales tax.

Federalism also allows for experimentation and innovation in solving public policy problems. Indeed, the several States have long been described as so many "laboratories of government." New approaches to difficult matters may originate in one State and then be adopted in another or even be put in place at the national level.

The Welfare Reform Act passed by Congress in 1996 affords a useful illustration of the point. That landmark statute revolutionized the Federal Government's approach to providing welfare assistance to millions of Americans on the lower rungs of the nation's economic ladder-and its basic features were first suggested by welfare administrators in the States of Wisconsin, California, and Michigan.

In its most noteworthy provisions, the law abolished the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program, replacing it with block grants to the States. The several States now have wide discretion in the determination of eligibility for financial assistance.

While federalism allows individual States to handle State and local matters, it also provides for the strength that comes from union. National defense and foreign affairs offer useful illustrations of this point. So, too, do domestic affairs. Take, for example, a natural disaster. When a flood, drought, hurricane, or other catastrophe hits a particular State, the resources of the National Government and all of the other States can be mobilized to aid the stricken area.

\section*{Powers of the Federal Government}

The National Government is a government of delegated powers. That is, that government has only those powers delegated (granted) to it in the Constitution. There are three distinct types of delegated powers: expressed, implied, and inherent.

The Expressed Powers The expressed powers are those powers delegated to the National Government in so many wordsspelled out, expressly, in the Constitution. Those powers are also sometimes called the "enumerated powers."

You can find most of the expressed powers in Article I, Section 8. There, in 18 separate clauses, the Constitution expressly gives 27 powers to Congress. They include the power to lay and collect taxes, to coin money, to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, to raise and maintain armed forces, to declare war, to fix standards of weights and measures, to grant patents and copyrights, and to do many other things.

Several other expressed powers are set out elsewhere in the Constitution, as well. Article II, Section 2 gives several powers to the President-including the power to act as commander in chief of the armed forces, to grant reprieves and pardons, to make treaties, and to appoint major federal officials. Article III grants "the judicial Power of the United States" to the Supreme Court and other courts in the federal judiciary. And, finally, several expressed powers also are found in various amendments to the Constitution; thus, the 16th Amendment gives Congress the power to levy an income tax.

The Implied Powers The implied powers are not expressly stated in the Constitution, but they are reasonably suggested-impliedby the expressed powers. The constitutional basis for the implied powers is found in one of the expressed powers. Article I, Section 8, Clause 18 gives Congress the "necessary and proper power." The Necessary and Proper Clause says that Congress has the power to make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}
-Article I, Section 8, Clause 18

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

IMPLIED POWERS Chief Justice John Marshall recognized the importance of the Necessary and Proper Clause. In McCullough v. Maryland, he wrote: "This provision is made in a constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and, consequently, to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which government should, in all future time, execute its powers, would have been to change, entirely, the character of the instrument, and give it the properties of a legal code." The Framers could not spell out every power the National Government might need in the future. With the Necessary and Proper Clause, they built in flexibility that would allow adaptation to future needs, thus enabling the Constitution to endure. With this ruling, the Marshall Court established that the National Government has implied powers not enumerated in the Constitution.

The Federal Government has the expressed power to print money. It has built many hydroelectric dams in the exercise of its many implied powers. Which clause gives the Federal Government the power to build dams?

Through decades of congressional and court interpretation, the words necessary and proper have come to mean, in effect, "convenient and useful." Indeed, the Necessary and Proper Clause is sometimes called the Elastic Clause, because, over time, it has been stretched to cover so many different situations.

Here are but a few of the thousands of examples of the exercise of implied powers: Congress has provided for the regulation of labor-management relations, the building of hydroelectric power dams, and the building of the 42,000 -mile interstate highway system. It has made federal crimes of such acts as moving stolen goods, gambling devices, and kidnapped persons across State lines. It has prohibited racial discrimination in granting all people access to such places as restaurants, theaters, hotels, and motels. Congress has taken these actions, and many more, because the power to do so is reasonably implied by just one of the expressed powers: the power to regulate interstate commerce. \({ }^{1}\)

The Inherent Powers The inherent powers are those powers that belong to

\footnotetext{
1 Article I, Section 8, Clause 3. The doctrine of implied powers is treated in greater detail in Chapter 11.
}
the National Government because it is the national government of a sovereign state in the world community. Although the Constitution does not expressly provide for them, they are powers that, over time, all national governments have come to possess. It stands to reason that the Framers of the Constitution intended the National Government they created would also hold those several constitutional powers.

The inherent powers are few in number. The major ones include the power to regulate immigration, to deport aliens, to acquire territory, to grant diplomatic recognition to other states, and to protect the nation against rebellion or other attempts to overthrow the government by force or violence.

One can argue that most of the inherent powers really are implied by one or more of the expressed powers. For example, the power to regulate immigration is suggested by the expressed power to regulate foreign trade. The power to acquire territory can be drawn from the treaty-making power and the several war powers. But the doctrine of inherent powers holds that it is not necessary to go to these lengths to find these powers in the Constitution. In short, these powers exist because the United States exists.

\section*{\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)} Why is the Necessary and Proper Clause some and Propercause so Elastic Clause?

\section*{deport}
v. to order that one be sent out of a country

\section*{Constitutional Principles}

Limited government Although the Necessary and Proper Clause of the Constitution seems to give Congress an almost unlimited power to make laws, there are limitations. The power of judicial review, established under Chief Justice John Marshall in Marbury v. Madison, allows the nation's courts to determine which laws are unconstitutional. This judicial power serves as a check on the power of the National Government by limiting the types of laws that Congress can enact to only those that are necessary and proper.

\section*{EXTEND THE DISCUSSION}

Use these questions to continue a discussion about federalism:
1. What are the main advantages of federalism? (possible response: creates strong National Government while allowing States to handle local concerns; restrains government power by dividing it among levels of government)
2. How does the Constitution settle conflicts that may arise between national law and State law? (It establishes the Constitution as the supreme law of the land.)
3. How does the central government in a federal system differ from the central government in a confederation? (Possible response: The central government is stronger in a federal system because it heads a sovereign state. In a confederation, the central government coordinates a loose alliance of independent groups.)
4. Is federalism an effective way to govern? (Possible response: Yes. It divides power, preventing abuses, while enabling local action in matters of local concern and national action in matters of wider concern.)
L4 Differentiate Have groups of students use the Internet or a library to find five news articles that provide examples of federalism. Examples may include any aspects of State, national, or shared powers. Have each group draw conclusions about federalism, based on their research.

\section*{Answers}

Powers of Federal Government the Necessary and Proper Clause, also called the Elastic Clause
Checkpoint It is stretched to give Congress the power to regulate many different aspects of the nation.

\section*{DISCUSS THE BELLRINGER ACTIVITY}

Invite volunteers to share their answers from the Bellringer activity, which asks students to locate the clause or clauses in Article I, Section 8, that grant specific powers to Congress. (1. Clauses 12-1 6; 2. Clause 4; 3. Clause 5; 4. Clause 9; 5. Clause 2; 6. Clause 11 ; 7. Clause 7; 8. Clause 1 ; 9. Clause \(18 ; 10\). Clause 3)

\section*{Powers Denied to the Federal Government}

Although the Constitution delegates certain powers to the National Government, it also denies certain powers to that level of government in order to keep federalism intact. It does so in three distinct ways.

First, the Constitution denies some powers to the National Government in so many words-expressly \({ }^{2}\) Among them are the powers to levy duties on exports; to take private property for public use without the payment of just compensation; to prohibit freedom of religion, speech, press, or assembly; to conduct illegal searches or seizures; and to deny to any person accused of a crime a speedy and public trial or a trial by jury.

Second, several powers are denied to the National Government because of the silence of the Constitution. Recall that the National Government is a government of delegated powers; it has only those powers the Constitution gives to it.

2 Most of the expressed denials of power are found in Article I, Section 9 and in the 1st through the 8 th amendments.

Among the many powers not granted to the National Government are the powers to do such things as create a public school system for the nation, enact uniform marriage and divorce laws, and set up units of local government. The Constitution says nothing that would give the National Government the power to do any of those things, expressly, implicitly, or inherently. In short, the lack of any such provi-sion-the silence of the Constitution-denies power to the National Government.

Third, some powers are denied to the National Government because of the federal system itself. Clearly the Constitution does not intend that the National Government should have the power to take any action that would threaten the existence of that system. For example, in the exercise of its power to tax, Congress cannot tax any of the States or any of their local units in the conduct of their various governmental functions. If it could, it would have the power to destroy-tax out of existence-one or more, or all, of the States. \({ }^{3}\)

3 But notice that when a State, or one of its local units, performs a so-called nongovernmental function-for example, maintains liquor stores, runs a bus system, or operates a farmers mar-ket-it is liable to federal taxation. We shall return to this point later, in Chapter 25 . later, in Chapter 25.

- President George W. Bush meets with Chancellor Angela Merkel of Germany at the 2007 G8 Summit as part of his diplomatic role.

\section*{Background}

LABORATORY OF GOVERNMENT About 45 million Americans lack health insurance. So far, no federal administration has succeeded in solving this important, but politically charged, problem. The power of States to enact their own laws in our federal system enables them to experiment with innovative solutions that could become a model for other States and for the nation as a whole. In 2006, Massachusetts became a "laboratory of government" on health insurance reform. It passed a bill requiring all residents to buy health insurance. Under this plan, insurance companies are providing a range of inexpensive policies from which to choose. People with low incomes can purchase plans subsidized by the State government, based on ability to pay. If the Massachusetts plan succeeds, it can serve as an important step toward universal healthcare in the United States.

\section*{The States}

The 50 States are the other half of the very complicated equation we call federalism. Their many-sided role in the American federal system is no less important than that of the National Government.

Powers Reserved to the States Recall, the 10th Amendment states that the States are governments of reserved powers. The reserved powers are those powers that the Constitution does not grant to the National Government and does not, at the same time, deny to the States.

Thus, any State can forbid persons under 18 to marry without parental consent. It can ban the sale of pornography, outlaw prostitution, and permit some forms of gambling and prohibit others. A State can require that doctors, lawyers, hairdressers, and plumbers be licensed in order to practice in the State. It can confiscate automobiles and other property used in connection with such illicit activities as drug trafficking. It can establish public schools, enact land use laws, regulate the services and restrict the profits of such public utilities as natural gas, oil, electric power, and telephone companies, and do much, much more.

In short, the sphere of powers held by each State-the scope of the reserved pow-ers-is huge. The States can do all of those things just mentioned, because the Constitution does not give the National Government the power to do those things, and it does not deny the States the power to do them.

How broad the reserved powers really are can be understood from this fact: Most of what government does in this country today is done by the States (and their local governments), not by the National Government. The point can also be seen from this fact: The reserved powers include the vitally important police power-the power of a State to protect and promote the public health, the public morals, the public safety, and the general welfare.

The Constitution does not grant expressed powers to theStates, withone notable exception. Section 2 of the 21 st Amendment gives the States a virtually unlimited power to regulate the manufacture, sale, and consumption of alcoholic beverages.

Powers Denied to the States Just as the Constitution denies many powers to the National Government, so it denies many powers to the States. Some of those powers are denied to the States in so many words. \({ }^{4}\) For example, no State can enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation. Nor can a State print or coin money or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Some powers are denied to the States inherently-that is, by the existence of the federal system. Thus, no State (and no local government) can tax any of the agencies or functions of the National Government. Remember, too, each State has its own constitution. Those documents also deny many powers to the States. \({ }^{5}\)

\section*{The Exclusive and the Concurrent Powers}

Most of the powers that the Constitution delegates to the National Government are exclusive powers. That is, they can be exercised only by the National Government; they cannot be exercised by the States under any circumstances.

Some of these powers are expressly denied to the States-for example, the power to coin money, to make treaties with foreign states, and to lay duties (taxes) on imports. Some of them are not expressly denied to the States but are, nonetheless, among the exclusive powers of the Federal Government because of the nature of the particular power involved. The power to regulate interstate commerce is a leading example of this point.

4 Most of those expressed prohibitions of powers to the States 4 (and so, too, to their local governments) are found in Article Section 10 and in the 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 24th, and 26 th Amendments.
5 Note the many provisions in your own State's constitution that deny various powers to your State and its many local governments. As you do, note the significance of these too-little governments. As you do, note the significance of these too-litue noticed words in the 10 th Amendment of the Federal Constitution: "or to the people." We shall look at State constitutions later, and in more detail, in Chapter 24.\(\frac{\text { confiscate }}{\text { v. to take or seize }}\) \(v\). to tak legally legally illicit adj illegal, unlawful, outlawed

\section*{Debate}
"It is my intention to curb the size and influence of the Federal establishment and to demand recognition of the distinction between the powers granted to the Federal Government and those reserved to the States or to the people. All of us need to be reminded that the Federal Government did not create the States; the States created the Federal Government. "
-President Ronald Reagan, first inaugural address
Ask students what President Reagan meant in the last sentence. Divide students into two teams and use the Debate strategy (p. T25) to organize a debate.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 4 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 185), which asks students to identify the types of power illustrated by various scenarios. Divide the class into groups. Explain that they should study each scenario in the first column and determine what type of power it illustrates. When students finish their worksheets, ask them to share their findings and explain their reasoning.
L1 L2 Differentiate Walk through the lesson as a class. Alternatively, divide the chart into several parts; have each team complete a few examples.
L4 Differentiate Have students complete the worksheet individually.
L4 Differentiate Give partners two index cards. Ask them to write down a new scenario on the front of each card and the type of power it illustrates on the back. Students might return to the examples on the Reading Comprehension Worksheet to help them generate ideas for new scenarios. When they finish, have students share their cards. Ask them to read the new scenarios and challenge students to identify the power illustrated.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The States hold some powers in order to preserve the federal system. Their powers provide a check on Federal Government, so it will not become too powerful.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Thomas Jefferson, a strong supporter of States' rights, once observed: "Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want for bread. " Ask students what Jefferson meant by this remark. Then have students create a cartoon about federalism's "tug-of-war" between the States and National Government. Cartoons might address Jefferson's comment or stand on their own.Differentiate Have students research Jefferson's terms as President and write a short essay about whether or not he applied his federalist principles to his own presidency

\section*{Concurrent Powers \\ Sharing Responsibility}

Some powers are exercised by both levels of government, as

If the States could exercise that power, trade between and among the States would be at best chaotic and at worst impossible. \({ }^{6}\)

Some of the powers delegated to the National Government are concurrent powers. That is, they are powers that both the National Government and the States possess and exercise. Those powers include the power to levy and collect taxes, to define crimes and set punishments for them, and to condemn (take) private property for public use.

The concurrent powers are held and exercised separately and simultaneously by the two basic levels of government. That is, the concurrent powers are those powers that the Constitution does not grant exclusively to the National Government and that, at the same time, does not deny to the States. The concurrent powers, in short, are those powers that make it possible for a federal system of government to function.

\footnotetext{
The States cannot regulate interstate commerce as such, bu they can and do affect that trade. For example, in regulating highway speeds, the States regulate not only those vehicles operating within the State, but also those operating from State to State. Generally, the States can affect interstate commerce but they cannot impose an unreasonable burden upon it.
}

Although government in the United States is often discussed in terms of three levels-national, State, and local-there are, in fact, only two basic levels in the federal system: the National Government and the State governments. The more than 87,000 units of local government in the United States today are subunits of the various State governments. Local governments can provide services, regulate activities, collect taxes, and do many other things only because the State has given them the power to do so. In short, when local governments exercise their powers, they are actually exercising State powers.

Another way of putting all of this is to remind you of a point that we first made in Chapter 1. Each of the 50 States has a unitary form of government-an arrangement in which a central government that creates local units of government for its own convenience.

\section*{Supreme Law of the Land}

As you have just seen, the division of powers in the American federal system produces a dual system of government, one in which two basic

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 4B, Power Volleyball, when you discuss concurrent powers. Tell students that the responsibility to provide for the poor is shared between the National Government and the States. Ask: What do the volleyball players represent? (the National Government and the State governments) What does the volleyball represent? (the responsibility to provide for the poor) Which level of government is taking responsibility for the poor? (neither; they are batting the poor back and forth) What problem in our federal system does this cartoon illustrate? (It is not always clear which level of government has responsibility for solving a particular problem.)

\section*{Answers}

Concurrent Powers Possible response: Crimes can occur in local areas or across State lines. Also, both National and State governments enact laws. Police forces are needed to investigate crimes wherever they occur and enforce both national and State laws.
levels of government operate over the same territory and the same people at the same time. Such an arrangement is bound to result in conflicts between national and State law.

The Supremacy Clause The Framers anticipated those conflicts-and so they wrote the Supremacy Clause into the Constitution. That provision declares that

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.
—Article VI, Section 2
The Constitution and the laws and treaties of the United States are "the supreme Law of the Land." This means that the Constitution ranks above all other forms of law in the United States. Acts of Congress and treaties stand immediately beneath the Constitution. \({ }^{7}\)

The Supremacy Clause has been called the "linchpin of the Constitution" because it joins the National Government and the States into a single governmental unit, a federal government. In other words, the Supremacy Clause is the provision in the Constitution that makes the complex federal system a working reality.

Our political history is studded with challenges to the concept of national supremacy. Recall that this nation fought a horrific Civil War over that very matter in the years 1861 to 1865 . Those who have rejected the concept of national supremacy have insisted that the 7 Acts of Congress and treaties stand on equal planes with one another. Neither can confict with any provision in the Consitution. another. Neither can confict with any provision in the Constution.

In the rare case of confict between the provisions of an act and those of a treaty, the one more recently adopted takes precedence as the latest expression of the sovereign people's will. The Supreme Courthas regularly held to that position from the first cases it decided on the point, The Head Money Cases, in 1884.

Constitution is, at base, a compact among sovereign States, rather than one between and among "We the People of the United States." They believe that the powers that compact does give to the National Government are to be very narrowly defined and applied. Echoes of that view can still be found in contemporary American politics.

The Supreme Court and Federalism The Supreme Court is the umpire in the federal system. One of its chief duties is to apply the Constitution's Supremacy Clause to the conflicts that the dual system of government inevitably produces.

The Court was first called to settle a clash between a national and a State law in 1819. The case, McCulloch v. Maryland, involved the controversial Second Bank of the United States. The bank had been chartered by Congress in 1816. In 1818, the Maryland legislature, hoping to cripple the bank, placed a tax on all notes issued by its Baltimore branch. James McCulloch, the branch cashier, refused to pay the tax, and the Maryland courts convicted him for that refusal. (See pp. 317-318.)

The Supreme Court unanimously reversed the Maryland courts. Speaking for the Court, Chief Justice John Marshall based ( Analyzing Cartoons This cartoon ran in Harper's Weekly when Congress attempted to remove President Andrew Johnson. How does the "disastrous result" illustrate the Supremacy Clause?

\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How is a local government different from a State government?

\section*{pursuance} n. a carrying out of an execution of something

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{L3 C \\ Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students'} work.
L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 188)
Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 189)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Myths and Misperceptions} reverse delegation The Constitution reserves a number of powers for the States. But would you be surprised to learn that some of these powers are surrendered back to the National Government? The reason is simply that billions of dollars are at stake. The National Government often attaches preconditions to federal grants-in-aid. If a State wants the money, it has to comply with those preconditions, up certain deci-sion-making powers in the process. For example, the National Highway System Designation Act of 1995 repealed a law that had required that States, as a condition of receiving federal-aid highway assistance, adhere to a national maximum speed limit.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A local government derives its powers from the State government, and governs only by the consent of the State government. A State government derives powers from the Constitution which cannot be taken away.
Analyzing Cartoons When the "boy" (Andrew Johnson) tries to handle the large Constitution book, it falls on him, signifying that even the President is not immune to the supremacy of the Constitution.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Division of powers \\
(Questions 1, 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students summarize the 10th Amend- \\ ment in their own words.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Delegated powers \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write several examples of each type of \\ delegated power on cards. Have students \\ separate them into categories: expressed, \\ implied, inherent.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Reserved powers \\
(Questions 4, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write examples of reserved powers on \\ cards along with powers denied to the \\ States. Have students pick a card and \\ identify whether it is an example of a \\ reserved power.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Concurrent powers \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a word web of \\ concurrent powers, with specific examples \\ on each spoke.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
the decision squarely on the Constitutions Supremacy Clause:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}
imperil . to endanger, put at risk, threaten [If] any one proposition could command the universal assent of mankind, we might expect it would be this-that the government of the Union, though limited in its powers, is supreme within its sphere of action. . . . [T]he states have no power . . . to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control, the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by Congress. . . \({ }^{8}\)
—McCulloch v. Maryland, 1819
Since the decision in this landmark case, it has been impossible to overstate the significance of the role of the Court as the umpire of the federal system. Had the Court not assumed this role, the American federal system and probably the United States itself could not have survived its early years. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once made that point in these words:

8 The case is also critically important in the development of the constitutional system because, in deciding it, the Court for the first constitutional system because, in deciding it, the Court for the first time upheld the doctrine of implied powers. It also held that the National Government is immune from any form of State taxation, a point we shall return to in Chapter 25 .

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}
do not think the United States would come to an end if we [the Court] lost our power to declare an Act of Congress void. I do think the Union would be imperiled if we could not make that declaration as to the laws of the several States.
-Collected Legal Papers
The Supreme Court first held a State law to be unconstitutional in a case from Georgia, Fletcher v. Peck, in 1810 . The Court found that a Georgia law passed in 1794 that sold some 35 million acres of public land for 1.5 cents an acre amounted to a contract between the State and Peck and other buyers. Despite the obvious corruption involved, it found that the legislature's later (1796) repeal of the law violated the Constitution's Contract Clause (Article I, Section 10, Clause 1). That provision prohibits the States the power to pass any "Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts." Over the centuries since then, the High Court has found thousands of State laws and local ordinances unconstitutional, but it has upheld the constitutionality of thousands of others.

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a }\end{aligned}\)} Journal response to the chapter
1. Guiding Question Use your completed Venn diagram to answer this question: How is power divided between the Federal Government and the States?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) How is power divided under the concept of federalism? (b) What is the purpose of this division of powers?
3. (a) What are the three kinds of delegated powers held by the Federal Government? (b) Cite two examples of inherent powers.
4. (a) Cite two examples of reserved powers held by the States. (b) How does the Constitution determine which powers are to be held by the States?

Critical Thinking
5. Draw Conclusions (a) Why might the Framers have wanted to reserve specific powers for the States? (b) Why might they have wanted to deny certain powers, such as the power to make alliances or enter into treaties, to the States?
6. Make Comparisons (a) What purpose does government at a local level serve? (b) How are the delegated powers at the local level different from the delegated powers at the State level?

\section*{Quick Write}

Compare and Contrast: Choose and Research a Topic A compareand Research a Topic A compare-contrast essay holds two subjects side-by-side and looks at their differing and similar aspects. For this exercise, compare and contrast State powers with the powers of the Federal Government. Research and take notes on the various powers held by the State and Federal Governments.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Constitution grants specific powers, such as controlling interstate trade, to the Na tional Government. It reserves to the States all powers not expressly granted to the National Government nor denied to the States. National and State governments share concurrent powers, such as the power to tax.
2. (a) Power is divided on a territorial basis, between a central government and several regional governments. (b) The division of powers helps prevent abuse of power.
3. (a) expressed, implied, and inherent
(b) regulate immigration, deport aliens, acquire territory, grant diplomatic recognition to foreign states, protect against rebellion or violent overthrow of the government
4. (a) establish public schools; issue licenses; enact land use laws; regulate public utilities; protect and promote public health, public morals, public safety, and general welfare (b) The Constitution reserves to the States all powers not expressly granted to the National Government nor denied to the States.
5. (a) Possible response: The Framers wanted to limit the National Government to only those powers expressly granted to it, and give broad authority for unstated powers to the States.
(b) The Framers wanted to preserve the Union by denying the States powers that only a national government should have.
6. (a) to exercise powers delegated by the State (b) The Constitution delegates powers to the States. The States delegate powers to local governments.
QUICK WRITE Students should research and take notes on federal and State powers.

\section*{section 2}

\section*{The National Government and the 50 States}

Guiding Question
According to the Constitution, what must the National Government guarantee to each State? Use a chart like the one below to take notes on the Federal Government's responsibilities.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|l|}{\multirow[t]{2}{*}{Responsibilities of the Federal Government}} \\
\hline & & \\
\hline Republican & & \\ \hline Government & & \\
\hline & & - \\
\hline - & - & - \\
\hline & & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- enabling act
- act of
- categorical grant
- block grant
- project grant
- grants-in-aid

\section*{Objectives}
1. Summarize the obligations that the Constitution places on the National Government with regard to the States.
2. Explain the process for admitting new States to the Union
3. Examine the many and growing areas of cooperative federalism

Image Above: Residents of Hawaii celebrate their newly acquired Statehood in 1959

Have you ever really focused on the words United States, and what those two words say? The United States is a union of States, the several States joined together, the States united.

The Framers of the Constitution created that union of States, and they intended to preserve it. To that end, the Constitution (1) requires the National Government to guarantee certain things to the States and (2) makes it possible for the National Government to do certain things for the States.

\section*{The Nation's Obligations}

The Constitution places several obligations on the National Government for the benefit of the States. Most of them are found in Article IV.

Republican Form of Government The Constitution requires the National Government to "guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government."9 The Constitution does not define "Republican Form of Government," and the Supreme Court has regularly refused to do so. The term is generally understood to mean a "representative government."

The Supreme Court has held that the question of whether a State has a republican form of government is a "political question." That is, it is one to be decided by the political branches of the government-the President and Con-gress-and not by the courts. \({ }^{10}\)

The only extensive use ever made of the republican-form guarantee came in the years immediately following the Civil War. Congress declared that several southern States did not have governments of a republican form, and refused to admit senators and representatives from those States until they had ratified the 13th, 14th, and 15 th amendments and broadened their laws

\section*{Article IV, Section 4. The provision is sometimes called "the Guarantee Clause."}
\(\mathbf{1 0}\) The leading case here is Luther v. Borden (1849). This case grew out of Dorr's Rebellion, a revolt led by Thomas W. Dorr against the State of Rhode Island in 1841-1842. Dorr and his followers had written a new constitution for the State. When they tied to enforce the new document, the governor in office under the original constitution dedared martial law (emporary rule by military authorities), and called on the Federal Govermment for help. President John Tyler took steps to put down the revolt, and it quickly collapsed. Athough the question of which of the competing governments was the legitimate one was a major issue in Luther v. Borden, the Supreme Courtrefused to decide the matter.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - The National Government guarantees the States representative government, protection from invasion and internal disorder, and territorial integrity. - Congress has the power to admit new States. - The federal system involves a range of powers shared between the Federal Government and the States.

CONCEPTS: federalism, representative government, cooperation
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Federalism produces a dual system of government under which the States and the Federal Government govern the same people and same territory at the same time. - The Federal Government and the States operate in a spirit of cooperation, with some inevitable conflict.

GUIDING QUESTION
According to the Constitution, what must the National Government guarantee to each State?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Responsibilities of the Federal Government} \\
\hline & \multicolumn{2}{|l|}{} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Republican Government \\
- Representative government
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Protection from Invasion and Internal Disorder \\
- Protect each State against foreign attack \\
- Restore order within States
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Respect for Territory \\
- Recognize legal existence of States \\
- Recognize physical boundaries of States
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- analyze the process of admission to the Union.
- identify and define types of federal aid to the States
- understand how federal grants blur the division of power in our federal system by analyzing an article about the No Child Left Behind law.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 190) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 192)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

There are several opportunities in this section's activities for students to do research. You may want to review tips on drawing inferences and conclusions in the Skills Handbook, p. S19.

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 194), which examines one aspect of the cooperative relationship between the National Government and the States. Have students study the table and answer the questions.
L1 42 Differentiate Have students answer only questions 1 through 3.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{COVER THE BASICS}

Call students' attention to the map on the territorial expansion of the United States on p.105. Ask: When did our State join the Union? How many States were part of the United States at that time? How much of the nation's present area did the United States cover at that time?
Then ask students to take out the Reading Comprehension Worksheet. Call on a volunteer to explain grant-in-aid programs. (The Federal Government gives money or other resources to the States and/or their cities, counties, and other local units. ) Have students name the three types of grants-in-aid (categorical grants, block grants, project grants). Then ask them to define and give examples of each type of federal aid to the States.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is another term for "republican form of government"?
integrity
\(n\). a single, undivided whole

\section*{insurrection}
n. a revolt against a
government
to recognize the voting and other rights of African Americans.

Invasion and Internal Disorder The Constitution states that the National Government must also

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}
protect each of them [the States] against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.
—Article IV, Section 4
Today it is clear that an invasion of any one of the States would be met as an attack on the United States itself. This constitutional guarantee is therefore now of little significance.

That was not the case in the late 1780 s . Then it was not at all certain that all 13 States would stand together if a foreign power attacked one of them. So, before the States agreed to give up their war-making powers, each demanded that an attack on any one of the States would be met as an attack on all of them.

The federal system assumes that each of the 50 States will keep the peace within its own borders. Thus, the primary responsibility for curbing insurrection, riot, or other internal disorder rests with the individual States. However, the Constitution does recognize that a State might not be able to control some situations. It therefore guarantees protection against internal disorder, or what the Constitution calls "domestic Violence."

The use of federal force to restore order within a State has been a rare event historically. Several instances did occur in the 1960s, however. When racial unrest exploded into violence in Detroit during the "long, hot summer" of 1967, President Lyndon Johnson ordered units of the United States Army into the city. He acted at the request of the governor of Michigan, George Romney, and only after Detroit's police and firefighters, supported by State police and National Guard units, could not control riots, arson, and looting in the city. In 1968, again at the request of the governors involved, federal troops were sent into Chicago and Baltimore to help put down the violence that erupted following the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr. In 1992, President George H.W. Bush ordered members of the National Guard, the Army, and the Marines to Los Angeles to restore order after three days of rioting. The violence was sparked by the acquittal of four white officers charged with beating Rodney King, a black motorist, after he led them on a highspeed chase.

Normally, a President has sent troops into a State only in answer to a request from its governor or legislature. If national laws are being broken, national functions interfered with, or national property endangered, however, a President does not need to wait for such a plea. \({ }^{11}\)

The ravages of nature-storms, floods, drought, forest fires, and the like-can be far more destructive than human violence. Here, too, acting to protect the States against "domestic Violence," the Federal Government stands ready to aid stricken areas.

Respect for Territorial Integrity The National Government is constitutionally bound to respect the territorial integrity of each of the States. That is, the National Government must recognize the legal existence and the physical boundaries of each State.

The basic scheme of the Constitution imposes this obligation. Several of its provisions do so, as well. For example, Congress must include, in both of its houses, members chosen in each one of the States. \({ }^{12}\) Recall, too, that Article V of the Constitution declares that no State can be deprived of its equal representation in the United States Senate without its own consent.

11 President Grover Cleveland ordered federal troops to end rioting in the Chicago rail yards during the Pullman Strike in 1894 despite the objections of lllinois Governor William Altgeld. The Supreme Court upheld his actions in In re Debs (1895). The Court found that rioters had threatened federal property and impeded the flow of the mail and interstate commerce. Thus, more than "domestic Violence" was involved. Since then, several Presidents have acted without a request from the State involved. Most recently, President Dwight Eisenhower did so at Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1957, and President John Kennedy did so at the University of Misssissippi in 1962 and at the University of Alabama in 1963. In each of those instances, the President acted to halt the unlawtul obstruction of school integration orders issued by the federal courts.
\(\mathbf{1 2}\) In the House, Article I, Section 2, Clause 1; in the Senate, Article I, Section 3, Clause 1 and the 17th Amendment.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 4, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 190)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 192)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 194)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 195)
L2 ELL Core Worksheet (p. 198)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 200)
L3 Quiz A (p. 203)
L2 Quiz B (p. 204)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint representative government

\section*{Admitting New States}

That new States would soon join the original 13 as members of the new United States was generally accepted as fact in the 1780s. To that end, the Congress of the Confederation, meeting as the Framers were drafting what was to become the Constitution, enacted the Northwest Ordinance of 1787-clearly, the most important measure passed by that body in its eight years as the government of the United States.

The ordinance anticipated the creation of new States in what was then known as the Northwest Territory-a roughly defined area lying north of the Ohio River and west of New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. The measure provided for the eventual Statehood of any sector in that region that acquired a population of at least 60,000 persons. It made provision for local self-government, for civil and political rights, and for the support of education. An earlier measure, the Ordinance of 1785, had created the township system for the dividing of land for the support of local schools. Its provisions were folded into the 1787 enactment.

The Northwest Ordinance was readopted by the new Congress under the Constitution in 1790 , and it served as the basis for later legislation regarding the nation's territorial possessions. It established that those territories were not to be kept in a second-class

\section*{Territorial Expansion of the U.S.}

Analyzing Maps Until the early 20th century, the Federal Government steadily acquired land and admitted new States (indicated by years). From which 19th-century acquisition were the most States created?

\section*{Background}

PUERTO RICO: OUR 51ST STATE? As a U.S. commonwealth, Puerto Rico is not quite a State and not quite an independent nation. Puerto Ricans are U.S. citizens and can vote for local officials, but not for the President. They can elect a representative to Congress, who can vote in committee but not on the House floor. In 1967, 1993, and 1998, Puerto Rico held local plebiscites, asking voter preference: Statehood, independence, or commonweal th. Each time, voters chose commonweal th. In 2008, the Puerto Rico Democracy Act emerged from congressional committee. Display Transparency 4C, Puerto Rico Democracy Act of 2007. If the bill passes into law, Puerto Ricans will be able to hold a U.S. -authorized vote on Statehood for the first time. Ask: What is the purpose of the Act? (to provide a self-determination process)

\section*{DISCUSS}

Use these questions to facilitate a discussion of federal aid.
1. Why are grants from the Federal Government important? (Possible response: In our federal system, the States and National Government share responsibility for the same citizens, and therefore should share the costs. Also, the Federal Government has a greater ability to raise funds than do State governments.)
2. In what ways does federal aid help your community? (Answers will vary.)
3. How can federal aid help to eliminate disparities among regions, States, and communities? (Possible response: Communities of lower-income residents cannot raise as much tax money as can wealthier communities. Federal aid to lower-income communities can make up the difference, providing greater equality in services.)
4. Critics say that grants give the Federal Government too much power in making public policy at State and local levels. Do you agree or disagree? Give your reasons. (Possible answers: I agree because many of the grants come with strings attached, which forces the States to comply in order to receive the grants. OR: I disagree, because State and local governments can decide whether or not to accept federal aid.)

\section*{DISCUSS THE BELLRINGER ACTIVITY}

Ask volunteers to share their answers about the FEMA disaster process. (1. Steps 1, 2, 4; 2. Steps 5, 6; 3. Step 3; 4. Although the States hold primary responsibility for dealing with local issues, occasions occur when they cannot fulfill these obligations alone. At those times, the Constitution provides for the intervention, support, or cooperation of the National Government. 5. Article N, Section 4: the Invasion and Internal Disorder provision)
Tell students to go to the Interactivity to learn more about the territorial expansion of the U.S.

\footnotetext{
Answers
Analyzing Maps the Louisiana Purchase (1803)
}

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 4 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 195), which contains excerpts from an article about the No Child Left Behind Act, along with questions about the article. Explain that the education reform law called No Child Left Behind is a federal grant-in-aid program that gives money for education. Have students read the article silently. Allow time for students to discuss the questions and share their responses.
L2 ELL Differentiate Have students complete the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 198), which includes a shorter editorial and vocabulary support.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students take turns reading each paragraph aloud, while the rest of the class follows along silently. Stop to paraphrase each paragraph.
L4 D
Differentiate Have students read the article and answer the questions on their own.

\section*{CONTINUE THE ACTIVITY}

Have students do an Internet search to learn about the current status of No Child Left Behind.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of Louisiana Statehood.

\section*{Louisiana Becomes a State}

Louisiana was once part of a larger territory bought from France by President Thomas Jefferson in 1803. The Louisiana Purchase (right) nearly doubled the size of the country. Those who lived within the area became citizens of the United States, and the land was divided into territories. The Territory of Orleans constituted what is now Louisiana. By 1810, 77,000 people lived there, and many wished to acquire Statehood. Orleans submitted a petition for admittance to Congress in 1812, and on April 30, 1812, Louisiana became the 18th State. Which power gave Jefferson the right to acquire territory?
government ontine Audio Tour
Audio Tour
Listen to a guided audio tour of Listen to a guided audio Louisiana Statehood at Louisiana Statehood at PearsonSuccessNet.com
status but were to be groomed for Statehood on an equal footing with the existing States.

Congress and New States Only Congress has the power to admit new States to the Union, and the Constitution places only one restriction on that power: A new State cannot be created by taking territory from one or more of the existing States without the consent of the legislature(s) of the State(s) involved. \({ }^{13}\)

Congress has admitted 37 States since the original 13 formed the Union, as the map on page 105 shows. Four States (Kentucky, Tennessee, Maine, and West Virginia) were created from parts of already existing States. Texas and Vermont were independent republics before admission. California was admitted shortly after being ceded to the United States by Mexico.

13 Article IV, Section 3, Clause 1. Some argue that this restriction was violated with West Virginia's admission in 1863 . It was formed from the 40 western counties that had broken away Crom Virginia over secession from te Union at the start of the by a minority of the members of the Virginia legislature - those by a represented the 40 western counties Congress accepted their action holding that they were the only group legally capable of acting as the Virginia legislature at the time.

Each of the other 30 States entered the Union only after a longer period of time, frequently more than 15 years, as an organized territory.

Admission Procedure The process of admission to the Union is usually simple. The area desiring Statehood first asks Congress for admission. If and when Congress chooses, it passes an enabling act, an act directing the people of the territory to frame a proposed State constitution. A territorial convention prepares the constitution, which is then put to a popular vote in the proposed State. If the voters approve the document, it is submitted to Congress for its consideration. If Congress still agrees to Statehood after reviewing the proposed constitution, it passes an act of admission, an act creating the new State. If the President signs the act, the new State enters the Union.

The two newest States, Alaska and Hawaii, shortened the usual admission process. Each adopted a proposed constitution without waiting for an enabling act, Hawaii in 1950 and Alaska in 1956. Both became States in 1959.

\section*{How Government Works}

Paths to statehood Have students read the "How Government Works" feature describing how Louisiana became a State. Then divide them into small groups. Ask each group to select a State. Instruct the groups to research the history of their chosen State and create a poster-size timeline showing key events along the State's path to statehood. Each timeline should include the dates of the enabling act and act of admission, if these acts were passed for that State. Encourage students to add illustrations to their timeline. Display the timelines in the classroom.

\section*{Answers \\ Louisiana Becomes a State inherent power}

Conditions for Admission Before finally admitting a new State, Congress has often set certain conditions. For example, in 1896, Utah was admitted on condition that its constitution outlaw polygamy, the practice of having more than one spouse at a time. In admitting Alaska to the Union, Congress forever prohibited that State from claiming title to any lands legally held by any Native American.

Each State enters the Union on an equal footing with each of the other States. Thus, although Congress can set certain conditions like those just described, it cannot impose conditions of a political nature. For example, when Oklahoma was admitted to the Union in 1907, Congress said the State could not move its capital from Guthrie to any other place before 1913. In 1910, however, the Oklahoma legislature moved the State's capital to Oklahoma City. When that step was challenged, the Supreme Court held, in Coyle v. Smith (1911) that Congress can set conditions for a prospective State's admission, but those conditions cannot be enforced if they compromise the independence of a State to manage its own internal affairs.

Consider one more example: President William Howard Taft vetoed a resolution to admit Arizona to the Union in 1911. He did so because Arizona's proposed constitution provided that members of the State's judiciary could be recalled (removed from office) by popular vote. This provision meant, said Taft, that in deciding cases a judge would have to keep one eye on the law and the other on public opinion. In response to the President's concern, Arizona removed the recall section from the document. In 1912 Congress passed, and the President signed, another act of admission for Arizona. Almost immediately after admission, however, the new State amended its new constitution to provide for the recall of judges. That provision remains a valid part of Arizona's constitution today.

\section*{Cooperative Federalism}

Remember, federalism produces a dual system of government, one in which two basic levels operate over the same people and the same territory at the same time. As a result of this complex arrangement, competition, tensions, and conflict are a regular and ongoing part of American federalism. In short, the American federal system is much like a tug-of-war, a continuing power struggle between the National Government and the States.

The American federal system also involves a broad area of shared powers. That is, in addition to the two separate spheres of power held and exercised by the two basic levels of government, there are large and growing areas of cooperation between them.

Federal Grants-in-Aid Perhaps the bestknown examples of this intergovernmental cooperation are the many federal grants-inaid programs-grants of federal money or other resources to the States and their cities, counties, and other local units. Many of these governments are regularly strapped for funds; these grants often help them perform a large share of their everyday functions.

The history of grants-in-aid programs goes back more than 200 years, to the period before the Constitution. In the Northwest Ordinance, the Congress under the Articles of Confederation provided for the government of the territory beyond the Ohio River and set aside sections of land for the support of public education in those future States.

On through the nineteenth century, most States received grants of federal lands for a number of purposes: schools and colleges, roads and canals, flood control work, and several others. A large number of the major State universities, for example, were founded as land-grant colleges. These schools were built with the money that came from the sale of public lands given to the States by the Morrill Act of 1862.

Congress began to make grants of federal money quite early, too. In 1808, it gave the States \($ 200,000\) to support the militia, the forerunner of the present-day National Guard. Cash grants did not play a large role, however, until the Depression years of the 1930s. Many of the New Deal programs aimed at bringing the nation out of its economic crisis were built around grants of money.

Since then, Congress has set up hundreds of grants-in-aid programs. In fact, more than 500 are now in operation. Dozens of programs function in a variety of areas: in education, Checkpoint What must a territory do once an enabling act is passed by Congress?

forerunner
\(n\). one that comes before, precedes

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 4D, 2001 Elementary and Secondary Education Act, after students read the Core Worksheet article. This cartoon illustrates the "race to the bottom" described in the article. Ask: What law are the people discussing? (the No Child Left Behind law) Who do the people represent? (probably a school board) What strategy is the speaker suggesting to achieve the goal of No Child Left Behind? (lowering educational standards, or making the tests easier) In the Core Worksheet article you read, what did educators call this strategy? (the race to the bottom)

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

A grant program through the U.S. Department of Transportation and the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration provides incentives to States to promote greater use of seat belts among their citizens. States can qualify for a grant by enacting a law requiring the use of seat belts or by achieving a seat belt use rate of 85 percent throughout the State for two years in a row. Have students find out whether their State has met requirements to qualify for a grant under this program. Follow up with a discussion about why the Federal Government would initiate such a program.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students work in small groups to research this information.
L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 4 Sec tion 2 Extend Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 200). It asks students to read an excerpt about recent trends toward centralization that challenge the federalist system of government, and then answer questions about the article.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It must create a constitution and put it to a popular vote.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 203)Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 204)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.
unwarranted
adj. without lega authority

How Government Works
Three Types of Federal Grants

\section*{Where Does the Money Go?}

Congress can grant money to the States through categorical, block, and project grants. Below are examples of recent grants. What kinds of organizations might receive a block grant?

mass transit, highway construction, healthcare, and many others.

Grants-in-aid are based on the National Government's taxing power. The Constitution gives Congress that power in order to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States. . . .

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

\section*{-Article I, Section 8, Clause 1}

Today, these grants total about \($ 300\) billion, and account for about 25 percent of all State and local government spending each year.

In effect, grants-in-aid blur the division-of-powers line in the federal system. They make it possible for the Federal Government to operate in many policy areas in which it would otherwise have no constitutional authority-for example, in such fields as education, low-income housing, local law enforcement, and mental health Critics of grants-in-aid have long made this point. They also argue that the grants, which usually come with strings attached, often give Washington a major-and, they say, an unwarranted-voice in the making of public policy at the State and local levels.

Types of Federal Grants Today, Congress appropriates money for three types of grants-in-aid: categorical grants, block grants, and project grants.

Over time, most grants have been categorical. Categorical grants are made for some specific, closely defined purpose-for school lunches or for the construction of airports or wastewater treatment plants, for example. Categorical grants are usually made with conditions attached. These "strings" require the State to (1) use the federal monies only for the specific purpose involved; (2) make its own monetary contribution, often a matching amount but sometimes much less; (3) provide an agency to administer the grant; and (4) obey a set of guidelines

\section*{Debate}

After students read about No Child Left Behind in the Core Worksheet, have them debate the issue. Ask: Should Congress renew the No Child Left Behind law? Encourage additional research, if time permits.

\section*{Answers}

Three Types of Federal Grants possible answers: State healthcare initiatives; welfare programs; homeland security tailored to the particular purpose for which the monies are given.

Block grants have come into wide use over the last several years. They are made for much more broadly defined purposes than are categorical grants-for healthcare, social services, or welfare, for example. They are also made with fewer strings attached, so State and local governments have greater freedom in deciding just how and on what to spend block grant dollars. From the 1980s on, many programs once supported by separate and fragmented categorical grants have been merged into broader block grants.

Congress also provides money for project grants. These are grants made to States, localities, and sometimes private agencies that apply for the grants. The Department of Health and Human Services makes many project grants-through its National Institutes of Health, for example, to support scientists engaged in research on cancer, diabetes, neurological disease, and other medical issues. Many State and local governments also apply for these grants to fund their job training and employment programs.

Other Forms of Federal Aid The National Government aids the States in several other important ways. For example, the FBI gives extensive help to State and local police. The army and the air force equip and train each State's National Guard units. The Census Bureau's data are essential to State and local school, housing, and transportation officials as they plan for the future.

Many other forms of aid are not nearly so visible. "Lulu payments," for example, are federal monies that go to local governments in those areas in which there are large federal landholdings. These direct payments are made in lieu of (to take the place of) the property taxes that those local governments cannot collect from the National Government. These payments are also known as PILTs (payment in lieu of taxes).

State Aid to the National Government Intergovernmental cooperation is a two-way street. That is, the States and their local governments also aid the National Government in many ways.

Thus, State and local election officials conduct national elections. These elections are financed with State and local funds, and they are regulated largely by State laws. The legal process by which aliens can become citizens, called naturalization, takes place most often in State courts. The examples go on and on.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The National \\ Government's obliga- \\ tions to the States \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
As a class, have students complete the \\ section's graphic organizer on the board.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The admission proce- \\ dure for a new State \\
(Questions 2, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write each step on an index card, mix them \\ up, and have students put them in order.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The types of federal \\ grants (Questions \\
3, 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create and exchange cross- \\ word puzzles that include clues about each \\ type of grant.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Cooperative federal- \\ ism (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Draw a rough outline on the board of the U.S. \\ and your State within it Ask students what \\ citizens your State government serves. Draw \\ diagonal lines through your State to indicate \\ these citizens. Then ask what citizens the \\ U.S. Government serves. Draw opposite di- \\ agonals through the entire country, including \\ your State. Ask why cooperation is needed. \\ (because both governments serve the same \\ citizens)
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Constitution requires the Federal Government to provide a republican, or representative, form of government; protect each State from invasion and internal disorder; and recognize the legal existence of the States and their physical boundaries.
2. (a) directs a territory desiring Statehood to draft a State constitution (b) passes an act of admission, creating a new State
3. (a) to help States run programs for their citizens (b) The conditions attached to the grants enable the Federal Government to operate in policy areas generally reserved to the States, such as education.
4. (a) categorical grants, block grants, and project grants (b) categorical grant: closely defined purpose, such as school lunches; block grant: broadly defined purpose, such as healthcare; project grant: specific purpose for which a State, locality, or private agency applies, such as to support scientists conducting cancer research
5. (a) to make sure that new States entered the Union on equal footing with existing States
(b) The Supreme Court ruled that political conditions would compromise the State's independence in managing its own internal affairs. (c) This ruling protects the integrity of the States within our federal system.
6. (a) The two levels of government-State and national-have many shared powers through which they work together to serve the citizens. (b) Federal grants-in-aid supplement State resources in supporting State and local programs.
QUICK write Students' Venn diagrams should identify State, federal, and concurrent powers.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will examine the conflict between States' rights and federal control in the context of environmental protection.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Ask students to name some environmental issues that their State is facing. Do they know what their State is doing to address these issues? Then ask students to identify the role of the EPA. (The Environmental Protection Agency is a federal agency charged with the care and protection of the nation's environment.)

\section*{SUMMARIZE THE ISSUE}

Display Transparency 4E, Environmental States' Rights. Have students read the quotes. Ask them to summarize the issue and the views expressed in the quotes.

L2ELL Differentiate Have students look up these words in the dictionary: sue, pollutants, waiver, measures, emissions, unequivocal, and unified.

\section*{PREDICT}

Point out that States' rights versus the power of the Federal Government has played out in many arenas, not just the environment. Refer to the writings of the Federalists and Anti-Federalists to show students that this issue has been discussed since the nation's birth. Then, have students read the timeline. Ask them how they think the case between the EPA and the State of California will end, based on what they see in the timeline.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students select one quote on this page and write a short paragraph explaining why they agree or disagree.

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) The governor may want to set restrictions that address his own State's pollution problems better than the national standards do. (b) It may further limit States' ability to customize laws to target their own environmental issues.
2. (a) possible response: no, because the Constitution does not grant the Federal Government the right to restrict States' policies (b) possible response: yes, because States can set standards that target local problems; OR no, because environmental problems cross State lines and require nationwide policies

\section*{The Environment and States' Rights}

\section*{Track the Issue}

Over time, the Federal Government has taken many, often controversial, steps to protect the environment.

Congress sets aside land in three States for Yellowstone National Park, the country's first national park.

Theodore Roosevelt sets aside 16 million acres of new forest preserves with a presidential proclamation.

The Clean Water Act is passed by Congress. It is amended in 1970 and 1990.

Congress passes the Clean Air Act. It is amended in 1990.

The Supreme Court rules that the EPA can override States on the environment in Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation v. EPA.

\section*{Perspectives}

In 2008, California sued the EPA over its right to restrict air pollutants in California. The State had requested a waiver from the EPA, under the Clean Air Act, to allow stricter measures than those of the Federal Government. The EPA, which was given control of such restrictions by the Supreme Court, denied California's waiver. This case is the latest in a long-argued issue: Should the Federal Government regulate environmental issues, or should the States make their own rules?
"The authority of states to address greenhouse gas emissions from motor vehicles has been clearly and unequivocally supported-by the Supreme Court, a federal court decision in Vermont, and in December by a federal court here in California. On this issue, the U.S. EPA has failed to lead, it has failed to follow the states' lead and we are prepared to force it out of the way in order to protect the environment."

Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger, April 2, 2008
"I believe that Congress by passing a unified federal standard of 35 mpg [miles per gallon] delivers significant reductions that are more effective than a state-by-state approach. This applies to all 50 states, not one state, not 12 states, not 15 states. It applies to all 50 states, and that's great for the economy, for national security, and for the environment"
-EPA Administrator
Stephen L. Johnson

\section*{Connect to Your World}
1. Predict Consequences (a) Why might Governor Schwarzenegger oppose federal regulations on carbon emissions? (b) How might a ruling in favor of the EPA affect States' rights in environmental issues?
2. Identify Central Issues (a) Does the Federal Government have the right to restrict what a State may or may not do on its land? (b) Should a State have the right to determine its own environmental standards?

\section*{Background}

CALIfORNIA VErsus the epA The Clean Air Act allows California to set anti-pollution standards higher than required nationally, with EPA-approved waivers. In the last 40 years, the EPA approved every waiver California requested-more than 40 in all. California became an innovator in pollution control, requiring carmakers to install equipment to reduce tailpipe emissions and gasoline evaporation. Following California's lead, many States enacted similar regulations. In 2005, California requested another waiver to further limit car emissions. Despite repeated urging from Governor Schwarzenegger, the EPA refused to rule on the waiver for two years. Then in April 2007, the Supreme Court denied the Federal Government's effort to block State regulation of greenhouse gases in Massachusetts v. EPA. The way seemed clear for the EPA to grant the waiver-but it said no. California sued.

\section*{section 3}

\section*{Interstate Relations}

Guiding Question
How do the States work together to preserve the Union? Use an outline like the one below to take notes on how the States cooperate.
I. The States Work Together
A. Interstate Compacts
A. Interstate Compacts
1. 2.
B.
c.

Political Dictionary
- interstate - extradition compact - Privileges and
- Full Faith and Immunities

Credit Clause

Objectives
1. Explain why States make interstate compacts.
2. Understand the purpose of the Full Faith and Credit Clause
3. Describe the Extradition Clause and explain its purpose.
4. Explain the purpose of the Privileges and Immunities Clause.

Image Above: A person stands where the borders of Utah, Colorado, Arizona, and New Mexico meet to create "The Four Corners."

Y
 pendent States was a principal reason for the writing and the adoption of the Constitution. The fact that the new document strengthened the hand of the National Government, especially with regard to trade among the States, reduced many of those frictions. So, too, did several of the new Constitution's provisions dealing with the States' relationships with one another.

\section*{Interstate Compacts}

No State can enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation, says the Constitution. However, the States can, with the consent of Congress, enter into interstate compacts-agreements among themselves and with foreign states. \({ }^{\mathbf{1 4}}\)

The States made few of these agreements for several decades-only 36 of them by 1920. The number has grown steadily since then, however. New York and New Jersey led the way in 1921 with a pact creating what is now the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey to manage the harbor facilities bordering both States. More than 200 compacts are now in force, and many involve several States. In fact, all 50 States have joined in two of them: the Compact for the Supervision of Parolees and Probationers and the Compact on Juveniles. These two compacts enable States to share important law-enforcement data.

Other agreements cover a widening range of subjects. They include pacts that coordinate the development and conservation of such resources as water, oil, wildlife, and fish; counter the effects of global climate change; and encourage the cooperative use of public universities.

\section*{Full Faith and Credit}

In Article IV, Section 1, the Constitution commands that: "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State."

14 Article 1, Section 10, Clause 3: The Supreme Court has held that congressional consent is not needed for any compact that does not tend to increase the political power of a State (Virginia v. Tennessee, 1893). But it is often difficult to decide whether an interstate agreement is political or nonpolitical in nature. So, nearly all compacts are submitted to Congress as a matter of course.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - States can make interstate compacts for matters of mutual concern. - The Constitution requires each State to respect the laws, official records, and court actions of other States. - The Constitution requires each State to return fugitives from other States. • No State can draw unreasonable distinctions between its own residents and residents of other States.
CONCEPTS: federalism, cooperation
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Several key provisions of the Constitution promote cooperation between and among the States.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How do the States work together to preserve the Union?

\section*{I. The States Work Together}

A Interstate Compacts
1. Agreements among States
2. Cooperate in areas such as law enforcement and resource conservation
B. Full Faith and Credit
1. States respect validity of public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of other States
2. Applies only to civil, not criminal, matters
3. Divorce recognized only if granted by State where person is legal resident
C. Extradition
1. Fugitive from one State can be returned by another
2. Federal courts can compel unwilling governor to extradite
D. Privileges and Immunities
1. No State can draw unreasonable distinctions between own residents and those of other States
2. Reasonable distinctions may be drawn, such as higher tuition for out-of-State students at State colleges

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will . .
- define and give the location of the constitutional provisions that deal with States' interrelations.
- analyze scenarios in which States interact with other States to identify the constitutional provision that prohibits each action.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

Before students prepare their posters for the Extend the Lesson portion of this section, you may want to review tips on innovating and thinking creatively in the Skills Handbook, p. S23.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 205) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 206)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: What should be the goals of government? (Unit 1 Essential Question) Is the federal system the best way to govern the United States? (Chapter 4 Essential Question) Has your thinking about these questions changed since the start of Unit 1? Write your assessment for each question in one or two paragraphs.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS THE BELLRINGER ACTIVITY}

Invite students to share their responses to the Bellringer activity and discuss their assessments of what they have learned about these Essential Questions.

\section*{DISCUSS THE BASICS}

Tell students that today you will discuss constitutional provisions that promote cooperation among the States. Ask them to take out their Reading Comprehension worksheet. Call on volunteers to define the purpose and location of each important provision.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint possible answers: compacts to regulate water resources and compacts to prevent and fight forest fires; by creating these compacts, States share the burden of solving problems that span more than one State

The term public acts refers to the laws of a State. Records refers to such documents as birth certificates, marriage licenses, deeds to property, car registrations, and the like. The words judicial proceedings relate to the outcome of court actions: damage awards, the probating of wills, divorce decrees, and so forth.

The Full Faith and Credit Clause most often comes into play in court matters. Take this example: Allen sues Bill in Florida, and the Florida court awards Allen \($ 50,000\) in damages. Bill cannot escape payment of the damages by moving to Georgia, because Allen could simply ask the Georgia courts to enforce the damage award. Nor would the case have to be retried in Georgia. Instead, the Georgia courts would have to give full faith and credit to-recognize and respect the validity of-the judgment made by the Florida court.

In a similar vein, a person can prove age, place of birth, marital status, title to property, and similar facts by securing the necessary documents from the State where the record was made. The validity of these documents will be recognized in each of the 50 States.

Exceptions The Full Faith and Credit Clause is regularly observed, and it usually operates routinely between the States. There are two notable exceptions to the rule, however. First, it applies only to civil, not criminal, matters. One State cannot enforce another State's criminal law. Second, full faith and credit need not be given to certain divorces granted by one State to residents of another State.

On the second exception, the key question is always this: Was the person who obtained the divorce in fact a resident of the State that granted it? If so, the divorce will be accorded full faith and credit in other States. If not, the State granting the divorce did not have the authority to do so, and another State can refuse to recognize it.

Marriage and Divorce The matter of interstate "quickie" divorces has been troublesome for decades, and especially since the Supreme Court's decision in a 1945 case, Williams v. North Carolina. In that case, a man and a woman traveled to Nevada, where each wanted to obtain a divorce so they could marry one another. They lived in Las Vegas for six weeks, the minimum period of State residence required by Nevada's divorce law. The couple were granted their divorces, were married, and returned to North Carolina the next day.

Problems arose when that State's authorities refused to recognize their Nevada divorces. North Carolina brought the couple to trial and a jury convicted each of them of the crime of bigamous cohabitation (marrying and living together while a previous marriage is still legally in effect).

On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld North Carolina's denial of full faith and credit to the Nevada divorces. It ruled that the couple had not in fact established bona fide-good faith, valid-residence in Nevada. Rather, the Court held that the couple had remained legal residents of North Carolina. In short, it found that Nevada lacked the authority to grant their divorces.

A divorce granted by a State court to a bona fide resident of that State must be given full faith and credit in all other States. To become a legal resident of a State, a person must intend to reside there permanently, or at least indefinitely. Clearly, the Williamses had not intended to do so.

The Williams case, and later ones like it, have cast dark clouds of doubt over the validity of thousands of other interstate divorces.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 1, Chapter 4, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 205)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 206)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 207)
L3 Quiz A (p. 208)
L2 Quiz B (p. 209)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 210)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 213)

The later marriages of people involved in these divorces, and the frequently tangled estate problems produced by their deaths, suggest the confused and serious nature of the matter.

If a same-sex couple, legally married to one another in one State, moves to a State that defines marriage as the union of a man and a woman, does the Constitution require that the second State recognize the validity of that couple's legal union? That question has not yet (2009) reached the Supreme Court. But it almost certainly will-and in the not-too-distant future.

Same-sex unions have produced growing controversy over the past decade or so. And some of that debate has centered on the application of the Full Faith and Credit Clause in such cases.

Today, 41 States and the Federal Government outlaw same-sex marriages. Some States have gone in the opposite direction, however. In 2000, Vermont's legislature approved a statute allowing "civil unions" in that State. The law provides that gay and lesbian couples can be joined in a legal ceremony that provides all of the State benefits and obligations of a civil marriage. In 2003, Massachusetts' Supreme Judicial Court, the State's highest court, held that the Massachusetts constitution guarantees to same-sex couples the right to marry in that State. In 2008, the Connecticut Supreme Court overturned laws banning same-sex marriage, clearing the way for legal marriages in that State.

Prior to these State decisions, Congress responded to the controversy with the passage of the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) in 1996. That act defines marriage as the union of a man and a woman, and it declares that no State can be required to recognize a same-sex marriage performed in another State

To shield DOMA from constitutional challenges, some in the government have proposed a Federal Marriage Amendment to set the definition of marriage in the Constitution.

\section*{Extradition}

The Constitution makes provisions for those who flee to another State after they commit a crime.

a In 1958, Richard and Mildred Loving married in Washington, D.C., but were subsequently arrested in their home State of Virginia, where their interracial marriage was illegal. The Supreme Court ruled the Virginia law unconstitutional, and that all States must recognize interracial marriage.

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.
—Article IV, Section 2, Clause 2
This clause refers to extradition, the legal process by which a fugitive from justice in one State can be returned to that State. Extradition is designed to prevent a person from escaping justice by fleeing a State.

The return of a fugitive from justice is usually a routine matter; governors regularly approve the extradition requests they receive from other States' chief executives. Some of those requests, however, are contested. This is especially true in cases with strong racial or political overtones, and in cases of parental kidnapping of children involved in custody disputes.

Until the 1980 s, governors could, and on occasion did, refuse to return fugitives. In Kentucky v. Dennison (1861) the Supreme Court had held that the Constitution did not give the Federal Government any power with which to compel a governor to act in an extradition case. So, for more than a century, jurisdiction
n. the authority \(t\) interpret and apply the law
n. one who flees

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATIVE LESSON PLAN In an advanced class, you might discuss challenges to the Full Faith and Credit Clause regarding marriage. In Loving v. Virginia, an interracial married couple sued the State of Virginia after they were arrested for breaking a State law banning marriage between people of different races. The Supreme Court struck down the Virginia law. Have students review the facts of the case and discuss the challenges that arise when one State does not recognize marriages that are legal in another.

To see this lesson plan, go to

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 4 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 207). On the board, list three constitutional provisions: Full Faith and Credit, Extradition, and Privileges and Immunities.
Divide the class into groups. Explain that students should review each situation in the first column of the worksheet. Then they should decide which clause listed on the board prohibits that situation from occurring. When students finish their worksheets, ask them to share their findings and explain their reasoning.
L1 L2 Differentiate Walk through the activity as a class. Alternatively, divide the chart into several parts and assign one team to each part.
L4 Differentiate Have students complete the worksheet individually.

Differentiate Display Transparency 4F, The Process of Extradition. Have students analyze the extradition process. Then have them write a letter to a friend, explaining the stages of the process that a suspected felon would go through before that person finally went to trial.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Remind students that more than 200 interstate compacts now exist between the States. Ask partners to research one of these agreements: New York-New Jersey Port Authority Compact; Emergency Management Assistance Compact; Washington Metro Area Transit Authority Compact; Multistate Tax Compact; Southern Dairy Compact; Colorado River Compact; Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children; Interstate Compact on the Placement of Juveniles. Have students use their findings to create a poster explaining the compact.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 208)Section Quiz B (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 209)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The constitutional \\ provisions that shape \\ interstate relations \\
(Questions 1-5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write each provision, its definition, and its \\ location in the Constitution on separate \\ cards. Have students match provisions with \\ definitions and locations.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint By making such distinction, a State would be violating the democratic principle that all citizens are equal.

Checkpoint
Why might a State be restricted from making distinctions between its residents and those of another State?
the Constitution's word shall in the Extradition Clause had to be read as "may."

The Court overturned that ruling in 1987, however. In Puerto Rico v. Branstad, a unanimous Court held that the federal courts can indeed order an unwilling governor to extradite a fugitive.

\section*{Privileges and Immunities}

The Constitution also protects citizens who move between the States.

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.
-Article IV, Section 2, Clause \(1^{15}\)
This clause, known as the Privileges and Immunities Clause, means that no State can draw unreasonable distinctions between its own residents and those persons who happen to live in another State.

Each State must recognize the right of any American to travel in or become a resident of that State. It must also allow any citizen, no matter where he or she lives, to use its courts and make contracts; buy, own, rent, or sell property; or marry within its borders.

15 The provision is reinforced in the 14 th Amendment

However, a State cannot do such things as try to relieve its unemployment problems by requiring employers to hire in-State residents first. Thus, the Supreme Court struck down an Alaskan law requiring employers to prefer Alaskan workers to construct that State's oil and gas pipelines (Hicklin v. Orbeck, 1978). The Court overturned a California law that set the welfare benefits for newly arrived residents from States with lower welfare benefit levels at a lower level than those paid to long-term residents (Saenz v. Roe, 1999).

However, the Privileges and Immunities Clause does allow States to draw reasonable distinctions between its own residents and those of other States. Thus, any State can require that a person live within the State for some time before he or she can vote or hold public office. It also can require some period of residence before one can be licensed to practice law, medicine, dentistry, and so on.

In another example, the wild fish and game in a State are considered the common property of the people of that State. So, a State can require nonresidents to pay higher fees for fishing or hunting licenses than those paid by residents-who pay taxes to provide fish hatcheries, enforce game laws, and so on. By the same token, State colleges and universities regularly set higher tuition rates for out-of-State students.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use the completed outline to answer this question: How do the States work together to preserve the Union?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) Cite two interstate compacts. (b) What purpose do these compacts serve?
3. (a) Cite two examples of records that a State must recognize under the Full Faith and Credit Clause.
b) What are the two exceptions to that recognition?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Synthesize Information If a person commits a felony in one State and flees to another, why might that person face extradition? Why wouldn't he or she be tried for his or her crime in the second State?
5. Summarize (a) How does the Privileges and Immunities Clause protect the rights of U.S. citizens? (b) Give three examples of rights that may be protected under this clause.

\section*{Quick Write}

Compare and Contrast: Draft Your Essay Use the Venn diagram you created in Section 2 as the outline for your essay. You may want to order your outline by first describing one set of powers, followed by the second set of powers, and finally putting the concurrent powers at the end.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. States make compacts with other States to cooperate in many areas, such as law enforcement and resource conservation. All States respect the validity of public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of other States. States extradite fugitives from other States. States afford the same rights and privileges to residents of other States as to their own residents.
2. (a) possible response: the Compact for the Supervision of Parolees and Probationers and the Compact on Juveniles (b) These compacts allow States to share law-enforcement information.
3. (a) possible response: marriage licenses and divorces (b) The clause applies only to civil, not criminal, law. Also, a State recognizes divorces only if granted by the State where the person is a legal resident.
4. The Full Faith and Credit Clause requires extradition to prevent someone from escaping justice by fleeing. The clause does not require a State to enforce another State's criminal law.
5. (a) The clause prevents States from treating residents of other States unequally. (b) possible response: the right to marry, the right to own property, the right to make a contract
QUICK write Students should use their Venn diagram to write their outline before they write the full essay.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
federalism \(p .94\) division of powers \(p\). 95 delegated powers \(p .96\) expressed powers p. 96 implied powers \(p .96\) inherent powers p. 97 reserved powers \(p\). 99 exclusive powers \(p .99\) concurrent powers p. 100 Supremacy Clause p. 101 enabling act \(p .106\) act of admission p. 106 grants-in-aid program p. 107 categorical grant p. 108 block grant p. 109 project grant p. 109 interstate compact \(p .111\) Full Faith and Credit Clause p. 112 extradition \(p .113\) Privileges and Immunities Clause p. 114

Division of Power
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline Federal Powers & Concurrent Powers & State Powers \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Coin money \\
Control commerce with foreign nations \\
Determine standards of weight and measure \\
Declare war \\
Make laws that are "necessary and proper" \\
Regulate interstate commerce \\
Control immigration \\
Acquire territory \\
Conduct diplomatic relations with other countries
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Levy and collect taxes \\
Borrow money \\
Establish courts \\
Define crimes and set punishments \\
Claim private property for public use \\
Establish a police force \\
Set environmental and health standards
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
License marriage \\
License professionals \\
Maintain public schools \\
License drivers \\
Ratify amendments to the Constitution \\
Regulate elections \\
Oversee intrastate commerce \\
Set speed limits \\
Establish standards of health and safety \\
Exercise those powers not given to the Federal Government and not restricted by the Constitution
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about federalism, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Cefrey, Holly. The Interstate Commerce Act: The Government Takes Control of Trade Between the States. The Rosen Publishing Group, Inc., 2003.
L2 Roberts, Russell. Texas Joins the United States. Mitchell Lane Publishers, 2007.
L3 Monk, Linda R. The Words We Live By: Your Annotated Guide to the Constitution. Hyperion, 2004.
L4 Gerston, Larry N. American Federalism: A Concise Introduction. M. E. Sharpe, 2007.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Organization Point out to students that organizing their personal spaces and items, such as desks, backpacks, lockers, and study spaces, will save time and help avoid the frustration caused by searching fruitlessly for missing assignments or notebooks. Organizing information will help make studying easier and more productive. Suggest that students use three-ring binders, pouches, and boxes to organize their personal space. Give them time each week to sort through old papers, deciding which to keep and which to discard. Those that are kept should be filed in an appropriate location for easy reference later.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 99, 108
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) Federalism is a system of government in which a written constitution divides the powers of government on a territorial basis, between a central government and several regional governments. (b) The Constitution grants certain specific powers to each level of government, some of which are to be exercised concurrently, and reserves to the States those powers not granted to the National Government nor denied to the States. (c) Leaving some powers to the States allows action on matters of State concern and allows for differing circumstances among States.
2. possible responses: (a) act as commander in chief, grant reprieves and pardons, make treaties, appoint major federal officials (b) lay and collect taxes, coin money, regulate foreign and interstate commerce, maintain armed forces, declare war (c) judicial power of the United States (d) delegated powers
3. (a) the Necessary and Proper Clause; Article I, Section 8, Clause 18 (b) It gives Congress the power to make all laws that are "necessary and proper" to carry out its expressed powers; that is, it gives Congress implied powers. (c) Possible response: Yes. "Necessary and proper" can be interpreted to be nearly unlimited. For example, the power to ban discrimination in public places is far removed from any expressed power, yet the ban was accomplished through implied powers.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) guarantee a republican, or representative, government; protect each State against foreign attack and internal disorder; recognize the legal existence and physical boundaries of each State (b) Possible response: Under federalism, the States are legal entities with established boundaries, but they also belong to a national union for mutual defense and benefit.
5. (a) Territory asks Congress for admission; Congress passes enabling act; territorial convention prepares a State constitution; constitution approved by popular vote in territory; approved constitution submitted to Congress; Congress passes act of admission; President signs act. (b) It may not impose political conditions or conditions that compromise the independence of the

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) Define federalism. (b) How are powers divided among the States and the National Government? (c) Why are certain powers left to the States rather than given to the National Government?
2. Give an example of an expressed power that the Constitution gives to (a) the President; (b) Congress; (c) the courts. (d) Under what Constitutional principle do these powers fall?
3. (a) What is the Elastic Clause? (b) What powers does this clause give to Congress? (c) Do you think that the Elastic Clause is broad enough to cover some of the powers that Congress has assumed? Why or why not? Cite specific examples.

\section*{Section 2}
4. (a) Name three obligations that the National Government has with regard to the States. (b) How do these obligations illustrate the concept of federalism?
5. (a) Briefly describe the process by which a new State can be admitted to the Union. (b) What types of conditions may not be imposed by the Federal Government on a territory as it becomes a State?
6. (a) Define cooperative federalism. (b) Name two types of federal aid given to the States. (c) How might federal aid be used to heighten the Federal Government's influence on State matters?
7. Analyze Political Cartoons The cartoon (above right) depicts an expanded United States after victory in the Spanish American War, when the U.S. added the territories of Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Philippines. (a) Look at the small map of the United States in 1798. How has the country changed? (b) What does the eagle represent in this cartoon? How is the eagle an example of federalism? (c) Is the subject of this cartoon an example of expressed, implied, or inherent power?

Section 3
8. (a) Until 1987, a governor could challenge an extradition order. Under what circumstances was this allowed? (b) According to Puerto Rico v. Branstad, who can order an unwilling governor to extradite a fugitive? (c) Do you think this infringes on States'rights? Why or why not?
9. (a) Under the Privileges and Immunities Clause, what reasonable distinctions can a State make between its own residents and those of other States? (b) What distinction may a State not draw?

\section*{Writing About Government}
10. Use your Quick Write exercises to write a compare-andcontrast essay that compares State and federal powers. Refer back to your Venn diagram if you need help organizing your essay. See pp. S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
11. Essential Question Activity Create a federal grant proposal.
(a) Identify some local activity (education, law enforcement, traffic control, etc.) that could be, but is not currently, supported by a federal grant.
(b) Create a grant proposal for that activity. How large would the grant be? What strings might be attached? (c) Present your grant proposal to the class for its consideration.
12. Essential Question Assessment Based on your work from the grant proposal activity, write an Op-Ed for a local newspaper that addresses the Essential Question: Is the federal system the best way to govern the United States? Apply what you learned about the United States? Apply what you learned about Make sure you back up your opinion with facts from the textbook and from your research.

Essential Questions To respond to the chapter Essential Journal Questions Journal.

State to manage its own affairs.
6. (a) Cooperative federalism is a dual-level system of government that includes shared powers, requiring the levels of government to cooperate with one another (b) categorical grants, block grants, project grants (c) Grants typically come with conditions that States must meet to get the grant money. In effect, these conditions make it possible for the Federal Government to operate in policy areas constitutionally reserved to the States.
7. (a) The United States has expanded its territory all the way to the Pacific Ocean and beyond. (b) The eagle represents the National Government spreading over the entire United States mainland and its territories. (c) inherent: power to acquire territory

\section*{SECTION 3}
8. (a) Governors sometimes contested extradition in cases with strong racial or political overtones and in cases of parental kidnapping of children involved in custody disputes. (b) federal courts (c) possible response: no, because the Constitution requires States to extradite OR yes, because

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{The Power Divide}

Debate over the extent of the powers of the new National Government in the federal system continued beyond the ratification of the Constitution in 1789. Thomas Jefferson and John Marshall were leading participants in that debate.

\section*{Document 1}
to take from the states all the powers of selfgovernment, & transfer them to a general & consolidated government, . . . is not for the peace, happiness or prosperity of these states: and that therefore this commonwealth [Kentucky] is determined, . . . to submit to undelegated & consequently unlimited powers in no man, or body of men on earth: that in cases of an abuse of the delegated powers . . . a change by the people would be the constitutional remedy; but where powers are assumed which have not been delegated a nullification of the act is the rightful remedy: that every state has a natural right, . . . to nullify . . . all assumptions of power by others within their limits...

-Opposition to the Alien and Sedition Act from Thomas Jefferson's draft of the "Kentucky Resolution,"

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. \(A\)
2. State laws must not violate the Constitution nor federal laws.
3. Possible response: The debate is still relevant today, because the Constitution continues to require interpretation to apply to current circumstances. The courts continue to judge the constitutionality of State and federal actions, case by case.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.

Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

L4
Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.
```

Use your knowledge of the Constitution, the federal system, and

```
Documents 1 and 2 to answer Questions 1-3.

Documents 1 and 2 to answer Q
1. Jefferson's resolution declares
A. the right of the States to nullify a federal statute or federal law.
B. the right of the States to initiate amendments to the Constitution.
C. the absolute power of the Federal Government over the States.
D. the authority of the Supreme Court to review State court judgments.
2. According to Marshall, what is the test of the constitutionality of State laws?
3. Pull It Together Which of these arguments best describes our government today? Why?

\section*{Document 2}

America has chosen to be, in many respects and to many purposes, a nation; and for all these purposes her government is complete; to all these objects, it is competent. The people have declared that in the exercise of all powers given for these objects, it is supreme. It can, then, in effecting these objects, legitimately control all individuals or governments within the American territory. The Constitution and laws of a State, so far as they are repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, are absolutely void. These States are constituent parts of the United States. They are members of one great empire-for some purposes sovereign, for some purposes subordinate.

-John Marshall's Opinion from Cohens v. Virginia, 1821

States have a right to enforce their own laws, even if they differ from those of other States
9. (a) possible response: require a person to live within the State for some time before he or she can vote, hold public office, or be licensed to practice a profession; require nonresidents to pay higher fees for fishing and hunting licenses and higher tuition to attend State colleges (b) unreasonable distinctions, such as require employers to give hiring preference to in-State residents or set welfare benefits lower for newcomers

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
10. Students should compare and contrast the powers of the State and Federal governments.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
11. Students should design a grant to pay for something that will benefit their community. They should explain the requirements to obtain their grant, the amount of money, what it is for, and who it benefits.
12. Students should use grants as an example plus facts from the text to support their opinion about whether the federalist system is the best way to govern the United States.

Before assigning these questions, distribute the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 1 All-inOne, p. 221). Use the criteria and the guidelines below to grade students' answers to the Essential Question Warmup questions. Then send students to the Essential Questions Journal to answer the unit Essential Question.
1. To answer this question, students must understand the various forms that a government can take, including democracy, dictatorship, unitary, federal, confederate, presidential, and parliamentary. A good answer will show an understanding that a major goal of a democracy, for example, is preserving the rights of the people, while the goal of a dictatorship is to keep power in the hands of an individual.
2. Some additional factors that might determine a government's goals are the country's relative wealth, levels of education, need for supporting agriculture, industry, or services, level of employment, natural resources, and expectations for social supports such as health care.
3. Answers may include support for democratic institutions, the rights of individuals, individual freedom, and free enterprise.
4. They looked to the Enlightenment thinkers such as John Locke and to English documents such as the Magna Carta and the English Bill of Rights for ideas that supported democracy and popular sovereignty as well as to their own experiences as colonists under a monarchy.

For every government, there exists a set of goals unique to the country's needs and history. For the United States government, those goals have been discussed and debated for the more than 200 years of the nation's existence.

\section*{ON THE GOALS OF GOVERNMENT:}

A wise and frugal [thrifty] government . . . shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government.
-Thomas Jefferson, First Inaugural Address, March 4, 1801

\section*{ON WHERE GOVERNMENT DERIVES ITS POWER:}

Here, sir, the people govern; here they act by their immediate representatives.
-Alexander Hamilton, on ratifying the Constitution, June 27, 1788

\section*{ON WHAT MAKES A \\ GOOD GOVERNMENT:}

Good government is a trust, and the officers of the government are trustees; and both the trust and the trustees are created for the benefit of the people.
-Sen. Henry Clay,
Speech at Ashland, Kentucky, 1829

\section*{Essential Question Warmup}

Throughout this unit, you studied the origins and elements of various governments, including those of the United States. Use what you have learned and the quotations above to answer the following questions. Then, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. How might a government's goals be affected by that government's form?
2. What are some other factors that might determine a government's goals?
3. What are the goals of the U.S. government?
4. How did the Framers develop these goals?

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the }\end{aligned}\) Journal Essential Question, go to your

118

\section*{Assessment Resources}

Unit 1 AYP Monitoring Assessment
ExamView Test Bank CD-ROM
SuccessTracker Assessment
Online Student Self-Tests
Chapter Tests
Section Quizzes
Chapter-level Document-Based Assessment

\title{
Unit 2 politioal Behavior: Government By the People
}

Essential Question In what ways should people participate in public affairs?

\section*{Government Online Resources}

Government Online Teacher Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Online Teacher's Edition with lesson planner and lecture notes
- Teacher's Resource Library with All-in-One Resources, Color Transparencies, Adequate Yearly Progress Monitoring, and an alternative lesson plan for each chapter
- SuccessTracker Assessment

Government Online Student Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Interactive textbook with audio
- American Government Essential Questions Video
- Chapter-level WebQuests
- Guided Audio Tours and Interactivities
- Student Self-Tests

\section*{ESSENTIAL QUESTION PERSPECTIVES}

Essential questions frame each unit and chapter of study, asking students to consider big ideas about government. The question for this unit-ln what ways should people participate in public affairs?-demands that students ask further questions. Is voting alone enough participation? Are interest groups helpful or harmful? How much does one vote matter? How can you participate if you are too young to vote? What is the best way to participate? To begin this unit, assign the Unit 2 Warmup Activity on page 35 of the Essential Questions Journal.
This will help students start to consider their position on the Unit 2 Essential Question: In what ways should people participate in public affairs?
Show the Unit 2 American Government Essential Questions Video to help students begin thinking about the unit Essential Question and designate a classroom bulletin board for students to post news articles related to the unit Essential Question. Use the Conversation Wall strategy (p. T27) to encourage students to post articles and comments on other students' postings.
Later, students will further explore the chapter-level essential questions:
Chapter 5: Does the two-party system help or harm democracy?
Chapter 6: Why do voters act as they do?
Chapter 7: How fair and effective is the electoral process?
Chapter 8: What is the place of the media and public opinion in a democracy?
Chapter 9: To what extent do interest groups advance or harm democracy?
Use the Essential Questions Journal throughout the program to help students consider these and other big ideas about government.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

UNIT 2
In what ways should people participate in public affairs?

\section*{CHAPTER 5}

Does the two-party system help or harm democracy?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the photo and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the image and quotation suggest about political parties? (that political parties involve citizen participation and are an important part of politics and of American democracy) In this chapter, students will learn about the role of the two-party system in our democracy. Then tell students to begin to further explore political parties by completing the Chapter 5 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 5 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 9)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

You may wish to teach analyzing political cartoons as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 5 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 23) to help students learn how to analyze political cartoons. The worksheet asks students to study a political cartoon and answer questions about it. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 24).

\section*{WebQuest
online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about political parties.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 and Section 2 lessons in their entirety.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 and Section 4 lessons in their entirety.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Organize the class into three groups representing one of the following: Republicans, Democrats, or a minor third party. Have each group create and deliver a presentation that explains their roles in the American political system, including their major goals and challenges. As groups give their presentations, create a study guide on the board that explains the roles of major and minor parties in the American political system.
FOLLOW UP Have students create a diagram of the functions of political parties in the American political system.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- brainstorm their own associations with the terms Republican and Democrat.
- differentiate among the five main functions of political parties by categorizing examples of political actions under each function.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- explore the origin and uses of the symbols for the Democratic and Republican parties by analyzing political cartoons.
- review the history of political parties in the United States by answering questions.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- describe the categories of minor parties by examining an illustration.
- learn about minor parties by creating an identity and a campaign flyer for a fictitious minor party.
- examine the possible impact of minor parties on a recent presidential election.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- learn about the activities of party organizations by analyzing an excerpt from a periodical.
- design political activities for a campaign at the local, State, and national levels.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1 S
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{What are political parties, and how do they function in our twoparty system?}

\author{
I. What Parties Do \\ A. Definition: group who seek to control government through winning elections and holding public office \\ B. Functions \\ 1. nominate candidates and work for their election \\ 2. inform and activate supporters \\ 3. bonding agent \\ 4. governing \\ 5. watchdog \\ II. Types of Party Systems \\ A. Two Party \\ B. Multiparty \\ C. One Party
}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will.
- brainstorm their own associations with the terms Republican and Democrat.
- differentiate among the five main functions of political parties by categorizing examples of political actions under each function.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 13) before class.

Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 14)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What are political parties, and how do they function in our two-party system? Use an outline to organize the main features of political parties, their roles, and types of party systems.

\section*{I. What Parties Do \\ A. Definition:}
B. Functions
II. Types of Party Systems
A. Two Party
A. Two
C.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- political party political spectrum
- partisanship
- single-memb districts

\section*{Objectives}
1. Define a political party.
2. Describe the major functions of political parties.
3. Identify the reasons why the United States has a two-party system.
4. Understand multiparty and oneparty systems and how they affect the functioning of a political system.

Image Above: National party conven tions are opportunities for parties to show their support.

"Winning isn't everything; it's the only thing." So said legendary football coach Vince Lombardi. Lombardi was talking about teams in the National Football League. He might just as well have had the Republican and Democratic parties in mind. They, too, are in the business of competing and winning.

\section*{What Is a Party?}

A political party is a group of persons who seek to control government through the winning of elections and the holding of public office. This definition of a political party is broad enough to cover any political party including the two major parties in American politics, the Republicans and the Democrats. Another, more specific definition can be used to describe most political parties, both here and abroad: A group of persons, joined together on the basis of certain common principles, who seek to control government in order to secure the adoption of certain public policies and programs.

This latter definition, with its emphasis on principles and policy positions, will not fit the two major parties in the United States. The Republican and Democratic parties are not primarily principle- or issue-oriented. They are, instead, election-oriented.

You can better understand the two major parties if you recognize that each of them is an organization made up of three separate but closely related elements, three separate groups of party loyalists:
1. The party organization. This element of the party includes its leaders, its other activists, and its many "hangers-on"-all those who give their time, money, and skills to the party. In short, these are the party "professionals," those who run the party at the national, State, and local levels.
2. The party in government. This component includes the party's candidates and officeholders, those thousands of persons who hold elective or appointive offices in the executive, legislative, and judicial branches at the federal, State, and local levels of government.
3. The party in the electorate. These are the millions of people who call themselves Republicans or Democrats, and who support the party and its candidates

To teach the skill of comparing viewpoints, have students read Compare Viewpoints in the Skills Handbook, p. S15. Then have them conduct the debate described in this lesson.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - A political party is a group of people with common principles, who seek to control government. - Political parties work to get their candidates elected. • Parties inform people and activate their participation in public affairs. - Parties are the main means by which the will of the people is made known to the government. - The U.S. has a two-party system (Democrats and Republicans); however, third parties often play a role in elections. - Multiparty systems provide more choice but less stability.
CONCEPTS: sharing power, types of government, electoral system ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Political parties are essential to democratic government. - Parties work to elect candidates in order to help their members influence government policies and programs.
through thick and thin. Many of them cast their votes on the basis of the party label, without regard to candidates or issues in an election. Observers sometimes criticize this kind of voting behavior as thoughtless. Yet knowing that a candidate is a Republican or Democrat often provides useful clues about where a candidate stands on key issues.

\section*{What Parties Do}

It is clear from our history, and from the histories of other peoples as well, that political parties are absolutely essential to democratic government. They are a vital link between the people and their government, between the governed and those who govern. Indeed, many observers argue that political parties are the principal means by which the will of the people is made known to government and by which government is held accountable to the people.

Parties serve the democratic ideal in another significant way: They work to blunt conflict; they are "power brokers." Political parties seek to modify the contending views of various interests and groups, encourage compromise, and so help to unify, rather than divide, the American people. They are very often successful in their attempts to soften the impact of extremists at both ends of the political spectrum, or range of political views.

Again, parties are indispensable to democratic government and, so, to American government. That fact is underscored by the several significant functions they perform.

Nominating Candidates The major function of a political party is to nominate-name-candidates for public office. That is, parties select candidates and then present them to the voters. Then the parties work to help those nominees win elections.

In a functioning democracy, there must be some way to find (choose and recruit) candidates for office. There must also be some mechanism to gather support for those candidates. Parties are the best device yet found to do these jobs

1 The exceptions are in nonpartisan elections and in those rare instances in which an independent candidate enters a partisan contest Nominations are covered at length in Chapter 7.

The nominating function is almost exclusively a party function in the United States. \({ }^{1}\) It is the one activity that most clearly sets political parties apart from all of the other groups that operate in the political process.

Informing and Activating Supporters Parties inform the people, and inspire and activate their interest and their participation in public affairs. Other groups also perform this function-in particular, the news media and interest groups.

Parties try to inform and inspire voters in several ways. Mostly, they do so by campaigning for their candidates, taking stands on current issues and criticizing opposing candidates and the positions they adopt.

Each party tries to inform the people as it thinks they should be informed-to its own advantage. It conducts its "educational" efforts through pamphlets, signs, buttons, and stickers; advertisements in newspapers and magazines and via radio, television, the Internet, and text messaging; at speeches, rallies, and conventions; and in a variety of other ways.

Remember, both parties want to win elections, and that consideration has much to do with the stands they take on most issues. Both Republicans and Democrats try to shape positions that will attract as many voters as possible-and at the same time, offend as few as possible.

> In 2008, the Democratic presidential primary pitted New York Senator Hillary Clinton against Barack Obama, split ting loyalties in the party.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 5, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 9)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 13)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 14)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 15)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 16)
L3 Quiz A (p. 17)
L2 Quiz B (p. 18)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the words Democrat and Republican on the board along with these instructions: In your notebook, write words or ideas that you associate with each of these labels.

ELL Differentiate For students who are unfamiliar with American political parties, direct them to the feature "Political Spectrum," which describes Democratic and Republican stands on two major issues. Then have students identify words or phrases they associate with each party.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER}

Have students share their responses to the Bellringer. (Be sure to respect students' wishes to keep some of their political views private.) Keep a list of responses on the board. (Students might list prominent figures, basic positions or views, and judgments or opinions about each party.) If students have trouble generating ideas, you might add some of your own, such as left-leaning, liberal, tax-and-spend, big government, social welfare, party of the common person (for Democrats); right-leaning, conservative, small government, wealthy, big business, lower taxes, spending cuts (for Republicans).
Then ask students if they see any common patterns in the words and ideas associated with each party. Is there any agreement within the class about what a Democrat or a Republican is? What-if anything-do these terms suggest about the function and purpose of political parties?
L2 Differentiate Have students make a concept web from the ideas on the board.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint party organization, party in government, party in the electorate

\section*{DISCUSS PARTY FUNCTIONS}

Display Transparency 5A, Five Functions of Political Parties. Ask: How do parties today carry out these functions? (They nominate through primaries and caucuses and inform with ads, phone banks, signs, and flyers. As bonding agents, they back their best performers. They govern by appointing and voting along party lines. As watchdogs, they make sure the media hears about missteps by opposing party members. ) Then ask students to consider how the functions of parties relate to the chapter's Essential Question: Does the two-party system help or hurt democracy? Ask: Compared to multiparty systems, how does our two-party system help our democracy? (Our two-party system modifies extreme views and provides more stability than do the coalitions that result from multiparty systems. ) How does our two-party system limit democracy? (It limits the number of candidates and parties from which to choose.)
L4 Differentiate Have students research the role of political parties in a multiparty system-for example, Canada's or Italy's-and create a graphic organizer that compares and contrasts the multiparty system with the system in the United States.
\(\sqrt{\text { checkpoint }}\) How do parties perform the watchdog function?
rascal
n. a mean, unprincipled, or dishonest person cumbersome
adj. unwieldy; clumsy

The Bonding Agent Function In the business world, a bond is an agreement that protects a person or a company against loss caused by a third party. In politics, a political party acts as a "bonding agent," to ensure the good performance of its candidates and elected officeholders. In choosing its candidates, the party tries to make sure that they are men and women who are both qualified and of good character-or, at the least, that they are not unqualified for the public offices they seek.

The party also prompts its successful candidates to perform well in office. The democratic process imposes this bonding agent function on a party, whether the party really wants to perform it or not. If it fails to assume the responsibility, both the party and its candidates may suffer the consequences of that failure in future elections.

Governing In several respects, government in the United States is government by party. For example, public officeholders-those who govern-are regularly chosen on the basis of party. Congress and the State legislatures are organized on party lines, and they conduct much of their business on the basis of partisanship-the strong support of their party and its policy stands. Most appointments to executive offices, at both the federal and State levels, are made with an eye to party.

In yet another sense, parties provide a basis for the conduct of government. In the complicated separation of powers arrangement, the executive and legislative branches must cooperate with one another if government is to accomplish anything. It is political parties that regularly provide the channels through which these two branches are able to work together.

Political parties have played a significant role in the process of constitutional change. Consider this important example: The Constitution's cumbersome system for electing the President works principally because political parties reshaped it in its early years, and they have made it work ever since.

The Watchdog Function Parties act as watchdogs over the conduct of the public's business. This is particularly true of the party out of power. It plays this role as it criticizes the policies and behavior of the party in power. In American politics, the party in power is the party that controls the executive branch of government-the presidency at the national level or the governorship at the State level.

In effect, the party out of power attempts to convince the voters that they should "throw the rascals out," that the "outs" should become the "ins" and the "ins" the "outs." The scrutiny and criticism by the "out" party tends to make the "rascals" more careful of their public charge and more responsive to the wishes and concerns of the people. In short, the party out of power plays the important role of "the loyal opposition"-opposed to the party in power but loyal to the people and the nation

Again, these functions performed by political parties and, particularly, the two major parties, testify to the important role they play in making democracy work in this country. You might well remember that point the next time a comedian on late-night television ridicules some candidate, party, or officeholder.

There was a time when the parties played an even larger role in the nation's affairs than they do today. For example, in what has been called "the golden age of parties," from roughly the late nineteenth to the mid-twentieth century, party organizations operated as major welfare organizations in many places in the United States. They regularly helped newly arrived immigrants and many others among the poor to obtain food, housing, and jobs. Often they did this to win the support of these people at the polls. That once important welfare function has long since been taken over by a number of government programs put in place in the twentieth century.

\section*{The Two-Party System}

Two major parties, the Republicans and the Democrats, dominate American politics. That is to say, this country has a two-party system. In a typical election in the United States, only the Republican or the Democratic Party's candidates have a reasonable chance of winning public office.

It is true that in some States, and in many local communities, one of the two

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint by publicly criticizing the party in power and making them more aware of the concerns of the people

\section*{Background}

RIVALRY Within the party Sometimes the process of nominating a candidate can appear to cause deep divisions in a party, at least for a time. During the 1980 presidential primaries, for example, a Democratic challenge to then-President Jimmy Carter did significant damage to his reelection effort. On the Republican side, George H. W. Bush made strong attacks on eventual candidate Ronald Reagan. Yet after Reagan won the nomination, Bush ended his criticisms, agreed to serve as Reagan's running mate, and helped the Republicans capture the White House. In 2008, the long, sometimes testy competition between Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton for the Democratic nomination led some Democratic leaders to call for one of the candidates to drop out of the race simply for the good of the party.

Parties have created their own Web sites and tried to connect with voters by joining popular social networking sites.

- Atrecent national conventions ooth parties gave limited edition delegates.
major parties may be overwhelmingly dominant, winning election after election. And it may do so for a long time-as, for example, the Democratic Party dominated the politics of the South from the years after the Civil War into the 1960s. But, on the whole, and through most of our history, the United States has been a two-party nation.

Several factors explain why America has had and continues to have a two-party system. No one of these factors, alone, offers a wholly satisfactory explanation for the phenomenon. Taken together, however, they are quite persuasive.

The Historical Basis The two-party system in the United States is rooted in the beginnings of the nation itself. The Framers of the Constitution were opposed to political parties. As you know, the ratification of the Constitution gave rise to America's first two parties: the Federalists, led by Alexander Hamilton, and the Anti-Federalists. In short, the American party system began as a twoparty system.

The Framers hoped to create a unified country; they sought to bring order out of the chaos of the Critical Period of the 1780s. To most of the Framers, parties were "factions," and therefore agents of divisiveness and disunity. George Washington reflected this view when, in his Farewell Address in 1796, he warned the new nation against "the baneful effects of the spirit of party."

In this light, it is hardly surprising that the Constitution made no provision for political parties. The Framers could not foresee the ways in which the governmental system they created would develop. Thus, they could not possibly know that two major parties

Checkpoint How did the Framers view political parties?
baneful
adj. causing distress

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 5B, Obama and Clinton Fight It Out, when you discuss the nominating process. This cartoon illustrates the competition for the Democratic nomination in 2008 as a boxing match between Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton. Point out to students that both candidates are Democrats. Ask: Why are these candidates fighting? (to win the Democratic nomination) What does the referee represent? (the Democratic Party) What is the cartoonist saying about the battle between Obama and Clinton? (The fight is hurting the Democratic Party and could end up knocking the Democrats out of contention for the White House.)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 5 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 15). Instruct students to complete the activity, which asks them to categorize various party actions by function. Invite volunteers to share their answers and explain why they categorized each action as they did.

L1 L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 5 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 16).

L4 Differentiate Have students come up with additional examples of actions to illustrate each party function.

\section*{Answers}

How Parties Communicate Parties can reach Internet users through general Web sites and specific groups by using social networking sites. They can target advertising to specific groups. These ads on boxes of macaroni and cheese would reach parents of young children.
Checkpoint The Framers saw political parties as factions that would divide rather than unify.

\section*{DISCUSS WORKSHEET}

After students have completed the activity, have students discuss the importance of the different party functions. Remind students of the section's Guiding Question: What are political parties, and how do they function in our two-party system? Ask students if there are other institutions or organizations in American public life that perform some of these jobs. For example, ask: Which party functions might the press share? (informing, activating supporters, or the watchdog function) Which functions can only a party perform? (nominating) Why should we trust parties to perform their functions in a way that is beneficial to the nation? (Parties stand to suffer if the public loses faith in them.)
Tell students to go to the Interactivity for a questionnaire they can take.
would emerge as prime instruments of government in the United States. Nor could they know that those two parties would tend to be moderate, to choose "middle-of-the-road" positions, and so help to unify rather than divide the nation.

The Force of Tradition Once established, human institutions are likely to become selfperpetuating. So it has been with the twoparty system. The very fact that the nation began with a two-party system has been a leading reason for the retention of a twoparty system in this country. Over time, it has become an increasingly important, selfreinforcing reason as well.

The point can be made this way: Most Americans accept the idea of a two-party system simply because there has always been one. This inbred support for the arrangement is a principal reason why challenges to the system-by minor parties, for examplehave made so little headway. In other words, America has a two-party system because America has a two-party system.

The Electoral System Several features of the American electoral system tend to promote the existence of but two major parties. The basic shape, and many of the details, of the election process work in that direction and to discourage minor parties.

\section*{Political Spectrum}

Where Do the Parties Stand?

Racilical
Favors extreme change to create an altered or entirely new social system.

Liberal
Believes that government must take action to change economic, political, and ideological policies thought to be unfair.

Conservative
Seeks to keep in place the economic, political, and social structures of society.

Reactionary Favors extreme change to restore society to an earlier, more conservative

\section*{Democratic Platiform 2004}

\section*{Labor}
"We will ensure that the right to organize a union exists in the real world, not just on paper, because that's how we create more jobs that can support families. That means reforming our labor laws to protect the rights of workers (including public employees) to bargain contracts and organize on a level playing field without interference."

\section*{Healthcare}
"We will provide tax credits to Americans who are approaching retirement age and those who are between jobs so they can afford quality, reliable coverage. We will expand coverage for low income adults through existing federal-state health care programs. And we will provide all Americans with access to the same coverage that members of Congress give themselves."

\section*{Republican Plattiorm 2004}

\section*{Labor}
"We affirm the time-honored right of individuals to voluntarily participate in labor organizations and to bargain collectively. We also believe that no American should be coerced into an association they do not wish to join. . . ."

\section*{Healthcare}
"The way to alleviate that burden [of the high cost of health care] is to bring down the cost of health care in America. Shifting the cost-burden onto the federal or state governments - costs that will ultimately be borne by the taxpayers-is not an effective solution to the problem . . . it is also important that we reaffirm our Party's firm rejection of any measure aimed at making health care a government-run enterprise."

Critical Thinking How do the platforms differ on the issues of labor and healthcare? How are they similar? How do the party platforms reflect the political spectrum?

Check out a questionnaire you can

126 Political Parties

\section*{Debate}
"There are many [people] of principle in both parties in America, but there is no party of principle."
-Alexis de Tocqueville
Use this quotation to start a debate in your classroom. Ask: Do party affiliations corrupt otherwise principled public servants?
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Have students look up the word principle in a dictionary and identify the meaning of the word used in this quote. (integrity, or driven by a desire to do what is right and proper)

The prevalence of single-member districts is one of the most important of these features. Nearly all of the elections held in this country-from the presidential contest to those at the local levels-are single-member district elections. That is, they are contests in which only one candidate is elected to each office on the ballot. They are winner-take-all elections. The winning candidate is the one who receives a plurality, or the largest number of votes cast for the office. Note that a plurality need not be a majority, or more than half of all votes cast in any given election.

The single-member district pattern works to discourage minor parties. Because only one winner can come out of each contest, voters usually face only two viable choices: They can vote for the candidate of the party holding the office, or they can vote for the candidate of the party with the best chance of replacing the current officeholder. In short, the single-member district arrangement has led many voters to think of a vote for a minor party candidate as a "wasted vote."

Another important aspect of the electoral system works to the same end. Much of American election law is purposely written to discourage non-major-party candidates. \({ }^{2}\) The GOP and the Democrats regularly act in a bipartisan way in this matter. \({ }^{3}\) That is, the two major parties find common ground here. They work together to shape election laws in such a way that minor party or independent candidates have a much harder time winning elective office.

Every four years, the presidential contest offers a striking illustration of this situation. In 2008, Republican John McCain and Democrat Barack Obama were listed on the ballots

2 Nearly all election law in this country is State law, not federal 2 Nearly all election law in this country is State law, not feder law-a point discussed at length in the next two chapters.
However, note this very important point Almost all of the nearly 7,400 State legislators - nearly all of those persons who make State law-are either Democrats or Republicans. Only a handful of minor party members or independents now sit, or have ever sat, in State legislatures.
3 GOP is common shorthand for the Republican Party. The initials stand for Grand Old Party, a nickname acquired in the latter part of the 19th century. The nickname may owe its origins to British politics. Prime Minister William Gladstone was dubbed "the Grand Old Man," often abbreviated "GOM," by the English press in 1882. Soon after, "GOP" appeared in headlines in the New York Tribune, the Boston Post, and other American papers. of all 50 States and the District of Columbia. However, none of the other serious presidential hopefuls-the non-major parties' candi-dates-made it to the ballot in every State.

Independent candidate Ralph Nader was on the ballots of 45 States and the District of Columbia in 2008; and the Libertarian Party's Bob Barr also made it to the ballot in 45 States. The Green Party's Cynthia McKinney was listed in 41 States and the Constitution Party's Chuck Baldwin in 38. All of the other minor party candidates fell far short of those totals, however. Indeed, most suffered their usual fate: they managed to make the ballots of only one or a few States.

The American Ideological Consensus Americans are, on the whole, an ideologically homogeneous people. That is, over time, the American people have shared many of the same ideals, the same basic principles, and the same patterns of belief.

This is not to say that Americans are all alike. Clearly, this is not the case. The United States is a pluralistic society-one consisting of several distinct cultures and groups. Increasingly, the members of various ethnic, racial, religious, and other social groups compete for and share in the exercise of political power in this country. Still, there is a broad consensus-a general agreement among various groups-on matters of fundamental importance.

Nor is it to say that Americans have always agreed with one another in all matters. The nation has been deeply divided at times: during the Civil War and in the years of the Great Depression, for example, and over such critical issues as racial discrimination, the war in Vietnam, and abortion.

Still, note this very important point: This nation has not been regularly plagued by sharp and unbridgeable political divisions. The United States has been free of longstanding, bitter disputes based on such factors as economic class, social status, religious beliefs, or national origin.

Those conditions that could produce several strong rival parties simply do not exist in this country. In this way, the United States differs from most other democracies. In short, the realities of American society and

\section*{Background}

OUR FIRST PRESIDENT The first presidential election in 1789 was really not much of an election at all. There were no political parties, and there was no race among competing candidates. Revolutionary war hero and president of the Constitutional Convention George Washington was the unanimous choice of all the electors. By 1792 and the second presidential election, the first parties had begun to emerge. Washington reluctantly chose to seek the presidency a second time. Among his reasons was to prevent a party clash. By agreeing to a second term, Washington made the 1792 election a one-candidate race; he again received a unanimous electoral college vote.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Have students use newspapers, magazines, or the Internet to find examples from the present day of political leaders performing the five functions of political parties. Have students share their examples with the class.
L2 Differentiate Have students find examples for two of the five functions.
L1 L2 Differentiate Help students locate results from the last two presidential elections and create two color-coded maps that show which parties carried which states. Ask students if they can see any patterns in the different elections.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students obtain copies of each major party's platform for the most recent presidential election. Have them create a chart that compares and contrasts the two parties' views on major issues.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the largest number of votes cast for an office; a plurality need not be a majority (more than half of all votes cast in any given election)

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' work.Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 17)Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 18)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Government}

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
politics simply do not permit more than two major parties.

This ideological consensus has had another very important impact on American parties. It has given the nation two major parties that look very much alike. Both tend to be moderate. Both are built on compromise and regularly try to occupy "the middle of the road." Both parties seek the same prize: the votes of a majority of the electorate. To do so, they must win over essentially the same people. Inevitably, each party takes policy

\section*{Multiparty Versus Two-Party Systems}

Canadian Parliament Today

110th Congress

- Analyzing Charts In Canada's multiparty system, power is shared among several different parties, none with a majority. Under the American system, two parties have a monopoly on the power. How are majorities built in the Canadian Parliament?
positions that do not differ a great deal from those of the other major party.

This is not to say that there are no significant differences between the two major parties today. For example, the Democratic Party, and those who usually vote for its candidates, are more likely to support such things as social welfare programs, government regulation of business practices, and efforts to improve the status of minorities. On the other hand, the Republican Party and its supporters are much more likely to favor the play of private market forces in the economy and to argue that the Federal Government should be less extensively involved in social welfare programs.

\section*{Multiparty Systems}

Some critics argue that the American twoparty system should be scrapped. They would replace it with a multiparty arrangement, a system in which several major and many lesser parties exist, seriously compete for, and actually win, public offices. Multiparty systems have long been a feature of most European democracies, and they are now found in many other democratic societies elsewhere in the world.

In the typical multiparty system, the various parties are each based on a particular interest, such as economic class, religious belief, sectional attachment, or political ideology. Those who favor such an arrangement for this country say that it would provide for a broader representation of the electorate and be more responsive to the will of the people. They claim that a multiparty system would give voters a much more meaningful choice among candidates and policy alternatives than the present two-party system does.

Multiparty systems do tend to produce a broader, more diverse representation of the electorate. That strength, however, is also a major weakness of a multiparty system. It often leads to instability in government. One party is often unable to win the support of a majority of the voters. As a result, the power to govern must be shared by a number of parties in a coalition. A coalition is a temporary alliance of several groups who come together to form a working majority and so

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Have students research political parties in another country in order to answer such questions as the following: Does the country have a twoparty system? What is the historical basis of the parties? What role do the parties play in the country's government?

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Charts The different political parties have to form coalitions.
to control a government. Several of the multiparty nations of Western Europe have experienced frequent changes in party control as coalitions shift and dissolve.

Historically, the American people have shunned a multiparty approach to politics. They have refused to give substantial support to any but the two major parties and their candidates. Two of the factors mentioned here-single-member districts and the American ideological consensus-seem to make the multiparty approach impossible in the United States.

\section*{One-Party Systems}

In the typical dictatorship, only one political party, the party of the ruling clique, is allowed to exist. For all practical purposes, the resulting one-party system really amounts to a "no-party" system.

Many Americans are quite familiar with one-party systems of a quite different sort. What are often called "modified one-party systems" are found in roughly a fourth of the States today. That is, in those States one of the two major parties-either the Republicans or the Democrats-consistently wins most of the elections held there. Although in the remaining States there is more or less vigorous two-party competition at the Statewide level, there are also many locales in most of them where the political landscape is regularly dominated by a single party.

1) Analyzing Political Cartoons What is this cartoon saying about one-party systems?

From the 1870s into the 1960s, the Democratic Party was so dominant throughout the southern States that that quarter of the country came to be known as the Solid South. Over the past 40 years or so, however, the GOP has become the leading party in that part of the country.

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\begin{gathered}\text { To continue to build a } \\ \text { response to the chapter }\end{gathered}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this ques tion: What are political parties, and how do they function in our two-party system?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. How do political parties help to unify the American people?
3. Explain the bonding agent function of political parties in your own words
4. What is a single-member district?
5. How is the ideological consensus of the American electorate reflected in the membership of the major parties?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Recognize Propaganda Do you think political parties are a valid source of information about candidates and their views? Why or why not?
7. Compare Points of View Explain why a person might consider a vote for a minor-party candidate even knowing that candidate is not likely to win.

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Choose a Topic The first step in writing a persuasive essay is to explore a topic. Make a list of five controversial national issues from history or the present that you feel strongly about or are familiar with. Examples might include immigration, labor, intervention in international affairs, education, the environment, or healthcare.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The definition of a \\
political party \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write the definition of political party on the \\ board, and ask students to rephrase this \\ definition in their own words.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The roles of political \\ parties (Questions 2, \\
3, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a table of the different functions of \\ parties. Have students offer examples of \\ how parties fill each role.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The reasons why the \\ United States has \\ a two-party system \\
(Questions 4, 5, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an outine of the por- \\ tion of the section headed "The Two-Party \\ System."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The features of mul- \\
tiparty and one-party \\ systems (Questions \\
\(6,7)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a diagram of each \\ type of system, showing the relationship \\ between parties and government power.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons The cartoon is ironic because one-party systems are undemocratic by nature.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Political parties are groups who try to control government through winning elections and holding public office. Their functions include nominating candidates and working for their election, informing and activating supporters, acting as bonding agents, assisting in the job of governing, and acting as watchdogs.
2. by modifying contending views of various interests and groups and encouraging compromise
3. The parties will be held accountable at election time for the performance of their officeholders. Therefore, the parties try to choose candidates with integrity and strong qualifications, and encourage them to perform well in office.
4. a district in which only one candidate is elected to each office, or in which winner-takeall elections occur
5. Although Democrats and Republicans belong to different parties, they have similar stances on many issues and try to stay as moderate as possible to appeal to the largest number of voters.
6. A strong answer will note that parties are likely to promote information that favors their candidate and to prejudice people about other parties' candidates.
7. Possible answer: A person may feel that it is important to send a signal about dissatisfaction with the views of the major parties.
QUICK WRITE Students should compile a thoughtful list of five controversial national issues from history or the present.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How has the two-party system affected the history of American government?
\begin{tabular}{|c|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Two-Party System in American History } \\
\hline Early Parties & \begin{tabular}{l} began with batte over ratification; Federalists- \\
Alexander Hamilton, strong national government \\ liberal interpretation of Constitution; Anti-Federalists/ \\
Jeffersonian Republicans/Democratic Republicans/ \\
Democratic Party-Thomas Jefferson, limited nation- \\ al government, strict construction of Constitution
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \(\mathbf{1 8 0 0 - 1 8 6 0}\) & \begin{tabular}{l} era of Democrats; Federalist Party disappears; Na- \\ tional Republican (Whig) Party emerges for brief time \\ in 1830s-1850s; Republican Party-former Whigs \\ and antislavery Democrats, Abraham Lincoln
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \(\mathbf{1 8 6 0 - 1 9 3 2}\) & \begin{tabular}{l} era of Republicans; Democrats survived on support \\ of Solid South; Theodore Roosevelt--Bull Moose \\ Party; Democrat Woodrow Wilson; Republicans Hard- \\ ing, Coolidge, Hoover
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \(\mathbf{1 9 3 2 - 1 9 6 8}\) & \begin{tabular}{l}
return of Democrats; Depression; Franklin Roosevelt-- \\
New Deal revolutionary economic and social welfare \\ programs, 4 terms
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \(\mathbf{1 9 6 8 - P r e s e n t ~}\) & \begin{tabular}{l}
Vietnam War divided Democrats; Republican Richard \\ Nixon-resigned over Watergate, era of divided \\
government
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will .
- explore the origin and uses of the symbols for the Democratic and Republican parties by analyzing political cartoons.
- review the history of political parties in the United States by answering questions.

\section*{section 2}

\section*{Two-Party system in American History}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How has the two-party system affected the history of American government? Use the table to record details about the history of the twoparty system in American history.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Two-Party System in American History } \\
\hline Early Parties & \\
\hline \(1800-1860\) & \\
\hline \(1860-1932\) & \\
\hline \(1932-1968\) & \\
\hline \(1968-\) Present & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- incumbent
- electorate
- faction - sectionalism
- spoils system

\section*{Objectives}
1. Understand the origins of political parties in the United States.
2. Identify and describe the three major periods of single-party domination and describe the current era of divided government.

Images Above: James Madison (left) and Alexander Hamilton were members of the nation's two earliest political parties.

Henry Ford, the great auto maker, once said that all history is "bunk." Mr. Ford knew a great deal about automobiles and mass production, but he did not know much about history, or its importance.

Listen, instead, to William Shakespeare: "What's past is prologue." Today is the product of yesterday. You are what you are today because of your history. The more you know about your past, the better prepared you are for today, and for tomorrow.

Much the same can be said about the two-party system in American politics. The more you know about its past, the better you will understand its workings today.

\section*{The Nation's First Parties}

The beginnings of the American two-party system can be traced to the battle over the ratification of the Constitution. The conflicts of the time, centering on the proper form and role of government in the United States, were not stilled by the adoption of the Constitution. Rather, those disputes were carried over into the early years of the Republic, and they led directly to the formation of the nation's first full-blown political parties.

The Federalist Party was the first to appear. It formed around Alexander Hamilton, who served as secretary of the treasury in the new government organized by George Washington. The Federalists were, by and large, the party of "the rich and the well-born." Most of them had supported the Constitution.

Led by Hamilton, the Federalists worked to create a stronger national government. They favored vigorous executive leadership and a set of policies designed to correct the nation's economic ills. The Federalists' program appealed to financial, manufacturing, and commercial interests. To reach their goals, they urged a liberal interpretation of the Constitution.

Thomas Jefferson, the nation's first secretary of state, led the opposition to the Federalists. \({ }^{4}\) Jefferson and his followers were more sympathetic to the 4 As you recall, George Washington was opposed to political parties. As President, he named arch foes Hamilton and Jefferson to his new Cabinet to get them to work together-in what proved to be an unsuccessful attempt to avoid the creation of formally organized and opposing groups.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

130 Political Parties

To practice analyzing political cartoons in this section, use the Chapter 5 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-inOne, p. 23). You may teach the skill explicitly before or after teaching the Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 24).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The first two political parties-the Federalists and the Anti-Federalistsemerged from the battle over ratification of the Constitution. - Thomas Jefferson's Anti-Federalists became the Democratic Party in 1828. - The Republican Party formed in 1854 from antislavery Democrats and former Whigs. - One party has dominated American government in three eras. - The fourth and current era is marked by divided government.
CONCEPTS: representative democracy, types of government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The United States has had three eras of one-party domination. - Historically, the major parties have alternated prolonged periods of dominance.
"common man" than were the Federalists. They favored a very limited role for the new government created by the Constitution. In their view, Congress should dominate that new government, and its policies should help the nation's small shopkeepers, laborers, farmers, and planters. The Jeffersonians insisted on a strict construction of the provisions of the Constitution.

Jefferson resigned from Washington's Cabinet in 1793 to concentrate on organizing his party. Originally, the new party took the name Anti-Federalist. Later it became known as the Jeffersonian Republicans or the Democratic-Republicans. Finally, by 1828, it became the Democratic Party.

These two parties first clashed in the election of 1796 . John Adams, the Federalists' candidate to succeed Washington as President, defeated Jefferson by just three votes in the electoral college. Over the next four years, Jefferson and James Madison worked tirelessly to build the Democratic-Republican Party. Their efforts paid off in the election of 1800 . Jefferson defeated the incumbent, the current officeholder, President Adams; Jefferson's party also won control of both houses of Congress. The Federalists never returned to power.

\section*{Four Major Eras}

The history of the American party system since 1800 can be divided into four major periods. Through the first three of these periods, one or the other of the two major parties was dominant, regularly holding the presidency and usually both houses of Congress. The nation is now in a fourth period, much of it marked by divided government.

In the first of these periods, from 1800 to 1860 , the Democrats won 13 of 15 presidential elections. They lost the office only in the contests of 1840 and 1848. In the second era, from 1860 to 1932, the Republicans won 14 of 18 elections, losing only in 1884,1892 , 1912, and 1916

The third period, from 1932 to 1968 , began with the Democrats' return to power and Franklin Roosevelt's first election to the presidency. The Democrats won seven of the nine presidential elections, losing only in 1952 and 1956. Through the fourth and current period, which began in 1968, the Republicans have won seven of eleven presidential elections. Today, the Democrats occupy the White House, however, and they also control both houses of Congress - as they have done over much of this most recent period.

\section*{The Era of the Democrats}

Thomas Jefferson's election in 1800 marked the beginning of a period of Democratic domination that was to last until the Civil War. The Federalists, soundly defeated in 1800, had disappeared altogether by 1816.

For a time, through the "Era of Good Feeling," the Democratic-Republicans were unopposed in national politics. However, by the mid-1820s they had split into a number of factions, or competing groups. By the time of Andrew Jackson's administration (1829-1837), a potent party had arisen to challenge the Democrats, known as the National Republicans and then Whigs. The major issues of the day-conflicts over public lands, the Second Bank of the United States, high tariffs, and slavery-all had made new party alignments inevitable.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How are the politics of today different from past eras?
potent
adj. powerful, strong

\section*{\(\frac{\text { alignment }}{n \text {. arrangemen }}\) \\ n. arrange grouping}

1) Analyzing Political Cartoons This cartoon ridicules the fighting in Congress between Federalists and Anti-Federalists soon after John Adams, a Federalist, was elected President in 1796. Why was the election of 1796 so significant to each party?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 5, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 19)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 20)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 21)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 23)
\(\boxed{L 2}\) Skill Activity (p. 24)
L3 Quiz A (p. 25)
L2 Quiz B (p. 26)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 19) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 20)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 5C, Two-Party Politics. Write on the board: What qualities are associated with these animals? Answer in your notebook.
L1 L2 Differentiate Ask students to describe what is happening in the cartoon.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Have students share their responses to the Bellringer. (Qualities include strength, size, intelligence, and clumsiness for the elephant; endurance, braying, and stubbornness for the donkey.) Point out that cartoonist Thomas Nast popularized the symbols of the elephant for Republicans and the donkey for Democrats, beginning in the 1870s. Ask: What did the cartoonist hope to accomplish by using an elephant and a donkey in this cartoon? (The cartoonist was trying to show how Democrats and Republicans differed on a policy question, and the donkey and the elephant quickly made that point.)
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students draw a political cartoon using the elephant, donkey, or both. Instruct them to portray the party symbol(s) in a way that either supports or opposes the party's stand on a current issue. Encourage them to use characteristics of the animal to help get their message across.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint In past eras, government was dominated by one party or the other. Today, government control is divided between the two parties.
Analyzing Political Cartoons It was the first truly contested election between the two parties.

\section*{EXTEND THE DISCUSSION}

Display Transparency 5D, Party Symbols. Ask: What kind of animal is this? (a mix of an elephant and a donkey) What is the message? (that there isn't much difference between the two parties)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 5 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 21), in which students test their knowledge of American political history. Tell students that they can use their textbooks to help them find the information. You may wish to have students work cooperatively in groups in which each group member works on one part of the activity and then shares his or her findings with the other members.
L1 L2 Differentiate Group L1 and L2 students with L3 and L4 students.

\section*{CREATE A CARTOON}

After completing their worksheets, have students create a political cartoon about a key event in American political history. Distribute the Rubric for Assessing Political Cartoons (Unit 1 All-in-One, p. 250).
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students work in teams to locate an event to illustrate and to design their cartoons.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint conflicts over public lands, the Second Bank of the United States, high tariffs, and slavery
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What were the major political issues during the 1820s?
\(\frac{\text { tenet }}{n \text {. principle, belief, }}\) conviction

The Democrats, led by Jackson, were a coalition of small farmers, debtors, frontier pioneers, and slaveholders. They drew much of their support from the South and West. The years of Jacksonian democracy produced three fundamental changes in the nation's political landscape: (1) voting rights for all white males, (2) a huge increase in the number of elected offices around the country, and (3) the spread of the spoils system-the practice of awarding public offices, contracts, and other governmental favors to those who supported the party in power.

The Whig Party was led by the widely popular Henry Clay and the great orator Daniel Webster. The party consisted of a loose coalition of eastern bankers, merchants and industrialists, and many owners of large southern plantations. The Whigs were opposed to the tenets of Jacksonian democracy and strongly supported a high tariff. However, the Whigs' victories were few. Although they were the other major party from the mid-1830s to the 1850 s, the Whigs were able to elect only two men to the White House, both of them war heroes: William Henry Harrison in 1840 and Zachary Taylor in 1848.

By the 1850 s, the growing crisis over slavery split both major parties. Left leaderless by the deaths of statesmen Clay and Webster, the Whig Party fell apart. Meanwhile, the Democratic Party split into two sharply divided camps, in the North and South. Through the decade, the nation drifted toward civil war.

Of the several groupings that arose to compete for supporters among the former Whigs and the fragmented Democrats, the Republican Party was the most successful. Founded in 1854, it drew many Whigs and antislavery Democrats to its ranks. The Republicans nominated their first presidential candidate, John C. Frémont, in 1856; and they elected their first President, Abraham Lincoln, in 1860.

With Abraham Lincoln's election, the Republican Party became the only party in the history of American politics to make the jump from third-party to major-party status. As you will see, even greater things were in store for the Republicans

\section*{The Era of the Republicans}

The Civil War signaled the beginning of the second era of one-party sway. For nearly 75 years, the Republicans were to dominate the national political scene. They were supported by business and financial interests, and by farmers, laborers, and newly freed African Americans.

The Democrats, crippled by the war, were able to survive as a national party largely because of their hold on the Solid South in the years following the end of Reconstruction in the mid-1870s. Southern resentment of the Republicans' role in the defeat of the South, coupled with fears that the Federal Government would act to advance the rights of African Americans, meant that the Democrats would monopolize southern politics for the next 100 years.

For the balance of the century, the Democratic Party struggled to rebuild its national electoral base. In all that time, they were able to place only one candidate in the White House: Grover Cleveland in 1884 and again in 1892. His two victories marked only short breaks in Republican control, however. Riding the crest of popular acceptance and unprecedented prosperity, the GOP remained the dominant party well into the twentieth century.

The election of 1896 was especially critical in the development of the two-party system. It climaxed years of protest by small business owners, farmers, and the emerging labor unions against big business, financial monopolies, and the railroads. The Republican Party nominated William McKinley and supported the gold standard. The Democratic candidate was William Jennings Bryan, a supporter of free silver, who was also endorsed by the Populist Party.

With McKinley's victory in 1896, the Republicans regained the presidency. In doing so, they drew a response from a broader range of the electorate-the people eligible to vote. This new strength allowed the GOP to maintain its role as the dominant party in national politics for another three decades.

The Democratic Party lost the election of 1896 , but it won on another score. Bryan, its young, dynamic presidential nominee,

132 Political Parties

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 5E, The Third Term Panic, when you discuss party symbols. Explain that Thomas Nast is accusing Democrats of scaring voters into thinking Republican President Ulysses S. Grant would seek an unprecedented third term. Ask: What is the donkey wearing? (a lion skin labeled "Caesarism"-a reference to the dictatorial emperor of Rome) Whom was Nast comparing to Caesar? Why? (He was comparing Grant to Caesar, suggesting that Grant wanted to become an emperor by seeking a third term.) How are Republican voters reacting? (In a panic, they are jumping toward an abyss labeled "chaos.") Is Nast confirming or denying that Grant will seek a third term? (denying-he sees it as a Democratic ploy, represented by the donkey dressed in a lion's skin)

\section*{Party Identity: Past and Present}
- Analyzing Political Cartoons Cartoonist Thomas Nast has been credited with creating the party symbols in his 1874 cartoons for the magazine Harper's Weekly. Originally, neither party adopted his ideas. Over time, each party assumed and revised the symbols, which have since become synonymous with party identity. What characteristics of the donkey and elephant do you think appeal to Democrats and Republicans? How have the parties modernized the symbols since the publication of Nast's cartoons?

campaigned throughout the country as the champion of the "little man." He helped to push the nation's party politics back toward the economic arena, and away from the divisions of sectionalism that had plagued the nation for so many years. Sectionalism emphasizes a devotion to the interests of a particular region.

The Republicans suffered their worst setback of the era in 1912, when they renominated incumbent President William Howard Taft. Former President Theodore Roosevelt, denied the nomination of his party, left the Republicans to become the candidate of his "Bull Moose" Progressive Party. Traditional Republican support was divided between Taft and Roosevelt. As a result, the Democratic nominee, Woodrow Wilson, was able to capture the presidency although with less than fifty percent of the popular vote. Wilson also managed to keep the office four years later by a very narrow margin.

Again, however, the Democratic successes of 1912 and 1916 proved only a brief interlude. The GOP reasserted its control of the nation's politics by winning each of the next three presidential elections: Warren Harding of Ohio in 1920, Calvin Coolidge of Vermont in 1924, and Herbert Hoover of California in 1928.

\section*{The Return of the Democrats}

The Great Depression, which began in 1929, had a massive impact on nearly all aspects of American life including the political landscape. The landmark presidential election of 1932 brought Franklin Roosevelt and the Democrats back to power at the national level. That election also marked a basic shift in the public's attitude toward the proper role of government in the nation's social and economic life.

Franklin Roosevelt and the Democrats won in 1932 with a new electoral base, built largely of southerners, small farmers, organized labor, and big-city political organizations. Roosevelt's revolutionary economic and social welfare programs further strengthened that coalition. It also brought increasing support from African Americans and other minorities to the Democrats.

The historic election of 1932 made the Democratic Party the clear majority party in American politics-a position it was to keep for the better part of the next 40 years. President Roosevelt won overwhelming reelection in 1936, an unprecedented third term in 1940, and another term in the midst of World War II, in 1944. Vice President Harry S Truman completed that fourth term, following FDR's death in April of 1945. President Truman was elected to a full term of his own in 1948

\section*{\(\checkmark\) checkpoint} What third-party candidate had an influence didate had an influence on the election of \(1912 ?\) on the el Explain.
interlude n. intervening time

\section*{Background}
the democratic donkey In the campaign for the presidency in 1828, Andrew Jackson's opponents called him a jackass for his views. Jackson turned this label into an advantage. He used the donkey in his campaign posters. The donkey appeared in a cartoon for the first time to represent Jackson's stubbornness during the battle over the Second Bank of the United States. In the cartoon on this page, Thomas Nast associated the donkey with the Democratic Party for the first time. Nast intended the donkey as a criticism of the Copperheads, an anti-war faction of the Democratic Party. The lion is Secretary of War Edwin Stanton, who had died. The cartoon is titled "A Live Jackass Kicking a Dead Lion." The donkey symbol caught on, and Nast continued to use it to represent Democrats.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Discuss students' responses to the last question on the Core Worksheet. Ask students to think about how recent major events, such as the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, might affect party balance. (People may tend to unify behind a particular party or seek stability during times of crisis.) Have students consider this question: How are present times different from past eras, in which one party was able to dominate? Guide students to consider factors such as new technologies and the access people today have to information about their leaders; and major historical events of the era and how those may have affected attitudes about government.
L4 Differentiate Ask higher-level students to compare modern times to other eras in history in which one major party or another has emerged as dominant. Do we appear to be on the verge of such an era today? Why or why not?

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons The donkey seems stubborn, tough, and fearless. The elephant may be seen as mighty and courageous. The modern symbols are more iconic and patriotic and less realistic than the older cartoon images.
Checkpoint Theodore Roosevelt and his Bull Moose Party split the Republicans and may have helped the Democrats win the election.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students create a timeline of the most recent era-the Era of Divided Govern-ment-that combines election information with key events discussed in the section. Students may add events from their own research and knowledge to the timeline. Where appropriate, students should indicate how they think events may have influenced political developments.
L1 L2 Differentiate Ask students to examine the timeline "Political Parties from 1800 to Today" and write their own caption for the illustration.

L4
Differentiate Have students write an essay in which they predict which party, if any, will gain and hold control of the White House in the next era of political parties. Students should also predict what issues will help shape the era.

\section*{Political Parties From 1800 to Today}

\section*{Era of Democrats 1800-1860}

\section*{Era of Republicans, 1860-1932}
- Analyzing Timelines This timeline shows which parties have dominated the presidency since the election of 1800 . What issues or events had an impact on elections held before the current era?
in a close election against GOP challenger Thomas E. Dewey of New York. The Republicans regained the White House in 1952, and kept it in 1956, with World War II hero Dwight Eisenhower. Both times, the widely popular Eisenhower defeated the Democrat Adlai Stevenson.

The GOP's return to power was brief, however. Senator John F. Kennedy recaptured the presidency for the Democrats in 1960. He did so with a razor-thin victory over the Republican Party's standard bearer, and then Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Lee Harvey Oswald shot and killed President Kennedy in Dallas, Texas, on November 22, 1963, and so Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson became President. Mr. Johnson won a full term of his own in 1964, crushing Republican Barry Goldwater of Arizona.

\section*{Era of Divided Government}

Richard Nixon made a successful return to presidential politics eight years after his narrow loss to John Kennedy in 1960. In 1968 he defeated Vice President Hubert Humphrey, the candidate of a Democratic Party torn apart by conflicts over the war in Vietnam, civil rights, and a variety of social issues. That election also had a strong thirdparty effort from American Independent Party candidate George Wallace. Mr. Nixon won only a slim plurality of the votes cast in that election.

President Nixon retained the White House in 1972, routing the choice of the still-divided Democrats, Senator George McGovern of South Dakota. However, the Watergate scandal forced him from office in August of 1974.

Vice President Gerald Ford then became President and served the remainder of the second Nixon term in the White House. Beset by problems in the economy, by the continuing effects of Watergate, and by his pardon of former President Nixon, Mr. Ford lost the presidency in 1976. In a very close election, the voters rejected his bid for a full term, preferring instead the Democratic Party's candidate, Jimmy Carter, the former governor of Georgia.

134 Political Parties

\section*{Debate}

Use this quotation to start a debate in your classroom.
"Divided government seemed to lead to deadlocks that threatened our ability to govern."
—"Divided Government-Gridlock or Godsend" from the Wisconsin Academy Review, 1996
Ask: Do you agree with this observation about divided government?

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Timelines slavery, Civil War, Great Depression

\section*{Era of Democrats, 1982-1968}

1932 The Depression brings about a shift in the role of government and, led by FDR (left), a return of the Democrats to power.

\section*{Era of Divided} Government, 1968-Today

1968 From this election on, neither party consistently holds the presidency, and Congress is often controlled by the opposing party.

The Republican Advantage A steadily worsening economy, political fallout from the Iranian hostage crisis, and his own inability to establish himself as an effective President spelled defeat for Jimmy Carter in 1980. Led by Ronald Reagan, the former governor of California, the Republicans scored an impressive victory over President Carter and the independent bid of former Republican Congressman John Anderson of Illinois. Mr. Reagan won a second term by a landslide in 1984; the Democratic candidate Vice President Walter Mondale could carry only his home State of Minnesota and the District of Columbia.

The GOP kept the White House with a third straight win in 1988. Their candidate, George H.W. Bush of Texas, had served as Vice President through the Reagan years and became the first sitting Vice President to win the presidency since Martin Van Buren in 1836. Mr. Bush trounced his Democratic opponent, Governor Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts.

The Reagan and Bush victories of the 1980s triggered wide-ranging efforts to alter many of the nation's foreign and domestic policies. Despite the hugely successful Persian Gulf War of 1990-1991, Mr. Bush was done in by problems that plagued the nation's economy in the 1980s into the 1990s. He was defeated in 1992 by Democrat Bill Clinton, then governor of Arkansas, who also turned back an independent challenge by Texas billionaire H. Ross Perot.

Into the Twenty-First Century Bill Clinton won a second term in 1996, handily defeating the Republican candidate, longtime senator from Kansas, Bob Dole, and, at the same time, thwarting a third-party bid by Mr. Perot. The Republican-controlled Congress mounted an unsuccessful attempt to impeach and remove President Clinton in the midst of his second term.

The GOP did regain the White House in the exceedingly close presidential contest of 2000. Their candidate, George W. Bush, son of the former Republican President, was then the governor of Texas. The younger Mr. Bush failed to win the popular vote contest in 2000, but he did capture a bare majority of the electoral votes and so the White House. His Democratic opponent, Vice President Al Gore, became the first presidential nominee since 1888 to win the popular vote and yet \section*{Checkpoint} What factors contributed to Jimmy Carter's defeat in the 1980 election?

thwart \(v\). to defeat, stop

\section*{Fast Facts}

The following table gives information about party control of state legislatures and governor's mansions.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|l|l|l|}
\cline { 2 - 5 } \multicolumn{1}{c|}{} & \(\mathbf{2 0 0 0}\) & \(\mathbf{2 0 0 2}\) & \(\mathbf{2 0 0 4}\) & \(\mathbf{2 0 0 6}\) \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
State \\ Legislatures*
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\mathrm{D}=16\) \\
\(\mathrm{R}=17\) \\
Divided=16
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\mathrm{D}=17\) \\
\(\mathrm{R}=21\) \\
Divided=11
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\mathrm{D}=19\) \\
\(\mathrm{R}=20\) \\
Divided=10
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\mathrm{D}=23\) \\
\(\mathrm{R}=15\) \\
Divided=11
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Governors & \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\mathrm{D}=19\) \\
\(\mathrm{R}=29\) \\
Other=2
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\mathrm{D}=24\) \\
\(\mathrm{R}=26\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\mathrm{D}=22\) \\
\(\mathrm{R}=28\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\mathrm{D}=22\) \\
\(\mathrm{R}=28\)
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
*Nebraska's legislature has one chamber and is nonpartisan.

Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive timeline about the parties in history.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 251).

\(L 3\)
Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L2 Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 25)
12 Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 26)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint steadily worsening economy, political fallout from the Iranian hostage crisis, and own inability to establish himself as an effective President

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Knowing when and \\ why the two-party \\ system first 1 emerged \\
(Questions 1 and 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write a brief biographical \\ profile of both Alexander Hamilton and \\ Thomas Jefferson, explaining their role in the \\ founding of the government and their beliefs \\ about its basic forms and purposes.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying and un- \\ derstanding the four \\ major eras of political \\ parties (Questions 2 \\
and 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a table that shows for \\ each era the party that dominated and the \\ major issues that faced the nation during \\ that era.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Recognizing the \\ causes and features \\ of the current era of \\
divided government \\
(Questions 4 and 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students identify the times between \\ 1968 and the present in which one party \\ has controlled both the Congress and the \\ presidency.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
rofile of both Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson, explaining their role in the about its basic forms and purposes.

Have students create a table that shows for each era the party that dominated and the major issues that faced the nation during

Have students identify the times between he present in which one pary presidency.

Checkpoint
What does "divided government" mean?
prodigious adj. of great size

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint one major party occupies the White House while other party holds majority of seats in one or both houses of Congress fail to win the presidency; you will read more about this in Chapter 13

The years since Richard Nixon won the presidency in 1968 have been marked by divided government, or a situation in which one of the major parties occupies the White House and the other party holds a majority of the seats in one or both houses of Congress. Over much of the past 40 years, Republicans have lived in the White House and Democrats have controlled Capitol Hill. \({ }^{5}\) That circumstance was reversed from 1995 to 2001, though.

Through much of our history, newly elected Presidents have regularly swept many of their party's candidates into office with them-"on their coattails." Thus, the Democrats gained 62 seats in the House of Representatives when Woodrow Wilson won his first term in 1912, and they picked up 97 seats when FDR was first elected in 1932. But the victories of several recent Presidents-like George W. Bush in 2000-have not carried the coattail effect.

The Republicans lost seats in the House and Senate in 2000 but did manage to keep a narrow hold on both chambers. The Democrats reclaimed the upper house in 2001, when a senator switched parties.

5 The Democrats held almost uninterrupted control of Congress from 1933 to 1995 . Over those years, the Republicans controlled both houses of Congress for only two two-year periods-firist, after the congressiona elections of 1946, and then after those of 1952. The GOP did win control of the Senate (but not the House in 1980; the Democrats recaptured the upper chamber in 1986.
sparked by the prodigious campaign efforts of President Bush, the Republicans won back the Senate and padded their slim majority in the House in the off-year elections of 2002 and continued their winning ways in 2004. Mr. Bush defeated his Democratic opponent, Senator John Kerry of Massachusetts, and his party kept its narrow grip on both the House and Senate in the hardfought congressional elections of that year.

The GOP suffered significant losses in the most recent off-year elections, however. The Democrats, riding the wave of increasing dissatisfaction with several Bush administration policies and, in particular, mounting opposition to the war in Iraq, regained control of Congress in November 2006.

That control was strengthened in the 2008 election, as Democrats ousted even more Republicans from their seats in both houses of Congress. Barack Obama defeated his Republican rival, John McCain, for the presidency as voters turned to the Democrats in hopes that a change of party would help to solve the many grave problems facing the nation. And so the Democrats control both houses of Congress and the White House today, a situation which has not occurred since President Clinton's first term.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer the ques tion: How has the two-party system affected the history of American government?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Briefly describe the overall pattern in the way the two major parties have competed for and held power in American history.
3. What is sectionalism?
4. What characterizes the present political era that began in \(1968 ?\)

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Conclusions Do you think one-party rule or divided governmen comes closer to the ideal the original Framers had when they envisioned a government without political parties?
6. Synthesize Information How do political and economic crises hinder or help candidates get elected? Use specific examples from the section to support your answer.

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Gather
Details Using the Internet or other resources, carry out research to find out how political parties view (or viewed) one of the issues that you listed in Section 1. Take notes on your findings.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. A strong answer will explain that the struggle between the two parties to gain power has created four distinct eras in American history, each hinging on a significant historical event. 2. In general, the history of American government can be divided into four eras, three of which were dominated by one or the other major party. In the current era, neither party has managed to gain lasting control.
3. devotion to the interests of a particular region
4. divided government, in which one major party holds the presidency while the other holds most seats in one or both houses of Congress
5. Sample answer: Divided government more closely represents the Framers' ideal of no party. Since no one party has firm control, the parties must compromise to get anything done. The Framers intended members of government to cooperate. If one party ruled, then it would have little incentive to listen to opposing ideas.
6. Sample answer: Political or economic crises create discontent and a demand for political change. The Great Depression helped Franklin Roosevelt win. Conflicts over the Vietnam War and civil rights opened the door for Richard Nixon, but Watergate forced him out. Gerald Ford pardoned Nixon, helping to doom his reelection bid. Economic troubles and the Iranian hostage crisis led to Jimmy Carter's reelection defeat.
QUICK wRIte Students will research their issue to find out how political parties viewed it.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{The Minor Parties}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What role have minor parties played in American politics? Use a flowchart to take notes on the role of minor parties in American politics.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- ideological & - economic \\ parties & protest parties \\
- single-issue & - splinter parties
\end{tabular} single-issue
- splinter parties

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify the types of minor parties that have been active in American politics.
2. Understand why minor parties are important despite the fact that none has ever won the presidency.

Images Above: George C. Wallace, governor of Alabama, campaigned for President in 1968 as a member of the American Independent Party.
ibertarian, Reform, Socialist, Prohibition, Natural Law, Communist, American Independent, Green, Constitution-these are only some of the many parties that have fielded presidential candidates in recent years and continue to do so. You know that none of these parties or their candidates has any real chance of winning the presidency. But this is not to say that minor parties are unimportant. The bright light created by the two major parties too often blinds us to the vital role several minor parties have played in American politics.

\section*{Minor Parties in the United States}

Their number and variety make minor parties difficult to describe and classify. Some have limited their efforts to a particular locale, others to a single State, and some to one region of the country. Still others have tried to woo the entire nation. Most have been short-lived, but a few have existed for decades. And, while most have lived, mothlike, around the flame of a single idea, some have had a broader, more practical base. Still, four distinct types of minor parties can be identified.

Ideological Parties The ideological parties are those based on a particular set of beliefs - a comprehensive view of social, economic, and political matters. Most of these minor parties have been built on some shade of Marxist thought; the Socialist, Socialist Labor, Socialist Worker, and Communist parties are leading examples of that fact.

A few ideological parties have had a quite different approach, howeverespecially the Libertarian Party of today, which emphasizes individualism and calls for doing away with most of government's present functions and programs. The ideological parties have seldom been able to win many votes. As a rule, however, they have been long-lived.

Single-Issue Parties The single-issue parties focus on only one publicpolicy matter. Their names have usually indicated their primary concern. For example, the Free Soil Party opposed the spread of slavery; the American Party, also called the "Know Nothings," opposed Irish-Catholic immigration in the 1850 s; and the Right to Life Party opposes abortion today.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - There are four types of minor parties: ideological, single-issue, economic protest, and splinter. - Even though minor parties do not win most elections, they play an important role as critics and innovators. - Minor parties affect election outcomes mainly by taking votes away from the major parties.
CONCEPTS: popular sovereignty, role of government in public policy ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Minor parties rarely win elections but do have a significant impact on election outcomes. - Minor parties represent views and calls for change that are not embraced by the major parties and that might be overlooked.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What role have minor parties played in American politics?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{4}{|c|}{Minor Parties} \\
\hline Ideological & Single-Issue & Economic Protest & Splinter \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- based on set of beliefs - most Marx-based: socialist or communist \\
- Libertarian: individualism, little government \\
- long-lived
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- focus on one policy matter \\
- fade with events and adoption of issue by major party
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- in periods of economic discontent \\
- demand better times - often sectional - fade with better economic times
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- split from major party \\
- form \\ around \\ strong \\ personality \\
- fade when \\ leader steps \\ aside
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- describe the categories of minor parties by examining an illustration.
- learn about minor parties by creating an identity and a campaign flyer for a fictitious minor party.
- examine the possible impact of minor parties on a recent presidential election.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 27) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Work-
sheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 28)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

To teach the skill of thinking creatively, have students read Innovate and Think Creatively in the Skills Handbook, p. S23. Then have them create their own minor political parties using the Core Worksheet.

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: In your notebook, list three current political or public policy issues or causes that interest you. Then rank them in order of importance to American society.
L2 Differentiate Explain to students that public policy is any kind of issue that government might try to address. Have students identify a public policy that is of concern to their families or friends.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER}

Have students share the issues and causes they identified in the Bellringer activity. (Some might include climate change, taxes, or government ethics. ) List them on the board.
Tell students that in this lesson, they will create their own minor political parties. Each party will focus on a particular issue or cause. They can use the Bellringer lists to help them decide on the focus of their party.

\section*{DISPLAY TRANSPARENCIES}

Display Transparency 5F, Four Types of Minor Political Parties. Discuss how each illustration relates to the descriptions of the four types of parties in the textbook.
Display Transparency 5G, Presidential Election of 1912. Tell students that this election highlights the role of minor parties in our political system.
Ask: What is the significance of the fact that there are three figures in the cartoon? (Man on elephant: Republican William Howard Taft; man on donkey: Democrat Woodrow Wilson; man on moose: Theodore Roosevelt of Bull Moose Party—a splinter party) What is the cartoon's message? (The cartoon shows Wilson pulling ahead because Roosevelt's Bull Moose Party, which split off from the Republican Party, is holding Taft back.)
Review answers to the Reading Comprehension Worksheet to ensure that students understand the differences between the types of parties.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Economic protest parties focus on broad economic concerns-"hard times"-while single-issue parties are intently focused on a specific policy issue.

Political Parties

Most of the single-issue parties have faded into history. They died away as events have passed them by, as their themes have failed to attract voters, or as one or both of the major parties have taken their key issues as their own.

Economic Protest Parties The economic protest parties have been rooted in periods of economic discontent. Unlike the socialist parties, these groups have not had any clear-cut ideological base. Rather, they have proclaimed their disgust with the major parties and demanded better times, and have focused their anger on such real or imagined enemies as the monetary system, "Wall Street bankers," the railroads, or foreign imports.

Often, they have been sectional parties, drawing their strength from the agricultural South and West. The Greenback Party tried to take advantage of agrarian discontent from 1876 through 1884. It appealed to struggling farmers by calling for the free coinage of silver, federal regulation of the railroads, an income tax, and labor legislation. A descendant of the Greenbacks, the Populist Party of the 1890s also demanded public ownership of railroads, telephone and telegraph companies, lower tariffs, and the adoption of the initiative and referendum.

Each of these economic protest parties has disappeared as the nation has climbed out of the difficult economic period in which that party arose.

Splinter Parties Those that have split away from one of the major parties are known as splinter parties. Most of the more important minor parties in our politics have been splinter parties. Among the leading groups that have split away from the Republicans are Theodore Roosevelt's "Bull Moose" Progressive Party of 1912 and Robert La Follette's Progressive Party of 1924. From the Democrats have come Henry Wallace's Progressive Party and the States' Rights (Dixiecrat) Party, both of 1948, and George Wallace's American Independent Party of 1968.

Most splinter parties have formed around a strong personality-most often someone who has failed to win his or her major party's presidential nomination. These parties have faded or collapsed when that leader has stepped aside. Thus, the Bull Moose Progressive Party passed away when Theodore Roosevelt returned to the Republican fold after the election of 1912 . Similarly, the American Independent Party lost nearly all of its brief strength when Governor George Wallace rejoined the Democrats after his strong showing in the presidential race in 1968.

Like many minor parties in American politics, the Green Party, founded in 1996, is difficult to classify. The Green Party began as a classic single-issue party but, as the party has evolved, it simply will not fit into any of the categories set out here. The Green Party came to prominence in 2000, with Ralph Nader as its presidential nominee. His campaign was built around a smorgasbord of issues-environmental protection, of course, but also universal healthcare, campaign finance reform, restraints on corporate power, and much more.

The Greens refused to nominate Ralph Nader in either 2004 or 2008. In 2004, they instead chose attorney and political activist David Cobb-who built his presidential campaign around most of the positions the Greens had supported in 2000.

In 2008, the Green Party nominated Cynthia McKinney, a former Democratic congresswoman from Georgia. Among the positions supported by McKinney were an end to the war in Iraq, universal health care, and repeal of the Patriot Act.

\section*{Why Minor Parties Are Important}

Even though most Americans do not support them, minor parties have still had a considerable impact on American politics and on the major parties. For example, it was a minor party, the Anti-Masons, that first used a national convention to nominate a presidential candidate in 1831. The National Republicans and then the Democrats followed suit in 1832. Ever since, national conventions have been used by both the Democrats and the Republicans to pick their presidential tickets.

Minor parties can have a telling effect in other ways. Thus, a strong third-party candidacy can play a decisive role-often a

138 Political Parties

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 5, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 27)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 28)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 29)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 31)
L3 Quiz A (p. 33)
L2 Quiz B (p. 34)

\section*{How Government Works \\ Minor Parties in History}
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE Audio Tour parties at
PearsonSuccessNet.com
Minor parties have played important roles in our political history, sometimes forcing one or both major parties to adopt new positions on public policy matters. Have any third-party candidates had an impact on presidential elections in recent years? Explain.

Strong Minor Party Efforts, 1848 to Today*
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|}
\hline Year & Party & \% Popular Vote & Electoral Votes \\
\hline 1848 & Free Soil & 10.13 & --- \\
\hline 1856 & Whig-American & 21.55 & 8 \\
\hline 1860 & Constitutional Union & 12.64 & 39 \\
\hline 1880 & Greenback & 3.36 & --- \\
\hline 1888 & Prohibition & 2.19 & --- \\
\hline \multirow[t]{2}{*}{1892} & Populist & 8.54 & 22 \\
\hline & Prohibition & 2.19 & --- \\
\hline 1904 & Socialist & 2.98 & --- \\
\hline 1908 & Socialist & 2.82 & --- \\
\hline \multirow[t]{2}{*}{1912} & Progressive (Bull Moose) & 27.39 & 88 \\
\hline & Socialist & 5.99 & --- \\
\hline 1916 & Socialist & 3.17 & --- \\
\hline 1920 & Socialist & 3.45 & --- \\
\hline 1924 & Progressive & 16.61 & 13 \\
\hline 1932 & Socialist & 2.22 & --- \\
\hline \multirow[t]{2}{*}{1948} & States' Rights (Dixiecrat) & 2.41 & 39 \\
\hline & Progressive & 2.37 & --- \\
\hline 1968 & American Independent & 13.53 & 46 \\
\hline 1996 & Reform & 8.40 & --- \\
\hline 2000 & Green & 2.74 & --- \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
1) Analyzing Charts Minor parties have sometimes had significant impact on presidential elections. Using the data in the chart, which of these minor parties may have changed election results?

\section*{Debate}

Ross Perot became a popular phenomenon in the 1992 presidential campaign. In 30minute infomercials, he expressed his dissatisfaction with the government's performance on issues such as deficit spending and corrupt campaign financing. That year he received 19 percent of the national vote. He ran again in 1996, but his support had waned, and he received only 8 percent of the vote.
"Exit polls also show that more people would have voted for Perot if they thought he had a chance to win -his vote total could have approached 40 percent."
-New York Times Magazine, March 31, 1996
Use this quote to start a debate. Ask: Should people base their vote for a candidate on whether or not they think that candidate can win?

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 5 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 27), in which students create their own minor political parties. Have students work through the steps to create an identity and a flyer for their own minor political party. Have students present their flyers to the class. Students should explain the reasons for their decisions and choices.

L1 L2 Differentiate Allow students to select specific steps in the activity to work on as an alternative to the entire activity.

Differentiate Have students answer the bonus question to the activity and share their answers with the class during their flyer presentations.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 5
Section 3 Extend Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One,
p. 31). This worksheet provides the vote counts for major and minor parties in Florida and the nation for the 2000 elections. The questions lead the students to consider how minor parties might have affected the outcome of the election.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to an audio tour about minor parties.

\section*{Answers}

Minor Parties in History Students might mention Ralph Nader (Green Party), who helped make the 2000 election one of the closest and most controversial in U.S. history.
Analyzing Charts The most obvious example is the Progressive (Bull Moose) Party, which took a substantial share of electoral votes, but other parties include the American Party in 1856, the Progressive Party in 1924 and the American Independent Party in 1968.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3
Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing Student Performance on a Project (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 252).

\(L 3\)Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 33)

L2Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 34)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying the dif- \\ ferent types of minor \\ parties (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an illustrated table that \\ shows the different types of minor parties, \\ along with a symbol that captures their key \\ qualities.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Distinguishing \\ between the different \\ types of minor parties \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students compare and contrast differ- \\ ent pairings of minor parties, such as Eco-- \\ nomic Protest Parties or Single Issue Parties, \\ and share their findings with the class.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ possible impact of \\ minor parties (Ques- \\ tion 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a scenario in which a \\ minor--party candidate prevents major party \\ candidates from achieving a majority of the \\ electoral college.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ roles of minor parties \\
(Questions 1, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an outine for the \\ portion of the section entitled "Why Minor \\ Parties Are Important."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible response: A moose is a huge, powerful animal. This image would play up Roosevelt's strength and vigor.
Checkpoint by drawing attention to important or controversial issues that the major parties may have ignored

Former President Theodore Roosevelt became the Progressive or "Bull Moose" party's nominee in 1912 after losing the Republican Party's nomination. How might this image have been used by the Progressive Party in the 1912 election?

\section*{\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)} How do minor parties act as critics of the major parties?
innovator
\(n\). one who introduces a new approach
"spoiler role"-in an election. In a presidential contest, even if a minor party ticket fails to win any electoral votes, it can still pull enough support away from one of the major parties to affect the outcome of the election. Many analysts think that Ralph Nader and the Green Party did exactly that to Al Gore and the Democratic Party in 2000. The spoiler effect can occur in any national, State, or local election.

In 1912, a split in the Republican Party resulted in Theodore Roosevelt's third-party candidacy. Almost certainly, if Roosevelt had not quit the Republican Party, William Howard Taft would have fared much better, and Woodrow Wilson would not have become President.

Historically, however, minor parties have been most important in their roles of critic and innovator. Unlike the major parties, they have been ready, willing, and able to take quite clear-cut stands on controversial issues. Many of the more important issues of American politics were first brought to the public's attention by a minor party-among them, the progressive income tax, women's suffrage, and railroad and banking regulation. Oddly enough, this very important innovator role of the minor parties has also been a major source of their frustration. When their proposals have gained any real degree of popular support, one and sometimes both of the major parties have taken over those ideas. The late Norman Thomas, who was six times the Socialist Party's candidate for President, often complained that "the major parties are stealing from my platform."

Seventeen minor party presidential candidates, some of them nominated by more than one party, appeared on the ballots of at least one State in 2008. The most visible minor-party presidential campaigns in the 2004 election were those of the Green Libertarian, Constitution, and Socialist parties. More than a thousand minor-party candidates also sought seats in Congress or ran for various State and local offices around the country.

\section*{Essential Questions}

Journal

To continue to build a Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer the question: What role have minor parties played in American politics?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. How do ideological parties differ from single-issue parties?
3. (a) Why do splinter parties develop? (b) What usually happens to these break-away parties?
4. In what ways can minor parties impact elections in this country?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Identify Points of View Why do you think a leader or group might seek to create a minor party even though their chances for winning are less than those of a major party?
6. Express Problems Clearly A minor party is likely to be a victim of its own success. Explain the meaning of this statement.

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Review Arguments Make a list of each party's most persuasive arguments on the issue you selected in Sections 1 and 2. Review your lists and decide with which party you most agree or With which party you most agree or disagree. Note any arguments from disagree. Note any arguments from the opposing party that you find compelling.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Minor parties have played the role of spoiler and innovator. They often draw attention to important and controversial issues that the major parties avoid. When a minor party has gathered enough public support, the major parties often adopt the minor party's issue as their own.
2. Ideological parties are generally organized around a broad set of beliefs, whereas singleissue parties are focused only on one issue.
3. (a) Splinter parties develop when a smaller group splits away from one of the major parties. They usually form around a strong personality. (b) Splinter parties often fade when the leader steps aside, typically to rejoin a major party.
4. Typically, minor parties don't have a strong impact on elections, although several minor party candidates have played a spoiler role, taking votes away from a major party candidate. Minor parties serve as innovators and draw attention to important and controversial issues that major parties might then add to their own platforms.
5. Possible answer: They may hope to gain enough public support to create change or pressure the major parties into adopting the issue.
6. Possible answer: A minor party will not become too successful, because as soon as it achieves some success, a major party will likely take over its ideas.
QUICK WRITE Students should review the parties' arguments and decide with which party they most agree or disagree.

\section*{CITIZENSHIP \\ 101 \\ Working on a Political Campaign}

\begin{abstract}
CAMPAIGNING IN FULL SWING DURING LAST DAYS OF ELECTION
"In the final days of the campaign, both camps worked furiously for success on election day. Phone banks made thousands of calls to convince undecided voters and supporters held campaign signs at every intersection. The candidates themselves rushed from appearance to appearance, all in an exhausting sprint to the finish in this hotly contested election."
\end{abstract}

Elections are a great celebration of our democratic system. Even if you cannot vote, you can still play a part in deciding who our leaders will be. While many political campaigns have paid staff, it is the volunteers who perform much of the actual work. A strong volunteer group can spell the difference between victory and defeat. Here's how:
1. Get to Know the Candidate One excellent way to learn about the candidates is to visit their Web sites. Candidates might have a short biography, videos, press releases, and blogs posted. If a candidate does not have a Web site, his or her campaign office can provide similar information. You might also try to see the candidate in person.
2. Choose a Candidate Once you are more familiar with a candidate and his or her positions, decide if that candidate's beliefs match your own. It is important to volunteer your time for a person you believe in. Be prepared to talk about his or her views convincingly.
3. Find Out About Volunteer Opportunities Political campaigns offer a wide range of volunteer opportunities. A candidate may be looking for people to go door-to-door to seek support. The campaign may need people to host or even just attend events. Most campaigns need people to make phone calls or send out mailings of campaign literature. Campaigns also appreciate financial contributions.
4. Choose a Task Before you choose a task, be sure you are capable of fulfilling it. For example, if you do not have access to a car or a ride, avoid a task that would need transportation. If your studies are demanding, do not commit to making phone calls every night. Though you may not be able to do every job, you will be able to find some way to get involved and hopefully you will find it a rewarding experience.

\section*{What do you think?}
1. Whom should you contact to find out which candidates are running for office in your town or State?
2. How might volunteering for a campaign help you become a more informed voter?
3. You Try It Follow the steps above to work on a political campaign. Keep a journal about your activities during a journal about your activities dur the campaign and reflect on your the campaig experience.
(4) GOVERNMENT ONLINE Citizenship Activity Pack For an activity about working on a political campaign, go to political campaign, go to
PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Work on a Political Campaign. It includes a lesson plan for you and campaign strategy briefs and worksheets for students. Student teams will prepare a campaign strategy for a fictitious candidate, based on their assigned campaign brief. Teams will present their strategies to the teacher/candidate. Students will use worksheets to assess strategies and to write a letter of introduction to a campaign manager. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for another activity about working on a political campaign at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will identify and explore opportunities for volunteer involvement in a political campaign.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{BRAINSTORM}

Have students read the news story about the election campaign at the beginning of the Citizenship 101 lesson. As a class, have students generate a list of activities that are mentioned in the news article that might be performed by volunteers. Students should identify such campaign activities as participating in phone banks, holding signs at intersections, and helping organize and hold campaign appearances.

\section*{EXPLORE CANDIDATES}

As a class, discuss ways students can identify and learn about candidates in an election. Have students generate a list of possible sources of informationcandidate Web sites, campaign offices, newspapers, and appearances. If students have computer access, have them bring in examples of campaign Web sites.

\section*{EXPLORE OPPORTUNITIES}

Have students follow steps 3 and 4 to generate a list of possible volunteer opportunities. Then have them select one that they feel they would be qualified to perform. Ask students to write a paragraph explaining why their choice was appropriate for them.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the students' paragraphs and assess them. You may also wish to have them answer the What Do You Think questions at the bottom of the page.

\section*{Answers}
1. Students can contact local or state election officials to find out who is on the ballot. They may also find this information through reliable print or online sources.
2. A strong answer should consider how getting involved in a campaign might allow a volunteer to learn about issues in the campaign and about the different views of the candidates.
3. Strong responses should describe the tasks students did and what they learned from the experience.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{How are political parties organized at the national, State, and local levels?}

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{Party \\ Organization}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- learn about the activities of party organizations by analyzing an excerpt from a periodical.
- design political activities for a campaign at the local, State, and national levels.

\section*{before class}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 35) before class.Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 36)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: In your notebook, explain what this means: "[Both parties] are highly decentralized, fragmented, and often plagued by factions and internal squabbling."
L2 ELL Differentiate Help students define any unfamiliar words in the statement.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

Before students work on Core Worksheet B in this lesson, you may want to review tips on problem solving in the Skills Handbook, p. S17.

\section*{Guiding Question}

How are political parties organized at the federal, State, and local levels? Use a table to take notes on how political parties are organized.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- ward
- precinct

\section*{Objectives}
1. Understand why the major parties have a decentralized structure.
2. Describe the national party machinery and party organization at the State and local levels.

Image Above: Howard Dean served as the Democratic Party's national chairperson in the 2008 election.

How strong, how active, and how well organized are the Republican and Democratic parties in your community? Contact the county chairperson or another official in one or both of the major parties. They are usually not very difficult to find. For starters, try the telephone directory.

\section*{The Decentralized Nature of the Parties}

The two major parties are often described as though they were highly organized, close-knit, well-disciplined groups. However, neither party is anything of the kind. They are, instead, highly decentralized, fragmented, and often plagued by factions and internal squabbling.

Neither party has a chain of command running from the national through the State to the local level. Each of the State party organizations is only loosely tied to the party's national structure. By the same token, local party organizations are often quite independent of their parent State organizations. These various party units usually cooperate with one another, of course-but that is not always the case.

The Role of the Presidency The President's party is almost always more solidly united and better organized than the other major party. The President is automatically the party's leader, and asserts that leadership with such tools as ready access to the media, personal popularity, the power to make appointments to federal office, and the ability to dispense other favors.

The other party has no one in an even faintly comparable position. Indeed, in the American party system, there is seldom any one person who can truly be called its leader. Rather, a number of personalities, frequently in competition with one another, form a loosely identifiable leadership group in the party out of power. \({ }^{6}\)

6 The party out of power does have a temporary leader for a brief time every fourth year: its presidential candidate, from nomination to election day. A defeated presidential candidate is often called the party's "itular leader"- a leader in title, by custom, but not in fact What's more, if he or she lost by a wide margin, the defeated nominee may have little or no role to play in ongoing party affairs.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Federalism and the nominating process contribute to a decentralized party structure. - Neither major party has a strong chain of command from national to local level. • Nationally, each major party has these basic elements: convention, committee, chairperson, and two congressional campaign committees. - A central committee, headed by a chairperson, typically leads State party organizations.
CONCEPTS: party decentralization, elements of party structure
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Both major parties are decentralized and fragmented. - There are distinct national and State party organizations. - The President's leadership helps unify the party in power.

The Impact of Federatism Federalism is a major reason for the decentralized nature of the two major political parties. Remember, the basic goal of the major parties is to gain control of government by winning elective offices.

Today there are more than halfa million elective offices in the United States. We elect more people to public office in this country than do the voters of any other country on the planet. In the American federal system, those offices are widely distributed over the national, State, and local levels. In short, because the governmental system is highly decentralized, so too are the major parties that serve it.

The Nominating Process The nominating process is also a major cause of party decentralization. Recall, from Section 1, that the nominating process has a central role in the life of political parties. You will consider the selection of candidates at some length in Chapter 7, but, for now, look at two related aspects of that process.

First, candidate selection is an intraparty process. That is, nominations are made within the party. Second, the nominating process can be, and often is, a divisive one. Where there is a fight over a nomination, that contest pits members of the same party against one another: Republicans fight Republicans; Democrats battle Democrats. In short, the prime function of the major parties-the making of nominations-is also a prime cause of their highly fragmented character.

\section*{National Party Machinery}

At the national level, both major parties are composed of five basic elements. They are structured around a national convention, a national committee, a national chairperson, and two congressional campaign committees.

The National Convention The national convention, often described as the party's national voice, meets in the late summer of every presidential election year to pick the party's presidential and vice-presidential candidates. It also performs a few other functions, as you will see in Chapter 13, including the adoption of the party's rules and the writing of its platform.

Beyond that, however, the convention has little authority. It has no control over the party's selection of candidates for any other offices nor over the policy stands those nominees take. Often, a national convention does play a role in making peace among various factions in the party, helping them to accept a party platform that will appeal to a wide range of voters in the general election.

The National Committee Between conventions, the party's affairs are handled, at least in theory, by the national committee and by the national chairperson. For years, each party's national committee was composed of a committeeman and a committeewoman from each State and several of the territories. They were chosen by the State's party organization. Over the past several years, however, both parties have expanded the committee's membership.

Today, the Republican National Committee (RNC) also seats the party chairperson from each State and members from the District of Columbia, Guam, American Samoa, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.
divisive
adj. causing disagreement

\author{
,
}
1) Analyzing Political Cartoons How does this cartoon illustrate the decentralized nature of political parties?

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER}

Have students share their answers to the Bellringer question. (The parties are not well-organized, cohesive groups. Instead, they are a loose-knit confederation of small pieces, and members often fight among themselves.)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET A}

Distribute the Chapter 5 Section 4 Core Worksheet A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 37), in which students read a news report about a "get out the vote" campaign. This worksheet will stimulate their thinking about party activities, which will help them complete Core Worksheet B.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint by placing members of the same party against each other
Analyzing Political Cartoons by showing that each party is made up of different factions, each with its own agenda

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B}

Distribute the Chapter 5 Section 4 Core Worksheet B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 39), in which students map out a national campaign. Point out that a successful campaign requires activity on a national, State, and local level. Divide students into groups representing each major party to plan their activities together. Encourage them to list specific activities targeted to specific goals.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students focus on only one of the three levels-national, State, or local.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3Differentiate Have students create a plan for organizing political activity at their school. Student plans should include components for identifying and registering possible voters, identifying possible volunteers, sharing information about candidates, and getting out the vote.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Have students create a poster that will encourage people to vote.Differentiate Divide students into two groups, one for each major party. Have them find out who leads their local party organization and ask for an interview. Display the T-Chart Graphic Organizer Transparency, and have the students in each group collaborate to create their own T-Chart to assist during the interview process. Tell groups that they should write a title on their chart, and suggest writing "Questions" and "Responses" in the column headers. Of course, the charts can be expanded as needed. Each group should prepare interview questions to find out how the local organization is structured and what it does. Each group should then interview the party leader and prepare an oral report for the class.
Tell students to go to the Online Update to find out more about the costs of running for office.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The parties select their presidential and vice-presidential candidates, adopt party rules, and write the platform.
Raising Funds for Public Office Spending has grown significantly, suggesting that fundraising has become increasingly important in elections. Inviting well-known speakers to dinners could attract more possible contributors to the party.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What happens at each party's national convention?

Representatives of such GOP-related groups as the National Federation of Republican Women also serve on the RNC.

The Democratic National Committee (DNC) is an even larger body. In addition to the committeeman and -woman from each State, it now includes the party's chairperson and vice-chairperson from every State and the territories. Moreover, its ranks now include a few dozen members from the party organizations of the larger States, and up to 75 at-large members chosen by the DNC itself. Several members of Congress, as well as governors, mayors, and members of the Young Democrats, also have seats on the DNC.

On paper, the national committee appears to be a powerful organization loaded with many of the party's leading figures. In fact, it does not have a great deal of clout. Most of its work centers on the staging of the party's national convention every four years.

The National Chairperson In each party, the national chairperson is the leader of the national committee. He or she is chosen to a four-year term by the national committee, at a invite donors to extravagant fundraising dinners to honor past Presidents and current party leaders.

\section*{Campaign Committees}

Web Sites For the 2008 election, the Democratic Party encouraged its supporters to purchase "Democracy Bonds."

144 Political Parties

\section*{Debate}

Use this quotation to start a debate in your classroom.
"All politics is local. "
—"The Last Liberal" from The New York Times, March 11, 2001
Divide students into debate teams. Ask: Do you agree or disagree with this statement? Support your position.
meeting held right after the national convention. The choice is made by the just-nominated presidential candidate and is then ratified by the national committee.

Only two women have ever held that top party post. Jean Westwood of Utah chaired the DNC from her party's 1972 convention until late 1972; and Mary Louise Smith of Iowa headed the RNC from 1974 until early 1977. Each lost her post soon after her party lost a presidential election. Ron Brown, the Democrats' national chairman from 1989 to 1993, is the only African American ever to have held the office of national chairperson in either major party.

The national chairperson directs the work of the party's headquarters and its professional staff in Washington. In presidential election years, the committee's attention is focused on the national convention and then the campaign. In between presidential elections, the chairperson and the committee work to strengthen the party and its fortunes. They do so by promoting party unity, raising money, recruiting new voters, and otherwise preparing for the next presidential season. Both parties have lately established state-of-the-art technical facilities to help their candidates and officeholders better communicate with voters. Those sophisticated facilities include such things as television studios, satellite uplinks, constantly updated Web sites, and computerized voter registration lists.

Congressional Campaign Committees Each party also has a campaign committee in each house of Congress. \({ }^{7}\) These committees work to reelect incumbents and to make sure that "open seats," seats given up by retiring members, remain in the party. The committees also take a hand in carefully selected campaigns to unseat incumbents in the other party, in those races where the chances for success seem to justify those efforts.

In both parties and in both houses, the members of these congressional campaign committees are chosen by their colleagues.

\footnotetext{
7 In the House: the National Republican Congressional Committee and the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee; in the Senate: the National Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee and the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee
}

\section*{Local Party Organization}

1) Analyzing Diagrams Local party organization can vary from State to State, but a common example is shown here. What kind of party jobs do you think exist at each level of organization?

They serve for two-year terms-that is, for a term of Congress.
\(\sqrt{ }\) Checkpoint What do the national committees do between presidential elections?

\section*{State and Local Party Machinery}

National party organization is largely the product of custom and of rules adopted by the party's national conventions over time. At the State and local levels, on the other hand, party structure is largely determined by State law.

The State Organization In most States, party structure is decentralized, much as it is at the national level. It is usually built around

\section*{Background}

Political Machines In the 1900s, a type of local political organization began to appear in large American cities: the machine. Urban political machines are organizations run by a single "boss" or small group of powerful leaders. They use a variety of means, including legal and sometimes illegal control of jobs and contracts, to build broad political support. Once in control of a local government, the machine uses its power to expand its base and strengthen its grip on power. One infamous machine was New York's Tammany Hall machine of the late 1800s. Richard Daly's machine ruled Chicago for a period in the mid-1900s.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 251).
L3 Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
13 Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 40)
\(L 2\) Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 41)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Diagrams Precinct-level jobs probably involve direct work with voters. Ward-level jobs may involve coordinating the work of precinct-level workers. District-level jobs may involve more strategic planning with the state-level organization in addition to coordinating activities.
Checkpoint promote party unity, fundraise, recruit new voters, and prepare for the next presidential election

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Recognizing the \\ causes of decentral- \\
ized nature of parties \\
(Questions 5 and 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a cause-and-effect \\ diagram for each of the subheadings under \\
"The Decentralized Nature of the Parties."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying the main \\ elements of major \\ party national organ- \\ ization (Questions 1 \\
and 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an illustrated diagram \\ that shows in visual format the roles and \\ purposes of the different parts of party \\ machinery.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying state and \\ local party machinery \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a pyramid-shaped \\ diagram showing how parties are organized \\ at the State and local levels.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ role of the President \\ in uniting the party \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a two-column table, \\ listing leadership tools available to the \\ President on the leff and ways the President \\ can use each tool to benefitindividual party \\ members on the right.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Caption State delegates should be an accurate reflection of the population of their state, and that would include people of different ethnic backgrounds, genders, and ages.

State delegates attending national conventions generally must represent the population demographics of their State. Why might the gender, age, or ethnic background of a State delegate be important?
a State central committee, headed by a State chairperson. The chairperson, chosen by the committee, may be an important political figure in his or her own right. More often than not, however, he or she fronts for the governor, a U.S. senator, or some other powerful figure or group in the politics of the State.

The party's State central committee is almost everywhere composed of members who represent major geographic subdivisions, usually counties. They are chosen in primary elections, by local caucuses, or at State conventions.

Because most of these committees meet only infrequently, the chairperson has great independence in conducting the party's affairs.

Together, the chairperson and the central committee work to further the party's interests in the State. Most of the time, they attempt to do this by building an effective organization and promoting party unity, finding candidates and campaign funds, and so on. Remember, however, both major parties are highly decentralized, fragmented, and sometimes torn by struggles for power. This can really complicate the chairperson's and the committee's job.

Local Organization Local party structures vary so widely that they nearly defy even a brief description. Generally, they follow the electoral map of the State, with a party unit for each district in which elective offices are to be filled: congressional and legislative districts, counties, cities and towns, wards, and precincts. A ward is a unit into which cities are often divided for the election of city council members. A precinct is the smallest unit of election administration; the voters in each precinct cast their ballots at one polling place located within the precinct.

In most larger cities, a party's organization is further broken down by residential blocks and sometimes even by apartment buildings. In some places, local party organizations are active year-round, but most often they are inactive except for those few hectic months before an election.

Essential Questions response to the build a Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your com pleted table to answer the question: How are political parties organized at the federal, State, and local levels?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Describe the place of the presidency in national party organization.
3. Describe the role of the congressional campaign committees for each party.
4. What is the difference between a ward and a precinct?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Recognize Cause and Effect Why is party unity harder to achieve for the party out of power than it is for the party in power?
6. Expressing Problems Clearly Why do you think direct primaries create more conflict within parties than the other forms of the nominating proother fors?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Decide on a Structure Using the list of arguments from Section 3, arrange them in order from most persuasive to least persuasive or vice versa. Decide whether you would be more likely to persuade a reader by starting with weaker reasons and building to the best argument or, conversely, leading with your best argument.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Organization at the federal level is structured around a national convention, committee, chairperson, and congressional campaign committee in each house. State-level organization centers on a central committee and a chairperson. Local organizations vary widely but generally have a party unit for each elective district.
2. The President helps unite the party with tools such as access to the media, personal popularity, and ability to make federal appointments and distribute other favors.
3. These committees exist in each house of Congress and work to reelect party members, make sure that seats abandoned by retiring members remain in the party, and to try to unseat incumbents of the opposing party in selected campaigns.
4. A ward is a larger division than a precinct. Wards are divided into precincts, the smallest unit of election administration.
5. The party in power has a clear leader-the President-who can use media attention and political clout to unify the party. The party out of power has no clear leader. Its ill-defined leadership group consists of personalities often in competition with one another.
6. Direct primaries pit members of the same party against each other, causing division within the party as party members side with one candidate or the other.
Quick write Students will use their list of arguments to decide on a structure for persuasive writing.

Political Parties in the United States
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline Major Parties & Minor Parties \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Historically, one of two parties with a realistic chance to win elections \\
Currently Democratic and Republican parties \\
One party may dominate national elections at times. \\
Both parties agree on some important issues and disagree on others.
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have difficulty winning elections in the American party system \\
May form based on an ideology or single issue, as a result of bad economic times, or from an existing party \\
Though rarely successful, they influence elections and the major parties.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Making Outlines Point out that preparing a good outline before starting to write ensures that writing goes more quickly and is more focused. An outline also will help students identify whether they have too much or not enough information and how their ideas connect. Have students first identify the topic of their essay, such as "Minor Parties in the most recent Presidential Election," and then list the main points they want to make. Under each main point, students should list the details that support that point. Generally speaking, each detail in their outline will translate into at least one paragraph in their final essay. After students have completed these steps, have them review the items and place them in the most logical order. Explain that, once they begin writing, they may decide to make changes in the outline, but the outline will serve as the general plan for their essays.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 2 All-in-One Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 2 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 126, 134, 139, 144
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about political parties, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Smalley, Carol Parenzan. Elections and Political Parties. Perfection Learning, 2005.

L2 Burgan, Michael. Political Parties. Graphic Library, 2008.
L3 Maisel, L. Sandy. American Political Parties and Elections: A Very Short Introduction. Oxford University Press, 2007.
L4 Adkins, Randall E., ed. The Evolution of Political Parties, Campaigns, and Elections: Landmark Documents from 1787-2008. CQ Press, 2008.

\section*{Political Dictionary} political party p. 122 political spectrum \(p .128\) partisanship p. 124 single-member district \(\rho .127\) plurality \(p .127\) bipartisan p. 127 consensus p. 127 coalition p. 128 incumbent p. 131 faciont p.iol spoils system \(p .132\)
electorate p. 132
sectionalism p. 133
ideological parties p. 137 single-issue parties \(p .137\) economic protest parties p. 138 splinter parties p. 138 ward p. 146 precinct \(p .146\)

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. Possible examples: (a) a caucus in lowa, (b) holding a rally for a candidate, (c) a party recruiting a candidate for a vacant seat in Congress, (d) a party that controls Congress choosing the Speaker of the House to regulate House activities,
(e) creating a TV commercial critical of an opposing party's position on tax reform
2. (a) Single-member districts and the fact that elected officials write election laws make it hard for minor-party and independent candidates to win elections. (b) Sample answer: Because only one winner can come out of each contest in single-member districts, voters tend to think that a vote for a minor-party candidate is a wasted vote.
3. In general parties in a multiparty system are based on a particular issue, providing voters more meaningful choices as well as more choices overall. Multiparty systems also tend to produce a broader, more diverse representation of the electorate. However, two-party systems are more stable because they don't result in coalition governments.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) two Republicans, parent and child
(b) Possible answer: Party loyalty is often inherited or passed down through families. (c) Many people are loyal to certain parties with which they identify.
5. (a) The Federalists and Anti-Federalists emerged out of early debates over the ratification of the Constitution, as people took sides on the proper role of government. (b) Sample answer: Political parties have strengthened U.S. democracy by providing a vital link between the people and their government. Parties are the main means by which the will of the people is made known to government and by which government is held accountable to the people. Parties also blunt conflict, modify extreme views, encourage compromise, and help unify the people. For example, parties recruit qualified candidates and help ensure good performance in office. A party also informs the public of missteps of the opposing party.
6. A strong answer will consider that transitions tend to occur during times of national crisis, such as the Civil War and the Great Depression.

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. Provide an example of a political party performing in the following roles: (a) nominating, (b) informing and activating, (c) serving as a bonding agent, (d) governing, (e) serving as a watchdog.
2. (a) What features of the electoral system support the existence of a two-party system? (b) Analyze one of these features and explain its role.
3. Compare and contrast two-party with multiparty systems, noting the strengths and weaknesses of each.

\section*{Section 2}
4. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) Who is represented in the political cartoon below? (b) What does this cartoon imply about party loyalty? (c) Do you think people are loyal to a certain party?

"Fen man, raving fertuficiane"
5. (a) Describe the circumstances that led to the development of the first two political parties in American history b) Explain, using specific examples, how political parties strengthen or weaken U.S. democracy.
6. Consider the eras of one-party domination. What factors are necessary to cause a transition from one era to another?

\section*{Section 3}
7. Explain what type of minor party is likely to develop around the following: (a) a strong personality, (b) the collapse of the stock market, (c) a specific theory about government, (d) growing concern about climate change.
8. (a) State three reasons why a person might wish to vote for a minor party candidate in a presidential election. (b) How do minor parties strengthen or weaken the twoparty system?

\section*{Section 4}
9. (a) What does it mean to say that the major parties in American politics are decentralized? (b) Would a more centralized political party be more or less effective in winning elections? Explain your answer.
10. (a) Define ward and precinct. (b) How does party organization contribute to the strength of the two-party system?

\section*{Writing About Government}
11. Use your Quick Write exercises from the chapter to write a newspaper editorial persuading others to support or oppose a political party on the issue you selected. Begin your editorial with the following prompt: I agree (or disagree) with the party on the issue of Cover both sides of the issue but take a clear stand on one side. See pp. S9-S10 of the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity Interview close friends or relatives who voted in the last election. Ask them if they identify themselves as members of a political party. Consider:
(a) If they do not identify themselves as a member of a party, ask them why not.
(b) If they do identify themselves as a party member, ask on what issues do they most agree and/or disagree with the party.
(c) Ask them what might make them change their party affiliation. Then have them consider whether or not the two-party system helps or harms democracy.
13. Essential Question Assessment Based on your interviews and the content you have learned in this chapter, write an anonymous magazine profile about the people you interviewed that helps answer the Essential Question: Does the two-party system help or harm democracy?

\section*{Essential Questions To respond to the chapter Essential Journal Question, go to your Essentia}

148 Chapter 5 Assessment

\section*{SECTION 3}
7. (a) splinter party (b) economic protest party (c) ideological party (d) single-issue party
8. (a) possible answer: to support a strong belief in the minor party's ideals, to express dissatisfaction with both major parties, or to influence the major parties in hopes of bringing about change (b) Sample answer: Minor parties strengthen the two-party system by initiating innovations and forcing the major parties to deal with important issues. They can weaken the two-party system by drawing away members or by acting as spoilers in elections.

\section*{SECTION 4}
9. (a) The parties do not have a single, strong, unified organization, but are instead composed of many small organizations at the national, State, and local levels. (b) A strong answer will consider that a centralized party would be able to coordinate efforts for maximum efficiency but could also be unwieldy and unable to respond to the needs or opinions of people in different parts of the country.
10. (a) A ward is a political unit into which cities are often divided for the election of city council members. A precinct is the

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Political Parties}

The Constitution says nothing about political parties. Yet they soon developed and quickly became a significant part of the governmental system - sometimes, a controversial part, as illustrated by the documents below.

\section*{Document 1}

Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.
This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but, in those of the popular form, it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.
The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge, natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism . . . and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation, on the ruins of public liberty. Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.
-George Washington, Farewell Address,
a wise people to discourage and restrain it.
-George Washington, Farewell Address,
September 17, 1796 \(\square\)

Use your knowledge of political parties and Documents 1 and 2 to answer Questions 1-3.
1. Which answer best summarizes the point of Document 1?
A. Political parties promote good government.
B. Parties are likely to lead to the rise of a despot in the long run.
C. Party conflict and rivalry is a necessary evil in government.
D. Parties work best in a government that is not based on democratic principles.
2. What does Document 2 suggest about the differences between Democratic and Republican candidates for office?
3. Pull It Together What are the advantages and disadvantages of political parties?

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. \(B\)
2. There isn't much difference.
3. Strong answers will include the benefits of parties, such as providing a link between government and the people, ensuring accountability, modifying extremes, and promoting compromise. Strong answers will also include drawbacks, such as the narrowing of voter choices to only two viable candidates and the potentially corrupting influence of fundraising and campaigning.
Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.
smallest unit of election administration and a subset of a ward. Voters in each precinct use the same polling place. (b) Students might note that decentralization enables party activities to focus on each electoral unit-national, State, district, county, ward, and precinct.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Students will write a persuasive editorial, promoting or opposing a political party on the issue they selected.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Students should record the responses to their interview questions.
13. Student profiles should use the specific responses from their interview subject to make generalizations about the two-party system, supported by content from the chapter.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions: \\ UNIT 2}

In what ways should people participate in public affairs?

\section*{CHAPTER 6}

Why do voters act as they do?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: Have all adult Americans always had the right to vote? (no) Which groups had been excluded from voting earlier in U.S. history? (African Americans, women) In this chapter, students will learn about the right to vote-how it has been extended and denied to certain groups, how it is regulated, and how it is exercised. Then tell students to begin to further explore the topic of voting by completing the Chapter 6 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2
ELL Differentiate Chapter 6 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 57)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

You may wish to teach drawing inferences and conclusions as a distinct skill within Section 1 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 6 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 67) to help students learn how to draw inferences and conclusions. The worksheet asks students to read an article about the passage of the 26th Amendment and draw conclusions about its impact on American political life. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 68)

\footnotetext{
WebQuest
online The chapter WebQuest challenges
} students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about voting.

ORTANT INSTRUCTIONS VOTER

 fienat end tien nevent

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- examine a primary source photograph and discuss the reasons for the expansion of voting rights.
- illustrate the changing definition of the American electorate by creating a poster of the history of voting rights expansion in the United States.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- examine a political cartoon to begin a discussion of the benefits and drawbacks of voter identification laws.
- analyze how voter qualifications have changed over time by examining a registration application from the 1960s.
- evaluate and respond to an editorial about mandatory voting.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- identify historical barriers that faced African American voters by examining a political cartoon.
- analyze historical data on African American representation in Congress to understand the effects of widespread voter discrimination and its removal.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- analyze a political cartoon in order to understand the effects of and reasons for nonvoting.
- explore the factors that influence voting behavior by creating a television advertisement that encourages voter participation.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Organize the class into four groups. Assign each group a section from the chapter. (Note that Section 4 is nine pages, considerably longer than the other sections.) Have each group create a presentation detailing the main points of the assigned section. As groups give their presentations, create a study guide on the board outlining each section's main points.
FOLLOW UP Have students create a flyer that summarizes key information about voting rights, including qualifications, history, and voter behavior.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
1 Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ History of Voting Rights } \\
\hline Early 1800s & \begin{tabular}{l} religious, property, and tax qualifications begin to \\ disappear
\end{tabular} \\
\hline 1870 & \begin{tabular}{l}
15th Amendment removes restrictions based on race \\ or color
\end{tabular} \\
\hline 1920 & 19th Amendment removes restrictions based on sex \\
\hline 1960 s & \begin{tabular}{l}
Voting Rights Act of 1965 and other civil rights legis- \\ lation enforces racial equality at polling places; 23rd \\ Amendment enables citizens of District of Columbia \\ to vote in presidential elections; 24th Amendment \\ eliminates poll tax
\end{tabular} \\
\hline 1970 s & 26th Amendment sets minimum voting age at 18 \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will.
- examine a primary source photograph and discuss the reasons for the expansion of voting rights.
- illustrate the changing definition of the American electorate through history by creating a poster of the history of voting rights expansion in the United States.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 61) before class.

L2
Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 62)

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{The Right to Vote}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How have voting rights changed over the course of American history? Use a graphic organizer to take notes on the history of voting rights in this country.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ History of Voting Rights } \\
\hline Early 1800s & \\
\hline 1870 & \\
\hline 1920 & \\
\hline 1960s & \\
\hline 1970s & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}

\section*{- suffrage}
- franchise - poll tax
- electorate

\section*{Objectives}
1. Summarize the history of voting rights in the United States.
2. Identify and explain constitutional restrictions on the States' power to set voting qualifications.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

To practice drawing inferences and conclusions in this section, use the Chapter 6 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 67). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after reviewing the Bellringer. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 68).

Soon, you will be eligible to vote-but will you exercise that right? The record suggests that while you may do so, many of your friends will not, at least not for some time. The record also suggests that some of your friends will never vote. Yet, clearly, the success of democratic government depends on popular participation and, in particular, on the regular and informed exercise of the right to vote.

\section*{The History of Voting Rights}

The Framers of the Constitution purposely left the power to set suffrage qualifications to each State. Suffrage means the right to vote. Franchise is a synonym for the right to vote. \({ }^{1}\)

Expansion of the Electorate When the Constitution went into effect in 1789 , the right to vote was generally restricted to white male property owners. In fact, probably not one in fifteen adult white males could vote in elections in the various States. Benjamin Franklin often made fun of this situation. He told of a man whose only property was a jackass and noted that the man would lose the right to vote if his jackass died. "Now," asked Franklin, "in whom is the right of suffrage? In the man or the jackass?"

Today, the size of the American electorate-the potential voting popula-tion-is truly impressive. More than 230 million people, nearly all citizens who are at least 18 years of age, qualify to vote. That huge number is a direct result of the legal definition of suffrage. In other words, it is the result of those laws that determine who can and cannot vote. It is also the result of more than 200 years of continuing, often bitter, and sometimes violent struggle over the right to vote.

The history of American suffrage since 1789 has been marked by two long-term trends. First, the nation has experienced the gradual elimination of 1 Originally, the Constitution had only two suffriage provisions. Article I, Section 2, Clause 1 requires each State to allow anyone qualified to vote for members of "the most numerous Branch" of its own legislature to vote as well for members of the national House of Representatives. Article II, Section 1, Clause 2 declares that presidential electors be chosen in each State "in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct"

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - Expansion of the electorate occurred in five stages: elimination of religious, property, and tax qualifications; addition of the 15 th and 19 th amendments; passage of civil rights laws; and the addition of the 26 th Amendment. - States determine voting qualifications but must not deny a person aged 18 or over the right to vote on the basis of race, color, or sex, nor may they impose a poll tax in federal elections.
CONCEPTS: rights and responsibilities as citizens, equal protection ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The history of the United States has been marked by steady expansion of the electorate. - States can set voting qualifications under various restrictions set by the Federal Government.
several restrictions on the right to vote. Those restrictions were based on a variety of factors, including religious belief, property ownership, tax payment, race, and gender. Second, a significant share of what was originally the States' power over the right to vote has been gradually assumed by the Federal Government.

Extending Suffrage: The Five Stages The growth of the American electorate has come in five identifiable stages. The two trends described above-growing federal control over suffrage and the elimination of voting restrictions-are woven through those stages.
1. The first stage of the struggle to extend voting rights came in the early 1800 s. Religious qualifications, put in place in colonial days, quickly disappeared. No State has had a religious test for voting since 1810 . Then, one by one, States began to eliminate property ownership and tax payment qualifications.

By mid-century, almost all white adult males could vote in every State.
2. The second major effort to broaden the electorate followed the Civil War. The 15th Amendment, ratified in 1870, was intended to protect any citizen from being denied the right to vote because of race or color. Still, for nearly another century, African Americans were systematically barred from voting, and they remained the largest group of disenfranchised citizens, or citizens denied the right to vote, in the nation's population.
3. The 19th Amendment prohibited the denial of the right to vote because of sex. Its ratification in 1920 completed the third expansion of suffrage. Wyoming, while still a territory, had given women the vote in \(1869 .{ }^{2}\)

2 Women did vote in some elections in this country before Wyoming acted in 1869, however-notably in New Jersey, where

\section*{The Five Stages of Expanding Suffrage}

Suffrage was gradually expanded over a period of nearly 200 years.
As more and more Americans gained the right to vote, how might election results have been affected?

Chapter 6 •Section 1153

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 6, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 57)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 61)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 62)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 63)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 65)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 67)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 68)
L3 Quiz A (p. 69) Quiz B (p. 70)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 6A, Women's Suffrage. Write on the board: A suffragette is a woman who supports women's voting rights. In your notebook, write your answers to the questions that appear below the picture.
L1 L2 Differentiate Point out that at the time of the illustration, women were not allowed to vote in the United States.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS THE PHOTOGRAPH}

Discuss student response to the Bellringer photo. Explain that there appears to be a vote upcoming in the State in which voters-all of whom are men at this point-will have a chance to vote on a measure that would give women in Ohio the vote. Ask students to share their answers to the questions. (The office probably contains information for voters that might persuade them to support the cause of woman suffrage in an upcoming vote. The women are taking part in public affairs by helping to educate the public and promoting a particular cause that is important to them-votes for women.)

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that today they will learn about the history of voting rights in the United States. Explain that this history has followed a clear trend-the steady expansion of the electorate.
L2 ELL Differentiate Explain that the word franchise means "vote," suffrage mean "voting," and electorate means "people who have the right to vote."

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Religious qualifications were the first to disappear.
The Five Stages of Expanding Suffrage Possible response: Winning candidates would be more sympathetic to the concerns of the poor, African Americans, and women.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 6 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 63), which lists significant events in the history of voting rights and directs students to make a poster describing one of these events and its significance. First review the events quickly as a class. Then divide students into pairs or triads and assign each group an event. Students may use information from the chapter and other sources, if they wish. Remind students to divide tasks-for example, designing the overall poster, drawing individual illustrations, writing captions for each image, and so on.

논Differentiate Distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 65).
L4 Differentiate Have students perform research to find additional examples of events or trends in the history of the expansion of voting rights.

\section*{REFLECT AND DISCUSS}

When completed, use the Conversation Wall strategy (p. T27) to have students display their posters. Give students time to circulate and review their classmates' work. Ask students to choose one event (not their own) and explain in a few sentences why they think it is the most interesting. Use these reflections as a basis for a class discussion in which you focus on the Unit 2 Essential Question: In what ways should people participate in public affairs? Explain that these events illustrate how people participate in public affairs when denied the vote. Ask students if they see any patterns, or if some tactics seem more effective than others.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students debate the following question: Is it reasonable to require voters to be able to read and understand English? Divide students into teams to argue both sides of the question. Students should be sure to consider the potential for misuse of such restrictions, as demonstrated by history. Have students use the Internet or other resources to find information on this topic, and use the Debate strategy ( p . T25) to help them organize their thoughts before beginning the debate.

L2Differentiate Have students use the Internet or library resources to research and create a timeline that traces the women's suffrage movement in the United States.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about women's suffrage.

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Maps The Western States were much more likely to have granted suffrage to women than States in the East.
- Interpreting Maps Before the 19th Amendment was adopted across the U.S., several States and territories had given women suffrage in various capacities. This map shows the type of suffrage granted. What observations can you make about women's suffrage in different regions?

By 1920, more than half of the States had followed that lead.
4. A fourth major extension took place during the 1960s. During that time, federal legislation and court decisions focused on securing African Americans a full role in the electoral process in all States. With the vigorous
adj. strong or powerful passage and vigorous enforcement of a number of civil rights acts, especially the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and its later extensions, racial equality finally became fact in polling booths throughout the country.

The 23rd Amendment, passed in 1961, added the voters of the District of Columbia to the presidential electorate. The 24th Amendment, ratified in 1964, eliminated the poll tax (and any other tax) as a condition for voting in any federal election. A poll tax was a tax imposed by several States as a qualification for voting.
5. The fifth and latest expansion of the electorate came with the adoption of the 26th Amendment in 1971. It provides that no State can set the minimum age for voting at more than 18 years of age. In other words, those 18 and over were given the right to vote by this amendment.

\section*{The Power to Set Voting Qualifications}

Again, the Constitution does not give the Federal Government the power to set suffrage qualifications. Rather, that matter is reserved to the States. The Constitution does,

154 Voters and Voter Behavior

\section*{Background}
the framers and voting rights The Framers of the Constitution clearly had concerns about allowing voters too much power in choosing their government. The methods for electing the President were designed to limit the influence of a voting public that the Framers of the Constitution did not fully trust. In addition, the Framers originally sought to have the Senate chosen by state legislatures rather than by direct popular vote. Only the House of Representatives was to be elected by the voters directly.
however, place five restrictions on the ability of the States to exercise that power:
1. Any person whom a State allows to vote for members of the "most numerous Branch" of its own legislature must also be allowed to vote for representatives and senators in Congress. \({ }^{3}\) This restriction is of little real meaning today. With only minor exceptions, each of the States allows the same voters to vote in all elections within the State.
2. No State can deprive any person of the right to vote "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude" (15th Amendment). \({ }^{4}\)
3. No State can deprive any person of the right to vote on account of sex (19th Amendment). \({ }^{5}\)
4. No State can require payment of any tax as a condition for taking part in the nomination or election of any federal officeholder. That is, no State can levy any tax in connection with the selection of the President, the Vice President, or members of Congress (24th Amendment)

3 Article I, Section 2, Clause 1; the 17th Amendment extended the "most numerous Branch" provision to the election of senators.
4 The phrase "previous condition of servitude" refers to slavery. This amendment does not guarantee the right to vote to African Americans, or to anyone else. Instead, it forbids discrimination on these grounds when the States set suffrage qualifications.
5 This amendment does not guarantee the right to vote to women as such. Technically, it forbids States the power to discriminate against males or females in establishing suffrage qualifications.
5. No State can deprive any person who is at least 18 years of age of the right to vote because of age (26th Amendment). \({ }^{6}\)

Beyond these five restrictions, remember that no State can violate any other provision in the Constitution in the setting of suffrage qualifications-or in anything else that it does. A case decided by the Supreme Court in 1975, Hill v. Stone, illustrates the point.

There, the Court struck down a section of the Texas constitution that declared that only those persons who owned taxable property could vote in city bond elections. The Court found the drawing of such a distinction for voting purposes-between those who do and those who do not own taxable property-to be an unreasonable classification prohibited by the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoin }}\)
What did the 26th Amendment do?

Suffragists published newspapers and pamphlets in support of their cause. How might weekly or daily publications help in the fight for women's suffrage?

1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: How have voting rights changed over the course of American history?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Briefly summarize the history of suffrage qualifications in this country
3. (a) What is a poll tax? (b) Which amendment eliminated it?
4. (a) What is the American electorate? (b) Approximately how large is it?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Identify Central Issues (a) What was the voting experience of African Americans after the Civil War? (b) What does this suggest about the legal expansion of voting rights?
6. Recognize Ideologies (a) What does the Constitution say about suffrage qualifications? (b) How does this reflect the Framers' ideas about the role of the Federal Government in the nation's political system?

\section*{Quick Write}

Narrative Essay: Choose a Topic Choose a significant event in the history of suffrage such as the coming of women's suffrage or the abolition of the poll tax. You may want to do preliminary research online or at the library. Write a paragraph summarizing the event and its importance. Include details such as who, what, when, where, and why.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess student performance using the Rubric for Assessing a Student Poster (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 253).

Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 69)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 70)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The two long-term \\ trends in the history \\ of suffrage (Questions \\
\(1,2,4)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write the words eliminating barriers and \\ extending voting rights on the board, and \\ have students find examples of each \\ phenomenon in the section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The five distinct \\ stages of growth in the \\ American electorate \\
(Questions 1, 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a timeline of the \\ expansion of voting rights as described in \\ the text.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Ways in which govern- \\ ment \\ voting exp rights (Questions \\
3, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a table of govern- \\ ment actions aimed at expanding voting \\ rights.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The constitutional \\ restrictions on setting \\ suffrage qualifications \\ by the States (Ques- \\ tion 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write and exchange among \\ themselves a quiz about the power of the \\ States to establish voting qualifications.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It effectively lowered the voting age to 18.
Caption Newspapers might inform voters and influence public opinion.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Originally, voting rights were generally limited to white male property owners. Over time, voting rights expanded to include all adult white men, then African American men, and finally women. Now most citizens 18 and over can vote.
2. The trend in suffrage has been a steady expansion of the electorate.
3. (a) a tax a person must pay in order to vote (b) the 24th Amendment
4. (a) It is the potential voting population.
(b) It is more than 230 million.
5. (a) After the 15 th Amendment legally enfranchised African Americans in 1870, their voting rights remained restricted until the 1960s when civil rights legislation and enforcement assured racial equality at polling places.
(b) A good answer will recognize that expansion of voting rights by law can be frustrated if there is significant opposition of the people.
6. (a) Originally it said little, specifying only that States must allow those eligible to vote for representatives to the most numerous branch of the State legislature to vote in House elections, though later amendments ensured that people could not be denied the vote based on race, gender, age 18 or older, or payment of taxes. (b) The Framers wanted to leave the settings of voting qualifications to the States, but they also believed in democracy and equality, and that government should represent the people. The later expansion of voting rights reflects these early core values.

QUICK WRITE Student summaries should include important details about their chosen event.

\section*{section 2}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Voting Requirements} \\
\hline & & \\
\hline Citizenship & Residence & Age \\
\hline & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- Must be U.S. citizen \\
- Only Minnesota and Pennsylvania have time requirements for naturalized citizens
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Must be legal resident of State in which ballot to be cast \\
- Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970 ban residency requirement of longer than 30 days for presidential elections, and most states do not specify a required residency period \\
- Transients may not vote in most States
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- 26th Amendment extends suffrage to all citizens age 18 or older \\
- States may choose to set age at less than 18 \\
Some 17-yearolds can vote in some States
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- examine a political cartoon to begin a discussion of the benefits and drawbacks of voter identification laws.
- analyze how voter qualifications have changed over time by examining a registration application from the 1960s.
- evaluate and respond to an editorial about mandatory voting.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

Image Above: Members of the armed forces stationed abroad vote by absen tee ballot.

Are you qualified to vote? Probably not—at least not yet. Do you know why? In this section, you will see how the States, including yours, determine who can vote. You will also see that the various qualifications they set are not very difficult to meet.

\section*{Universal Requirements}

Today, every State requires that any person who wants to vote must be able to satisfy qualifications based on three factors: (1) citizenship, (2) residence, and (3) age. The States have some leeway in shaping the details of the first two of these factors; they have almost no discretion with regard to the third one.

Citizenship Aliens, foreign-born residents who have not become citizens, are generally denied the right to vote in this country. Still, nothing in the Constitution says that aliens cannot vote, and any State could allow them to do so if it chose. At one time, about a fourth of the States permitted those aliens who had applied for naturalization - that is, applied for citizenship-to vote. Typically, the western States did so to help attract settlers. \({ }^{7}\)

States may draw a distinction between native-born and naturalized citizens with regard to suffrage. The Pennsylvania constitution says that one must have become a citizen at least one month before an election in order to vote in that State.

Residence In order to vote in this country today, one must be a legal resident of the State in which he or she wishes to cast a ballot. In many States, a person must have lived in the State for at least a certain period of time before he or she can vote.

The States adopted residence requirements for two reasons: (1) to keep a political machine from bringing in enough outsiders to affect the outcome of an election (a once common practice), and (2) to allow new voters at least some time in which to become familiar with the candidates and issues in an upcoming election.
7 Arkansas, the last State in which aliens could vote, adopted a ciitzenship requirement in 1926. In a few States, local governments can permitnoncitizens to vote in local contests-e.g., city council elections-and a handful do.

To help students learn to analyze political cartoons, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S22, and use the information there to complete the Bellringer activity.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Throughout our history, different States have imposed different qualifications for voting. - The three current universal requirements are citizenship, residency, and age. • People can be denied the right to vote based on mental incapability, imprisonment for some crimes, or dishonorable discharge from the armed forces. - Literacy tests and poll taxes used to disenfranchise certain groups have been eliminated.
CONCEPTS: rights and responsibilities as citizens, democratic values/principles
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - All States have citizenship, residence, and age requirements for voting. - Other qualifications differ from State to State. • Some voting requirements used to disenfranchise certain groups have been eliminated.

\section*{Residence Requirements}

Where You Live Determines Where You Vote
In order to vote in elections today, voters must be citizens with established residence in their voting locations. Why do you think some States have different residence requirements? (at right) are often held when people are sworn in as citizens.

States require voters to be residents.
A person can have only one residence.
Some States have provided registration qualifications that require people to have lived in a place for a certain amount of time.
Naturalized citizens can vote once they become citizens.
For decades, every State imposed a fairly lengthy residence requirement-typically, a year in the State, 60 or 90 days in the county, and 30 days in the local precinct or ward. \({ }^{8}\) The requirement was longer in some southern States-for example, one year in the State, six months in the county, and three months in the precinct in Alabama, Louisiana, and South Carolina, and in Mississippi a year in the State, a year in the county, and six months in the precinct.

Residence requirements are not nearly so long today. In fact, most States now require that a voter be a legal resident but do not attach a time period to that qualification. About a third of them say that a voter must have lived in the State for at least 30 days. In a few, the period is somewhat shorter-for example, 29 days in Arizona, 20 in Minnesota, and 10 in Wisconsin. \({ }^{9}\)

8 Recall from Chapter 5 , the precinct is the smallest unit of election administration. The ward is a unititito which cities are often divided for the election of members of the city council.
9 Until recenty, Arizona imposed a 50 -day requirement period. The Supreme Court upheld Arizona's residence law in Marston v. Lewis in 1973 , butit also declared in another case that a similar law "approaches the outer constitutional limits."

Today's much shorter requirements are a direct result of a 1970 federal law and a 1972 Supreme Court decision. In the Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970, Congress banned any requirement of longer than 30 days for voting in presidential elections. \({ }^{10}\) And in Dunn v. Blumstein, 1972, the Court found Tennessee's requirement-at the time, a year in the State and 90 days in the countyunconstitutional. The Court found such a lengthy requirement to be an unsupportable discrimination against new residents and so in conflict with the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. The Supreme Court said that " 30 days appears to be an ample period of time." Election law and practice among the States quickly accepted that standard.

Nearly every State does prohibit transients, persons who plan to live in a State for only a short time, from gaining legal residence status there. Thus, a traveling sales agent, a member of the armed services, or a college student usually cannot vote in a State 10 The Supreme Court upheld this provision in the law in Oregon v. Mitchell in 1970.

\section*{\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)}

When and why did residence requirements begin to get shorter?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 6, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 71)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 73)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 75)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 78)
L2 Core Worksheet B (p. 80)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 82)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 83)
L3 Quiz A (p. 84) L2 Quiz B (p. 85)

\section*{before class}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 71) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 73)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 6B, Voter Identification, a political cartoon about voter identification laws. Write on the board: Examine the cartoon and answer the questions in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS THE BELLRINGER}

Ask students to share their responses to the Bellringer questions. (1. The cartoonist supports voter ID laws. He suggests that we willingly show photo identification in many situations, such as for bank transactions, movie rentals, proof of age at a bar, and airport check-in. 2. It makes no sense, then, to object to showing a photo ID at the polls. ) Ask:
What is the purpose of voter ID laws? (to prevent voter fraud by requiring voters to prove their identity) How might voter ID laws discourage voting? (Some othervise qualified voters, such as people who are elderly, poor, or disabled, may not have a driver's license or other photo ID.) Do you think people should be required to show a photo ID in order to vote? Why or why not? Is it a concern that these requirements may prevent some people from voting?

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that today they will learn about the ways in which the Federal and State governments establish qualifications for voting. Have students scan the headings and subheadings of the section to see what these qualifications are. (universal requirements of citizenship, residence, and age; registration, and tax payment and literacy.) Tell students that literacy and tax requirements are no longer in use.

\section*{Answers}

Residence Requirements Possible response: States with a history of newcomers interfering in local politics might set longer residency requirements than other States.
Checkpoint Requirements began to get shorter in the early 1970s, in response to a federal law and a subsequent Supreme Court ruling.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET A}

Distribute the Chapter 6 Section 2 Core Worksheet A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 75), which is a sample voter registration application. Have students work independently to read the application and complete the questions that follow. After students have completed the activity, review the answers as a class. Invite students to respond to each other's answers.
L1 L2 Differentiate Read the questions in the registration application aloud. Then ask students to choose two questions to answer at the bottom of the page.

L4
Differentiate Have students attempt to fill in the application.

\section*{INVITE STUDENT REACTION}

Tell students that the application was one of several available to registrars in Alabama prior to 1965, when the federal Voting Rights Act made such tests illegal. The law was aimed at breaking down barriers to voting by African Americans in the South. Tell students that parts of this application were especially aimed at African Americans. Ask Do you think the average 18 year old could pass this test? Do you think a person who could not pass this test would nevertheless be able to cast an informed vote?

\section*{Government}
online
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Checkpoint What event was significant to lowering the voting age?
infirmity n. physical or mental weakness fraudulent ad \(j\) deceitful; false eligibility
n. qualifications

The service of Americans under 21 in the Vietnam War spurred the lowering of the voting age to 18 .
where he or she has only a temporary physical presence. In several States, however, the courts have held that college students who claim the campus community as their legal residence must be allowed to vote there.

Age The 26th Amendment, added to the Constitution in 1971, declares,

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

\section*{-26th Amendment}

Thus, no State can set the minimum age for voting in any election at more than 18. In other words, the amendment extends suffrage to citizens who are at least 18 years of age. Notice, however, that any State can set the age at less than 18, if it chooses to do so.

Until the 26th Amendment was adopted, the generally accepted age requirement for voting was 21 . In fact, until 1970, only four States had put the age at less than 21. Georgia was the first State to allow 18-year-olds to vote; it did so in 1943, in the midst of World War II. Kentucky followed suit in 1955. Alaska entered the Union in 1959 with the voting age set at 19, and Hawaii became a State later that same year with a voting age of 20 .

Both Alaska and Hawaii set the age above 18 but below 21 to avoid potential problems caused by high school students voting in local school-district elections. Whatever the fears at the time, there have been no such problems in any State since the passage of the 26th Amendment.

Efforts to lower the voting age to 18 nationwide began in the 1940s, during World War II. Those efforts were capped by the adoption of the 26th Amendment in 1971, during the war in Vietnam. That amendment was ratified more quickly than any other amendment to the Constitution. This fact is testament to the emotional weight of the principal argument in its favor: "Old enough to fight, old enough to vote."

How have 18 to 20 -year-olds responded to the 26th Amendment? In short, not very well. In election after election, young voters are much less likely to vote than any other age group in the electorate. In 1972, 48 percent of the 18 -to- 20 age group voted, but by 2000 that figure had plummeted to 28 percent. It rose again, substantially, in 2004 and reached even higher levels in 2008. But contrast that figure with the turnout of Americans 65 and older. Despite the infirmities that may accompany their age, their voting rate regularly exceeds 60 percent, and it did so again in the presidential election of 2008.

In a growing number of States, some 17 -year-olds can now cast ballots in primary elections. Those States allow anyone whose 18 th birthday falls after the primary but before the general election to vote in the primary election.

Several states have come very close to effectively lowering the voting age to 17 for all elections. In Nebraska, for example, any person who will be 18 by the Tuesday following the first Monday in November can qualify to vote in any election held during that calendar year

\section*{Registration}

One other significant qualification, registration, is nearly universal among the States today. Registration is a procedure of voter

158 Voters and Voter Behavior

\section*{Debate}
"Disenfranchisement seems a particularly appropriate punishment for felons. The murderer, rapist, or thief has expressed contempt for his fellow citizens and broken the rules of society in the most unmistakable way."
—"Should Felons Vote? " by Edward Feser from City Journal, Spring 2005
Use this quotation to start a debate in your classroom. Ask: Should convicted felons be allowed to regain their right to vote after they serve their sentences?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the Vietnam War
identification intended to prevent fraudulent voting. It gives election officials a list of those persons who are qualified to vote in an election. Several States also use voter registration to identify voters in terms of their party preference and, thus, their eligibility to take part in closed primaries.

Requirements Forty-nine States-all except North Dakota-require that most, and usually all, voters be registered in order to cast ballots. Voter registration became a common feature of State election law in the early 1900s. Today, most States require all voters to register in order to vote in any election held within the State. A few, however, do not impose the requirement for all elections.

Maine and Wisconsin allow voters to register at any time, up to and including election day. Elsewhere, a voter must be registered by a certain date, often 20 or 30 days before an election. \({ }^{11}\) That cutoff gives election officials time to prepare the poll books for an upcoming election.

Typically, a prospective voter must register his or her name, age, place of birth, present address, length of residence, and similar facts. The information is logged by a local official, usually a registrar of elections or the county clerk. A voter typically remains registered unless or until he or she moves, dies, is convicted of a serious crime, or is committed to a mental institution.

State law directs local election officials to review the lists of registered voters and to remove the names of those who are no longer eligible to vote. This process, known as purging, is usually done every two or four years. Unfortunately, the requirement is often ignored. When it is, the poll books (the official lists of qualified voters in each precinct) soon become clogged with the names of many people who, for one reason or another, are no longer eligible to vote.

Controversies There are some who think that the registration requirement should be abolished everywhere. They see the qualifica-

11 In Idaho, Minnesota, New Hampshire, and Wyoming, a person who is qualified to vote but misses the deadline can register (and then vote) on election day

\section*{How Government Works}

\section*{Registering to Vote}

\section*{Location, Location, Location}

\section*{Registering to vote has become much more conve-} nient in recent years. Mail-in forms are available at most schools, public libraries, and many other State and local governmental offices, at a variety of public events, and on Web sites. Why do you think registration has been "streamlined" in recent years?

\section*{Myths and Misconceptions} voting rights in ancient greece Ancient Greece is widely regarded as the birthplace of democracy. Yet even at its height, Athenian democracy empowered only a small percentage of the population. Only citizens were allowed to vote, and only men could become citizens. In addition, voting was typically restricted to the most affluent members of Athenian society. Never in the history of Ancient Greece were any more than one out of seven Athenians able to cast a ballot.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B}

Give students copies of the Chapter 6 Section 2 Core Worksheet B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 78). This worksheet includes an excerpt from a New York Times editorial arguing for mandatory voting. Have students read the excerpt and summarize the main message. (Possible summary. Mandatory voting would be a good way to get candidates to focus on all voters rather than those people on the fringes that consistently vote.) Then ask them to underline the evidence that supports the argument and circle the portion of the editorial that addresses the counterargument. (the last paragraph) Briefly discuss the arguments and attributes that make this an effective or ineffective editorial.
Have students write their own letters to the editor that either echo the demand in the editorial or take a contrary view. Distribute and review the Rubric for Assessing a Letter to the Editor (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 254).

L1 L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted Core Worksheet B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 80), and have students read the summary of the editorial and answer the questions.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students take both positions on the question of mandatory voting.

\section*{Answers}

Registering to Vote Possible answer: Concern over low turnout has spurred efforts to make registration easier.

\section*{SHARE STUDENTS' LETTERS}

Distribute the student letters to the class, so that each student has an editorial written by another student. Have students offer a critique of the letter in which they identify what they think is the strongest point and the weakest point in the author's argument. Students should also make suggestions for improvements to the letters, using the criteria identified in the rubric.
L1 L2 Differentiate Create student teams to review the letters to the editor and offer suggestions.

\section*{DEBRIEF}

Have students discuss what they have learned about the possible benefits and drawbacks of mandatory voting. Tell students to consider this question in light of the Unit 2 Essential Question: In what ways should people participate in public affairs? Ask: Is not voting a valid way of participating in public affairs? Should people be required to participate in this way?
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about voter identification.

tion as a bar to voting, especially by the poor and less educated.
buttress
v. to support, reinforce, strengthen

Those critics buttress their case by noting that voter turnout began to decline in the early 1900s, just after most States adopted a registration requirement. They also point to the fact that voter turnout is much higher in most European democracies than in the United States. In those countries, voter registration is not a matter of individual choice but is the law. Public officials must enter the names of all eligible citizens on registration lists. The United States is the only democratic country in which each person decides whether or not to register to vote.

Most people who have studied the problem favor keeping the registration requirement as a necessary defense against fraud. However, they also favor making the process a more convenient one. In short, they see the problem in these terms: Where is the line between making it so easy to vote that fraud is encouraged, and making it so difficult that legitimate voting is discouraged?

Most States have eased the registration process over the last several years. In 1993, Congress passed a law that required every State (but North Dakota) to do so. That law, dubbed the "Motor Voter Act," became effective in 1995. It directs the States to (1) allow all eligible citizens to register to vote when they apply for or renew a driver's license; (2) provide for voter registration by mail; and (3) make registration forms available at the local offices of State employment, welfare, and other social service agencies. The Federal Election Commission reported that by the year 2000, approximately 8 mil-

\section*{Background}

AUSTRALIAN ballot Although the use of paper ballots in the U.S. dates back to colonial times, the growth of political parties in the early 1800 s led to widespread abuses. The law at that time allowed parties to print and distribute ballots to voters before elections. These ballots listed the party's candidates only. To vote for another candidate, voters would have to cross out the printed name and write in another. Voting was not always secret and corruption was common. Parties often paid election officials to stuff ballot boxes. Heeding calls for reform, Massachusetts in 1888 adopted the Australian Ballot System, which originated in Australia in 1856. Under this system, ballots list all candidates and are prepared by government agencies. Voters receive one ballot at the polling place, which they mark in the privacy of a voting booth. Today, all States use a form of this system.
lion persons had registered to vote as a direct result of the Motor Voter Law

The law also requires every State to mail a questionnaire to each of its registered voters every four years, so that the poll books can be purged for deaths and changes of residence. It also forbids the States to purge for any other reason, including failure to vote.

Several States now have so-called voter ID laws that require people to prove their identity when they seek to register or vote. Some government-issued photo ID-a passport or a driver's license, for example-will usually satisfy the requirement to confirm their identity at the polls.

The statutes are quite controversial. Their sponsors, usually Republican State legislators, insist that the measures are intended to prevent people from voting under false identities, also known as fraudulent voting. Fraudulent voting, they argue, weakens the value of legally-cast votes by diluting them with illegitimate votes. Critics, mostly Democrats, say that they are really designed to discourage voting by the elderly, disabled, poor, and minority groups, who are less likely to have State-issued driver's licenses or federally issued passports. They also argue that very few cases of voter fraud have been identified and prosecuted in recent years.

The Supreme Court upheld Indiana's photo ID law in Craw ford v. Marion County Election Board in 2008. The Court ruled, \(6-3\), that the opponents of the law had not shown that it puts so unreasonable a burden on some groups of voters that it violates the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. The Court will likely hear other challenges to these laws as they are applied in future elections.

\section*{Literacy, Tax Payment}

Suffrage qualifications based on two other factors-literacy and tax payment-were once fairly common among the States. They had a fairly long history but are no longer to be found anywhere.

Literacy Today, no State has a suffrage qualification based on voter literacy-a person's ability to read and write. At one time, the literacy requirement could be, and in many places was, used to make sure that a qualified voter had the capacity to cast an informed ballot. Some States asked potential voters to prove that they could read; others asked for the ability to both read and write. And still others required those who registered to vote to show that they could read and write and also understand some piece of printed material-often, a passage from the State or Federal Constitution.

Connecticut adopted the first literacy qualifications in 1855. Massachusetts followed in 1857. Both States were trying to limit voting by Irish Catholic immigrants. Mississippi adopted a literacy requirement in 1890 , and soon after, most of the other southern States followed suit. The literary qualification in most southern States included an "understanding" clause. Often, whites were asked to "understand" some short, plainly worded constitutional provision; but African Americans had to interpret a long, complex passage to the satisfaction of local election officials.

While those qualifications had been aimed at disenfranchising African Americans, they sometimes had unintended effects. Several States soon found that they needed to adjust their voting requirements by adding so-called grandfather clauses to their constitutions. These grandfather clauses were designed to enfranchise those white males who were unintentionally disqualified by their failure to meet the literacy or taxpaying requirements.

A grandfather clause was added to the Louisiana constitution in 1898; Alabama, Georgia, Maryland, North Carolina, Oklahoma, and Virginia soon added them as well. These clauses stated that any man, or his male descendants, who had voted in the State before the adoption of the 15th Amendment (1870) could become a legal voter without regard to any literacy or taxpaying qualifications. The Supreme Court found the Oklahoma provision, the last to be adopted (in 1910), in conflict with the 15 th Amendment in Guinn v. United States in 1915.

A number of States outside the South also adopted literacy qualifications, including Wyoming, California, Washington, New \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the requirements of the "Motor Voter Law Act?"

\section*{Background}

LEGAL LITERACY TEST The use of literacy tests as a requirement for registration was brought to an end in 1970, yet some voters must still meet certain basic literacy requirements. Immigrants to the United States must demonstrate the ability to read, speak, and write English in order to become United States citizens. Since citizenship is a requirement for voting in the United States, people who are not born citizens of the United States do, in fact, face a kind of literacy test before they can cast a ballot.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 82). Tell students that this is a copy of a standardized application that is widely accepted among States that require voter registration. Have students fill out the form to the best of their ability. Then have students write a brief paragraph that explains how this form differs from the form on Core Worksheet A. (Students should observe that the form asks only basic information necessary to confirm a potential voter's identity and the universal qualifications of citizenship, residency, and age, whereas the form on Core Worksheet A required would-be voters to know detailed information about government and to provide personal information.)

L4
Differentiate Have students use the Internet to locate the specific instructions for their State and prepare a valid registration application for themselves or someone in their family. If applicable, they can use the National Mail Registration Form, on which the worksheet is based. They should leave a blank for Social Security Number to avoid compromising their identity security.
L2. Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "Registering to Vote" (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 83) and have students follow the instructions on it.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The law requires States to allow people to register when they apply for or renew their driver's licenses; to provide for registration by mail; to make registration forms available in certain specific places; to mail voters questionnaires for purposes of purging poll books; and to limit purging to those who have died or changed residence.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the letters to the editor and assess students' work using the Rubric for Assessing a Letter to the Editor (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 254).Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 84)Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 85) Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Registration Requirements}

Literacy tests below were used in many places to try to deny African Americans the right to vote. The questions below are reproduced from one of the many versions of the test in circulation during that time. The tests were also changed frequently, making it impossible to study for them. How might these questions discourage eligible citizens from registering to vote?

A voter fills out a registration form.

\section*{Gan you answer these?}
1. If you have been employed by another during the last five years, state the nature of your employment and the name or names of such employer or employers and his or their addresses.
3. Are you now or have you ever been affiliated with any group or organization which advocates the overthrow of the Unites States Government or the government of any State of the United States by unlawful means?
4. Name some of the duties and obligations of citizenship. Do you regard those duties and obligations as having priority over the duties and obligations you owe to any other secular organization when they are in conflict?

Source: The Honorable Rufus A Lewis Collection at Trenholm State Technical College Archives

Checkpoint
Which amendment outlawed the poll tax?

Hampshire, Arizona, New York, Oregon, and Alaska. Its unfair use finally led Congress to literacy qualifications in 1970. The Supreme Court agreed in Oregon v. Mitchell, 1970:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

In enacting the literacy test ban.. . Congress had before it a long history of the discriminatory use of literacy tests to disfranchise voters on account of their race.
-Justice Hugo Black, Opinion of the Court
Some form of the literacy requirement was in place in 18 States when Congress finally banned its use.

Tax Payment Property ownership, proved by the payment of property taxes, was once a very common suffrage qualification. For decades, several States also demanded the payment of a special tax, called the poll tax, as a condition for voting. Those requirements and others that called for the payment of a tax in order to vote have disappeared over the years.

The poll tax was once found throughout the South. Beginning with Florida in 1889, each of the 11 southern States adopted the poll tax as part of the effort to discourage voting by African Americans. The device proved to be of only limited effectiveness, however. That fact, and opposition to the use of the poll tax from within the South as well as elsewhere, led most of those States to abandon it. By 1966, the tax was still in use in only Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia. \({ }^{12}\)

The 24th Amendment, ratified in 1964, outlawed the poll tax, or any other tax, as a condition for voting in any federal election. The Supreme Court finally eliminated the poll tax in 1966 as a qualification for voting in all elections. In Har per v. Virginia Board of Elections, the Court held the Virginia poll tax to be

12 By that time, the poll tax had been abolished in North Carolina
(1920), Louisiana (1934), Florida (1937), Georgia (1945), South

Carolina (1951), Tennessee (1953), and Arkansas (1965).

\section*{Background}

AFRICAN AMERICAN VOTING RIGHTS The introduction of discriminatory voter restrictions came about in the years after Reconstruction, the post-Civil War period in which the Southern states were brought back into the Union and the newly freed African Americans were granted voting and other civil rights. During that time, African American populations in some places were a majority of voters. New African American voters succeeded in helping elect representatives to local and State governments throughout the South and also to Congress. But with the end of Reconstruction in 1877, the Federal Government turned its attention away from the South—and many whites began a systematic program of terror and intimidation to drive African Americans out of the political process. That job accomplished, many southern states passed discriminatory laws, such as literacy tests and poll taxes. the Southern states were brought back into the Union and the newly freed African

\section*{Answers}

Registration Requirements Lengthy or complex test questions could intimidate and discourage registrants.
Checkpoint the 24th Amendment
2. Give the names of the places, respectively, where you have ived during the last five names by which you have been known during the last five years.
in conflict with the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. The Court could find no reasonable relationship between the act of voting on one hand and the payment of a tax on the other. Justice William O. Douglas, writing for the majority, put the point this way:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

Once the franchise is granted to the electorate, lines may not be drawn which are inconsistent with the Equal Protection Clause. . . . Voter qualifications have no relation to wealth nor to paying this or any other tax. . . . Wealth, like race, creed, or color, is not germane to one's ability to participate intelligently in the electoral process.

> —Justice William 0. Douglas, Opinion of the Court

Persons Denied the Vote Clearly, democratic government can exist only where the right to vote is widely held. Still, every State does purposely deny the vote to certain persons. For example, few of the 50 States allow people in mental institutions, or any other persons who have been legally found to be mentally incompetent, to vote.

Most States disqualify, at least temporarily, those persons who have been convicted of seri-

- During the 2004 election, The Partnership for the Homeless, held a voter registration drive in New York City. Why might it be important to register the homeless in a large city?
ous crimes. Until fairly recently, that disqualification was almost always a permanent one. Over recent years, however, most States have made it possible for the majority of convicted felons to regain the right to vote, although those guilty of such election-related offenses as bribery and ballot-box stuffing, however, are still regularly banned. A few States also do not allow anyone dishonorably discharged from the armed forces to cast a ballot.

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)

1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer the question: What are the qualifications for voting, and how have they changed over time?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What does the Constitution say about the voting rights of aliens?
3. (a) What is the purpose of laws requiring voter registration? (b) How do registration laws vary among States?
4. Why should election officials regularly purge voter lists?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Express Problems Clearly (a) What are the pros and cons of voter registration? (b) Do you think the "Motor Voter Law" has had a positive or negative impact on voting? Explain.
6. Draw Inferences (a) Why were literacy requirements originally added to some State's voting requirements? (b) How did the establishment of "grandfather clauses" call into question the motives of States that had literacy test requirements?

\section*{Quick Write}

Narrative: Consider Audience and
Purpose Once you have chosen an event, think about who your audience is. Will you be writing for your fellow classmates, your teacher, or someone outside of your class? Consider how much background information you need to provide to your reader. Write a brief paragraph describing your audience.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The universal \\ requirements of voter \\ registration (Ques- \\ tions 1, 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a chart that details \\ the basic requirements for all voters in the \\ United States.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The reasons for voter \\ registration (Ques- \\ tions 3, 4, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have student pairs debate the pros and cons \\ of voter registration.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The historical misuse \\ of voter requirements \\
(Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make a timeline that shows \\ the history of now-removed voting restric- \\ tions of literacy and tax payment.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible answer: The homeless have a strong interest in influencing policies that might serve their needs.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Universal requirements are citizenship, residence, age. Registration is nearly universal. Use of the poll tax and literacy tests used to be widespread but have now been outlawed.
2. The Constitution says nothing that would prevent aliens from voting, though they are generally not permitted to vote.
3. (a) to prevent fraud (b) Registration laws vary by how long before an election voters must register, by what means voters may register, and even whether voters must register at all.
4. Purging prevents poll books from becoming clogged with many names of people who are no longer eligible to vote.
5. (a) possible benefit: helps reduce fraud by ensuring that only truly qualified voters actually vote, and allows officials to identify voters' party preference, which is necessary for closed primaries; possible drawback: many qualified voters may fail to register (b) Possible response: The law has had positive effects. By making registration easier, the law has resulted in more eligible voters and, therefore, a stronger democracy.
6. (a) At one time, literacy tests were designed to ensure that a qualified voter had the capacity to cast an informed ballot. Such tests were also used to disenfranchise groups, such as Irish Catholic immigrants and African Americans.
(b) Grandfather clauses showed that the governments were not truly trying to ensure the capacity to cast an informed ballot, but were instead targeting specific groups.

QuICK WRITE Ensure students have accurately identified their audience.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{How did the U.S. fulfill the promise of the 15th Amendment?}

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

\section*{ANALYZE TIMELINES}

Before students study the timeline in this section, you may want to review information on analyzing timelines in the Skills Handbook, p. S29.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{Suffrage and Civil Rights}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How did the U.S. fulfill the promise of the 15th Amendment? Use the chart to record details of the history of voting rights for African Americans.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- gerrymandering
- injunction
- preclearance

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the tactics often used to deny African Americans the right to vote despite the command of the 5th Amendment.
2. Understand the significance of the civil rights laws enacted in 1957, 1960, and 1964.
3. Analyze the provisions and effects of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Image Above: Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., casts his ballot in Atlanta, Georgia, on November 3, 1964

How important is the right to vote? For those who do not have it, that right can seem as important as life itself. Indeed, in the Deep South of the 1960s, civil rights workers suffered arrest, beatings, shocks with electric cattle prods, even death-all in the name of the right to vote. Their efforts inspired the nation and led to large-scale federal efforts to secure that right for African Americans and other minority groups in the United States.

\section*{The 15th Amendment}

The effort to extend the franchise to African Americans began with the 15th Amendment, which was ratified in 1870. It declares that the right to vote cannot be denied to any citizen of the United States because of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The amendment was plainly intended to ensure that African American men, nearly all of them former slaves and nearly all of them living in the South, could vote.

The 15th Amendment is not self-executing, however. In other words, simply stating a general principle without providing for a means of enforcement was not enough to carry out the intention of the amendment. To make it effective, Congress had to act. Yet for nearly 90 years the Federal Government paid little attention to the voting rights of African Americans.

History During that period, African Americans were generally and systematically kept from the polls in much of the South. White supremacists employed a number of tactics to that end. Their major weapon was violence. Other tactics included more subtle threats and social pressures-for example, firing an African American man who tried to register or vote, or denying his family credit at local stores.

More formal "legal" devices were used, as well. The most effective were literacy tests. White officials regularly manipulated those tests to disenfranchise African Americans. Registration laws served the same end. As written, they applied to all potential voters. In practice, however, they were often administered to keep African Americans from qualifying to vote. Poll taxes, "white primaries," gerrymandering, and several other devices were also used.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The 15 th Amendment, ratified in 1870, forbade denial of voting rights due to race. - Some southern whites used unfair laws, intimidation, and other discriminatory practices to circumvent the 15 th Amendment. - Supreme Court cases and civil rights laws beginning in the 1950s finally helped fulfill the purpose of the 15 th Amendment.
CONCEPTS: equal protection, rights and responsibilities of citizens, values and principles of a civil society, personal and civic rights and responsibilities enduring understandings: - Whites in the South and elsewhere took actions to deny African Americans their civil rights starting in the late 1800s. • Civil rights workers, the judiciary, and Congress finally reversed these in justices.

Gerrymandering is the practice of drawing electoral district lines (the boundaries of the geographic area from which a candidate is elected to a public office) in order to limit the voting strength of a particular group or party.

The white primary arose out of the decades-long Democratic domination of politics in the South. It was almost a given that the Democratic candidate for an office would be elected. Therefore, only the Democrats ordinarily nominated candidates, generally in primaries. In several southern States, political parties were defined by law as "private associations" that could exclude whomever they chose, and the Democrats regularly refused to admit African Americans. Because only party members could vote in the party's primary, African Americans were then excluded from a critical step in the public election process.

Court Rulings The Supreme Court outlawed the white primary in a case from Texas, Smith v. Allwright, in 1944. The Court held that nominations are an integral part of the election process. So, when a political party holds a primary, it is performing a public function and is bound by the 15th Amendment.

The Supreme Court outlawed gerrymandering used for purposes of racial discrimination in Gomillion v. Light foot, 1960. There, the Alabama legislature had redrawn the electoral district boundaries of Tuskegee, effectively excluding blacks from the city limits. The Court ruled that the legislature's action violated the 15th Amendment, because the irregularly shaped district clearly was created to deprive blacks of political power.

Led by these decisions, the lower federal courts struck down many practices designed to deny the vote to African Americans in the 1940s and 1950s. Still, the courts could act only when those who claimed to be victims of discrimination sued. That case-by-case method was, at best, agonizingly slow.

\section*{Early Civil Rights Legislation}

Finally, largely in response to the civil rights movement led by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Congress was moved to act. In the late 1950s, it began to enact civil rights laws specifically intended to implement the 15th Amendment.

Acts of 1957 and 1960 The first of the laws Congress passed to enforce the 15th Amendment was the Civil Rights Act of 1957, which created the United States Commission on Civil Rights. One of the Commission's major duties is to inquire into claims of voter discrimination. The Commission reports its findings to Congress and the President and, through the media, to the public. The 1957 law also gave the attorney general the power to seek federal court orders to prevent interference with any person's right to vote in any federal election.

The Civil Rights Act of 1960 added an additional safeguard. It provided for the appointment of federal voting referees. Those officers were to serve anywhere a federal court found voter discrimination. They were given the power to help qualified persons to register and vote in federal elections.

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 The Civil Rights Act of 1964 is much broader and more effective than either of the two earlier measures. It outlaws discrimination in several areas, especially in job-related matters. With regard to voting rights, its most important section forbids the use of any voter registration or literacy requirement in an unfair or discriminatory manner.

The 1964 law continued a pattern set in the earlier laws. It relied on judicial action to overcome racial barriers and emphasized the use of federal court orders called injunctions. An injunction is a court order that either compels or restrains the performance of some act by a private individual or public official. The violation of an injunction amounts to contempt of court, a crime punishable by fine and/or imprisonment.

Dramatic events in Selma, Alabama, soon revealed the shortcomings of this approach. Dr. King mounted a voter registration drive in that city in early 1965. He and his supporters hoped that they could focus national attention on the issue of African American voting rights-and they most certainly did.

Their registration efforts were met with insults and violence by local white civilians, by city and county police, and then by State troopers. Three civil rights workers were murdered, and many were beaten when they attempted a peaceful march to the State \(\sqrt{C h e c k p o i n t ~}\) What is gerrymandering and how was it used to keep African Americans from voting?
white supremacist
\(n\). advocate of the superiority of the white race, racist

\section*{compel}
\(v\). to force, require

\section*{civilian}
\(n\). any person not an active member of the armed forces or having police power

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 6, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 86)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 87)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 88)
L3 Quiz A (p. 91)
L2 Quiz B (p. 92)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- identify historical barriers that faced African American voters by examining a political cartoon.
- analyze historical data on African American representation in Congress to understand the effects of widespread voter discrimination and its removal.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 86) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 87)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 6C, Voting Rights, a political cartoon that symbolizes the challenges to African Americans' voting rights. On the board, write:

\section*{Examine the cartoon and record the answers to the questions in your notebook.}

L1 L2 Differentiate Review the explanations of literacy tests, poll taxes, and grandfather clauses. (Literacytests were tests of people's ability to read and write, which a person had to pass in order to vote. Poll taxes were taxes required as a condition for voting. Both limited the ability of African Americans to vote, since most had little money or education. However, some white males could not pass the literacytest or pay the poll tax. Grandfather clauses were designed to allow these white males to vote anyway.)

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Ask students to share their Bellringer answers. (1. The African American voter faced barriers that the white voter did not. 2. These included poll taxes, literacy tests, grandfather clauses, and intimidation.) Explain that students will learn about how African Americans and sympathetic whites responded to this reality. Ask: How can people who cannot vote still take part in public affairs? (They can protest, they can seek to influence lawmakers, they can try to get courts to take action.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Gerrymandering is the drawing of district lines in ways that weaken specific groups. It was used to weaken African Americans' voting power.

\section*{EXPLORE THE TIMELINE}

Ask students to examine this section's timeline. Have them create titles for each of the three colored segments. (possible title for the green section: "High Hopes—and Disappointment"; for the blue section: "Some Barriers Fall"; for the orange section: "Victory at Last. ") Be sure students recognize that the history of African Americans and voting rights included a long period of rights denied, followed by gradual progress toward the successes of the 1960 s.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 6 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 88), which asks students to examine data and draw conclusions about African American representation in Congress. Help students recognize the general pattern in the data-a brief period of modest success at electing African American candidates following the 1870 ratification of the 15 th Amendment, followed by a long period in which there were very few candidates elected, followed finally by a steady trend upward, beginning in the 1960 s. Explain that the data reflect representation from all the States, including those in the North.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Timelines There was significant public resistance to the amendment.

\section*{African Americans and the Vote}

\section*{1800s}

1870 The 15th Amendment declares that the right to vote cannot be denied on the basis of race.

1871 For the first time, African Americans, including Senator Hiram R. Revels (R., Miss.), shown at right, serve in Congress.

\section*{Early 1900 s}

1896 First literacy tests and grandfather clauses enacted in some southern States, soon driving down African American registration rates to below five percent in four years.

1915 The Supreme Court rules an Oklahoma grandfather clause unconstitutional in Guinn v. United States.

\section*{1944 In Smith v. Alwright, the} Supreme Court finds that the Texas white primary-which excluded African American voters-is unconAfrican Am stitutional.

(V) Analyzing Timelines The 15th Amendment did not really become an effective part of the Constitution until the 1960s. Why do you think the 1 5th Amendment took almost a century to fully enforce?

Capitol. The nation saw much of the drama on television and was shocked. An outraged President Lyndon Johnson urged Congress to pass new and stronger legislation to ensure the voting rights of African Americans. Congress responded, and quickly.

\section*{Voting Rights Act of 1965}

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 made the 15th Amendment, at long last, a truly effective part of the Constitution. Unlike its predecessors, this act applied to all elections held anywhere in this country-State and local, as well as federal.

Originally, the Voting Rights Act was to be in effect for a period of five years. Congress has extended its life on four occasions, in the Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970, 1975, 1982, and, most recently, 2006. The present version of the law was made effective for 25 years; its provisions will not expire until 2031.

The 1965 law directed the attorney general to challenge the constitutionality of the remaining State poll-tax laws in the federal courts. That provision led directly to Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 1966, as you may recall from Section 2.

The law also suspended the use of any literacy test or similar device in any State or county where less than half of the electorate had been registered or had voted in the 1964 presidential election. The law authorized the attorney general to appoint voting examiners to serve in any of those States or counties. It also gave these federal officers the power to register voters and otherwise oversee the conduct of elections in those areas.

Preclearance The Voting Rights Act of 1965 created a further restriction on those States where a majority of the electorate had not voted in 1964. The act declared that no new election laws, and no changes in existing election laws, could go into effect in any

\section*{Fast Facts}
- Number of African Americans who have been members of Congress: 123 (118 in the House and 5 in the Senate)
- Number of African American members of Congress by party: 96 Democrats and 27 Republicans
- The first African American woman in Congress: Shirley Chisholm, who served from 1969 until 1983
- Number of Africans Americans serving in the 110th Congress (2007-2009): 43

1966 Edward W. Brooke III (R., Mass.) becomes the first African American elected to the Senate since the 1870 s.

2008 Sen. Barack Obama (D., Illinois) is the first African American to become a major party presidential candidate.

Left Civil rights marchers approach Alabama's State Capitol during a voter registration protest march in 1965. Right: Voter registration in New York City

Today

1965 The Voting Rights Act protects African Americans against various tactics intended to prevent of those States unless first approved-given preclearance-by the Department of Justice. Only those new or revised laws that do not dilute the voting rights of minority groups can survive the preclearance process and take effect.

The preclearance hurdle has produced a large number of court cases over the years. Those cases show that the laws most likely to run afoul of the preclearance requirement are those that make these kinds of changes: (1) the location of polling places; (2) the boundaries of election districts; (3) the deadlines in the election process; (4) a shift from ward or district election to at-large elections; or (5) the qualifications candidates must meet in order to run for office.

Any State or county subject to the voterexaminer and preclearance provisions can be removed from the law's coverage through a "bail-out" process. That relief can come if the State shows the United States District Court in the District of Columbia that it has not applied any voting procedures in a discriminatory way for at least 10 years.

The voter-examiner and preclearance provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act originally applied to six entire States: Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, and Virginia. They also applied to 40 counties in North Carolina.

The Supreme Court upheld the Voting Rights Act in 1966. In South Carolina v. Katzenbach, a unanimous Court found the law to be a proper exercise of the power granted to Congress in Section 2 of the 15th Amendment. That provision authorizes Congress to use "appropriate" measures to enforce the constitutional prohibition against racial discrimination in voting set out in Section 1 of the amendment.

Amendments to the Act The Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970 extended the law for another five years. The 1968 elections were taken into account in determining jurisdictions with concerns; the result was that a

\section*{\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)} What provision about literacy tests was in the Voting Rights Act of the votic 1965 ?

\section*{dilute}
v. to weaken, diminish water down run afoul
\(v\). to come into conflict with, be at odds with

\section*{Background}
extending the voting rights act The Voting Rights Act was reauthorized in 2006.
This action extended the basic features of the law for 25 years. The reauthorization was named in honor of three leading women of the civil rights movement-Fannie Lou Hamer, Coretta Scott King, and Rosa Parks. Yet during the debate, some lawmakers argued that the original Voting Rights Act had already achieved its purpose. In addition, others objected to provisions that required bilingual ballots or interpreters for voters who do not speak English well.

Differentiate Help students read the table, making clear that the middle column shows totals, the second column from the right shows representation in the House, and the far-right column shows representation in the Senate
L4 Differentiate To challenge students, have them research and provide data about the electoral success of women and other minority groups in Congress

\section*{DISCUSS WORKSHEET ANSWERS}

Review the answers to the Core Worksheet questions as a class. Make sure students correctly recognize the impact of the 15 th Amendment (Question 1), the systematic effort to deny African American voting rights (Question 2), and the impact of the civil rights movement (Question 3). When discussing Question 4, point out that Senate elections are statewide and most House elections are not. Invite classroom debate of student answers to Question 5.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3
Have students use the Internet to research the life of one African American who served in the United States Congress. Students may choose a subject from the post-Civil War era or a more contemporary example. Using the information they collect, students should create a brief biographical sketch of their subject. The sketch should specifically address what kind of obstacles-if any-the politician experienced as an African American candidate, and how he or she overcame those challenges.
L1 L2 Differentiate Help students identify a possible subject for their research, and have them compile biographical information about their subject and present their findings as a list of facts and highlights about the person's career.
L4 Differentiate Have students research and report on the 91 st Congress, which featured a dramatic jump in the number of African American members over the 90th Congress.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about African American voting rights over time.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The act suspended the use of literacy tests in places where less than half of the electorate was registered or voted in 1964.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Assess students' work on the Core Worksheet.Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 91)Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 92)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The many legal \\ means of denying \\ Arrican Americans the \\ vote (Questions 2, 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create flash cards with \\ definitions of the terms gerrymandering, \\ grandfather clause, white primary, poll tax, \\ and literacy test.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The key Supreme \\ Court rulings that \\ helped end voter \\ discrimination (Ques- \\ tions 1, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have student pairs write quiz questions for \\ each other on the major cases mentioned in \\ this section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The key features of \\ the Civil Rights Act of \\
1964 and the Voting \\
Rights Act of 1965 \\
(Questions 3, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a table that lists the \\ key features of each law and its impact.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

The Voting Rights Act requires that official election materials and ballots be printed both in English and in other common languages in that community. What effect might ballots offered in different languages have on voter turnout?
number of counties in six more States (Alaska, Arizona, California, Idaho, New Mexico, and Oregon) were included in the law's coverage. That 1970 law also provided that, for five years, no State could use literacy as the basis for any voting requirement. That temporary ban as well as residence provisions outlined in the law were upheld by the Supreme Court in Oregon v. Mitchell in 1970.

In 1975, the law was extended again, this time for seven years, and the five-year ban on literacy tests was made permanent. Since 1975, no State has been able to apply any sort of literacy qualification to any aspect of the election process. The law's voter-examiner and preclearance provisions were also broadened in 1975. Since then, they have also covered any State or county where more than 5 percent of the voting-age population belongs to certain "language minorities." These groups are defined to include all persons of Spanish heritage, Native Americans, Asian Americans, and Alaskan Natives.

This addition expanded the law's coverage to all of Alaska and Texas and to several counties in 24 other States, as well. In these areas, all ballots and other official election materials must be printed both in English and in the language of the minorities involved.

The 1982 amendments extended the basic features of the act for another 25 years. In 1992, the law's language-minority provisions were revised: they now apply to any community that has a minority-language population of 10,000 or more.

Over the years, several States and a handful of counties in a few other States have been removed from the law's coverage, through the "bail-out" process. Today, eight entire States remain subject to the Voting Rights Act: Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, and Texas. At least some counties in six other States are also covered by the statute: California, Florida, New York, North Carolina, South Dakota, and Virginia, as well as two townships in Michigan and ten towns in New Hampshire.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the }\end{aligned}\)

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}

Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer the question: How did the United States fulfill the promise of the 15th Amendment?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. How has gerrymandering been used to prevent the fulfillment of the 15 th Amendment?
3. (a) What is preclearance? (b) What is the process meant to prevent?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Synthesize Information (a) What tactics were used in the South to prevent African Americans from voting after the passage of the 15 th Amendment? (b) What effect did these tactics have on elections?
5. Make Comparisons (a) In what key way did the Voting Rights Act of 1965 differ from earlier civil rights laws? (b) How have more recent legislation and court decisions helped further refine that Act?

\section*{Quick Write}

Narrative: Gather Details Gather any additional details about the event you chose in Section 1 that may be important to your essay. List details in order of importance.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. After the 15 th Amendment passed, widespread resistance to African American suffrage in the South led to effective limits to African American voting, but legal rulings and legislative action overcame these barriers.
2. Gerrymandering has been used to create electoral districts that weaken the voting strength of African Americans.
3. (a) Certain States could not institute or alter election law without prior approval of the Department of Justice. (b) the denial of voting rights through government action
4. (a) violence, threats, social pressures, literacy tests, poll taxes, white primaries, and gerrymandering (b) They kept many African Americans from voting and may have prevented the election of African American candidates.
5. (a) The Voting Rights Act applied to State and local elections, not just national elections. The Act did not rely on injunctions to stop illegal practices, but instead involved the federal government proactively in registering voters, monitoring elections, and challenging discriminatory laws and practices. (b) South Carolina v. Katzenbach upheld the act. Oregon v. Mitchell upheld the act's ban on literacy tests and its residency requirements. Later amendments extended the life of the act, banned literacy tests permanently, and broadened voterexaminer and preclearance provisions to include language minorities.
QUICK WRITE Students should gather enough details to support a strong essay.

\section*{CITIZENSHIP \\ 101 \\ Casting Your Vote}

Voting is one of the greatest privileges a citizen enjoys. It means that you have a role in deciding who your elected officials will be. Yet voting is a big responsibility. It takes some planning to ensure your eligibility, prepare yourself to become an informed voter, and eventually cast your vote.

Casting your vote in an election requires two different kinds of preparation. First, you must become aware of the rules and procedures concerning registering to vote and submitting your ballot where you live. Beyond that, you must consider several factors and examine the issues and candidates involved in the election in order to make an informed decision.
1. Understand Eligibility Rules In order to vote, you must be a United States citizen. You must be of age. This generally means being 18, though some States allow people to vote at a younger age in some circumstances. Be sure to find out what the rules are where you live. Also find out about residence requirements. You must be a resident of the place where you plan to vote, though how you prove residency does vary.
2. Register to Vote You can register to vote by visiting the city or town election offices, or when you get or renew a driver's license. You may also be able to register by mail or even online. Find out what you must do in your State to register as well as how soon before the election. Pay close attention to whether or not you will need to declare a political party when registering.
3. Educate Yourself As the election approaches, research the candidates and issues that will appear on the ballot. Read newspaper and online news coverage. Watch televised debates. Review candidate websites to learn about views and positions. By doing these things and thinking critically about what you learn, you are closer to being an informed voter.
4. Vote Votingrequires thatyoumake the effort to come to the polling place on election day and cast your ballot. Find out ahead of time when the polls will be open, and make plans to take the time necessary to meet this responsibility. If you think you will not be present on election day, find out about absentee voting. If advance voting is used where you live, be sure you understand the rules and procedures for casting a ballot.

\section*{What do you think?}
1. Of the steps listed, which do you think is most important to casting a vote?
2. Why is it important to be an informed voter?
3. You Try It Follow the steps above and write a step-by-step description of how you would cast a ballot, using details specific to your community.
1. GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Citizenship Activity Pack
For an activity to help you learn more about voting, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Cast Your Vote. It includes a lesson plan for you, a poster offering a brief history of voting in the United States, and a fill-in-the-blank activity to test students' basic voting vocabulary. Students will complete a sample voter registration card. Then they will consider and vote on three ballot initiatives related to the classroom. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on How to Cast Your Vote at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will analyze the process for casting a vote, including identifying the specific rules for their State and community.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{READ}

Have students read the introduction to Citizenship 101 aloud. If students have computer access, you may have them search for information about the registration and voting rules for their State.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Discuss the importance of advance preparation to vote. Ask: What factors make it necessary to begin planning to vote well in advance of an election? (Local laws about registration and establishing residency can vary, so it is important to investigate voting procedures well ahead of the actual election. You should plan ahead if you will be away from home on Election Day. Advanced planning can also ensure that you can make it to the polls on Election Day or that you obtain and properly submit an absentee ballot.)

\section*{EXPLORE THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING AN INFORMED VOTER}

Explain to students that voting is a responsibility and that voters have an obligation to cast an informed ballot. Ask: What might happen if voters did not have adequate knowledge of the candidates or issues being contested in an election? (They could not make wise choices that served their own or the public interest.)

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students answer the What Do You Think questions at the bottom of the page. Collect and assess student plans for registering to vote.

\section*{Answers}
1. Registration is a prerequisite to voting, so it is most important.
2. Being informed is necessary for making wise choices.
3. A strong plan will identify where the student can register, what is needed in order to register, when to register to ensure participation in any upcoming election, when and where voting will take place, and what is needed to cast a ballot.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What factors influence voter behavior?
I. Factors That Influence Voters
A. Sociological 1. Income
2. Occupation
3. Education
4. Gender
5. Age
6. Religion
7. Ethnic background
8. Geography
9. Family and other groups
B. Psychological
1. Party identification
2. Views on candidates
3. Views on issues

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will .
- analyze a political cartoon in order to understand the effects of and reasons for nonvoting.
- explore the factors that influence voting behavior by creating a television advertisement that encourages voter participation.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 93) before class.

Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 95)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What factors influence voter behavior? Use the outline to record details about voter behavior.

Political Dictionary
- off-year election
- ballot fatigue political efficacy efficacy political identification
- straight-ticke
- straight-tick voting
voting
- split-ticke
voting
gender gap

\section*{Objectives}
1. Examine the problem of nonvoting in this country.
2. Identify those people who typically do not vote.
3. Examine the behavior of those who vote and those who do not.
4. Understand the sociological and psychological factors that affect voting and voter behavior.

Image Above: Reviewing a ballot on election day

"Your vote is your voice. Use it." That's the advice of Rock the Vote, an organization that encourages young voters ages 18 to 25 to participate in the election process. In the United States, and in other democratic countries, we believe all voices should be heard. That is, we believe in voting.

Most elections in this country are built around two-candidate contests. How many choices does a voter have in a two-candidate race? More than most people think. Not just two but, in fact, fue options. He or she can (1) vote FOR Candidate A, (2) vote AGAINST Candidate A, (3) vote FOR Candidate B, (4) vote AGAINST Candidate B, or (5) decide not to vote for either candidate.

Over the next several pages, you will look at voter behavior in this coun-try-at who votes and who does not, and at why those people who do vote cast their ballots as they do.

\section*{Nonvoting}

The word idiot came to our language from the Greek. In ancient Athens, idiots (idiotes) were those citizens who did not vote or otherwise take part in public life.

Tens of millions of Americans vote in presidential and congressional elections; in State elections; and in city, county, and other public elections. Still, there are many millions of other Americans who, for one reason or another, do not vote. There are some quite valid reasons for not voting, as you will see. But this troubling fact remains: Most of the millions of Americans who could-but do not-go to the polls cannot claim any of those justifications. Indeed, they would have been called idiots in the Greece of 2500 years ago.

On election day in 2008, there were an estimated 227.8 million persons of voting age in the United States. Yet only some 127 million of them-only 61 percent-actually voted in the presidential election. More than 100 million persons who might have voted did not.

In 2008, some 114 million votes were cast in the elections held across the country to fill the 435 seats in the House of Representatives. That means that only 50 percent of the electorate voted in those congressional contests. (Notice the even lower rates of turnout in the off-year elections-that is, in the congressional elections held in the even-numbered years, between presidential elections.)

In this section, students will create a television advertisement to encourage voter participation. You may want to refer them to the Skills Handbook, p. S23, for information on innovating and thinking creatively.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Many eligible voters do not vote for reasons ranging from illness to lack of interest. • Sociological factors such as income, occupation, education, gender, age, religion, ethnicity, geography, and family and other group affiliation influence voting behavior. • Psychological factors such as a person's party identification and perception of candidates and issues affect voter behavior.
CONCEPTS: values and principles of a civil society, rights and responsibilities as citizens, personal and civic rights and responsibilities, democratic values/principles ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Nonvoting affects election outcomes. • Voting behavior results from a combination of several psychological and sociological factors.

Several facets of the nonvoter problem are not very widely known. Take, for example, this striking fact: There are millions of nonvoters among those who vote. Nearly TK million persons who voted in the last presidential election could also have voted for a congressional candidate, but they did not choose to do so.
"Nonvoting voters" are not limited to federal elections. In fact, they are much more common in State and local elections. As a general rule, the farther down the ballot an office is, the fewer the number of votes that will be cast for it. This phenomenon is sometimes called ballot fatigue. The expression suggests that many voters exhaust their patience and/or their knowledge as they work their way down the ballot. More votes are generally cast for the governorship than for other Statewide offices, such as lieutenant governor or secretary of state. More voters in a county usually vote in the races for Statewide offices than vote in the contests for such county offices as sheriff, county clerk, and so on.

There are other little-recognized facets of the nonvoter problem, too. Turnout in congressional elections is consistently higher in presidential years than it is in off-year elections. That same pattern holds among the States in terms of the types of elections; more people vote in general elections than in either primary or special elections.

\section*{Why People Do Not Vote}

Why so many nonvoters? Why, even in a presidential election, do as many as half of those who could vote stay away from the polls?

Clearly, the time that it takes to vote should not be a significant part of the answer. For most people, it takes more time to choose a DVD to watch than it does to go to their neighborhood polling place and cast a ballot. So we must look elsewhere for answers.
"Cannot-Voters" To begin with, look at another of those little-recognized aspects of the nonvoter problem. Several million persons who are regularly identified as nonvoters can be much more accurately described as "can-not-voters." That is, although it is true that they do not vote, the fact is that they cannot do so.

The 2008 data support the point. Included in that figure of more than 100 million who did not vote in the last presidential election are at least 10 million who are resident aliens. Remember, they are barred from the polls in \section*{facet}

n. side or aspect

Votes cast for President

Votes cast for US. Representatives during presidential elections Votes cast for U.S Votes cast for U.S
- Analyzing Graphs Voter turnout varies from election to election, but presidential elections always draw more voters than off-year elections. What factor does the blue at the top of each bar represent, and what is this factor called?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 6, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 93)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 95)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 97)
L3 Quiz A (p. 98)
L2 Quiz B (p. 99)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 100)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 103)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 6D, Voters, a political cartoon about nonvoters. Write on the board: Study the cartoon and write your answers to the questions in your notebook.
L1 L2 Differentiate Explain to students that the image in the cartoon is a scale, with voters on one side and nonvoters on the other.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Discuss the cartoon used for the Bellringer. Ask students why the artist included a scale in the cartoon. (The scale measures the impact of the two groups, voters and nonvoters. ) Students should recognize in answering Question 1 that the nonvoters are basing their decision not to vote on their belief that their vote will not make a difference. The overall message of the cartoon (Question 2) is that the nonvoters' choice does, in fact, have a big impact and actually threatens to outweigh the influence of people who do vote. Have a few students share their titles with the class. Discuss which proposed title best conveys the meaning of the cartoon
L1 L2 Differentiate Organize a group of students to explore the meaning of the cartoon by acting out a brief skit in which a growing number of voters declare, "My vote won't make a difference," eventually overwhelming a smaller group of voters.

Differentiate Have students create their own political cartoon that expresses the importance of voting.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint voters who do not vote in every election on the ballot

Analyzing Graphs It represents voters who vote in the presidential race and not in the congressional race, and it illustrates the practice of nonvoting voting.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC OF NONVOTING}

Tell students that this section is about the behavior of the American electorate. Explain that voting is considered a central right of citizenship-and a key responsibility, as well. Voting is the main way that people make their wishes known and have a say in their government. For this reason, a particular concern is the behavior of nonvoting. Direct student attention to the graph on voter turnout. Ask students to react to the information presented there. Does it surprise them to see the turnout for presidential elections? What about off-year elections?

\section*{Government}
online
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

》) Analyzing Political Cartoons Until the 2008 election, voter participation had not broken the 60 percent mark since the 1960s. participation had not broken the 60 percent mark since the

\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
Why do people choose not to vote?
alienate
\(v t\). to feel unfriendly or hostile to, isolated from idolatry
n. excessive devotion to some person or thing
every State. Another 5 to 6 million citizens were so ill or otherwise physically disabled that they simply could not vote in an election. An additional 2 to 3 million persons were traveling suddenly and unexpectedly, and so could not vote.

Other groups of cannot-voters can be discovered in the nonvoting group. They include some 500,000 persons in mental health care facilities or under some other form of legal restraint because of their mental condition; more than 2 million adults in jails and prisons; and perhaps as many as 100,000 who do not (cannot) vote because of their religious beliefs - for example, those who believe that acts such as voting amount to idolatry.

Racial, religious, and other biases still play a part here, too-despite the many laws, court decisions, and enforcement actions of the past several years aimed at eliminating such discrimination in the political process. An unknown but certainly significant number of people cannot vote today because of (1) the purposeful administration of election laws to keep them from doing so, and/or (2) various "informal" local pressures applied to that same end.

Actual Nonvoters Even so, there are millions of actual nonvoters in the United States. Thus, in 2008, more than 80 million Americans who could have voted in the presidential election did not. There are any number of reasons for that behavior. As a leading example: Many who could go to the polls do not because they are convinced that it makes little real difference which candidate wins a particular election.

That fairly large group includes two quite different groups of nonvoters. On the one hand, there are many who generally approve of the way the public's business is being managed-that is, many who believe that no matter who wins an election, things will continue to go well for themselves and for the country.

On the other hand, that group also includes many people who feel alienatedthat is, many who deliberately refuse to vote because they don't trust political institutions and processes. They either fear or scorn "the system." To them, elections are meaningless, choiceless exercises.

Another large group of nonvoters is composed of people who have no sense of political efficacy. That is, they lack any feeling of influence or effectiveness in politics. They do not believe that they or their votes can have any real impact on what government does or does not do.

Other factors can also dictate whether voters show up at the polls or not. Cumbersome election procedures-for example, inconvenient registration requirements, long ballots, and long lines at polling places-discourage voters from turning out on election day. Bad weather also tends to discourage voter turnout.

Another possible, though somewhat controversial, factor is the so-called "time-zone fallout" problem. This expression refers to the fact that, in presidential elections, polls in States in the Eastern and Central time zones close an hour or more before polls in States in the Mountain and Pacific time zones. Based on early returns from the East and Midwest, the news media often project the outcome of the presidential contest before all voters in the West have gone to the polls. Some people

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Ask students to research voting requirements in their State and in five others of their choosing from various parts of the country. Have them create a graphic organizer to compare and contrast these requirements. Then ask them to write a brief essay summarizing their results and explaining how State control of voting requirements reflects the principle of federalism. They should conclude their essays with their opinion as to whether the States or the Federal Government should control voting requirements and explain the reasons for their choice.

To see this lesson plan, go to fear that such reports discourage western voters from casting their ballots.

Of all the reasons that may be cited, however, the chief cause for nonvoting is, purely and simply, a lack of interest. Those who are indifferent, who just cannot be bothered, are usually woefully uninformed. Most often, they know little or nothing about the candidates and issues in an election. There are many who argue that the democratic process is well served by the fact that most of these people do not go to the polls.

Comparing Voters and Nonvoters One useful way to get a handle on the problem of nonvoting is to contrast those persons who tend to go to the polls regularly with those who do not.

The people most likely to vote display such characteristics as higher levels of income, education, and occupational status. They are usually well integrated into community life. They tend to be long-time residents who are active in, or at least comfortable with, their surroundings. They are likely to have a strong sense of party identification, and to believe that voting is an important act. They are also likely to live in those areas where laws, customs, and competition between the parties all promote turnout.

The opposite characteristics produce a profile of those less likely to vote. Nonvoters are likely to be younger than age 35 , unmarried, and unskilled. More nonvoters live in the South and in rural locales. Men are less likely to vote than women-a fact that first became apparent in the 1980 s.

A few of the factors that help determine whether or not a person will vote are so important that they influence turnout even when they conflict with other factors. For example, those persons with a high sense of political efficacy are likely to vote-no matter what their income, education, age, race, and so on may be. The degree of two-party competition also has an extraordinary impact on participation. Thus, the greater the competition between candidates, the more likely people will be to go to the polls, regardless of other factors.

Despite the greater weight of some of these factors, however, note this point: It is the combined presence of several factors, not one of them alone, that tends to determine whether a person will or will not vote.

\section*{Voters and Voting Behavior}

As you have read, tens of millions of potential voters do not go to the polls in this country. But many millions more do. How do those who do vote behave? What prompts many to vote most often for Republicans and many others to support the Democratic Party? Research has produced a huge amount of information about why people tend to vote as they do.

Studying Voting Behavior Most of what is known about voter behavior comes from three sources.
1. The results of particular elections. How individuals vote in a given election is secret in the United States. However, careful study of the returns from areas populated largely by, say, African Americans or Catholics or high-income families will indicate how those groups voted in a given election.
2. The field of survey research. The polling of scientifically determined cross sections of the population is the method by which public opinion is most often identified and measured. The Gallup Organization and the Pew Research Center conduct perhaps the best known of these polls today.
3. Studies of political socialization. Political socialization is the process by which people gain their political attitudes and opinions. That complex process begins in early childhood and continues through each person's life. Political socialization involves all of the experiences and relationships that lead people to see the political world, and to act in it, as they do.

Factors That Influence Voters Observers still have much to learn about voter behavior, but many sociological and psychological factors clearly influence the way people cast their ballots. Sociology is the study of groups and how people behave within groups. The sociological factors affecting voter behavior are really the many pieces of a voter's social and economic life. Those pieces are of two

\section*{Background}

UNCOUNTED VOTES Today, elections regularly feature complaints from people who want to vote but who are unable to for some reason. Problems range from unopened polling places to malfunctioning voting equipment to charges of intimidation. While many complaints lack merit, it is a fact that many people cast votes that are not counted due to voter error in marking a ballot or using equipment or equipment malfunction. Most famously, the 2000 presidential election shined a light on this problem. In Florida, thousands of voters entered polling booths and tried to cast a vote, only to have their ballots rejected by vote-counting machines. The presence of these unread ballots created controversy with the extremely close returns in that State and in the presidential election nationwide.

\section*{CONSIDER ALTERNATIVES}

Ask students what, if any, problem they see with low voter turnout. Ask: Is it a bad thing? Why or why not? Point out that many countries, including many democracies, have considerably higher turnout of 80 or even 90 percent or more. Some countries also have laws that require people to vote. Ask: Should voters be required to take part in elections? What are the possible benefits and drawbacks of such a step? (A possible benefit would be that all people would feel a greater sense of responsibility for their government, and government would feel responsible to a greater range of people. A drawback might be that many uninterested and uninformed voters might make poor choices at the polls.)
L1 L2 Differentiate Provide assistance in reading the graph. Explain what each bar on the graph measures (The combined green and blue bars represent voter turnout in presidential years, with the blue portion showing the larger vote for President than for members of congress. The yellow bar represents turnout in national elections in years where there is no presidential race. ) Check student understanding of the graph by having them identify the voter turnout for selected years.
L4 Differentiate Have students research turnout for statewide elections, such as those for governor and state legislator. Students should use this data to create their own graph.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint results of elections, the field of survey research, and studies of political socialization

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 6 Section 4 Core Worksheet and the Rubric for Assessing a Television Advertisement (Unit 2 All-in-One, pp. 97, 255). Have students work in small groups to create a television advertisement to encourage voter participation among a nonvoting group. Students can work collaboratively on all aspects of the presentation, or they may divide up the tasks among themselves. The entire group, however, is responsible for the group's presentation. If possible, have students create a multimedia presentation, incorporating video, sound, and Web pages. All groups should also make a storyboard that outlines each portion of the advertisement. The frame should include a sketch of what would appear on the screen, with the text of the message written below. On the reverse side of the paper, students should explain the intended message and how the frame accomplishes it.
L1 L2 Differentiate Allow students to choose roles at which they may excel or feel most comfortable.

broad kinds: (1) a voter's personal charac-teristics-age, race, income, occupation, education, religion, and so on; and (2) a voter's group affiliations-family, co-workers, friends, and the like.

Psychology is the study of the mind and individual behavior. The psychological factors that influence voter behavior are a voter's perceptions of politics-that is, how the voter sees the parties, the candidates, and the issues in an election.

The differences between these two kinds of influences are not nearly so great as they might seem. In fact, they are closely related and they constantly interact with one another. How voters look at parties, candidates, or issues is often shaped by their own social and economic backgrounds.

\section*{Sociological Factors}

Using data from past elections, you can draw a composite picture of the American voter in terms of a number of sociological factors. A word of caution here: Do not make too much of any one of these factors. Remember, each voter possesses not just one, but in fact several of the many characteristics involved here.

To illustrate the point: College graduates are more likely to vote Republican. So are persons over age 50. African Americans, on the other hand, are more likely to vote for Democrats. So are members of labor unions. How, then, would a 55 -year-old, college-educated African American who belongs to the AFL-CIO decide to vote?

Income and Occupation Voters in lower income brackets are more likely to be Democrats. Voters with higher incomes tend to be Republicans. This pattern has held up over time, no matter whether a particular election was a cliffhanger or a blow-out. The 2008 election proved to be an exception, however. In that contest, those making under \($ 50,000\) did favor Democrat Barack Obama by an overwhelming majority. However, those with incomes of \($ 50,000\) and up were fairly evenly divided between the two candidates, and President Obama made significant inroads among those who make over \($ 200,000\), winning 52 percent of their votes.

Most often, how much one earns and what one does for a living are closely related. Professional and business people, and others with higher incomes, regularly tend to vote for Republican candidates. Manual workers, and others in lower income groups, usually vote for Democrats. Thus, with the exception of 1964 and 2008, professional and business people have voted heavily Republican in every presidential election in the modern era.

Education Studies of voter behavior reveal that there is also a close relationship between the level of a voter's education and how he or she tends to vote. College graduates vote for Republicans in higher percentages than highschool graduates; and high-school graduates vote Republican more often than those who have only gone through grade school. Again, however, the 2008 election proved an exception to this trend.

Gender, Age There are often measurable differences between the partisan choices of men and women today. This phenomenon is known as the gender gap, and it first appeared in the 1980s. Women generally tend to favor the Democrats by a margin of five to ten percent, and men often give the GOP a similar edge. In 2008, however, President Obama won 56 percent of all votes cast by women, while men's votes were evenly split between the candidates.

A number of studies show that men and women are most likely to vote differently when such issues as abortion, health care or other social welfare matters, or military involvements abroad are prominent in an election.

Traditionally, younger voters have been more likely to vote Democratic than Republican. Older voters are likely to find the GOP and its candidates more attractive. Thus, in every presidential election from 1960 through 1980, the Democrats won a larger percentage of the votes of the under- 30 age group than of the 50 -and-over age bracket.

That long-standing pattern was broken by Ronald Reagan's appeal to younger voters in 1984, and by George H.W. Bush in 1988. However, Bill Clinton restored the Democrats' claim to those voters in 1992 and 1996.

\section*{Debate}
"In this country, you are free to vote or not vote. And Americans want it that way. Our right not to vote is sacred, too."
—"Crock the Vote" by Knute Berger from the Seattle Weekly, June 23, 2004 Use this quotation to start a debate in your classroom. Ask: Would a legal requirement to vote violate our basic freedoms?

And John Kerry won the major slice of the votes of that age group-54 percent-in 2004. The 2008 election upheld this tradition of younger voters favoring the Democrats, and in a big way, with Barack Obama winning 66 percent of the under 30 vote.

Religion, Ethnic Background Historically, a majority of Protestants have most often preferred the GOP. Catholics and Jews have tended to be Democrats. \({ }^{14}\) The 2008 elections supported this trend, with President Obama winning just 45 percent of the votes cast by all Protestants and only 34 percent of those cast by white Protestants. Fifty-four percent of Catholics backed the President, and he won a huge 78 percent of the ballots cast by Jewish voters.

Moral issues-in particular, samesex marriage-were unusually prominent in 2004. Church attendance has also lately emerged as a significant indicator of partisan 14 In 1960, John F. Kennedy became the first Roman Catholic President. His election marked a sharper split between Catholic and Protestant voters than in any other recent election.

\(\sqrt{\text { checkpoint }}\) How do sociological factors affect voting?

\section*{Myths and Misperceptions}
turnout among young voters It is true that young people historically have been poor participants in the electoral process. Yet recent elections suggest that the trend may be turning around. Display Transparency 6E, Reported Rates of Voting, Citizens Aged 18-24. It gives data about the voting rates of young people in recent elections. The percentage of eligible voters age 18 to 24 jumped sharply in the 2004 presidential election to 47 percent. Though still below the turnout of older voters, the increase in this age group was larger than in any other group. The 2006 mid-term elections also saw an increase in voter participation among younger voters. And, early results indicated increased young-voter turnout in 2008, as well.

\section*{REVIEW PRESENTATIONS}

Have groups deliver their presentations to the class. Presentations should begin with an explanation of how the advertisement contributes to the goal of increasing voter turnout. Presentations should end with a skit in which the spokesperson (and possibly students playing other roles) act out the television script for the ad or present their storyboards. After each group presents, ask the other class members to write their evaluations on a sheet of paper, using the rubric provided with the activity. Evaluations should also address the following questions: What is most effective about the advertisement? What is least effective? After all groups have presented, ask the class to vote on which advertisement would be most effective in increasing voter turnout, and discuss why.
Tell students to go to the Online Update to check out recent voter data.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Sociological factors include income, occupation, education, gender, age, religion, ethnic background, geography, family, and other groups. Any of these factors can influence people in how they make voting decisions.
Analyzing Charts Possible answer: The person may vote based on family history or on the tendencies of her peer group.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3
Have students design and carry out a survey of at least five adults that assesses voting attitudes and participation. Students should seek information about past participation in voting and about what factors influenced their interviewees' political views and affiliations. Be sure students understand that it is not appropriate to ask subjects to reveal certain personal information, such as income. Students should also respect subjects' wish not to share information about specific candidates supported. Once students have collected their data, they should write a brief summary of their findings.

L2ELL Differentiate For students who have recently lived in other countries, have them instead interview family members and write a brief report about voting procedures and behaviors in that country and compare it to behaviors here.
L4 Differentiate Have students pool the class's findings and organize and present the information in a graph.
L3 Differentiate Display Transparency 6F, Voting by Groups in Presidential Election 2008. Have students select one voting group and create a pie chart or bar graph that represents the percentage of Republican and Democratic voters. Have them draw a conclusion based on their chart or graph and share it with the class.

1) Analyzing Political Cartoons Is it really true that only those persons who vote have a right to complain? Why or why not?
preference. Fifty-five percent of voters who go to church at least once a week marked their ballots for Mr. McCain in 2008.

For decades now, African Americans have supported the Democratic Party consistently and massively. They form the only group that has given the Democratic candidate a clear majority in every presidential election since 1952. There are now more than 40 million African Americans, and they make up the second largest minority in the country.

In the North, African Americans generally voted Republican until the 1930s, but, with the coming of the New Deal, they moved away from the party of Abraham Lincoln. The civil rights movement of the 1960s led to much greater African American participation in the politics of the South. Today, African Americans vote overwhelmingly Democratic in that region, too.

The United States is now home to more than 45 million Latinos, people with Spanishspeaking backgrounds. Until now, Latinos have tended to favor Democratic candidates. Note, however, that the label "Latino" conceals differences among Cuban Americans, who most often vote Republican, and Mexican Americans and Puerto Ricans, who are strongly Democratic. While the rate of turnout among Latinos increased significantly in the historic election of 2008, it was still comparatively low-well below 50 percent.

Geography Geography-the part of the country, State, and/or locale in which a person lives-also has a measurable impact on voter behavior. After the Civil War, the States of the old Confederacy voted so consistently Democratic that the southeast quarter of the nation became known as the Solid South. For more than a century, most Southerners, regardless of any other factor, identified with the Democratic Party.

The Solid South is now a thing of the past. Republican candidates have been increasingly successful throughout the region over the past half-century. The GOP now carries at least most of the Southern States in the presidential contest every four years, and it is now widely successful at the State and local levels across the region, too.

Those States that have most consistently supported Republican candidates over time have been Idaho, Wyoming, and Utah in the West and Kansas, Nebraska, and the Dakotas in the Midwest. The Democrats have made significant inroads in former Republican strongholds in New England, over the past two decades or so.

Voters' attitudes also vary in terms of the size of the communities in which they live. Generally, the Democrats draw strength from the big cities of the North and East and on the Pacific Coast. Many white Democrats have moved from the central cities and taken their political preferences with them, but Republican voters still dominate much of suburban America. Voters in smaller cities and rural areas are also likely to be Republicans.

Family and Other Groups To this point, you have seen the American voter sketched in terms of several broad social and economic characteristics. The picture can also be drawn on the basis of much smaller and more personal groupings, especially such primary groups as family, friends, and co-workers.

Typically, the members of a family vote in strikingly similar ways. Nine out of ten married couples share the same partisan leanings. As many as two out of every three voters follow the political attachments of their

\section*{Background}

NIXON AND THE SOLID SOUTH The decline of the Solid South is often traced to the 1968 election and the so-called "southern strategy" of Republican candidate Richard Nixon. Nixon and his team tried to take advantage of public reaction among some whites in the South against Democratic support for major civil rights laws in 1964 and 1965. The southern strategy stressed "states rights" and is thought to have succeeded in attracting many long-time Democrats to the Republican Party.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons Possible answer: All citizens have the right to complain because participation in public affairs is not limited to voting alone.
parents. Those who work together and circles of friends also tend to vote very much alike. This like-mindedness is hardly surprising. People of similar social and economic backgrounds tend to associate with one another. In short, a person's group associations usually reinforce the opinions he or she already holds.

\section*{Psychological Factors}

Although they are quite important, it would be wrong to give too much weight to the sociological factors in the voting mix. For one thing, those factors are fairly static. That is, they tend to change only gradually and over time. To understand voter behavior, you must look beyond such factors as occupation, education, ethnic background, and place of residence. You must also take into account a number of psychological factors. That is, you must look at the voters' perceptions of politics: how they see and react to the parties, the candidates, and the issues in an election.

Party Identification A majority of Americans identify themselves with one or the other of the two major parties early in life. Many never change. They support that party, election after election, with little or no regard for either the candidates or the issues involved in a particular election.

The hefty impact of party identifica-tion-the loyalty of people to a particular political party-is the single most significant and lasting predictor of how a person will vote. A person who is a Democrat or a Republican will, for that reason, very likely vote for all or most of that party's candidates in any given election. The practice of voting for candidates of only one party in an election is called straight-ticket voting.

Party identification is, therefore, a key factor in American politics. Among many other things, it means that each of the major parties can regularly count on the votes of millions of faithful supporters in every election.

Several signs suggest that, while it remains a major factor, party identification has lost some of its impact in recent years. One of those signs is the weakened condition of the parties themselves. Another is the marked increase in split-ticket voting-the practice of voting for the candidates of more than one party in an election. That behavior, which began to increase in the 1960s, is fairly common today.

Another telling sign is the large number of voters who now call themselves independents. That term is regularly used to identify those people who have no party affiliation. It includes voters who are independent of both the Republicans and the Democrats (and of any minor party as well). "Independent" is a tricky term, however. \({ }^{15}\) Many who claim to be independents actually vote most often for the candidates of one or the other of the major parties.

The loose nature of party membership makes it difficult to determine just what proportion of the American electorate is independent. However, the best guesses put the number of independents at somewhere between a fourth and a third of all voters today. The role that these independent voters play is especially critical in those elections voting a straight ticket Straight-ticket voting technically involves voting for all the candidates of one party. But in a number of States, voters have the option of casting a straight-ticket vote with a single mark or punch on the ballot. That is, by responding in one specific spot on the ballot, the voter casts a ballot for every single candidate of the designated party that appears on the ballot. The option was available in 17 States in 2008, though its use was limited in some cases-for example, to only primaries or only general elections. The number of States offering the option has declined in recent years.

\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is straight-ticket voting?

\section*{Background}

Assess and Remediate
L2 L3 Grade students' work according to the rubric for the Core Worksheet activity.

Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 98)
Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 99)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\footnotetext{
Answers
Checkpoint voting only for members of a single party
}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The size of the \\ nonvoting problem \\
(Questions 2, 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students review and summarize the \\ graph on Voter Turnout.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Why people do not \\ vote (Questions 1, \\
2, 3, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a web diagram that \\ identifies and describes the major reasons \\ for nonvoting.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The sociological fac- \\ tors that affect voting \\ behavior (Questions \\
1, 3, 4, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a sociological profile of \\ a "typical" Democrat and Republican.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The psycho- \\ logical factors that \\ affect voting behavior \\
(Questions 1, 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Create a table that lists the major psycho- \\ logical factors affecting voting behavior. Ask \\ students to explain how each factor listed \\ might influence a potential voter.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the candidates and issues involved in the election

Checkpoint What additional factors impact voter behavior closer to election time?
where the opposing major party candidates are more or less evenly matched.

Until fairly recently, the typical independent was less concerned, less well informed, and less active in politics than those voters who identified themselves as Republicans or Democrats. That unflattering description still fits many independents.

However, a new breed of independent voter began to appear in the 1960s and 1970s, and their ranks have grown over the years since then. Largely because of the political events and personalities of that period, these "new" independents preferred not to join either of the two major parties. Today, these independents are often young and above average in education, income, and job status.

Candidates and Issues Party identification is a long-term factor. While most voters identify with one or the other of the major parties and most often support its candidates, they do not always vote that way. One or more short-term factors can cause them to switch sides in a particular election, or at least vote a split ticket. Thus, in 2008, exit polls indicated that 6 percent of those persons who usually vote Republican voted for John Kerry for President, and 11 percent of those who normally support Democratic candidates marked their ballots for the President. Ten percent of those who identify themselves as Democrats picked Republican John McCain in 2008, while 9 percent of Republicans chose Democrat Barack Obama.

The most important of these short-term factors are the candidates and the issues in an election. Clearly, the impression a candidate makes on the voters can have an impact on how they vote. What image does a candidate project? How do the voters see that candidate in terms of personality, character, style, appearance, past record, abilities, and so on?

Just as clearly, issues can also have a large impact on voter behavior. The role of issues varies, however, depending on such things as the emotional content of the issues themselves, the voters' awareness of them, and the ways in which the contending candidates present them to the electorate.

Issues have become increasingly important to voters over the past 40 years or so. The tumultuous nature of politics over the period-highlighted by the civil rights movement, the Vietnam War, the feminist movement, the Watergate scandal, economic problems, and, over recent years, such critical matters as a severe economic recession and the ongoing wars in Iraq and Afghanistan-is most likely responsible for this heightened concern.

\section*{SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\left.\begin{array}{l}\text { To continue to build a } \\ \text { response to the chapter } \\ \text { Essential Question, go to }\end{array}\right)\)

Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: What factors influence voter behavior?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What are off-year elections?
3. (a) How does a person's sense of political efficacy affect voting behavior? (b) What other factors affect how a person will vote?
4. What is the meaning and significance of the gender gap?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Predict Consequences (a) In some democracies, voters are required to vote. Do you think such mandatory voting would work in the United States? (b) Why or why not?
6. Draw Inferences (a) How do factors such as income and level of education impact rates of voter participation? (b) Why do you think this is the case?

\section*{Quick Write}

Narrative: Select a Narrative Structure Using your research and the list of details, identify what the climax, or most interesting and vivid part of your story, is. Narratives are usually told in chronological order with the climax near the end. Organize the details you collected for your essay into a beginning, middle, and end.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Sociological factors include income, occupation, education, gender, age, religion, ethnicity, geographic location, and family and other group affiliation. For example, people from suburbs and with high incomes and education tend to vote Republican. African Americans, Catholics, and women favor Democrats. Psychological factors include the voter's party affiliation and views on the candidates and issues.
2. elections in which there is no presidential race
3. (a) A person who lacks any feeling of influence on politics is less likely to vote. (b) Possible response: Inconvenient registration requirements, long ballots, long lines at polling places, and bad weather can cause people to not vote.
4. Women and men differ in their voting behavior, with more women today favoring Democrats and more men favoring Republicans.
5. (a) Possible answer: Mandatory voting would be very unpopular. (b) The lack of popular support would make mandatory voting unworkable.
6. (a) Wealthier and better educated voters tend to vote in higher numbers. (b) Wealthy people are more likely to have a sense of political efficacy because they have been successful in the system. They also have a high stake in keeping politicians in power who will support favorable policies.
QUICK WRITE Students should identify the chronology and the beginning, middle, and end of their story.

\section*{Expansion of Voting Rights in the U.S.}

\section*{Political Dictionary} suffrage p152 franchise p. 152 electorate p. 152 disenfranchised p. 153 poll tax p. 154 alien p. 156 transient p. 157 registration p. 158 purge p. 159
poll book p. 159 literacy p. 161
gerrymandering \(p .165\) injunction \(p .165\)
preclearance \(p .167\)
off-year election p. 170 ballot fatigue \(p .171\) political efficacy p. 172 political socialization \(p .173\) gender gap p. 175 party identification \(p .177\) straight-ticket voting p. 177 split-ticket voting p. 177 independent p. 177

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about voting, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 De Capua, Sarah. Voting. Children's Press, 2002.
L2 Adams, Colleen. Women's Suffrage: A Primary Source History of the Women's Rights Movement in America. Rosen Publishing Group, Inc., 2002.
L3 Laney, Garrine P. The Voting Rights Act of 1 965: Historical Background and Current Issues. Novinka Books, 2004.
L4 Kaufmann, Karen M., Petrocik, John R., and Shaw, Daron R., Unconventional Wisdom: Facts and Myths About American Voters. Oxford University Press, 2008.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Short-Answer Tests Explain that when preparing for a short-answer test, students should focus on key terms, dates, and concepts. Flashcards are a good way to study for this type of test. Stress that simplicity is the rule for short answers. Introductions and conclusions are not necessary; instead, answers should be brief and to the point. It may help students to focus their thoughts if they underline key words in the question. For each statement they make, they should provide an example, reason, or explanation. Short-answer tests usually ask questions that begin with such words as list, define, name, or identify. Students might think in these terms as they study for the test.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 2 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 2 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 158, 174
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) The States have the primary role of setting voter qualifications, within basic guidelines set by the Federal Government.
(b) In some cases, States have been unwilling to observe the basic principles that the Constitution lays down-for example, by denying African Americans the vote in spite of the 15 th Amendment.
2. (a) Restrictions include property ownership, religion, age, race, gender, and taxes. (b) possible response: greater federal involvement in removing restrictions, such as by constitutional amendment along with active federal enforcement (c) Possible answer: Federal action or a constitutional amendment all at once affects practices across the entire country, and it effectively overcomes local or State resistance to basic principles of the Constitution.

\section*{SECTION 2}
3. (a) to prevent a political machine from bringing in outsiders to vote in local elections and to allow time for new voters to become familiar with the candidates and issues (b) The trend is to require shorter residency requirements. (c) Court rulings found that periods longer than 30 days were unreasonable for accomplishing the objectives and so an unnecessary hindrance to voting.
4. (a) The argument was "old enough to fight, old enough to vote. " (b) They tend to vote in smaller numbers than older groups. (c) Possible answer: Young voters don't see politics as relevant to their lives.
5. (a) Originally, literacy tests were used to make sure that a voter had the capacity to cast an informed ballot. (b) Some whites, especially in the South, used difficult literacy tests as a means of unfairly preventing African Americans from voting.

\section*{SECTION 3}
6. (a) to ensure that freed African American men would not be denied the vote on the basis of race (b) There was strong resistance among some white southerners, who used discriminatory laws and practices as well as intimidation to prevent African Americans from voting.
7. (a) Laws such as literacy tests and poll taxes were used to block access to the polls. (b) Would-be African American

Comprehension and Critical Thinking

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) Which level of government is primarily responsible for establishing voter qualifications in the United States? (b) Why has the Federal Government gradually assumed a larger role in the setting of those qualifications?
2. (a) Identify the restrictions that prevented some citizens from voting in the past. (b) What has been the most effective and common way to overturn those restrictions? (c) Why do you think this is?

\section*{Section 2}
3. (a) Why do States set residence requirements? (b) How have those requirements changed over time? (c) Why have those changes occurred?
4. (a) What was the primary argument made in favor of lowering the voting age to 18 ? (b) How has youth participation in elections changed since then? (c) Why do you think this is?
5. (a) What was the original purpose of literacy tests? (b) What prompted the removal of literacy requirements?

\section*{Section 3}
6. (a) Why was the 15th Amendment adopted? (b) Why was that amendment largely ineffective for nearly a century?
7. (a) What were some of the legal means used to keep African Americans from voting? (b) What were some of the illegal means used? (c) How were the efforts to disenfranchise African Americans finally overcome?

\section*{Section 4}
8. (a) What is a nonvoting voter? (b) What is the cause of ballot fatigue?
9. (a) What are some of the characteristics of a likely voter? (b) How does a closely contested race usually affect voter turnout?
10. (a) What is split-ticket voting? (b) What psychological factors tend to produce split-ticket voting?
11. Analyzing Political Cartoons Study the cartoon below that references a World War II monument. (a) What is the message of the cartoon? (b) Why does the cartoonist use a soldier as the voice of this cartoon?

Writing About Government
12. Use your Quick Write exercises from the chapter to write a narrative essay about an important event in the history of suffrage. You should review the paragraph you wrote

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
13. Essential Question Activity Conduct research on voter registration and participation in your community. Find out what a person who wishes to vote must do in order to cast a ballot, and what may disqualify a person from voting. Then interview friends or relatives about why they do or do not vote. Ask:
(a) What must a person who wishes to vote do? (b) How easy or difficult is the registration process? If it is difficult, how might it be made easier?
(c) If the friends or relatives you interviewed do not vote, ask what, if anything, might be done to encourage voting
14. Essential Question Assessment Based on your research and what you learned in this chapter, create a brochure explaining the registration process for someone who has recently moved into your community. You might also include statistics or some information about why people do or do not vote. Your brochure should help you to answer the Chapter Essential Question: Why do voters act as they do?

Chapter 6 Assessment
voters were kept from the polls through threats and violence. (c) Over time, the courts struck down many legal barriers, and strong federal laws, a constitutional amendment, and active federal enforcement also helped.

\section*{SECTION 4}
8. (a) A nonvoting voter is a person who casts a ballot but does not make a choice in every race. (b) People exhaust their patience or knowledge as they work through the ballot.
9. (a) older; higher levels of income, education, and occupational status; long-time residents who are well integrated into the community (b) Tighter races tend to produce more turnout.
10. (a) Split-ticket voting is voting for candidates of more than one party on the same ballot. (b) differing opinions on individual candidates and issues
11. (a) Individuals fought and sacrificed for the United States and its way of life, and therefore people should not say that they are "too busy" to vote. (b) The soldier represents the ultimate sacrifice of giving one's life for one's country.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{The American Electorate}

Since the nation's founding, the size of the electorate has grown remarkably. Much of that growth has involved extending the right to vote to such originally disenfranchised groups as African Americans and women. To many, efforts to expand the electorate represent the highest ideals of the American system of government, as illustrated by the documents below.

\section*{Document 1}
This was the first nation in the history of the world to be founded with a purpose. The great phrases of that purpose still sound in every American heart, North and South: "All men are created equal." "Government by consent of the governed." "Give me liberty or give me death." Well, those are not just clever words, or those are not just empty theories. In their name Americans have fought and died for two centuries, and tonight around the world they stand there as guardians of our liberty, risking their lives.
Those words are promised to every citizen that he shall share in the dignity of man. This dignity cannot be found in a man's possessions. It cannot be found in his power or in his position. It really rests on his right to be treated as a man equal in opportunity to all others. It says that he shall share in freedom. He shall choose his leaders, educate his children, provide for his family according to his ability and his merits as a human being....
Many of the issues of civil rights are very complex and most difficult. But about this there can and should be no argument: every American citizen must have an equal right to vote.

> -President Lyndon Johnson
> Address to Congress, March 15, 1965

\section*{se your kno} Questions 1-3.
. Which ment 1?
A. Voting rights are only one of the many important civil rights guaranteed to the American people.
B. The right to vote is one of the most basic rights possessed by the American people.
C. Only those people who are well informed should be allowed to vote.
D. More people will have to fight and die in order to secure voting rights.

Document 2

-Cartoon by Thomas Nast, published November 22, 1869
1. \(B\)
2. They are celebrating universal suffrage, and they are suggesting that the result will be greater harmony among different racial and ethnic groups.
3. A good answer will explore how freedom depends on true equality.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.

L3Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
12. In their essays, students should provide background for their chosen event and include key details, organized in chronological order.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
13. (a) A good answer will include all the necessary steps for the student's community. (b) Students should identify any requirements, such as proof of residency or citizenship or identification, that may require advance planning by a person wishing to register. (c) A good answer will give specific suggestions, including explanations for how they would improve the process and prevent misuse.
14. The brochure should carefully list all the steps. Students should consider how registration requirements in the community either help or hinder voter participation.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

UNIT 2
In what ways should people participate in public affairs?

\section*{CHAPTER 7}

How fair and effective is the electoral process?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: How does the power of the vote promote equality? (Each vote counts equally, regardless of the voter's race, religion, or other differences. Thus, to win office, candidates must address the concerns of diverse voters, not just an influential few. ) In this chapter, students will learn about the electoral process. Tell students to begin to further explore the electoral process by completing the Chapter 7 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 7 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 117)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE MAPS}

You may wish to teach analyzing maps as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 7 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 148) to help students learn how to analyze maps. The worksheet asks students to analyze maps of presidential campaign contributions in 2000 and 2004 and then answer questions about the maps. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 149).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the electoral process.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach all the Section 1 lesson plan. Begin Teaching the Section 2 lesson plan, including the Bellringer and the following discussion, and the Core Worksheet. BLOCK 2: Complete Section 2, starting with the discussion of student memoranda and continuing through the lesson. Then teach the Section 3 lesson plan in its entirety

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Have students create an outline of the chapter using the main headings and subheadings, adding other useful information to the outline as appropriate.
Then have students create a flowchart that covers the electoral process-from nominating to elections. Annotations on the flowchart should explain the role of money in the process.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- participate in a talk show simulation to build understanding about the nominating process and methods.
- evaluate the fairness of the nominating process by analyzing a Supreme Court ruling.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- explore the variation in types of election procedures used nationwide in order to understand how election laws vary by State.
- examine issues raised in the 2000 Florida presidential voting to gain understanding of how voting procedures and equipment can affect elections.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- consider the potentially corrupting effect of money in politics by analyzing a political cartoon.
- prepare for and carry out a debate on campaign finance reform.
- produce a political cartoon about campaign finance laws.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

What methods are used to choose candidates for public office?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- participate in a talk show simulation to build understanding about the nominating process and methods.
- evaluate the fairness of the nominating process by analyzing a Supreme Court ruling.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 120) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 122)

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{The Nominating Process}

Guiding Question
What methods are used to choose candidates for public office? Use the diagram to write down information about the various methods of nominating candidates to run for office.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- nomination • open primary - general election - blanket primary
- caucus - runoff primary
- direct primary
- nonpartisan
- closed primary election

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain why the nominating process is a critical first step in the election process.
2. Describe self-announcement, the caucus, and the convention as nominating methods.
3. Discuss the direct primary as the principal nominating method used in the United States today.
4. Understand why some candidates use the petition as a nominating device.

Image Above: Minnesota's Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party nominates a candidate for governor at a State convention

Suppose your teacher stood in front of the class and said: "Here's a \($ 1,000\) bill. Whod like to have it?" You, and everyone else in the room, would promptly say, or at least think: "Me!" Suppose the teacher then said: "Okay, we'll hold an election. The person who wins the most votes gets the money."

What would happen? If the election were held immediately, it is likely that each member of the class would vote for himself or herself. A few might vote for a friend. Almost certainly, however, the election would end in a tie. No one would win the money.

But suppose the teacher said: "We'll hold the election tomorrow." What do you suppose would happen then? As you think about the answer to that question, you begin to get a sense of the practical importance of the nominating process-the first step in the process of electing candidates for public office.

\section*{A Critical First Step}

The nominating process is the process of candidate selection. Nominationthe naming of those who will seek office-is a critically important step in the election process.

You have already seen two major illustrations of the significance of the nominating process. In Chapter 5, you read about the making of nominations (1) as a prime function of political parties in American politics, and (2) as a leading reason for the decentralized character of the two major parties in the United States.

The nominating process also has a very real impact on the right to vote. In the typical election in this country, voters can choose between only two candidates for each office on the ballot. They can vote for the Republican or they can vote for the Democratic candidate. \({ }^{1}\) This is another way of saying that we have a two-party system in the United States. It is also another way to say that the nominating stage is a critically important step in the electoral process. Those who make nominations place real, very practical limits on the choices that voters can make in the general election.

1 Other choices are sometimes listed, of course-minor party or independent nominees. These are not often meaningtul alternatives, however; most voters choose not to "waste" their votes on candidates who cannot win. Aso, nonpartisan elections are an exception to this statement, of course, since candidates are notidentified by party labels.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: • Five major nominating methods are used in American politics: selfannouncement, caucus, convention, direct primary, and petition. - The most widely used method today is the direct primary.
CONCEPTS: representative government, will of the people
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The nominating process is vital to democratic government. - Corruption spurred changes in the American political process and led to the development of the modern nominating procedure. - The nominating process determines which candidates can appear on the ballot in local, State, and national elections.

In one-party constituencies (those areas where one party regularly wins elections), the nominating process is usually the only point at which there is any real contest for public office. Once the dominant party has made its nomination, the general election is little more than a formality.

Dictatorial regimes point up the importance of the nominating process. Many of them hold general elections-regularly scheduled elections at which voters make the final selection of officeholders-much as democracies do. But, typically, the ballots used in those elections list only one candidate for each office-the candidate of the ruling clique; and those candidates regularly win with majorities approaching 100 percent.

Nominations are made in five different ways in this country. Candidates are named to the ballot by (1) self-announcement, (2) caucus, (3) convention, (4) direct primary, and (5) petition.

\section*{Self-Announcement}

Self-announcement is the oldest form of the nominating process in American politics. First used in colonial times, it is still often found at the small-town and rural levels in many parts of the country.

The method is quite simple. A person who wants to run for office simply announces that fact. Modesty or local custom may dictate that someone else actually makes the candidate's announcement, but, still, the process amounts to the same thing.

Self-announcement is sometimes used by someone who failed to win a regular party nomination or by someone unhappy with the party's choice. Note that whenever a write-in candidate appears in an election, the selfannouncement process has been used.

In recent history, four prominent presidential contenders have made use of the process: George Wallace, who declared himself to be the American Independent Party's nominee in 1968; and independent candidates Eugene McCarthy in 1976; John Anderson in 1980; and Ross Perot in 1992. And all of the 135 candidates who sought to replace Governor Gray Davis of California in that State's recall election in 2003-including the winner, Arnold Schwarzenegger-were self-starters.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 7, Section 1:
LL2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 117)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 120)
\(\boxed{L 2}\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 122)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 124)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 125)
L2 Core Worksheet B (p. 127)
L3 Quiz A (p. 129)
L2 Quiz B (p. 130)

\section*{The Caucus}

As a nominating device, a caucus is a group of like-minded people who meet to select the candidates they will support in an upcoming election. The first caucus nominations were made during the later colonial period, probably in Boston in the 1720s. John Adams described the caucus this way in 1763:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

This day learned that the Caucus Club meets, at certain times, in the garret of Tom Dawes, the Adjutant of the Boston Regiment. He has a large house, and he has a moveable partition in his garret which he takes down, and the whole club meets in one room. There they smoke tobacco till you cannot see from one end of the garret to the other. There they drink flip, I suppose, and they choose a moderator, who puts questions to the vote regularly; and selectmen, assessors, collectors, wardens, fire-wards, and representatives, are regularly chosen before they are chosen in the town."
—Charles Francis Adams (ed.) The Works of John Adams (1856)

- Analyzing Cartoons Ross Perot, who ran for President in 1992, launched his campaign via self-announcement. Why might self-announcement attrac candidates with the personal wealth to finance their own campaigns? What is nomination?
clique
\(n\). an exclusive group
-

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 7A, Presidential Bandwagon, which is a political cartoon about the nominating process. Have students write a brief, one- or twosentence description of the cartoon. Descriptions should explain the major message of the cartoon and how the elements of the cartoon achieve this message.
L2 Differentiate Tell students that bandwagon has two meanings. A bandwagon can be a vehicle on which musicians perform during a parade. It can also mean a popular movement, such as a political campaign.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentation at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that they will be learning about the process by which the candidates who run for office are selected. Say that this process is called nomination, which comes from a Latin word meaning "name." Ask: Why do you think it is necessary to have a process for naming candidates for office? (A nominating process may help prevent unqualified people from appearing on the ballot. Also, it pares down the number of candidates on the ballot to a reasonable number.) How does the fact that we have a two-party system increase the importance of nomination? (Voters generally face a choice of only two candidates, so it is important that those two candidates be of very high quality.)
Next, review student responses to the Bellringer. Invite volunteers to share their summaries. Review the major message of the cartoon. (It suggests that the nominating process is too crowded, with so many candidates that it is impossible to build excitement for any one candidate.) Review also the elements of the cartoon. (The crowded bandwagon represents the large number of candidates. The band represents excitement for a candidate.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the naming of those who will seek office
Analyzing Cartoons because such a candidate might not need the support of a major party

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET A}

Distribute the Chapter 7 Core Worksheet A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 124), which helps students build understanding of the nominating process by guiding them through a talk show segment on the process. Arrange students in groups of three to four. Tell students to use their textbooks and any other available resources, such as the Internet, to prepare for their presentation.
L1 L2 Differentiate Group L1 and L2 students with L3 and L4 students.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the five methods of nomination.

Originally the caucus was a private meeting of a few influential figures in the community. \({ }^{2}\) As political parties began to appear in the late 1700 s, they took over the device and soon broadened the membership of the caucus considerably

The coming of independence brought the need to nominate candidates for State offices: governor, lieutenant governor, and others above the local level. The legislative caucus-a meeting of a party's members in the State legislature-took on the job. At the national level, both the Federalists and the Democratic-Republicans in Congress were, by 1800 , choosing their presidential and vicepresidential candidates through the congressional caucus.

The legislative and congressional caucuses were quite practical in their day. Transportation and communication were difficult at best. Since legislators were already gathered regularly in a central place, it made sense for them to take on the nominating responsibility. The spread of democracy, especially in the newer States on the frontier, spurred opposition to the use of caucuses, however. They were widely condemned for their closed, unrepresentative character.

Criticism of the caucus reached its peak in the early 1820s. The supporters of three of the leading contenders for the presidency in 1824-Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, and John Quincy Adams-boycotted the DemocraticRepublicans' congressional caucus that year. In fact, Jackson and his supporters made "King Caucus" a leading campaign issue. The other major contender, William H. Crawford of Georgia, became the caucus nominee at a meeting attended by fewer than one third of the Democratic-Republican Party's members in Congress.

Crawford ran a poor third in the electoral college balloting in 1824, and the reign of 2 The origin of the term caucus is not clear. Most authorities agree that it comes from the word caulkers, because the Boston Caucus Club met in a room formerly used as a meeting place by caukers in the Boston shipyards. (Caulkers made ships watertight by filling seams or cracks in the hulls of sailing vessels with tar or oakum.) The term is also used to refer to a group whose members (often members of a legislative body) unite to promote some particular interest-for example, in Congress today, the Congressional Black Caucus.

\section*{Answers}

Five Methods of Nomination possible response: the direct primary, because all qualified voters may participate directly in selecting candidates by private ballot

\section*{Background}

GETTING ON THE BALLOT Achieving nomination by any method does not automatically or necessarily place a person's name on the ballot for an election. In each State, laws determine the process a candidate must go through in order to get his or her name on the actual general election ballot. For example, different State laws may require the completion of petitions, the payment of a filing fee, or other such measures. For minor parties, the requirements can be especially difficult to meet. For example, minor party candidates need thousands more signatures than candidates of the major parties must provide.

King Caucus at the national level was ended. With its death in presidential politics, the caucus system soon withered at the State and local levels, as well.

The caucus is still used to make local nominations in some places, especially in New England. There, a caucus is open to all members of a party, and it only faintly resembles the original closed and private process.

\section*{The Convention}

As the caucus method collapsed, the convention system took its place. The first national convention to nominate a presidential candidate was held by a minor party, the AntiMasons, in Baltimore in 1831. The newly formed National Republican (soon to become Whig) Party also held a convention later that same year. The Democrats picked up the practice in 1832. All major-party presidential nominees have been chosen by conventions ever since. By the 1840s, conventions had become the principal means for making nominations at every level in American politics.

On paper, the convention process seems perfectly suited to representative government. A party's members meet in a local caucus to pick candidates for local offices and, at the same time, to select delegates to represent them at a county convention. \({ }^{3}\)

At the county convention, the delegates nominate candidates for county offices and select delegates to the next rung on the convention ladder, usually the State convention. There, the delegates from the county conventions pick the party's nominees for governor and other Statewide offices. State conventions also send delegates to the party's national convention, where the party selects its presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

In theory, the will of the party's rank and file membership is passed up through each of its representative levels. Practice soon pointed up the weaknesses of the theory, however, as party bosses found ways to manipulate the

3 The meetings at which delegates to local conventions are 3 The meetings at which delegates to local conventions are chosen are still often called caucuses. Earlier, they were also name gave rise to the term direct primary to distinguish that newer nominating method from the convention process.
process. By playing with the selection of delegates, usually at the local levels, they soon dominated the entire system.

As a result, the caliber of most conventions declined at all levels, especially during the late 1800 s. How low some of them fell can be seen in this description of a Cook County (Chicago), Illinois, convention in 1896:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

Of [723] delegates, those who had been on trial for murder numbered 17; sentenced to the penitentiary for murder or manslaughter and served sentence, 7; served terms in the penitentiary for burglary, 36; served terms in the penitentiary for picking pockets, 2; served terms in the penitentiary for arson, 1; . . . jailbirds identified by detectives, 84; keepers of gambling houses, 7; keepers of houses of ill-fame, 2 ; convicted of mayhem, 3; ex-prize fighters, 11; poolroom proprietors, 2; saloon keepers, 265; . . . political employees, 148; no occupation, 71; ...
"The Sine qua Non of Caucus Reform" Review of Reviews (Sept. 1897)

Many people had hailed the change from caucus to convention as a major change for the better in American politics. The abuses of the new device soon dashed their hopes. By the 1870s, the convention system was itself under attack as a major source of evil in the nation's politics. By the 1910 s, the direct primary had replaced the convention in most States as the principal nominating method in American politics.

Conventions still play a major role in the nominating process in some States-notably, Connecticut, Michigan, South Dakota, Utah, and Virginia. And, as you will see, no adequate substitute for the device has yet been found at the presidential level.

\section*{The Direct Primary}

A direct primary is an intraparty election. It is held within a party to pick that party's candidates for the general election. Wisconsin

\section*{NVITE AUDIENCE PARTICIPATION}

As students present their talk shows, encourage them to raise questions for the talk show members. If the talk show panel is unable to answer a question, ask other members of the class to volunteer answers.

Government
online -ROM CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Background}
nomination at a national convention at a national convention for one of the major parties, there will be several thousand delegates. Most of these may be pledged to cast their first vote for a specific candidate based on the results of State primaries, caucuses, and conventions. Some of the delegates-usually party offi-cials-are unpledged, however. If a candidate captures a majority of the delegates before the convention, he or she can be certain of winning the nomination. If no candidate has secured a majority of delegates before the convention, however, the delegates themselves decide whom they will nominate. This decision can involve much negotiation and deal making.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The caucus is a group of like-minded people who meet to select the candidates they will support in an upcoming election. After criticism of the caucus reached its peak in the 1820s, the method withered at the national, State, and local levels.

\section*{FOCUS ON THE PRIMARY}

Tell students that the primary has emerged as a leading method of nominating major candidates. Remind students that the use of primaries in the presidential selection process is somewhat different than that used for other offices. Ask: How are primaries different from other nominating processes? (Primaries are generally open to all of the electorate and not as subject to the control of party officials.)

\section*{How does this fact affect the fairness and ef-} fectiveness of elections at nominating qualified candidates? (It may make them longer and more contentious, which may not necessarily improve the quality of candidates eventually nominated. But it does make them more participatory, which may make them at least appear more fair.)
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What happens at a convention?

Volunteers wav signs for candidate Rep. Ron Paul (R. Texas) and Go Mike Huckabee (R., Arkansas) during the 2008 Republican presidential primaries. adopted the first Statewide direct primary law in 1903; several other States soon followed its lead. Every State now makes at least some provision for its use.

In most States, State law requires that the major parties use the primary to choose their candidates for the United States Senate and House of Representatives, for the governorship and all other Statewide offices, and for most local offices as well. In a few States, however, different combinations of convention and primary are used to pick candidates for the top offices.

In Michigan, for example, the major parties choose their candidates for the U.S. Senate and House, the governorship, and the State legislature in primaries. Nominees for lieutenant governor, secretary of state, and attorney general are picked by conventions. \({ }^{4}\)

Although the primaries are partynominating elections, they are closely regulated by law in most States. The State usually sets the dates on which primaries are held, and it regularly conducts them, too. The State, not the parties, provides polling places and election officials, registration lists and ballots, and otherwise polices the process.

\footnotetext{
4 In most States, minor parties are required to make their nominations by other, more difficult processes, usually in conventions or by petiion. This is another of the several ways in which State election laws often, purposely, make life difficult for minor parties.
}

Caucuses are also found in the presidential selection process. They are used to select national convention delegates in a handful of States, as you will see in Chapter 13.

Two basic forms of the direct primary are in use today: (1) the closed primary and (2) the open primary. The major difference between the two lies in the answer to this question: Who can vote in a party's primary-only those qualified voters who are party members, or any qualified voter?

The Closed Primary Today, 24 States provide for the closed primary-a party's nominating election in which only declared party members can vote. The party's primary is closed to all but those party members. \({ }^{5}\)

In most of the closed primary States, party membership is established by registration. When voters appear at their polling places on primary election day, their names are checked against the poll books and each voter is handed the primary ballot of the party in which he or she is registered. The voter can mark only that party's ballot; he or she can vote only in that party's primary.

In some of the closed primary States, however, a voter can change his or her party registration on election day. In those States, then, the primary is not as completely "closed" as it is elsewhere.

The Open Primary The open primaryalso known as the crossover primary-is a party's nominating election in which any qualified voter can cast a ballot. Although it is the form in which the direct primary first appeared, it is now found in only 26 States.

When voters go to the polls in some open primary States, they are handed a ballot of each party holding a primary. Usually, they receive only two ballots, those of the Republican and 5 The Supreme Court has held that a State's closed primary law cannot forbid a party to allow independent voters to participate in its primary if the party itself chooses to allow them to do so. In Tashjian v. Republican Party of Connecticut, 1986, the Court struck down such a State law. Note that the Court did not outlaw the closed primary in this case, nor did ithold that a political party must allow independents to vote in its primary. The Court found that the Connecticut law violated the 1st and 14th Amendments' guarantees of the right of association - here the right of Connecticut Republicans to associate with independents (invite independents to join them) in making GOP nominations.

\section*{Background}
"WHITE PRIMARIES" Primary elections are held within political parties-which are technically private organizations. During the Jim Crow era, this fact was exploited as one of the techniques by which whites in some southern States denied African Americans a meaningful role in electoral politics. With the so-called "white primary," African American and other minority voters in some states were barred from taking part in Democratic primary elections. Since the Democratic Party dominated politics in these States, keeping voters out of the primary effectively deprived them of any say in the election of public officials. The use of the white primary was outlawed by the Supreme Court ruling in Smith v. Allwright in 1944.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint At a convention, delegates nominate candidates for offices at higher levels.
the Democratic parties. Then, in the privacy of the voting booth, each voter marks the ballot of the party in whose primary he or she chooses to vote. In other open primary States, a voter must ask for the ballot of the party in whose primary he or she wants to vote. That is, each voter must make a public choice of party in order to vote in the primary.

Through 2000, three States used a different version of the open primary-the blanket primary, sometimes called the "wide-open primary." Washington adopted the first blanket primary law in 1935. Alaska followed suit in 1970, and California did so in 1996. In a blanket primary, every voter received the same ballota long one that listed everycandidate, regardless of party, for every nomination to be made at the primary. Voters could participate however they chose. They could confine themselves to one party's primary; or they could switch back and forth between the parties' primaries, voting to nominate a Democrat for one office, a Republican for another, and so on down the ballot.

The Supreme Court found California's version of the blanket primary unconstitutional in 2000, however. In California Democratic Party v. Jones, the High Court held that that process violated the 1 st and 14th amendments' guarantees of the right of association. It ruled that a State cannot force a political party to associate with out-siders-that is, with members of other parties or with independents-when it picks its candidates for public office.

The Court's decision in Jones made the blanket primary a thing of the past. Two of the three States that used the device-Alaska and California-now provide for more traditional versions of the open primary. Washington, on the other hand, has gone a different route.

Washington now provides for the "top-two" form of the open primary. There, the names of all those who seek nomination are listed, by office, on a single primary ballot. Then the top two vote getters for each office, regardless of party, face one another in the general election. Thus, two Republicans, or two Democrats, may battle one another in November.

Louisiana uses yet another version of the open primary, under what is sometimes called its "open-election law." There, as in Washington, all candidates for nomination

\section*{Nominating a President}

The five methods described in this section apply to most federal and State officeholders but they may take very dififerent forms in presidential campaigns. How does a national convention dififer from a State convention?

\section*{MAJOR PARTIES}

Modern national conventions formally nominate a candidate, but his or her victory has been determined by wins in State primaries and caucuses held months earlier.

2008 Democratic National Convention

OHER GANDDALES Independent and minor party candidates must submit signatures to win a place on the general election ballot in many States.

Libertarian candidate Bob Barr 4 are listed on a single ballot, and the top two vote getters, regardless of party, face off in the general election. But if a candidate wins a majority of the votes in the primary, he or she is declared the winner of the office involved-so, the primary becomes, in effect, the election. \({ }^{6}\)

Closed vs. Open Primaries The merits of the two basic forms of the direct primary have been argued for decades. Those who support the closed primary rely on three major arguments. They regularly claim that:

6 Louisiana's "open-election" primary law applies to its State and local elections, which are held in November of the odd-numbered years. Since 1872, federal law has directed that congressional elections be held in November of the evennumbered years, and Louisiana abides by that law. It holds traditional closed primaries in the even-numbered years to choose candidates for seats in the U.S. House and Senate.

\section*{Background}
the evolution of the primary The primary system emerged from the Progressive Era of the late 1800 s and early 1900 s. It was an attempt to give voters a greater say in the political process. Other Progressive Era reforms of the time were the initiative and referendum, by which voters have a direct say on the passage of specific laws; the recall, by which voters can remove an elected official from office before the end of his or her term; and the popular election of United States senators.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B}

Distribute the Chapter 7 Section 1 Core Worksheet B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 125), which asks students to read excerpts from a Supreme Court ruling on California's blanket primary. Before they begin reading, ask students to recall what they have read about the different types of primaries. Then ask: What aspect of open and closed primaries was the blanket primary designed to overcome? (The open and closed primaries both limit voters' choices to candidates from one or the other majij party. In a blanket primary, every candidate-regardless of party-is on the ballot.) Next, have students read the excerpts and answer the questions.
L1 L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted version of Chapter 7 Section 1 Core Worksheet B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 127) which includes summarized excerpts.

\section*{L4}

Differentiate Have students look up and read the full opinions online.

\section*{REVIEW ANSWERS}

Review the answers to questions 1 and 2. Students should recognize that the Court's main argument is that the 1 st Amendment says parties are free to limit participation to anyone they want. The dissent argued that while parties are private groups, primary elections are public events, which gives the Court the right to regulate them. Then review student answers to question 3 . Encourage students to share differing views of the question.

\section*{Answers}

Nominating a President In a State convention, delegates for the national convention are chosen. Nomination actually takes place at the national convention.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students write a newspaper editorial in which they make an argument in favor of one method of nomination as the preferred method for the whole nation. The editorial should clearly identify their preferred method and explain why it is superior to the other methods at producing fair elections between quality candidates.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students identify the method of nomination that they feel is the most fair and effective. Have them write or speak a brief statement explaining their choice.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What is the difference between an open primary and a closed primary?
1. The closed primary prevents one party from "raiding" the other's primary in the hope of nominating weaker candidates in the opposition party.
2. It helps to make candidates more responsive to the party, its platform, and its members.
3. It helps make voters more thoughtful, because they must choose between the parties in order to vote in the primaries.

Those who criticize the closed primary usually contend that:
1. It compromises the secrecy of the ballot, because it forces voters to make their party preferences known in order to participate, and
2. It tends to exclude independent voters from the nominating process. \({ }^{7}\)

The advocates of the open primary believe that that nominating arrangement addresses both of those objections to the closed primary. They say that in the typical open primary (1) voters are not forced to make their party preferences a matter of public record, and (2) independent voters are not excluded from the nominating process.

The Runoff Primary In most States, candidates need to win only a plurality of the votes cast in the primary to win their party's nomination. \({ }^{8}\) (Remember, a plurality is the greatest number of votes won by any candidate, whether a majority or not.) In 8 States, however, an absolute majority is needed to carry a primary. \({ }^{9}\) If no one wins a majority in a race, a runoff primary is held a few weeks later. In that runoff contest, the two top vote getters in the first primary face one another to determine the party's nomination, 7 See the discussion of Tashjan v. Republican Party of Connecticut, 1986, in footnote 5 . The closed primary States have amended their election laws to comply with that decision.

8 In lowa, if no candidate wins at least 35 percent of the votes in a primary, the party must then nominate its candidate for that office by convention.
9 Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas-and Louisiana under its unique "open election" law. In North Carolina a runoff is held when no candidate wins 40 percent of the primary vote. In South Dakota, if no one who seeks a party's nomination for governor, U.S. senator, or U.S. representative wins at least 35 percent, the party's candidate for that office must be picked in a runoff primary two weeks later.
and the winner of that vote becomes the party's nominee.

The Nonpartisan Primary In most States all or nearly all of the elected school and municipal offices are filled in nonpartisan elections. These are elections in which candidates are not identified by party labels. About half of all State judges are chosen on nonpartisan ballots, as well. The nomination of candidates for these offices takes place on a nonpartisan basis, too, and most often in nonpartisan primaries.

Typically, a contender who wins a clear majority in a nonpartisan primary then runs unopposed in the general election, subject only to write-in opposition. In many States, however, a candidate who wins a majority in the primary is declared elected at that point. If there is no majority winner, the names of the two top contenders are placed on the general election ballot.

The primary first appeared as a partisan nominating device. Many have long argued that it is not well suited for use in nonpartisan elections. Instead, they favor the petition method, as you will see in a moment.

The Presidential Primary The presidential primary developed as an offshoot of the direct primary. It is not a nominating device, however. Rather, the presidential primary is an election that is held as one part of the process by which presidential candidates are chosen.

The presidential primary is a very complex process that was in place in a large majority of States in the most recent presidential election. It is one or both of two things, depending on the State involved. It is a process in which a party's voters elect some or all of a State party organization's delegates to that party's national convention; and/or it is a preference election in which voters can choose (vote their preference) among various contenders for the grand prize, the party's presidential nomination.

Much of what happens in presidential politics in the early months of every fourth year centers on this very complicated process. (See Chapter 13 for an extended discussion of the presidential primary.)

\section*{Debate}
"The privilege of membership in a party may be . . . no concern of a state. But when . . . that privilege is also the essential qualification for voting in a primary to select nominees for a general election, the state makes the action of the party the action of the state...."
-Supreme Court decision in Smith v. Allwright
Use this quotation to start a debate in your classroom.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint In an open primary, any qualified voter can cast a ballot. In a closed primary, only declared party members can vote. Audio tour Listen to a guided audio tour of this map at
PearsonSuccessNet.com

Analyzing Maps The direct primary, whatever its form, intends to put the nominating function in the hands of a party's rank-and-file membership. What form of the primary is used in your State?

\section*{KEY}
\(\square\) Closed Primary Unaffiliated Voters Excluded Primaries are limited to voters registered with that party. Unaffiliated voters cannot vote in primaries.
\(\square\) Closed Primary
Unaffiliated Voters Permitted
Primaries are limited to voters registered with that party and unaffiliated voters, who may vote in any party's primary.
\(\square\) Open Primary
Private Choice
Voters may vote in any party's primary. Their choice of party remains private.
\(\square\) Open Primary
Public Declaration
Voters may vote in any party's primary. Election officials record which party's ballot they choos

\section*{\(\square \begin{aligned} & \text { Open Election } \\ & \text { Public Declaration }\end{aligned}\)}

All candidates appear on a single ballo open to all voters. If no candidate eceives 50 percent, the top two vote getters proceed to a run-off \(\star\) Unaffiliated voters permitted to vote in Republican race only

\section*{Evaluation of the Primary}

The direct primary, whether open or closed, is an intraparty nominating election. It came to American politics as a reform of the bossdominated convention system. It was intended to take the nominating function away from the party organization and put it in the hands of the party's rank-and-file membership.

The basic facts about the primary have never been very well understood by most voters, however. So, in closed primary States, many voters resent having to declare their party preference in order to vote in the primary. And, in both open and closed primary States, many are upset because they cannot express their support for candidates in more than one party. Many are also annoyed by the "bed-sheet ballots" they regularly see in primary elections-not realizing that the use of the direct primary almost automatically means a long ballot. And some are concerned because the primary (and, in particular, its closed form) tends to exclude independents from the nominating process.

All of these factors, combined with a lack of appreciation of the important role that primaries play in the election process, result in this unfortunate and significant fact: Nearly everywhere, voter turnout in primary elections is usually less than half what it is in the general elections in November.

Primary contests can be quite costly. The fact that successful contenders must then wage-and finance-a general election campaign adds to the money problems that bedevil American politics. Unfortunately, the financial facts of political life in the United States mean that some well-qualified people refuse to seek public office simply because they cannot muster the funding absolutely necessary to finance a campaign.
bedevil \(\frac{\text { bedevil }}{v . \text { irritate, bother }}\)

\section*{Background}

LOW VOTER TURNOUT IN PRIMARIES One concern about low primary election turnout is that the results will not reflect the full range of public opinion. The concern is that a small but active and organized wing of a party or some special interest could be able to have a strong influence in a low-turnout primary election. In the primaries leading up to the 2008 presidential election, turnout was often around 20 to 30 percent. Turnout for caucuses was generally in the single digits. Presidential primaries and caucuses generally enjoy higher turnout than those for lower offices.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the map showing forms of primaries in State elections in 2008.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing the Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 2 All-in-One,
p. 256).

L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 129)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 130)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Maps Answers will vary, depending on the students' State.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The importance of the \\ nomination process \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students work in pairs to write and \\ administer a quiz about the text section "A \\ Critical First Step."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The different methods \\ of nomination (Ques- \\ tions 1, 3, 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review with students the diagram about \\ ways to nominate a candidate that appears \\ in this section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The different types of \\ primaries (Questions \\
\(4,5)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create their own diagram \\ that illustrates the differences between a \\ closed and open primary.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Criticisms of the pri- \\ mary (Questions 6, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have student pairs prepare for and engage \\ in a debate on this question: "Primaries \\ should be replaced as a method of nomi- \\ nation in the United States."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the benefits and drawbacks of primaries?

The nominating process, whatever its form, can have a very divisive effect on a party. Remember, the process takes place within the party-so, when there is a contest for a nomination, that is where the contest occurs: Republicans fight with Republicans, Democrats do battle with Democrats. A bitter fight in the primaries can so wound and divide a party that it cannot recover in time to present a united front for the general election. Many a primary fight has cost a party an election.

Finally, because many voters are not very well informed, the primary places a premium on name familiarity. That is, it often gives an edge to a contender who has a well-known name or a name that sounds like that of some well-known person. But, notice, name familiarity in and of itself usually has little or nothing to do with a candidate's qualifications for public office.

Obviously, the primary is not without its problems, nor is any other nominating device. Still, the primary does give a party's members the opportunity to participate at the very core of the political process.

10 The petition device is also an important part of the recall and the initiative and referendum processes; see Chapter 24.

\section*{Petition}

One other nominating method is used fairly widely at the local level in American politics today-nomination by petition. Where this process is used, candidates for public office are nominated by means of petitions signed by a certain number of qualified voters in the election district. \({ }^{10}\)

Nomination by petition is found most widely at the local level, chiefly for nonpartisan school posts and municipal offices in medium-sized and smaller communities and, increasingly, for judgeships. It is also the process usually required by State law for nominating minor party and independent candidates in many of the States. (Remember, the States often purposely make the process of getting on the ballot difficult for those candidates.)

The details of the petition process vary widely from State to State, and even from one city or county to the next. Usually, however, the higher the office and/or the larger the constituency represented by the office, the greater the number of signatures needed for nomination by petition.

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed diagram to answer this question: What methods are used to choose candidates for public office?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What is the purpose of nomination in the electoral system?
3. In addition to primaries, what nominating methods are used in the United States?
4. What is the difference between closed primary and an open primary?
5. How does the presidential primary dif fer from those primaries used in State and local nominations?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Express Problems Clearly Summarize the relationship between the will of the people and the power of party organizations. How has this relationship changed the way that parties nominate candidates?
7. Draw Inferences What do you think explains the usually low level of turnout in primary elections in most States?

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Essay: Choose a Topic Using the Internet, other media sources, and your textbook, find an example of a recent election that took place at the national level or in your State or local community. Write a brief summary of the election - who the candidates were and when the race took place.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Methods of nominating candidates are self-announcement, caucus, convention, direct primary, and petition.
2. Nomination is the process for choosing candidates to run for office.
3. self-announcement, caucus, convention, and petition
4. Closed primaries are limited to members of a particular party, and open primaries are open to any qualified voter.
5. Presidential primaries are not a nominating step in and of themselves, as are primaries at the State and local level. Presidential primaries are merely one step in a larger process, which culminates in a nominating convention.
6. The caucus and convention systems were criticized because they helped give rise to party machines with powerful party bosses that dominated the nominating process, leading to elections that did not reflect the will of the people. The direct primary system was instituted to take the nominating function away from the party organization and put it in the hands of the people.
7. Possible answer: Many voters don't understand the primary system or recognize its importance. In closed primaries, voters may resent having to declare their party preference. In closed and open primary States, many voters may get upset because they cannot vote for candidates of more than one party. Long ballots irritate some voters, and primaries tend to exclude independents.
QUICK WRITE Students should choose an election about which they have plenty of information.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Elections}

Guiding Question
How are elections conducted in the United States? Use the chart to record information about how elections are administered and conducted.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Elections} \\
\hline - & - & 1 \\
\hline Administration & Ballots & Voting Procedures \\
\hline 1 & 1 & - 1 \\
\hline - & - & - \\
\hline - & - & - \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- ballot - precinct
- absentee voting - polling place
- coattail effect

\section*{Objectives}
1. Analyze how the administration of elections in the United States helps make democracy work.
2. Define the role of local precincts and polling places in the election process.
3. Describe the various ways in which voters can cast their ballots.
4. Outline the role that voting devices play in the election process.

Most high school students are not old enough to vote. In some parts of the country, though, high school students can serve on local election boards. First in Hawaii and Oregon and now in several States, 16- and 17-year-olds can become full-fledged members of the panels that administer local elections.

We hold more elections in this country and we vote more often than most people realize. Indeed, Sundays and holidays are about the only days of the year on which people do not go to the polls somewhere in the United States. We also elect far more officeholders than most people realize-in fact, more than 500,000 of them, more than in any other country in the world.

\section*{The Administration of Elections}

Democratic government cannot possibly hope to succeed unless its elections are free, honest, and accurately reported. Many people see the details of the election process as much too complicated, too legalistic, too dry and boring to worry about. Those who do really miss the vital part those details play in making democracy work. How something can be done very often shapes what is in fact done-and that fact is as true in politics as it is in all other areas of human concern.

Extent of Federal Control Nearly all elections in the United States are held to choose the more than 500,000 persons who hold elective office in the more than 89,000 units of government at the State and local levels. It is quite understandable, then, that most election law in the United States is State-not federal-law.

Even so, a body of federal election law does exist. The Constitution gives Congress the power to fix " \([\mathrm{t}]\) he Times, Places, and Manner of holding Elections" of members of Congress. \({ }^{11}\) Congress also has the power to set the time for choosing presidential electors, to set the date for casting the electoral votes, and to regulate other aspects of the presidential election process. \({ }^{12}\)

12 Article II, Section 1, Clause 4; 12th Amendment

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Elections are regulated mostly by State law, though federal laws apply to federal elections. - Most voting takes place at precincts across the country, though some occurs by mail, by absentee ballot, or by early voting procedures. - All States now use the Australian ballot, usually with the office-group format, though sometimes with a party-column format. - Electronic voting and vote counting are common now.
CONCEPTS: representative government, political participation, civic duty
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Voting gives Americans the chance to participate in the democratic process. - Voting procedures have been refined over the years to reduce fraud and corruption and to increase fairness and accuracy of results.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How are elections conducted in the United States?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Elections} \\
\hline & & \\
\hline Administration & Ballots & Voting Procedures \\
\hline & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- most election law is State law \\
- Congress sets time, place and manner of congressional and presidential elections \\
- congressional elections-first Tuesday following first Monday in November of every evennumbered year \\
- presidential elec-tion-same date every fourth year \\
- Help America Vote Act-upgrade voting machines and training of election officials; computerize registration; allow provisional voting \\
- most elections for State offices on same date as national elections \\
- absentee voting \\
- early voting \\
- precinct-voting district \\
- polling placeplace votes cast \\
- precinct election board supervises - poll watchersone per party at each polling place
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- instrument on which voter registers choice \\
- forms include paper, optical scanner, touch screens \\
- secret ballots \\
- based on Australian bal-lot-printed at public expense, all candidates listed, given only at polls, marked in secret \\
- office-group ballot-candidates for an office grouped together; order of names rotated - party-column ballot-candidates listed in column under party name \\
- sample ballots help voters prepare \\
- bed-sheet bal-lot-lengthy
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- voting machine, often electronic \\
- optical scan-ning-voters fill in and scanners read and record \\
- direct response electronic voting-voters touch screen or push buttons and votes recorded electronically \\
- vote by mail \\
- online voting
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

In this section's Core Worksheet, students are asked to analyze information about balloting problems in the 2000 presidential election. Before they complete this activity, they may review information in the Skills Handbook, p. S19, about drawing inferences and conclusions.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- explore the variation in types of election procedures used nationwide in order to understand how election laws vary by State.
- examine issues raised in the 2000 Florida presidential voting to gain understanding of how voting procedures and equipment can affect elections.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 131) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 133)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 7B, How America Votes. Ask students to examine the transparency and answer the questions in their notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentation at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER}

Have students share their reactions to the Bellringer questions: What do these graphs suggest about the way Americans vote nationally? (Overall, most voters cast their ballots at the polls.) What does the transparency suggest about election laws? (Possible response: The transparency suggests that election laws and voting methods vary from State to State.) Continue the discussion by asking: Do you think different voting procedures might affect the outcome of elections? (Different procedures may affect who does and does not take part in elections, which could affect outcome. For example, distributing ballots to all voters by mail could increase voter participation.) Do you think the voting procedures in use matter in producing fair and effective elections? (The procedure used may affect the fairness of elections by altering turnout or making it relatively harder or easier for certain groups to take part, or by affecting the way votes are counted.)
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the diagram "What Happens to a Ballot?"

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Most election law in the U.S. is State law; however, a body of federal law does exist.
What Happens to a Ballot? to ensure an accurate, uncorrupted voting process \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Who controls elections?

Congress has set the date for holding congressional elections as the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November of every even-numbered year. It has set the same date every fourth year for the presidential election. \({ }^{13}\) Thus, an off-year round of congressional contests was scheduled for November 2, 2010, followed by a presidential election on November 6, 2012.

Congress has required the use of secret ballots and allowed the use of voting machines and similar devices in federal elections. It has also acted to protect the right to vote, as you saw in Chapter 6. Congress has also prohibited various corrupt practices and regulates the financing of campaigns for federal office, as you will see in the pages ahead.

Congress expanded the body of federal election law with the passage of the Help America Vote Act of 2002. That law came in response to the many ballot and voter registration problems that plagued several States

13 Congress has made an exception for Alaska. Because of the possibility of severe weather in much of Alaska in early November, that State may, if it chooses, elect its congressional delegation and cast its presidential vote in October. To this point, however, Alaska has chosen to use the November date, in the presidential election in 2000. A ballot is the medium by which a voter registers a choice in an election. \({ }^{14}\)

In its major provisions, the law requires the States to
1. replace all their lever-operated and punchcard voting devices by 2006-a deadline that, in fact, most States failed to meet;
2. upgrade their administration of elections, especially through the better training of local election officials and of those more than 2 million (mostly low- paid workers and volunteers) who work in precinct polling places on election day;
3. centralize and computerize their voter registration systems, to facilitate the identification of qualified voters on election day and so minimize fraudulent voting;
4. provide for provisional voting, so a person whose eligibility to vote has been challenged

14 The word comes from the Italian ballotta, "littte ball," and reflects the practice of dropping black or white balls into a box to indicate a choice. The term blackball also comes from that pracice. The ancient Romans used paper ballots as early as 139 в.c.

What Happens to a Ballot?

Local governments offer voters different ways to cast their votes, in both paper formats and electronically, and on election day or earlier. Why is it important for local officials to guard and track ballots after they are cast?

Paper Ballot
Collected at polling place and taken to counting facility
Absentee Ballot
Mailed to the counting facility
Brou
Brought to the polling place and combined with other ballots

\section*{Electronic Ballot}

Data OR
Votes transmitted electronically to counting facility

194 The Electoral Process

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 7, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 131)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 133)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 135)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 136)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 138)
L3 Quiz A (p. 140)
L2 Quiz B (p. 141)

Checkpoint What is early voting?
can nonetheless cast a ballot that will be counted if it is later found that he or she is, in fact, qualified to vote.

State law deals with all other matters relating to national elections-and with all of the details of State and local elections as well.

Election Day Most States hold their elections to fill State offices on the same date Congress has set for national elections: in November of every even-numbered year. The "Tuesday-after-the-first-Monday" formula prevents election day from falling on (1) Sundays (to maintain the principle of separation of church and state) and (2) the first day of the month, which is often payday and therefore peculiarly subject to campaign pressures.

Some States do fix other dates for some offices, however. Louisiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, and Virginia elect the governor, other executive officers, and State legislators in November of odd-numbered years. In Kentucky, the governor and other executive officers are chosen in odd-numbered years, but legislators are elected in even-numbered years. City, county, and other local election dates vary from State to State. When those elections are not held in November, they generally take place in the spring.

Early Voting Millions of Americans cast their ballots before election day. Indeed, some 32 million did so in 2008. Many of them did so by absentee voting-a process by which they could vote without going to their polling places on election day. Congress was responsible for the first instance of absentee voting. In the midst of the Civil War, it provided for the casting of absentee ballots by federal troops in the elections of 1864 . Over the years, every State has made at least some provision for the process.

Now, almost everywhere, voters can apply for an absentee ballot some weeks before an election. They mark those ballots and return them to the local election office, usually by mail, in a sealed envelope, and before election day.

State absentee voting was originally intended to serve a relatively small group of voters, especially the ill or disabled and those who expected to be away from home on election day. Most States have broadened their laws over recent years, however-to the point where, in most of them, any qualified voter can cast an absentee ballot simply because he or she wants to vote that way.

Two thirds of the States have now formalized early voting. They allow any voters who choose to do so to cast their ballots at any time over a period of several days before an elec-tion-not as an absentee ballot but as though they were voting on election day itself. Indeed, in many places, election day is now just the final day on which votes can be cast.

The Coattail Effect The coattail effect occurs when a strong candidate running for an office at the top of the ballot helps attract voters to other candidates on the party's ticket. In effect, the lesser-known office seeker "rides the coattails" of the more prestigious personality-for example, a Franklin Roosevelt, a Ronald Reagan, or a Bill Clinton. The coattail effect is usually most apparent in presidential elections. However, a popular candidate for senator or governor can have the same kind of pulling power in State and local elections.

A reverse coattail effect can occur, too. This happens when a candidate for some major office is less than popular with many voters-for example, Barry Goldwater as the Republican presidential nominee in 1964, and George McGovern for the Democrats in 1972. President Jimmy Carter's coattails were also of the reverse variety in 1980.

Some have long argued that all State and local elections should be held on dates other than those set for federal elections. This, they say, would help voters pay more attention to State and local candidates and issues and lessen the coattail effect a presidential candidate can have.

\section*{Precincts and Polling Places}

A precinct is a voting district. Precincts are the smallest geographic units for the conduct of elections. State law regularly restricts their size, generally to an area with no more than 500 to 1,000 or so qualified voters. A polling place-the place where the voters who live in a precinct actually vote-is located somewhere in or near each precinct.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 7 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 135), which asks students to analyze information about the problems with the balloting in Florida during the 2000 presidential election. Instruct students to read the material and follow the instructions for writing a memorandum about the election. Tell students to think as they read about the qualities of a fair and effective election. Give students ample time to complete the activity.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted version of the Chapter 7 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 136), which offers more structure for writing.
L4 Differentiate Have students perform additional research and write a follow-up to their memoranda, explaining how the issues raised during the Florida vote were resolved.

\section*{Myths and Misperceptions} public voting While the secret ballot is a cherished tradition in American elections, there are still circumstances in which citizens are asked to vote publicly. For example, at New England town meetings, it is common for votes to be cast by voice, by standing, and/or by a show of hands. In general, citizens can request a written ballot for specific questions, but the town meeting must vote to approve this request.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Early voting is the process by which any voters who choose to do so may cast their ballots at any time over a period of several days before an election.

\section*{CONNECTING TO THE ESSENTIAL QUESTION}

\section*{Ask: How did the Florida voting measure up to} the standard of a fair and effective election?
(Both fairness and effectiveness are in question, since there were many questions about the casting and counting of ballots, and the election there was so close and so significant. The problems in Florida might also prompt citizens to look with suspicion on voting and counting methods elsewhere in the country.)

\section*{DISCUSS}

Invite students to share their memoranda with the class. On the board, keep a running list of the various issues identified as well as specific solutions proposed. (Possible issues: Machine recount did not match original machine count. The machines could not read thousands of ballots. The ballot design was confusing to some. Many absentee and overseas ballots were counted despite failing to meet legal requirements. There was disagreement about how to count the ballots rejected by the counting machines. The Supreme Court stopped the recount. Possible solutions: Have representatives of both parties test and certify voting machines before each election. Do awaywith punch-card voting. Use focus groups to test different ballot designs. ) With students, rank the issues from most important to address to least important. Ask: Why is it important to address concerns about the fairness of elections? (It is vital to maintain public belief in the integrity of the election in order for the public to accept its results.)
How would addressing some of the issues on the list and implementing some of the solutions increase fairness?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint a voting district that is the smallest geographic unit for the conduct of elections

A precinct election board supervises the polling place and the voting process in each precinct. Typically, the county clerk or county board of elections draws precinct lines, fixes the location of each polling place, and picks the members of the precinct boards.

The precinct board opens and closes the polls at the times set by State law. In most States, the polls are open from 7:00 or 8:00 A.м. to 7:00 or 8:00 p.m. The precinct election board must also see that the ballots and the ballot boxes or voting devices are available. It must make certain that only qualified voters cast ballots in the precinct. Often the board also counts the votes cast in the precinct and then sends the results to the proper place, usually to the county clerk or county board of elections.

Poll watchers, one from each party, are allowed at each polling place. They may challenge any person they believe is not qualified to vote, check to be sure that their own party's supporters do vote, and monitor the whole process, including the counting of the ballots.

\section*{Casting the Ballot}

A ballot can take a number of different forms, ranging from a piece of paper to optical scanners and touch screens. Whatever its form, however, it is clearly an important and sensitive part of the election process.

Each State now provides for a secret ballot. That is, State law requires that ballots be cast in such manner that others cannot know how a person has voted.

Voting was a quite public process through much of the nation's earlier history, however. Paper ballots were used in some colonial elections, but voting was more commonly viva voce-by voice. Voters simply stated their choices, in public, to an election board. With suffrage limited to the privileged few, many people defended oral voting as the only "manly" way in which to participate. Whatever the merits of that view, the expansion of the electorate brought with it a marked increase in intimidation, vote buying, and other corruptions of the voting process.

Paper ballots were in general use by the mid-1800s. The first ones were unofficialslips of paper that voters prepared themselves and dropped in the ballot box. Soon candidates and parties began to prepare ballots and hand them to voters to cast, sometimes paying them to do so. Those party ballots were often printed on distinctively colored paper, and anyone watching could tell for whom voters were voting.

Political machines-local party organizations capable of mobilizing or "manufacturing" large numbers of votes on behalf of candidates for political office-flourished in many places in the latter 1800s. They fought all attempts to make voting a more dependably fair and honest process. The political corruption of the post-Civil War years brought widespread demand for ballot reforms.

The Australian Ballot A new voting arrangement was devised in Australia, where it was first used in an election in Victoria in 1856. Its successes there led to its use in other countries. By 1900 nearly all of the States were using it, and it remains the basic form of the ballot in this country today.

The Australian Ballot has four essential features: It (1) is printed at public expense; (2) lists the names of all candidates in an election; (3) is given out only at the polls, one to each qualified voter; and (4) can be marked in secret.

Two basic forms of the Australian ballot, shown on p. 197, have been used in this country over the past century. Most States now use the office-group ballot; only a handful of them rely on the partycolumn ballot.

Sample Ballots Sample ballots, clearly marked as such, are available in most States before an election. In some States they are mailed to all voters, and they appear in most newspapers and on the Internet. They cannot be cast, but they can help voters prepare for an election.

First in Oregon (1907), and now in several States, an official voter's pamphlet is mailed to voters before every election. It lists all candidates and measures that will appear on the ballot. In Oregon, each candidate is allowed space to present his

\section*{Background}
the australian ballot The move to the use of the Australian ballot was part of a larger reform effort led in part by a group known as the Mugwumps. The Mug-wumps-which is a Native American term for "big chief" or "person of honor"came into being in the presidential election of 1884. They were Republicans who rejected their party's selection of the allegedly corrupt James G. Blaine. Instead, the Mugwumps chose to support the reputedly honest and reforming Grover Cleveland, who narrowly won the election. The term was originally used sarcastically to make fun of the moralistic Blaine opponents.
or her qualifications and position on the issues. Supporters and opponents of ballot measures are allowed space to present their arguments as well.

Bed-sheet Ballots The ballot in a typical American election is lengthy, often and aptly called a "bed-sheet" ballot. It frequently lists so many offices, candidates, and ballot measures that even the most well-informed voters have a difficult time marking it intelligently.

The long ballot came to American politics in the era of Jacksonian Democracy in the 1830s. Many held the view at the time that the greater the number of elective offices, the more democratic the governmental system. That idea remains widely accepted today

Generally, the longest ballots are found at the local level, especially among the nation's 3,000 -odd counties. The list of elected offices is likely to include several commissioners, a clerk, a sheriff, one or more judges, a prosecutor, coroner, treasurer, assessor, surveyor, school superintendent, engineer, sanitarian, and even the proverbial dogcatcher.

Critics of the bed-sheet ballot reject the notion that the more people you elect, the more democratic the system. Instead, they say, the fewer the offices voters have to fill, the better they can know the candidates and their qualifications. Those critics often point to the factor of "ballot fatigue"-that is, to the drop-off in voting that can run as high as 20 to 30 percent at or near the bottom of the typical (lengthy) ballot.

There seems little, if any, good reason to elect such local officials as clerks, coroners, surveyors, and engineers. Their jobs do not carry basic policy-making responsibilities. Rather, they carry out policies made by others. Many believe that to shorten the ballot and promote good government, the rule should be: Elect those who make public policies; appoint those whose basic job it is to administer those policies

\section*{Automated Voting}

Well over half the votes now cast in national elections are cast on some type of voting machine-and, increasingly, on some type of electronic voting device.

\section*{Ballot Types}

The office-group ballot (top) is the most common form in use in the United States today. How does a party-column ballot encourage voters to vote along party lines?

\section*{OFFICE-GROUP BALLOT}

All candidates for an office are grouped together under the title of that office. It is sometimes called the "office block" ballot because the names appear as a block. Names may be listed in random order to avoid giving any candidate an unfair advantage.
Favored by many scholars because voters consider each choice, office
by office.
PARTY-COLUMN B ALLOTS
Also known as the Indiana ballot, from its early use in that State, the party-column ballot lists all candidates under their party's name. The party-column ballot is used much less often than the office-group ballot.

Favored by politicians because it encourages straight-ticket voting and the coattail effect.

\section*{Background}
bilingual voting The 1975 amendments to the Voting Rights Act introduced the requirement that States use bilingual ballots and election materials in places where there are 10,000 members of a single-language minority group, or a number greater than 5 percent of all voting-age citizens. This requirement has stirred some controversy and was the basis of some resistance to the 2006 vote to reauthorize and amend the Voting Rights Act.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L2 Differentiate Have students create a timeline of major developments in the history of elections and balloting in the United States. The timeline should highlight and explain the significance of new methods or technologies.
L4 Differentiate Have students research noteworthy presidential election controversies in United States history and add them to their timelines.
L3 L4 Differentiate You may choose to distribute the Chapter 7 Section 2 Extend Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 138), which asks students to evaluate information about absentee votes rejected in a recent national election.
L3 Differentiate Have small groups of students make a voting handbook for new citizens. The handbook should describe what happens at polling stations on election day and the types of ballots and voting machines they may encounter. Handbooks should be organized and easy to follow.
L3 Differentiate Ask students to skim the section and note the different methods the text describes for voting. Divide the class into small groups, and tell them to suppose Congress has charged them with the task of increasing voter turnout. They must evaluate the current voting methods, brainstorm ideas for new ones, and then make recommendations to Congress.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the diagram "Ballot Types."

\section*{Answers}

Ballot Types A party-column ballot makes it easier to identify candidates by party, which may encourage straight-ticket voting.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 257).Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 140)Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 141) Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\(\Delta\) Memory cards record votes cast on electronic voting machines.

Thomas Edison patented the first voting machine-the first mechanical device for the casting and counting of votes-in 1868, and the Myers Automatic Booth was first used in a public election in Lockport, New York, in 1892. The use of similar but much-improved devices soon spread to polling places across the country.

For the better part of a century, most voting machines were lever-operated, and quite cumbersome. Voters had to pull various levers in order to cast their ballots-one lever to open (unlock) the machine, others to indicate their choices of candidates, and yet another to close (lock) the machine and record their votes.

Those lever-operated machines did speed up the voting process; and they reduced both fraud and counting errors. The machines were quite expensive, however, and they also posed major storage and transport problems from one election to the next.

Electronic Vote Counting Electronic data processing (EDP) techniques were first applied to the voting process in the 1960s. California and Oregon led the way and EDP is now a vital part of that process in most States.

For some years, the most widely used adaptations of EDP involved punch-card ballots, counted by computers. But punch-card ballots often produced problems-most frequently because voters failed to make clean punches. Their incomplete perforations left "hanging chads" that made the cards difficult or impossible for computers to read.

Punch-card ballots played a major role in the disputed presidential election vote count in Florida in 2000; and that fiasco led to the passage of the Help America Vote Act of 2002. As we noted on page 194, that law required the elimination of all punch-card voting devices (and all lever-operated voting machines, as well).

Most States have turned to two other EDPbased voting systems. One of them involves the same optical-scanning technology used to grade the standardized tests students take in school. Voters mark their ballots by filling in circles, ovals, or rectangles or by completing arrows. A computer scans the marked ballots, counting and recording the votes cast.

The other system utilizes direct response electronic voting machines (DREs). Those machines are much like ATMs or cash machines. Voters make their choices on most models by touching a screen or, on some, by pushing buttons. Their votes are recorded electronically.

DREs have proved troublesome in many places. Some models have malfunctioned and some do not provide a paper record of voters' choices. Many computer scientists insist that DREs can be easily compromised by hackers. Several States abandoned them for 2008. They turned, instead, to optical-scanning systems or went back to hand-counted paper ballots.

Vote-by-Mail Elections A number of States now conduct at least some of their elections by mail. Voters receive a ballot in the mail, mark them, and mail the ballots back to election officials. The first such election was held in Monterey County, California, in 1977; and the first large-scale use of mail-in ballots took place in San Diego in 1981.

\section*{Debate}
"Part of me thinks inconvenience in voting isn't such a bad thing. People ought to sacrifice a little for our republic. But another part of me says we should move into the 21 st century and increase convenience. "
-blogger writing about attempts to make voting more convenient through early voting and other measures

Use the quotation to begin a debate in your classroom.

To this point, most vote-by-mail elections have been confined to the local level and to voting on city or county measures, not on candidates for local offices. But, recall, as we noted a few pages ago, vote-by-mail is an integral part of the absentee voting process, and voting by absentee ballot is becoming an increasingly common practice in many places.

In fact, one State, Oregon, now holds all of its elections by mail, and it has done so since 1998. That State held the first-ever all-mail primary election and then the first all-mail general election (including the presidential election) in 2000.

Voting by mail has stirred controversy, of course. Critics fear that the process threatens the secret ballot principle. They worry about fraud, especially the possibility that some voters may be subjected to undue pressures when they mark their ballots at home or any place other than a secure voting booth.

Supporters, on the other hand, say that more than ten years of voting by mail in Oregon indicates that that process can be as fraud-proof as any other method of voting. They also make this point: The mail-in process increases voter participation in elections and, at the same time, reduces the costs of conducting them.

Online Voting Online voting-casting ballots via the Internet-has attracted considerable attention and some support in recent years. Will e-voting become widespread, even commonplace, as some predict? Obviously, only time will tell

Online voting is not an entirely new phenomenon. The first e-vote was cast in November 1997. Election officials in Harris County, Texas, allowed astronaut David Wolf to vote in Houston's city election by e-mail from the space station Mir.

The first public election in which some votes were cast by computer was held in 2000, in Arizona's Democratic presidential primary. The Defense Department enabled 84 members of the military stationed abroad to vote electronically in the general election that year, but chose not to repeat or expand the program because of worries about ballot security. Some 46,000 voters ( 28 percent of the turnout) did vote by computer in the Democratic Party's presidential caucuses in Michigan in February of 2004.

A number of public officials and private companies promote online voting. They claim that it will make participation much more convenient, increase voter turnout, and reduce election costs.

Many skeptics believe that the electronic infrastructure is not ready for e-voting. Some fear digital disaster: jammed phone lines, blocked access, hackers, viruses, denial-ofservice attacks, fraudulent vote counts, and violations of voter secrecy. Critics also point out that because not everyone can afford home computers, online voting could undermine the basic American principle of equality.

How successful have vote-by-mail and online voting been?

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer the question: How are elections conducted in the United States?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the Federal Government's role in the administration of elections?
3. What is the role of the precinct in elections?
4. How have ballots changed over time?
5. What factors have complicated the move to automated voting?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Predict Consequences What might happen if people lost confidence that their ballots were being counted and recorded properly?
7. Synthesize Information Present an argument for or against a proposal to use only hand-counted ballots in all elections.

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Essay: Research the Topic Use the Internet or other resources to collect information about the election you chose in Section 1. Gather as much information as you can about the candidates and the balloting. Record your information carefully.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Congressional elections are held the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November of every even-numbered year. Presidential elections are held on the same date every fourth year. Most elections for State offices are held on the same date as national elections. Voters cast secret ballots at their precinct polling place. The precinct election board supervises. Voters may choose to cast absentee ballots or vote early.
2. Congress sets the date for federal elections.

Congress has passed laws to require secret ballots, allow voting machines, protect voting rights, prohibit corrupt practices, and regulate campaign financing.
3. A precinct is a voting district. The precinct election board opens and closes the polls, ensures availability of ballots and ballot boxes or voting devices, makes sure only qualified voters cast ballots, and some count votes.
4. Ballots have changed from slips of paper prepared by voters to paper ballots distributed by parties to adoption of the Australian ballot. Today, most ballots are electronic.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ administration of \\ elections in the \\ United States (Ques- \\ tions 1, 2, 3, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students work in pairs to create a \\ brochure for new voters that gives frequently \\ asked questions about voting, including the \\ role of the federal government, when elec- \\ tions are held, how absentee balloting works, \\ and where people vote.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The significance of \\ different types of bal- \\ lots (Questions 4, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create examples of different \\ types of voting procedures and ballots, with \\ captions explaining the basic strengths and \\ weaknesses of each type.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Issues related to \\ automated voting \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students design the "perfect" voting \\ machine, and describe its key features.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Vote-by-mail is an integral part of the absentee voting process, and voting by absentee ballot is becoming increasingly more common. Online voting has some support now and may become widespread in the future.

\section*{LESSON GOALS}
- Students will examine the issue of money in the electoral process, using a contemporary example.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Ask students to define bribery. (the use of moneyto influence the behavior of a public official) Ask: Why does bribery create problems for a government? (Bribery can influence government to behave in ways that do not benefit the community as a whole. It can also undermine people's faith in government.) Why do elections create a special challenge with regard to bribery and similar types of behaviors? (In elections, candidates need a lot of money, and if elected, they will have the power to grant favors to their contributors.)

\section*{SUMMARIZE THE ISSUE}

Have students read the feature and summarize the issue. Ask them to explain how soft money and attempts to limit it illustrate the tension between protecting the integrity of government and enabling people to take part in politics.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students review the discussion of hard and soft money in Section 3.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students research the role of soft money in elections in recent decades and create a graph showing its rise.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students write and deliver a speech in which they weigh the importance of protecting the right of people to participate in government through campaign contributions with the need to maintain the integrity of the electoral process.

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) Senator McCain argues that unregulated soft money has undermined public confidence in government. (b) Senator McConnell argues that PACs are groups of citizens exercising their constitutional right to join with others to exert collective influence.
2. (a) The appearance of corruption undermines people's faith in government. (b) Possible answer: Government should be free to act if it is possible to demonstrate harm to the public good as a result of the loss of faith in government.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{Money and Elections}

Guiding Question
What role does money play in electoral politics? Use the flow chart to record information about the role of money in electoral politics and the efforts of government to regulate it.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Money} \\
\hline \% & 1 & , \\
\hline Campaign & Fundraising & Regulation \\
\hline Spending & & \\
\hline - & - & - \\
\hline - & - & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline - & - & - \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- political action & - subsidy \\ committee & - hard money \\
(PAC) & - soft money
\end{tabular}

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the issues raised by campaign spending.
2. Describe the various sources of funding for campaign spending
3. Examine federal laws that regulate campaign finance.
4. Outline the role of the Federal Election Commission in enforcing campaign finance laws.
5. Distinguish hard money from soft money.

Image Above: Sen. Russ Feingold (D., Wisconsin) has worked to regulate campaign contributions.

Running for public office costs money-and often quite a lot of it. That fact creates some very real problems. It presents the possibility that candidates will try to buy their way into office. It also makes it possible for special interests to try to buy favors from those who hold office.
Clearly, government by the people must be protected from those dangers But how? Parties and candidates must have money. Without it, they cannot campaign or do any of the many other things they must do to win elections.

In short, dollars are absolutely necessary campaign resources. Yet, the getting and spending of campaign funds can corrupt the entire political process.

\section*{Campaign Spending}

No one really knows how much money is spent on political campaigns in the United States. Remember, there are more than 500,000 elective offices in this country-most of them at the State and particularly the local level. More or ess reliable estimates of total spending in presidential election years-to win nominations and to gain offices at all levels-can be seen in the table on the next page.

The presidential election consumes by far the largest share of campaign dollars. For 2008, total spending for all of the major and minor party presidential efforts-for primaries and caucuses, conventions, campaigns, for every-thing-reached a mind-boggling \($ 2.5\) billion.

The vast sums spent on congressional campaigns also continue to climb, election after election. That spending has doubled over the past decade. A candidate must now raise and spend at least \($ 1\) million in a typical race for a seat in the House. A Senate campaign can cost as much as twenty times that amount. All told, some \($ 1.5\) billion was spent on House and Senate contests in 2008.

Radio and television time, professional campaign managers and consultants, newspaper advertisements, pamphlets, buttons, posters and bumper stickers, office rent, polls, data processing, mass mailings, Web sites, travelthese and a host of other items make up the huge sums spent in campaigns. Television ads are far and away the largest item in most campaign budgets

GUIDING QUESTION
What role does money play in electoral politics?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Money} \\
\hline 7 & & > \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Campaign Spending \\
- campaign managers and consultants \\
- television, radio, newspaper ads \\
- pamphlets, buttons, posters, bumper stickers \\
- office rent \\
- mass mailings \\
- Web sites \\
- travel
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Fundraising \\
- small contributors \\ wealthy contributors \\
- candidates and their families \\
- political appointees \\
- political action committees \\ temporary organizations \\
- fundraising events \\
- mail, telethon, Internet solicitations \\
- public subsidies \\
- contributors often want something in return-appointments, social recognition, certain laws or administrative actions
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Regulation \\
- Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 \\
- FECA Amendments \\
- Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act \\
- Federal Election Commission \\
- no contributions in another's name \\
- cash gifts limited \\
- single campaign committee collects and spends contributions \\
- contributions, loans, or spending of more than $200 must be documented \\
- must report contributions of more than $5,000 \\
- individual contribution limits \\
- public funding for presidential races \\
- if accept public money, can spend no more than amount of the subsidy in general election and cannot accept funds from other sources \\
- soft money loophole
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE MAPS}

To practice analyzing maps in this section, use the Chapter 7 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 148). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after reviewing the Bellriger. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 1 49).

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will.
- consider the potentially corrupting effect of money in politics by analyzing a political cartoon.
- prepare for and carry out a debate on campaign finance reform.
- produce a political cartoon about campaign finance laws.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 142) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 144)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: How do politicians get money to run for office? Brainstorm a list and record it in your notebook.
ELL Differentiate Students who are unfamiliar with electoral financing in this country can list ways that politicians raise money and pay for political campaigns in their countries of origin.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentation at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS THE BELLRINGER}

Tell students that today they will discuss campaign finance. Display Transparency 7C, Political Organization Report of Finances. Ask: Do political organizations have to account for their money? (yes) Then have students share their Bellringer lists with the class. (Possible responses include individual donations, corporate donations, government funding, and funding raised by special interest groups. ) Ask:
What impact does money in government have upon the fairness of government? (Money's prominent role has the potential to make government unfair-by giving power to people who have purchased it rather than earned it through the merit of their ideas.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Charts Rising costs for advertising, especially television ads, have added to the huge sums spent in campaigns.

today, even at the local level. As humorist Will Rogers put it years ago, "You have to be loaded just to get beat."

The total amount spent in particular races varies widely, of course. How much depends on several things: the office involved, the candidate and whether he or she is the incumbent or the challenger, the nature of the opposition, and much moreincluding, not least, the availability of campaign funds.

\section*{Sources of Funding}

Parties and their candidates draw their money from two basic sources: private contributors and the public treasury.

Private and Public Sources Private givers have always been the major source of campaign funds in American politics. They come in various shapes and sizes:
1. Small contributors-those who give \($ 5\) or \($ 10\) or so, and only occasionally. Only about 10 percent of people of voting age ever make a campaign contribution, so parties and candidates must look to other places for much of their funding
2. Wealthy individuals and families-the "fat cats," who can make large donations and find it in their best interest to do so.
3. Candidates-both incumbents and challengers, their families, and, importantly, people who hold and want to keep appointive public offices. Ross Perot holds the all-time record in this category. He spent some \($ 65\) million of his own money on his independent bid for the presidency in 1992.
4. Various nonparty groups-especially political action committees (PACs). Political action committees are the political arms of special-interest groups and other organizations with a stake in electoral politics.
5. Temporary organizations-groups formed for the immediate purposes of a campaign, including fundraising. Hundreds of these short-lived units spring up every two years, and at every level in American politics.

Then, too, parties and their candidates often hold fundraisers of various sorts. The most common are \($ 100-, $ 500\)-, and \($ 1,000-\) a-plate luncheons, dinners, picnics, receptions, and similar gatherings. Some of these events now reach the \($ 100,000\)-or-more level in presidential campaigns. Direct mail requests, telethons, and Internet solicitations are also among the oft-used tools of those who raise campaign money.

Over recent years, the Internet has become, by far, the most productive of those tools. Often, donations spiked immediately after an important speech or primary election victory or when the candidate challenged donors to give. Web sites including Daily Kos and Act Blue identified and profiled congressional candidates for their readers to support.

Public funds-subsidies from the federal and some State treasuries-are now another prime source of campaign money. A subsidy is a grant of money, usually from a government. Subsidies have so far been most important at the presidential level, as you will see shortly. Several States also provide some form of public funding of parties and/or candidacies.

Why People Give Campaign donations are a form of political participation. Those who

\section*{21_MAG09se_Ch07_s3.indd 202}

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 7, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 142)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 144)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 146)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 148)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 149)
L3 Quiz A (p. 150) L2 Quiz B (p. 151)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 152)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 155)

donate do so for a number of reasons. Many small donors give simply because they believe in a party or in a candidate. Many of those who give, however, want something in return. They want access to government, and hope to get it by helping their "friends" win elections. And, notice, some contributors give to both sides in a contest: Heads they win and tails they still win.

Some big donors want appointments to public office, and others want to keep the ones they have. Some long for social recognition. For them, dinner at the White House, meeting with a Cabinet official, or knowing the governor on a first-name basis may be enough. Organized labor, business, professional, and various other groups have particular policy aims. They want certain laws passed, changed, or repealed, or certain administrative actions taken.

\section*{Regulating Finance}

Congress first began to regulate the use of money in federal elections in 1907. In that year, it became unlawful for any corporation or national bank to make "a money contribution in any election" to candidates for federal office. Since then, Congress has passed several laws to regulate the use of money in presidential and congressional campaigns. Today, these regulations are found in four detailed laws: the Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA) of 1971, the FECA Amendments of 1974 and of 1976, and the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002.

The earliest federal laws were loosely drawn, not often obeyed, and almost never enforced. The 1971 law replaced them. The 1974 law was the major legislative response to the Watergate scandal of the Nixon years. The 1976 law was passed in response to a landmark Supreme Court decision, Buckley v. Valeo, in 1976. The 2002 law attempted to close the "soft-money" loophole in the 1974 and 1976 statutes; it was upheld by the High Court in McConnell v. FEC in 2003.

Congress does not have the power to regulate the use of money in State and local
. GOVERNMENT ONLINE

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}
alternate lesson plan Have students conduct a mock election for a local, State, or congressional office. First ask students to work in pairs or small groups to conduct research on the candidates and the important issues in the race. Encourage students to contact candidates' headquarters and to conduct voter and campaign worker interviews. After they have completed their research, divide students into teams of supporters for the candidates of their choice and help each team devise a campaign strategy for their candidate. Finish with a class election.

To see this lesson plan, go to

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Tell students that the potentially corrupting role of money in government is a not a new issue in American politics. To help illustrate this point, display Transparency 7D, Bosses of the Senate, which is a political cartoon from 1889. Ask: Who is standing in the back row? (trusts, which are large and wealthy business organizations) Who is sitting in the front row? (United States senators) Why do you think the people in the back are shown as so much larger than the people in the front? (Their size suggests their wealth and also their domination of the smaller people in the Senate.) What point is the artist making about the relationship between the people in the back and the people in the front? (The wealthy trusts dominate the Senate.)

\section*{ELL Differentiate Tell students that trusts} are large business organizations that are set up to dominate entire industries.

\section*{DESCRIBE THE DILEMMA}

Tell students that money creates a dilemma for our democratic system of government. Point out that elections today are very costly, so candidates need access to a lot of money to mount a successful campaign. In other words, money is an integral part of our electoral system. It also is a way for citizens to get involved with their government. Ask: How might a citizen use money as a way of getting involved with politics and government? (A citizen can make contributions to candidates he or she supports and help them win elections. ) At the same time, the role of money introduces the potential for corruption. Ask: How might money have a corrupting influence on government? (Candidates might offer to do favors in return for campaign contributions. A candidate with a lot of money might use it to buyvotes or otherwise improperly influence an election. ) Tell students that government has sought to address the dilemma by placing some limits on how campaign money is raised and spent. Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the diagram "A Trickle Becomes a Flood. "

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint from private sources (small contributors, weal thy persons, candidates themselves, political action committees, and temporary organizations) and from public funds (subsidies)
A Trickle Becomes a Flood Possible response: They probably did not receive as much funding from traditional funding sources as did the party's favored candidates.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Divide the class into two teams, Team 1 and Team 2. Within each team, create a Group A and a Group B. Then distribute the Chapter 7 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 146), which asks students to explore and debate the two sides of the issue of campaign finance reform. Have students read the excerpts and complete the assignment for their particular group and team. Then have students engage in a structured debate. Each team will have four minutes to present their main argument. After each team's presentation, the other team will have one minute to prepare and two minutes to deliver a rebuttal to the opening argument. Tell students to take notes on the other team's main arguments. Distribute the Debate worksheets, available in the Teacher Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com, to help students organize their thoughts.
L1 L2 Differentiate Assign L1 and L2 students to investigate arguments for their own side.

Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive view of campaign spending.

\section*{Answers}

Rising Campaign Costs Television ads are far and away the largest item in most campaign budgets, reflecting candidates' desire to be seen by voters.
elections. Every State now regulates at least some aspects of campaign finance, how-ever-some of them more effectively than others. \({ }^{15}\)

\section*{Federal Election Commission}

The Federal Election Commission (FEC) administers all federal law dealing with campaign finance. Set up by Congress in 1974, the FEC is an independent agency in the executive branch. Its six members are appointed by the President, with Senate confirmation.

Federal campaign finance laws are both strongly worded and closely detailed. But they are not very well enforced. In large part this is because the FEC has been both underfunded and understaffed. That is to say, members of Congress-who, remember, raise and spend campaign money-have made it practically impossible for the FEC to do an effective job.

\footnotetext{
15 State campaign finance laws are summarized in The Book of the States, an annual publication of the Council of State Governments.
}

In short, the FEC finds itself in a situation much like that of the chickens who must guard the fox house.

The laws that the FEC is supposed to enforce cover four broad areas. They (1) require the timely disclosure of campaign finance data, (2) place limits on campaign contributions, (3) place limits on campaign expenditures, and (4) provide public funding for several parts of the presidential election process.

Disclosure Requirements Congress first required the reporting of certain campaign finance information in 1910 . Today, the disclosure requirements are intended to spotlight the place of money in federal campaigns. Those requirements are so detailed that most candidates for federal office must now include at least one certified public accountant in their campaign organization.

No individual or group can make a contribution in the name of another. Cash gifts of more than \($ 100\) are prohibited, as are contributions and spending from foreign sources.

\section*{Rising Campaign Costs}

Candidates are raising and spending more money than ever, and no office demands more than the Presidency. John McCain and Barack Obama set new spending records in 2008, as data averaged from both campaigns for the month of September indicate. How does campaign

204 The Electoral Process

\section*{Background}
the federal election commission The Federal Election Commission (FEC) is the agency responsible for administering and enforcing federal laws about financing federal elections. Congress established the agency in 1975. It is a so-called independent and nonpartisan commission. Though its six members are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, they serve fixed terms (of six years), and by law no more than three members can belong to the same political party. The terms of the commissioners are staggered so that only two seats are open every two years. Leadership of the commission also rotates among the members.

All contributions to a candidate for federal office must be made through a single campaign committee. Only that committee can spend that candidate's campaign money. All contributions and spending must be closely accounted for by that one committee. Any contribution or loan of more than $200 must be identified by source and by date. Any spending over \($ 200\) must also be identified by the name of the person or firm to whom payment was made, by date, and by purpose.

Any contribution of more than \($ 5,000\) must be reported to the FEC no later than 48 hours after it is received. So, too, must any sum of \($ 1,000\) or more is received in the last 20 days of a campaign.

Limits on Contributions Congress first began to regulate campaign contributions in 1907, when it outlawed donations by corporations and national banks. A similar ban was first applied to labor unions in 1943. Individual contributions have been regulated since 1939.

Today, no person can give more than \($ 2,300\) to any federal candidate in a primary election, and no more than \($ 2,300\) to any federal candidate's general election campaign. Also, no person can give more than \($ 5,000\) in any year to a political action committee (PAC), or \($ 28,500\) to a national party committee. The total of any person's contributions to federal candidates and committees now must be limited to no more than \($ 108,200\) in an election cycle (the two years from one general election to the next one). The FEC adjusts those figures, to account for inflation, every two years.

Those limits may seem generous; in fact, they are very tight. Before limits were imposed in 1974, many wealthy individuals gave far larger amounts. In 1972, for example, W. Clement Stone, a Chicago insurance executive, contributed more than \($ 2\) million (equal to more than \($ 20\) million in today's money) to President Richard Nixon's reelection campaign.

PAC Contributions Neither corporations nor labor unions can contribute to any candidate running for a federal office. Their political action committees, however, can and do.

Political action committees (PACs) seek to affect the making of public policy, and so they are very interested in the outcome of elections in the United States. More than 4,000 PACs are active today, and those organizations are of two distinct types:
1. Most PACs are the political arms of special interest groups-and especially of business associations, labor unions, and professional organizations. These groups are known in the law as "segregated fund committees." They can raise funds only from their mem-bers-from the executives, the employees, and the stockholders of a corporation, from the members of a labor union, and so on. They cannot seek contributions from the general public. Each of these PACs is a part of its parent organization.

BIPAC (the Business-Industry Political Action Committee) and COPE (the AFLCIO's Committee on Political Education) are among the best known and most active of these groups.
2. A few hundred PACs are "unconnected committees." Each of them was established as an independent entity, not as a unit in some larger organization. Many are ideologically based. These PACs can raise money from the public at large. One major example is EMILY's List, which very actively recruits and funds pro-choice women as Democratic candidates. (The group takes its name from this political maxim: Early Money Is Like Yeast, it makes the dough rise.)

PACs fill their war chests with contributions from the members of the PAC's parent organization or with the dollars they raise from the public. They "bundle" the money they gather-that is, each PAC pools its many contributions into a single large fund. Then they distribute that money to those candidates who (1) are sympathetic to the PAC's policy goals, and (2) have a reasonable chance of winning their races.

No PAC can give more than \($ 5,000\) to any one federal candidate in an election, or \($ 10,000\) per election cycle (primary and general election). However, there is no overall limit on PAC giving to candidates. Each PAC can give up to \($ 5,000\) per election to each of as many candidates as it chooses. A PAC may also contribute up to \($ 15,000\) a year to a political party.

PACs put hundreds of millions of dollars into the presidential and congressional

\section*{DEBRIEF}

Review the debate activity with the class. Invite students from opposing teams to give their thoughts about which opposing arguments were most effective. Were any arguments left out?

\section*{FOLLOW UP THE ACTIVITY}

Have students create an editorial cartoon that expresses one of the points of view presented in the debate. The cartoon should include an image and a caption. Student should be able to explain the elements and features of their cartoon.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students work in teams to come up with a design for their cartoon.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students create a cartoon for both points of view.

\section*{Background}

WATERGATE AND CAMPAIGN FINANCE LAWS The Watergate scandal of 1972-1974 ultimately led to the resignation of President Richard Nixon. As it unfolded, Congress and the public learned of a host of corrupt campaign practices used by Nixon's reelection team. For example, the campaign sought and used large, illegal corporate donations to create secret "slush funds," which were then used to pay for other illegal activities-including an attempt to break into and bug Democratic National Committee headquarters and subsequent attempts to cover up the crime. Some campaign donors were alleged to have received ambassadorships or other government favors. In the aftermath of this scandal, Congress established the basic laws that govern campaign financing today.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint administers all federal law dealing with campaign finance

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}Have students research and write a short essay on the following topic: How might the Internet change political fundraising and campaigning in the future? Students should include details from recent elections to support their argument.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students locate information on the total amount of money raised by the most recent presidential candidates via the Internet.Differentiate Have students include in their essays historical information about the role of the Internet in politics, using data from the earliest days of Internet fundraising.

\(\Delta\) Governor Mitt Romney (R., Massachusetts) promoted his 2008 presidential campaign with a widely publicized telephone fundraiser. Why is the ability to raise money from contributors an advantage for candidates?
campaigns in 2008. They funneled untold other millions into State and local contests as well.

Limits on Expenditures Congress first began to limit federal campaign spending in 1925. Most of the limits now on the books apply only to presidential (not congressional) elections. This fact is due mostly to the Supreme Court's decision in Buckley v. Valeo, 1976.

In Buckley, the High Court struck down all but one of the spending limits set by the FECA Amendments of 1974. It held each of the other restrictions to be contrary to the 1 st Amendment's guarantees of free expression. In effect, said the Court, in politics "money is speech."

The one limit the Court did uphold is a cap on spending by those presidential contenders who accept FEC subsidies for their preconvention and/or their general election campaigns. As you will see in a moment, those who seek the presidency can either accept or reject that public money for their campaigns. In Buckley, the Court said that those who take the subsidies must take a spending limit along with them, as part of their deal with the FEC. \({ }^{16}\)

Public Funding for Presidential Campaigns Congress first began to provide for the public funding of presidential campaigns in the Revenue Act of 1971 . It broadened sections of that law in 1974 and again in 1976.

The 1971 law created the Presidential Election Campaign Fund. Every person who files a federal income tax return can "check off" (assign) three dollars of his or her tax bill (six dollars on a joint return) to the fund. The money in the fund is used every four years to subsidize preconvention campaigns (including the primary campaigns), national conventions, and presidential election campaigns. The FEC administers the various subsidies involved.

Preconvention Campaigns. Presidential primary and caucus campaigns are supported by private contributions and, if the candidate applies for them, the public money he or she receives from the FEC. To be eligible for the public funds, a contender must raise at least \($ 100,000\) in contributions from individuals (not organizations). That amount must be gathered in \($ 5,000\) lots in each of at least 20 States, with each lot built from individual donations of no more than \($ 250\). That convoluted requirement is meant to discourage frivolous candidacies.

For each presidential hopeful who passes that test and applies for the subsidy, the FEC will match the first \($ 250\) of each individual contribution to the candidate, up to a total of half of the overall limit on preconvention spending. So, in 2008, the FEC could give a contender about \($ 21\) million, because the preconvention ceiling was slightly more than \($ 42\) million. The FEC does not match contributions from PACs or from any other political organizations.

In 2008, Senator John McCain spent about \($ 100\) million to win the GOP nomina-tion-some \($ 7\) million of it from the FEC. Senator Barack Obama, on the other hand, refused the public money. He raised and 16 Until 2008, only a handful of major party aspirants refused the public money. George W. Bush, in 2000 and again in 2004, and his Democratic opponent in 2004, John Kerry, won nomination his Democratic opponent in 2004, John Kerry, won nomination without the public money. However, both Bush and Kerry did take the FEC funds for their general election campaigns.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}
buckley v. valeo The Supreme Court ruling in Buckley v. Valeo, 1976, was important in several respects. It upheld Congress' right to set limits on individual contributions to political campaigns. Here the Court reasoned that the government's interest in maintaining the integrity of government was strong enough to support limiting the freedom of speech-that is, the spending of money for political purposes. However, the Court ruled that Congress could not limit how much of his or her own money a candidate could spend. Neither could Congress set a cap on the total amount a campaign spends. The Court reasoned that spending personal money or simply spending more for a campaign did not inherently threaten the integrity of government. Therefore, Congress did not have a strong enough basis for limiting 1 st Amendment freedoms.

\section*{Answers}

Caption To be eligible for public funds, candidates must raise at least \($ 100,000\) in contributions from individuals.
spent more than \($ 230\) million in private contributions in his campaign for the Democratic Party's nomination. \({ }^{17}\)

National Conventions. If a major party applies for the money, it automatically receives a grant to help pay for its national convention. The FEC gave the Republicans and the Democrats \($ 16.4\) million each for that purpose in 2008.

Presidential Election Campaigns. Each major party nominee automatically qualifies for a public subsidy to pay for the general election campaign. For 2008, that subsidy was \($ 84.1\) million. A candidate can refuse that funding, of course, and, in that event, be free to raise however much he or she can from private sources.

Until 2008, the nominees of both major parties took the public money each time. Because they did, each (1) could spend no more than the amount of the subsidy in the general election campaign and (2) could not accept campaign funds from any other source.

For 2008, only Republican John McCain ran with the FEC money and so could spend only that \($ 84.1\) million in the fall campaign. The Republican National Committee, other party organizations, and several independent groups also backed the McCain effort, how-ever-to the tune of some \($ 210\) million.

Barack Obama, on the other hand, became the first presidential nominee in the 32 -year history of the program to reject the public money. He raised and spent more than \($ 300\) million on his successful ten-week postconvention campaign.

The fact that several contenders, in both parties, rejected the FEC money for their preconvention campaigns and Senator Obama's abstention for the general election have led many to predict the collapse of the public funding arrangements in federal law. That development is a direct result of two major factors: (1) a continuing decline in the number of taxpayers willing to contribute to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund and, especially, (2) the continuing and accelerating rise in the costs of campaigning.

The massive effect of that second factor, soaring costs, on the whole matter of campaign

17 His chief opponent for the Democratic nomination, Senator Hillary Clinton, also refused FEC funds. She raised and spent nearly \($ 200\) million in her unsuccessful bid.
finance and its regulation can be seen in this stunning fact: For 2008, just one item, television advertising, accounted for at least \($ 300\) million in presidential campaign spending.

A minor party's candidate can also qualify for the FEC funding, but none does so automatically. For a minor party nominee to be eligible, his or her party must either (1) have won at least five percent of the popular vote in the last presidential election, or (2) win at least that much of the total vote in the current election. Since 1972, only Ross Perot in 1992 and 1996 has come even close to qualifying.

In the latter case, the public money is received after the election and so could not possibly help the candidate win votes in that election. (Remember, many provisions in both federal and State election law are purposely drawn to discourage the efforts of minor party and independent candidacies.)

\section*{Hard Money, Soft Money}

More than 40 years ago, President Lyndon Johnson described the then-current body of

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

MCCONNELL V. FEC The Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act's limits on soft money were examined by the Supreme Court in McConnell v. FEC, 2003. In a narrow 5-4 ruling, the Court held that Congress' desire to prevent the perceived or real corruption of candidates was a legitimate reason to limit the 1 st Amendment exercise of spending soft money.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing a Debate (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 258).

Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 150)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 151)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint through public subsidies, party organizations, independent groups, and private contributions
Hard Money and Soft Money In the 1980s and 1990s, major parties exploited the soft-money loophole into a torrent of money, resulting in the need for the reform of campaign finance laws. Although such laws as the BCRA have been enacted, loopholes still remain.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ importance and \\ sources of money \\
in electoral politics \\
(Questions 1, 2, 4, \\
\(6,7)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Assign student pairs to read and create \\ quizzes for the two sections on "Campaign \\ Spending" and "Sources of Funding." Then \\ have them exchange their quizzes with each \\
other.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The history of efforts \\ to control campaign \\ financing (Questions \\
\(3,7)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a timeline of major \\ events in the history of campaign finance \\ regulation, using material from the section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The difference be- \\ tween hard and soft \\ money (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a script for a television \\ commercial that uses hard money and soft \\ money.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
federal campaign finance law as "more loophole than law." Over recent years, we have come dangerously close to the point where LBJ's description can be applied to the federal election money statutes of today-particularly because of soft money.

Since the 1970s, federal law has placed limits on hard money-that is, those contributions that are given directly to candidates for their campaigns for Congress or the White House, are limited in amount, and must be reported. That kind of campaign money is usually more difficult to raise than soft money-funds given to parties or to other political organizations, in unlimited amounts, to be used for such "party-building activities" as voter registration or get-out-thevote drives or for campaigns for or against particular public policies, for example, gun control or minimum wage hikes.

Both major parties began to raise soft money (began to exploit the soft-money loophole) in the 1980s, and they intensified their efforts in the 1990s. The Republican and Democratic National Committees and their House and Senate campaign committees gathered millions of unregulated dollars from wealthy individuals, labor unions, corporations, and other interest groups. Officially, those funds were to be used for partybuilding purposes; but both parties found it easy to filter them into their presidential and congressional campaigns.

The torrent of money rushing through the soft-money loophole rose from about \($ 19\) million in 1980 to some \($ 500\) million in 2000. Those huge numbers have convinced a great many people that the nations campaign finance laws are in serious need of reform. As a step in that direction, Congress finally enacted the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act (the BCRA) of 2002 after years of debate and delay. The measure is also known as the McCain-Feingold Law, after its chief Senate sponsors.

The BCRA was aimed principally at the soft-money problem. It bans soft-money contributions to political parties. But the law does not say that other political organizations cannot raise and spend those dollars.

Almost immediately, a number of independent groups-organizations with no formal ties to any party-sprang up to do just that. In short, creative minds in both parties quickly found ways to skirt the ban on soft money. Some \($ 200\) million poured through that loophole in 2004 and even more for the congressional elections of 2006 and the presidential campaigns in 2008.

Many of these independent organizations are known as " 527 s ," after the section in the Internal Revenue code under which they operate as tax-free entities. In 2008, Senator Obama initially discouraged the help of 527 organizations, while his opponent, Republican Senator John McCain encouraged that help.

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}

To continue to build a response to the chapter
Essential Questions
Journal Essential Question, go to your
Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your com pleted chart to answer the question What role does money play in electoral politics?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Why do people contribute to political campaigns?
3. What are the four ways in which the FEC attempts to regulate the role of money in campaigns?
4. What are political action committees, and what is their role in the political process?
5. What is the difference between hard money and soft money?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Summarize Why do the huge amounts of money required for most political campaigns concern many observers?
7. Identify Central Issues The Supreme Court has ruled that "Money is speech." What does this observation mean for efforts to regulate and limit donations and spending in political campaigns?

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Essay: Write a Thesis Statement A thesis statement sets out what, specifically, you will cover in your essay. Write a thesis statement for an explanatory essay about the election you chose in Section 1.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Money is necessary to conduct a campaign Its sources include private contributions and public financing. Government has tried to regulate the collection and spending of money for elections. Contributors and parties have found ways around the regulations.
2. People contribute to express their belief in a candidate or party, for social status, to influence policy, or to get something in return.
3. The FEC oversees disclosure of campaign finance data, contribution and expenditure limits, and public funding for presidential elections.
4. Political action committees are political arms of special interest groups and other organizations with a stake in electoral politics. They seek to influence elections as a means of affecting public policy.
5. Hard money is given directly to candidates for their campaigns. It is limited and must be reported. Soft money is given to parties or other political organizations for party-building or for policy campaigns. It is unlimited and represents a loophole through which unregulated money can enter the political process.
6. Money, which is so essential to a successful campaign, has the potential to enable contributors to buy influence and wealthy candidates to buy their way into office.
7. Freedom of speech is protected in the Bill of Rights. If campaign contributions and spending are forms of speech, then government may not impose undue limits on these activities.
QUICK WRITE Thesis statements should clearly identify the essay's main point and content.

Path to Elected Office
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Nominating Candidates } & \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Electing Candidates } \\
\hline Self-announcement & Elections administered by \\ Caucus & State and local goverments \\
Conventions & Some federal oversight \\
Direct Primary & Citizens vote by mail or at \\ Closed Primary & polling places \\
Open Primary & Paper ballots and electronic \\ Petition & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary} nomination p. 184 general election \(p .185\) caucus p. 185 direct primary \(p .187\) closed primary p. 188 open primary p. 188 blanket primary p. 189 runoff primary p. 190 nonpartisan election p. 190 ballot p. 194 absentee voting p. 195 coattail effect \(p .195\) precinct p. 195 polling place \(p .195\) political action committee (PAC) p. 202 subsidy p. 202 hard money \(p .208\) soft money p. 208

Regulating Gampaign Finance
Contributions by individuals and groups are protected by 1st and groups are protected by 1 imendment guarantee of free speech

Direct contributions by unions and corporations to campaigns are illegal

Federal campaigns must record donations and report regularly to Federal Election Commission

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about voting, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Giddens-White, Bryon. National Elections and the Political Process. Heinemann, 2005.

L2 Kallen, Stuart A., ed. Are American Elections Fair? Greenhaven Press, 2006.
L3 Maisel, L. Sandy. American Political Parties and Elections: A Very Short Introduction. Oxford University Press, USA, 2007.
4 Thurber, James A. and Candice J. Nelson. Campaigns and Elections American Style, 2d edition. Westview Press, 2004.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Making and Keeping a Schedule Schedules are indispensable tools for staying focused, getting things done, and not letting obligations or important tasks slip through the cracks. Suggest to students that they use a large monthly calendar for long-terms items, such as test dates and project due dates. A separate weekly or even daily schedule should list every hour in the day. On this schedule, students should first block out time for those commitments that are inflexible, such as class time, work schedules, or practices. The time left each day is their "free time," which must be used for meals, studying, errands, relaxation and everything else. Explain that the more detailed and realistic a schedule is, the more useful it will be.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 2 All-in-One Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 2 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 190, 198
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) Nomination is the process of selecting candidates who will appear on the ballot in the general election. (b) The two-party system means that nomination is the step at which voters are likely to have the largest number of choices-or in some cases, the only meaningful choice.
2. (a) Originally, caucuses were practical. Transportation and communications were difficult. As democracy spread, citizens criticized caucuses for being undemocratic. The caucus system died after a boycott of a party caucus led to the nomination of a weak candidate in the election of 1824 .
(b) At first, the convention system seemed like a good choice for a representative government. Party members would meet locally to select candidates for local offices and choose delegates to a county convention. County delegates would choose State delegates, and so on. However, party bosses manipulated delegate selection and soon dominated the entire system. By the 1910s, the direct primary had replaced the convention in most States.
3. (a) Political parties use primaries to choose their candidates for the general election.
(b) A party might object to a blanket primary because voters who are not members of the party would participate in choosing the party's candidates. (c) Possible responses: Closed primaries are fair because they prevent one party from raiding the other's primary to nominate a weak candidate. Closed primaries also help make candidates responsive to the party and require voters to think about party differences. OR: Closed primaries are not fair because they compromise secrecy of the ballot by requiring voters to declare a party preference. Also, closed primaries tend to exclude independent voters.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) Federal election laws establish when federal elections will occur, require the use of secret ballots in federal elections, allow the use of voting machines, protect the right to vote, prohibit various corrupt practices, and regulate election financing. (b) The goal of regulation is to assure free, honest, and accurate elections.
5. (a) intimidation of voters and vote buying (b) The Australian ballot is printed at public

17 Chapter Assessment

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) What is the essential difference between the nominating and the election stages in the political process? (b) Explain why the two-party system makes the nominating process especially significant.
2. (a) What factors led to the convention replacing the caucus as a widely used nominating method? (b) How well did the convention method succeed in improving upon the caucus method?
3. (a) What is the role of political parties in primary elections? (b) Why do you think a political party might object to the use of a blanket primary? (c) Are closed primaries a fair way to nominate candidates? Explain.

\section*{Section 2}
4. (a) Provide three examples of areas in which the Federal Government has established election law. (b) What are the goals of the Federal Government in regulating elections?
5. (a) What are some of the problems that the secret ballot is designed to prevent? (b) How did the Australian ballot improve the voting process?
6. (a) Why do you think there has been an interest in automating the voting process in recent times? (b) What are the possible benefits and drawbacks of voting via the Internet? (c) Do the advantages of voting via the Internet outweigh its drawbacks? Explain.

\section*{Section 3}
7. (a) What factors affect how much money is spent in a political campaign? (b) How do campaign contributions help candidates running for office? (c) Does the private rather than the public financing of campaigns make elections more effective? Why or why not?
8. (a) The Supreme Court has held that campaign contributions are a form of political speech. Explain why you agree or disagree. (b) Why was this ruling significant?
9. Analyzing Political Cartoons The cartoon below was drawn following the 2008 Democratic presidential primaries in which Sen. Obama defeated Sen. Clinton. (a) Why is Sen Obama holding a sign reading "Unity"? (b) What does this cartoon say about primary rivalries?

Writing About Government
10. Use the Quick Write exercises from this chapter to complete a 3-5 paragraph explanatory essay that describes and explains the key steps and features of the election you selected. See pages S9-10 of the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
11. Essential Question Activity Prepare an outine for each side of a debate about the topic: Money is essential to the electoral process.
(a) Develop a compelling argument both for and against the statement.
(b) Describe existing efforts to regulate the role of money in elections.
(c) Identify the main sources of campaign funding and analyze the impact each source has on elections.
(d) Analyze the potential effects of removing all money from the political process, or, alternatively, removing all regulation of money.
12. Essential Question Assessment After you have considered and written about both sides of the question about the role of money in government, write a brief essay explaining your own views on the role of money in the electoral process today. Your essay should help you answer the Essential Question: How fair and effective is the electoral process?

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ & \text { Question, go to your Essential }\end{aligned}\) \\ Journal Question, go to you}

210 Chapter 7 Assessment
expense, lists the name of all candidates, is given out only at the polls, and is marked in secret. This type of ballot reduces party pressure on voters and corrupt practices.
6. (a) Thanks to new technologies, automation can make voting faster and easier, and it may offer the opportunity for greater accuracy and security. (b) Benefits include ease of voting and cost savings. Drawbacks include the potential for fraudulent vote counts, blocked access, hackers, viruses, denial of service attacks, and violations of voter secrecy. (c) Possible response: No. The infrastructure for online voting is not yet capable of ensuring fair and accurate elections. OR: Yes, the potential problems with Internet voting are no greater than those present in more traditional methods, and the benefits are clear.

\section*{SECTION 3}
7. (a) Factors include the office, the candidate, whether he or she is the incumbent, and the availability of funds. (b) Candidates need money to buy advertising, hire staff and consultants, rent office space, maintain Web sites, travel to campaign events, and send mass mailings.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Nominating Candidates in Our Electoral System}

Nominating candidates to run for office is a function of political parties. It is also a key step in the democratic process. This dual quality of the nominating process can create tension, as the party's wishes and the voice of the people do not always agree.

\section*{Document 1}

Tonight, after fifty-four hard-fought contests, our primary season has finally come to an end. Sixteen months have passed since we first stood together on the steps of the Old State Capitol in Springfield, Illinois. Thousands of miles have been traveled. Millions of voices have been heard.
There are those who say that this primary has somehow left us weaker and more divided. Well I say that because of this primary, there are millions of Americans who have cast their ballot for the very first time.
-Sen. Barack Obama, June 3, 2008

\section*{Document 2}

President [George H.W.] Bush received a jarring political message in the New Hampshire primary today, scoring a less-than-impressive victory over Patrick J. Buchanan, the conservative commentator. . .
The signal to Mr. Bush was unmistakable. Even though Mr. Buchanan's support represented more than 63,000 actual votes, it amounted to a roar of anger from those who voted in the Republican primary, and it showed the power of a "send a message" campaign against him in times of economic distress.
Republicans loyal to Mr. Bush tried to play down the results. . . . But there was alarm in the White House.
-The New York Times, February 19, 1992
1. B
2. As the incumbent, George H. W. Bush should have expected to receive more support and less of a challenge from within his own party.
3. Possible response: The process was democratic because the delegates had a chance to make their choice but failed. OR: The process of having a small group of people in a hotel room decide the nomination is clearly not democratic.
4. Possible response: Party officials and candidates would like to see the process produce a quick and clear result that does not divide the party or hint at disagreement. Voters naturally vote for their favorites, even though it might make other candidates and the party leaders uncomfortable.

\section*{L2} Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.

L3Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

\section*{Document 3}

Senator Harding's nomination was the outcome of a complex situation that did not begin to clear until last evening. After four ineffective ballots yesterday the convention had adjourned until this morning. Four additional ballots in the forenoon and early afternoon of today had developed Harding strength, but General Leonard Wood and Governor Frank O. Lowden had remained in the lead. . .
Interesting, and even thrilling, as the open proceedings in the convention were, moves behind the scenes, of which most of the convention knew nothing, had their dramatic side. The nomination of the candidate for President was arranged in conferences in hotel rooms.
-The New York Times, June 12, 1920

Use your knowledge of the nominating process and Documents 1, 2, and 3 to answer Questions 1-3.
1. According to Barack Obama in Document 1, which of the following is not an advantage of the primary process?
A. The candidates competed in many States across the country.
B. Primaries divided the party and upset many voters.
C. Primaries brought millions of new voters into the nomination process
D. The candidates met many voters in their travels.
2. In Document 2, why do you think the message received by President Bush was so jarring?
3. Does the nominating process described in Document 3 seem democratic? Explain your answer.
4. Pull It Together How do the interests of voters and the interests of party officials sometimes come into conflict during the nomination process?

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.

Yes, because private financing enables citizens to participate in the election process. OR: No, because private financing enables weal thy donors, corporations, and special interests to buy influence.
8. (a) Possible response: I agree. Supporting a candidate financially is a way for citizens to express their political preferences. (b) The ruling applied constitutional protection to political donations, limiting the ability of Congress to regulate campaign financing.
9. (a) Sen. Obama wanted the Democratic party to unite behind his candidacy. (b) Primary rivalries can be intense. Once the candidate has been chosen, the party needs to come together to ensure that candidate's success.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
10. Students should use their Quick Write exercises from this chapter to complete a three-to-five-paragraph explanatory essay explains the key steps and features of the election they selected. See pages WH9-10 of the Writing Handbook.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
11. Student outlines should contain arguments for each side and contain all required elements.
12. Essays should express students' own views on the importance of money in the electoral process, and should explain how their view of financing promotes fair and effective elections.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 2}

In what ways should people participate in public affairs?

\section*{CHAPTER 8}

What is the place of the media and public opinion in a democracy?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the photo and quotation suggest about the impact of the media? (The media play a major role in providing information about a wide range of topics, but what people really understand depends on their evaluation and use of that information. ) In this chapter, students will learn about how public opinion is formed and measured, and the media's influence on it. Tell students to further explore public opinion and the media by completing the Chapter 8 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 8 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 169)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DIGITAL AGE LITERACY}

You may wish to teach digital age literacy as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 8 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 194) to help students learn about digital age literacy. The worksheet asks students to visit a political and current affairs blog, identify possible bias, and verify information. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 195).

\footnotetext{
WebQuest
online The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the media.
}

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach all of the Section 1 lesson plan and the Bellringer and Core Worksheet Activity in the Section 2 lesson plan.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 lesson plan in its entirety.

OUTDOOR E TRIAL ONL'ALPE
 ND. JAPAN. AND Bu OUR DE FRANCES

What the public knows about politics and government is the result of what the media do, what the politicians do, and what use the public makes of the resulting information.
-Guido H. Stempel III, Media and Politics in America

8

\section*{Mass Media and Public Opinion}

Essential Question
What is the place of the media and public opinion in a democracy?

Section 1:
The Formation of Public Opinion
Section 2:
Measuring Public Opinion
Section 3:
The Mass Media

\footnotetext{
Photo: Onlookers watch the news in Times Square, New York City.
}

\section*{Pressed for Time}

To cover the chapter quickly, review the Section 1 Reading Comprehension Worksheet. Then have students complete Part 1 of the Section 1 Core Worksheet, in which they explain various influences on public opinion. Discuss which influences students consider most important and ask them to explain the reasons behind their choices. Then discuss any polls that students have seen in the media and explain that polls, when conducted properly, are the best way to measure public opinion. Have students examine "Questions to Ask About Polls" in Section 2 and ask them to explain why these questions are important in evaluating a poll's accuracy. List the various types of media on the board (newspapers, television, the Internet, radio, and magazines) and discuss their role in students' lives. Then use the cartoons in text Section 3 to discuss the influence of the media on politics and public opinion.

\section*{GOVERNMENT ONLINE}

On the Go
To study anywhere, anytime, download these online resources at PearsonSuccessNet.com
- Political Dictionary
- Audio Review
- Downloadable Interactivities

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- discuss the concept of public opinion and its place in a democracy.
- explain how key factors influence public opinion by completing a chart.
- identify and explain their opinions on five public issues.
- explore the roots of their opinions by ranking their sources of influence on the five public issues.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- examine the significance of how polling questions are worded and practice writing good polling questions.
- understand the importance of scientific polling by examining a poll on issues of concern to voters in a recent presidential election.
- evaluate the accuracy and usefulness of polls by examining a famous photograph.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- understand the impact of the Internet as a political medium by examining study findings.
- evaluate the use of the Internet for electoral politics by analyzing a candidate's Web site.
- recognize the strengths of the Internet as a campaign medium by designing a home page for a candidate's Web site.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1 S
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- discuss the concept of public opinion and its place in a democracy.
- explain how key factors influence public opinion by completing a chart.
- identify and explain their opinions on five public issues.
- explore the roots of their opinions by ranking their sources of influence on the five public issues.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 172) before class.

Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 173)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

214 Mass Media and Public Opinion

Before your classroom discussion of students' opinions about the topics in this section's Core Worksheet, you may want to review information on comparing viewpoints in the Skills Handbook, p. S15.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Image Above: Guests on Meet the election.

Do you like broccoli? Blue fingernail polish? Tattoos? Hard rock music? What about sports? Old cars? You almost certainly have an opinion on

Guiding Question
What is public opinion, and what factors help to shape it? Use a concept web like the one below to show the factors that influence public opinion.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- public affairs - peer group
- public opinion - opinion leader
- mass media

\section*{Objectives}
1. Examine the term public opinion and understand why it is so difficult to define.
2. Analyze how family and education help shape public opinion.
3. Describe four other factors that shape public opinion.

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{The Formation of Public Opinion}
 each of those things. On some of them, you may hold strong opinions, and those opinions may be very important to you. Still, each of those opinions is your own view, your private opinion. None of them qualifies as public opinion.

\section*{What Is Public Opinion?}

Few terms in American politics are more widely used, and less well understood, than the term public opinion. It appears regularly in newspapers and magazines and on blogs, and you hear it frequently on radio and television.

Quite often, the phrase is used to suggest that all or most of the American people hold the same view on some public issue, such as global warming or deficit spending. Thus, time and again, politicians say that "the people" want such and such, television commentators tell us that "the public" favors this or opposes that, and so on.

In fact, there are very few matters about which all or nearly all of "the people" think alike. "The public" holds many different and often conflicting views on nearly every public issue.

To understand what public opinion is, you must recognize this important point: Public opinion refers to a complex collection of the opinions of many different people. It is the sum of all of their views. It is not the single and undivided view of some mass mind.

Different Publics Many publics exist in the United States-in fact, too many to be counted. Each public is made up of all those individuals who hold the same view on some particular public issue. Each group of people with a differing point of view is a separate public with regard to that issue.

For example, the people who think that Congress should establish a national health insurance program belong to the public that holds that view. People who believe that the President is doing an excellent job as chief executive, or that capital punishment should be abolished, or that prayer should be permitted in public school, are members of separate publics with those particular opinions. Clearly, many people can and do belong to more than one of those publics; but FACTS: • Public opinion refers to the attitudes of a significant number of people on matters of government and politics. • Family and education are two important factors in shaping people's political opinions. - Additional factors that shape public opinion include peer groups, opinion leaders, historic events, and mass media.

CONCEPTS: representative democracy, rights and responsibilities of citizens ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Public opinion is not a single opinion, but a complex collection of opinions of many different publics. - Public opinion includes only views that relate to public affairs and that are expressed publicly.
almost certainly only a very few belong to all four of them.

Notice this important point: Not many issues capture the attention of all-or even nearly all-Americans. In fact, those that do are few and far between. Instead, most public issues attract the interest of some people (and sometimes millions of them), but those same issues are of little or no interest to many (and sometimes millions of) other people.

This point is crucial, too: In its proper sense, public opinion includes only those views that relate to public affairs. Public affairs include politics, public issues, and the making of public policies-those events and issues that concern the people at large. To be a public opinion, a view must involve something of general concern and of interest to a significant portion of the people as a whole.

Of course, the American people as a whole are interested in many things-rock groups and symphony orchestras, the New York Yankees and the Dallas Cowboys, candy bars and green vegetables, and a great deal more. Many people have opinions on each of these things, views that are sometimes loosely called "public opinion." But, again, in its proper sense, public opinion involves only those views that people hold on such things as political parties and candidates, taxes, unemployment, welfare programs, national defense, foreign policy, and so on.

Definition Clearly, public opinion is so complex that it cannot be readily defined. From what has been said about it to this point, however, public opinion can be described this way: those attitudes held by a significant number of people on matters of government and politics.

As we have suggested, you can better understand the term in the plural-that is, as public opinions, the opinions of different publics. Look at it this way: public opinion is made up of expressed group attitudes.

A view must be expressed in order to be an opinion in the public sense. Otherwise, it cannot be identified with any public. That expression need not be oral (spoken). It can take any number of other forms, as well: a protest demonstration, a film, a billboard, a vote for or against a candidate, and so on. The point is that a person's private thoughts on an issue enter the stream of public opinion only when those thoughts are expressed publicly.

\section*{Family and School}

No one is born with a set of attitudes about government and politics. Instead, each of us learns our political opinions, and we do so in a lifelong "classroom" and from many different "teachers." In other words, public opinion is formed out of a very complex process. The factors involved in it are almost infinite.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What do public affairs include?

\section*{infinite}
adj. uncountable neverending, limitless

\section*{Top Issues for 2008 Presidential Election}

Opinions about public affairs often vary widely across the voting population. In the summer before the 2008 election, voters had different opinions about which issues were most important in the presidential election. How might the information on this chart change in the election of 201 2? \(2016 ?\)

GOVERNMENT ONLINE Audio Tour
Listen to a guided audio tour of these issues at PearsonSuccessNet.com

49\%
of voters thought the economy was the most important issue in their vote for President

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 8, Section 1 :
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 169)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 172)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 173)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 174)
L3 Quiz A (p. 177)
L2 Quiz B (p. 178)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following on the board. (Note: You may wish to modify the following list or provide your own list of issues, depending on particular sensitivities in your classroom.) What do you think most Americans believe about the following issues?
- health insurance for all
- prayer in school
- the death penalty

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Display Transparency 8A, Whose Opinions Are They? Ask: What does television have to do with the public's opinion on issues? (It can portray the news of an event or issue in a way to bias the public.) What does this cartoon imply about forming an opinion based on a news issue? (The public has to come up with its own opinion because the news is so fresh that it is being reported exactly as it happens.)
Tell students that they will learn about the formation of public opinion. To help focus the class, ask a student volunteer to read aloud and summarize the text under the heading "What Is Public Opinion?" Then have another volunteer read aloud and summarize the first paragraph under the heading "Definition." Explain that students will focus on the question of how public opinion is formed and why it matters.

\section*{REVIEW THE BELLRINGER}

Turn students' attention to the Bellringer. Lead a discussion on the differences between private opinion and public opinion, and how public opinion shapes public policy. Use the Think-Write-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) and ask students: What is the place of public opinion in a democracy? You may wish to write the following quotation on the board as a discussion starter: "If forty million people say a foolish thing, it does not become a wise one." -W. Somerset Maugham, British writer

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the top issues in the 2008 presidential election.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint politics, public issues, and the making of public policies
Top Issues for 2008 Presidential Election Possible response: The economy could improve, making it less of an issue, or a terrorist attack could lift terrorism to the top of the list.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 8 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 174), which asks students to explore factors that influence their own opinions. Have students work individually on this worksheet.

L2
Differentiate Briefly review the various controversies surrounding the issues raised in the Core Worksheet. Make sure students understand in broad terms the range of viewpoints involved.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint age, race, income, occupation, residence, group affiliations, family, education
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are several agents of political socialization?
monopoly
\(\frac{\text { monopoly }}{n \text { dominant or }}\) exclusive control impressionable \(\xlongequal[\text { impressionable }]{\text { ad } j \text { easily influenced, }}\) receptive indoctrinate
\(v\). to teach, instruct

You have already considered that point. Recall the detailed look at why people vote as they do in Chapter 6. Those pages amounted to an extensive look at how public opinion is formed. Also in that chapter, you considered the process by which each person acquires his or her political opinions-the process of political socialization. That complex process begins in early childhood, and it continues on through one's lifetime. It involves all of the many experiences and relationships that lead each of us to see the political world and to act in it as we do. \({ }^{1}\)

There are many different agents of political socialization at work in the opinionshaping process. Again, you looked at these agents in Chapter 6: age, race, income, occupation, residence, group affiliations, and many others. Here, look again at two of them, the family and school. They have so large an impact that they deserve another and slightly different discussion here.

Family Most parents do not think of themselves as agents of political socialization, nor do other members of most families. Parents and other family members do nonetheless play an important part in this process.

Children first see the political world from within the family and through the family's eyes. They begin to learn about politics much as they begin to learn about most other things in life. They learn from what their parents have to say, from the stories that their older brothers and sisters bring home from school, from watching television with the family, and so on.

Most of what smaller children learn in the family setting cannot really be described as political opinions. Clearly, toddlers are not concerned with the wisdom of spending billions of dollars on an antimissile defense system, with the causes of global warming, or the pros and cons of the monetary policies of the Federal Reserve Board.

The concept of socialization comes from the fields of sociology and psychology. There, it is used to describe all of the ways in and psychology. There, it is used to describe all of the ways it society. To put this another way: Socialization is the multisided, lifelong process in which people come to know, accept, and follow the beliefs and practices of their society. Political socialization is a part of that much broader process.

Young children do pick up some fundamental attitudes, however. With those attitudes, they acquire a basic slant toward such things as authority and rules of behavior, property, neighbors, people of other racial or religious backgrounds, and the like. In short, children lay some foundations on which they will later build their political opinions.

A large number of scholarly studies report what common sense also suggests. The strong influence the family has on the development of political opinions is largely a result of the near monopoly the family has on the child in his or her earliest, most impressionable years. Those studies also show that:
"Children raised in households in which the primary caregivers are Democrats tend to become Democrats themselves, whereas children raised in homes where their caregivers are Republican tend to favor the GOP."
-Benjamin Ginsberg, Theodore Lowi, and Margaret Weir, We the People

School The start of formal schooling marks the initial break in the influence of the family. For the first time, children become regularly involved in activities outside the home.

From the first day, schools teach children the values of the American political system. They work to indoctrinate the young, to instill in them loyalty to a particular cause or idea. In fact, preparing students to become good citizens is an important part of our educational system.

Students may salute the flag, recite the Pledge of Allegiance, and sing patriotic songs. They learn about George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Susan B. Anthony, Martin Luther King, Jr., and other great Americans. From the early grades on, they pick up growing amounts of specific political knowledge, and they begin to form political opinions. In high school, they are often required to take a course in American government and even to read books such as this one.

School involves much more than books and classes, of course. It is a complex bundle of experiences and a place where a good deal of informal learning occurs-about the similarities and differences among individuals

216 Mass Media and Public Opinion

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparencies 8B and 8C when you discuss the meaning of public opinion and its influences. Point out that political cartoonists seek to influence public opinion.
Ask: How does a political cartoon influence public opinion? (by expressing a view in a clever, interesting manner and by appearing in mass media) Display each transparency first without comment, allowing students time to think about each one. Then ask: What public issue is the subject of both cartoons? (gun ownership) If students need help answering this question, show Transparency 8C and ask: What is missing? (2nd Amendment) What is the subject of this amendment? (the right to bear arms) After students identify the issue, ask: To what "public" does Cartoonist 8B appear to belong? (people who support gun control) To what "public" does Cartoonist 8C appear to belong? (people who support the right to bear arms) and groups, about the various ways in which decisions can be made, and about the process of compromise that must often occur in order for ideas to move forward.

Once again, the family and school are not the only forces at work in the process by which opinions are formed. A number of other influences are part of the mix. These two factors are singled out here to highlight their leading roles in that process.

\section*{Other Factors}

No factor, by itself, shapes a person's opinion on any single issue. Some factors do play a larger role than others, however. Thus, in addition to family and school, occupation and race are usually much more significant than, say, gender or place of residence.

For example, on the question of national health insurance, the particular job a person has-how well-paying it is, whether its benefits include coverage by a private health-insurance plan, and so on-will almost certainly have a greater impact on that person's views than his or her gender or place of residence.

On the other hand, the relative weight of each factor that influences public opinion also depends on the issue in question. If the issue involves, say, equal pay for women or the restoration of Lake Michigan, then gender or where one lives will almost certainly loom larger in the opinion-making mix.

Besides family, school, and such factors as occupation and race, four other factors have a major place in the opinion-making process. They are the mass media, peer groups, opinion leaders, and historic events.

Mass Media The mass media include those means of communication that reach large, widely dispersed audiences (masses of people) simultaneously. No one needs to be told that the mass media, including newspapers, magazines, radio, and in particular, television and the Internet, have a huge effect on the formation of public opinion.
dispersed

\section*{Debate}

Form teams to debate the issues in the Core Worksheet, Part 2. Omit any issues that are too sensitive for your class. Allow students to choose the issue they want to debate and the position they want to take-either "Agree" or "Disagree." Allow teams time to prepare. Advise them to prepare rebuttals for points they expect the opposing team to make. After teams debate each issue, ask if anyone's opinion changed based on the points the teams made. Use the Debate strategy (p. T25) to organize the debate.

\section*{REFLECT ON WORKSHEET RESPONSES}

While students respond to the remaining questions on the worksheet, you may wish, depending on classroom sensitivities, to have them submit their answers from Part 1 to you anonymously. On the board, keep a tally of the different answers to the questions. Ask: Are you surprised to see the range of opinions-or to see that the opinions on some topics are the same among all class members? Next, you may wish to have students present their top influences from Part 2-again, anonymously. Write the results on the board. Ask:
Are you surprised to see the range of influences on public opinions? Lead a discussion on how the range, or lack of range, of opinions would influence public policy on these issues.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

\(L 3\)
Ask students to recall their answer to Reflection Question 13 from the Core Worksheet. Have students write an essay that explores the ways in which this particular influence has affected their lives and opinions.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students describe verbally the ways in which their most important influences have affected their lives.
L4 Differentiate For each issue listed in Part 1 of the Core Worksheet, have students describe different backgrounds and experiences that might lead other people to form opinions different from their own. For example, a victim of gun-related crime would be less likely to support gun ownership than would a hunting enthusiast.
L2 Differentiate Divide the class into four groups. Assign each group one of the following factors that shape public opinion: peer groups, opinion leaders, historic events, and mass media. Have groups discuss people, events, and experiences within their category that have had a significant influence on their political opinions. Each group should elect a spokesperson to share the highlights of their discussion, including which factor the group felt was the most influential and why.

\section*{Answers}

Who Influences Our Opinions? possible response: occupation, race, mass media, peer groups, opinion leaders, historic events

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 177)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 178)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Government}
online
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How does one's peer attitudes?

Take this as but one indication: There is at least one television set in more than 98 percent of the nation's 115 million households. There are two or more sets in more than 80 million homes and millions more in many other places. Most of those sets are turned on for at least eight hours a day, for a mindboggling total of more than a billion hours a day. You will take a longer look at the influence of the mass media later in this chapter.

Peer Groups People with whom one regularly associates, including friends, classmates, neighbors, co-workers, and the like, make up one's peer group. When a child enters school, friends and classmates become important agents in shaping his or her attitudes and behavior. The influence of peer groups continues on through adulthood.

Belonging to a peer group usually reinforces what a person has already come to believe. One obvious reason for this is that most people trust the views of their friends. Another is that the members of a peer group have shared many of the same socializing experiences, and so tend to think along the same or similar lines.

To put this observation another way, contradictory or other unsettling opinions are not often heard within a peer group. Most people want to be liked by their friends and associates. As a result, they are usually reluctant to stray too far from what their peers think and how they behave.

Opinion Leaders The views expressed by opinion leaders also bear heavily on the formation of public opinion. An opinion leader is any person who, for any reason, has an unusually strong influence on the views of others. These opinion shapers are a distinct minority in the total population, of course, but they are found everywhere.

Many opinion leaders hold public office. Some write for newspapers or magazines, or express their opinions on radio or television or the Internet. Others are prominent in business, labor, agriculture, and civic organizations. Many are professionals-doctors, lawyers, teachers, ministers, and rabbis-and have regular contact with large numbers of people. Many others are active members of their neighborhood or church, or have leadership roles in their local communities.

Whoever they may be-the President of the United States, a network television commentator, the governor, the head of a local citizens committee, or even a local talk-show host-these opinion leaders are people to whom others listen and from whom others draw ideas and convictions. Whatever their political, economic, or social standing or outlook may be, opinion leaders play a significant role in the formation of public opinion.

Historic Events Historic events can have a major impact on the views of large numbers of people-and so have a major impact on the content and direction of public policy. Clearly, the events of September 11, 2001, and the onset of the global war on terror constitute a leading illustration of that point. American views on national security and foreign policy have undergone dramatic shifts as a result of those events.

Our history affords many other examples, as well-not the least of them the Great Depression, which began in 1929 and lasted for the better part of a decade.

The Depression was a shattering national experience. Almost overnight, need and

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Most people trust the views of their friends and want to be liked by their friends and associates, so they seldom stray too far from the opinions of the peer groups.
Analyzing Cartoons The cartoonist is implying that the mass media generally presents biased information-it tells people what to think.

\section*{Background}

Celebrity Endorsements Before every election, celebrities of various stripes endorse candidates. Polls by the Pew Research Center, however, suggest that celebrity endorsements do little to sway voter opinion-at least not directly. "[Endorsements] generate free media attention, fundraising, and get people talking about the endorsements to their friends, " said Professor Kelli Lammie, of SUNY-Albany, in a US News article from October 24, 2008. A Pew poll in 2007 found that the most influential endorsements come from local religious leaders and State governors. In the 2008 Democratic primaries, however, Oprah Winfrey's endorsement of Barack Obama may have played a key role. Winfrey's television show, magazine, and radio show reach 49 million people a week. A University of Maryland study found that Winfrey's endorsement brought Obama over a million votes in the primaries.
poverty became massive national problems. Hunger and despair stalked the land. In 1929, some two million people were unemployed in the United States. By just four years later, that number had climbed to 13.5 million. In 1935, some 18 million men, women, and children were wholly dependent on public emergency relief programs. Some 10 million workers had no employment other than that provided by temporary public projects.

All of this changed people's view of the proper place of government in the United States. The Depression persuaded a large majority of Americans to support an expanded role for government-in particular, for the National Government-in the nation's economic and social life.

The Great Depression also prompted a majority of Americans to shift their loyalties from the Republicans to the Democrats. The Republicans had dominated the national political scene from Lincoln's election in 1860 to the onset of the Depression. That situation changed abruptly when Franklin D. Roosevelt's landslide victory in 1932 began nearly 40 years of Democratic domination.

The turbulent politics of the 1960 s and early 1970 s furnish another example of the way in which significant occurrences can impact and shape opinions. The American people had emerged from World War II and the prosperity of the 1950 s with a largely optimistic view of the future and of the United States' place in the world. That rose-colored outlook was reflected in a generally favorable, even respectful, attitude toward government in this country.

The 1960s and early 1970s changed all that. Those years were highlighted by a number of traumatic events. Of special note were the assassinations of President John Kennedy in 1963 and of the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., and Senator Robert Kennedy in 1968. This period also included the civil rights movement and the Vietnam War, with all of the protests, violence, and strong emotions that accompanied both of those chapters in this nation's life. The era ended with the Watergate scandal and the near-impeachment and subsequent resignation of President Richard Nixon in 1974.

Those years of turmoil and divisiveness produced a dramatic decline in the American people's estimate of their governmentand most especially in their evaluation of its trustworthiness.

Many Americans became Democratic voters as a result of the Great Depression.
divisiveness \(n\). result of disagreement, tending to divide

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

The definition of public Have students work in pairs to reread the opinion (Questions 1 2, 3)

The roles of family and education in shaping attitudes about public matters (Question 4)
The roles of the media, peer groups, opinion leaders, and historic events in shaping attitudes about public matters (Questions 5 \(6,7)\) first section, entitled "What Is Public Opinion?," taking notes about the definitions of public opinion given there.
Create a web diagram that describes the influence of family and schools on public opinion.

Add balloons to the web diagram to include the influence of other factors that influence public opinion.

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)

1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What is public opinion, and what factors help to shape it?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What does it mean to say that there are different "publics" that help make up public opinion?
3. To what kinds of issues and affairs is public opinion limited?
4. What two elements make up the "lifelong classroom" in which people receive their political socialization?
5. What are the roles of mass media, peer groups, and opinion leaders in influencing public opinion?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Make Generalizations What features of peer groups explains why they tend to reinforce rather than challenge what a person believes?
7. Identify Central Issues What are some of the public issues that were brought to the forefront of public opinion in the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001?

\section*{Quick Write}

Cause-and-Effect Essay: Choose a Topic Using the Internet, other sources, and your textbook, identify a public affairs issue, such as the environment or energy, about which there are strong public opinions. Write a brief summary of the issue and cite at least two of the more prominent public opinions about the topic.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Public opinion includes those attitudes held by significant numbers of people on matters of public concern. It is shaped by family, school, occupation, race, mass media, peer groups, opinion leaders, and historical events.
2. Each public is made up of all individuals who hold the same view on a particular public issue. Each group holding a differing view on that issue is a separate public. Public opinion is composed of the attitudes held by all of these separate publics on any matter of government and politics.
3. Public opinion is limited to matters of public concern, including politics, public issues, and the making of public policies.
4. family and school
5. The mass media communicate to large, widely dispersed audiences simultaneously. Peer groups help solidify existing opinions because people trust the views of their friends and want to be liked by their friends. Opinion leaders are people to whom others listen and from whom others draw ideas and convictions.
and discourage dissent. People want to be liked by their friends and associates, so members tend not to challenge the views of their peer groups.
7. Possible answer: The September 11 attacks raised issues of national security and foreign policy, as well as issues of individual rights and freedoms and religious tolerance.
QuICK WRITE Make sure students find a suitable topic of public interest and identify at least two opinions about it.

GUIDING QUESTION
How is public opinion measured and used?
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Measuring Public Opinion } \\
\hline Elections & Voting results can sometimes reflect public opinion. \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Interest \\
Groups
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Key way public opinion made known, but difficult to \\ know number of people and strength of views
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Media & \begin{tabular}{l}
Mirror and mold public opinion, but often reflect \\ views of vocal minority
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Personal \\ Contacts
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Officials gauge views through interactions, but can \\ fall into trap of finding only views that agree with \\ their own
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Public Opinion \\
Polls
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Collect information by asking people questions- \\ best measure of opinion
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Straw Vote & \begin{tabular}{l}
Asks large number of people same question- \\ unreliable because not based on scientific techniques
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Scientific \\
Polling
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Define the survey universe, construct a sample, \\ prepare valid questions, select and control how poll \\ will be taken, analyze and report findings
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- examine the significance of how polling questions are worded and practice writing good polling questions.
- understand the importance of scientific polling by examining a poll on issues of concern to voters in a recent presidential election.
- evaluate the accuracy and usefulness of polls by examining a famous photograph.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Measuring Public Opinion}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How is public opinion measured and used? Use a table like the one below to take notes on the section.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Measuring Public Opinion } \\
\hline Elections & \begin{tabular}{l} Voting results can sometimes reflect \\
public opinion.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline & \\
\hline & \\
\hline & \\
\hline & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}

\section*{- mandate}
- universe
- interest group - sample
- public opinion - random sample poll
- quota sample

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the challenges involved in measuring public opinion.
2. Explain why scientific opinion polls are the best way to measure public opinion.
3. Identify the five steps in the polling process.
4. Understand the problems in evaluating polls.
5. Recognize the limits on the impact of public opinion in a democracy.

Image Above: NBC News pollster conducts an election exit poll.

How often have you heard the phrase: "According to a recent poll. . ."? Probably more than you can count, especially in the months leading up to an election. Polls are one of the most common means of gauging public opinion.

If public policy is to reflect public opinion, one needs to be able to find the answers to these questions: What are people's opinions on a particular issue? How many people share a given view on that issue? How firmly do they hold that view? In other words, there must be a way to "measure" public opinion.

\section*{Measuring Public Opinion}

The general shape of public opinion on an issue can be found through a number of key indicators. They include voting; lobbying; books; pamphlets; magazine and newspaper articles; editorial comments in the press and on radio, television, and the Internet; paid advertising; letters to editors and public officials; and so on.

These and other means of expression are the devices through which the general direction of public opinion becomes known. Usually though, the means by which a view is expressed tells little-and often nothing reliableabout the size of the group that holds that opinion or how strongly it is held. In the American political system, this information is critically important. To find it, some effort must be made to measure public opinion. Elections, interest groups, the media, and personal contacts with the public all-at least to some degree-provide the means by which that measurement can be done.

Elections In a democracy, the voice of the people is supposed to express itself through the ballot box. Election results are thus very often said to be indicators of public opinion. The votes cast for the various candidates are regularly taken as evidence of the people's approval or rejection of the stands taken by those candidates and their parties. As a result, a party and its victorious candidates regularly claim to have received a mandate to carry out their campaign promises. In American politics, a mandate refers to the instructions or commands a constituency gives to its elected officials. \({ }^{2}\)

2 The term mandate comes from the Latin mandatum, meaning "a command."

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

\section*{ANALYZE IMAGES}

Before displaying the image in Transparency 8E to the class, you may want to review the information on analyzing images in the Skills Handbook, p. S28.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Elections, interest groups, the media, and personal contacts reflect public opinion but do not provide accurate measurements of it. - The most reliable measure of public opinion is scientifically conducted opinion polls. • Scientific polls define the universe, construct a sample, prepare valid questions, select and control how the poll will be taken, and analyze and report findings.
CONCEPTS: democratic values/principles
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • To achieve reliable results, pollsters must use a random sample from the target population and avoid bias in the wording of their questions. - Democracy is more about thoughtful participation than mere measurement of public opinion.

In reality, however, election results are seldom an accurate measure of public opinion. Voters make choices in elections for any of several reasons, as you have seen. Very often, those choices have little or nothing to do with the candidates' stands on public questions. Then, too, candidates often disagree with some of the planks of their party's platform. And, as you know, candidates and parties often express their positions in broad, generalized terms.

In short, much of what you have read about voting behavior, and about the nature of parties, adds up to this: Elections are, at best, only useful indicators of public opinion. To call the typical election a mandate for much of anything other than a general direction in public policy is to be on very shaky ground.

Interest Groups Private organizations whose members share certain views and objectives, and who work to shape the making and the content of public policy are called interest groups. These organizations are also very aptly known as pressure groups and specialinterest groups.

Interest groups are a chief means by which public opinion is made known. They present their views (exert their pressures) through their lobbyists, by letters, telephone calls, and e-mails, in political campaigns and by other methods. In dealing with them, however, public officials often have difficulty determining two things: How many people does an interest group really represent? How strongly do those people hold the views that an organization says they hold?

The Media Earlier, you read some impressive numbers about television that help describe the place of the media in the opinion process; you will read more of those numbers later. Here, recognize this point: The media are also a gauge for assessing public opinion.

The media are frequently said to be "mirrors" as well as "molders" of opinion. It is often claimed that the views expressed in newspaper editorials, syndicated columns, news magazines, television commentaries, and blogs are fairly good indicators of public opinion. In fact, however, the media are not very accurate mirrors of public opinion, often reflecting only the views of a vocal minority.

Personal Contacts Most public officials have frequent and wide-ranging contacts in many different forms with large numbers of people. In each of these contacts, they try to read the public's mind. Indeed, their jobs demand that they do so.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How do interest groups present their views?
aptly
adv. fittingly, appropriately, suitably

\section*{How Government Works}

\section*{Using Public Opinion}

Public officials seek to measure public opinion through a variety of sources, as shown below. Whether or not a public official gets reelected may depend on how he or she responds to public opinion. For what reasons are public opinion measured?

Chapter 8 • Section 2221

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 8, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 179)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 181)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 183)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 184)
L3 Quiz A (p. 185)
L2 Quiz B (p. 186)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 179) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 181)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 8D, which shows the effects of wording on poll questions. Have students answer the question in their notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Have students share their reactions to the Bellringer. Point out that the only difference in the wording of the last two questions is the order in which the options are presented. The results, however, are vastly different. This suggests that the order significantly influenced the responses. The first question requiring a simple "agree" or "disagree" response will likely bring most accurate results. Ask: What do these examples tell you about polls and polling? (How questions are worded can change the results of a poll, so polls may not always be an accurate measure of public opinion.)
Then write the following topic on the board:
Protecting the Environment. Ask students to work in pairs to write a poll question two different ways-one designed to elicit a particular response and another designed to be neutral and unbiased. Have volunteers share their questions, and write them on the board. Discuss how the wording of particular questions could influence the answers, and point out which questions would be most appropriate to use in a poll.
L2 Differentiate Start by underlining the parts that differ among the questions on the board and choose questions with the clearest differences in wording to discuss first. Provide help with any difficult vocabulary words.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Interest groups present their views using lobbyists, letters, telephone calls, e-mails, and in political campaigns.
Using Public Opinion to shape public policy and to win elections

\section*{NTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Explain that measuring public opinion is a complicated task that is of great interest to public officials. Ask: Why would officials be interested in public opinion? (Knowing public opinion is key to being elected, and it can also help guide officials to form public policy that the people want.) Why is this information important to the American political system? (The system is based on public officials carrying out the people's wishes. ) Then write the following headings on the board: Elections, Interest Groups, Media, and Personal Contacts. Ask students to explain how each reflects public opinion and discuss the limitations of each as a measurement tool. Tell students that scientific opinion polls provide the most reliable measure of public opinion.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Cartoons The cartoonist is saying that pollsters do a poor job of predicting future actions or events.

- Analyzing Cartoons A pollster is a person or group who researches public opinion. What do you think the cartoonist is saying about pollsters here?
mishap
n. calamity, disaster, misfortune

Members of Congress receive bags of mail and hundreds of phone calls and e-mails every day. Many of them make frequent trips "to keep in touch with the folks back home." Top administration figures are often on the road, too, selling the President's programs and gauging the people's reactions. Even the President does some of this, with speaking trips to different parts of the country.

Governors, State legislators, mayors, and other officials also have any number of contacts with the public. These officials encounter the public in their offices, in public meetings, at social gatherings, community events, and even at ball games.

Can public officials find "the voice of the people" in all of those contacts? Many can and do, and often with surprising accuracy. But some public officials cannot. They fall into an ever-present trap: They find only what they want to find, only those views that support and agree with their own.

\section*{Public Opinion Polls}

Public opinion is best measured by public opinion polls, devices that attempt to collect information by asking people questions. \({ }^{3}\) The more accurate polls are based on scientific polling techniques.

Straw Votes Public opinion polls have existed in this country for more than a century. Until the 1930s, however, they were far from scientific. Most earlier polling efforts were of the straw vote variety. \({ }^{4}\) That is, they were polls that sought to read the public's mind simply by asking the same question of a large number of people. Straw votes are still fairly common. Many radio talk-show hosts pose questions that listeners can respond to by telephone, and television personalities regularly invite responses by e-mail.

The straw-vote technique is highly unreliable, however. It rests on the mistaken assumption that a relatively large number of responses will provide a fairly accurate picture of the public's views on a given question. The problem is this: The respondents are self-selected. Nothing in the process ensures that those who respond will represent a reasonably accurate cross section of the total population. The straw vote emphasizes the quantity rather than the quality of the sample to which its question is put.

The most famous of all straw-polling mishaps took place in 1936. A widely read periodical, the Literary Digest, mailed postcard ballots to more than 10 million people and received answers from more than 2 million of them. Based on that huge return, the magazine confidently predicted the outcome of the presidential election that year. It said that Governor Alfred Landon, the Republican nominee, would easily defeat incumbent Franklin Roosevelt. Instead, Roosevelt won in a landslide. He captured more than 60 percent of the popular vote and carried every State but Maine and Vermont.

The Digest had drawn its sample on a faulty basis: from automobile registration lists and telephone directories. The Digest had failed to consider that in the mid-Depression year of 1936, millions of people could not afford to own cars or have private telephones.

The Digest poll failed to reach most of the vast pool of the poor and unemployed,

\footnotetext{
3 Poll comes from the old Teutonic word polle, meaning "the top or crown of the head," the part that shows when heads are counted.
4 The odd name comes from the fact that a straw, thrown up in } the air, will indicate which way the wind is blowing.

\section*{Background}

EXIT POLLS On presidential election night, results pour into television and Internet news sources. Their U.S. maps begin lighting up with red and blue as reporters "call," or project, a winner in each State-even before most votes are counted. News sources project winners based largely on exit polls, which are carried out during the balloting. Interviewers stand outside randomly selected polling places in each State and interview voters as they leave the polls. They select interviewees at set intervals, such as every fourth or eighth voter. The exit poll typically asks voters for whom they voted and why. Pollsters also collect demographic data, such as the gender, race, and age to analyze voting patterns. To avoid influencing voter turnout, the major news sources have agreed not to project the winner in a State until the polls close in that State.
millions of blue-collar workers, and most of the ethnic minorities in the country. Those were the very segments of the population from which Roosevelt and the Democrats drew their greatest support. The magazine had predicted the winner of each of the three previous presidential elections, but its failure to do so in 1936 was so colossal that it ceased publication not long thereafter.

Scientific Polling Serious efforts to take the public's pulse on a scientific basis date from the mid-1930s. They began with the work of such early pollsters as George Gallup and Elmo Roper. The techniques that they and others have developed over the decades since then have reached a highly sophisticated level.

There are now more than 1,000 national and regional polling organizations in this country. Many of them do mostly commercial work. That is, they tap the public's preferences on everything from toothpastes and headache remedies to television shows and thousands of other things. However, at least 200 of these polling organizations also poll the political preferences of the American people.

Among the best known of the national pollsters today are the Gallup Organization (the Gallup Poll) and the Pew Research Center for People and the Press.

A number of the leading national polls are joint efforts of major news-gathering and professional polling organizations. Their polls regularly report public attitudes on matters of current interest-including, for example, the level of public support of the President and/or Congress or, in election seasons, candidates running for such major offices as governor or member of the House or Senate. Those joint ventures that can most frequently be found in print and on television and the Internet include the ABC News/The Washington Post poll, the CBS News/The New York Times poll, the NBC/The Wall Street Journal poll, and the CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll.

\section*{The Polling Process}

Scientific poll-taking is an extremely complex process that can best be described in five basic steps. In their efforts to discover and report public opinion, pollsters must Checkpoint What do national polls do?

\section*{The Effect of Poll Wording on Reliability}

How you ask the question...

The Federal Government should see to it that all people have adequate housing.

\section*{\(55.1 \%\) Agree} 44.9\% Disagree

Some people feel the Federal Government should see to it that all people have adequate housing, while others feel each person should provide his or her own housing. Which comes closest to how you feel about this?
44.6\% Government responsible 55.4\% nment not responsible

SOURCE: Questions and Answers in Atuitude Surveys, 1981 & 1996
- Analyzing Charts This chart demonstrates the importance of carefully wording each question in a poll. Which question is worded in the least biased manner? How can you tell?

\section*{Background} truman-dewey election, 1948 When you display the famous photograph of Truman holding up the Chicago Tribune with the headline "Dewey Defeats Truman," point out that this was not the only leading publication that relied too heavily on preelection polls. The New York Times had boldly predicted "Thomas E. Dewey's Election as President Is a Foregone Conclusion. " The Life Magazine cover pictured Dewey with the caption "The Next President of the United States." Polls had shown Dewey ahead by 5 percent to 15 percent. Post-election analysis suggested that the polls had been taken too early, missing the last-minute swing in voter opinion. The erroneous polls might have helped Truman win by making Republicans overconfident and energizing Democratic efforts to get out the vote. The error proved disastrous for the young opinion polling organization, Gallup, which had to work to regain credibility.

\section*{DISCUSS TYPES OF POLLS}

Ask students if they have ever participated in a poll or if they look at polls online or on television news shows. Point out that, while interesting to a casual viewer, many of these are straw votes that do not accurately measure public opinion. Ask students to explain how scientific polls differ from straw votes. (The sample in a straw vote is self-selected. It consists of people who decide to call in or email a response to the poll question. Such a sample is not random and so does not represent an accurate cross section of the total population. A scientific poll uses a random sample of the universe, questions that are carefully worded to avoid bias, and an interview process designed to avoid influencing replies. ) Ask: Why might policymakers care about how a poll is constructed? (They want to know the true nature of public opinion and how accurately the poll measures it.) How might a poll be misused? (A group might intentionally introduce bias into the polling process to create a favorable rating for their candidate or cause.)

\section*{distribute core worksheet}

Distribute the Chapter 8, Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, page 183), in which students evaluate a poll about voters' concerns prior to the 2008 presidential election. Ask students to study the poll on the worksheet and answer the questions that follow.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint National polls measure the public's preferences for a wide variety of products as well as political preferences.
Analyzing Charts possible answer: the first question, because even though the last two questions are the same, their wording produced vastly different results, suggesting bias

\section*{DISCUSS CORE WORKSHEET ANSWERS}

Review students' answers to the worksheet, using the following questions to guide the discussion:
Why is it important to know who took the poll? (The source is an indicator of the poll's reliability. We can assume that a reputable source, such as Gallup, used scientific methods, whereas a biased source, such as a special interest group, might have skewed the results toward the candidate it favors. ) Why is the poll's date important? (Circumstances may have changed since the poll was taken, making the data no longer relevant.) What is the significance of the number of people who responded to the poll? (The sample must be large enough to yield results that are statistically accurate within a small margin of error.) What information about the respondents is relevant to interpreting poll results? (It is important to know if this sample was random and large enough to accurately represent the target universe.) Does this seem to be a scientific poll? (Yes, it was taken by reputable organizations, the questions were rotated to avoid influencing results, it includes enough people for an accurate sampling, and the margin of error is the standard \(\pm 3\).) How might a presidential candidate use this poll? (to craft the campaign message to focus on the issues of most concern to voters)

\section*{DISPLAY TRANSPARENCY}

Display Transparency 8E, Truman-Dewey Election, 1948. Point out that the man in the photograph is Harry S. Truman. Explain that this photograph dramatizes a famous case of a newspaper incorrectly predicting the outcome of a presidential race. Although polls had predicted that Dewey would win, Truman in fact became President. Ask: What does this situation suggest about polls? (While they can attempt to make predictions, they can be wrong. ) Discuss whether students themselves are influenced by polls. Then ask: Are polls good for democracy? (Yes, they are useful tools to help candidates and policymakers act based on public opinion; No, they do not reflect thoughtful, nuanced responses and could influence voter turnout at the polls.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The universe is the whole population that the poll aims to measure.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Who does the universe refer to in the polling process?
sufficient ad \(j\) adequate, enough deliberately
adv. on purpose
knowingly, intentionally
(1) define the universe to be surveyed; (2) construct a sample; (3) prepare valid questions; (4) select and control how the poll will be taken; and (5) analyze and report their findings to the public.

Defining the Universe The universe is a term that means the whole population that the poll aims to measure. It is the group whose opinions the poll will seek to discover. That universe can be all voters in Chicago, or every high school student in Texas, or all Republicans in New England, or all Democrats in Georgia, or all Catholic women over age 35 in the United States, and so on.

Constructing a Sample If the universe is very small-say, the 30 members of a high school class-the best way to discover what that entire universe thinks about some matter would be to question all of its members. Most polls involve much larger universes, how-ever-for example, all of the people who live in a particular city or State or the United States. Clearly, each of those universes is so large that it would be impossible to interview all of its members. So pollsters construct a sample-a representative slice of the total universe.

Most pollsters draw random samples (often called probability samples). A random sample is composed of randomly selected people, and so it is one in which all the members of its universe stand an equal chance of being interviewed. Recall, the sample used for the infamous Literary Digest poll in 1936 was not picked at random and so did not accurately reflect the universe it sought to measure.

Most major national polls regularly use samples composed of some 1,500 or so people to represent the nation's adult population (of more than 200 million people) today. How can the views of so few people possibly represent the views of so many?

The answer to that question lies in the mathematical law of probability. Flip a coin a thousand times. The law of probability says that, given an honest coin and an honest flip, heads will come up 500 times. The results of that exercise will be the same no matter how often it is repeated.

The law of probability is regularly applied in any number of situations-by insurance companies to compute life expectancies, by food quality inspectors to grade a farmer's truckload of beans, and by many others who "play the odds," including pollsters when they draw random samples.

In short, if the sample is of sufficient size and is properly selected at random from the entire universe, the law of probability says that the result will be accurate to within a small and predictable margin of error. Mathematicians tell us that a properly drawn random sample of some 1,500 people will reflect the opinions of the nation's entire adult population and be accurate to within a margin of plus or minus ( \(\pm\) ) 3 percent.

Pollsters agree that it is impossible to construct a sample that would be an absolutely accurate reflection of a large universe. Hence, the allowance for error. A margin of error of \(\pm 3\) percent means a spread of 6 percentage points, of course. To reduce the sampling error from \(\pm 3\) percent to \(\pm 1\) percent, the size of the sample would have to be at least 9,500 people. The time and expense to interview so huge a sample make that impractical.

Some pollsters do use a less complicated, but less reliable, sampling method. They draw quota samples. A quota sample is one deliberately constructed to reflect the major characteristics of a given universe.

For example, if 51.3 percent of a universe is female, 17.5 percent of it is African American, and so on, then the quota sample will be made up of 51.3 percent females, 17.5 percent African Americans, and so on. Most of the people in the sample will belong to more than one of the categories used to build the sample. That fact is a major reason why such samples are less reliable than random samples.

Asking Well-Drawn Questions The way in which the questions are phrased is critically important to the reliability of any poll. To illustrate that point, most will probably say "yes" to a question put this way: "Should local taxes be reduced?" Many will also answer "yes" if asked this question: "Should the size of the city's police force be increased to fight the rising tide of crime in our community?" Yet, expanding the police force would almost certainly require more local tax dollars.

224 Mass Media and Public Opinion

\section*{Background}

SAMPLING Up to 1948 , polls used quota sampling. Interviewers could choose their respondents, as long as they satisfied quotas for certain characteristics, such as male, female, young, and old. However, the interviewers tended to choose people who were most convenient to interview, introducing bias into the sample. The polling disaster in the Truman-Dewey election of 1948 led to the adoption of sampling based on probability-random sampling. Random sampling takes the choice of respondents out of the hands of humans. For example, telephone polls today typically use ran-dom-digit dialing, in which a computer generates phone numbers from known area codes and digits selected by chance. Interviewing every fourth voter leaving the polls is another form of random sampling. Random sampling techniques ensure that all members of the target universe have an equal chance of being selected.

Questions to Ask About Polls
Poll results are often published in newspapers, magazines, or online. You should learn to analyze such results carefully. Use the following questions as a starting point. Why is it important to read poll results critically?

\section*{WHO?}

Who is responsible for the poll?

\section*{Polls sponsored} by political campaigns may aim to mislead as much as inform.

\section*{WHAT? \\ What is the poll's universe? \\ The universe is the population the poll aims to measure. This allows you to judge whether the sample is truly representative. \\ How was the sample chosen? \\ Samples should be selected randomly. How were questions written and asked? The method of creating and asking questions can alter the results}

Responsible pollsters recognize the problem and construct their questions with great care. They try to avoid "loaded," emotionally charged words and terms that are difficult to understand. They also try to avoid questions that are worded in a way that tends to shape the answers that will be given to them.

Interviewing How pollsters communicate with respondents can also affect accuracy. For decades, most polls were conducted door-todoor, face-to-face. That is, the interviewer questioned the respondent in person. Today, however, most pollsters do their work by telephone, with a sample selected by random digit dialing. Calls are placed to randomly chosen numbers within randomly chosen area codes around the country. Telephone surveys are less labor intensive and less expensive than door-to-door polling. Still, most professional pollsters see advantages and drawbacks to each approach. But they all agree that only one technique, not a combination of the two, should be used in any given poll.

The interview itself is a very sensitive point in the process. An interviewer's tone of voice or the emphasis he or she gives to certain words can influence a respondent's replies and so affect the validity of a poll. If the questions are not carefully worded, some of the respondent's replies may be snap judgments or emotional reactions. Others may be answers that the person being interviewed thinks "ought" to be given. Thus, polling organizations try to hire and train their interviewing staffs very carefully.

\section*{WHY? \\ Why is the poll being conducted? \\ Polls mean to boost a candidate's approval ratings are not reliable. \\ WHEN? \\ When was the data collected? \\ Opinions change quickly during elections-so knowing when the data was collected is important.}

Analyzing Findings Polls, whether scientific or not, try to measure people's attitudes. To be of any real value, however, someone must analyze and report the results. Scientific polling organizations today collect huge amounts of raw data. In order to handle these data, computers and other electronic hardware have become routine parts of the process. Pollsters use these technologies to tabulate and interpret their data, draw their conclusions, and then publish their findings.

\section*{Evaluating Polls}

How good are polls? On balance, the major national polls are fairly reliable. So, too, are most of the regional surveys around the country. Still, they are far from perfect. Fortunately,

\section*{How Government Works}

USING PUBLIC OPINION Franklin Roosevelt was the first President to use polling data. He worked to gain public support for his Lend-Lease program and used private polls to track his progress. John F. Kennedy made polling an essential component of campaign strategy. He worked with Louis Harris (founder of the Harris Poll) in several key areas, including education and religion. When the results of one poll showed that 30 percent of families were sending their children to college while 80 percent hoped to do so, Kennedy incorporated the idea of improved educational opportunities in his campaign speeches. When he found that 30 States strongly opposed his candidacy based on his Roman Catholic upbringing, Kennedy eliminated those States from his campaign schedule, focusing instead on those States where he stood a better chance. Today, nearly all candidates use polls to plan their campaign strategies.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn additional questions to ask about polls.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L4Differentiate Have students use the Internet or other sources to research a recent presidential or other major election. Ask them to write a brief report comparing polling results to the actual outcome of the race.
L1 L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity entitled "Study a Political Poll" (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 184), which asks students to find the results of a political poll, study the information, and answer questions about it.
L3 Differentiate Have students find examples of public opinion polls in newspapers, news magazines, or the Internet. Ask them to explain in writing (1) whether the polls are scientific and how they know, (2) what the polls show about public opinion, and (3) who would use these results and for what purpose.

\section*{Answers}

Questions to Ask About Polls Possible response: A poll can contain bias if the pollsters did not follow proper scientific techniques or if the poll was sponsored by a campaign that is trying to boost its candidate's approval rating.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{L3}

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 185)

42Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 186)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The different \\ expressions of public \\ opinion (Questions 1, \\
2, 3, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students work in groups of four, and \\ have each student study and give a lesson \\ to the others in his or her group about one of \\ the sections under the heading "Measuring \\ Public Opinion" (elections, interest groups, \\ media, and personal contacts).
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The role of polls in \\ measuring public \\ opinion (Questions \\
4, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a Venn diagram that \\ compares and contrasts the straw vote \\ technique and scientific polling.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The process of \\ opinion polling \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an illustrated diagram \\
of the different steps in scientific polling.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\title{
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
} What is difficult for polls to measure?
most responsible pollsters readily acknowledge the limits of their polls. Many of them are involved in continuing efforts to refine every aspect of the polling process.

Pollsters know that they have difficulty measuring the intensity, stability, and relevance of the opinions they report. Intensity is the strength of feeling with which an opinion is held. Stability (or fluidity) is the relative permanence or changeableness of an opinion. Relevance (or pertinence) is how important a particular opinion is to the person who holds it.

Polls and pollsters are sometimes said to shape the opinions they are supposed to measure. Some critics say that in an election, for example, pollsters often create a "bandwagon effect." That is, some voters, wanting to be with the winner, jump on the bandwagon of the candidate who is ahead in the polls.

In spite of these criticisms, it is clear that scientific polls are the most useful tools there are for the difficult task of measuring public opinion. Although they may not always be precisely accurate, they do offer reasonably reliable guides to public thought. Moreover, they help to focus attention on public questions and to stimulate the discussion of them.

\section*{Limits on the Impact}

More than a century ago, the Englishman Lord Bryce described government in the United States as "government by public opinion." Clearly, the energy devoted to measuring public opinion in this country suggests something of its powerful role in American politics. However, Lord Bryce's observation is true only if it is understood to mean that public opinion is the major, but by no means the only, force at work to influence public policy in this country.

Most importantly, remember that our system of constitutional government is not designed to give free, unrestricted play to public opinion-and especially not to majority opinion. In particular, the doctrines of separation of powers and of checks and balances, and the constitutional guarantees of civil rights and liberties are intended to protect minority interests against the excesses of majority views and actions.

Finally, polls are not elections, nor are they substitutes for elections. It is when faced with a ballot that the voter must decide for himself or herself what is important and what is not. He or she must be able to tell the difference between opinions and concrete information, and appreciate the difference between personalities and platforms.

Democracy is more than a simple measurement of opinion. At base, democracy is all about making careful choices among leaders and their positions on issues, and among the governmental actions that may flow from those choices.

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
\(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Journal } & \begin{array}{l}\text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal. }\end{array} \text { 有 }\end{array}\)
1. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer the question: What are the ways in which public opinion is most effectively measured?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Why do victorious candidates some times claim a mandate?
3. Why is it difficult to determine much about public opinion based on the actions of interest groups?
4. Why are straw votes a generally unreliable form of measuring public opinion?
5. Identify the five steps in the polling process.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Analyze Information What are the benefits and drawbacks of releasing to the public the results of public opinion polls on upcoming elections?
7. Recognize Ideologies Give an example of how our system of government works to minimize the influence of public opinion on certain types of decisions.

\section*{Quick Write}

Cause-and-Effect Essay: Research the Topic Use the Internet and other resources to collect information about the history of the topic you chose in Section 1. Find out when the topic first gained prominence in American social life and what events, trends, or factors have had a significant impact on public opinion about that topic.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Public opinion can be measured through elections and through the opinions put forth by interest groups, the media, and personal contacts, but the most accurate way of measuring public opinion is through polls.
2. Candidates claim a mandate when they see their election as a clear statement of public approval of their stands on issues or those of their party.
3. It is not always clear how many people are represented by an interest group and how strongly those people hold particular views.
4. Straw votes do not use scientifically drawn random samples of the population being studied.
5. (1) define the universe, (2) construct a sample, (3) prepare valid questions, (4) select and control how the poll will be taken, (5) analyze and report results
6. Possible benefits: encourage voter turnout if the race is tight; focus attention on public questions and stimulate discussion of them. Possible drawbacks: may shape opinions they intend to measure; can create a bandwagon effect that brings more votes to the candidate who is ahead in the polls; can discourage turnout if people believe the election already has a clear winner
7. Possible examples: The First Amendment guarantee of freedom of speech and assembly enable minority views to be heard. Also, many government positions are appointed, not elected.
QuIck write Students should collect information from reliable sources on their chosen topic.

\section*{CITIZENSHIP \\ 101 \\ Conducting a Poll}

\begin{abstract}
We live in a representative democracy in which the voters elect representatives to act on their behalf. Your school's student government may operate the same way. One way representatives can gain insight into the thoughts and feelings of their constituents - that is, understand public opinion -is to conduct a poll. A well-constructed poll can help provide solid information about what a group of people thinks. Yet putting together a good poll requires knowledge and skill.
\end{abstract}

\section*{등 ollow these simple steps to conduct an effective poll.}
1. Define the universe. In polling, the universe is the group of people whose opinion you are interested in learning about. For a presidential candidate, it may be all the voters in the country. For a candidate for student council, it may be all the students in a school, and so on.
2. Construct your sample. In some cases, you may be able to poll every person in the universe. If that is not possible, you must identify whom you will poll-your sample. Your sample should be a number of people chosen randomly from the universe. The goal is to poll a group that represents the whole universe in its views and attitudes.

Note: The people who volunteer to be polled or who walk by a specific corner of your school or community are not a random sample.
3. Prepare valid questions. Good poll questions do not lead people to an answer or convey a strong attitude about an issue. They provide enough information to frame the question properly, but not so much that they promote one response or another. Before you conduct your poll, invite friends or colleagues to review your questions to help ensure their reliability and objectivity
4. Conduct interviews carefully. Just as a pollster must prepare questions carefully, he or she must

D) What do you think?
1. Why do you think that selecting your sample from volunteers or from a group that passes by a specific hallway or corner might not be a valid random sample?
2. Explain how an interviewer's behavior affects the way people respond to a poll question. You Try It Follow the steps laid out here, and design a public opinion poll about an issue in your school or community with detailed descriptions of the universe, how you will construct your sample, and what questions you will ask.
> 1. GOVERNMENT ONLINE Citizenship Activity Pack For activities on conducting polls, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com ask questions carefully. Remember, the goal is to get answers that truly reflect people's attitudes at the time. An interviewer must be careful not to seem to lead respondents to a particular answer.
5. Interpret the results. Polls are not perfect. If you have used a random sample, your results will contain a margin of error. When you interpret your results, remember to analyze the intensity, the stability, and the relevance of the opinions you collect.

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Conduct a Poll. It includes a lesson plan, assessment rubrics, a student survey, and a poster with examples of forced-choice, scaled, and ranked questions. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on How to Conduct a Poll at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will analyze the process for constructing and conducting an opinion poll.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{READ}

Have students read the introduction aloud. If students have computer access, you may have them search for more about scientific polling.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Have students discuss ways to create a random sample. (Methods might include interviewing every fourth student entering the school or scrambling a list of all students and choosing every tenth name.) Ask students how the wording of questions might lead people to respond in a particular way. (Questions might not provide proper context or might include "loaded" language that creates an emotional response. For example, people tend to react more negatively to "bureaucrat" than to "public servant.")

\section*{IDENTIFY LIMITS OF POLLS}

Ask: What is margin of error? (It is the mathematical range within which a poll result might vary from the actual result. For example, a poll with a margin of error of plus or minus 3 is expected to be no more than 3 percent higher or lower than the actual opinion of the universe.) Have students describe the proper way to use polls. (Polls are estimates, not perfect measures. They can focus attention on public questions and help politicians plan campaign strategy and craft public policy.)

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect and assess student plans for a public opinion poll. Have students answer the What Do You Think questions.

\section*{Answers}
1. In both of these cases, not all members of the universe have an equal chance of being interviewed. People who ask to be interviewed are self-selecting. A specific location excludes people who do not routinely use that hall way.
2. An interviewer's tone of voice or the emphasis given to certain words can influence replies.
3. A strong plan will include an accurate definition of the universe, a means of obtaining a random sample, and well-crafted questions.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How has the development of different media helped inform the public about politics?
\begin{tabular}{|l|}
\hline Newspapers \\
- America's first \\ regular news- \\ paper 1704 \\
- first daily \\ newspaper \\
1783 \\
- today more \\
than 10,000 \\
- daily newspa- \\ pers declining \\
for decades \\
- most now local \\
\end{tabular}

\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Television \\
- boomed in 1950s \\
early 1960s replaced newspapers as main source of political information \\ now main news source for 80 percent of population \\ independent broadcasting, cable, PBS
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
The Internet - roots in Defense Department Cold War research \\
- by early 2000s mass medium \\
- now second to television as source of political news \\
- almost all government and political organizations have sites \\ weblogs usually devoted to specific subject \\ podcastsdownloadable digital recordings
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 3} The Mass Media

\section*{Guiding Question}

How has the development of different media helped inform the public about politics? Use the flowchart like the one below to take notes on the development of different media.

Political Dictionary
- medium - public agenda
- weblog - sound bite

\section*{Objectives}
1. Examine the role of the mass media in providing the public with political information.
2. Explain how the mass media influence politics.
3. Understand the factors that limit the influence of the media.

Image Above: People get their news from various media outlets, such as the Internet.

How much television do you watch each day? Little or none? Two hours a day? Three hours? More? However much you watch, you no doubt know that your peers spend a great deal of time in front of the TV. Studies show that by the time the average student graduates from high school today, he or she will have spent nearly 11,000 hours in classrooms and nearly 15,000 hours watching television. On average, high school students now watch more than 20 hours of TV programming each week.

Television has an extraordinary impact on the lives of everyone in this country. So do all of the other elements of the mass media.

\section*{The Role of Mass Media}

A medium is a means of communication; it transmits some kind of information. Media is the plural of medium. The mass media include those means of communication that can reach large, widely dispersed audiences simultaneously.

Five major elements of the mass media are especially significant in American politics today. Ranked in terms of their impact, they are television, the Internet, newspapers, radio, and magazines. Other forms of the media, including books, films, and satellite radio, play a lesser but still relevant role in the political process.

Importantly, the mass media do not function as an arm of government in the United States. They are, instead, almost entirely privately owned and operated. And, unlike political parties and interest groups, their prime goal is not that of influencing the course of public affairs. They are, nonetheless, an extremely potent force in American politics.

Along with entertainment, the media provide political information. They do so directly when they report the news, in a television newscast or in the news columns of a newspaper, for example. The media also provide a large amount of political information less directly-for example, in radio and television programs, magazine articles, and blogs. These venues often deal with such public topics as crime, healthcare, climate change, or some aspect of American foreign policy. Either way, people acquire most of what they know about government and politics from the various forms of media.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DIGITAL AGE LITERACY}

To practice digital age literacy in this section, use the Chapter 8 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 194). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after discussing the role of electronic media in politics. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 195).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • The public gets information on issues of public interest through the mass media-television, newspapers, radio, magazines, and the Internet. • The media influence the public agenda by focusing attention on certain issues and helping candidates appeal directly to voters. - The media influence is limited because of limited coverage of public affairs.
CONCEPTS: democratic values, rights and responsibilities of citizenship
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Mass media influence the public agenda and electoral politics. • To be informed, citizens must seek out in-depth coverage of public affairs.

Television Politics and television have gone hand in hand since the technology first appeared. The first public demonstration of television occurred at the New York World's Fair in 1939. President Franklin Roosevelt opened the fair on camera, and a comparative handful of local viewers watched him do so on tiny five- and seven-inch screens.

World War II interrupted the development of the new medium, but it began to become generally available in the late 1940s. Television boomed in the 1950s. The first transcontinental broadcast came in 1951, when President Harry Truman, speaking in Washington, D.C., addressed the delegates attending the Japanese Peace Treaty Conference in San Francisco.

Today, television is all-pervasive. As you read earlier, there is at least one television set in 98 percent of the nation's 115 million households. Just a few years ago, there were more homes in this country with television sets than with indoor plumbing facilities!

Television replaced newspapers as the principal source of political information for a majority of Americans in the early 1960s. Now, television is the principal source of news for an estimated 80 percent of the population.

The more than 1,700 television stations in this country include more than 1,400 commercial outlets and some 350 public broadcasters. Three major national networks have dominated television from its infancy: the Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS), the American Broadcasting Company (ABC), and the National Broadcasting Company (NBC). Those three giants furnish most of the programming for more than 500 local stations, and that programming accounts for nearly half of all television viewing time today.

The major networks' audience share has been declining in recent years, however. The 5 C-SPAN, the Cable-Satellite Public Affairs Network, is sponsored by the cable industry. C-SPAN, C-SPAN2, and C-SPAN3 cover a broad range of public events-including major floor debates and committee hearings in Congress, presidential and other press conferences, and speeches by notable public figures.

6 The world's first newspaper was almost certainly the Acta Diurna, a daily gazette in Rome dating from 59 s.c. Another very early forerunner of today's newspapers was Tsing Pao, a court journal in Beijing. Press historians believe that its first issues, printed from stone blocks, were published beginning in AD. 618; its last issue appeared in 1911.
main challenges to them have come from three sources: (1) several independent broadcasting groups-for example, the Fox Network; (2) cable broadcasters, such as Turner Broadcasting, and especially its Cable News Network (CNN); and (3) the Public Broadcasting System (PBS) and its more than 350 local stations. \({ }^{5}\)

Newspapers The first regularly published newspaper in America, the Boston NewsLetter, appeared in \(1704 .{ }^{6}\) Other papers soon followed, in Boston and then in Philadelphia, New York, Annapolis, and elsewhere. By 1775, 37 newspapers were being published \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is the principal news source for the majority of Americans?

\section*{comparative} ad . by comparison all-pervasive
adj. spread throughout

\section*{Where do we get our campaign news?}

The number of Americans who use the Internet as their source for campaign news has more than doubled since 2000. How does this compare with the number of people watching network or local television?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 8, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 187)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 189)
L3 L2 Core Worksheets (pp. 191, 192)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 194)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 195)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 196)
L3 Quiz A (p. 198) L2 Quiz B (p. 199)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 200) L2 Chapter Test B (p. 203)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- understand the impact of the Internet as a political medium by examining study findings.
- evaluate the use of the Internet for electoral politics by analyzing a candidate's Web site.
- recognize the strengths of the Internet as a campaign medium by designing a home page for a candidate Web site.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 187) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 189)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 8F, The Internet and the 2008 Election at a Glance. Explain that this table lists key findings in a research study. Have students examine the findings and answer the question in their notebook.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students do research to find out how online donations affected the 2008 presidential campaign, and write a brief report.

\section*{Answers}

\section*{Checkpoint television}

Where do we get our campaign news? Local and network television have both declined as a source for campaign news since 2000 but still exceed the Internet.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER RESPONSES}

Invite students to offer their response to the Bellringer question: If you were a candidate for President, how would you apply the results of this study to your campaign? (possible responses: create a very attractive Web site; include lots of opportunities for citizens to interact with the site and express their opinions; include videos of television appearances and audio clips of speeches; include an easy way to donate online; collect e-mail addresses of visitors and send them regular e-mail updates; encourage site visitors to volunteer to work for the campaign; constantly update the site with campaign news and documents supporting the candidate's positions; sponsor conversations about issues on social networking sites)
Point out that the Internet has drawbacks for campaigns as well. If a candidate makes a political mistake, the news will spread widely and quickly over the Internet. Also, rumors spread quickly online, so campaigns must closely monitor online chatter and respond to negative posts quickly.

\section*{The Power of the Press}

The phrase "tyellow fournalism" came about in the late 1800 s when competing newspaper owners William Randolph Hearst and Joseph Pulitzer used dramatic headlines and editorials instead of facts to stir up public opinion in favor of war with Spain - and to sell more papers. Historians say that "nothing better illustrates the power of the press and the misuse of that power" as well as the Spanish-American War. Does yellow journalism exist today?

\section*{"You furnish the pictures}

\section*{I'll furnish the war."}
-William Randolph Hearst, 1897
in the colonies. All of them were weekly papers, and they were printed on one sheet that was usually folded to make four pages. The nation's first daily newspaper, the Pennsylvania Evening Post and Daily Advertiser, began publication in 1783 .

Those first papers regularly carried political news. Several spurred the colonists to revolution, carrying the news of independence and the text of the Declaration of Independence to people throughout the colonies. Thomas Jefferson marked the vital role of the press in the earliest years of the nation when, in 1787, he wrote to a friend:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}
.. . were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter.
> -Thomas Jefferson, Letter to Colone Edward Carrington, January 16, 1787

The 1st Amendment, added to the Constitution in 1791, made the same point regarding the importance of newspapers with its guarantee of the freedom of the press.

Today, more than 10,000 newspapers are published in the United States, including some 1,430 dailies, more than 7,200 weeklies, some 550 semiweeklies, and several hundred foreign-language papers. Those publications have a combined circulation of about 150 million copies per issue. About 45 percent of the nation's adult population read a newspaper every day, and they spend, on average, a half hour doing so.

The number of daily newspapers has been declining for decades, however, from more than 2,000 in 1920 to 1,745 in 1980 and to about 1,430 today. Radio and television, and more recently the Internet, have been major factors in that downward trend.

Nevertheless, newspapers are still an important source of information about government and politics. Most papers cover stories in greater depth than television does, and many try to present various points of view

\section*{Background}

CAMPAIGN MISINFORMATION The strategic use of rumors, half-truths, and outright falsehoods have long been part of political campaigns. Political organizations unleash barrages of "attack ads"-strongly negative comments about an opponent placed in the media. Often such ads turn out to be less than truthful. Yet multiple repetitions of the accusations, accompanied by powerful images, influence many voters. In the 2008 campaign, a new trend emerged. The media increasingly reported on the truthfulness of political statements made in debates, speeches, interviews, and ads, based on evaluations by nonpartisan organizations. Many sites devoted to debunking campaign assertions appeared on the Web. In some cases, politicians backed down when their statements proved false. Still, powerful attack ads can overshadow the corrections.

\section*{Answers}

The Power of the Press Possible response: Yes. Tabloids use dramatic headlines and sensational stories with only a loose connection to facts.
in their editorial sections. Those newspapers that have the most substantial reputations and national influence today include The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Wall Street Journal, and USA Today.

Most newspapers are local papers. That is, most of their readers live in or near the communities in which those papers are published. While many local papers do provide some national and international news coverage, most of them focus on events closer to home.

Advances in telecommunications and computerized operations are changing that basic fact, however. Now, each day's editions of USA Today, The New York Times, and The Wall Street Journal are generally available on the day of publication around the country.

Radio Radio as it exists today began in 1920. On November 2 of that year, station KDKA in Pittsburgh went on the air with presidential election returns. The new medium soon became immensely popular.

By the 1930s, radio had assumed much of the role in American society that television has today. It was a major entertainment medium, and millions of people planned their daily schedules around their favorite programs. The networks also provided the nation with dramatic coverage of important events, and radio exposed the American people to national and international politics as never before.

President Franklin Roosevelt was the first major public figure to use radio effectively. The late author David Halberstam described the impact of FDR's famous fireside chats:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

He was the first great American radio voice. For most Americans of [that] generation, their first memory of politics would be of sitting by a radio and hearing that voice, strong, confident, totally at ease. . . . Most Americans in the previous 160 years had never even seen a President; now almost all of them were hearing him, in their own homes. It was literally and figuratively electrifying.
-David Halberstam, The Powers That Be

Many thought that the arrival of television would bring the end of radio as a major medium. Radio has survived, however, in large part because it is so conveniently available. People can hear music, news, sports, and other radio programs in a great many places where they cannot watch television-in their cars, at work, in remote areas, and in any number of other places and situations. The arrival of satellite radio has added to radio's popularity. With this new technology, digital radio signals are beamed from a communications satellite, allowing subscribers to tune into their favorite station anywhere in the country, and often with no commercial interruptions.

Radio remains a major source of news and other political information. The average person hears some 15 hours of radio each week. No one knows how many millions of radios there are in this country-in homes, offices, cars, backpacks, and a great many other places. Those radios can pick up some 14,000 stations on the AM and FM dials.

Many AM stations are affiliated with one or another of the national networks. Unlike television, however, most radio programming is local. There are also some 700 public radio stations, most of them on the FM dial. These noncommercial outlets are part of National Public Radio (NPR), which is radio's counterpart of television's PBS.

Most radio stations spend little time on public affairs today. Many do devote a few minutes every hour to "the news"-really, to a series of headlines. All-news stations are now found in most of the larger and many medium-sized communities. They are usually on the air 24 hours a day, and they do provide somewhat more extensive coverage of the day's events. A growing number of stations now serve the preferences of Latino Americans, African Americans, and other minority listeners.

Over recent years, talk radio has become an important source of political comment. The opinions and analyses offered by a number of talk show hosts can be found on hundreds of stations across the United States. Among the most prominent talk broadcasters today are conservatives Rush Limbaugh, Sean Hannity, and Bill O'Reilly, and liberals Thom Hartmann and Rachel Maddow. Their

\section*{Background}

Evaluating web pages Barack Obama's use of the Internet is being hailed as a key tool in his successful presidential campaign. As students' use of the Internet continues to grow, the skills to critically evaluate Web pages become more important. Cornell University offers Jim Kapoun's "Five Criteria for Evaluating Web Pages." The questions to ask include: What is the purpose of the document and why was it produced? What institution publishes the document? What opinions (if any) are expressed by the author? When was it produced? Is the information presented cited correctly? Who wrote the page, and can you contact him or her? Does the publisher list his or her qualifications? Learning to ask the right questions about Web pages can help students find the best of what the Internet has to offer.

\section*{ANALYZE A CANDIDATE WEB SITE}

Display Transparency 8G, Candidate Web Site, which shows a page from a candidate's Web site during an election campaign. Barack Obama was the first candidate to use the Internet as an effective media resource, setting the standard for future campaigns to follow. This site also makes use of the Internet as an effective media resource. Ask: What forms of media does this candidate use to reach voters? (The Web site offers video clips, photographs, speeches, written information about issues in Spanish as well as English, an e-mail link, biographies, YouTube, blog, and a link for making a contribution.) Discuss how this site illustrates ways in which the Internet can be used to help a candidate get elected. (It is a campaign Web site, with the purpose of influencing voters. At the Hot Topics link, the candidate could educate voters about his position on issues. The photos and links to biographical information about himself, his wife, and his running mate would help site visitors relate to them as people. The site includes ways for visitors to participate by e-mail, on the blog, or through contributions.)
Ask: What characteristics of the Internet make it an effective medium for electoral politics? (The Internet is a mass medium that can spread the candidate's message widely and quickly. Unlike television or the radio, the content remains available online for visitors to access at their convenience, and can be updated constantly. The Internet also offers a convenient, inexpensive way to solicit donations and identify supporters.)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 8 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 191 ), which provides guidelines for students to design a home page for a candidate's Web site, aimed at reaching today's voter. At the same time, distribute the Rubric for Designing a Web Site (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 259).

L2 \(\mathbf{L 1}\) Differentiate For these students, distribute the adapted Chapter 8 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 192), which is a simplified version and which gives step-by-step guidance. programs air nationally and attract millions of listeners every weekday.

Magazines Several magazines were published in colonial America. Benjamin Franklin began one of the very first, his General Magazine, in Philadelphia in 1741. On into the early 1900s, most magazines published in the United States were generally devoted to literature and the social graces. The first political magazines-among them, Harper's Weekly and the Atlantic Monthly-appeared in the mid-1800s.

The progressive reform period in the early 1900s spawned several journals of opinion, including a number that featured articles by the day's leading muckrakers. \({ }^{7}\) For decades before radio and television, magazines constituted the only national medium.

Some 12,000 magazines are published in the United States today. Most are trade publications,

7 The muckrakers were journalists who exposed wrongdoing in politics, business, and industry. The term was coined by Theodore Roosevelt in 1906 and is derived from the raking of muck-that is, manure and other barnyard debris. The muckrakers set the pattern for what is now called dinvestigative reporing ers set the pattern for what is now called investigative reporting.
such as Veterinary Forum and the Automotive Executive, or periodicals that target some special personal interest, such as Golf Digest, Teen, and American Rifkman. Among magazines with the highest circulation today: AARP the Magazine, Reader's Digest, and National Geographic. They each sell some 10 to 20 million or more copies per issue.

Three news magazines, Time, Newsweek, and U.S. News & World Report, rank in the top 35 periodicals in terms of circulation. They have a combined circulation of nearly 10 million copies a week, and they are important sources of political news and comment. There are a number of other magazines devoted to public affairs, most of them vehicles of opinion, including the Nation, the New Republic, the National Review, and the Weekly Standard.

The Internet The Internet is fast becoming a leading source of political news and information for the American people. Its roots can be traced to a Defense Department research project of the Cold War era. In 1969, the DoD's Advanced Research Projects Agency established a four-computer network in the \section*{The Transformation of Mass Media}

As media have changed, so too has the way that people participate. What has been the impact of the Internet on political discussion?

Radio spread widely in the 1920s and 1930s, giving a national voice to elected officials and gifted speakers.

The "big three" networks, ABC, CBS, and NBC, dominated the limited channels of early television. Nightly news programs by respected anchors, such as Walter Cronkite (right), commanded large audiences and set the agenda for the nation.

\section*{THEN... A Few Voices Imparting thiormation} limited government and a free press Freedom of the press-and of all media-is at the very heart of the American system of limited government. Its roots extend back even to colonial times. In 1735, John Peter Zenger was arrested in New York for printing strong political opinions. He was put on trial, but the jury of local New Yorkers found him

Today, for the first time in history, a single person, with a minimal investment, can put his or her views out, not only before the local populace but before the entire world. Some individuals have formed Internet news services that provide specialized information instantaneously about politics, weather, the stock market, sports, and entertainment. In addition to the print and broadcast media, the world now has a third branch

\section*{Answers}

The Transformation of Mass Media The Internet has enabled anyone to join the political discussion.

232 Mass Media and Public Opinion

\section*{Constitutional Principles} not guilty. The trial marked a major moment in the development of a free press. of the press-the online service.

Pentagon designed to protect military secrets from hostile actions. Two years later that grid (ARPANET) had grown to include some two dozen computers at 15 widely scattered locations across the country.

From those beginnings, the Internet has grown phenomenally, and it continues to do so. By the 1990s, it had expanded into the private sector, and by the beginning of the 21 st century, it had become a mass medium. Today, more than 75 percent of the American people report that they have access to a computer at home, in the workplace, or at school, and nearly two-thirds of them say they go online on a regular basis.

Television remains the most widely used source for political news and information, but the Internet is now in second place, ahead of newspapers, radio, and magazines. One of every four people say they regularly go online to "get the news." Younger people are especially inclined to do so

Other media have recognized the Internet's capabilities. Nearly all newspapers have Web sites where all or most of the stories carried in their print versions can be found. Most magazines are also available online, and most television stations maintain home pages that provide links to many other sources. With only a few exceptions, media outlets allow visitors to view their Web sites free of charge

Much the same can be said of virtually all government agencies, interest groups, political parties, elected officials, and candidates' campaign organizations. The extraordinary range of printed, audio, and visual information available on the Internet really defies description. To the point, much of the updated factual content of this textbook has been drawn from reliable Internet sources.

The Internet has spawned the growth of weblogs-often called "blogs"-Web site postings usually devoted to some specific subject. Many are written by single authors, others are the work of several contributors, and many allow visitors to post their own comments. Those blogs devoted to government and politics typically feature links to articles and commentaries from a variety of sources. Podcasts, digital recordings that are posted and can be downloaded from the Internet, have also grown spectacularly over recent years.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are weblogs?
spawned v. produced, brough forth forth inclined adj. persuaded, convinced

Television and radio seek out and broadcast the opinions and questions of their audiences, while the Internet transforms the way people get political information. Instead of merely receiving information, people are e-mailing, podcasting, and creating videos to add their voices to political discussion. Television and the Internet joined forces (as shown here) when CNN partnered with YouTube to allow ordinary citizens to question presidential candidates in the 2008 primary debates.

\section*{Background}

MEDIA INFLUENCE According to a study published by the Annenberg Public Policy Center in late 2008, many Americans were unable to identify the stands that major party candidates took on various issues such as abortion, free trade, the Iraq War, and children's health insurance. It appeared that not much education about the candidates' positions had taken place in the election campaign. Interestingly, in 2004 a similar study found that people who watched late-night comedy shows such as those hosted by David Letterman, Jay Leno, and Jon Stewart knew more about the candidates and their positions than those who did not watch such programs. Young viewers of the Daily Show with Jon Stewart scored particularly well on campaign knowledge-even better than young people who watched network news programs, and just as well as those who watched cable news programs or read newspapers.

\section*{DESIGN A HOME PAGE}

Tell students that they will create a pencil-and-paper version of a home page for an imaginary candidate for President. Point out that a home page is the gateway to the rest of the information on the Web site. They will not create the entire site content. Instead, they will decide the kinds of content they would include, so they can provide links to it on their home page. Remind them that Web sites can include a range of media-video clips, sound files, in-depth articles, photos, even campaign-related music and ring tones. Explain that their goal is to attract sup-port-and ultimately votes-for their candidate.
As a first step, have students discuss ideas for Web site content with a partner to help them create their content list on the worksheet. Explain that they should create links on their home page to each piece of site content on their list. Circulate to offer suggestions and refocus student effort as needed. Remind students to consult their Web site home page rubrics for guidance as they move on to designing their home page.
Part 2 of the worksheet asks students to write a memo that explains the thinking behind their home page design. In their memo, students should describe the content visitors would find when they follow each link.
L4 Differentiate Have students choose two links on their home page and create a content page that would appear on visitors' screens when they follow each of these links.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for more information on the transformation of mass media.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Weblogs are Web site postings usually devoted to some specific subject that may be written by one or many contributors. Many allow visitors to post comments.

\section*{REVIEW HOME PAGE DESIGNS AND MEMOS}

Have students post their home page designs at their desks or on a bulletin board or wall, along with their memos explaining their design and links to site content. Then have students move through the classroom reviewing each other's work.

\section*{SHARE STUDENT REACTION}

After students have had an opportunity to review their classmates' efforts, have them identify examples that seemed especially impressive and explain why. For example, did the home page include a clear, compelling message about the candidate? Did it link to information presented in a variety of media forms? Did the home page make them want to follow the links to learn more about the candidate?

\section*{INTERNET GROWTH}

Display Transparency 8H, U.S. IP and Internet Traffic Projection. Point out what the text says about the American people's online computer use. In addition, point out that a phenomenal growth of use and data traffic is projected to take place in the near future. Analysts predict that by 2015 there will be an "exaflood"—or a tsunami of bytes—of IP (an Internet protocol address of devices participating in computer networks) and Internet traffic. The flood could even reach one million million billion bytes. (Byte is the lowest familiar size for measuring data, such as one character. Measurements of kilobytes, where one kilobyte equals 1,024 bytes, are probably most familiar.) Look at the scale. Consider that the size of a student's ten-page research paper e-mailed to school is approximately only 86 kilobytes. Consider then that one photo from a digital camera can equal 3 megabytes of Internet traffic. Have students examine the graph now. Then hypothesize what possible uses could cause the growth. (faster, bigger games; TV shows; videos; digital publishing)

\section*{Answers}

Media Influence Possible response: The first cartoon suggests that popular talk show hosts have as much political influence as both houses of Congress. The second cartoon suggests that listeners tend to "parrot," or repeat, the political opinions they hear on the radio.

\section*{Media Influence}

The mass media have a great impact on the issues that people focus on and how they think about the world around them. What are the cartoonists saying here about media influence?

\section*{The Media and Politics}

Clearly, the media play a significant role in American politics. Just how significant that role is, and just how much influence the media have, is the subject of a long, still unsettled debate.

Whatever its weight, the media's influence can be seen in any number of situations. It is most visible in two areas: (1) the public agenda and (2) electoral politics.

The Public Agenda The media play a very large role in shaping the public agenda, the societal problems that the nation's political leaders and the general public agree need government attention. As they report and comment on events, issues, policies, and personalities, the media determine to a very large extent what public matters the people will think and talk about-and, so, those matters about which public-policy makers will be most concerned.

To put the point another way, the media have the power to focus the public's attention on a particular issue. They do so by emphasizing some things and ignoring or downplaying others. For example, they feature certain items on the front page or at the top of the newscast and bury others.

It is not correct to say that the media tell the people what to think; but it is clear that they tell the people what to think about. A look at any issue of a daily newspaper or a quick review of the content of any television or Internet news story will demonstrate that point. Remember, people rely on the media for most of the information they receive on public issues.

The mass media also have a direct impact on the nation's leaders. Some years ago, Stephen Hess, a widely respected authority on the media, identified several news organizations that form the "inner ring" of influence in Washington, D.C. He cited the three major television networks, CBS , ABC, and NBC; three newspapers, The New York Times, The Washington Post,

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 81, Collateral Damage, as a wrap-up activity on the mass media and electoral politics. Explain that this cartoon appeared just before the 2008 presidential election. Ask: What is a "toss up" State? (a State where the vote is expected to be close and either candidate could win. It is commonly known as a battleground State.) Who do the man and woman represent? (potential votes) What is happening to them? (They are being bombarded with political messages from a variety of media and information sources.) What does "collateral damage" mean? (unintended harm caused by an action) What is the collateral damage in this cartoon? (voter exasperation) and The Wall Street Journal; the leading news wire service, the Associated Press (AP); and the three major news weeklies, Time, Newsweek, and U.S. News & World Report. CNN, MSNBC, Fox News, Reuters, and USA Today have since joined that select group.

Top political figures in and out of government pay close and continuing attention to these sources. In fact, the President receives a daily digest of the news reports, analyses, and editorial comments that these and other sources broadcast and publish.

Electoral Politics You have seen several illustrations of the media's importance in electoral politics as you have read this book. Recall, for example, the fact that the media, and in particular television, have contributed to a decline in the place of political parties in American politics

Television has made candidates far less dependent on party organizations than they once were. Before television, the major parties generally dominated the election process. They recruited most candidates who ran for office, and they ran those candidates' campaigns. The candidates depended on party organizations in order to reach the voters.

Now, both television and the Internet allow candidates to appeal directly to the people, without the help of a party organization. Candidates for office need not be experienced politicians who have worked their way up a party's political ladder over the course of several elections. It is not unusual for candidates to assemble their own campaign organizations and operate with only loose connections to their political parties.

Remember, too, that how voters see a candidate-the impressions they have of that candidate's personality, character, abilities, and so on-is one of the major factors that influence voting behavior. Candidates and professional campaign managers are quite aware of this fact. They know that the kind of "image" a candidate projects in the media can have a telling effect on the outcome of an election.

Candidates regularly try to manipulate media coverage to their advantage. Campaign strategists understand that, even with the Internet, most people learn almost everything they know about a candidate from television. They therefore plan campaigns that emphasize television exposure. Such technical considerations as timing, location, lighting, and camera angles loom large, often at the expense of such substantive matters as the issues involved in an election or a candidate's qualifications for public office.

Good campaign managers also know that most television news programs are built out of stories that (1) take no more than a minute or two of air time, and (2) show people doing something interesting or exciting. Newscasts seldom feature "talking heads," speakers who drone on and on about some complex issue.

Instead, newscasts featuring candidates are usually short, sharply focused sound bites-snappy reports that can be aired in 30 or 45 seconds or so. Staged and carefully orchestrated visits to historic sites, factory gates, toxic-waste dumps, football games, and the like, have become a standard part of the electoral scene.

\section*{Limits on Media Influence}

Having said all this, it is all too easy to overstate the media's role in American politics. A number of built-in factors work to limit the media's impact on the behavior of the American voting public.

For one thing, few people follow international, national, or even local political events very closely. Many studies of voting behavior show that in the typical election, only about 10 percent of those who can vote and only about 15 percent of those who do vote are well informed on the many candidates and issues involved in that election. In short, only a small part of the public actually takes in and understands much of what the media have to say about public affairs.

Moreover, most people who do pay some attention to politics are likely to be selective about it. That is, they most often watch, listen to, and read those sources that generally agree with their own viewpoints. They regularly ignore those sources with which they disagree. Thus, for example, many Democrats do not watch the televised campaign appearances or visit the Web sites of Republican candidates. Nor do many Republicans

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Separate the class into three groups, with one group representing television, one newspapers, and one news magazines. Choose a story currently receiving broad media coverage and ask one group to watch coverage on three television news programs, one to read coverage in three different newspapers, and one to read coverage in three different news magazines. As a group, have students compare coverage in the various media.
L2 ELL Differentiate Have students prepare a two-page "Guide for Using the Mass Media to Find Out About Public Issues" that would be useful to a newcomer to the United States. Ask them to include the names of newspapers, magazines, and TV and radio networks available locally. The guide should provide brief descriptions of what each source offers relating to public issues.
L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 8 Section 3 Extend Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 196), which includes an excerpt from an article about the impact of the Internet on American politics. Have students read the article and then answer the reflection questions. As a class, discuss the answers. You may also wish to have students collect data and write a brief report on the use of the Internet in the most recent presidential election.

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Students will act in the role of consultants hired by major newspapers to help them improve coverage of government-related news and attract younger readers. In this role, they will choose an article, rewrite it, and then write a memo suggesting ways to improve current events coverage and offering strategies for attracting younger readers.

To see this lesson plan, go to

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Mass media allow candidates to appeal directly to the people, with less help from party organizations. Campaign strategists plan television exposure to project a favorable image.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L4Have students write a brief essay on what they consider to be the best sources of news and information and why. Their essays should include specific examples to support their points.
L3 work.
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 198)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 199)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The role of the mass \\ media (Questions \\
\(1,2,3)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an "infographic" that \\ describes the "American media," "ith \\ images and captions that illustrate its \\ different features.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The impact of the \\ media in politics \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students work in pairs to read through \\ the section "The Media and Politics," and \\ then criate three quiz questions for their \\ partner on one of the subsections "The \\ Public Agenda" and "Electoral Politics").
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The limits on media \\ influence (Questions \\
\(5,6,7)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students read and create an outtine for \\ the last section, "Limits on Media Influence."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
read newspaper stories about the campaign efforts of Democratic candidates.

Another important limit on the media's impact is the content the media carries. This is especially true of radio and television. Most television programs, for example, have little or nothing to do with public affairs, at least not directly. (A number of popular programs do relate to public affairs in an indirect way, however. Thus, many are "crime shows," and crime is certainly a matter of public concern. Many also carry a political message-for example, that the police are hard-working public servants.)

Advertisers who pay the high costs of television air time want to reach the largest possible audiences. Because most people are more interested in being entertained than in being informed about public issues, few pub-lic-affairs programs air in prime time. There are exceptions, however, including 60 Minutes, \(20 / 20\), Dateline, and 360 .

Radio and television mostly "skim" the news. They report only what their news editors determine to be the most important or the most interesting stories of the day. Even on widely watched evening news programs, most reports are presented in 60 - to 90 -second time slots. In short, the broadcast media seldom give the kind of in-depth coverage that a good newspaper can supply.

Newspapers are not as hampered as many other media in their ability to cover public affairs. Still, much of the content of most newspapers is nonpolitical. Like nearly all of television and radio, newspapers depend on their advertising revenues, which in turn depend on producing a product with the widest possible appeal. Newspaper readers are often more interested in the sports pages and the social, travel, advertising, and entertainment sections of a newspaper than they are in its news and editorial pages.

In-depth coverage of public affairs is available in the media to those who want it and will seek it out. There are a number of good newspapers around the country. Indepth coverage can also be found on the Internet, in several magazines, and on a number of radio and television stations, including public broadcast outlets. Remember, however, that there is nothing about democracy that guarantees an alert and informed public. Like voting and other forms of political participation, being an informed citizen requires some effort.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline & Essential Questions response to the chapter \\
\hline SECTION \(¢\) ASSESSMENT & \begin{tabular}{ll}
Journal & \begin{tabular}{c}
Essential Question, go to your \\
Essential Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
&
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer this question: How has the development of different media helped inform the public about politics?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Cite an example of an influential medium in our society.
3. What is the status of newspapers today compared to 1980 , and what are the likely explanations for this change?
4. What is the media's role in shaping the public agenda?
5. What are sound bites, and what do they suggest about the limits of media influence?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Predict Consequences What might happen to the power of the media if the 1st Amendment guarantee of freedom of the press were to be repealed?
7. Recognize Cause and Effect What are some of the effects of the fact that most television viewers want to be entertained rather than informed?

\section*{Quick Write}

Cause-and-Effect Essay: Write a Thesis Statement A thesis states specifically what you will cover in your essay. Write a thesis statement for a cause-and-effect essay on the topic you chose in Section 1. You will use your thesis to develop an organizational structure for your essay.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The development of mass media enabled political news to be spread more widely and more quickly. Early newspapers spurred colonists toward revolution. Magazines communicated news nationally until radio and television arrived. Magazines promoted reforms in the early 1900s, and top news magazines remain an important source today. Radio enabled Franklin Roosevelt to speak directly to the people during the Depression and war years. Today, all-news stations cover politics, and talk radio offers political opinion. The development of television enabled people to see and hear political figures. Today television is our main source of political information. The Internet is a growing source. Most other media also have an online presence. The Internet allows citizens easily to join the political discussion.
2. Examples include television, the Internet, newspapers, radio, and magazines.
3. Newspapers have been declining, due mainly to competition from radio, television, and the Internet.
4. The media focus public attention on particular issues by emphasizing some things and ignoring or downplaying others.
5. Sound bites are snappy reports that can be aired in about 30 or 45 seconds. They suggest that media coverage often stresses style more than substance.
6. Possible answer: Powerful interests or the government might control the information people receive. Dissent could be blunted.
7. Possible answer: Television airs little public affairs programming, and staying informed requires effort.
QUICK WRITE Students should structure their essay around a clear, concise thesis statement.

\begin{tabular}{l}
\multicolumn{2}{c|}{ The Mass Media's Impact on Public Opinion } \\
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Benefits } & Limits \\
\hline - Help shape the public agenda & - Only a small number of people follow \\
- Influence electoral politics & media very closely. \\
- In-depth media coverage is & - People tend to be selective in \\ available to those who look for it, & choosing political coverage. \\ particularly on the Internet. & - Much media content is shallow and \\
- Changing nature of the media & unrelated to political affairs. \\ allows for more people to actively & - Media, such as radio and television, \\ participate in discussions. & tend to carry only short reports on \\
- \begin{tabular}{l}
Publication of poll results allows \\ media to show how public opinion \\ is measured.
\end{tabular} & - \begin{tabular}{l} general news and politics. \\
\end{tabular} \\
& on advertising revenue, which can \\ sometimes dictate coverage.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary} public affairs p. 215 public opinion p. 215 mass media \(p .217\) peer group p. 218 opinion leader p. 218 mandate p. 220 interest group \(p .221\) public opinion poll \(p .222\) straw vote \(p .222\) universe p. 224 sample \(p\). 224 random sample \(p .224\) quota sample p. 224 medium \(p\). 228 weblog \(p\). 233 public agenda \(p .284\) sound bite p. 235

Media Influence on American Politics

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Choosing Partners for a Study Group Explain that study groups are an excellent way to review information and study for tests. When deciding whom to include in their groups, students should consider which of their peers (1) have similar goals, (2) have comparable study habits, including the time of day they prefer to study (or are available) and their learning style, and (3) have a personality that will complement their own. Suggest that students avoid including friends in their study groups. This choice can lead to more visiting than studying. Students should also consider partners who will balance their own skills and knowledge, who are able to stay on track, and who are self-motivated and can motivate others to learn.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 2 All-in-One Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 2 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debate, p. 217
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the media and public opinion, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Hibbert, Adam. The Power of the Media. Smart Apple Media, 2006.
L2 Kallen, Stuart A., ed. Media Bias. Greenhaven Press, 2004.
L3 Moore, David W. The Opinion Makers: An Insider Exposes the Truth Behind the Polls. Beacon Press, 2008.
L4 Bishop, George F. The Illusion of Public Opinion: Fact and Artifact in American Public Opinion Polls. Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, Inc., 2004.

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) people who hold the same opinion on some particular public issue (b) because public opinion includes only those views that relate to public affairs-politics, public issues, and the making of public policies
2. (a) family and school (b) the mass media, peer groups, opinion leaders, and historic events
3. (a) possible response: being well liked, respected, prominent, trusted; having authority (b) crises, such as an economic downturn or war

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) The cartoon suggests that pollsters keep asking the same questions. A "second opinion" suggests that if the pollster doesn't like the first response, he'll see if he can get a different response the next time. (b) The cartoonist suggests that polls are mainly about producing a particular result rather than finding out true opinion.
5. (a) Politicians want to know public opinion to plan campaign strategy and to craft policies that people want. (b) Possible answer: You can learn about the views of the individuals who wrote these opinions, but you cannot learn how many people share the opinions. (c) Voters can express their opinion in elections by voting for candidates with whom they agree on the issues. However, elections are an inaccurate measure of public opinion because voters often choose candidates based on factors other than the issues.
6. (a) because they use valid scientific techniques in an attempt to identify the true opinion of a particular population (b) It must define the universe, include a representative sample of the chosen universe, include valid questions, be skillfully administered in a way that does not prejudice the results, and be accurately analyzed and reported.
7. (a) Polls have trouble measuring the intensity, stability, and relevance of the opinions they report. (b) that polls shape the opinions they are supposed to measure (c) Polls measure a sample, not the whole universe, and projections based on samples have a margin of error. Also, events might occur between the poll and the election that change voters' minds.

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) What constitutes a "public" in the United States? (b) Why is the opinion of the public about a popular movie o television program not a good example of public opinion?
2. (a) What are the earliest influences on a person's attitudes about public matters? (b) What are factors that might influence a person's public opinions after he or she leaves school?
3. (a) What factors do you think give an opinion leader the ability to shape public opinion? (b) What kinds of historic events are most likely to lead to a significant change in public opinion?

\section*{Section 2}
4. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) What does this cartoon suggest about opinion polls? (b) How does the cartoon exaggerate or downplay the import of opinion polls?

5. (a) Why are many interested in learning the content of public opinion? (b) What can you learn by examining such measures of public opinion as magazine and newspaper articles, editorials, and letters to the editor? (c) What is the relationship between elections and public opinion?
6. (a) Why are scientifically conducted polls described as the best measure of public opinion? (b) What features must a poll have in order to be considered an accurate must a poll have in order to measure of public opinion?
7. (a) What are three factors that even scientifically constructed polls have difficulty accounting for? (b) In addition to their occasional inaccuracy, what is another common criticism of polls? (c) Why do polls sometimes differ from election results?

\section*{Section 3}
8. (a) What makes television perhaps the most effective of the different forms of media? (b) How has the growth of the Internet affected other media?
9. (a) What are the two ways the media affect politics? (b) How does the concept of the "sound bite" illustrate how the media affect politicians and how they work today?
10. (a) How does the content of most media programming limit the media's influence on public opinion? (b) How do the attitudes of the American people affect the influence of the media on public opinion?

\section*{Writing About Government}
11. Use your Quick Write exercises from each Section Assessment to write a cause-and-effect essay about the public affairs issue you selected in Section 1. Be sure to clearly highlight the causes and effects of the issue. Note that there can be multiple causes. See pp. S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity For five days, keep a log of all the time you spend viewing or otherwise interacting with a form of mass media. In addition to keeping track of the number of hours you spend, record: (a) what programs you watch or listen to, and what articles you read;
(b) whether the program discusses any public affairs topics (include entertainment programs that deal with public affairs topics); and (c) what you learned about public affairs.
13. Essential Question Assessment Based on your research and the content you have learned in this chapter, write a newspaper editorial that helps to answer the Essential Question: What is the place of the media and public opinion in a democracy? Your editorial and public opinion in a democracy? Your editorial should focus on your interaction with the media and how or whether it had any impact on your opinions on public affairs.
\begin{tabular}{|cl|}
\hline Essential Questions & \begin{tabular}{l}
To respond to the chapter Essential \\
Journal
\end{tabular} \\
\begin{tabular}{l}
Question, go to your Essential \\
Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 3}
8. (a) Possible answer: People are exposed to television more than any other media.
(b) The growth of the Internet has caused other media to develop their own presence on the Web.
9. (a) The media play a large role in shaping the public agenda and influencing elections. (b) To gain media exposure, politicians must focus less on delivering comprehensive information and more on crafting interesting sound bites that fit easily into the brief story format of newscasts.
10. (a) Most media content contains little on public affairs, and many media just skim the news rather than provide in-depth coverage. Limited and shallow coverage reduces the media's influence on public opinion. (b) Most Americans rely on the major media for entertainment more than for information. Advertisers want the media to give people what they want. As a result, the most widely used media provide little information on public affairs, and people who want information must seek it out.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{The Impact of Television Media on Political Events}

In 1960, most people who listened to the Nixon-Kennedy debates on the radio thought the candidates performed equally well, but for those who watched the debates on television, people thought Kennedy looked vibrant while Nixon looked pale and listless. The power of the media to influence public opinion-and shape history-is well demonstrated in United States history, as shown in the documents below.

\section*{Document 1}

The Nixon-Kennedy debates' significance extended well beyond 1960. The use of television to transmit an image or idea instantly to millions soon made presidential campaigns more of a spectator sport-leading to campaign concepts and phrases such as 'catchy sound bites,' the 'likability' factor and mass marketing.
-Excerpt from "JFK, Nixon usher in marriage of TV, politics" by Greg Botelho from cnn.com

Document 2

\section*{Document 3}

In the area of political affairs, the impact of television has been widely condemned. As the dominant form of mass communication, television is said to have contributed to a variety of maladies including reduced voter turnout, discounting of substantive issues in political campaigns, decline of the political parties, [and] automatic reelection of incumbents. . . . As the public's mind's eye,' television effectively sets the political agenda; the themes and issues that are repeated in television news coverage become the priorities of viewers.
-Excerpt from Is Anyone Responsible?: How Television Frames Political Issues by Shanto Iyengar

Use your knowledge of the media and Documents 1-3 to answer the following questions.

Which statement best summarizes Document 1?
A. The use of television in the Nixon-Kennedy debates led to new campaign concepts.
B. The significance of the Nixon-Kennedy debates was great.
C. Presidential campaigns as they were known changed dramatically when television broadcasted the debates.
D. The phrase "catchy sound bites" came out of the debates.
2. What is the cartoonist's point of view regarding television news in Document 2?
3. What does Document 3 suggest about the influence of television?
4. Pull It Together How do you think the impact of television, and the media in general, will change over time? Consider audience, users, and technology.

\section*{DOCUMENT-B ASED ASSESSMENT}
1. \(A\)
2. The cartoon suggests that the news has a political bias. "Interactive" news could allow the user to "adjust" that bias to get news that is more liberal or more conservative.
3. It suggests that television has had a negative impact on public affairs in several ways. It has depressed voter turnout, discounted campaign issues, contributed to the decline of political parties, and determined public priorities.
4. A good response will acknowledge both sides of the issue and argue persuasively for one or another viewpoint.
Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Students' essays should show cause-and-effect relationships for their selected issue.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Students should keep a thorough record of their media usage.
13. A good student editorial will use findings and information from the chapter to answer the question, "What is the place of the media and public opinion in a democracy?"

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 2}

In what ways should people participate in public affairs?

\section*{CHAPTER 9}

To what extent do interest groups advance or harm democracy?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: To what kind of organization do the people in the image belong? (labor union) What do you think they are doing? (demonstrating to pressure authorities to get something they want) Think about an organization to which you belong. Why did you choose to join? (Students should recognize that they jin organizations because they share interests or goals with the group's members.) In this chapter, students will learn about interest groups. Tell students to begin to explore interest groups by completing the Chapter 9 Essential Question Warmup Activity in the Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}ELL Differentiate Chapter 9 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 213)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

You may wish to teach comparing viewpoints as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 9 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 231) to help students learn the steps in comparing viewpoints. The worksheet presents the viewpoints of two different interest groups. Students must read the excerpts and then answer questions. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 232).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question about interest groups and their effect on democracy.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 lesson and the Section 2 lesson in their entirety. Include the Extend activity for Section 2
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 lesson in its entirety. Assign the Extend activities.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- identify functions of interest groups in a worksheet of examples.
- examine the positive and negative functions of interest groups by creating a persuasive brochure.
- write a persuasive letter encouraging or discouraging participation in interest groups.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- recognize the role of interest groups in their lives by identifying and categorizing those to which they belong.
- examine excerpts from different interest groups expressing opposing views on the same issue.
- research the activities and interests of a specific interest group discussed in the section.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- create an interest group campaign for influencing public policy and opinion, using direct and indirect approaches.
- practice influencing public opinion by composing a persuasive fundraising letter for their interest group campaign.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{What roles do interest groups play in our political system?}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{Functions of Interest Groups} \\
\hline Positive & Negative \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- Awareness of public affairs \\
- Represent members based on shared attitudes, rather than geography \\
- Provide useful, specialized, and detailed information to government \\
- Enable people to participate in political process \\
- Monitor public agencies and officials, ensuring accountability \\
- Compete with each other to influence public policy
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Push own special interests, which may not be in best interests of other Americans \\
- Influence out of proportion to their size or importance to public good \\
- Hard to tell who or how many people in the group \\
- May not represent views of all people for whom they speak \\
- Some use unethical tactics
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- identify functions of interest groups in a worksheet of examples.
- examine the positive and negative functions of interest groups by creating a persuasive brochure.
- write a persuasive letter encouraging or discouraging participation in interest groups.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 216) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 217)

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{The Nature Interest Groups}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What roles do interest groups play in our political system? Use the table to note information about the positive and negative effects of interest groups.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{ Functions of Interest Groups } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Positive } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Negative } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- Awareness of public \\ affairs
\end{tabular} & • \\
- & • \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- interest group • public affairs
- public policy

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the role of interest groups in influencing public policy.
2. Compare and contrast politica parties and interest groups.
3. Explain why people see interest groups as both good and bad for American politics.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS
To help students learn to analyze political cartoons, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S22, and use the steps explained there to complete the Bellringer activity.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

\(A^{n}\)n interest group is a collection of people who share certain views on public matters and work to shape public policy to their benefit. They try to persuade public officials to respond to their positions favorably. You may not think that you belong to this sort of group, but as you read this section you will likely discover that you do. You might, in fact, belong to several of them. You will probably also realize that you will become a member of many more of these groups in the years to come-because these organizations provide one of the most effective ways in which Americans can get government to react to their needs and wants.

\section*{The Role of Interest Groups}

Where do you stand on the question of gun control? What about global warming? National health insurance? Abortion? Prayer in public schools? What can you do to promote your views on these and other public questions? How can you increase the chance that your positions will carry the day?

Joining with others who share your opinions is both practical and democratic. Organization can provide the route to power, and organized efforts to further group interests are a fundamental part of the democratic process. Moreover, the right to do so is protected by the Constitution. Remember, the 1 st Amendment guarantees "the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

Interest groups are sometimes called "pressure groups" and often "organized interests" or "special interests." They try to influence what government does in some specific area of special interest to them. They give themselves a variety of labels: leagues, associations, clubs, federations, unions, committees, and so on. But whatever they call themselves, every interest group seeks to influence the making and content of public policy. Used in this general sense, public policy includes all of the goals that a government pursues in the many areas of human affairs in which it is involved-everything from seat belts, speed limits, and zoning to flood control, old-age pensions, and the use of military force in international affairs.

Because interest groups exist to shape public policy, they can be found wherever those policies are made or can be influenced. They operate at every FACTS: • Interest groups exist in many forms and by many names, but they all share the purpose of influencing public policy. • Interest groups promote knowledge about public matters and help people take part in the political process. • Interest groups are often criticized for their tactics or impact on society and government.

CONCEPTS: representative government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Interest groups play a major role in the shaping of public policy and enabling citizen involvement. • Interest groups have positive and negative impacts.
level of government-on Capitol Hill and elsewhere in Washington, D.C., in every one of the 50 State capitals, in thousands of city halls and county courthouses, and in many other places at the local level all across the country. In short, as diplomat and historian Lord Bryce put it somewhat indelicately more than a century ago: "Where the body is, there will the vultures be gathered."

Remember, our society is pluralistic. It is not dominated by any one elite. It is, instead, composed of several distinct cultures and groups. Increasingly, the members of various ethnic, racial, religious, and other groups compete for and share in the exercise of political power in the United States.

\section*{Parties and Interest Groups}

Interest groups are made up of people who join together for some political purpose, much like political parties. Parties and interest groups overlap in a number of ways however. They differ from each other in three significant ways, however: (1) with respect to the making of nominations, (2) in their primary focus, and (3) in the scope of their interests.

First, parties nominate candidates for public office; interest groups do not. Recall, the making of nominations is a prime function of political parties. If an interest group were to nominate candidates, it would, in effect, become a political party.

Interest groups do attempt to affect the outcome of primaries and other nominating contests. They do not pick candidates who then run for office under their labels, however. It may be widely known that a particular interest group supports this or that candidate, but the candidate seeks votes as a Republican or a Democrat. \({ }^{1}\)

Second, parties are chiefly interested in winning elections and thereby controlling government. Interest groups are chiefly concerned with controlling or influencing the policies of government. Unlike parties, those groups do not face the problems involved in trying to appeal to the largest possible

1 Note that this discussion centers on the differences between interest groups and the major parties. There are many striking parallels between interest groups and most minor parties-for example, in terms of their scope of interest.
number of people. In short, political parties are mostly interested in the who, and interest groups are mostly concerned with the what, of government. To put it another way, parties focus mostly on the candidate; interest groups focus mostly on policy questions.

Third, political parties are necessarily concerned with the whole range of public affairs, with everything of concern to voters. Interest groups almost always concentrate only on those issues that most directly affect the interests of their members.

In addition, interest groups are private organizations. Unlike political parties, they are not accountable to the public. Their members, not the voters, pass judgment on their performance.

\section*{Interest Groups: Good or Bad?}

Do interest groups pose a threat to the wellbeing of the American political system? Or are they, instead, a valuable part of that system? The argument over the merit of interest groups goes back to the beginnings of the Republic.

Two Early Views Many have long viewed interest groups with suspicion and foreboding. They have feared that some would become so powerful that they would be able to shape public policies to their own narrow and selfish ends. James Madison gave voice to that view in 1787. In The Federalist No. 10, he argued that, inevitably people join together to pursue common interests. They form "factions," Madison's term for what we now call interest groups He warned that those factions, left unchecked, could dominate public decision making because of size, resources, and/or leadership.

Analyzing Political Cartoons AARP is a well-known interest group for people over 50 ; it responds to the needs of older Americans. What is this cartoon saying about AARP and similar interest groups?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 9, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 213)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 216)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 217)
L3 L2 Core Worksheets A (pp. 218, 221)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 220)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 223)
L3 Quiz A (p. 224)
L2 Quiz B (p. 225)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 9A, Interest Groups. Write on the board: Write a caption for each cartoon, and answer the questions in your notebook.
L1 L2 Differentiate Help students identify and understand any word and symbols in the cartoons that may be confusing. For example, in Cartoon A, the words on the snakes represent large industries, and the snakes represent danger.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students create their own political cartoons showing both a positive and a negative view of interest groups.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REINFORCE UNDERSTANDING}

Present the class with the following: Use your own words to define interest group. (any group that seeks to influence public policy) Point out that interest groups come in many forms and represent a diverse range of interests, such as the oil industry, mine workers, health insurance reformers, gun control advocates, tax reformers, and many others.
L2 ELL Differentiate Write interest group and public policy and their definitions on the board.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER}

Ask: How are special interests portrayed in Cartoon A? (as snakes surrounding the White House) In Cartoon B? (as something heavenly) Activate prior knowledge by asking students to identify the people in Cartoon B. (George Washington in the middle with women's rights activists Elizabeth Cady Stanton on the left and Susan B. Anthony on the right) Ask:
Why did the cartoonist include Washington? (to associate the suffrage movement with our respected first president)Have students share their captions for the two cartoons. (possible captions: Cartoon A: Strangled by Special Interests; Cartoon B: All Men AND WOMEN Are Created Equal) Discuss students' answers to the questions on the transparency. ([1] ]armaments, chemicals, tobacco, oil, banks, and pharmaceutical companies; [2] the suffrage association)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint at all levels of government and anywhere public policy is made Analyzing Political Cartoons Possible response: It is saying that interest groups actively seek new members among any who might be interested in their cause. The American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) vigorously recruits new members as they approach retirement age.

\section*{REVIEW FUNCTIONS OF INTEREST GROUPS}

Review Question 6 on the Reading Comprehension Worksheet, which asks students to list the six functions of interest groups:
1. encourage interest in public affairs
2. represent members based on shared attitudes, rather than geography
3. offer specialized, detailed information to the government
4. enable people to participate in the political process
5. monitor public agencies and officials, ensuring accountability
6. compete with each other to influence public policy

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET A}

Distribute the Chapter 9 Section 1 Core Worksheet A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 218), in which students will read and analyze examples of interest-group behavior. Instruct students to identify the interest group function illustrated by each example and answer the reflection questions.
L1 L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted Core Worksheet A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 221).
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students use newsmagazines, newspapers, or the Internet to find out more about one interest group and write a brief summary of the group's recent activities.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about early interest groups.

\section*{Answers}

Early Interest Groups They might have created literature, made speeches, held meetings, and petitioned the government in support of their causes.

Madison believed that society could only eliminate factions by eliminating freedom. He argued that "the mischiefs of factions" could best be controlled by a political system in which the powers of government, or the ability to make public policies, are fragmented. That is a major reason why, he said, the Constitution provides for a separation of powers and checks and balances, and for a federal system of government-to make it unlikely that one group can override the interests of other (competing) groups. \({ }^{2}\)

2 You can read the full text of The Federalist No. 10 in the historic documents section at the end of this book.

Nearly fifty years later, Alexis de Tocqueville was deeply impressed by the vast number of organizations he found in this country. Tocqueville, a Frenchman, toured much of what was the United States in the 1830s. In his work, Democracy in America, he wrote that

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

In no country in the world has the principle of association been more successfully used, or more unsparingly applied to a multitude of different objects, than in America.
-Alexis de Tocqueville

244 Interest Groups

\section*{Constitutional Principles}

FEDERALISM Much of the debate over ratification of the Constitution swirled around where most power should reside-with the States or central government. AntiFederalists believed that maintaining State sovereignty would best protect individual rights from tyranny. The Constitution proposed a federal system, with power shared among levels of government. In The Federalist No. 9, Alexander Hamilton argued that splitting sovereignty between national and State governments would protect against abuse by either level. James Madison continued the argument in The Federalist No. 10. Madison insisted that the vast size and diverse interests in a large republic would reduce the risk of tyranny by one powerful group, as factions with conflicting interests would check each other. Display Transparency 9B, Excerpt from The Federalist No. 10, in which Madison explains this view. that "Americans of all ages, all conditions, and all dispositions, constantly form associations ... not only commercial and manufacturing . . . but . . . of a thousand other kinds-religious, moral, serious, futile, extensive or restricted, enormous or diminutive."
-Alexis de Tocqueville
Are those "associations," or interest groups, good or bad? To answer that question you must weigh, on the one hand, the functions those groups perform in American politics and, on the other, the various criticisms often leveled at them.

Their Valuable Functions First, among their several commendable functions, organized interests help to stimulate awareness of and interest in public affairs. Public affairs are those issues and events that concern the people at large. Interest groups raise awareness of public affairs mostly by developing and publicizing those policy positions they favor and by opposing those they see as threats to the interests of their members.

Second, interest groups represent their members on the basis of shared attitudes rather than on the basis of geography-by what their members think as opposed to where they happen to live. Public officials are elected from districts drawn on maps. But many of the issues that concern and unite people today have less to do with where they live than with, say, how they make a living. A labor union member who lives in Chicago may have much more in common with someone who does the same kind of work in Seattle than he or she does with someone who owns a business in Chicago or runs a farm in another part of Illinois.

Third, organized interests often provide useful, specialized, and detailed information to government-for example, on employment, price levels, or the sales of new and existing homes. These data are important to the making of public policy, and government officials often cannot obtain them from any other source. This flow of information works both ways: interest groups frequently get useful information from public agencies and pass it along to their members.

Fourth, interest groups are vehicles for political participation. Most people are not inclined to run for and hold public office, or even to volunteer for a campaign. For many Americans, then, interest groups are a convenient and less time-consuming way to help shape public policy. They are a means through which like-minded citizens can pool their resources and channel their energies into collective political action. One mother concerned about drunk driving cannot accomplish very much acting alone. Thousands of people united in an organization like MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Driving) certainly can and do.

Fi fh, interest groups add another element to the checks-and-balances feature of the political process. Many of them keep close tabs on the work of various public agencies and officials and thus help to make sure that they perform their tasks in responsible and effective ways.

Finally, interest groups regularly compete with one another in the public arena. That competition places a very real limit on the lengths to which some groups might otherwise go as they seek to advance their own interests. For example, the automotive industry may work to weaken or postpone auto emission standards imposed under the Clean Air Act. Their efforts may be opposed-and to some extent counterbalanced-by environmental and health-related organizations.

Criticisms All of what has just been said is not meant to suggest that interest groups are above reproach. On the contrary, they can be, and often are, criticized on several counts.

The potentially negative side of interest groups is sometimes all too apparent. Many groups push their own special interests which, despite their claims to the contrary, are not always in the best interests of other Americans. Their critics often make several more specific charges.

First, some interest groups have an influence far out of proportion to their size, or, for that matter, to their importance or contribution to the public good. Thus, the

Checkpoint How do interest groups increase political participation? \(\frac{\text { commendable }}{\text { adj. admirable, }}\) praiseworthy

\section*{reproach} n. blame, criticism

\section*{Background}
democracy in america When Alexis de Tocqueville left France for America in 1831, France, like the rest of Europe, was emerging from its historical monarchy into a more democratic future. Tocqueville wanted to find out why democracy thrived in America and learn how it might be applied in France. "I looked for an image of democracy itself, its penchants, its character, its prejudices, and its passions. I wanted to know it, if only to know what we ought to hope or fear from it. " In America, Tocqueville found a unique sense of social equality. America had no aristocracy. Instead of government by a powerful ruling class, Americans formed self-governing unitstowns, States, and later an association of States. Tocqueville concluded that such popular sovereignty was possible for France, but only if the classes could overcome their traditional conflict and cooperate to form free institutions.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B}

Distribute the Chapter 9 Section 1 Core Worksheet B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 220). This worksheet asks students to create a brochure to persuade people that interest groups are either a threat to the American political system or a valuable part of that system. The worksheet breaks the task into steps to help students create their brochure. Have students work in teams, dividing up tasks involved with writing, designing, and creating the brochure. All elements of their brochure should support their position for or against interest groups.
L1 L2 Differentiate Review with students the list of pros and cons of interest groups presented in the text.

\section*{SHARE AND REFLECT}

Post students' brochures around the room. Give students time to evaluate the other groups' work. Students should take turns viewing work and standing at their own work to answer questions about it. Ask students to reflect on which brochure they think would most influence the public's opinion of interest groups and explain why.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Extend the lesson by having students write a letter to the editor in which they offer a defense or a criticism of the role of interest groups in American society. Student letters should draw on material from the section, acknowledge different points of view about interest groups, and include their own thoughts about the benefits or drawbacks of interest groups. Distribute the Rubric for Assessing a Letter to the Editor (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 254).
L1 L2 Differentiate Give students an outline from which to write their letters:
1. my opinion about interest groups
2. roles of interest groups in society
3. positive functions of interest groups
4. criticisms

\section*{5. conclusion}

L1 L2 Differentiate Another option would be to have students complete the Extend Activity titled "A Civil Society" (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 223), which guides students through an interview with a member of an interest group.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint They give people another way of accessing the policy-making process.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' brochures, using the Rubric for Assessing a Cooperative Learning Project (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 260).Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 224) L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 225) Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The role of interest \\ groups (Questions 1, \\
2, 4, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an outine of the \\ sections that appear under the headings \\
"The Role of Interest Groups" and "Their \\ Valuable Functions."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The difference between \\ political parties and \\
interest groups \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a Venn diagram that \\ compares and contrasts political parties \\ and interest groups.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Positive and critical \\ views of interest groups \\
(Questions 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students form pairs and then pre- \\ pare for and deliver a mini-debate over \\ the benefits and drawbacks of interest \\ groups. Each side will have one minute to \\ present its argument and 30 seconds to \\ rebut the other's initial presentation.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\(\Delta\) Colleges and high schools often hold events where interest groups try to recruit new members. Why might those places be good locations for recruiting?
adj. open, observable

\section*{dole}
vt. to give or distribute contest over "who gets what, when and how" is not always a fair fight. The more highly organized and better-financed groups often have a decided advantage in that struggle.

Second, it is sometimes hard to tell just who or how many people a group really represents. Many groups have titles that suggest that they have thousands-even millions-of dedicated members. Some organizations that call themselves such things as "The American Citizens Committee for ..." or "People United Against . . ." are, in fact, only "fronts" for a very few people with very narrow interests.

Third, many groups do not in fact represent the views of all of the people for whom they claim to speak. Very often, both in and out of politics, an organization is dominated by an active minority who conduct the group's affairs and make its policy decisions.

Finally, some groups use tactics that, if they were to become widespread, would undermine the whole political system. These practices include bribery and other heavyhanded uses of money, overt threats of revenge, and so on. Instances of that sort of behavior are not at all common; they are not altogether unknown, however.

The illegal behavior of a number of representatives of special interests was exposed in Washington during the Abramoff scandal. Jack Abramoff, several of his associates, and a member of Congress are now serving time in federal prison, convicted of bribery and other offenses. Abramoff and the other special interest representatives funneled hundreds of thousands of dollars into congressional campaigns, provided all-expense-paid trips to resorts and doled out such things as skybox tickets to professional football games, free dinners, and even jobs for some congressional spouses-all in exchange for legislative favors. Those favors included the introduction of bills written to benefit Abramoff's clients and other attempts to shape lawmaking to that same end.

> \begin{tabular}{|cl|} \hline Essential Questions & To continue to build a \\ response to the chapter \\ Journal & Essential Question, go to your \\ & Essential Questions Journal. \end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your com pleted table to answer this question: What roles do interest groups play in our political system?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What are interest groups and how do they attempt to shape public policy?
3. How do political parties and interes groups differ from one another?
4. How do interest groups raise awareness of public affairs?
5. (a) Summarize public attitudes about interest groups. (b) What is their role in the American political system?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Express Problems Clearly (a) What were James Madison's concerns about "factions" in The Federalist No. 10? (b) Do you think Madison's concerns were justified? Use evidence from the text and your personal observations to support your point of view.
7. Understand Point of View What does it mean to say that joining interest groups is both practical and democratic?

\section*{Quick Write}

\section*{Assessment Writing: Gather}

Details Writing for assessment often means that you have a limited time to answer an essay question. It may help to plan your response carefully using a graphic organizer. As you have read, interest groups are seen as both positive and negative. What do you think? To answer this question, gather details and list the positive and negative points of interest groups on a graphic organizer.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Interest groups try to influence government in specific areas. They create awareness of public affairs, represent members, provide information to government, allow people to participate in politics, monitor public agencies and officials, and compete with each other to influence policy.
2. Interest groups are people who share views and work to shape public policy at any level of government where policy is made.
3. Interest groups have no direct role in nominating candidates. They work to influence policy, not elections. They are narrowly focused on their own interests. Parties are concerned with the whole range of public affairs.
4. by publicizing policies they favor or oppose and by encouraging civic participation
5. (a) There is wide suspicion of interest groups, yet most people belong to one or more. (b) create public awareness, represent members, provide information to government, offer a way to participate in politics, monitor public agencies and officials, compete with each other to influence policy
6. (a) He believed factions were inevitable and, if unchecked, could dominate public decision making. (b) Possible response: Yes. Well-financed interest groups, such as drug company lobbies, can influence policy with huge donations to election campaigns.
7. Possible answer: Expressing views to government is part of the democratic process. Interest groups help people express shared views.
QUICK WRITE Lists should include all positive and negative points described in the section.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Types of Interest Groups}

Guiding Question
What are the different types of interest groups at work in American society? Use the outline to record notes about different types of interest groups.
I. Types of Interest Groups
A. Economic Interests 1.
B. Other Interest Groups
C. Public-Interest Groups

Political Dictionary
- trade - public-interest association
- labor union

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how the American tradition of joining organizations has resulted in a wide range of interest groups.
2. Describe four categories of groups based on economic interests.
3. Outline the reasons other interest groups have been created.
4. Identify the purpose of publicinterest groups.

Image Above: Former American Medical Association President Dr. J. Edward Hill discusses medical liability reform at a news conference in 2006.

"Everything from A to Z." That expression can certainly be applied to the many interest groups in this country. They include, among thousands of others, AAA (the American Automobile Association), ACLU (the American Civil Liberties Union), Amnesty International, the Zionist Organization of America, and the Zoological Association of America. All of those thousands of organizations can be more or less readily classified and, so, usefully described as interest groups.

\section*{An American Tradition}

The United States has often been called "a nation of joiners." Recall Alexis de Tocqueville's observations cited in the previous section. His comments, true when he made them, have become even more accurate over time.

No one really knows how many associations exist in the United States today. There are thousands upon thousands of them, however, and at every level in society. Each one becomes an interest group whenever it tries to influence the actions of government in order to promote its own goals.

Interest groups come in all shapes and sizes. They may have thousands or even millions of long-established members or only a handful of new or temporary members. They may be well or little known, highly structured or quite loose and informal, wealthy or with few resources. No matter what their characteristics, they are found in every field of human activity in this country.

The largest number of these groups has been founded on the basis of an economic interest, and especially on the bases of business, labor, agricultural, and professional interests. Some groups are grounded in a geographic area.

Others have been born out of a cause or an idea, such as prohibition of alcohol, environmental protection, or gun control. Many groups seek to influence some aspect of the nation's foreign policy. Still others exist to promote the welfare of certain groups of people-veterans, senior citizens, a racial minority, the homeless, women, people with disabilities, and so on.

Many people belong to a number of local, regional, or national interest groups-often without realizing they do. A car dealer, for example, may belong to the local Chamber of Commerce, a car dealers' association, the

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Citizen involvement in interest groups has a long tradition in the United States. - Most interest groups are based on economic interests, such as business, labor, agriculture, and professional interests. • Other groups are centered on certain causes, the welfare of specific groups, religious views, or the public good.
CONCEPTS: representative government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Americans have long participated in society and government through interest groups. - Groups represent a wide array of interests, and most people belong to one or more interest groups.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What are the different types of interest groups at work in American society?

\author{
I. Types of Interest Groups \\ A Economic Interests \\ 1. Business \\ 2. Labor \\ 3. Agriculture \\ 4. Professions \\ B. Other Interest Groups \\ 1. Issue-oriented \\ 2. For specific communities \\ 3. Religious \\ C. Public-Interest Groups
}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- recognize the role of interest groups in their lives by identifying and categorizing those to which they belong.
- examine excerpts from different interest groups expressing opposing views on the same issue.
- research the activities and interests of a specific interest group discussed in the section.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 226) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 227)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

To practice comparing viewpoints in this section, use the Chapter 9 Skills Worksheet (Unit 2 All-inOne, p. 231). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after students do the Core Worksheet. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 232).

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: In your notebook, list the interest groups to which you and your family belong.
L1 L2 Differentiate Review with students the first paragraph of this section, to help them get a sense of the wide range of organizations that qualify as interest groups.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{COMPILE AND CATEGORIZE}

Write these three broad categories across the top of the board: "Economic Interest Groups," "Other Interest Groups," and "Public Interest Groups." Ask:
What sub-types of interest groups does the text list under these categories? (Economic Interest Groups: business, labor, agricultural, professional; Other Interest Groups: issue-oriented, specific communities, religious; Public-Interest Groups: no subtypes given.) Record the sub-types under the broad categories as students identify them. Ask students to explain the meaning of each category and sub-type. Have students share the lists of interest groups they created in the Bellringer activity. (Be sure to respect the privacy of students who do not wish to provide information about groups to which they and their family belong.) Have students identify the category to which each group belongs. Write the groups in the proper categories on the board to create a master list for the class.
Display Transparency 9C, Membership in Labor Unions. Ask: Into what category does the subtype discussed in this graph fall? (economic interest groups) What trend do you see in this sub-type of interest group? (Membership in labor unions has declined since 1945.)
You can continue the discussion by having students brainstorm and categorize other interest groups with which they are familiar. They can add any unique information they know about the group.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to promote and protect the interests of specific businesses

Checkpoint Why are business groups formed?
creditor
\(n\). one to whom money is owed protective tariff
n. import duty, imposed to give advantage to domestic industries \(v t\). to follow up or pursue

American Legion, a local taxpayers' league, a garden club, a church, and the American Cancer Society. All of these are, to one degree or another, interest groups-including the church and the garden club, even though the car dealer may never think of these groups in that light. \({ }^{3}\)

Many people may belong to groups that take conflicting stands on political issues. For example, the taxpayers' league may endorse a plan to eliminate plantings in traffic islands while the garden club wants to keep and even enlarge them.

\section*{Economic Interest Groups}

Most interest groups are formed on the basis of economic interests. Among those groups, the most active-and certainly the most effective-are those representing business, labor, agriculture, and certain professions

Business Groups Business has long looked to government to promote and protect its interests. Recall that it was merchants, creditors, and property owners who were most responsible for calling the Constitutional Convention in 1787. In the early years of the Republic, business interests fought for and won the protective tariff. Along with organized labor, many of them continue to work to maintain it, even now.

The United States Brewers Association, the oldest organized interest group at work in national politics today, was born in 1862 when Congress first levied a tax on beer. The association's stated purpose was to assure the brewing trade that its interests would be "vigorously prosecuted before the legislative and executive departments."

Hundreds of business groups now operate in Washington, D.C., in the 50 State capitals, and at the local level across the country. The two best-known business organizations are 3 Churches often take stands on such public issues as drinking, curfew ordinances, and legalized gambling, and they often try to influence public policy on those matters. Garden clubs frequently try to persuade cities to do such things as improve public parks and beautify downtown areas. Not every group to which people belong can properly be called an interest group, of course. But the point is that many groups that are not often thought to be interest groups are, in fact, just that.

the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States

Formed in 1895, NAM now represents some 12,000 firms. It generally speaks for "big business" in public affairs. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, founded in 1912, is a major voice for the nation's thousands of smaller businesses. It has some 3,000 local chambers with about 3 million total members.

A major group comprising chief executive officers of the nation's largest companies, the Business Roundtable has also taken a large role in promoting and defending the business community in recent years.

Most segments of the business community also have their own interest groups, often called trade associations. They number in the hundreds and include the American Trucking Association, the Association of American Railroads, the National Restaurant Association, and many more. The several trade associations that represent the pharmaceutical, oil, and natural gas industries are generally regarded as the most powerful and effective interest groups today.

Despite their common goal of promoting business interests, business groups do not always present a solid front. In fact, they often disagree and sometimes fight among themselves. The trucking industry, for example, does its best to get as much federal aid as possible for highway construction. The railroads, however, are unhappy with what they see as "special favors" for their competition. At the same time, the railroads see federal taxes on gasoline, oil, tires, and other "highway users' fees" as legitimate sources of federal income. The truckers disagree, of course.

Labor Groups A labor union is an organization of workers who share the same type of job or who work in the same industry. Labor unions press for government policies that will benefit their members.

The strength of organized labor has ebbed over the past several years. Some 16 million Americans, only about 12 percent of the nation's labor force, belong to labor unions today. In the 1940s and 1950s, as many as a third of all working Americans were union members; in 1975, union

248 Interest Groups

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 9, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 226)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 227)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 228)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 231)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 232)
\(L 3\) Quiz A (p. 233)
L2 Quiz B (p. 234)

membership accounted for about a fourth of the labor force.

Organized labor is composed of a host of groups today. The AFL-CIO (the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations) is by far the largest. \({ }^{4}\) It is now made up of 56 separate unions, including, for example, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (the IBEW) and the International Union of Automotive, Aerospace, and Agricultural Implement Workers (the UAW). All told, the AFL-CIO has 10 million dues-paying members today. Each of its member-unions is, like the AFL-

\footnotetext{
4 The AFL was formed in 1886 as a federation of craft unions. A craft union is made up of those workers who have the A craft union is made up of those workers who have the same craft or skiil -for example, carpenters, plumbers, or electricians. The grown of mass-production industries cre a large class of workers not skilled in any particular craft, however. The AFL found it difficult to organize those workers. however. The AFL found it difficult to organize those workers.
Many of its craft unions opposed the admission of unions of unskilled workers to the AFL. In 1935 , after years of bitter unskiled workers to the AFL. In 1935, after years of bitter fighting, a group led by John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers was expelled from the AFL. They formed the independent C1O in 1938. The rivalries between these unions eased to the point where a merger took place in 1955 , creating the AFL-CIO.
}

CIO itself, organized on a national, State, and local basis.

The industrial sector of the nation's economy has declined over recent years. Because of this, blue-collar workers in such basic industries as automobiles and steel now represent a decreasing percentage of the working population. That decline has forced organized labor leaders to look elsewhere for new members. The AFL-CIO has been particularly active in efforts to unionize migrant farm workers, service workers, and, most recently, public employees.

In fact, the overall decline in union membership has been partially offset by an upswing in the unionization of government workers in recent years. Public-sector unions now have more than 7 million members, and that number is likely to continue to grow.

Quarrels over how to rejuvenate the labor movement led several unions to leave the AFL-CIO in 2005. Chief among them were the Service Employees International Union (the SEIU), with 2 million members, and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters (the \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Give an example of a sit uation in which busines groups might disagree with one another.

\section*{blue-collar worker \(n\). one who does manual or industria work-e.g., a miner, mechanic} rejuvenate \(v t\). restore, breathe new life into

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 9D, Balance of Power, when you discuss conflicting stands of interest groups. This cartoon illustrates how opposing interests tend to limit each other's influence. Ask: Whom do the figures represent? (special interest groups) Do these groups agree or disagree with each other? How do you know? (Disagree. They are on opposite ends of a seesaw.) Why are they eating? (to gain more weight, or influence) What are these groups trying to influence? (public opinion) What effect are the two groups having on public opinion? Why? (They are balancing public opinion, because the weight, or power, of one counterbalances that of the other.) What is the significance of the words on their shirts? (The words suggest that all interest groups act in a similar fashion.)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 9 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 228). This worksheet provides two readings with opposing views on the issue of raising the minimum wage. After students examine the readings, they will write position statements on the issue from the viewpoints of different interest groups described on the worksheet. Remind students that there are many interest groups and that any policy issue can inspire a variety of opinions. Have students read the excerpts and identify which category of interest group likely made the statement. (Both readings come from economic interest groups.) Encourage students to think about what conclusion the interest groups want the audience to draw from each reading. (Reading 1 : The minimum wage should be raised. Reading 2: The minimum wage should not be raised.)

Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive timeline about labor unions.

\section*{Answers}

The Changing State of Labor Possible response: Globalization and loss of manufacturing jobs to overseas suppliers might focus union attention on international trade policies. Increased unionization in education and services might prompt union efforts on issues such as school funding, heal thcare, and salary.
Checkpoint Possible answer: The trucking industry and the railroads disagree over taxes and the federal aid that the other group receives. activity, define minimum wage (the lowest permitted hourly pay, as established by law).
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students read the excerpts aloud, pausing frequently to ask students to restate each sentence or paragraph in simple terms. Answer questions about any difficult words or concepts in the excerpts L3 L4 Differentiate Have students research additional responses to the minimum wage debate. Students can present additional examples of different points of view generated in this national debate.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Have students read their position statements from the worksheet. Ask: Why do the viewpoints of the interest groups differ? (because their economic interests differ) How might a raise in the minimum wage help some workers? (Some would earn more per hour.) How might such a raise harm some workers? (Some might lose their jobs because employers could not afford to employ as many workers at the higher wage.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint policies that affect the welfare of farm families, pricing, and State laws for specific commodities

IBT), with 1.4 million members, formed, a new 5-million-member group, the Change to Win Coalition.

There are also several independent unions not associated with either the AFLCIO or Change to Win. Among the largest of them is the Communications Workers of America (the CWA), with approximately 700,000 members.

Organized labor generally speaks with one voice on such social welfare and jobrelated matters as Social Security, minimum wages, and unemployment. Labor sometimes opposes labor, however. White-collar and blue-collar workers, for example, do not always share the same economic interests. Sectional interests (East-West, urban-rural, and so on) sometimes divide labor. Production and transportation interests (trucks versus railroads versus airplanes, for example) can create divisions, as well.

Agricultural Groups For much of our history, most Americans lived in rural areas on farms. The First Census, taken in 1790, set the nation's population at \(3,929,214\). It found that nearly all Americans then - 94.9 percent of them - lived outside any city or town.

The nation's population has increased dramatically since 1790, of course-to well over 300 million today. Over that period the farm population has plummeted. Less than two percent of the population live on farms today. Still, farmers' influence on the government's agricultural policies has been and is enormous. Many powerful associations serve the interests of agriculture. They include several broad-based farm groups and organizations that represent farmers who raise particular commodities.

The most prominent farm groups are the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, and the National Farmers Union. The Grange, established in 1867, is the oldest and generally the most conservative. It is as much a social as a political organization, concerned with the welfare of farm families.

The Farm Bureau, formed in 1919, is the largest and most effective of the three agricultural groups. The Farm Bureau generally supports federal programs to promote agriculture but does favor a free market economy

The National Farmers Union draws its strength from smaller and less prosperous farmers. The NFU often calls itself the champion of the dirt farmer, and it is frequently at odds with the Grange and the Farm Bureau.

Manyother groups speak for the producers of specific farm products-these include the National Association of Wheat Growers, the National Cattlemen's Beef Association, the National Milk Producers Federation, and many others. Then, too, farm-related businesses such as pesticide manufacturers and farm implement dealers have their own organizations.

As with business and labor, farm groups sometimes find themselves at odds with one another. Thus, cotton, corn, soybean, and dairy associations compete as each of them tries to influence State laws regulating margarine and yogurt. California and Florida citrus growers are sometimes pitted against one another, and so on.

Professional Associations The professions are generally defined as those occupations that require extensive formal training, and, often government licensing-for example, medicine, law, and teaching. Most professional associations are not nearly as large, well-organized, well-financed, or effective as most business, labor, and farm groups.

Three professional groups are exceptions, however: the American Medical Association (AMA), the American Bar Association (ABA), and the National Education Association (NEA). Each has a very real impact on public policies, and at every level of government.

There are hundreds of less well-known professional groups. Most pharmacists join the National Association of Retail Druggists, librarians join the American Library Association, optometrists join the American Optometric Association, and so on. Still, not all professionals are members of the organizations that claim to represent them. Thus, fewer than half of all licensed medical doctors in the United States belong to the AMA.

\section*{Additional Interest Groups}

Again, most organized interests are born out of economic concerns. Many others have granger movement Oliver Hudson Kelley, an Agriculture Department employee, saw a need to bring farmers together to share sound farm practices. In 1867, Kelley founded the National Grange. Soon local Granges formed. At this time, railroads had broad power to set rates for transporting and storing farm products, and many took advantage of the situation to charge high prices. The Granger movement united farmers into a political force. The farmers influenced several States to pass laws limiting the rates railroads and storage facilities could charge. Challenges to these "Granger laws" reached the Supreme Court. In the landmark case Munn v. Illinois, 1876, the Court upheld the State law, arguing that government could regulate private business if needed for the public good. Although most Granger laws were soon modified or repealed, some became the basis for later antitrust and regulatory laws.

\section*{Background}
been formed for other reasons, however, and many of these other groups have a good deal of political clout.

Issue-Oriented Groups Many groups exist to promote a cause or an idea. It would take several pages just to list them here, and so what follows is just a sampling of the more important ones.

The American Civil Liberties Union was born in 1920. It fights in and out of court to protect civil and political rights. Common Cause dates from 1970, calls itself "the citizen's lobby", and works for major reforms in the political process. The League of Women Voters and its many local leagues have been dedicated to stimulating participation in and greater knowledge about public affairs since 1919.

The list of groups devoted to causes goes on and on. Many, such as the National Women's Political Caucus, carry the women's rights banner. Others, including the National Wildlife Federation, the Sierra Club, and the Wilderness Society, are pledged to conservation and environmental protection.

Some groups are devoted to opposing or supporting certain causes. The National Right-to-Life Committee, Women Exploited by Abortion, and other groups oppose abortion. They are countered by the National Abortion and Reproduction Rights Action League, Planned Parenthood, and their allies. Similarly, the National Rifle Association (NRA) fights most forms of gun control; Handgun Control, Inc., works for it.

Washington's many "think tanks"research institutions staffed by scholars and experts in a variety of fields-also qualify as interest groups. They promote their particular policy views and oppose those of others in books, newspaper articles, journals, and tele-

Checkpoint How do professional associations differ from business, labor, and farm groups?
clout n. power, influence

\section*{Influencing International Events Can interest groups make a difference?}

Shools raise awareness and funds for Darfur.
 Darfur have left hundreds of thousands dead and made refugees of millions more. Amnesty International, the Save Darfur Coalition, Human Rights Watch, and other groups provide various resources to the refugees and press the United States, other nations, and the UN to act in this critical situation. What could these groups do to persuade governments to respond to this problem?

\section*{Background}

A FORCE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS The oldest and largest civil rights interest group in the United States is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). The NAACP has been committed to the "elimination of all barriers to political, educational, social, and economic equality" of African Americans and other minority groups since its founding in 1909. The NAACP has emphasized legal action to combat discrimination and brought many landmark cases before the Supreme Court. In Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas, 1954, the NAACP's brilliant young lawyer, Thurgood Marshall, successfully convinced the Court to overturn segregation in public schools. Marshall would later become the first African American to serve on the Supreme Court. Today, the NAACP remains a potent force for civil rights and equality for all Americans.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Have students research a specific interest group discussed in the text. Encourage them to visit the Web site of their chosen interest group and create a list of the group's major issues.
L1 L2 Differentiate Pair students with L3 or L4 students for this activity.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students write a speech or position paper stating their chosen group's policies. Remind students that representatives of interest groups often testify before Congress, so their speeches and papers should be well written.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' workAssign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
3 Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 233)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 234)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Professional groups represent specific, highly trained and often regulated professions, rather than whole industrial sectors.
Influencing International Events public protests, lobbying campaigns, public education campaigns
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The American tradition of \\
interest groups \\
(Questions 1, 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write a two-sentence \\ summary of the section entitted "An \\ American Tradition."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The range and purpose of \\ economic interest groups \\
(Questions 3, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a web diagram \\ of the section entited "Groups Based \\ on Economic Interests." The diagram \\ should include and describe the differ- \\ ent types of groups discussed in the \\
section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The range and purpose \\ of other types of interest \\ groups (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an illustrated \\ diagram of the other types of groups \\ discussed under the heading "Other \\ Interest Groups."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint They are research institutions staffed by scholars that promote particular policy views.
vision appearances. The more prominent among them include the more conservative Cato Institute and the Heritage Foundation; the more liberal Institute for Policy Studies; and the centrist American Enterprise Institute and Brookings Institution.

Organizations for Specific Groups Hundreds of interest groups seek to promote the welfare of certain segments of the population. Among the best known and most powerful are the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, which work to advance the interests of the country's veterans. Groups like Older Americans, Inc., and AARP are very active in such areas as pensions and medical care for senior citizens.

Several organizations-notably the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the National Urban League-are concerned with public policies affecting African Americans. Other organizations, such as the Japanese American Citizens League, the Mexican American Legal Defense Fund, and the National Association of Arab Americans, support the country's many ethnic groups.

Religious Organizations Religious groups have long been involved in American politics, and many work to affect public policy in several important areas today. Many Protestants do so through the National Council of Churches, the Christian Voice, and the Christian Coalition.

The National Catholic Welfare Council is a major advocate for the interests of Roman Catholics. The American Jewish Congress and B'nai B'rith's Anti-Defamation League promote the interests of the Jewish community.

\section*{Public-Interest Groups}

The typical interest group seeks public policies that are of special benefit to its members and works against policies seen as threats. Some organizations have a broader focus and work for the "public good." That is, a public-interest group is an organization that works for the best interests of the overall community, rather than the narrower interests of one segment. It seeks policies that benefit all or most people, whether or not they belong to or support the organization. \({ }^{5}\)

Public-interest groups have become quite visible over the past 30 years or so. Among the best known and most active are Common Cause, the League of Women Voters, and the several organizations that make up Ralph Nader's Public Citizen, Inc.

5 Nearly all interest groups claim that they work for the "public good." Thus, the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) good. "Thus, the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM) says that lower taxes on business will stimulate the economy and so help everyone. The AFL-CIO says the same thing about and sonding public dollars for public works programs. But, as a general rule, most interest groups support or oppose public policies on what they see to be the best interests of their members.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a }\end{aligned}\)
Journal response to the chapter Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: What are the different types of interest groups at work in American society?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What distinguishes an association or organization from an interest group?
3. Into what category do trade unions and trade associations fall?
4. What is a public-interest group, and how does it differ from other types of interest groups?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Determine Cause and Effec (a) How have economic changes in the United States transformed the nature and types of labor unions in the country? (b) What are the results of those changes?
6. Draw Conclusions Why do you think that groups involved with economic interests are the most numerous type of interest group in the United States today?

\section*{Quick Write}

Assessment Writing: Write Strong Opening and Closing Statements When writing for assessment, it is important to craft strong opening and closing statements. Using the graphic organizer you created in Section 1, begin to draft complete sentences that expand your argument. Remember: Your opening sentences should clearly state your position and your closing statement should complete your argument with a clear and logical conclusion.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The largest number of groups have formed around economic interests, such as business, labor, agriculture, and certain professions. Other groups have organized around specific issues, communities, or religions. Public-interest groups work for the broader public good rather than for the narrow interests of a segment of the population.
2. Any group can become an interest group if it tries to influence the government to act in ways that promote the group's goals or interests.
3. economic interest groups
4. A public-interest group works for the best interests of the overall community, unlike other interest groups, which promote mainly the interests of their members.
5. Possible response: (a) Economic changes have eroded the sectors of the economy from which unions once drew their greatest strength. (b) Today, unions are drawing a growing share of their members from sectors such as government and service workers.
6. Possible response: Most people spend a majority of their time pursuing their economic security and so are keenly interested in how policies may affect their well being.

QUICK WRITE Students' opening sentence should clearly state their view of interest groups, and their closing statement should summarize their argument.

\section*{Lobbying in the Federal Government}

Track the Issue
The 1st Amendment, which guarantees the right to peaceably assemble and petition the government for a redress of grievances, protects the rights of interest groups to lobby government.

The House passes a temporary measure that, for the first time, requires all lobbyists to register with the clerk of the House.

A series of articles entitled "The Treason of the Senate" appears in Cosmopolitan, alleging widespread corruption on the part of interest groups in Congress.

Congress passes the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act.

Congress attempts to address shortcomings of the 1946 law with the Lobbying Disclosure Act.

Congress and the President respond to a major lobbying scandal with the Honest Leadership and Open Government Act.

Perspectives
Recent scandals involving lobbyists (those who attempt to influence government policy on behalf of interest groups) and some members of Congress as well as other officials have raised questions about the influence of lobbyists and interest groups. Amid charges that lobbyists have improperly used gifts and travel to gain support in government, the nation again debated the benefits and drawbacks of lobbying.

Good lobbyists do their homework and help members of Congress understand the impact of legislation, the outcome of which ciitzens must live with every day. Good lobbyists understand the industry or organization that he or she is representing. Good lobbyists are great sources of information. Good lobbyists are factual. Good lobbyists are truttrul. -Lobbyist and former Congressman Bill Sarpalius

We want Congress to enact lobby reform legislation that sets new contribution and fundraising limits on lobbyists and lobbying firms; fundamentally changes the gift, travel, and employment relationships among members of Congress, lobbyists and lobbying firms; and institutes new and effective enforcement mechanisms. Congress needs an independent office or commission to oversee and enforce ethics rules and lobbying laws, receive allegations and complaints, conduct investigations and present cases to congressional ethics committees.
-League of Women Voters

Connect to Your World
1. Understand (a) How, according to Sarpalius, does lobbying contribute to the American system of government? (b) What are some of the specific activities by lobbyists that concern the League of Women Voters?
2. Draw Conclusions (a) What might be a constitutional argument against increased restrictions on lobbyists? (b) How might the League of Women Voters defend its proposals against a 1st Amendment challenge? (c) Which do you think poses a greater danger: restricting lobbyists or giving them practically free reign? Why?
(9) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

In the News
For updates about the regulation of lobbyists, visit
PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Background}
early worries about lobbying Though Congress did not act to limit lobbyists for many decades, many observers and members of government worried about the impact of lobbyists on the integrity of government. During the very first session of Congress, one senator from Pennsylvania observed how merchants used "treats, dinners, attentions" to influence votes on a tariff. He even reported hearing talk of bribes being used to obtain fellow senators' votes.

\section*{LESSON GOALS}
- Students will examine the challenges of establishing meaningful regulation of lobbyists, using a contemporary example.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Remind students that the 1 st Amendment protects people's right to peaceably assemble and petition the government for redress of grievances. Ask: How can the 1st Amendment be interpreted as protecting the practice of lobbying? (Possible answer: Lobbies are essentially groups petitioning the government to enact policies they favor.)

\section*{SUMMARIZE THE ISSUE}

Have students summarize the issue and the views expressed in the quotes. Ask them to explain historical efforts to control lobbyists' activities.
L1 L2 Differentiate Read each quote aloud, pausing frequently for students to restate each passage in their own words.

\section*{ANALYZE}

Have students describe the possible benefits and drawbacks of placing strong restrictions on lobbyist activities. Explain that lobbyists do serve a valuable function in government.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students write an editorial urging sensible reform of lobbying that acknowledges the arguments made in both quotes.

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) by providing valuable information essential to good lawmaking (b) the large amounts of funds lobbyists control; the link between members of Congress and gifts, travel, and jobs from lobbyists; the need for effective enforcement of ethics rules and lobbying laws
2. (a) Restrictions might infringe on the 1 st Amendment right to peaceably assemble and petition the government. (b) Possible answer: The proposed limits do not eliminate access to government-only unethical or illegal practices. (c) Sample response: Lobbies should be regulated, because free reign might lead to unethical tactics.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

In what ways do interest groups attempt to influence government and public opinion?

How Interest Groups Work

Direct Approach
- Talk to government officials at all levels
- Testify at congressional committee meetings
- Submit position statements on proposed legislation
- Provide useful information to Congress
- Make campaign contributions
- Write speeches
- Draft legislation
- Lobby senior White House aides and executive agencies - Try to influence agency appointments
- Rely on networks of contacts in government
- Bring lawsuits
- File amicus curiae briefs
- Try to influence judicial appointments

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{Interest Groups at Work}

- Grass-roots pressure
- Letters, postcards, phone calls, faxes, e-mails from local supporters
- Internet-Web site, e-mail lists, blogging
- Fundraising for candidates
- Get-out-the-vote efforts
- Demonstrations and protest marches
- Publish ratings of members of Congress
- Mold public opinion
- Use of advertising
- Promotion by group members and celebrities
- News items in mass media-press releases, interviews, studies
- Propaganda
- Electioneering-PACs

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- create an interest group campaign for influencing public policy and opinion, using direct and indirect approaches.
- practice influencing public opinion by composing a persuasive fundraising letter for their interest group campaign.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

Before students begin on the Core Worksheet, you may want to review information on innovating and thinking creatively in the Skills Handbook, p. S23.

\section*{Guiding Question}

In what ways do interest groups attempt to influence government and public opinion? Use the chart to record details of how interest groups work in our government and society.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ How Interest Groups Work } \\
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Direct Approach } \\
\hline & Indirect Approach \\
\hline\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- lobbying - grass-roots - lobbyist pressures
- amicus curiae brief

\section*{Objectives}
1. Understand the difference between the direct and indirect approaches of interest groups.
2. Describe how lobbyists influence the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of government.
3. Examine how interest groups use grass-roots lobbying.
4. Identify how interest groups use media, propaganda, and political campaigns to influence public opinion and policy.

Image Above: Lobbyist Jack James of the AFL-CIO (right) speaks with Bennie Thompson (D., Miss.), chairman of the House committee on Homeland Security

In:nterest groups exist to influence the making and the content of public policy, and they do so in a great many ways and in a great many places. They are, in effect, an excellent illustration of political scientist Harold D. Lasswell's notion that politics is all about "who gets what, when and how."

Interest groups approach government both directly and indirectly in their attempts to influence policy. Their direct efforts involve immediate, face-to-face contacts with policymakers. Their indirect efforts entail more subtle tactics-for example, mobilizing "the folks back home" to contact their members of Congress with letters, phone calls, faxes, and e-mails for or against a particular bill.

\section*{The Direct Approach}

Again, the direct approach, bringing group pressures to bear directly on public policymakers, is another way of saying "lobbying." Lobbying is the process by which organized interests attempt to affect the decisions and actions of public officials. \({ }^{6}\) Lobbyists are those people who try to persuade public officials to do those things that interest groups want them to do.

Lobbying occurs wherever public policy is made, including Washington, D.C., every State capital, and all of the county courthouses and city halls across the country. It is a big business today. Every important interest and many lesser ones-business groups, labor unions, farm organizations, the professions, churches, veterans, environmental groups, and many more-maintain lobbyists in Washington. Best estimates put the number of people who earn at least part of their living by lobbying Congress at no fewer than 30,000 , and they spend more than \($ 2\) billion per year doing their jobs.

Most lobbyists are professionals. Some are freelancers, "hired guns" who will use their contacts and talents for anyone willing to pay what they charge.

6 The term was first used in Great Britain some 200 years ago, referring to journalists and special-interest pleaders who waited in the public lobbies of the House of Commons to talk with members of Parliament. The term lobby-agent was being used to identify favor-seekers at sessions of New York's legislature in Abany by the late 1820 s. By the 1830 s it had been shortened to lobbyist and was in wide use in Washington, D.C., and elsewhere. Lobbying is still frequently defined in terms of legislators and legislation. As we note, however, it has a much broader application today.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Interest groups apply direct pressure in the form of lobbying at all three branches of government and at all levels of government. - Interest groups apply indirect pressure by promoting grass-roots support and seeking to influence public opinion through propaganda and other techniques.
CONCEPTS: representative government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Lobbying occurs at any level of government at which public policy is made. - Interest groups try to capture and harness the power of public opinion.

Most larger companies and labor unions have their own full-time lobbyists. Many work for the hundreds of Washington law firms and public relations agencies, concentrated along K Street, that specialize in that kind of work.

The Abramoff scandal prompted Congress to tighten the statutes regulating lobbyists' behavior in 2007. As the law now stands, all persons and organizations that seek to influence members of Congress, their staffers, or any policy-making officer in the executive branch must register with the clerk of the House and the secretary of the Senate. They are required to supply such basic information as name, address, and principal place of business, plus a general description of their activities. Every lobbyist must describe his or her ongoing work in detail and account for the income from it in quarterly reports.

Former senators and top-level executive branch officials must now wait two years, but ex-House members wait only one year, before they can become lobbyists. And, since 2007, no member of Congress can receive any gift from lobbyists or their clients.

Lobbying Congress The benefits of maintaining close relationships with members of Congress are fairly obvious, for Congress is the prime place for the making of public policy in the Federal Government. Some lobbying efforts target individual lawmakers and their staffs, but most are aimed at the standing committees of the House and Senate. More than a century ago, Woodrow Wilson described "Congress in its committee rooms" as "Congress at work," and that remains the case today, as you will see in Chapter 12.

Lobbyists testify before congressional committees and regularly submit prepared statements that set out their organization's views on proposed legislation. What happens in a legislative body often excites the interest of several different and competing groups. For example, if the House Committee on the Judiciary is considering a bill to regulate the sale of firearms, those companies that make guns, those that sell them, and those that produce or sell ammunition and a host of other related products all have a clear stake in the bill's contents and its fate. So, too, do law enforcement agencies, hunters, wildlife conservationists, such groups as the National Rifle Association and the American Civil Liberties Union, and several others. Representatives of all of these groups are certain to be invited, or to ask for the opportunity, to present their views to the committee.

Lobbyists often provide useful information to Congress. To the point, John F. Kennedy, who served three terms in the House and was in his second term in the Senate when he won the presidency, observed:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

Competent lobbyists can present the most persuasive arguments in support of their positions. Indeed, there is no more effective manner of learning all important arguments and facts on a controversial issue than to have the opposing lobbyists present their case.
—John F. Kennedy
Lobbyists are ready to do such things as make campaign contributions, provide information, write speeches, and even draft legislation. The contributions are welcome, \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How do lobbyists try to influence Congress?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 2, Chapter 9, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 235)
L2. Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 236)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 237)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 238)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 240)
L3 Quiz A (p. 241) L2 Quiz B (p. 242)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 243)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 246)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 235) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 236)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 9E, Rating Members of Congress. Have students write the answers to the questions in their notebooks. Write on the board:
Identify words in the Web page that suggest bias, and explain the reason for your answer in your notebook.
L1 L2 Differentiate Read the excerpt with students and explain the meaning of difficult or unfamiliar terms. For example, tell students that Medicare and Social Security are two government programs that provide health care and retirement benefits for mainly older Americans.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER}

Ask students to share their findings from the Bellringer. Students should observe that the description of votes as "wrong" or "right" reflects a bias on the part of the organizations sponsoring the ratings. Such terms imply that there are clear-cut understandings of what is right or wrong or even constitutional, when in fact such judgments are clearly subject to individual opinion. Students should recognize that interest groups have distinct agendas. Discuss students' answers to the questions on the transparency. (possible answers: [1] AFL-CIO, [2] knowing congressional voting records)

> Government
> All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Lobbyists testify at hearings, provide information, make campaign contributions, and draft laws.
Caption The candidate intended to follow the will of the constituents, not the desires of lobbyists.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 9 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 237), which asks students to design an interest group campaign. In this activity, students will construct a multifaceted interest group campaign that uses both direct and indirect approaches. Help students identify a cause that is suitable for the project. Make sure they understand the difference between direct approaches, such as lobbying, and indirect approaches, such as propaganda designed to influence public opinion. Encourage students to consult their text for examples of different causes.
L1 L2
Differentiate Have students provide one or two examples of different types of interest group activities.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students research an actual interest group and write a brief report describing the group's mission, the policies it is currently targeting, and some direct and indirect methods the groups is using.

Tell students to visit the Audio Tour to learn more about how lobbying works.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Lobbyists work to influence the executive branch because the executive branch can regulate the ways laws are carried out, as well as have an impact on who receives federal appointments.
Lobbying in Action Groups may conduct advertising campaigns to influence the public and lobby government officials.

Checkpoint Why do lobbyists target the executive branch?
nurture
vt. to foster, encourage, promote the information is usually quite accurate, the speeches are forceful, and the bills are well drawn. Most lobbyists know that if they behaved otherwise (gave false or misleading information, for example) they would damage, if not destroy, their credibility and then their overall effectiveness.

Lobbyists work hard to influence committee action, floor debate, and then the final vote in a legislative body. If they fail in one house, they carry their fight to the other. If they lose there, too, they may turn to the executive branch, and perhaps to the courts, as well.
 in Action
An electricity company has recently announced plans to build a wind farm in a coastal location. There are a number of competing interests involved and each is taking steps to make sure their influence is felt. What actions might these interest groups take to build public support and further their views?

\section*{Step A Proposal}

A project for building an electricity-generating wind farm in waters off the shores of an upscale vacation area is announced. The plan promises a nonpolluting source of electricity

Lobbying the Executive Branch A vast amount of public policy is made by those who administer the law-that is, by the executive branch. Many of the laws that Congress enacts are written in fairly broad terms. More specific details, such as the day-to-day enforcement of the measure, are left to be worked out in the executive branch. As a practical matter, Congress cannot do such things as prescribe the design specifications for military aircraft, or dictate the advice that federal extension agents are to give to farmers, or determine which of several vaccines will be most effective in the next flu season.

Because meetings with the President and Cabinet officers are difficult to arrange, most executive-branch lobbying focuses, instead, on senior aides in the White House and on the various agencies in the President's administration. The primary job of one of those White House aides, the Director of Public Liaison, is to nurture good relations with major interest groups, especially those that support the President's policies.

Organized interests regularly try to influence the President's appointment of the top officials in various agencies. If an industry group is successful in such efforts, it can improve its chances for favorable treatment by, for example, the Federal Communications Commission or the Bureau of Reclamation in the Department of the Interior.

The most successful lobbyists rely on their networks of contacts as they deal with federal agencies. Ed Rollins, sometime lobbyist and major White House aide in recent Republican administrations, puts that point this way:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}
l've got many friends all through the agencies and equally important, I don't have many enemies. . . . I tell my clients I can get your case moved to the top of the pile.
-Ed Rollins

Lobbying and the Courts Organized interests have only recently recognized the fact that they can use the courts to realize their policy

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 9F, X Box, when you discuss attempts by interest groups to influence legislation. This cartoon depicts a vote in Congress as a video game controlled by lobbyists and special interests. Ask: What is happening on the screen? (a vote in Congress) How does the cartoonist depict lobbyists and special interests? (as video game controllers) What is the cartoonist saying about Congress and interest groups? (Lobbyists and special interests are controlling congressional actions.) What is the significance of the \(\boldsymbol{X}\) on the box? (The cartoonist is saying that interest groups are cancelling out democracy.) As an interesting extension, tell students that the cartoon contains evidence revealing which house of Congress is the subject. Ask: What is this evidence? (The votes total 435, the total membership in the House of Representatives.)
goals. You almost certainly know that in 1954, in Brown v. Topeka Board of Education, the United States Supreme Court held that segregation by race in public schools is unconstitutional. But do you know that Brown was taken to the Supreme Court by an interest group, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People? The massive impact that that case has had made the specialinterest community realize just how useful the courts can be.

Lawsuits brought by interest groups are not at all uncommon today. For some, like the American Civil Liberties Union, legal action is the primary means by which they seek to influence public policy. The ACLU regularly takes on unpopular causes - for example, those involving the free speech rights of fringe groups. Those causes usually have little chance of success in legislative bodies, but they may prevail in a courtroom.

An interest group may also file an amicus curiae ("friend of the court") brief in a case to which it is not itself a party but in which it does have a stake. An amicus brief consists of written arguments presented to a court in support of one side in a dispute. More than 100 different organizations submitted amicus briefs to the Supreme Court in 2003, arguing for or against the University of Michigan's affirmative action policies in Gratz v. Bollinger and Grutter v. Bollinger.

Organized interests often try to influence the selection of federal judges. Thus, over recent years, both pro-life and pro-choice organizations have urged Republican and Democratic administrations to make nominees' stances on abortion a major condition for appointment to the federal bench.

\section*{The Indirect Approach}

Organized interests also approach government in a number of indirect ways. No matter the particular tactic used, however, the goal is exactly the same as it is when they approach public officials directlythat is, to shape policies to their liking. Not infrequently, interest groups try to mask their involvement in some indirect approach, hoping to make the effort appear to be spontaneous. Their indirect approaches include what is often called "grass-roots lobbying," the molding of public opinion, and various election-related activities.

Grass-roots Lobbying Most lobbyists know how to bring grass-roots pressures-pressures from members of an interest group or from the people at large, often beginning at a very basic level-to bear on public officials. Many of the groups that the lobbyists speak for can mount campaigns using letters, postcards, phone calls, faxes, and e-mails from their supporters, often on very short notice.

Some members of Congress downplay the effectiveness of such efforts, and all of them know that groups orchestrate outpourings of letters, phone calls, e-mails, and the like. Still, every congressional office monitors those communications as a way of tracking constituents' opinions.

No organization uses grass-roots lobbying more effectively than AARP, a group originally known as the American Association of Retired Persons. Founded in 1958, it now has more than 39 million members and a staff of more than 1,600 . Whenever legislation or some administrative action that affects retirees is pending, AARP swings into action. Members of Congress receive more letters, phone calls, and e-mails from members of AARP than they do from any other group.

The Internet has been a real boon to interest groups, and to cause-related organizations in particular. Nearly every organized interest has a Web site and an expanding e-mail list, as well. Blogging is used by many groups and has proved most effective in reaching people in younger age groups.

Cyberspace has been especially useful to those who want to organize a group but can do so only on a low-budget. Leftleaning MoveOn.org is a prime example of the Internet's capacity to organize. It was started by a handful of activists working out of a garage in Berkeley, California, in 1998. By 2004, they had formed an Internet network linking hundreds of thousands of citizens who could be mobilized to support liberal candidates and causes. MoveOn.org raised more than \($ 3\) million for Democratic Checkpoint How does the indirec approach to lobbying differ from the direct approach?

\section*{fringe group}
n. a group holding less popular, often extreme, views constituent
n. represented by a legislator

\section*{boon}
n. welcome benefit n. welcome benefit, stroke of good fortune

\section*{DISCUSS STUDENT PLANS}

After students have completed the activity, have them share their plans with the class. On the board, list the variety of activities identified in student plans. Review with students the difference between direct approaches to changing public policy and opinion and indirect approaches. Ask students to identify the differences between these two approaches. (Direct approaches involve direct interaction with government officials. For example, lobbyists talk to members of Congress, provide information to committees, and bring lawsuits to the courts. Indirect approaches appeal to the people, so that public opinion can pressure policymakers.)

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN To help students acquire real-life experience in influencing government, divide the class into groups and have them follow these steps: (1) Identify a problem in their community that they care about, such as maintaining recreational areas or issues surrounding safety for teens. (2) Propose solutions to the problem they have identified. (3) Create an "interest group" devoted to solving the problem. (4) Propose an action plan for the interest group to follow.

To see this lesson plan, go to

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Indirect approaches do not involve direct contact with policy-makers by interest-group representatives, whereas direct approaches do.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Extend the lesson by having students compose fundraising letters as part of their interest group campaign. Have them begin by thinking about who their target audience is and what appeals might persuade that audience to contribute money to the cause. If students have Internet access, have them examine fundraising pages at some interest group sites for ideas. Ask students to note their ideas and then use their notes to compose the letter.
L1 L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "The Environment and You" (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 240).

L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Worksheet "Understanding Propaganda" (Unit 2 All-inOne, p. 238) and have students create their own piece of propaganda.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about grass-roots organizing.

\section*{Answers}

Going Digital Possible response: Technology-based efforts will miss segments of the population that do not have the technology. Also, government officials might discount the flood of incoming electronic transmissions out of suspicion they don't represent "real" constituents.

congressional candidates in 2006 and even more in 2008; and it also conducted a massive get-out-the-vote effort in both elections.

Demonstrations and protest marches are another form of grass-roots lobbying. Most are efforts to show public officials that some group's cause does have broad public support. Some involve an element of political theater or an eye-catching gimmick to attract media (especially television) coverage. Thus, for example, peace groups often stage "die-ins" to protest war, and farmers might drive their tractors to Washington in "tractorcades" to dramatize their opposition to some agricultural policy.

Several groups now publish ratings of members of Congress. These rankings are based on the votes cast on measures these groups regard as crucial to their interests. Among the more prominent organizations that do so are such liberal groups as Americans for Democratic Action (ADA) and the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) and such conservative ones as the American Conservative Union (ACU) and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Each of these groups sees to it that the mass media publicize their ratings. They also distribute them to the group's membership. Their ultimate objective is either to persuade less-than-friendly legislators to change their voting behavior or to help bring about their defeat in future elections.

Shaping Public Opinion Many organized interests spend much of their time and energy on attempts to mold public opinion. Groups that can make enough people regard them and their cause in the best possible way, and can persuade enough people to convey that feeling to public officials, have taken a major step toward achieving their policy goals.

Television screens, newspapers, and magazines are filled with costly advertisements by oil, cell phone, drug, and insurance companies, and many others-all seeking to cast the sponsor of the ad in a favorable light. Most of those ads go well beyond promoting some particular product and try also to suggest that the organizations behave as good citizens or defend family values or protect the environment, and so on.

\section*{Debate}

Use the quotation below to start a debate in your class. Use the debate rules on page T25 to structure the class.
"The people of this country, not special interest big money, should be the source of all political power."

> -Senator Paul Wellstone

Ask students to take a position on this statement: Special interest groups undermine popular sovereignty.

A group's own membership can be used to shape opinions. Thus, in its decades-long opposition (since abandoned) to national health insurance proposals, the American Medical Association persuaded many doctors to put literature condemning those proposals as "socialized medicine" in their waiting rooms and to talk with patients about the issue. Using those tactics, the AMA capitalized on the tendency of most patients to respect their own physicians and regard them as experts.

Many groups use well-regarded personalities or trusted public figures to persuade people to support the group's cause. The late Charlton Heston served two terms as president of the NRA. Mr. Heston had a long record of support for the 2nd Amendment, but he was much better known from his long career as an actor. The wide recognition of his name and the moral authority associated with many of the characters he played in movies were extremely helpful to the NRA in its efforts to protect and expand the rights of Americans to keep and bear arms.

Almost certainly, though, the most effective vehicle for the molding of opinions and attitudes is the mass media. Interest groups know that people are more likely to regard their positions favorably if their activities are covered by the media as news rather than presented to the public in paid advertisements. With that in mind, interest groups produce a veritable flood of press releases, interviews, studies, and other materials, hoping to attract media coverage.

Propaganda Interest groups try to create the public attitudes they want by using propaganda. \({ }^{7}\) Propaganda is a technique of persuasion aimed at influencing individual or group behaviors. Its goal is to create a particular belief among the audience. That belief may be completely true or false, or it may lie somewhere between those extremes. Today, people tend to think of propaganda as a form of lying and deception. As a technique,

\footnotetext{
7 The term comes from the Latin propagare-to propagate, to spread, to disseminate. It has been part of the American political vocabulary since the 1930 s.
}

\(\triangle\) Muhammad Ali (left) and Michael J. Fox lend their names to raising money for Parkinson's disease, an illness from which both men suffer. How might Ali's and Fox's celebrity status help their cause?
however, propaganda is neither moral nor immoral; it is, instead, amoral.

Propaganda does not use objective logic. Rather, it begins with a conclusion. Then it brings together any evidence that will support that conclusion and disregards information that will not. Propagandists are advertisers, persuaders-and occasionally even brain-washers-who are interested in influencing others to agree with their point of view.

The development of the mass media in this country encouraged the use of propaganda, first in the field of commercial advertising, and then in politics. To be successful, propaganda must be presented in simple, interesting, and credible terms. Talented propagandists almost never attack the logic of a policy they oppose. Instead, they often attack it with name-calling. That is, they attach such labels as "communist" or "fascist." Other labels include "ultraliberal," "ultraconservative," "pie-in-the-sky," or "greedy." Or, they try to discredit a policy or person by card-stacking-that is, presenting only one side of the issue.

Policies that propagandists support receive labels that will produce favorable reactions. They use such glittering generalities as "American," "sound," "fair," and "just." Symbols are often used to elicit those positive reactions from people, too: Uncle Sam and the American flag are favorites. So, too,

\section*{Background}

INTERNET FUNDRAISING Display Transparency 9G, Growth of PACs, to give students a perspective on PAC membership. Today, traditional fundraising for political candidates can involve costly private events staged for big-money donors. But the political action committee ActBlue is turning the fundraising process upside down. By harnessing the power of the Internet, ActBlue has collected millions of dollars from thousands of small donors. ActBlue allows Democratic candidates for office at any level-national, State, or local-to use its Web site to solicit donations. In response, a PAC called RightRoots was formed as a conservative Republican counter to ActBlue. The primary goal of RightRoots is to act as an Internet channel to raise money for Republican candidates for federal office. The money contributed by donors is passed directly to the candidates, who pay a percentage to cover the credit card processing fee.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' interest group campaigns using the Rubric for Assessing Student Performance on a Project (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 252).
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 241)Section Quiz B (Unit 2 All-in-One, p. 242)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible response: The ads can bring favorable attention if viewers hold positive feelings toward the particular celebrity.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The ways interest groups \\ influence policy directly \\
(Questions 1, 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students identify specific lobbying \\ actions described under "The Direct \\ Approach" and categorize them under \\
""ongress," "Executive Branch," and \\
"Courts" in a three-column chart.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The ways interest groups \\ influence policy indirecty \\
(Questions 1, 2, 7, 8)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have student pairs write and exchange \\ quiz questions for the section entitled \\
"The Indirect Approach."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The meaning and \\
metheds of propaganda \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a web diagram that \\ identifies the definition of propaganda \\ and the different techniques that are of- \\ ten employed in propaganda campaigns.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The functions of lobbyists \\
(Questions 3, 4, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students review the section and \\ write a job description listing the main \\ activities and qualifications of lobbyists.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons It suggests that PACs have become the focus of politicians.

- Analyzing Political Cartoons This cartoon shows a politician kissing the hand of a political action committee member rather than a baby. What is this cartoonist saying about the influence of PACs on candidates for office?
are testimonials-endorsements, or supporting statements, from such well-known personalities as television stars or professional athletes. The bandwagon approach, which urges people to follow the crowd, is another favorite technique. The plain-folks approach, in which the propagandist pretends to be one of the common people, gets heavy use, too.

Propaganda is spread through newspapers, radio, television, the Internet, movies, billboards, books, magazines, pamphlets, posters, speeches-in fact, through every form of mass communication. The more controversial or less popular a group's position, the more necessary the propaganda campaign becomes.

Electioneering The most useful and the most appreciated thing that an interest group can do for a public official is to help that person win office. From the group's perspective, electing officeholders like members of Congress, State legislators, governors, and other State and local policymakers sympathetic to their interests is among the most effective things it can do. Once elected, these individuals can shape legislation and allocate money to meet the needs of the interest groups.

Groups can and do help those who run for office, and they do so in a variety of ways. Many do so through their political action committees. Recall that PACs are, as we said in Chapter 7, political arms of interest groups. They make financial contributions and hold fundraisers for candidates. They conduct voter registration and get-out-thevote drives, supply professional campaign consultants, and provide information to be used in campaign speeches. Occasionally they even provide audiences to hear those speeches. And PACs do such other things as help staff local campaign offices, distribute campaign literature, work phone banks, and take voters to the polls on election day.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: In what ways do interest groups attempt to influence government and public opinion?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. How do direct and indirect approaches to lobbying differ?
3. What is a lobbyist?
4. At what levels of government does lobbying take place?
5. How do interest groups use the media and propaganda to influence the public?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Predict Consequences (a) What might happen if nothing were done to limit the role of lobbyists on the government? (b) Do you think government should regulate lobbyists' behavior?
7. Draw Inferences Why do interest groups value a positive public image?
8. Identify Central Issues Using celebrity spokespeople is a popular way for interest groups to gain influence. Do interest groups gain undue influence when celebrities back their causes? Explain.

\section*{Quick Write}

Assessment Writing: Support and Revise Ideas As you begin to draft your complete essay, review what you have written and check to make sure that each paragraph includes a main idea. Build further upon the details gathered in Section 1 and compose a coherent, specific argument. Review word choice and write clear transitions between paragraphs.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Direct approaches involve face-to-face contact with policymakers. Lobbyists testify before committees, talk to White House aides, and try to influence appointments. They help provide information, draft legislation, and write speeches. They lobby the courts by bringing lawsuits and filing amicus curiae briefs. Indirect strategies include grass-roots pressure and demonstrations. Groups mold public opinion through advertising, celebrity promotions, and press releases. Some use propaganda techniques. Interest groups also electioneer.
2. Direct approaches involve face-to-face contact with policymakers. Indirect approaches try to get the public to pressure policymakers. 3. people who try to persuade public officials to do things that their interest groups want 4. at any level that public policy is made 5. They publish ads and celebrity promotions. They try to attract media coverage with press releases, interviews, and studies. Many use propaganda techniques.
6. (a) Government could become corrupt, with special interests influencing policymaking, perhaps through illegal means. (b) Yes, to prevent special interests from undermining policymaking based on the greater good and to prevent use of illegal tactics
7. Public opinion influences policy decisions.
8. Celebrities may give an interest group influence out of proportion to the group's size.
QUICK WRITE Essays should argue the positive and negative aspects of interest groups.

\section*{How Lobbying Works}

Lobbying occurs . . .
wherever public policy is made-at the national, State, and local levels of government all across the country.

\section*{Political Dictionary} interest group p. 242 public policy p. 242 public affairs p. 245 trade association p. 248 labor union p. 248 public-interest group p. 252 lobbying p. 254 lobbyist p. 254 amicus curiae brief \(p\). 257 grass-roots pressures p. 257
```

Lobbyists are...
the representatives of a wide variety of interest groups.

```
Lobbying involves . .
writing speeches, providing information to officeholders, making campaign contributions, drafting legislation, filing court briefs, and much more.
```

Lobbyists use . .
a variety of techniques to shape opinions, including grass-roots pressures, propaganda,
and election-related activities.

```

Features of Interest Groups
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Positive } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Negative } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l|l|}
\hline Provide ways to & Focus on special (narrow) \\ participate in public life & interests of group \\ Inform and raise interest & Often represent small \\ segment of population \\ in public matters & \begin{tabular}{l}
Occasionally use unethical \\ Promote interests important \\ to group members
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

SETTING PRIORITIES Many students get derailed in their studying by an inability to set priorities. Explain to students that doing so can help them focus on the right tasks at the right time, and for the right amount of time. The first step in setting priorities is to write down all assignments and tasks that must be completed, along with the date by which each must be accomplished. Stress that students should write down (or input into a software program) their assignments, not rely on memory. Have students look at their assignments lists. Which items must be done first? Which can wait? Point out that all tasks do not have equal urgency, nor should easy tasks be given first priority merely because they are less difficult to perform. Next, ask students to rewrite their list in order of importance. They can then use this list to schedule their time each day. Suggest they check off each task as it is accomplished.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 1 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debate, p. 258
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about interest groups, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Sandak, Cass R. Lobbying (Inside Government). 21 st Century, 1997.
L2 Spangenburg, Ray, Kit Moser, and Diane Moser. Propaganda: Understanding the Power of Persuasion (Teen Issues). Enslow Publishers, 2002.
L3 Thomson, Stuart and Steve John. Public Affairs in Practice: A Practical Guide to Lobbying (PR in Practice). Kogan Page, 2007.
L4 DeKieffer, Donald E. The Citizen's Guide to Lobbying Congress. Chicago Review Press, 2007.

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) Possible answer: Expressing views to government is part of the democratic process. Interest groups provide a practical way for people to join together to express shared views. (b) Interest groups behave practically by organizing on the basis of shared beliefs and reaching out to all levels and branches of government where policies are made. They behave democratically by stimulating interest in public affairs, informing voters about the issues, and providing a way for citizens to participate in politics.
2. (a) Groups create awareness of public affairs, represent members based on shared attitudes, provide useful information to government, offer a way for people to participate in politics, and monitor public agencies and officials. (b) Groups push their own interests, which may not be in the best interest of other Americans. Their influence can be out of proportion to their size or importance to the public good. They may not represent the views of all people for whom they speak. Some use heavyhanded tactics. (c) Possible response: I find the criticisms most persuasive. Too often, big money from powerful interest groups results in policies that are not in the best interests of society as a whole.
3. (a) Interest groups monitor the work of public agencies and officials, helping to assure responsible performance. Also, groups on different sides of the same issue check each other by competing for influence. (b) yes (c) possible answer: because interest groups will publicize wrong-doing by public officials, which helps voters make informed decisions

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) Not all members of every group are sincere in their interest. (b) The cartoonist does not see interest groups as always representing a sincere, deeply felt concern.
5. possible answers: (a) groups representing business, labor, agriculture, or professions, such as labor unions and professional associations (b) groups organized around issues, such as Planned Parenthood and the National Rifle Association; around segments of the population, such as the American Legion and AARP; or around religious beliefs, such as the National Council of Churches (c) groups focused on

\title{
9 \\ Chapter Assessment
}

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) Explain how interest groups are both practical and democratic. (b) Give examples of interest groups behaving in both practical and democratic ways.
2. Consider the role of interest groups in American society and in your own life. (a) Identify some positive impacts of these groups. (b) Summarize some common criticisms. (c) Which argument do you think is more persuasive?
3. (a) How do interest groups contribute to the checks-andbalances feature of the political process? (b) Do you think their contribution adds to the democratic process? (c) Why or why not?

"Weil, if you fool so irfi onc, why dsu'z you joiv owe of

4. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) What is the cartoon at left saying about interest groups? (b) Do you think the cartoonist sees interest groups as a positive or negative influence in society? Explain.
Section 2
5. Give an example of each of the following: (a) a group based on economic interests, (b) a group based on other special interests, and (c) a public interest group.
6. (a) What is the biggest category of interest group? (b) Why do you think this is? (c) Do you think this category is representative of the most important American interests?
7. (a) Why might interest groups with shared interests sometimes disagree with one another? (b) How might these disagreements affect their ability to influence policy?

\section*{Section 3}
8. (a) What techniques might a lobbyist use to influence Congress? (b) Which of these techniques might be most effective, and why? (c) How do lobbyists balance ethics with effectiveness?
9. (a) How do lobbyists use public opinion? (b) How is this similar to advertising? (c) Would you be more or less likely to support a special interest group if it garnered positive public opinion?
10. (a) What involvements do lobbyists have in political cam paigns? (b) How does this affect to campaign finance?

\section*{Writing About Government}
11. Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to complete a 3-5 paragraph essay supporting your argument concerning interest groups. See pages S9-S10 of the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity Study the role of an interest group in your school or community and then investigate the role of a larger lobbying firm, such as those found on K Street in Washington, D.C. Then answer the following:
(a) What are the goals of these groups? (b) How does each group pursue its goals? (c) Do you think these groups are effective in their attempts to shape policy?
13. Essential Question Assessment Based on you research and what you have learned in this chapter, stage a press conference with classmates acting as reporters or as members of interest groups presenting their points of view. At a press conference, reporters are given the opportunity to ask questions, so allow time for goth groups to participate. Try to answer the Essential Question: To what extent do interest groups advance or harm democracy?

262 Chapter 9 Assessment
the broad public good, such as Common Cause and League of Women Voters
6. (a) groups based on economic interests (b) because the need to earn a living is common to almost everyone, and government policies can significantly impact this area (c) possible answer: yes, because most people consider economic well-being a priority
7. (a) Possible answer: The groups might have different opinions on certain policies or multiple, conflicting interests. (b) Disagreements can make it more difficult to persuade policymakers.

\section*{SECTION 3}
8. (a) Lobbyists talk with policymakers face to face, testify before congressional committees, submit prepared statements on proposed legislation, provide useful information to members of Congress, make campaign contributions, write speeches, and draft legislation. (b) Possible response: Talking with policymakers could provide useful information. (c) by being careful to provide accurate information so as not to destroy their credibility
9. (a) They try to mold public opinion to favor their cause, so that public opinion can put

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Regulating Special Interests}

In 2007, Congress passed a law limiting the reach of lobbyists. Members debated restrictions on earmarks - funds set aside for specific projects, often at the request of interest groupsand the practice of retiring representatives becoming lobbyists; as shown in Document 3.

\section*{Document 1}

This document shows some earmarks from 2008 Appropriations bills:
Alaska Native Education Equity Assistance Program ($34,500,000)
AFL-CIO Working for American Institute ( \($ 1,500,000\) ) YMCA of Central Stark County, Ohio \(($ 500,000)\) Detroit Renaissance ( \($ 231,000\) )
Coastal Wind, Ohio \(($ 100,000)\)
- Taxpayers for Common Sense,

FY2008 Appropriations Bills database
Facilities and Equipment for Hudson Alpha Institute for Biotechnology \(($ 310,000)\)
-Office of Management and Budget

\section*{Document 2}

This bill won't even begin to stop corruption in Washington, because the earmark favor factory will remain open and ready for business. Politicians will still be able to use these secret earmarks to direct millions of taxpayer dollars to special interests. You can hear the champagne bottles being uncorked all over K Street, because the lobbyists know it will be business as usual. -Senator Jim DeMint (R., South Carolina), press release from his Web site

Document 3

Document 4
What we did today was momentous. The link between lobbyists and legislation that we have broken is something that will make a difference in the lives of the American people. . . We are free to act in the people's interest instead of the special interes
-House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D., California) quoted in USA Today, August 1, 2007

\section*{se your knowledge of lobbying, and Documents 1, 2, 3 and 4 to} answer Questions 1-3.

Summarize Documents 2 and 4
A. Both speakers think it will have little effect on lobbyists.
B. Both speakers feel it will make a big difference to American taxpayers
C. Speaker 2 sees it as an important step in regulat ing special interests whereas Speaker 4 doesn't think the law will have any effect on corruption.
D. Speaker 2 feels very negative about it, Speaker 4 sees it as a positive for the business of lobbyists.
2. How does Document 3 show the link between Congress and lobbyists?
3. How might some of the earmarks listed in Document 1 represent special interests?
4. Pull It Together Do you think lobbying regulation will be effective? Why or why not?
GOVERNMENT ONLINE Documents
Tocumd more prinary sorces To find more primary sources on lobbyists and interest groups, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. C
2. The cartoon suggests that many lobbyists are former members of Congress.
3. The earmarks may have come about as a result of lobbying by an interest group.
4. Some students might suggest that regulation will be effective because rules have been established to control specific behaviors. Other students might believe that lobbyists will find ways around the rules. No matter which position students take, they should provide supporting reasons.
Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

L4
Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.
pressure on policymakers. (b) Advertising is another way of producing favorable public opinion. (c) more likely, because positive public opinion can be a strong influence on an individual's thinking and decision making
10. (a) They form PACs that make financial contributions and hold fundraisers for candidates who support their cause. They also conduct get-out-the-vote drives, supply professional campaign consultants, provide information for speeches and audiences to hear the speeches, help staff local campaign offices, distribute campaign literature, and participate in phone banks. (b) All of these activities either bring money into the campaign or lower campaign costs for the candidate.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Student essays should clearly state a position on whether interest groups are good or bad, and provide supporting details.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Students should select a local or school interest group, clearly state its goals, and describe its strategies for achieving these goals. Students should be able to list the group's goals, how it pursues goals, and judge the effectiveness of the group by citing policies the group influenced.
13. In the student press conference, reporters should ask thoughtful questions, and the answers from interest group members should display an understanding of the issue and the group's goals.

\section*{ANSWERS TO ESSENTIAL QUESTION WARMUP}

Before assigning these questions, distribute the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 2 All-inOne, p. 257). Use the criteria and the guidelines below to grade students' answers to the Essential Question Warmup questions. Then send students to the Essential Questions Journal to answer the unit Essential Question.
1. A good answer to this question will demonstrate an understanding of the tremendous influence the media has on public opinion. Most students will probably believe that the media has a responsibility to be accurate, fair, and unbiased. More nuanced answers will recognize that a gray area exists around reporting on events and information that could endanger individuals or national security.
2. Students should recognize the importance of voting, but also point to the importance of the many other ways of participating in good government, including working on campaigns, joining interest groups, making opinions known through writing to members of Congress, and staying informed.
3. Students' answers should recognize that interest groups are democratic in that they strive to make the voices of the people heard; however, they can be undemocratic if they exert undue pressure or influence.
4. Answers should recognize that being an active member of a political party, like being an active member of an interest group, is one way that a citizen can influence government. This is especially true in the case of many minor parties that are devoted to one particular cause.

\section*{Assessment Resources}

Unit 2 AYP Monitoring Assessment
ExamView Test Bank CD-ROM
SuccessTracker Assessment
Online Student Self-Tests
Chapter Tests
Section Quizzes
Chapter-level Document-Based Assessment

\section*{In This unir}

\author{
Chapter 10:
}

Congress
Chapter 11:
Powers of Congress
Chapter 12:
Congress in Action

Photo: U.S. Capitol

the Legistative Branoh
Essential Question What makes a successful Congress?

\section*{Government Online Resources}

Government Online Teacher Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Online Teacher's Edition with lesson planner and lecture notes
- Teacher's Resource Library with All-in-One Resources, Color Transparencies, Adequate Yearly Progress Monitoring, and an alternative lesson plan for each chapter
- SuccessTracker Assessment

Government Online Student Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Interactive textbook with audio
- American Government Essential Questions Video
- Chapter-level WebQuests
- Guided Audio Tours and Interactivities
- Student Self-Tests

\section*{ESSENTIAL QUESTION PERSPECTIVES}

Essential questions frame each unit and chapter of study, asking students to consider big ideas about government. The question for this unit-What makes a successful Congress?-demands that students ask further questions. How do they define "successful"? What criteria should be used to judge Congress? Should Congress be judged as a whole, or should members be judged individually? Can success be measured immediately, or must we rely on historical perspective to make a judgment?
To begin this unit, assign the Unit 3 Warmup Activity on page 77 of the Essential Questions Journal.
This will help students start to consider their position on the Unit 3 Essential Question: What makes a successful Congress?
Show the Unit 3 American Government Essential Questions Video to help students begin thinking about the unit Essential Question and designate a classroom bulletin board for students to post news articles related to the unit Essential Question. Use the Conversation Wall strategy ( \(p\). T27) to encourage students to post articles and comments on other students' postings.
Later, students will further explore the chapter-level essential questions:
Chapter 10: Whose views should members of Congress represent when voting?
Chapter 11: What should be the limits on the powers of Congress?
Chapter 12: Can and should the lawmaking process be improved?
Use the Essential Questions Journal throughout the program to help students consider these and other big ideas about government.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 3}

What makes a successful Congress?

\section*{CHAPTER 10}

Whose views should members of Congress represent when voting?
ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the photo and quotation suggest about Congress? (that members of Congress represent all the different people of the United States) In this chapter, students will learn about members of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Tell students to begin to further explore Congress by completing the Chapter 10 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 10 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 9)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:
- The Capitol
- Gerrymandering: Choosing Their Voters

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

You may wish to teach decision making as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 10 Skills Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 31) to help students decide which candidate for Senate they would choose. The worksheet will walk them through the process of deciding what qualities they want in a senator, identifying the strengths and weaknesses of each candidate, and choosing one candidate. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 32).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online The chapter WebQuest challenges} students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about Congress.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 and 2 lessons, omitting the Section 1 Extend option.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 and 4 lessons, omitting the Section 4 Bellringer and discussion of diversity in Congress. Choose an Extend option from Sections 1, 2, or 3, depending on your preferences and state standards.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

To cover this chapter quickly, review the Section 1 Reading Comprehension Worksheet, questions 1 through 6 . Then have students complete the Section 4 Core Worksheet, writing "help-wanted" ads for senators and members of the House. Explain reapportionment and the reasons for gerrymandering. Have students study "Gerrymandering: Choosing Their Voters" in Section 2. Finish by reviewing "How Should Members of Congress Vote?" in Section 4 and asking students to write a paragraph explaining how they think Senator Jones should vote on the bill.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- explain the structure of Congress and describe the controversy over the equity of the distribution of seats through a class discussion.
- predict the benefits and drawbacks of a bicameral Congress by drawing comparisons between a National Government and a school government.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- identify the States with the most and fewest representatives in the House and review the challenges the Framers faced in creating a functioning government.
- describe the House of Representatives.
- analyze the qualifications for members of the House through brainstorming and class discussion.
- identify the reasons for and results of gerrymandering by simulating the process of drawing district lines.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- use a Venn diagram to compare the job and qualifications of senators and members of the House.
- assess the characteristics and qualifications of senators through four real-life examples.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- address the composition of Congress by describing an "average" member and discussing ways the composition might be altered to reflect the popuIation.
- identify and analyze the formal and informal qualifications for members of Congress by writing help-wanted ads.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
1 Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{Why does the Constitution establish a bicameral legislature?}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Reason } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Summary } \\
\hline Historical & Americans familiar with bicameral British Parliament \\
\hline Practical & compromise between Virginia and New Jersey Plans \\ \hline Theoretical & \begin{tabular}{l} each house can check power of the other; prevents \\ Congress from overpowering other branches
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will...
- explain the structure of Congress and describe the controversy over the equity of the distribution of seats through a class discussion.
- predict the benefits and drawbacks of a bicameral Congress by drawing comparisons between a National Government and a school government.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 13) before class.
L2 D
Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 14)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 10A, Representation in Congress, and have students answer these questions in their notebook: Is the distribution of senators fair? Why or why not?

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

Before students work on this section's Core Worksheet, you may want to review the information on drawing inferences and conclusions in the Skills Handbook, p. S1 9.

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{The National Legislature}

\section*{Guiding Question}

Why does the Constitution establish a bicameral legislature? Use a table to take notes on the reasons for a bicameral legislature.
\begin{tabular}{|l|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Reason } & Summary \\
\hline Historical & \\ \hline Practical & \\
\hline Theoretical & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- bicameral - adjourn
- term
- recess
- prorogue
- convene
- special session

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain why the Constitution provides for a bicameral Congress.
2. Explain the difference between a term and a session of Congress.
3. Describe a situation in which the President may convene or end a session of Congress.

Image Above: Senators Arlen Specter (R., Penn.) and Patrick Leahy (D., Vt.)

You live in a democracy, and you know that in a democracy the people rule. But what does that really mean? You are one of "the people," but you do not rule, at least not in the literal, hands-on sense. You do not make laws, collect taxes, arrest criminals, or decide court cases.

You do not do those or all of the many other things that government does because you live in a representative democracy. Here, it is the representatives of the people who do the day-to-day, hands-on work of government.

Congress stands as a prime example of that point. It is the nation's lawmaking body, the legislative branch of its National Government. It is charged with the most basic of governmental functions in a democratic society: Translating the public will into public policy in the form of law.

Yet Congress has never been very widely admired by the American people. Mark Twain amused his audiences with comments like, "Suppose you were an idiot. And suppose you were a member of Congress. But I repeat myself" Television personalities such as Jay Leno or Jon Stewart often make similar comments.

Still, despite those belittlings, Congress is immensely important in the American scheme of democratic government. James Madison called Congress "the first branch" of the National Government. Just how profoundly important he and the other Framers thought Congress to be is indicated by this fact: The very first and longest of the articles of the Constitution is devoted to it.

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.
-Article I, Section 1

\section*{A Bicameral Congress}

Immediately, the Constitution establishes a bicameral legislature-that is, a legislature made up of two houses. It does so for historical, practical, and theoretical reasons.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: • Congress is bicameral. - In the House of Representatives, States are represented according to population. - Each State has two senators. - Congress meets for two-year terms, divided into two one-year sessions.
CONCEPTS: separation of powers, checks and balances, federalism
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Constitution provides for a bicameral Congress for historical, practical, and theoretical reasons. - The bicameral structure of Congress is a compromise between two models of representation that the Framers developed to accommodate the needs of both large and small states.

Historical The British Parliament had consisted of two houses since the 1300s. The Framers and most other Americans knew the British system of bicameralism quite well. Most of the colonial assemblies and, in 1787, all but two of the new State legislatures were also bicameral. Among the original thirteen colonies, only Georgia and Pennsylvania had unicameral colonial and then State legislatures. Georgia's legislature became bicameral in 1789 and Pennsylvania's in 1790. (Only one State, Nebraska, has a unicameral legislature today.)

Practical The Framers had to create a twochambered body to settle the conflict between the Virginia and the New Jersey Plans at Philadelphia in 1787. Recall, the most populous States wanted to distribute the seats in Congress in proportion to the population of each State, while the smaller States demanded an equal voice in Congress.

Bicameralism is a reflection of federalism. Each of the States is equally represented in the Senate and each is represented in line with its population in the House.

Theoretical The Framers favored a bicameral Congress in order that one house might act as a check on the other

A leading constitutional historian recounts a conversation between Thomas Jefferson and George Washington at Mount Vernon. Jefferson, who had just returned from France, told Washington that he was opposed to a twochambered legislature. As he made his point, he poured his coffee into his saucer, and Washington asked him why he did so. "To cool it," replied Jefferson. "Even so," said Washington, "we pour legislation into the senatorial saucer to cool it."1

The Framers were generallyconvinced that Congress would dominate the new National Government. As Madison observed,

\section*{Primary Source}

In a republican government, the legislative authority necessarily predominates. The remedy for this inconveniency is to divide the legislature into different branches.
-The Federalist No. 51
1 Max Farrand, The Framing of the Constitution (1913).
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What practical problem did the Framers solve by creating a bicameral legislature?

\section*{populous} adj. with many people predominates \(v\). holds controlling power or influence

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that today they will discuss the structure of Congress and the reasons for it. Tell them that Congress is bicameral and ask what that means. (It is made up of two legislative chambers or houses: the Senate and the House of Representatives.)
L2 ELL Differentiate Write the word bicameral on the board and break it down into parts. Bi - means two and camera is the Latin word for chamber, or room. Explain that bicameral is a political word that refers to governments with two legislative chambers.

\section*{review the structure of the houses}

Review representation in Congress: two senators per State, representatives allotted according to population. Ask students to explain why Congress is set up this way (for historical, practical, and theoretical reasons).
You may also discuss what the author means when he says, "Remember, had the States not been equally represented in the Senate, there might never have been a Constitution. " (The large States would not have agreed to a Congress with equal representation, while the small States would not have agreed to a Congress with representation based on population.) Review responses to the Bellringer questions.
L2 Differentiate Model note-taking skills by drawing a chart like the one shown on the previous page. Record notes on the board, asking students where on the chart their responses should be written.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 10, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 9)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 13)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 14)
L \(\mathbf{3}\) Core Worksheet (p. 15)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 16)
L3 Quiz A (p. 17)
L2 Quiz B (p. 18)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It solved the conflict between largeand small-population States over how to distribute the seats in Congress.
The Capitol The houses are two parts of one National Government. Therefore, the two chambers must reside close together so that members can work together.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 10 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 15). Explain that students will predict the benefits and drawbacks of a bicameral system by using school government as an example. Ask a student to read the introductory paragraph on the worksheet aloud.
L3 Differentiate If time is short, have half the class do benefits and half do drawbacks. Then have them explain their answers to the other half of the class.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Clarify the meaning of benefits (advantages) and of drawbacks (disadvantages).

\section*{REVIEW WORKSHEET AND DRAW PARALLELS}

After students complete their charts, draw a chart on the board. Ask students to share their predictions and discuss. Ask students to draw parallels between the theoretical school government and Congress. They are: School \(=\) nation
Team or club \(=\) State
Upper house \(=\) Senate
Lower house \(=\) House of Representatives

\section*{REVIEW FACTS}

Review the answers to the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 13). Emphasize questions 2, 4, and 7 .

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Maps California has a much larger population than Wyoming, yet both States have two members in the Senate. This system prevents large States like California from dominating small States in the Senate's decision making.

Representation in Congress

- Interpreting Maps California and Wyoming each elect two senators, despite a huge difference in their populations. How does the distribution of Senate seats among the States illustrate the principle of federalism?

The Framers saw bicameralism as a way \(\frac{\text { diffuse }}{\text { v. to spre }}\)
v. to spread out to diffuse the power of Congress and so prevent it from overwhelming the other two branches of government.

For more than 200 years now, some people have argued that equal representation of the States in the Senate is undemocratic and should be eliminated. \({ }^{2}\) They often point to the two extremes to make their case. The State with the least population, Wyoming, has only some 500,000 residents. The most populous State, California, now has a population of more than 37 million. Yet each of these States has two senators.

Those who object to State equality in the Senate ignore a vital fact. The Senate was purposely created as a body in which the States

2 There is not the remotest chance that that would ever be done. Recall, the Constitution provides in Aricle V that "no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate." the Senate."
would be represented as coequal members and partners in the Union. Remember, had the States not been represented equally in the Senate, there might never have been a Constitution.

\section*{Terms and Sessions}

It is said that a woman, incensed at something her senator had done, said to him, "You know, the 535 of you people in Congress meet every two years. Well, Senator, there are some of us who think that it would be much better if just two of you met every 535 years."

Whether that story is true or not, that woman's advice has never been followed. Ever since 1789, Congress has met for twoyear terms.

Terms of Congress Each term of Congress lasts for two years, and each of those two-year terms is numbered consecutively. \({ }^{3}\) Congress began its first term on March 4, 1789. That term ended two years later, on March 3, 1791 .

The date for the start of each new term was changed by the 20th Amendment in 1933. In an earlier era, the several months from election to March 4 allowed for delays in communicating election results, and it gave newly chosen lawmakers time to arrange their affairs and travel to Washington. The March date gave Congress less time to accomplish its work each year, however, and by the 1930s travel and communications were no longer an issue. The start of each new two-year term is now "noon of the 3d day of January" of every odd-numbered year. So the scheduled term of the 111 th Congress runs for two years-from noon on January 3, 2009, to noon on January 3, 2011.

Sessions A session of Congress is that period of time during which, each year, Congress assembles and conducts business. There are two sessions to each term of Con-gress-one session each year. The Constitution provides the following:

\footnotetext{
3 Article I, Section 2, Clause 1 dictates the two-year term by providing that members of the House "shall be . . . chosen every second Year."
}

\section*{Background}

SPECIAL SESSIONS Display and discuss Transparency \(10 B\), Special Congressional Session. When President Franklin D. Roosevelt took office in March 1933, the nation was in the Great Depression. Millions of Americans were out of work. The banking system had collapsed. Roosevelt did not wait until Congress went into regular session in December. He immediately called a special session to address the economic crisis, and Congress passed a remarkable range of important legislation. The Depression, however, was not the only crisis Roosevelt faced. In the late 1930s, German aggression was pushing Europe toward war. The American policy was to remain neutral. In 1939, after Germany invaded Poland, Roosevelt called a special session and asked Congress to lift the ban on the sale of arms. The resulting "cash-and-carry" law enabled the U.S. to supply arms to the Allies without formally declaring war.

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

\author{
-20th Amendment, Section 2
}

In fact, Congress often does "appoint a different day." The second session of each two-year term frequently convenes (begins) a few days or even a few weeks after the third of January.

Congress adjourns, or suspends until its next session, each regular session as it sees fit. Until World War II, the nation's lawmakers typically met for four or five months each year. Today, the many pressing issues facing Congress force it to remain in session through most of each year. Both houses do recess for several short periods during a session. That is, they temporarily suspend business.

Neither house may adjourn sine die (finally, ending a session) without the other's consent. The Constitution provides that

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

Neither House . . . shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.
-Article I, Section 5, Clause 4

Article II, Section 3 of the Constitution does give the President the power to prorogue (end, discontinue) a session, but only when the two houses cannot agree on a date for adjournment. No President has ever had to use that power.

Special Sessions Only the President may call Congress into special session-a meeting to deal with some emergency situation. \({ }^{4}\) Only 27 of these special joint sessions of Congress have ever been held. President Harry Truman called the most recent one in 1948, to consider anti-inflation and welfare measures in the aftermath of World War II.

Note that the President can call Congress or either of its houses into a special session. The Senate has been called alone on 46 occasions, to consider treaties or presidential appointments, but not since 1933. The House has never been called alone.

Of course, the fact that Congress now meets nearly year-round reduces the likelihood of special sessions. That fact also lessens the importance of the President's power to call one. Still, as Congress nears the end of a session, the President sometimes finds it useful to threaten a special session if the two chambers do not act on some measure high on the administration's legislative agenda.

\section*{agenda}
n. list of things to be done
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How many sessions make up each congressional term?

4 Article II, Section 3 says that the President "may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Ask students to make a fact sheet on the current term and session of Congress. They should include the names of their representatives and the dates for the start, end, adjournment, and recesses.
L2 L1 Differentiate For these students, distribute the Extend Activity "Write to Your Senator or Representative" (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 16).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
\begin{tabular}{c}
\(\boxed{L 3}\) \\
\hline L3 \\
\hline L2
\end{tabular} Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 17)
Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 18)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining reasons for \\ bicameralism (Questions 1, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write the section graphic organizer \\ on the board and have students \\ explain it.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding terms and ses- \\ sions (Questions 2, 3, 4, 6, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make a timeline of \\ the last session of Congress using \\ the relevant Political Dictionary \\ words.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answer}

Checkpoint two

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Historical: familiarity with British Parliament, which was bicameral Practical: compromise between the Virginia and New Jersey Plans Theoretical: The Framers believed that bicameralism would enable each house of Congress to check the power of the other and would help to prevent Congress from overpowering the other branches of government.
2. one that has two houses
3. A term is the period from noon of January 3 of the year following a congressional election
(every odd-numbered year) to noon of January 3 after the next election. It lasts two years. A session is the period in a given year during which Congress is conducting business. Each term has two sessions, one each year of the term.
4. recess: a temporary break; ad jurnment: business is ended until the next session
5. The large and small States might not have agreed to a National Government.
6. Under a monarchy, the executive (king) was very powerful. The Framers chose to create a republic, in which the legislators, as the people's representatives, would hold greater power than the executive (President).
7. A good answer will include the possibility that experience had taught the Framers that a one-year term was too short to allow Congress to accomplish much, so they decided to lengthen it to two years.
QUICK WRITE Students' lists should show evidence of thoughtful research and evaluation of information.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will identify an issue being debated by Congress in which they are interested and write a letter to one of their representatives in Congress.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{READ}

Have students read the introduction to Citizenship 101 aloud. If students have computer access, you may have them research bills on the current congressional calendars. Alternatively, students may read newspapers or watch the news to collect ideas about what issues Congress is currently debating.

\section*{BRAINSTORM}

As a class, have students brainstorm a list of issues that affect them. Compare this with a list of bills that have recently or will soon be debated by Congress. If there is no bill that students feel strongly about, they could propose one. Read Step 1 aloud. Use the Internet or a local newspaper to identify the students' representatives in Congress, including both senators and representatives.

\section*{DRAFT AND WRITE LETTERS}

In groups or on their own, have students follow the remaining steps to write a letter to a member of Congress. Work with individual students to address problems with their letters.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the students' letters and grade them. You may also wish to have them answer the What Do You Think questions at the bottom of the page.

\section*{Answers}
1. Possible answers: Officials try to represent their constituents' views. Unless constituents write to them, officials may not know the views of the people in their districts.
2. A strong answer will explain that elected officials receive a lot of mail or that a short letter can be more effective than a long one.
3. A strong letter will address the correct recipient, clearly state the reasons for the letter, explain the writer's position on the issue, call for action, and use good grammar.

\section*{Writing a Letter to a Public Official}

\begin{abstract}
Terrorism, drunk driving, climate change, discrimination, immigration - Do you have a strong opinion about an issue that's being debated in Congress? A brief, well-written letter or e-mail is a very effective way to let your representative and senators know about it. Members of Congress pay attention to constituents who take the time to write to them.
\end{abstract}

Follow these simple steps when writing your letter:
1. Find out who represents you in Congress. If you don't know who your representative and senators are, look in your local newspaper, which may have a weekly record of how they voted on recent bills. You could also go to the Senate or House of Representatives Web site and type your zip code or State in the Search box. You can be sure you are using an official government Web site if the address ends in.gov. You can also use the blue (government) pages of your phone book to look up your members of Congress and their office addresses.

2. Organize your thoughts. Identify your issue clearly. Before you write, list the reasons you hold your opinion and arrange them in order of importance. Choose only the top two or three to include in your letter.
3. Clearly state what action you want your member of Congress to take. For example, you might say, "I am writing to urge you to vote for Senate Bill 244, the bill that will continue funding for Job Corps." If you don't know the number of a bill, identify it as closely as you can by name.
4. Explain your reasons. Tell your member of Congress why you think he or she should support your position. Be sure to include specific details and personal experiences that have led you to your position: "I dropped out of high school in tenth grade and couldn't get a job. My cousin learned auto mechanics in Job Corps and ended up with a really good job, so I applied. Job Corps turned my life around. I earned my GED and trained as a computer technician. This year I'm working part time and going to college. I'm writing to you to say that this is a great program. Please vote for funding to make sure it will continue to help young people who want a chance to succeed."
5. Prepare your letter. Make sure to address your letter correctly. Include your full name, phone number, and mailing address on the letter or in the e-mail.

\section*{What do you think?}
1. Why might an elected official want to hear about your experiences?
2. Why might it be important to limit yourself to explaining only the top wo or three reasons for the position you hold?
3. You Try It Follow the steps above to write a letter on an issue that is important to you.

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Write a Letter to a Public Official. It includes a lesson plan for you and four Mission Briefs for students, which provide a script and instructions for writing effective letters. The Template and Checklist for a Letter to a Public Official may be helpful for students who do not need the full support of the Mission Briefs. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on How to Write a Letter to a Public Official at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\title{
section 2 \\ \\ The House of \\ \\ The House of Representatives } Representatives
}

Guiding Question
How are the seats in the House distributed and what qualifications must members meet? Use a concept web to take notes on the House of Representatives.

Political Dictionary
- apportion - at-large
- reapportion - gerrymander
- off-year election • incumbent
- single-member district

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how House seats are distributed and describe the length of a term in the House
2. Explain how House seats are reapportioned among the States after each census.
3. Describe a typical congressional election and congressional district
4. Analyze the formal and informal qualifications for election to the House.
mage Above: Members of the media follow Rep. John Conyers (D., Mich.) (front right), the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

Every other autumn, hundreds of men and women seek election to the House of Representatives. Most of them try to attract supporters and win votes with posters, yard signs, billboards, flyers, buttons, and other eye-catching campaign materials. Nearly all make their "pitches" with radio and television spots, newspaper ads, and Web sites. In this section, you will discover the general shape of the office that all of those candidates so eagerly pursue.

\section*{Size and Terms}

The exact size of the House of Representatives-today, 435 members-is not fixed by the Constitution. Rather, it is set by Congress. The Constitution provides that the total number of seats in the House of Representatives shall be apportioned (distributed) among the States on the basis of their respective populations. \({ }^{5}\) Each State is guaranteed at least one seat no matter what its population. Today, seven States have only one representative apiece: Alaska, Delaware, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Vermont, and Wyoming.

Voters in the District of Columbia, Guam, the Virgin Islands, and American Samoa each elect a delegate to represent them in the House, and Puerto Rico chooses a resident commissioner. Those officials are not, however, fullfledged members of the House of Representatives and do not vote on bills.

Article I, Section 2, Clause 1 of the Constitution provides that "Representatives shall be . . . chosen every second Year"-that is, they are elected for two-year terms. This rather short term means that, for House members, the next election is always just around the corner. That fact tends to make them pay close attention to "the folks back home."

There is no constitutional limit on the number of terms any member of Con gress may serve. A considerable effort was made in the 1990s to persuade Congress to offer a constitutional amendment to limit congressional terms. Most versions of such an amendment would have put a three- or four-term limit on service in the House and a two-term limit for the Senate. \({ }^{6}\)

\section*{Article I, Section 2, Clause 3}

6 The States do not have the power to limit the number of terms their members of Congress may serve, United States v. Thornton, 1995.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Members of the House represent districts of roughly equal population and serve two-year terms. - After each census, the 435 seats in the House are redistributed among the States to reflect changes in population. - Elections are held on the Tuesday following the first Monday in November of even-numbered years. • Members of the House must be at least 25 years old, must have been a U.S. citizen for at least seven years, and must live in the State he or she represents.
CONCEPTS: judicial review
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Congressional districts can be gerrymandered to provide an advantage to the dominant party in a State's legislature. - The right combination of formal and informal qualifications helps members of the House get elected.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How are the seats in the House distributed and what qualifications must members meet?

A. age 25; citizen 7 years; inhabit State where elected
B. name familiarity; gender; ethnicity; experience; incumbency; fundraising ability

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- identify the States with the most and fewest representatives in the House and review the challenges the Framers faced in creating a functioning government.
- describe the House of Representatives.
- analyze the qualifications for members of the House through brainstorming and class discussion.
- identify the reasons for and results of gerrymandering by simulating the process of drawing district lines.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{GIVE A MULTIMEDIA PRESENTATION}

To help students with the debates in this lesson, you may want to review the information on giving a multimedia demonstration in the Skills Handbook, p. S21.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 19) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 20).

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 10C, Congressional Apportionment 2003-2013, and distribute the Chapter 10 Section 2 Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 21). Then have students answer the questions in their notebook.

\section*{L1 L2 Differentiate To find a percentage of the} House, students should divide the number of representatives (for example, the total number from the four largest States) by 435 (the total number in the House), and then multiply by 100.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Answer the Bellringer questions on the board:
1. The four States with the most representatives are California (53), Texas (32), New York (29), and Florida (25). These States represent about 32 percent of the seats in the House of Representatives (139 seats held by these states divided by 435 total).
2. The seven States with one representative each are Alaska, Delaware, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Vermont, and Wyoming. These States represent 1.6 percent of the House seats.
3. Larger States have more representatives and, therefore, a louder voice in the House than the smaller States. If students claim that this is an unfair situation, remind them that the organization of the Senate addresses the issue.
Ask students who elects members of the House. (voters in each congressional district)

Checkpoint What problem did the House face after the census of 1920 ?

\section*{Reapportionment}

Article I of the Constitution directs Congress to reapportion (redistribute) the seats in the House every ten years, after each census. \({ }^{7}\) Until a first census could be taken, the Constitution set the size of the House at 65 seats. That many members served in the First and Second Congresses (1789-1793). The census of 1790 showed a national population of \(3,929,214\) persons; so in 1792 Congress increased the number of House seats by 41 , to 106 .

A Growing Nation As the nation's population grew over the decades, and as the number of States also increased, so did the size of the House. It went to 142 seats after the census of 1800 , to 182 seats 10 years later, and so on. \({ }^{8}\) By 1912 , following the census of 1910 and the admission of Arizona and then New Mexico to the Union, the House had grown to 435 seats.

\footnotetext{
7 Article I, Section 2, Clause 3. A decennial census is one taken every ten years.
3 Once, following the census of 1840 , the size of the House was reduced from 242 to 232 seats.
}

With the census of 1920, Congress found itself in a difficult political position. The House had long since grown too large for effective floor action. To reapportion without adding more seats, however, would mean that some States would have to lose seats.

Congress met the problem by doing nothing. So, despite the Constitution's command, there was no reapportionment on the basis of the 1920 census.

Reapportionment Act of 1929 Faced with the 1930 census, Congress avoided repeating its earlier lapse by passing the Reapportionment Act of 1929. That law, still on the books, sets up what is often called an "automatic reapportionment." It provides:
1. The "permanent" size of the House is 435 members. Of course, that figure is permanent only so long as Congress does not decide to change it. Congress did enlarge the House temporarily in 1959 when Alaska and then Hawaii became States. Today each of the 435 seats in the House represents an average of some 700,000 persons.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline Congressional Apportionment 2003-2013 & \begin{tabular}{l}
GOVERNMENT ONLINE \\
\hline
\end{tabular} \\
\begin{tabular}{l|l|}
\hline Interpreting Maps The The 435 seats in the House are reapportioned among the States \\ every ten years. What regions are gaining or losing population?
\end{tabular} & \(\begin{array}{l}\text { Listen to a guided audio tour of } \\ \text { this map at } \\ \text { PearsonSuccessNet.com }\end{array}\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

274 Congress

\section*{273_MAGO9se_CH10_s2indd 274}

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 10, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 19)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 20)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 21)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 22)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 23)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 24)
L3 Quiz A (p. 25)
L2 Quiz B (p. 26)

2. Following each census, the Census Bureau is to determine the number of seats each State should have.
3. When the Bureau's plan is ready, the President must send it to Congress.
4. If, within 60 days of receiving it, neither house rejects the Census Bureau's plan, it becomes effective.

The plan set out in the 1929 law has worked quite well through eight reapportionments. The law leaves to Congress its constitutional responsibility to reapportion the House, but it gives to the Census Bureau the mechanical chores and the political "heat" that go with that task.

\section*{Congressional Elections}

According to the Constitution, any person whom a State allows to vote for members of "the most numerous Branch" of its own legislature is qualified to vote in congressional elections. \({ }^{9}\) The Constitution also provides that

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The Times, Places and Manner of holding [Congressional] Elections . . . shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations. . . . \({ }^{10}\)
—Article I, Section 4, Clause 1

Date Congressional elections are held on the same day in every State. Since 1872 Congress has required that those elections be held on the Tuesday following the first Monday in November of each even-numbered year. Congress has made an exception for Alaska, which may hold its election in October. To date, however, Alaskans have chosen to use the November date.

\footnotetext{
Article I, Section 2, Clause 1.
10 The Constitution allows only one method for filling a vacancy in the House-by a special election, which may be called only by the governor of the State involved (Article I, Section 2, Clause 4).
}

In that same 1872 law, Congress directed that representatives be chosen by written or printed ballots. The use of voting machines was approved in 1899. Today, most votes cast in congressional elections are cast on some type of (usually electronic) voting device.

Off-Year Elections Those congressional elections that occur in nonpresidential yearsthat is, between presidential elections-are called off-year elections. Examples include 2006, 2010, and 2014.

Far more often than not, the party that holds the presidency loses seats in the offyear elections. The most recent exception occurred in 2002, in the first election to be held after the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001. The Republicans, sparked by the campaign efforts of President Bush, regained control of the Senate and padded their slim majority in the House. The party in power suffered major losses in the 2006 off-year elections, however. The Democrats, riding a wave of popular dissatisfaction with several Bush administration policies and, in particular, mounting opposition to the war in Iraq, captured control of both houses of Congress.

Districts The 435 members of the House are chosen by the voters in 435 separate congressional districts across the country. Recall that seven States each have only one seat in the House. There are, then, 428 congressional districts within the other 43 States.

The Constitution makes no mention of congressional districts. For more than half a century, Congress allowed each State to decide whether to elect its members by a general ticket system or on a single-member district basis. Under the single-member district arrangement, the voters in each district elect one of the State's representatives from among a field of candidates running for a seat in the House from that district.

Most States quickly set up single-member districts. However, several States used the general ticket system. Under that arrangement, all of the State's seats were filled at-large-that is, elected from the State as a whole, rather than from a particular district. Every voter could vote for a candidate for each one of the State's seats in the House.

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 10D, Redistricting, when you discuss congressional elections. This cartoon illustrates the effects of U.S. Congress-sanctioned redistricting. Ask: Whom does the man at the table represent? (the voting public) How does the cartoonist characterize redistricting? (as a puzzle whose pieces should fit together as shown on the box's lid) Explain how the cartoon characterizes the way the public feels about the current system. (The man in the cartoon representing the public is confused about the irregular, and seemingly arbitrary, way the system allows districts' boundaries to be cut/drawn.) Of the two typical State forms of deciding congressional districts that were discussed in this section, which form does this cartoon represent? Why? (single-member district; Each district's voters elect their State's representative rather than the State electing representatives as a whole-at large.)

\section*{COVER THE BASICS}

Ask students to take out the Reading Comprehension Worksheet. Review the answers to questions 1 , 3 , and 13 to make sure they know the size of the House (435), length of term (two years), and formal qualifications for members (at least 25 years old, a citizen of the United States for at least seven years, and live in the State he or she represents).
Allow students to ask questions related to these topics.

\section*{BRAINSTORM}

Remind students that there are informal qualifications for members of the House. List students' ideas for other qualifications on the board. Ask them to explain why they identified these qualifications. Tell them to write down these qualifications in their notebooks, as they will use them for reference after reading Section 4. They will spend the rest of this lesson focusing on how districts may be drawn to the advantage of the party in power.
L2 Differentiate Draw students' attention to the paragraphs below the heading "Informal Qualifications" at the end of the section. Ask them to find the informal qualifications listed by the author.
L4 Differentiate Ask students to make a distinction between the qualifications that people look for-such as experience-and the qualifications people may not recognize as influencing their votes-such as gender, race, and fundraising ability.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The party that is not in power typically gains seats in off-year elections.

\section*{COMPARE DISTRICT MAPS}

Show Transparency 10E, Congressional Districts. Ask what this map shows. (the congressional districts in Louisiana) Direct them to examine the size and shape of the districts. Ask what they notice about the shapes. (They should notice that the shapes are odd, not uniform. ) Ask why the districts might be shaped differently from one year to the next. (The odd shapes in 2007 may have been drawn to provide an advantage to the party in power; the more uniform shapes in 2000 probablywere based on population alone.)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 10 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 22), which addresses the distribution of seats in the House and the politics associated with reapportionment and redistricting, also referred to as gerrymandering. Using this worksheet, students will draw their own district lines.

\(L 2\)
Differentiate An adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 23) offers a shorter version of the activity.

\section*{Answers}

Gerrymandering Some say that gerrymandering should be outlawed because district lines are intentionally drawn to the advantage of the party in power, creating an unfair "rigging" of elections.

\section*{Background}

Gerrymandering in practice After the 2000 census, 17 Democrats and 15
Republicans represented Texas in the House of Representatives. In 2003, Tom DeLay, the majority leader in the House, spent a few days in his home state, helping Texas Republicans redraw the congressional districts. In the election of 2004, his efforts paid off. The gerrymandering helped change the Texas delegation to 21 Republicans and 11 Democrats. Democrats protested, contending that it is unconstitutional to redraw the lines three years after the census and solely for political advantage. In 2006, the Supreme Court upheld the Texas plan as constitutional. Gerrymandering is legal and practiced by both parties when in power. If Congress wants to stop the practice, it must pass a law against it.

CRACKING Cracking happens when the party in power splits up the voters from the opposing party. This results in the minority party winning fewer seats.

Result: The Orange Party wins three districts.

KIDNAPPING Kidnapping happens when the party in power redraws the district lines to move a minorityparty incumbent into a different district where she or he is unlikely to win reelection.

Result: The Orange Party wins three seats. The Green Party incumbent "loses" his district.

Gerrymandering Congressionaldistrictmaps in several States show one and sometimes several districts of very odd shapes. Some look like the letters S or Y, some resemble a dumbbell or a squiggly piece of spaghetti, and some defy description. Those districts have usually been gerrymandered. That is, they have been drawn to the advantage of the political party that controls the State's legislature.

Gerrymandering is widespread todayand not just at the congressional district level. Districts for the election of State legislators are regularly drawn for the advantage of one party. In fact, gerrymandering can be found in most places where lines are drawn for the election of public officeholders-in cities, counties, school districts, and elsewhere.

Most often gerrymandering takes one of two forms. The lines are drawn either (1) to concentrate the opposition's voters in one or a few districts, thus leaving the other districts comfortably safe for the dominant party; or (2) to spread the opposition as thinly as possible among several districts, limiting the opposition's ability to win anywhere in the region. Gerrymandering's main goal is to create as many "safe" districts as possibledistricts almost certain to be won by the party in control of the line-drawing process. And the computer-driven map-making techniques of today make the practice more effective than ever in its storied past.

Gerrymandering is the principle reason why, presently, only a handful of seats in the House are actually at risk in an election. In most elections, no more than 40 members now represent districts that cannot be classified as more or less safe districts.

For decades, gerrymandering produced congressional districts that differed widely Checkpoint What is gerrymandering and what are its purpose and result?

\section*{Debate}

In March 2006, as the Supreme Court was considering a case concerning gerrymandering in Texas, an editorial appeared in The New York Times. It ended with this strong statement: "If the Supreme Court permits those drawing legislative lines to use high-powered computers to create district lines that predetermine the outcomes of all but a handful of Congressional races, America may need to come up with another word for its form of government, because 'democracy' will hardly apply." ("The Texas Gerrymander" from The New York Times, March 1, 2006) Ask: Do you agree with this opinion? Why or why not? What would you do to make the redistricting process more "democratic"?

\section*{REVIEW KEY INFORMATION}

Tell students that today they will learn about gerrymandering, or drawing district lines to benefit the party in control of the State legislature.
Ask: Whom does each member of the House represent? (the people of his or her district) What is a district? (an area of about 700,000 people) If your State has more than one representative in the House, do you get to vote for each representative from your state? (no, only the one who represents your district) Why are district lines redrawn? (because population patterns shift)How can gerrymandering benefit the party in control? (The dominant party can make sure its members win by concentrating opposition voters into a few districts or by spreading opposition voters thin.)
L2 Differentiate Display Transparency 10F, Gerrymandering: Choosing Their Voters. Explain that the graphic shows three ways in which the orange party may gerrymander a district. Discuss those ways.

\section*{BEGIN THE ACTIVITY}

Ask a student to read the directions aloud. Divide students into groups and assign each group one of three roles: Party X legislators, Party O legislators, or Election Commission officers. Give them time to discuss their plans and draw district lines.
L2 Differentiate Students who work more slowly should be assigned to the Election Commission because Commission members do not need to decide how to concentrate or spread the opposition.
L4 Differentiate Advanced students may draw districts from all three perspectives.

\section*{STUDENTS POST AND EXPLAIN DISTRICTS}

When students finish drawing their districts on the Core Worksheet, have each group choose one map to post and explain below it why they chose those divisions. Choose a wall for each interest (Party X, Party O, and Election Commission) and have groups post their maps together.
Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive version of Gerrymandering.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Gerrymandering is drawing electoral districts (congressional and otherwise) with the goal of maximizing the number of seats held by the party that controls the State's legislature.

\section*{REFLECT AND DISCUSS}

Have students discuss the reflection questions on the Core Worksheet in small groups. This will help them make connections to the unit Essential Question (What should determine the balance between partisanship and consensus in Congress?).
After students have answered the questions on their own, discuss them as a class. Display Transparency 10G, The Gerry-mander. Ask: How did this cartoon get its name? (from Massachusetts governor Gerry when he and his supporters redrew districts) You may choose to emphasize the Court cases discussed in the text and their effect on gerrymandering since then. The cases are as follows:
- Wesberryv. Sanders said that districts must have substantially equal populations.
- Gomillion v. Lightfoot said that gerrymandering solely on race is unconstitutional. Bush v. Vera and United Latin American Citizens v. Perry also struck down race-based districts.
- Hunt v. Cromartie said that race may be one of a mix of factors that shape the districting process.
- Davis v. Bendemer said that under some circumstances, gerrymandering may be unconstitutional.
- United Latin American Citizens v. Perry said that nothing in the Constitution prevents a State from redrawing district lines to give advantage to the party in control of the legislature.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Have students do research to find a map that shows the electoral districts in their State before and after the most recent reapportionment. They should find out which party was in power at the time of the reapportionment and the results of the elections just before and just after the new district lines were drawn. They should then draw conclusions about whether redistricting benefited the dominant party.
L4 Differentiate Have advanced students do further research on the demographics of particular districts to determine what criteria the legislature may have used to draw the lines.
L2 Assign the Extend Activity "The Importance of Congress" (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 24).

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The Wesberry decision said that all congressional districts must have roughly the same population. This is often summarized as "one person, one vote."

Gerrymandering takes its name from Massachusetts Governor Elbridge Gerry, who in 1812, drew the State's legislative districts to favor his party. A noted painter added a head, wings, and claws to a district map hanging over the desk of a newspaper editor. "That will do for a salamander," the artist said. "Better say Gerrymander," growled the editor. \(>\)

Checkpoint What did the Supreme Court rule in the 1964 Court rule in the 1964 case of Wesberryv. case of Wes Sanders?

\section*{gouging}
v. cheating, swindling

in the number of people they included. State legislatures were responsible for this situation, of course. A number of them regularly drew district lines on a partisan basis-with the Republicans gouging the Democrats in those States where the GOP controls the legislature, and the Democrats doing the same thing to the Republicans where they hold sway. In fact, that circumstance exists in several States today. Historically, most States were carved up on a rural versus urban basis as well as a partisan one-because, through much of history, the typical State legislature was dominated by the less-populated (and over-represented) rural areas of the State. \({ }^{11}\)

Wesberry v. Sanders, 1964 The longstanding pattern of congressional districts of widely varying populations and, as a result, the long-standing fact of rural overrepresentation in the House came to an abrupt end in the mid to late 1960s. That dramatic change was the product of an historic Supreme Court decision in 1964. In a case from Georgia, Wesberry v. Sanders, the Supreme Court held that the Constitution demands that the States draw congressional districts of substantially equal populations.

11 The pattern of rural overrepresentation in the State legislatures has now all but disappeared as a consequence of the Supreme Court's several "one person, one vote" decisions of the 1960s and 1970s. In the leading case, Reynolds v. Sims, 1964, the Court held that the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause commands that the seats in both houses of a State's legislature must be apporioned on the basis of population equality.

The Court's "one person, one vote" decision in Wesberry had an immediate and extraordinary impact on the makeup of the House, on the content of public policy, and on the shape of electoral politics in general. The nation's cities and suburbs now speak with a much louder voice in Congress than they did before that decision. But notice, it remains quite possible for States to draw their congressional (or any other) district lines in accord with the "one person, one vote" rule and, at the same time, gerrymander those districts.

Gerrymandering based solely on race, however, is a violation of the 15 th Amendment, Gomillion v. Light foot, 1960. So-called "majority-minority districts" were drawn in some States following the census in 1990 and again in 2000. Those districts were crafted to include a majority of African Americans and/or Latinos and so were likely to send African Americans and Latinos to Congress. The Supreme Court struck down those racebased districts in several cases -most notably in two cases from Texas, Bush v. Vera, 1996 and United Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 2006. However, the Court has also held this: While race cannot be the controlling factor in drawing district lines, race can be one of the mix of factors that shape that process. It did so in a case from North Carolina, Hunt v. Cromartie, in 2001.

The Court has said that under some circumstances, which it has never spelled out, excessively partisan gerrymandering might be unconstitutional. It did so for the first time in a 1986 case, Davis v. Bandemer. In 2003, Texas became the first State to redistrict between censuses, with the purpose of increasing the number of Republican-held Texas seats in the U.S. House of Representatives. In a dramatic showdown, the Republican governor called a special session. Democratic legislators fled the State, but ultimately they were unable to stop the redistricting. In a 2006 decision, a bare majority of the Court ruled that neither the Constitution nor any act of Congress prevents a State from redrawing its district lines whenever the party in control of the legislature believes that it might be to its advantage to do so, United Latin American Citizens v. Perry.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

GERRYMANDERING IS LEGAL United Latin American Citizens v. Perry (2006) arose from the Texas redistricting plan crafted by Tom DeLay in 2003. The plan passed by the Texas State legislature replaced one created by a federal court after the 2000 census. Opponents charged that the plan violated the Voting Rights Act because it diluted the voting power of racial minorities and was designed to gain partisan advantage. The Court held that the Texas plan was constitutional. Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote, "There was nothing inherently suspect about a legislature's decision to replace mid-decade a court-ordered plan with one of its own. " However, the Court struck down one district for diluting the voting power of Latinos. Gerrymandering based solely on race is illegal, but race may be considered as one factor.

\section*{Qualifications for Office}

You know that there are 435 members of the House of Representatives, and that each one of them had to win an election to get there. Each one of them also had to meet two quite different sets of qualifications to win office: the formal qualifications for membership in the House set out in the Constitution and a number of informal qualifications imposed by the realities of politics.

Formal Qualifications The Constitution says that a member of the House must (1) be at least 25 years of age, (2) have been a citizen of the United States for at least seven years, and (3) be an inhabitant of the State from which he or she is elected. \({ }^{12}\)

Custom, not the Constitution, also requires that a representative must live in the district he or she represents. The custom is based on the belief that the legislator should be familiar with the locale he or she represents, its people, and its problems. Rarely, then, does a district choose an outsider to represent it.

The Constitution makes the House "the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members." \({ }^{13}\) Thus, when the right of a member-elect to be seated is challenged, the House has the power to decide the matter. Challenges are rarely successful.

The House may refuse to seat a memberelect by majority vote. It may also "punish its Members for disorderly Behavior" by majority vote, and "with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member." \({ }^{14}\)

For decades, the House viewed its power to judge the qualifications of members-elect as the power to impose additional standards. It did so several times. In 1900, it refused to seat Brigham H. Roberts of Utah because he was a polygamist-that is, he had more than one wife. In 1919 and again in 1920, the House excluded Victor L. Berger of Wisconsin, the first Socialist Party candidate

\footnotetext{
12 Article I, Section 2, Clause 2; see also Article I, Section 6, Clause 2.
13 Article I, Section 5 , Clause 1
14 Article I, Section 5, Clause 2.
}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the formal qualifications for members of the House?

\section*{Paths to Congress}

More members of Congress are lawyers by profession than any other occupation. Voters, however, have seen fit to elect representatives with widely divergent experiences. What qualifications do these representatives bring to their positions?
(1) Heath Shuler (D., North Carolina) Unlike many members of Congress, Heath Shuler had no political experience before his election to the House in 2006. Shuler had been a quarterback in the National Football League and, later, started a real estate business. Both parties approached Shuler to run for public office. In Congress, he is a member of the Blue Dog Coalition, a group of fiscally conservative Democrats who, among other goals, are dedicated to balancing the budget.

- Ileana Ros-Lehtinen (R., Florida) In 1989, Ileana Ros-Lehtinen became the first Cuban American and Hispanic woman elected to the U.S. House of Representatives. Born in Havana, her family fled to Florida when she was seven years old. She graduated from community college before earning master's and doctoral degrees in education. After founding a private elementary school, she was elected to the Florida legislature in 1982. She is the ranking member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and is an advocate for human rights.

\section*{Debate}

In 1919, Victor L. Berger's outspoken opposition to America's involvement in World War I prompted the House to refuse to seat him. In fact, Berger was under indictment for sedition at the time. A special House committee concluded that "Victor L. Berger did obstruct, hinder, and embarrass the Government of the United States in the prosecution of the war and did give aid and comfort to the enemy. " Ask: Do you think the House had good reason to exclude Berger? For what reasons do you think the House would be justified in refusing to seat an elected representative? What possible abuses could arise from the power of the House to exclude a member?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess the students' reflections using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 167).

Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
3 Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 25)Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 26)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

Government
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint House candidates must be at least 25 years old, have been citizens of the United States for at least seven years, and be inhabitants of the States in which they run for office.
Paths to Congress Shuler: experience in real estate and in working as part of a team; Ros-Lehtinen: experience in education, knowledge of Hispanic community
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining the distribution \\ of seats in the House \\
(Questions 1, 2, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review the Congressional Appor- \\ tionment map and ask students to \\ infer which States have the largest \\ populations.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding gerryman- \\ dering and redistricting \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Use Transparency 10E, Congressional \\ Districts, and Transparency 10F, Ger- \\ rymandering: Choosing Their Voters, \\ to explain the process of gerryman- \\ dering and the result on the size and \\ shape of districts. Remind students \\ that districts must be of approximately \\ equal size and of compact territory.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining qualifications \\
(Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students to make an outline of \\ the text under the textbook heading \\
"Qualifications for Office" and com- \\ pare it with a partner's.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing Congressional \\ elections (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Model a graphic organizer on the \\ board that includes information about \\ dates, off-year elections, and districts.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What "informal qualifications" affect a candidate's electability?
sedition
n. attempt to overthrow the government by force to win a House seat. During World War I, Mr. Berger wrote several newspaper articles denouncing America's participation in that conflict. In 1919, he was convicted of sedition for obstructing the war effort and sentenced to twenty years in prison. The Supreme Court reversed that conviction in 1921. Mr. Berger was reelected to the House three more times and seated each time without challenge.

In Powell v. McCormack, 1969, however, the Supreme Court held that the House could not exclude a member-elect who meets the Constitution's standards of age, citizenship, and residence. The House has not excluded anyone since that decision.

Over more than 200 years, the House has expelled only five members. Three were ousted in 1861 for their "support of rebellion." Michael Myers (D., Penn.) was expelled for corruption in 1980. James Traficant (D., Ohio) was ejected after his conviction for bribery, fraud, and tax evasion in 2002. Over time, a few members have resigned to avoid almost certain expulsion. Randy "Duke" Cunningham (R., Calif.) resigned after pleading guilty in bribery charges in 2005.

The House has not often punished a member for "disorderly Behavior," but such actions are not nearly so rare as expulsions. For example, the House voted to "reprimand" Barney Frank (D., Massachusetts) in 1990 for conduct stemming from his relationship with a male prostitute. Mr. Frank has been easily reelected by the voters in his congressional district every two years since then.

Informal Qualifications The realities of politics produce a number of informal qualifications for membership in the House, beyond those requirements set out in the Constitution. Those informal yardsticks vary from time to time, sometimes from State to State, and even from one congressional district to another within the same State. Clearly, some of those factors that attract or repel voters in a heavily urbanized district differ from some of those that influence how voters see candidates in a largely rural setting.

These informal qualifications have to do with a candidate's vote-getting abilities. They include such considerations as party identification, name familiarity, gender, ethnic characteristics, and political experience. Being the incumbent, the person who currently holds the office, almost always helps. Regularly, well over 90 percent of those members of the House who seek reelection do so successfully.

Much more so today than in the past, a candidate's fundraising abilities also figure into the mix of informal qualifications. Like all other races, congressional campaigns have become very expensive. The average amount spent on a winning bid for the House topped the million dollar mark in 2008. Several winners, and some losers, spent a good deal more than that

The "right" combination of these informal measurements will help a candidate win nomination and then election to the House of Representatives. The "wrong" mix will almost certainly spell defeat.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\) Journal \(\begin{gathered}\text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal }\end{gathered}\)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Informal qualifications include party identification, name familiarity, gender, ethnic characteristics, political experience, incumbency, and fundraising ability.
4. Why do politicians gerrymander districts?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Inferences How did Wesberry v. Sanders change the makeup of the House?
6. Make Comparisons Explain how informal qualifications for House membership might vary in rural areas versus urban areas within the same State, in different States or regions, and at different times in history.

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Compare and Contrast Using the lists you started in Section 1 about the British Parliament and the U.S. Congress, draw a Venn diagram in which you can organize features unique to the British Parliament, features unique to the US. Congress, and overlapping or shared features. Add to the diagram as you read Sections 3 and 4

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Seats are distributed according to State population, with each State guaranteed at least one seat. Formal qualifications: must be at least 25 , have been a citizen of the U.S. for at least seven years, and be an inhabitant of the State represented. Informal qualifications: party identification, name familiarity, gender, ethnic characteristics, political experience, incumbency, and fundraising ability.
2. based on each State's population
3. Single-member district: Voters choose candidates running for a seat representing their particular district. At-large: Voters choose candidates for all of the seats for the State as a whole.
4. to increase their party's chances of winning elections
5. By ruling that congressional districts must represent a roughly equal number of people, Wesberry changed the balance of power between rural and urban areas, and residents of cities and suburbs gained greater representation in the House.
6. Informal qualifications include such factors as party identification, name familiarity, gender, ethnic characteristics, and political experience.
They vary from time to time, from State to State, and even from district to district.
Quick write Students' Venn diagrams should be logically arranged.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{The Senate}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How does the Senate differ from the House? Use a concept web to take notes on the Senate

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- continuous body
- constituency

\section*{Objectives}
1. Compare the size of the Senate to the size of the House of Representatives.
2. Describe how senators are elected
3. Explain how and why a senator's term differs from a representative's term.
4. Describe the qualifications for election to the Senate.

Image Above: Senator Edward Kennedy (D., Massachusetts)

You should not be very surprised by these facts: Nearly a third of the present members of the Senate once served in the House of Representatives; none of the current members of the House has ever served in the Senate. Indeed, many of the men and women who now serve in the House look forward to the day when, they hope, they will sit in the Senate. As you read this section, you will come to see why the Senate is often called the "upper house."

\section*{Size, Election, and Terms}

Why are there 100 members of the United States Senate? Have the members of the Senate always been elected by the voters of their States? Why do senators serve six-year terms? What qualifications must candidates for the Senate meet? Read on to find the answers to these and other questions.

Size The Constitution says that the Senate "shall be composed of two Senators from each State," and so the Senate is a much smaller body than the House of Representatives. \({ }^{\mathbf{1 5}}\) Today, however, the Senate is much larger body than the Framers imagined. The Senate had only 22 members when it held its first session in March of 1789, and 26 members by the end of the First Federal Congress in 1791. Like the House, the size of the upper chamber has grown with the country. Today, 100 senators represent the 50 States.

The Framers hoped that the smaller Senate would be a more enlightened and responsible body than the House. Many of them thought that the House would be too often swayed by the immediate impact of events and by the passions of the moment because of the short term of office for members of the House. They reinforced that hope by giving senators a longer term of office and by setting the qualifications for membership in the Senate a cut above those they set for the House.

James Madison saw those provisions as "a necessary fence" against the "fickleness and passion" of the House of Representatives. Nearly a century later, Woodrow Wilson agreed with Madison:

15 Article I, Section 3, Clause 1 and the 17th Amendment.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The Senate includes 100 members, two from each State, who are elected to six-year terms. - Senators must be at least 30 years old, must have been citizens of the U.S. for at least nine years, and must live in the State from which they are elected. - Only one third of the Senate is up for election at any one time, so the Senate is a continuous body.
CONCEPTS: popular sovereignty
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Senators represent a larger group of people-and therefore a broader range of interests-than members of the House, and are more often viewed as national political leaders. - Senators usually have more experience, power, and prestige than their colleagues in the House. - Senators are protected from some political pressures because they serve for a long period between elections.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How does the Senate differ from the House?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- use a Venn diagram to compare the job and qualifications of senators and members of the House.
- assess the characteristics and qualifications of senators through four real-life examples.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 27) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 28)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

To practice decision making in this section, use the Chapter 10 Skills Worksheet (Unit 3 All-inOne, p. 31). You may teach the skill explicitly after students do the Core Worksheet. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 32).

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Chapter 10 Section 3 Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 29). Have students fill in the Venn diagram comparing the House and Senate.
L2 Differentiate Have students work in pairs to complete the diagram.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{COMPARE THE HOUSE AND SENATE}

Tell students that today they will compare the job and qualifications for members of the House of Representatives with the job and qualifications for members of the Senate. Draw a blank Venn diagram on the board. Let students take turns giving you information to fill in the diagram. Ask students to explain why the houses are different as you write the comparisons on the board.
L1 Differentiate Call on certain students early in the activity, giving them an opportunity to contribute to the class before the more standard answers are given.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 10 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 30), which describes four candidates for the Senate. Ask a student to read the directions aloud. Answer any questions that students may have about the activity. Give students several minutes to decide, on their own, which candidate they would select.
L2 LPR Differentiate Choose one student to act out the role of each candidate, presenting his or her qualifications.

\section*{THINK-PAIR-SHARE}

Use the Think-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to let students verbalize their thoughts.

\section*{TAKE A POLL}

Ask which candidate each student would vote for and why. Choose a student to record arguments. Ask if anyone would make a different decision if he or she were voting for a member of the House. Ask students to explain the qualities they find attractive in each candidate.

\section*{Answers}

Senators: Policy and Prestige Senators serve as representatives of the people of an entire State and tend to have a higher profile than representatives.

\section*{Senators: Policy and Prestige}

Senators are Washington celebri-ties-members of what is often called "the world's most exclusive club." Their names are frequently household words and their activities draw media coverage that allows them to call attention to issues they consider important. Many senators make use of the spotlight to launch campaigns for the presidency. In what ways are senators national leaders?

From left: Maria Cantwell (D., Washington) is known for her environmentalism; presidential campaign buttons; a bipartisan group of senators holds a press conference
"It is indispensable that besides the House of Representatives which runs on all fours with popular sentiment, we should have a body like the Senate which may refuse to run with it at all when it seems to be wrong-a body which has time and security enough to keep its head, if only now and then and but for a little while, till other people have had time to think."
-Woodrow Wilson, Congressional Government
Each one of the 100 members of the upper house represents an entire State. That same thing can be said of only a few members of the lower house-the seven representatives from those States with only one seat in the House. Consequently, nearly all of the members of the Senate represent a much larger and more diverse population and a much broader range of interests than do the several representatives from their State. If you look at your own State-at the size, diversity, and major characteristics of its population and at its history, geography, and economy-you will see the point.

Election Originally, the Constitution provided that the members of the Senate were to be chosen by the State legislatures. Since the ratification of the 17th Amendment in 1913, however, senators have been picked by the voters in each State at the regular November elections. Only one senator is elected from a State in any given election, except when the other seat has been vacated by death, resignation, or expulsion. \({ }^{16}\)

Before the coming of popular election, the State legislatures often picked well-liked and qualified men to be senators. On other occasions, however, their choice was the result of maneuvering and infighting among the leaders of various factions in the State. These personalities all spent a great deal of energy trying to gain (and sometimes buy) enough legislators' votes to win a seat in the United States Senate. In fact, by the late 1800 s, the Senate was often called the "Millionaires' Club," because so many wealthy party and business leaders sat in that chamber.

The Senate twice defeated House-passed amendments to provide for popular election. In 1912, it finally bowed to public opinion and agreed to what became the 17th Amendment the next year. The Senate was also

\footnotetext{
16 The 17th Amendment gives each State a choice of methods for filling a Senate vacancy. A State may (1) fill the seat at a special election called by the governor or (2) allow the governor special election called by the governor or (2) allow the governor such a special election or at the next regular (November) election. Most States use the appointment-special election method.
}

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 10, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 27)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 28)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 29)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 30)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 31)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 32)
L3 Quiz A (p. 33)
L2 Quiz B (p. 34)

persuaded by the fact that several States had already devised ways to ensure that their legislatures would choose senators who were supported by the people of the State.

Each senator is elected from the State at-large. The 17th Amendment declares that all persons whom the State allows to vote for members of "the most numerous Branch" of its legislature are automatically qualified to vote for candidates for the U.S. Senate.

Term Senators serve for six-year terms, three times the length of those for which members of the House are chosen. \({ }^{17}\) The Constitution puts no limit on the number of terms to which a senator may be elected. Senator Robert Byrd (D., West Virginia), who is now serving his ninth term in the upper house, holds the all-time record for service in that body. He was elected to his first term in the Senate in 1958 and was most recently reelected in 2006.

Senators' terms are staggered. Only a third of them- 33 or 34 terms-expire every two years. The Senate is, then, a continuous body. That is, all of its seats are never up for election at the same time.

The six-year term gives senators a somewhat greater degree of job security than that enjoyed by members of the lower house. Those six years give senators some insulation from the rough-and-tumble of day-to-day politics. The six-year term also tends to make senators less subject to the pressures of public opinion and less susceptible to the pleas

\footnotetext{
7 Article I, Section 3 , Clause 1.
}
of special interests than their colleagues in the House.

The larger size and the geographic scope of their constituencies-the people and interests the senators represent-are designed to have much the same effect. That is to say, senators are supposed to be less concerned with the interests of some particular small locality and more focused on the "big picture" of national concerns. Indeed, senators are much more likely to be regarded as national political leaders than are most House members.

The large size of the House generally prevents representatives from gaining as much notice and public exposure as most members of the Senate attract. Senators, and especially those who have presidential ambitions, are better able to capture national media attention. Over the past several elections, the Senate has emerged as a prime source of contenders for the presidential nomination in both parties. Senators also find it easier to establish themselves as the champions of public policies that appeal to large segments of the American people-for example, social security or national health care.

Senators are also more likely to be covered by the media in their States. And they tend to have more clout in their State's politics than that enjoyed by members of the House of Representatives.

\section*{Qualifications for Office}

A senator must meet a higher level of qualifications for office than those the Constitution sets for a member of the House. A senator must (1) be at least 30 years of age, (2) have been a citizen of the United States for at least nine years, and (3) be an inhabitant of the State from which he or she is elected. \({ }^{18}\)

Senators must satisfy a number of informal qualifications for office-various extralegal yardsticks based on such factors as party, name familiarity, gender, ethnic characteristics, and political experience. Both 18 Article I, Section 3, Clause 3. Under the inhabitant qualification, a senator need not have lived in the State for any particular period of time. Most often, of course, senators have been longtime residents of their States.

\section*{extralegal}

\section*{susceptible \\ adj. at risk}

\section*{Background}

HOW MANY SENATORS? After intense debate, the delegates to the Constitutional Convention in 1787 resolved a thorny issue: States would have equal representation in the Senate. Now the delegates had to decide how many senators. The delegates quickly agreed that one per State was not enough. If that person were ill or absent, the State would go unrepresented. The Senate needed to be large enough to counter the influence of the House, yet not so large as to lose its distinctive nature. This realization narrowed the discussion to two or three. Gouverneur Morris and Rufus King circulated this statement for delegates to fill in the blank: "That the representation in the second branch consist of \(\qquad\) members from each State, who shall vote per capita. " Only Pennsylvania filled in "three." The decision was made.

MAKE A DECISION USING SOCRATIC DIALOGUE
Discuss which characteristics of candidates (both positive and negative) students find most important. Tell students that they will now have ten minutes to decide which candidate they can all support, using the Socratic Dialogue strategy (p. T24).
L3 Differentiate Have students rank the candidates from fourth choice to first, using positive and negative characteristics for support.

\section*{FOLLOW UP THE DISCUSSION}

Ask students to reflect on the Socratic Dialogue in a journal entry. If they agreed on a candidate, they should answer these questions: What criteria were important in choosing a candidate? How did you eliminate candidates? If they were unable to agree, ask: Why were you not able to agree on a candidate? Do you think the class could have settled on a candidate with qualifications and characteristics different from those described here?

\section*{WRAP UP THE LESSON}

Tell students the identity of each candidate.
Candidate A: Daniel Inouye, Hawaii, 1963-
Candidate B: Elizabeth Dole, North Carolina, 2003-
Candidate C: Barack Obama, Illinois, 2005-
Candidate D: Hillary Rodham Clinton, New York, 2001 -
Ask if they are surprised by any of these and why. Ask students to read their Bellringer answers aloud. Discuss their answers and emphasize how the length of a senator's term affects his or her actions. Display Transparency 10H, What Are the Pollsters Saying?, and ask which congressional house this cartoon applies to. (the House) Senators are not as responsive to public opinion as representatives because they have a long period of time before they are up for reelection.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}Differentiate Have students research a current senator, write a short biography, and then analyze the senator's qualifications and actions.
4 Differentiate Have students work in small groups to create a graphic organizer identifying key issues facing the Senate today and the positions taken on these issues by the senators they researched.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Before: State legislatures chose the senators for their State. After: Voters of the State elect senators.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 33)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 34)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing differences \\ between the House and \\ Senate (Questions 1, 3, 4, \\
6, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make a chart or Venn \\ diagram detailing differences.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining a continuous \\ body (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students do research to find \\ out when their senators are up for \\ reelection, and point out that it's not \\ the same year.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline The 17th Amendment & \begin{tabular}{l} Compare the pre-1917 situation \\ witt teachers choosing class officers \\ instead of students.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular} with teachers choosing class officers instead of students.

- Analyzing Political Cartoons In this cartoon, a campaign manager talks to a candidate. What clues in the cartoon tell you where this is taking place and who the characters may be?
incumbency
n. the holding of the office concurrence
n. agreement
incumbency and a talent for fundraising are also major assets in Senate races.

The Senate can also judge the qualifications of its members, and it may exclude a member-elect by a majority vote. \({ }^{19}\) The upper house has refused to seat someone on three occasions. It has not exercised that power since 1867, however. The chamber may also "punish its Members for disorderly Behavior"

19 Article I, Section 5, Clause 1.
20 Article l, Section 5, Clause 2.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons The Capitol in the background indicates Washington, D.C. The discussion of a campaign budget implies an elected official, such as a member of Congress.
by majority vote and "with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member." \({ }^{20}\)

Fifteen members of the Senate have been expelled by that body, one in 1797 and 14 during the Civil War. Senator William Blount of Tennessee was expelled in 1797 for conspiring to lead two Native American tribes, supported by British warships, in attacks on Spanish Florida and Louisiana. The 14 senators ousted in 1861 and 1862 were all from States of the Confederacy and had supported secession.

Over time, a few senators have resigned in the face of almost certain expulsion. In 1995, the Senate's Ethics Committee found that four-term senator Bob Packwood (R., Oregon) had been involved in several instances of blatant sexual harassment, and it urged his dismissal. Senator Packwood fought the charges for a time but resigned when it became apparent that his colleagues had had more than enough of his behavior.

The punishing of a senator for "disorderly Behavior" has also been rare. In the most recent case, in 1990, the Senate formally "denounced" Senator David Durenberger (R., Minnesota). The Ethics Committee had found him guilty on several counts of financial misconduct. The Senate called Senator Durenberger's conduct "reprehensible" and declared that he had "brought the Senate into dishonor and disrepute." Senator Durenberger chose not to seek reelection to a third term in 1994.

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}
. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: How does the Senate differ from the House?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Why is the Senate called a continuous body?
3. How does a senator's constituency differ from that of a typical member of the House?
4. Why do most senators receive more public attention than their colleagues in the House?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Determine Cause and Effect Based on your reading, why do you think the 17 th Amendment gained wide public support?
6. Make Comparisons How do the different terms of office for the House and Senate allow each house of Congress to make a unique contribution to national decision-making?
7. Draw Inferences Do the differences between the Senate and the House of Representatives ensure that the people are well represented?

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Make an Outline Using the Venn diagram you started in Section 2, make a detailed outline for an essay describing similarities and differences between the British Parliament and the U.S. Congress. Organize your points into a logical order so that, when you are ready to write your essay, your outline can serve as a guide

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Senate is a smaller and continuous body. Senators must meet a higher standard of formal qualifications. They serve a longer term, represent an entire State, and get more media attention and public exposure.
2. It is always in session because only one third of its seats change hands in any election.
3. Most senators represent a larger and more diverse constituency.
4. Senators are fewer in number, more powerful, and more prestigious than their House colleagues. They tend to focus on national rather \section*{than local concerns.}

5. A strong answer will raise concerns about corrupt practices in the selection of senators by State legislatures and will note that only weal thy men were usually selected.
6. The House has two-year terms and must be more attuned to constituents' opinions. It more closely reflects popular opinion. The Senate is more insulated from public pressures and special interests by its six-year terms, enabling senators to tackle riskier issues.
7. The differences between the two chambers complement each other, ensuring representation on local, State, and national issues. Students should judge whether this system best represents the people and should support their position.
QUICK WRITE Outlines should be detailed and logically organized, with supportive information for preparing an essay.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{The Members of Congress}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What roles and functions do members of Congress perform? Use a concept web to take notes on the roles and functions of members of Congress.

Political Dictionary
- delegate
- trustee
floor
- partisan consideration
- politico
oversigh
- function
- bill
franking

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify the personal and political backgrounds of members of Congress.
2. Describe the duties performed by those who serve in Congress.
3. Describe the compensation and privileges of members of Congress

Image Above: Republican Senate leaders

C
 Americans cannot-let alone tell you much about their backgrounds, qualifications, or voting records.

\section*{Personal and Political Background}

Whatever else they may be, the 535 members of Congress are not a representative cross section of the American people. Rather, the "average" member is a white male in his late 50 s . The median age of the members of the House is just over 55 and about 63 for those in the Senate.

There are more women in the 111 th Congress than ever-77 in the House and 17 in the Senate-and they are moving into positions of leadership. Nancy Pelosi (D., California) became the Speaker of the House in 2007, and she is now third in the line of succession to the presidency. Two standing committees in the House and two in the Senate are chaired by women.

In the 111 th Congress, there are 42 African Americans, 25 Hispanics, seven Asian Americans, and one Native American in the House. Three Hispanics, one Asian American, and one Native Hawaiian sit in the Senate. Former Senator Barack Obama (D., Illinois), elected in 2004, was only the fifth African American ever elected to the Senate. No African Americans sit in that body today

Nearly all members are married, a few are divorced, and they have, on average, two children. Only a few members say they have no religious affiliation. Nearly 60 percent are Protestants, 30 percent are Roman Catholics, some 8 percent are Jewish, two are Buddhists, and two are Muslim.

Well over a third of the members of the House and over half the senators are lawyers. More than four out of five have a college degree and most, in fact, have advanced degrees.

Most senators and representatives were born in the States they represent Only a handful were born outside the United States. Sprinkled among the members of Congress are several millionaires. A surprisingly large number of the men and women who sit in the House depend on their congressional salaries as their major source of income, however

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Members of Congress juggle a number of roles, including those of legislator, constituents' representative, committee member, constituents' servant, and politician. • Members of Congress are compensated with a salary and many privileges.
- The Constitution provides for legislative immunity from prosecution in the courts and protects lawmakers in carrying out their duties.
CONCEPTS: Federalism
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Though Congress has become more diverse in recent years, members are likely to be older and wealthier than the average American, and most are white men. • Members of Congress must fill several roles as lawmakers, politicians, and servants of their constituents. Their most important role is as legislators.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What roles and functions do members of Congress perform?

1. legislators, representatives of constituents, committee members, servants of constituents, politicians
2. \($ 168,500\) per year, Speaker \($ 212,000\), Senate leaders \($ 183,500\); many fringe benefits

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- address the composition of Congress by describing an "average" member and discussing ways the composition might be altered to reflect the population.
- identify and analyze the formal and informal qualifications for members of Congress by writing help-wanted ads.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 35) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 36)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

To help students learn to innovate and think creatively, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S23, and use the information there to complete the Core Worksheet.

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following directions on the board:
In your notebook, describe a "typical" member of Congress. To what extent do the members of Congress reflect the general population?
L2 Differentiate Substitute the following directions for those above:
In your notebook, describe the median age of a member of Congress, the ethnic breakdown of Congress, and the jobs that many members of Congress had before running for office.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{discuss the composition of congress}

Ask students to read their descriptions of a "typical" member of Congress. As they read, note the characteristics on the board. Display Transparency 10 I, Minority Members in Congress-Consistent Growth. Use their responses to assess whether they understand that Congress is relatively less diverse than the nation as a whole. Students should understand that a typical member of Congress is a white upper-middle-class male in his late 50 s or early 60 s, married, college educated, religious, and a lawyer. Ask: What trend with minority members in Congress has developed since the 1950s? (greater diversity) Students may add more detail to this portrait.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Charts Some students might suggest that Congress should closely reflect the population because its members are there to represent the people. Other students might suggest that government would work most effectively if the most able candidates are elected, regardless of demographic characteristics.
Checkpoint The "average" member of Congress is a white male in his early 50 s. Members of the House include 73 women, 43 African Americans, 26 Hispanics, 6 Asian Americans, and 1 Native American. The Senate includes 16 women, 1 African American, 3 Hispanics, 1 Asian American, and 1 Native Hawaiian. Just over 60 percent are Protestants, 30 percent are Roman Catholics, and 7 percent are Jewish. Two members are Buddhists, and one is Muslim.

How Representative Is Congress?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|}
\hline COLLEGE DEGREES & WOMEN & AGE 60 AND OLDER & FOREIGN-BORN \\
\hline 27\% & \(51 \%\) & 17\% & 13\% \\
\hline of Americans & of Americans & of Americans & of Americans \\
\hline \[
05 \%
\] & \[
1 \%
\] & \[
400 / 0
\] & \[
2 \%
\] \\
\hline of 110th Congress & of 110 th Congress & of 110th Congress & of 110th Congress \\
\hline In the First Congress, elected in 1789 , only \(48.4 \%\) of the members had college degrees. Today, 44\% of senators and representatives have law degrees. & The first woman in Congress was Jeanette Rankin (R., Montana), a suffragist and peace activist elected in 1916. & The 110th Congress was, on average, the oldest that has ever served. The oldest member was 83 , the youngest was 31 . & Foreign-born members of Congress have come from Canada, Cuba, Hungary, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Taiwan, and elsewhere. \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
(1) Analyzing Charts Over time, the membership of Congress has become more educated, older, and more diverse. To what extent should the composition of Congress reflect the general population? Why?

Checkpoint Describe the gender, ethnic, and religious diversity of members of Congress.

Most members of Congress have had considerable political experience. The average senator is serving a second term, and the typical representative has served four terms. Nearly a third of the senators once sat in the House. Several senators are former governors. A few senators have held Cabinet seats or other high posts in the executive branch of the Federal Government. The House includes \(a\) large number of former State legislators and prosecuting attorneys among its members.

Again, Congress is not an accurate cross section of the nation's population. Rather, it is made up of upper-middle-class Americans, who are, on the whole, quite able and hardworking people.

\section*{The Job}

One leading commentary on American politics describes Congress and the job of a member of Congress this way:
"Congress has a split personality. On the one hand, it is a lawmaking institution and makes policy for the entire nation. In this capacity, all the members are expected to set aside their personal ambitions and perhaps even the concerns of their constituencies. Yet Congress is also a representative assembly, made up of 535 elected officials who serve as links between their constituents and the National Government. The dual roles of making laws and responding to constituents' demands forces members to balance national concerns against the specific interests of their States or districts."
-James M. Burns, et al., Government bythe People
Members of both houses of Congress play five major roles. They are most importantly (1) legislators and (2) representatives of their constituents. Beyond those roles, they are also (3) committee members, (4) servants of their constituents, and (5) politicians. You will take a close look at their lawmaking function in the next two chapters. Here, we consider their representative, committee member, and servant functions.

Representatives of the People Senators and representatives are elected to represent the people. What does that really mean? The members of both houses cast hundreds of votes during each session of Congress. Many of those votes involve quite routine, relatively unimportant matters; for example, a bill to designate a week in May as National Wildflower Week. But many of those votes,

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 10, Section 4: Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 35) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 36)
Core Worksheet (p. 37) Extend Worksheet (p. 39)
Quiz A (p. 40)
Quiz B (p. 41)
Chapter Test A (p. 42)
Chapter Test B (p. 45)

including some on matters of organization and procedure, do involve questions of farreaching importance.

Therefore, no questions about the lawmaking branch can be more vital than these: How do the people's representatives represent the people? On what basis do they cast their votes?

In broadest terms, each lawmaker has four voting options. He or she can vote as a delegate, a trustee, a partisan, or a politico.

Delegates see themselves as the agents of the people who elected them. They believe that they should discover what "the folks back home" think about an issue and vote that way. They are often willing to suppress their own views, ignore those of their party's leadership, and turn a deaf ear to the arguments of their colleagues and of special interests from outside their constituencies.

Trustees believe that each question they face must be decided on its merits. Conscience and judgment are their guides. They reject the notion that they must act as robots or rubber stamps. Instead, they call issues as they see them, regardless of the views held by a majority of their constituents or by any of the other groups that seek to influence their decisions.

Partisans believe that they owe their first allegiance to their political party. They feel duty-bound to cast their votes in line with the party platform and the views of their party's leaders. Most studies of legislators' voting behavior indicate that partisanship is the leading factor influencing lawmakers' votes on most important questions.

Politicos attempt to combine the basic elements of the delegate, trustee, and partisan roles. They try to balance these often conflicting factors: their own view of what is best for their constituents and/or the nation as a whole, the political facts of life, and the peculiar pressures of the moment.

Committee Members In every session of Congress, proposed laws, known as bills, are referred to the various committees in each chamber. As committee members, senators and representatives must screen those proposals. They decide, in committee, which measures will go on to floor considerationthat is, be considered and acted upon by the full membership of the House or Senate.

\section*{peculiar} adj., particular or specific

\section*{How Should Members of Congress Vote?}

The Senate must vote on an appropriations (spending) bill passed by the House. It includes earmarks (funds designated for specific projects) for hospitals and the State college system in Senator Miller's home State, as well as projects in other States. Senator Miller may decide to act as a delegate, a trustee, a partisan, or a politico. How should he vote?

\section*{What are the options?}

DELEGATE
Although Senator Miller personally thinks that it is bad policy to run a deficit, polls show that his constituents support this bill. As a delegate, he would vote for the bill.

\section*{TRUSTEE}

Senator Miller's personal goal is a balanced budget. His constituents trust him. As a trustee, he would vote against this bill because it would cause another year of deficits.

PARTISAN Senator Miller believes that it is important for his party to show that they can get things done. As a partisan, he would follow the party leadership and vote to pass the bill.

POLITICO
As a politico, Senator Miller attempts to balance the views of his constituents, his own views, those of his party, and other considerations.

\section*{Background}

CONGRESSIONAL PAGE PROGRAM Each year, 100 lucky high school juniors get a first-hand look at what members of Congress do. These students are congressional pages. Pages chiefly serve as messengers, carrying documents between buildings on Capitol Hill. They also prepare the House and Senate chambers each day by distributing the Congressional Record and other documents needed for the day's work. During sessions, pages sit near the podium, and members of Congress call them for assistance. To become a page, students must be at least 16 and must apply to their senator or representative for sponsorship. Competition is intense. Only students with high grades are considered. Those who succeed gain valuable insight into the inner workings of our National Government.

Ask: "To what extent do members of Congress reflect the general population?" If students say that Congress does not represent the population, they may jump to conclusions of racism or sexism as the cause. Point out that Congress has become more diverse over time and note the numbers mentioned in the reading. Direct the conversation to solutions, asking them to recall the profiles of candidates in a recent election. Point out that presidential elections, especially, often feature a choice among upper-middle-class white men. Urge them to consider why some individuals run for office and others do not. Remind them that voters elect members of Congress. You may also ask them how they would change the composition of Congress. If they are stuck, remind them that the United States has low levels of voter participation. Transition by telling students that in order to choose the best candidates, they need to understand the job of a member of Congress.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Ask students if they have ever looked at job listings in the newspaper or online. Ask them to describe what types of information might be included in a listing for a restaurant server. They should mention information that a job seeker would want to know (salary, hours, benefits) and skills that the person hiring will be looking for. Tell them that today they will be using these same categories to create a "help wanted" listing for a representative and a senator.
L1 L2 Differentiate For lower-level students, write the two categories on the board: (1) Information for the Job Seeker and (2) Description of Skills and Experiences the Job Seeker Needs.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint partisanship
How Should Members of Congress Vote? Senator Miller must consider such factors as his constituents' wishes, his own views, and his party's position.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 10 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 37). Using the worksheet, have students work alone or in pairs to write a want ad for a senator. Then they can use the worksheet as a model to write a want ad for a member of the House on a separate page. Remind them to look at the list of qualifications that they started in the lesson for Section 3.

L1 L2 Differentiate Walk through the lesson as a class, rather than letting students work on their own. Alternatively, you may walk through one role and let students do the other on their own.
L4 Differentiate Have students use information in their completed want ads to create a flier that might be posted on a university bulletin board to attract applicants. Have them use a word processing or desk top publishing software and include graphics to draw attention.

Rep. José Serrano (D., New York), far right, takes part in the ceremonial first delivery of a program to bring discounted heating oil to his constituents. He worked with nonprofit groups and Venezuelan officials to get it started. What role is Serrano fulfilling? appropriate v., to set aside for a specific purpose

Although Congress enacts laws and appropriates the money to implement them, the Constitution assigns the task of executing those laws to the executive branch. Congress must see that executive agencies carry out those laws faithfully and spend that money properly. It does so through the exercise of its critically important oversight function, the process by which Congress, through its committees, checks to see that the executive branch agencies are carrying out the policies that Congress has set by law.

Servants of the People Members of both the House and the Senate act as servants of their constituents. Most often, they do this as they (and their staff aides) try to help people in various dealings with the federal bureaucracy. Those interactions may involve a Social Security benefit, a passport application, a small business loan, or any one of a thousand other matters.

Some of "the folks back home" seem to think that members of Congress are sent to Washington mostly to do favors for them. Most members are swamped with constituent requests from the moment they take office. The range of these requests is almost without limit-everything from help in securing a government contract or an appointment to a military academy, to asking for a free sightseeing tour of Washington or even a personal loan. Consider this job description offered only half-jokingly by a former representative:
"A Congressman has become an expanded messenger boy, an employment agency, getter-outer of the Navy, Army, Marines, ward heeler, wound healer, trouble shooter, law explainer, bill finder, issue translator, resolution interpreter, controversy oil pourer, gladhand extender, business promoter, convention goer, civil ills skirmisher, veterans' affairs adjuster, ex-serviceman's champion, watchdog for the underdog, sympathizer with the upper dog, namer and kisser of babies, recoverer of lost luggage, soberer of delegates, adjuster for traffic violators, voter straying into Washington and into toils of the law, binder up of broken hearts, financial wet nurse, Good Samaritan, contributor to good causes-there are so many good causes-cornerstone layer, public building and bridge dedicator, ship christener-to be sure he does get in a little flag wav-ing-and a little constitutional hoisting and spread-eagle work, but it is getting harder every day to find time to properly study legislation-the very business we are primarily here to discharge, and that must be done above all things."

\section*{-Rep. Luther Patrick (D., Alabama)}

Most members of Congress know that to deny or fail to respond to most of these requests would mean to lose votes in the next election. This is a key fact, for all of the roles a member of Congress plays-legislator, representative, committee member, constituent servant, and politician-are related, at least in part, to their efforts to win reelection.

\section*{Compensation}

The Constitution says that members of Congress "shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law. ..."21 That is, the Constitution says that Congress fixes its own pay. The late Senator Russell Long (D., Louisiana) once characterized this provision as one that gives to members of Congress "a power that no good man would want and no bad man should have."

\section*{Background}

EARMARKS One way members of Congress fulfill their role as servants of the people is through earmarks. Earmarks are funds set aside by Congress to pay for projects in the sponsoring legislators' home States. Earmarks are typically included in spending bills. For example, Representative Thomas Reynolds (R., New York) sponsored an earmark to spend \($ 1.6\) million for a crime laboratory in his district. This laboratory may mean little to most people, but it is important to the people Reynolds represents. Earmarks have stirred controversy, however. The 2008 budget bill contained almost 9,000 of them, totaling an estimated \($ 8\) billion. Opponents of the practice argue that earmarks supporting local pet projects drain money away from national priorities, such as national defense. Supporters insist that earmarks are a legitimate way for legislators to advocate for their constituents.

\section*{Answers}

Caption servant of the people

Salary Today, senators and representatives are paid \($ 169,300\) per year. A few members are paid somewhat more. The Speaker of the House makes \($ 217,400\) per year. The Vice President makes \($ 221,100\) per year. The Senate's president pro tem and the floor leaders in both houses receive \($ 188,100\) per year.

Nonsalary Compensation Members receive a number of "fringe benefits"" and some are quite substantial. Thus, each member has a special tax deduction. That deduction recognizes the fact that most members of Congress must maintain two residences, one in his or her home State and one in Washington.

Generous travel allowances offset the cost of several round trips each year between home and Washington. Members pay relatively small amounts for life and health insurance and for outpatient care by a medical staff on Capitol Hill; they can get full medical care, at very low rates, at any military hospital. They also have a generous retirement plan, to which they contribute. The plan pays a pension based on years of service in Congress, and longtime members can retire with an income of \($ 150,000\) or more per year. The lawmakers are also covered by Social Security's retirement and Medicare programs.

Members are also provided with offices in one of the severalSenate and House office buildings near the Capitol and allowances for offices in their home State or district. Each member is given funds for hiring staff and for the operating costs related to running those offices. The franking privilege is a well-known benefit that allows them to mail letters and other materials postage-free by substituting their facsimile signature (frank) for the postage.

Congress has also provided its members with the free printing-and through franking, the free distribution-of speeches, newsletters, and the like. Radio and television tapes can be produced at very low cost. Each member can choose among several fine restaurants and two first-rate gymnasiums. Members receive still more privileges, including such things as the 21 Article I, Section 6, Clause 1. The 27th Amendment modified this pay-setting authority. It declares that no increase in members' pay can take effect until after the next congressional election-that is, not until after voters have had an opportunity to react to the pay raise.

help of the excellent services of the Library of Congress and free parking in spaces reserved for them at the Capitol and also at Washington's major airports. \({ }^{22}\)

The Politics of Pay There are only two real limits on the level of congressional pay. One is the President's veto power. The other and more potent limit is the fear of voter backlash, an angry reaction by constituents at the ballot box. That fear of election-day fallout has always made most members reluctant to vote to raise their own salaries.

Congress has often tried to skirt the politically sensitive pay question. It has done so by providing for such fringe benefits as a special tax break, a liberal pension plan, more office and travel funds, and other perquisites, or "perks"-items of value that are much less apparent to "the folks back home."

22 For decades, many members of Congress supplamented their salaries with honoraria - speaking cees supplemented their salaries with honoraria-speaking fees and similar payments from private sources, mainly special interest groups. Critics long attacked that widespread practice as at least unseemly long attacked unat widespread pracice as at leastunseenly and, at its worst, a form of legaiized bribery. The House finally prohibited its members the Senate did so in 1991.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
Name five "fringe benefits" for members of Congress.
fringe benefits
n., compensation awarded in addition to a base salary offset \(v\). , to balance, counteract, or compensate for

- Analyzing Political Cartoons To eliminate the need to vote for their own raises, Congress now receives an automatic annual salary increase to keep up with inflation. It is known as a "cost of living adjustment," or C.O.L.A Critics, however, point out that they have not provided the same automatic adjustment for the minimum wage. What factual information can you learn from studying this cartoon?

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}
alternate lesson plan Have students explore the different ways members of Congress represent the people. In this lesson plan, students will research a recent issue before Congress. They will analyze the position of members of Congress on this issue and identify those who voted as delegates, trustees, partisans, and politicos.

To see this lesson plan, go to

\section*{FOLLOW UP THE DISCUSSION}

After students finish the want ads, ask several to read their qualifications out loud. Use these questions to start a discussion:
- Do you agree with the different formal qualifications for the House and Senate?
- Are the informal qualifications any different?
- Do you look for different backgrounds or experiences for senators versus members of the House?
- Is the age limit for the House ( 25 years old) too young?
- What specific aspects of the job require specific skills or experience?

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Distribute the Extend Worksheet about Jeannette Rankin, the first woman elected to the House of Representatives (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 39). Have students read the biography and answer the questions. Point out that for members of Congress, voting their conscience sometimes conflicts with the desires of their constituents. Rankin's decision to vote against entry into World War II ended her political career, but she had voted her conscience. Ask students if they think she made a good choice.
Ask: Should an elected representative always vote the way the majority of constituents want, or do constituents elect the representative because they trust the person's judgment?
L2 ELL Differentiate Define difficult words in the biography of Jeannette Rankin: pacifist (person who opposes war), suffrage (right to vote), and conviction (firm belief).
L3 Differentiate Display Transparency 10J, Congressional Pay Raise. Ask: What does the man holding out his hat represent? (voters looking to receive fringe benefits)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Benefits include a special tax deduction, travel allowances, low-cost life and medical insurance, low-cost heal thcare, generous retirement plan, Social Security benefits, offices near the Capitol and allowances for offices in their home State or district, funds for office operation, franking privileges, free printing, restaurants, exercise facilities, library services, and free parking.
Analyzing Political Cartoons that in addition to automatic pay raises, Congress members also get "fringe benefits"

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3
Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' want ads using the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 168), Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 40)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 41)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Roles of members of \\ Congress (Questions 1, 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review the five major roles listed \\ under textbook heading "The Job."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The oversight function \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Read aloud the section following \\ the textbook heading "Committee \\ Members" and discuss the oversight \\
function.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The difference between a \\ bill and a law (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students look up the definitions \\ in the glossary and explain them in a \\ sentence.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Informal qualifications and \\ members' backgrounds \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students use the first page \\ of this section to make graphs and \\ charts showing aspects of the back- \\ grounds of members of Congress.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Voting options (Question 6) & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the graphic "How Should \\ Members of Congress Vote?"
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Why does the Constitution grant members of Congress immunity to prosecution for anything they say in committee or on the floor?
contentious
ad \(j\), controversial

The debate over congressional pay is not likely to end soon-at least not as long as the current method of establishing salaries remains in effect. All sides of the issue present reasonable arguments. Certainly, decent salaries-pay in line with the responsibilities of the job-will not automatically bring the most able men and women to Congress, or to any other public office. But certainly, decent salaries can make public service much more appealing to qualified people.

Membership Privileges Beyond the matter of their salaries and other compensation, members of Congress enjoy several privileges. The Constitution commands that senators and representatives shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same. . . . —Article I, Section 6, Clause 1

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The provision dates from English and colonial practice, when the king's officers often harassed legislators on petty grounds. It has been of little importance in our national history, however. \({ }^{23}\)

Another much more important privilege is set out in the same place in the Constitution.

The Speech or Debate Clause of Article I, Section 6, Clause 1 declares ". . . for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place." The words "any other Place" refer particularly to the courts.

The privilege is intended to "throw a cloak of legislative immunity" around members of Congress. The clause protects members from suits for libel or slander arising out of their official conduct. The Court has held that the immunity applies "to things generally done in a session of the House [or Senate] by one of its members in relation to the business before it." \({ }^{24}\) The protection includes work in committees and all other things generally done by members of Congress in relation to congressional business.

The important and necessary goal of this provision is to protect freedom of legislative debate. Clearly, members must not feel restrained in their vigorous discussion of the sometimes contentious issues of the day. However, this provision is not designed to give members unbridled freedom to attack others verbally or in writing. Thus, a member is not free to defame another person in a public speech, an article, a conversation, or otherwise.

23 The courts have held that "Breach of the Peace" covers criminal 23 The courts have held that "Breach of the Peace" covers criminal nal) offenses while engaged in congressional business.
24 The leading case is Kilbourn v. Thompson, 1881. The holding has been affirmed many times since. In Hutchinson v. Proxmire, 1979, however, the Court held that members of Congress may be sued for libel for statements they make in news releases or in newsletters.

\section*{SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What roles and functions do members of Congress perform?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the oversight function?
3. What is the difference between a bill and a law?
4. What are the five major roles played by members of Congress in their jobs?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Inferences What does the profile of the average member of Congress tell you about the informal qualifications for the office?
6. Make Decisions Rank the options that members of Congress have when voting: trustee, delegate, partisan, and politico. Number one should be the option you would want your representatives and senators to use when voting. For each, explain why you would or would not favor each option.

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Write Topic Sentences Extend the outline you began in Section 3. Then write a topic sentence for each of the major headings in your outline. Topic sentences should introduce the information under that heading. If your headings are too broad to write a comprehensive topic sentence, revise the outline so that each topic sentence serves as an introduction to what follows.
members, servants of the people, legislators, politicians
5. A good answer should indicate awareness that the characteristics of the "average" member of Congress are an indication of informal qualifications for office. Students may mention that the public seems to favor older white males with considerable political experience; being a lawyer or having another advanced degree, being married with children, being religiously affiliated, and so on.
6. Students should present a reasonable explanation for their preferences.
QUICK WRITE Students' topic sentences should correlate to the major outline headings, which should not be too broad.

Comparing the House and the Senate
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline House of Representatives & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Senate } \\
\hline Two-year term & Six-year term \\
\hline 435 voting members & 100 members \\
Smaller constituencies: Elected & Larger constituencies: \\ from districts of approximately & Elected from entire State \\ equal populations & \begin{tabular}{l}
One third elected every \\ two years
\end{tabular} \\
\begin{tabular}{ll}
All elected every two years & \begin{tabular}{l}
High prestige, more \\ media attention
\end{tabular} \\ media attention, less national & \\
\hline
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary} bicameral \(p .268\) term p. 270
session p. 270 convene p. 271 adjourn p. 271 recess p. 271
prorogue p. 27
special session \(p .271\)
apportion p. 273
reapportion p. 274
off-year election p. 275 single-member district \(p .275\) at-large \(p .275\) gerrymander p. 277 incumbent \(p .280\) continuous body p. 283 constituency \(p .283\) delegate p. 287 trustee p. 287 partisan p. 287 politico p. 287 bill p. 287
floor consideration p. 287 oversight function p. 288 franking privilege p. 289

Reasons for a Bicameral Congress
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline Historical & Practical & Theoretical \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Most colonies had bicameral legislatures. \\
British Parliament was bicameral.
\end{tabular} & Big States wanted representation based on population; small States wanted equal representation. & The Framers wanted to spread the power so that the legislative branch would not become too powerful. \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about Congress, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Heath, David. The Congress of the United States. Capstone Press, 2000.
L2 Cohen Bell, Lauren. The United States Congress: A Simulation for Students. Wadsworth Publishing, 2004.
L3 Hamilton, Lee. How Congress Works and Why You Should Care. Indiana University Press, 2004.
L4 Baker, Ross K. House and Senate. W. W. Norton, 2000.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Summarizing To help students prepare for college, have students practice summarizing. Give them several minutes to summarize one section of the chapter in one to three sentences. In groups of three, they should share their summaries and work together to agree on the most succinct summary possible. Share these summaries with the class and see if it is possible to write a better one. A good summary should identify the main idea(s) and conclusions of the section without including too many details or examples.

\section*{assessment at a glance}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 3 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 3 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 277, 279
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING SECTION 1}
1. (a) Historical: Americans accustomed to British bicameral legislature; most colonial and State legislatures were bicameral.
Practical: compromise between large and small States. Theoretical: Framers wanted bicameral legislature so each house could check the power of the other. (b) States had vastly unequal populations and could not agree on a single form of representation that would be fair to all. Bicameralism was a compromise that allowed equal representation to the States in the Senate and proportional representation based on population in the House.
2. (a) There are two sessions to each term of Congress-one session each year.
(b) The President may call a special session to deal with an emergency situation. The President can end a session but only when the two houses cannot agree on a date for adjournment.

\section*{SECTION 2}
3. (a) Voters elect one candidate from among a field of candidates running for a single seat. (b) After each decennial census, Congress redistributes, or reapportions, the seats in the House to adjust to changes in the population. The legislature of each State then redraws its congressional district lines to adjust for the new number of seats. Gerrymandering is the drawing of these new lines with the goal of maximizing the seats held by the majority party. (c) A good answer will include an awareness of the complexity of the process and recognition that reformers must be careful not to introduce new kinds of unfairness.

\section*{SECTION 3}
4. (a) Senators must be older and be citizens longer. (b) Longer terms insulate senators from political pressures because they don't have to campaign frequently. This allows greater freedom to act according to what is best for the nation rather than what will be most popular with constituents. (c) A good answer should note that a policy may be good for the nation but not good for a senator's State.
5. (a) a bag containing \($ 1\) million (b) The original method of choosing senators (appointment by State legislatures) had been

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) Give a historical, a practical, and a theoretical reason why the Framers created a bicameral legislature. (b) Explain the following statement: Bicameralism is an expression of federalism.
2. (a) How is a session of Congress related to a term? (b) Under what circumstances may the President convene or end a session of Congress?

\section*{Section 2}
3. (a) Describe how members of Congress are elected in a single-member district arrangement. (b) Explain how the terms reapportion and gerrymander are related. (c) In your opinion, what criteria should legislators use when drawing district lines?

\section*{Section 3}
4. (a) How do the qualifications for membership in the Senate differ from those of the House? (b) How does the length of their term of office protect senators from the political pressures faced by the members of the House? (c) Under what circumstances might a senator's role as a national leader conflict with his or her role as a representative of a State?
5. Analyze Political Cartoons The 1890 cartoon to the right is a commentary on the process of State legislatures choosing senators before the passage of the 17th Amendment. (a) What is the candidate placing in the box? (b) What point is the artist making? (c) Compare the role of money in elections before the passage of the 17 th Amendment to its role today.

Section 4
6. (a) List the five major roles played by members of Congress in doing their jobs. (b) In your opinion, what is the most important role of a member of Congress? Why?
7. (a) What are the advantages and disadvantages of paying our elected representatives a salary? (b) How much do you think that members of Congress should be paid in comparison with other professions? Explain. (c) How important is it for members of Congress to be well paid?

\section*{Writing About Government}
8. Use the Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write an expository essay explaining similarities and differences between the British Parliament and the U.S. Congress. Before writing, make an outline and decide how to organize your essay. See pp.S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
9. Essential Question Activity Members of Congress are legislators for the National Government, yet they must please their constituents in order to be reelected. One way to do that is through earmarks.
(a) Research earmarks using news stories and other current media. Summarize the controversy over earmarks. Why do some people oppose them? What effect do earmarks have on the nation?
(b) Would the earmarks sponsored by your members of Congress make you more likely to vote for them? Would you support the earmarks if they benefited another State?
10. Essential Question Assessment Based on the results of your research and the content you learned in this chapter, write a paragraph answering this question: How should members of Congress balance their roles as national leaders and State or local leaders? This question will help you think about the chapter Essential Question: Whose views should members of Congress represent when voting?
\begin{tabular}{|cc|}
\hline Essential Questions \\
Journal & \begin{tabular}{l}
To respond to the chapter Essential \\
Question, go to your Essential \\
Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
corrupted and those who had the money could buy a seat in the Senate. (c) Answers will vary. A good answer will recognize that, today, many people believe that money still plays a large role in the election process.

\section*{SECTION 4}
6. (a) legislator, representative, committee member, servant of constituents, politician (b) The text states that the most important roles are those of legislator and representative. Students should support their opinions.
7. (a) If congressional salaries were eliminated, many qualified people would be unwilling or unable to serve. (b) Students should support their opinions. (c) Students should recognize that compensation influences the kinds of people who will be willing to run for office.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
8. Students' outlines and essays should show evidence of awareness of the similarities and differences between both legislative bodies. The essays should be organized correctly by subject or by point.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Members of Congress Cast Their Votes}

Members of Congress must decide how to vote on any number of issues during each session. In doing so, they risk alienating some constituents and party leaders. They also may be faced with issues about which they have strong personal feelings.

Document 1
When your representative in Congress votes on an issue, which should be more important?

The Representative's own principles and judgment about what is best for the country
25\% AGREE
The way voters in your district feel about that issue
68\% AGREE
SOURCE: The Center on Policy Atitudes, 1999

\section*{Document 2}

I am now here in Congress . . . I am at liberty to vote as my conscience and judgment dictates to be right, without the yoke of any party on me . . . Look at my arms, you will find no party hand-cuff on them! . . . But you will find me . . . the people's faithful representative, and the public's most obedient, very humble servant.
-Davy Crockett, Representative of Tennessee, 1834

\section*{Document 3}

There is an old story about Lyndon Johnson meeting with a group of new congressmen while he was President. One of them asked Johnson for advice on how to vote during his time in office. The President responded that he should do whatever his party leadership told him. Outside the meeting a few minutes later, a reporter asked Johnson if he'd given any advice to the new legislators. Surely, Johnson replied: "Always vote in the best interests of the American people."
That pretty well captures the realities of Washington. Out in the glare of the television lights, "the people's" interests are trotted out and given the starring role. But behind closed doors, there's a gaggle of competing interests every legislator must weigh. If the President is of your party, there's a natural desire to support him. So, too, with your party's leaders, who can advance your career and make it easier for you to help your constituents. Then there are your constituents, your campaign contributors, lobbyists . . . All of them have some claim on your loyalties.
- Lee Hamilton (D., Indiana), "Whose Team Should a Member of Congress Be On?," 2005

\section*{Use your knowledge of Congress and Documents 1, 2, and 3 to answer} Questions 1-3.

Which statement does Document 1 support?
A. Members of Congress should vote in the best interest of large corporations.
B. Members of Congress should vote in the best interests of the nation.
C. Members of Congress should vote in the way their constituents would choose.
D. Members of Congress should vote for what they consider morally correct.
2. What factors would Crockett and Johnson have considered when voting on bills?
3. Pull It Together Based on these documents, what factors do you think are most important for members of Congress to consider when casting their votes? Why?
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Documents
To find more primary sources on Congress, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{DOCUMENT-B ASED ASSESSMENT}
1. \(C\)
2. Crockett would likely have considered conscience, judgment, and the views of his constituents. Johnson would have voted in the interest of his party.
3. Answers will vary, but students should consider the various voting options and the advantages and disadvantages of each

L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
9. Essential Question Activity (a) and (b)

Answers will vary. Students' research and responses should be thoughtful and should synchronize information learned from the chapter along with their own thoughts.
10. Essential Question Assessment Students paragraphs should reflect what they have learned about voting as a delegate, trustee, partisan, or politico.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 3}

What makes a successful Congress?

\section*{CHAPTER 11}

What should be the limits on the powers of Congress?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: In what way is Congress "the people"? (Members are elected by the people to represent their interests. ) In what way is Congress the President's commander? (Congress has some powers that can check the President's power.) Tell students to begin to further explore the powers of Congress by completing the Chapter 11 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}ELL Differentiate Chapter 11 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 57)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:
- Federal Spending: Where Do Our Taxes Go?
- The Implied Powers of Congress
- The Impeachment Process

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

You may wish to teach drawing inferences and conclusions as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 11 Skills Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 77) to help students learn how to draw inferences and conclusions. The worksheet asks students to read an excerpt about eminent domain and then answer questions about the reading. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 78).

\section*{WebQuest}
online The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about Congress.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Begin with the heading "Introduce the Delegated Powers" in Section 1 and teach the rest of the lesson, choosing one Extend activity. Then have students complete Chapter 11 Section 2 Core Worksheets A and B. Finish by reviewing "The Expressed Powers of Congress" chart in Section 2 and having students read The Federalist No. 41 , in which James Madison describes the reasons the National Government has certain powers.
BLOCK 2: Teach the full lesson for Section 3 and then have students do research and present information associated with modern conflicts related to the powers of the National Government. Then have them do the Section 4 Jigsaw activity and choose one Extend activity for students to complete

Lesson Goals
SECTION 1
Students will . . .
- explain what is meant by the expressed, implied, and inherent powers of Congress.
- identify the expressed powers of Congress by examining the Constitution and recognizing their application in scenarios.
- consider limits on the powers of Congress through a Socratic Dialogue.
SECTION 2
Students will . . .
- examine the division of war powers by analyzing a primary source document.
- evaluate the expressed powers of Congress by determining which powers they feel are most important.
- examine the domestic powers by using photographs illustrating each power.
SECTION 3
Students will . . .
- use the example of a teacher's powers in the classroom to consider the meaning of implied powers.
- explore strict and liberal construction by evaluating congressional actions.
- decide upon and defend a position on implied powers.

SECTION 4
Students will . . .
- evaluate the impeachment process by examining primary sources and data about the impeachment of President Clinton.
- examine the nonlegislative duties of Congress, using the Jigsaw strategy.

Pressed for Time
To cover the chapter quickly, begin with Section 1, asking students to outline Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution. Then ask them to complete the Chapter 11 Section 1 Core Worksheet and Chapter 11 Section 2 Core Worksheet A. Introduce the implied powers using Transparency 11E, Implied Powers of Congress, which lists some expressed and implied powers. Review Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court: McCulloch v. Maryland, and discuss modern conflicts related to strict and liberal construction of the Constitution. To cover Section 4, do the Core Worksheets as a group.

DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY
Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1 Special Needs
L2 Basic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3 All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{What powers over money and commerce does the Constitution give to Congress and what limits does it put on these powers?}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|r|}{Money and Commerce} \\
\hline Expressed Power & Limits on Power \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- regulate interstate and foreign trade \\
- tax \\
- borrow \\
- establish uniform bankruptcy laws \\
- coin money and regulate its value
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- cannot favor ports of one State over those of any other State in regulating trade; • cannot require vessels bound to or from one State to be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another; • could not interfere with slave trade until 1808 \\
- may tax only for public purposes; • cannot tax exports; • direct taxes (except income taxes) must be apportioned among States according to population; • indirect taxes must be levied at same rate in every part of country
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- explain what is meant by the expressed, implied, and inherent powers of Congress.
- identify the expressed powers of Congress by examining the Constitution and recognizing their application in scenarios.
- consider limits on the powers of Congress through a Socratic Dialogue.

\section*{section 1}

\section*{The Expressed Powers of Money and Commerce}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What powers over money and commerce does the Constitution give to Congress and what limits does it put on these powers? Use a table to keep track of the powers of Congress and their limits.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Money and Commerce } \\
\hline Expressed Power & Limits on Power \\
\hline\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- expressed - tax
powers
- public debt
- implied powers - deficit financing
- inherent - bankruptcy powers commerce legal tender
- commerce
power

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the three types of powers delegated to Congress.
2. Analyze the importance of the commerce power.
3. Summarize key points relating to the taxing power.
4. Explain how the bankruptcy and borrowing powers work.
5. Explain why the Framers gave Congress the power to issue currency.

Image Above: Congress created the Coast Guard to protect coastal waters.

Atypical day in either chamber of Congress might suggest that there is no limit to what Congress can do. On any given day, the House might consider bills dealing with such varying matters as the interstate highway system, an increase in the minimum wage, and grazing on public lands. Meanwhile, the Senate might be considering aid to a famine-stricken country in Africa, the President's nomination of someone to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court, or any number of other matters.

Still, remember, there are very real limits on what Congress can do. Recall that (1) government in the United States is limited government, and (2) the American system of government is federal in form. These two fundamental facts work to shape and also to limit the powers of Congress.

\section*{The Delegated Powers}

Remember, Congress has only those powers delegated (granted, given) to it by the Constitution. Large areas of power are denied to Congress in so many words in the Constitution, by the Constitution's silence on many matters, and because the Constitution creates a federal system.

There is much that Congress cannot do. It cannot create a national public school system, require people to vote or attend church, or set a minimum age for marriage or drivers' licenses. It cannot abolish jury trials, confiscate all handguns, or censor the content of newspaper columns or radio or television broadcasts. Congress cannot do these and a great many other things because the Constitution does not delegate to it any power to do so.

Still, Congress does have the power to do many things. The Constitution grants it a number of specific powers-and, recall, it delegates those powers in three different ways: (1) explicitly, in its specific wording-the expressed powers; (2) by reasonable deduction from the expressed powers-the implied powers; and (3) by creating a national government for the United States-the inherent powers.

The Framers very purposefully created a limited government. Given that fact, it is understandable that the existence and the scope of both the implied and the inherent powers have been the subject of dispute ever since the adoption

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Congress has expressed, implied, and inherent powers. - The Constitution spells out 27 expressed powers of Congress. - The commerce power allows Congress to regulate trade. - Congress levies taxes to meet public needs and to protect domestic industry and public health and safety. - The currency power allows the Federal Government to coin money and regulate its value. Congress may borrow on the credit of the United States and establish uniform bankruptcy laws.
CONCEPTS: enumerated powers, implied powers, federalism
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Much of the meaning of the expressed powers is found in the ways in which these powers have been carried out. - The commerce power is the basis for many of the implied powers. - The taxing power is vital to the functioning of government of the Constitution. Later in the chapter, we shall examine the conflict between the strict constructionists, who interpret congressional power narrowly, and the liberal constructionists, who favor a broader interpretation.

\section*{The Expressed Powers}

Most, but not all, of the expressed powers of Congress are found in Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution. There, in 18 separate clauses, 27 different powers are explicitly given to Congress. \({ }^{1}\)

These grants of power are brief. What they do and do not allow Congress to do often cannot be discovered by merely reading the few words involved. Rather, their meaning is found in the ways in which Congress has exercised its powers since 1789, and in scores of Supreme Court cases arising out of the measures Congress has passed.

As a case in point, take the Commerce Clause, in Article I, Section 8, Clause 3. It gives Congress the power "to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes." What do these words mean? Over the past two centuries, Congress and the Court have had to answer hundreds of questions about the scope of the Commerce Clause. Here are but a few examples: Does "commerce" include people crossing State lines or entering or leaving the country? What about business practices? Working conditions? Radio and television broadcasts? The Internet? Does Congress have the power to ban the shipment of certain goods from one State to another? To prohibit discrimination? What trade is "foreign" and what is "interstate"? And what trade is neither?

In answering these and dozens of other questions arising out of this one provision, Congress and the Court have definedand are still defining-the meaning of the

\footnotetext{
1 Several of the expressed powers of Congress are set out elsewhere in the Constitution. Thus, Article IV, Section 3 grants 1) and to manage and dispose of federal territory and other 1) and to manage and dispose of federal territory and other power to levy an income tax. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 24th, and 26 th amendments grant Congress the "power to enforce" the provisions of the amendments "by appropriate legislation."
}

Commerce Clause. So it is with most of the other constitutional grants of power to Congress.

The commerce power and, with it, the expressed power to tax have provided much of the basis upon which Congress and the courts have built nearly all of the implied powers. Most of what the Federal Government does, day to day and year to year, it does as the result of legislation enacted by Congress in the exercise of those two powers.

\section*{The Commerce Power}

Commerce, generally, is the buying and selling of goods and services. The commerce power-the power of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign trade-is vital to the welfare of the nation. Its few words have prompted the growth of the greatest open market in the world. The Commerce Clause proved to be more responsible for the building of a strong and United States out of a weak confederation than any other provision in the Constitution.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 1824 The first case involving the Commerce Clause to reach the Supreme Court, Gibbons v. Ogden, was decided in 1824. The case arose out of a clash over the regulation of steamboats by the State of New York, on the one hand, and the Federal Government, on the other. In 1807 , Robert Fulton's steamboat, the Clermont, had made its first successful run up the Hudson River, from New York City to Albany The State legislature then gave Fulton an exclusive, long-term grant to navigate the waters of the State by steamboat. Fulton's monopoly then gave Aaron Ogden a permit for steamboat navigation between New York City and New Jersey.

Thomas Gibbons, operating with a coasting license from the \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Who defines the meaning of the Commerce Clause?

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 61) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 63)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write Article I, Section 8, and Should Internet purchases be taxed? on the board. Have students review this part of the Constitution and then write down the clause that gives Congress the power to answer this question.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentation at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Discuss students' Bellringer answers. Point out Article I, Section 8, Clause 3 and explain that it is from this clause that Congress may derive the power to regulate the Internet, if the regulation deals with commerce. Explain that this is an expressed power, because it is stated directly in the Constitution.

\section*{introduce the delegated powers}

Explain to students that delegated means "granted" or "given" and that Congress has only those powers delegated to it by the Constitution. Direct students' attention to the graphic on this page describing the three types of powers that the Constitution delegates to Congress. Ask students to name the three types of powers (inherent, expressed, and implied) and to define each. (Inherent powers are those that all sovereign nations have. Expressed powers are those directly stated in the Constitution. Implied powers are drawn from the expressed powers.)
12 ELL Differentiate Help students understand the term inherent by providing the following concrete examples: "John had an inherent ability to excel at math." "Anti-lock brakes were an inherent part of the car's braking system. " Provide the following synonym: built-in. Then ask students to offer a synonym of their own (included, integrated, inseparable).

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Congress and the Supreme Court
Caption the implied powers, based on the expressed powers of commerce and tax

\section*{OUTLINE ARTICLE I, SECTION 8 OF THE CONSTITUTION}

Have students read Article I, Section 8, Clauses 1-6 of the Constitution and list the powers related to money and commerce. They are: Clause 1 -the taxing power; Clause 2-the borrowing power; Clause 3-the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce; Clause 4-the bankruptcy power; Clause 5-the power to coin money; and Clause 6-the power to punish counterfeiters.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 11 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 65), which asks students to identify the power Congress is exercising in several scenarios.
L2 ELL Differentiate Distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 67), which has similar scenarios but fewer for students to address.

Federal Government, began to carry passengers on a competing line. Ogden sued, and the New York courts ruled in his favor, holding that Gibbons could not sail by steam in New York waters.

Gibbons appealed that ruling to the Supreme Court. He claimed that the New York grant conflicted with the congressional power to regulate interstate commerce. The Court agreed. It rejected Ogden's argument that "commerce" should be defined narrowly, as simply "traffic" or the mere buying and selling of goods. Instead, the Court read the Commerce Clause in very broad terms:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

Commerce, undoubtedly, is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations, and parts of nations, in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse.
-Chief Justice John Marshall

The Court's ruling was widely popular at the time because it dealt a death blow to steamboat monopolies. Freed from restrictive State regulation, many new steamboat companies came into existence. As a result, steam navigation developed rapidly. Within a few years, the railroads were similarly freed, which revolutionized transportation within the United States.

Over the decades, the Court's sweeping definition of commerce has brought an extension of federal authority into many areas of American life-a reach of federal power beyond anything the Framers could have imagined. As another of the many examples of the point, note this: It is on the basis of the commerce power that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits discrimination in access to or service in hotels, motels, theaters, restaurants, and in other public accommodations on grounds of race, color, religion, or national origin. \({ }^{2}\)

2 The Supreme Court upheld this use of the commerce power in Heart of Atlanta Motel v. United States in 1964. The unanimous Court noted that there was "overwhelming evidence of the disruptive effect that racial discrimination has had on commercial intercourse." You will look at this case again in Chapter 21

\section*{The Gommerce Clause}

The Congress shall have Power . . . To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes. -Article I, Section 8, Clause 3

FROM THE CONSTTUTION

Enabling Commerce The commerce power played a major role in the formation of the Union. The weak Congress created under the Articles of Confederation had no power to regulate interstate trade and little authority over foreign commerce. The 1780s were marked by intense commercial rivalries and bickering among the States. High trade barriers and spiteful State laws created chaos and confusion in much of the country. That circumstance led the Framers to write the Commerce Clause into the Constitution.

Constitutional Principles How does the Commerce Clause reflect the principle of federalism?

\footnotetext{
Acting under its commerce power, Congress created the interstate highway system.
}

\section*{Background}

CIVIL RIGHTS AND the Commerce clause During the first half of the 1900s, the Supreme Court had broadened the scope of the Commerce Clause to allow Congress to regulate more areas of the economy, including interstate commerce. Supporters of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 believed that discrimination in public places had kept African Americans from traveling around the country. Both Title II and Title VII of the act prohibited racial discrimination by businesses that affected interstate commerce. Thus, the Commerce Clause became the foundation for affirming the constitutionality of the act. In Heart of Atlanta Motel v. United States, 1964, the Supreme Court found that Congress could regulate a business that served mainly interstate travelers. In Katzenbach v. McClung, 1964, the Court ruled that federal civil rights legislation could regulate a restaurant that served food that had previously crossed state lines.

\section*{The Americans with Disabilities Act}

Based on the commerce power, Congress passed the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) in 1990. It prohibits discrimination against people with disabilities in areas such as employment, public accommodation, public transportation, and access to commercial buildings. How do these photographs illustrate problems addressed by the ADA?

Limits on the Commerce Power The congressional power to regulate commerce is not unlimited. It, too, must be exercised in accord with all other provisions in the Constitution. Thus, for example, the Supreme Court struck down the Gun-Free School Zone Act of 1990 in United States v. Lopez, 1995. That act had made it a federal crime for anyone other than a police officer to possess a firearm in or around a school. The Court could find no useful connection between interstate commerce and guns at school. It held that Congress had in this case invaded the reserved powers of the States.

In more specific terms, the Constitution places four explicit limits on the use of the commerce power. It says that Congress
1. cannot tax exports (Article I, Section 9, Clause 5);
2. cannot favor the ports of one State over those of any other in the regulation of trade (Article I, Section 9, Clause 6);
3. cannot require that "Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another" (Article I, Section 9, Clause 6); and, finally,
4. could not interfere with the slave trade, at least not until the year 1808 (Article I, Section 9, Clause 1). This last limitation, part of the curious Slave-Trade Compromise the Framers struck at Philadelphia, has been a dead letter for more than two centuries now that slavery has been abolished.

\section*{The Power to Tax}

The Constitution gives Congress the power

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States. . . .

\author{
—Article I, Section 8, Clause 1
}

Remember, the Articles of Confederation had not given Congress the power to tax. Congress did have the power to requisition funds from the States; that is, Congress could ask (in reality, beg) each of the 13 States for money. But, through the 1780 s, not a single State came even remotely close to meeting the few requests that Congress made, and a number of them paid nothing at all. The government was impotent, and the lack of a power to tax was a leading cause for the creation of the Constitution.

The Purpose of Taxes We shall take another and longer look at the taxing power in Chapter 16. But, here, a number of important points: The Federal Government will take in some \($ 3\) trillion in fiscal year 2009, and almost certainly an even larger sum in 2010. Most of that money-well over 95 percent of it-will come from the various taxes levied by Congress.

\section*{Background}

PROTECTIVE TARIFF In the early 1800s, Congress imposed protective tariffs to help fledgling U.S. industries compete with the more established industries of Europe. A protective tariff works by increasing the price of an imported product. For example, suppose a hat made in Britain cost \($ 1\) in the U.S. Because the U.S. hat industry was less efficient, the American-made hat might cost \($ 1.05\). To induce Americans to buy U.S.-made hats, Congress might place a 10 cent tariff on British hats, raising the cost to \($ 1.10\) and giving U.S. hat makers a price advantage. Consumers, however, were not happy about paying higher prices. Most U.S. manufacturing was located in the North. The agricultural South depended on buying manufactured products, putting the burden of higher prices disproportionately on Southerners. Southern opposition to the Tariff of 1828 led to the Nullification Crisis, which nearly split the Union.

\section*{CHECK COMPREHENSION}

Be sure students understand the sequence of events and import of the Gibbons v. Ogden case. Ask who, where, what, when, and how questions to check understanding of sequence. Then ask: What was the long-term impact of the case on the commerce power of Congress? (Its broad definition of commerce extended federal authority into many areas of American life; for example, the ban on discrimination in public places and services set forth in the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is based on the commerce power.)

\section*{DISCUSS LIMITS ON THE POWERS OF CONGRESS}

Distribute copies of Article I, Section 8, Clauses 1-6, and Section 9 of the Constitution. Have students underline those clauses or parts of clauses that place limits on Congress. (Article I, Section 8, Clause 1 and Article I, Section 9, all Clauses) Use this question to lead a Socratic Dialogue (p. T24) about the powers of Congress: Using the Constitution as your primary source and this section of the book for examples, discuss how far the powers of Congress should extend. Has Congress gone beyond the limits the Framers intended?
L2 Differentiate Implement a ten- to fifteen-minute wait time between comments. The break will allow all students to formulate a response.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Steps can prevent persons with disabilities from holding certain jobs or entering public buildings. By requiring ramps, the ADA reduces discrimination against persons with disabilities by enabling equal access.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L4 Differentiate Assign students a mock newscast in which they highlight the main points of the 1824 Gibbons v. Ogden case and then interview major participants, such as a member of the New York State legislature, Aaron Ogden, and Thomas Gibbons. The newscast should cover the facts in the case, including the position of each side and the Supreme Court decision, the participants' reactions to that decision, and the long-term impact of the case.
L3 Differentiate Ask students to find recent newspaper articles that discuss instances in which Congress has exercised its money and commerce powers. Have them summarize their articles and identify the power(s) of Congress that are discussed. Post these around the room and have students choose two other articles to analyze.
L3 Differentiate Have students look at the textbook graphic "Federal Spending." Ask students to identify the categories of the 2006 federal budget that did not exist in 1800 and 1900. Then have them do research and make a presentation explaining what these programs are, why they were created, and how Congress pays for them. Reports should also analyze the origin of the legislation and discuss whether the Framers would have accepted it as being under the jurisdiction of Congress.
L2 Differentiate Have students begin a chart with three main headings: "Expressed Powers," "Implied Powers," and "Inherent Powers." Under the heading "Expressed Powers," have them list the powers described in this section. As they read later sections, students can complete their charts.
L4 Differentiate Remind students that the debate over how the Constitution should be interpreted has its roots in the early years of the nation. Have students refer to chapters 2 and 4 of their textbooks, and summarize the debates of the Federalists and the Anti-Federalists. Then have students research recent examples of the strict \(v\). liberal construction debate, summarize the issue, politicians' positions on it (one on each side), and the student's position, based on his or her understanding of the Constitution.

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Cartoons The cartoon suggests that the government keeps tax money rather than using it for the public good.
Checkpoint Taxes are used to raise revenue for public purposes, to protect domestic industry against foreign competition, and to protect public health and safety.

- Interpreting Cartoons Congress levies taxes, but created the Internal Revenue Service to collect them This cartoon shows a taxpayer and an IRS agent. In what ways does this cartoon show a negative attitude toward taxes?
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Name three purposes for which the government which the gove

A tax is a charge levied by government on persons or property to raise money to meet public needs. But notice, Congress does sometimes impose taxes for other purposes as well. The protective tariff is perhaps the oldest example of this point. Although it does bring in some revenue every year, its real goal is to "protect" domestic industry against foreign competition by increasing the cost of imported goods.

Taxes are also sometimes levied to protect the public health and safety. The Federal Government's regulation of narcotics is a case in point. Only those who have a proper federal license can legally manufacture, sell, or deal in those drugs-and licensing is a form of taxation.

Limits on the Taxing Power Congress does not have an unlimited power to tax. As with all other powers, the taxing power must be used in accord with all other provisions of the Constitution. Thus, Congress cannot lay a tax on church services, for example-because such a tax would violate the 1st Amendment. Nor could it lay a poll tax as a condition for voting in federal elections, for that would violate the 24th Amendment.

More specifically, the Constitution places four explicit limitations on the congressional power to tax:
1. Congress may tax only for public purposes, not for private benefit. Article I, Section 8, Clause 1 says that taxes may be levied only "to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States. . .."
2. Congress may not tax exports. Article I, Section 9, Clause 5 declares " n ]o Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State." Thus, customs duties (tariffs), which are taxes, can be levied only on goods brought into the country (imports), not on those sent abroad (exports).
3. Direct taxes must be apportioned among the States, according to their populations:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census of enumeration herein before directed to be taken.
-Article I, Section 9, Clause 4
A direct tax is one that must be paid directly to the government by the person on whom it is imposed-for example, a tax on the ownership of land or buildings, or a capitation (head or poll) tax.

An income tax is a direct tax, but it may be laid without regard to population:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.
-16th Amendment

\section*{Debate}

Most State constitutions place restrictions on borrowing by State and local governments. Yet the U.S. Constitution places no limit on federal borrowing. This lack of imposed restraint worried Thomas Jefferson:
"[We should] all consider ourselves unauthorized to saddle posterity with our debts, and morally bound to pay them ourselves.
-Thomas Jefferson, letter to John Wayles Eppes, 1813
Use the Debate strategy ( p . T25) to have students argue this point: We need a constitutional amendment requiring the Federal Government to balance the budget.

Wealth (which translates to the ability to pay taxes) is not evenly distributed among the States. So, a direct tax levied in proportion to population would fall more heavily on the residents of some States than it would on others-and would, therefore, be grossly unfair. Consequently, Congress has not levied any direct tax-except for the income taxoutside the District of Columbia since 1861.
4. Article I, Section 8, Clause 1 provides that "all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." That is, all indirect taxes levied by the Federal Government must be levied at the same rate in every part of the country. Those indirect taxes include the federal levies on gasoline, alcoholic beverages, and tobacco products.

As a general rule, an indirect tax is one first paid by one person but then passed on to another. It is indirectly paid by that second person. Take, for example, the federal tax on cigarettes. It is paid to the Treasury by the tobacco company, but is then passed on through the wholesaler and retailer to the person who finally buys the cigarettes.

\section*{The Borrowing Power}

Article I, Section 8, Clause 2 gives Congress the power " \([t]\) ] borrow Money on the credit of the United States." There are no constitutional limits on the amount of money Congress may borrow, and no restriction on the purposes for borrowing.

The Treasury does the actual borrowing. Usually, it issues Treasury Notes (T-bills) for short-term borrowing and bonds for longterm purposes. Those securities are promissory notes, for which the government agrees to pay investors a certain sum plus interest on a certain date.

Congress has put a statutory ceiling on the public debt, however. The public debt is all of the money borrowed by the Federal Government over the years and not yet repaid, plus the accumulated interest on that money. That legal ceiling has never amounted to much more than a political gesture, however. Congress regularly raises the limit whenever the debt threatens to overtake it. The public debt now exceeds \($ 10\) trillion.

For decades, the Federal Government has practiced deficit financing. That is, it regularly spends more than it takes in each year and then borrows to make up the difference. Thus, the government has relied on deficit financing, on borrowing, to deal with the economic Depression of the 1930s, to meet

2 Differentiate Ask students how the designs of coins and bills have changed in recent years. Show an example of a newly designed five dollar bill or State quarter. Ask students to do research and make a poster explaining the changes to the new currency and reasons for those changes. They may find these Web sites helpful:
www.bep.treas.gov
www.moneyfactory.gov
www.usmint.gov
L4 Differentiate Ask students to investigate Gibbons v. Ogden and United States v. Lopez to see how the Court's interpretation of the Commerce Clause and the purpose of the laws in question shaped its opinion. Have students summarize this information and explain why they agree or disagree with the Court's decision.

L4 Differentiate Have students write a position paper addressing the borrowing power of Congress. They should answer this question: Should there be a limit on the borrowing power of Congress? Why or why not?

\section*{Government \\ Online}

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 11 A, Debt Limit, when you discuss the statutory ceiling Congress places on the public debt. This cartoon depicts Congress increasing the debt limit. Ask: Is there any limit on the amount of money the Federal Government may borrow? (There is no constitutional limit, but Congress puts a statutory ceiling on the public debt.) What is Congress doing in the cartoon? (extending the debt limit) What detail in the cartoon suggests Congress's attitude toward this action? (The musical notes above the man's head suggest that Congress takes this action lightly, as if it created no problem.) Why do the children compare themselves to Santa Claus? (The children represent the next generation who will have to fill the stocking, or pay for the huge public debt.)

\section*{Answers}

Federal Spending The yellow categories represent benefits for the general public, such as social programs. These programs did not exist in 1800 and 1900.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour about bankruptcy.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 68)

L2Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 69)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

What Is Personal Bankruptcy? to apply bankruptcy rules uniformly across the country

\section*{What Is Personal Bankruptcy?}

Regulating bankruptcy is one of the expressed powers of Congress. Declaring bankruptcy is a legal process through which people who owe more money than they can pay are relieved of part or all of their debt. It cannot be used for certain debts, including mortgages and taxes, but it can be used for medical expenses and other debts. Why is bankruptcy a function of the Federal Government?

\section*{Steps in Filing for Bankruptcy}

the extraordinary costs of World War II, and to pay for wars and social programs over the decades since then.

In fact, the government's books showed a deficit in all but seven years from 1930 to 1969. And they were in the red every year from 1969 to 1998. As a result, the public debt climbed to more than \($ 5.5\) trillion at the beginning of fiscal year 1998.

A concerted effort by a Republicancontrolled Congress and President Bill Clinton did curb the soaring debt. In fact, it produced four straight years of budget surpluses from 1998 to 2002.

Deficits are once again the order of the day, however. The Treasury has reported a deficit for every fiscal year since 2002. The shortfall topped \($ 450\) billion in 2008-as you will see when we return to this whole matter of government finance in Chapter 16.

\section*{The Bankruptcy Power}

Article I, Section 8, Clause 4 gives Congress the power " \([t]\) o establish . . . uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States." A bankrupt individual or company or other organization is one a court has found to be insolvent-that is, unable to pay debts in full. Bankruptcy is the legal proceeding in which the bankrupt's assets however much or little they may be-are distributed among those to whom a debt is owed. That proceeding frees the bankrupt from legal responsibility for debts acquired before bankruptcy.

The States and the National Government have concurrent power to regulate bankruptcy. Today, however, federal bankruptcy law is so broad that it all but excludes the States. Nearly all bankruptcy cases are heard now in federal district courts.

\section*{The Currency Power}

Article I, Section 8, Clause 5 gives Congress the power " \(t \mathrm{t}]\) o coin Money [and] regulate the Value thereof." The States are expressly denied that power. \({ }^{3}\)

3 Article I, Section 10, Clause 1 forbids the States the power to coin money, issue bills of credit (paper money), or make anything but gold and silver legal tender consequences of bankruptcy Display Transparency 11B, Bankruptcy. Personal bankruptcy offers a fresh start for people with severe financial problems. However, point out to students that bankruptcy is not a step to be taken lightly. It carries significant consequences. If they file for bankruptcy, they may have to give up most of their possessions. Also, not all debts are discharged. They would still have to pay student loans, child support, and taxes. Their credit report would show the bankruptcy for up to ten years, seriously limiting their ability to get a loan or credit card. They may have to buy with cash only, which could put large purchases, such as a car, out of their reach. If they are able to obtain credit, the rates and fees would be very high. As a credit risk, they would have difficulty finding a landlord who would rent an apartment to them.

\section*{Background}

Until the Revolution, the English money system, built on the shilling and the pound, was in general use in the colonies. With independence, that stable currency system collapsed. The Second Continental Congress and then the Congress under the Articles issued paper money. Without sound backing, and with no taxing power behind it, however, the money was practically worthless. Each of the 13 States also issued its own currency. Adding to the confusion, people still used English coins, and Spanish money circulated freely in the southern States.

Nearly all the Framers agreed on the need for a single, national system of "hard" money. So the Constitution gave the currency power to Congress, and it all but excluded the States from that field. Currency is money in any form when it is in use as a medium of exchange. From 1789 on, among the most important of all of the many tasks performed by the Federal Government has been that of providing the nation with a uniform, stable monetary system.

From the beginning, the U.S. has issued coins in gold, silver, and other metals. Congress chartered the first Bank of the United States in 1791 and gave it the power to issue bank notes-that is, paper money. Those notes were not legal tender, however. Legal tender is any kind of money that a creditor must by law accept in payment for debts.

Congress did not create a national paper currency, and make it legal tender, until 1862. Its new national notes, known as Greenbacks, had to compete with other paper currencies already in the marketplace. Although the States could not issue paper money themselves, State governments could and did charter (license) private banks, whose notes did circulate as money. When those private bank notes interfered with the new national currency, Congress (in 1865) laid a ten percent tax on their production. The private bank notes soon disappeared. The Supreme Court upheld the 1865 law as a proper exercise of the taxing power in Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 1869.

At first, the Greenbacks could not be redeemed for gold or silver. Their worth fell to less than half their face value on the open market. Then, in 1870, the Supreme Court held their issuance to be unconstitutional. In Hepburn v. Griswold it said "to coin" meant to stamp metal and so the Constitution did not authorize the National Government to issue paper money.

The Court soon changed its mind, however, in the Legal Tender Cases in 1871 and again in Juliard v. Greenman in 1884. In both cases, it held the issuing of paper money as legal tender to be a proper use of the currency power. The Court also declared this a power properly implied from both the borrowing and the war powers.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
How did Congress stop private bank notes from interfering with the national currency?

\section*{creditor}
n. person to whom money is owed

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{gathered}\text { To continue to build a } \\ \text { response to the chapte }\end{gathered}\)}

Journal
Essential Question, go to your
Essential Questions Journal
1. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer this question: What powers over money and commerce does the Constitution give to Congress and what limits does it put on these powers?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Explain the difference between the expressed powers and the implied powers.
3. What is the commerce power and why is it important?

Critical Thinking
4. Make Decisions Based on your un derstanding of the commerce power, explain whether Congress has the power to regulate the Internet.
5. Draw Inferences Why did the Framers place limits on the power of Congress to levy taxes?
6. Express Problems Clearly Why did the Framers explicitly grant the powers of currency, borrowing, and bankruptcy to Congress?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Gather Evidence Choose one power of Con gress described in this section. Then list the pros and cons of Congress exercising that power. Use your list to help you form an opinion on whether Congress has taken use of that power too far or not far enough.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the differences \\ among the delegated powers \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the graphic describing \\ inherent, expressed, and implied \\ powers. Have students give an \\ example of each type of power. \\ Examples should be different from \\ those given in the textbook.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying the long-term \\ importance of Giibbons v. \\
Ogden and McCulloch v. \\
Maryland
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Teach students to ask themselves: \\
"How did things change after this \\ event/decision/development?"
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The need for limits on the \\ money and commerce powers \\ of Congress (Questions 1, 3, \\ 4, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Discuss: What might happen if \\
Congress did not have these limits?
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It laid a ten percent tax on private bank notes.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Commerce: must be exercised in accordance with other constitutional limitations; can't tax exports; can't favor the ports of one State over another; can't require that vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another State; could not interfere in the slave trade until 1808
Tax: can't conflict with any other constitutional provision; must tax only for public purposes; may not tax exports; direct taxes must be apportioned among the States according to population; indirect taxes must be levied at same rate
Power to borrow: no specific limitations
Bankruptcy: no limits
Currency: no limits
2. those stated in Constitution; those that can reasonably be deduced from the expressed powers
3. Congress can regulate foreign and interstate trade. It has been the basis for expanding the powers of Congress.
4. The broad definition of commerce given since Gibbons v. Ogden might allow Congress to regulate the Internet.
5. The Framers were concerned about a Congress that might use the taxing power unfairly.
6. The National Government needed the currency and borrowing powers to ensure a stable national currency. They needed the bankruptcy power to create uniform laws for all debtors seeking bankruptcy protection.
QUICK WRITE Students' lists should relate correctly to the powers of Congress they selected.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How do the expressed powers reflect the Framers' commitment to creating a strong but limited National Government?
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Powers of Congress } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Foreign Policy } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Domestic Policy } \\
\hline - From inherent powers as & - Naturalization laws \\ sovereign nation in matters & - Copyrights and patents \\ affecting national security & - Post offices \\
- Shares power with President & - Establishes crimes based on \\
- Can declare war \\
- Can raise and maintain military & - Fixes standards of weights and \\ forces & measures \\
- Can grant letters of marque & - Acquires, manages, and \\ and reprisal \\
- Wisposes of federal areas \\
& - Eminent domain \\
& - Can admit tew States \\
& - Creates federal courts below \\
& Supreme Court \\
& - Defines federal crimes and sets \\
& punishments \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- examine the division of war powers by analyzing a primary source document.
- evaluate the expressed powers of Congress by determining which powers they feel are most important.
- examine the domestic powers by using photographs illustrating each power.

\section*{section 2}

\section*{The Other \\ Expressed Powers}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How do the expressed powers reflect the Framers' commitmen to creating a strong but limited National Government? Use a table to organize information about the expressed powers of Congress.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Powers of Congress } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Foreign Policy } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Domestic Policy } \\
\hline\(\bullet\) & • Naturalization laws \\ \(\bullet\) & \\
\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- copyright - eminent
- patent domain
- territory - naturalization

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify the key sources of the foreign relations powers of Congress.
2. Describe the power-sharing arrangement between Congress and the President on the issues of war and national defense.
3. List other key domestic powers exercised by Congress.

Image Above: Congress has the expressed power to establish post offices and maintain post roads.

We have just reviewed the several expressed powers that Congress has with regard to money and to foreign and interstate commerce. The Constitution gives Congress a number of other-and very important-expressed powers, and they are the focus of this section.

\section*{Congress and Foreign Policy}

The Federal Government has greater powers in the field of foreign affairs than it does in any other area of public policy. The 50 States that comprise the Union are not sovereign, so they have no standing in international law. In short, the Constitution does not allow them to take part in foreign relations. \({ }^{4}\)

The Constitution gives the President primary responsibility for the conduct of American foreign policy. As the Supreme Court stated in United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp. in 1936, the chief executive is "the sole organ of the Federal Government in the field of international relations."

Still, the Constitution does give Congress a significant place in the field of foreign affairs. Its authority in that area arises from two sources: (1) from a number of the expressed powers, most especially the spending power, the power to regulate foreign commerce, and the war powers; and (2) from the fact that the United States is a sovereign state in the world community. As the lawmaking body of the sovereign United States, Congress has the inherent power to act on matters affecting the security of the nation-for example, the regulation of immigration and the enactment of measures to combat terrorism here and abroad. We shall return to this vitally important subject-foreign policy-in Chapter 17.

\section*{The War Powers}

Six of the 27 expressed powers set out in Article I, Section 8 deal explicitly with the subject of war and national defense. \({ }^{5}\) Remember that here, too,

4 See Article I, Section 10, Clauses 1 and 3 .
5 The war powers of Congress are contained in Clauses 11 through 16

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

To practice drawing inferences and conclusions in this section, use the Chapter 11 Skills Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 77). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after this lesson's class discussion about downloading from the Internet. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 78).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Congress derives its foreign affairs powers from the expressed powers and from its position as the lawmaking body of a sovereign nation. - Congress shares power with the President in the areas of defense and foreign affairs. - Congress regulates the postal system, copyrights, patents, and weights and measures. - Congress has the power to acquire and manage federal territories, to oversee naturalization laws, and to create federal courts.
CONCEPTS: balance of power, enumerated powers, checks and balances
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Some expressed powers of Congress serve to check the powers of the President and the courts. - The fact that the States do not have any powers in the field of foreign affairs is a reflection of the federal system. - The domestic powers of Congress have a direct impact on the daily lives of all Americans.

Congress shares power with the chief executive. The Constitution makes the President commander in chief of the nation's armed forces, \({ }^{6}\) and, as such, the President dominates the field.

The congressional war powers are, however, both extensive and substantial. Only Congress can declare war. It alone has the power to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to make rules for the governing of the nation's military forces. Congress also has the power to provide for "calling forth the Militia" (today, the National Guard), and for the organizing, arming, and disciplining of that force. And Congress is also given the power to grant letters of marque and reprisal, \({ }^{7}\) and to make rules concerning captures on land and water.

6 Article II, Section 2, Clause 1.

We shall return to the war powers in Chapter 14 and there consider, at some length, this question: Does the Constitution give the President the power to make war in the absence of a declaration of war by Congress? Many argue that it does not, but more than 200 years of American history argue otherwise. Indeed, most Presidents have used the armed forces of the United States abroad, in combat, without a congressional declaration of war.

\footnotetext{
7 A few of the expressed powers are of little importance today Thus, Congress has the power to grant letters of marque and reprisal (Article I, Section 8, Clause 11), and the States are denied the power to issue them (Article I, Section 10, Clause
1). Letters of marque and reprisal are written grants of power 1). Letters of marque and reprisal are written grants of power authorizing private persons to outfit vessels to capture and authorizing private persons to outfit vessels to capture and destroy enemy vessels in time of war. In effect, they authorize forbidden in internationa law by the Declaration of Paris 1856, and the United States honors the rule.
}

Checkpoint What war powers does Congress have?

\section*{The Expressed Powers of Congress}

Why These Powers?
Of all the many powers the Framers could have granted to Congress, why did they choose these? In the Federalist Papers, James Madison answered this question by grouping the enumerated powers into the five categories below. Only Clause 9, bestowing the power to create courts inferior to the Supreme Court was not included. Which of these powers do you think is most important? Explain.

Maintenance of harmony and proper intercourse among the States:
Clause 3 regulate commerce among the several States and the Indian tribes Clause 4 establish a uniform rule of naturalization and uniform laws of bankruptcy Clause 5 coin money, regulate the value of domestic and foreign coin, fix the standard of weights and measures Clause 6 provide for the punishment of counterfeiting Clause 7 establish post offices and post roads

\section*{Miscellaneous} objects of general utility:
Clause 8 establish patent and copyright laws Clause 17 legislate for the seat of the federal capital and other federal territories

The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects, principaniy on external odjects, . . .
— James Madison, The Federalist No. 45

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 11, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 70)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 72)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 74)
L3 Core Worksheets A and B (pp. 75, 76)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 77)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 78)
L3 Quiz A (p. 79)
L2 Quiz B (p. 80)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 70) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 72)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet, which is an excerpt from the U.S. declaration of war on Germany in 1917.
L2 Differentiate Define the word resolved (decided) on the board. Add these scaffolding questions before students answer the questions on the transparency:
What group of people declared war? (Hint: Look after the words "Resolved by.") Who was given permission to carry out the war?

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentation at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS THE BELLRINGER}

Discuss students' answers to the Bellringer questions. (The excerpt suggests that the President implements war, but this power is balanced by Congress's power to authorize the use of resources for war.) Make sure they understand that the Framers granted Congress the power to declare war to prevent the President from gaining too much power. Tell them that they will read more about the role of Congress in the conduct of war in "Issues of Our Time" in this chapter.
L4 Differentiate Challenge students to describe other examples of Congress working with or against the President in carrying out its war powers.

\section*{IDENTIFY THE WAR POWERS}

Have students list the war powers of Congress and the President, including the provisions of the War Powers Resolution. Then ask them to use the textbook to answer this question: What limits are placed on the President's war powers? (Only Congress can formally declare war and raise and maintain military forces. The President can use military forces in response to an attack, but must then report to Congress within 48 hours. The military commitment ends in 60 days unless Congress extends it.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint declare war; raise and support armies, provide and maintain a navy; make rules for the governing of the nation's military forces; call forth and organize, arm, and discipline the militia (National Guard).
The Expressed Powers of Congress Students should support their answers with evidence.

\section*{CHECK COMPREHENSION}

Have students list an example of an action that Congress might take under each of the following powers: foreign affairs; war; postal; copyrights and patents; weights and measures; territories; naturalization; and judicial. Then ask students to trade papers with a partner. Did their partner choose different examples? If so, have students jot down those examples as well. Have students continue to trade papers with different students until they have two or three examples for each power.
L2 Differentiate Photocopy and distribute the pages of Section 2. Have students underline, highlight, or circle one or two examples of actions Congress might take using each expressed power. Then ask students to think of laws that Congress might pass using these powers. For example, for the naturalization power, Congress might pass a law changing the requirements for citizenship.

\section*{How Government Works \\ How does copyright law affect me?}

The Internet makes sharing information easier than ever, but laws regulate what information can or cannot be shared freely. Copyright protection may be inconvenient for those who want music or other content for free, but it is im-

Ryan suggests they record an album of cover songs and distribute it for free. WARN distribute it for free. WARN ING: The band could lose its case if sued in court for copyrigh infringement. If they record curinfringement if hey record current songs, some people might download their version instead of buying it That would take money from the original artist or copyright holder.

In today's world, no one can doubt that the President must have the power to respond, rapidly and effectively, to any threat to the nation's security. Still, many people have long warned of the dangers inherent in a presidential power to involve the country in undeclared wars.

Again, we shall revisit this matter in Chapter 14. But here, in the context of the war powers of Congress, we must examine the War Powers Resolution, a statute enacted by Congress in 1973.

The war-making power as it was exercised by Presidents Johnson and Nixon during the undeclared war in Vietnam (1964-1973) moved Congress to enact the War Powers Resolution. That law provides that the chief executive can commit American military forces to combat abroad only (1) if Congress has declared war or (2) when Congress has specifically authorized a military action or (3) when an attack on the United States or any of its armed forces has occurred.

If troops are ordered into combat in the third circumstance, the President is directed to report that fact to Congress within 48 hours. Any such commitment of military forces must end within 60 days, unless Congress agrees to a longer involvement. And Congress can end a commitment at any time.

The constitutionality of the War Powers Resolution remains in dispute. A determination of the question must await a situation in which Congress demands that its provisions be obeyed but the President refuses to do so.

\section*{Domestic Powers}

The other expressed powers relate to domestic matters. Each of them has a direct and a considerable effect on the daily lives of the American people.

Copyrights and Patents The Constitution gives Congress the power

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries.
-Article I, Section 8, Clause 8

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 11C, Iraq War Funding Bill, when you discuss students' answers to the Bellringer activity. Explain to students that "timetable" in this cartoon refers to a plan for withdrawing troops from Iraq over a stated time period. Ask: Whom do the characters represent? (President George W. Bush and the Democrat-controlled Congress) What is about to happen? (The President and Congress are about to collide over funding the war in Iraq.) What does the President want? (funding without strings, or conditions) What "string" does Congress want to put on war funding? (a timetable for the withdrawal of troops) How does this cartoon illustrate checks and balances in the exercise of war powers? (Congress can use its power of the purse to limit the President's ability to wage war. The President can use veto power to block a war funding bill that contains unwanted restrictions.)

A copyright is the exclusive right of an author to reproduce, publish, and sell his or her creative work. That right may be assignedtransferred by contract-to another, as to a publishing firm by mutual agreement between the author and the other party.

Copyrights are registered by the Copyright Office in the Library of Congress. Under present law, they are good for the life of the author plus 70 years. They cover a wide range of creative efforts: books, magazines, newspapers, musical compositions and lyrics, dramatic works, paintings, sculptures, cartoons, maps, photographs, motion pictures, sound recordings, and much more. \({ }^{8}\) The Office registers more than 500,000 copyrights each year.

The Copyright Office does not enforce the protections of a copyright. If the holder thinks a copyright has been violated, he or she may bring a suit for damages in the federal courts.

A patent grants a person the sole right to manufacture, use, or sell "any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof." A patent is good for up to 20 years. The term of a patent may be extended only by a special act of Congress. The Patent and Trademark Office in the Department of Commerce administers patent laws. \({ }^{9}\)

The Postal Powers Article I, Section 8, Clause 7 gives Congress the power " t\(]\) ] establish Post Offices and Post roads"-in effect, the power to provide for the carrying of the mail. "Post roads" are all postal routes, including rail lines, airways, and waters within the United States, during the time mail is being carried on them.

Carrying the mail is among the oldest of all governmental functions. Its origins date back at least to Egyptian practice before

\footnotetext{
8 Not all publications can be protected by copyright. Thus, the Supreme Court has held that such "factual compilations" as telephone directories "lack the requisite originality" for copyright protection Service Co., 1991)
9 The power to protect trademarks is an implied power drawn from the commerce power. A trademark is some distinctive from the commerce power. A trademark is some distinctive word, name, symbol, or device used by a manufacturer or word, name, symbol, or device used by a manufacturer or merchant to identify his goods or services and distinguish them from those made or sold by others. A trademark need not be original, merely distinctive. The registration of a trademark carries the right to its exclusive use in interstate commerce for 10 years. The right may be renewed an unlimited number of times.
}

Checkpoint Who enforces copyrights?

\section*{How Government Works}

FAIR USE The fair-use rule allows the limited use of someone's creative work without asking for permission from the copyright holder. Point out to students that they must always cite their sources. However, citing sources is not enough. They still must follow fair-use guidelines. The guidelines continue to evolve as the courts apply the four factors to specific cases. Generally, the courts have allowed teachers and students to copy small amounts of copyrighted material for educational purposes, without obtaining permission. However, they may not sell the materials. Students may use quotations in their papers without requesting permission. The amount of lifted material matters, however. The courts are more likely to allow the use of 20 words from a 500 -page book than 20 words from a 40 -word poem. Advise students to use common sense: Does their use seem fair or like stealing?

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET A}

Tell students that today they will look closely at the powers of Congress and rank them according to their importance. Point out that some of the expressed powers are very important, yet controversial, while others, though important for the nation to run smoothly, are not at all controversial. Divide students into groups of two or three and distribute the Chapter 11 Section 2 Core Worksheet A (Unit 3 All-inOne, p. 75), which asks students to rank the top ten expressed powers of Congress. Remind them to use the chart "The Expressed Powers of Congress: Why These Powers?" which summarizes the powers.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B}

After students have completed Core Worksheet A, distribute the Chapter 11 Section 2 Core Worksheet B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 76), which asks students to compare their lists to those of other groups. They should rotate around the room, looking for students whose lists differ from their own to answer the questions. Finish the class by discussing students' answers on the Core Worksheets.

2 ELL Differentiate Pair ELLs with partners to complete Core Worksheet B.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint If the copyright holder thinks a copyright has been violated, he or she may sue for damages in the federal courts.

\section*{CREATE A PHOTO ESSAY}

Challenge students to take or find five photographs, each relating to a different domestic power of Congress discussed in the section. Display all photos and have the students explain how each of their photos relates to a domestic power of Congress. If students cannot access a digital camera, they can cut photographs from magazines and newspapers.

L4Differentiate Have students research congressional and presidential speeches, news articles on laws passed by Congress, and other primary sources to find quotations to pair with their photographs. The quotations can be attached to the photos.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON} Differentiate Have students create a radio news segment on a fictional copyright or patent infringement case, including interviews with both sides in the case.
L4 Differentiate Ask students to read and analyze one of The Federalist essays about the powers granted to Congress (No. 41, 43, 43, or 45). They should make an outline of Madison's arguments and then make a list of possible rebuttals to those arguments.

\section*{L2 Differentiate Have students find and copy into} their notebooks the sentences in the section that explain the checks and balances system at work in the areas of war powers and judicial powers.

L4Differentiate Have students create a board game called "Power." The game should include rewards for the constitutional use of congressional power and penalties for unconstitutional use. Players can be real or fictional members of Congress. Game pieces might include cards describing various scenarios, and a board with steps leading to the capture of the prize, which might be the recognition of the player as an "expert on congressional power" and an invitation to appear on a panel discussion. These are suggestions only.

Differentiate Have students write a letter from a former President to a member of Congress. The letter should express the President's views on the division of the war-making power between the two branches. It should include a summary of the war powers of the President and those of Congress and a discussion of the War Powers Resolution. The letter should indicate whether the division of power is appropriate and necessary.

L3
Differentiate Have students research a recent copyright or patent infringement case and create a graphic organizer in which they show the main facts, players, and outcome of the case.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Congress legislates for Washington, D.C., but the Capitol has no voting representative or senator.

4000 в.с. The first post office in America was established in Boston in 1639, by the General Court of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. The first successful postal system in the colonies, the Penn Post, was begun by William Penn in 1683. He established a post office in Philadelphia and provided a regular weekly service along a thirty-mile route from there to New Castle, Delaware.

The United States Postal Service traces its history back to the early colonial period. The remarkable Benjamin Franklin is generally recognized as the father of the presentday postal system. He served as Co-Deputy Postmaster of the British Colonies in North America from 1753 to 1774 , when the British removed him from office because of his political activities. In 1775, he became, by unanimous choice of the Second Continental Congress, the first Postmaster General of the United States.

Today, the Postal Service functions as an independent agency in the executive branch. It serves the nation through some 37,000 post offices. The nearly 700,000 career employees of the Postal Service handle more than 200 billion pieces of mail every year.

Congress has established a number of crimes based on the postal power. It is, for example, a federal crime for anyone to obstruct the mails or to use the mails to commit any criminal act. It has also prohibited the mailing of many items, among them poisons, explosives, intoxicating liquors, some live animals, libelous or obscene matter, lottery tickets, and any articles dangerous to the mails or postal workers. Any article prohibited by a State's laws-for example, switchblade knives or firecrackers-cannot be sent into that State by mail.

The States and their local governments cannot interfere with the mails in any unreasonable way. Nor can they require licenses for Postal Service vehicles, tax the gas they use, or tax post offices or any other property of the United States Postal Service

Territories and Other Areas In two places-in Article I, Section 8, Clause 17 and in Article IV, Section 3, Clause 2the Constitution delegates to Congress the power to acquire, manage, and dispose of various federal areas. That power relates to the District of Columbia and to the several federal territories, parts of the United States that are not admitted as States and that have their own systems of government, including Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands. It also covers hundreds of military and naval installations, arsenals, dockyards, post offices, prisons, parks and forest preserves, and many other federal holdings.

The Federal Government may acquire property by purchase or gift. It may also do so through the exercise of the power of eminent domain, the inherent power to take private property for public use. Notice that the Taking Clause in the 5th Amendment restricts the Federal Government's use of the power with these words: "nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation." Private property may be taken

\section*{Background}

EMINENT DOMAIN Governments have long used eminent domain to obtain property for public works, such as a highway or power plant. But could your local government take your home to make way for a shopping center? Quite possibly! The government of New London, Connecticut, was looking for a way to revitalize the city's sagging economy. A developer presented a plan to build a hotel and conference center in the city's Fort Trumbull neighborhood. The new complex would create jobs and yield greater tax revenue than did the modest homes in the area, so the city agreed to take the homeowners' property by eminent domain. A group of homeowners sued, arguing that seizing property to sell to private developers was not public use. In Kelo v. City of New London, 2005, the Supreme Court ruled for the city, interpreting "public use" broadly to mean a "public purpose," such as economic development.
by eminent domain only (1) for a public use, (2) with proper notice to the owner, and (3) for a fair price. What in fact constitutes a public use, proper notice, or a fair price often becomes a matter for courts to decide.

Territory may also be acquired from a foreign state as the result of the exercise of the power of Congress to admit new States (in Article IV), the war powers, or the President's treaty-making power (in Article II). Under international law, any sovereign state may acquire unclaimed territory by discovery.

Weights and Measures Article I, Section 8, Clause 5 gives Congress the power to "fix the Standard of Weights and Measures" throughout the United States. The power reflects the absolute need for accurate, uniform gauges of time, distance, area, weight, volume, and the like.

In 1838, Congress set the English system of pound, ounce, mile, foot, gallon, quart, and so on, as the legal standards of weights and measures in this country. In 1866, Congress also legalized the use of the metric system of gram, meter, kilometer, liter, and so on.

In 1901, Congress created the National Bureau of Standards in the Commerce Department. Now known as the National Institute of Standards and Technology, the agency keeps the original standards for the United States. It is these standards by which all other measures in the United States are tested and corrected.

Naturalization Citizens of one country become citizens of another through a process called naturalization. Article I, Section 8, Clause 4 gives Congress the exclusive power " t ]o establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization." Today, the nation's population includes more than 14 million naturalized citizens.

Judicial Powers As a part of the system of checks and balances, the Constitution gives Congress several judicial powers. Thus, it has the power to create all of the federal courts below the Supreme Court and otherwise provide for the organization and composition of the federal judiciary. The federal court system is treated at length in Chapter 18.

Congress also has the power to define federal crimes and set the punishments that may be imposed on those who violate federal law. The Constitution mentions only four. Three are found in Article I, Section 8: counterfeiting, piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against international law. Treason is listed in Article III, Section 3. But, as you will see, Congress has used its implied powers to establish more than 100 other federal crimes.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What restrictions does the Constitution place on the exercise of eminent domain?
\begin{tabular}{|cc|}
\hline Essential Questions & \begin{tabular}{l}
To continue to build a \\
response to the chapter
\end{tabular} \\
Escournal & \begin{tabular}{l}
Essential Question, go to your \\
Essential Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer this question: How do the expressed powers reflect the Framers' commitment to creating a strong but limited National Government?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Explain how Congress and the President share power in foreign policy and defense.
3. How does a copyright differ from a patent?
4. What judicial powers does Congress have?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Predict Consequences How might the foreign policy of the United States be different if the Constitution had not forbidden the individual States from making treaties or alliances with foreign powers?
6. Draw Conclusions Some people believe that the U.S. Postal Service should be abolished because its functions could be performed more efficiently by for-profit mail companies. Do you agree? Explain.

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Identify Your Audience Think about who you would like to persuade to share your point of view about the power of Congress that you selected in Section 1 For example, a group of students may be interested in how Congress affects education. Make a list of the strongest evidence to persuade your audience that Congress has used that power too little or too much.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students work
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 79)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 80)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding how the \\ foreign affairs powers \\ of Congress are limited \\
(Questions 1, 2, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have them list the President's foreign \\ affairs powers in one column and the \\ powers of Congress in another
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Recognizing the im- \\ portance of the postal, \\ copyright, or weights and \\ measures powers \\
(Questions 3, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have them write a scenario in which \\ these matters operate without govern- \\ ment control
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The judicial powers of \\
Congress (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Provide specific questions relating to \\ these powers and direct students to the \\ appropriate subsection to answer those \\ questions
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Property can be taken only for a public use, with proper notice to the owner, and for a fair price.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Framers gave Congress important powers, but imposed limits on those powers.
2. The President is the commander in chief and has primary responsibility for foreign policy. Only Congress can declare war, but the President can deploy the military in response to an attack on U.S. interests. The President must report to Congress and must end military involvement unless Congress agrees to extend it.
3. A copyright protects creative works, such as art, music, and literature. A patent protects inventions, such as a new machine.
4. to create federal courts below the Supreme Court; to define federal crimes and punishments
5. If every State had a different foreign policy, the U.S. would have been less of a nation and more of a confederation of States, each pursuing its own goals. The Union might not have held together.
6. Possible responses: I agree, because competition among carriers might lead to lower rates. I disagree, because businesses might not find it profitable to deliver mail to thinly populated areas, leaving people in some parts of the country without service or force them to pay higher rates.
QUICK WRITE Evidence students list should be appropriate for their chosen audience.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will discuss the significance of the Court's decision in McCulloch v. Maryland on the power of the National Government.

\section*{Teach}

Have students read the feature as homework or at the beginning of class.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE CONTENT}

The decision in McCulloch v. Maryland is important because it established the meaning of the Necessary and Proper Clause-the Elastic Clause-of the Constitution. The Court authorized a broad reading of the Constitution that has allowed Congress to pass laws relating to issues not specifically mentioned in the Constitution. In other words, the ruling confirmed the existence of implied powers.

\section*{ESTABLISH THE FACTS}

Have students work in pairs to sequence the main events in the case (not the events on the bottom of the page). The events are:
1. Congress charters the Second Bank of the United States.
2. A branch opens in Baltimore.
3. Maryland levies a tax on the bank.
4. McCulloch refuses to pay.
5. The case goes to the Maryland court, which rules in the State's favor.
6. The case is appealed to the Supreme Court.

\section*{What Are the Limits on the Implied Powers of Congress?}

Since the nation's founding, Americans have disagreed about the extent of the powers delegated to Congress. The Constitution had barely come into force when the meaning of the Necessary and Proper Clause was called into question.
\[
\begin{aligned}
& \text { In 1791, Congress established the Bank of the United States, despite objections } \\
& \text { from those who insisted that the Constitution did not give Congress the power to } \\
& \text { do so. Practical necessity carried the day, but the Bank's charter expired in 1811. } \\
& \text { In 1816, Congress created the Second Bank of the United States after yet another } \\
& \text { hard-fought battle over the extent of the powers of Congress. } \\
& \text { In both instances, those who favored a stronger national government argued } \\ & \text { that a national bank was needed to stabilize the country's financial system. They also } \\ & \text { argued that its creation was clearly related to the taxing, borrowing, commerce, and } \\
& \text { currency powers. Opposing that view, those who favored a smaller national govern- } \\
& \text { ment said Congress had no authority to establish a national bank. } \\
& \text { In 1818, the Maryland legislature placed a tax on all notes issued by any bank } \\
& \text { not chartered by Maryland law. James McCulloch, an officer of the Baltimore branch } \\
& \text { of that bank, issued notes on which the tax had not been paid. The Maryland courts } \\
& \text { upheld the State's power to tax the Bank, but the United States, acting for McCulloch, } \\
& \text { appealed that decision to the Supreme Court. } \\
& \text { Chief Justice ohn Marshall, quite aware of the great importance of the Courts's } \\ & \text { decision in the case, declared: }
\end{aligned}
\]

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

To teach the skill of analyzing political cartoons, have students read Analyze Political Cartoons in the Skills Handbook, p. S22. Then have them work the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (All-in-One, p. 100).

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}
on taxing the bank One key question in McCulloch v. Maryland was whether the constitutional power of the States to tax included the power to tax the National Bank. In the opinion, Chief Justice John Marshall stated that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." He went on to explain: "If the States may tax one instrument, employed by the Government in the execution of its powers, they may tax any and every other instrument. They may tax the mail; they may tax the mint; they may tax patent rights; they may tax the papers of the custom house; they may tax judicial process; they may tax all the means employed by the Government to an excess which would defeat all the ends of Government. This was not intended by the American people. They did not design to make their Government dependent on the States."
"The conflicting powers of the government of the Union ... are to be discussed; and an opinion given, which may essentially influence the great operations of the government. No tribunal can approach such a question without a deep sense of its importance, and of the awful responsibility involved in its decision. But it must be decided peacefully, or remain a source of hostile legislation, perhaps of hostility of a still more serious nature; . . .

In one of its most important decisions, the Court unanimously reversed the Maryland courts, upholding the concept of implied powers. It held that the Constitution need not expressly empower Congress to create a bank. The creation of the Second Bank of the United States, said the Court, was "necessary and proper" to the execution of the taxing, borrowing, currency, and commerce powers.

As to the question of whether Maryland had the right to tax the Bank, the Court said, "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." If States had the power to tax the Federal Government, they could destroy it. This was not, said the Court, the intention of the people when they ratified the Constitution.

\section*{Arguments for Maryland}
- The Constitution gives the Federal Government no right to establish a bank.
- The power to establish banks is therefore reserved to the States.
- States are sovereign and may tax any bank within their borders.

\section*{Arguments for McCulloch and the National Bank}
- The Necessary and Proper Clause gives Congress the right to do what is necessary to carry out its expressed powers.
No State can lawfully tax any agency of the Federal Government.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}
on executing expressed powers The opinion written by Chief Justice John Marshall in McCullough v. Maryland broadened the scope of federal power. The Court concluded that the Constitution's expressed powers naturally included the implied powers to carry them out. "Although, among the enumerated powers of Government, we do not find the word 'bank' or 'incorporation,' we find the great powers, to lay and collect taxes; to borrow money; to regulate commerce; to declare and conduct a war; and to raise and support armies and navies. . . . But it may with great reason be contended that a Government entrusted with such ample powers, on the due execution of which the happiness and prosperity of the Nation so vitally depends, must also be entrusted with ample means for their execution. The power being given, it is the interest of the Nation to facilitate its execution."

\section*{DISCUSS}

Ask students to summarize the arguments of the two sides in McCulloch and remind them that the Court found in favor of McCulloch. Then ask students to list ways in which society today differs from that of the Framers. You may discuss how the Internet, telephones, television, prescription drugs, and other important facets of today's life did not exist until recently. Ask: What would have happened if the National Government could only legislate based on what is specifically in the Constitution? (The National Government would likely still make laws regarding commerce, but might be limited in how they could regulate new developments, such as the Internet, television advertising, or prescription drugs.) Tell students that they will learn more about implied powers in the next section of the chapter.

ELL Differentiate Give students prompts, asking them describe how business and communications are different than in the past.

\section*{CONNECT TO THE ESSENTIAL QUESTION}

To end the discussion, ask students to consider the chapter Essential Question: What should be the limits on the powers of Congress? They may want to discuss how implied powers can and should be defined.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Assign the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 3 All-inOne, p. 100).
L2 Differentiate Assign the adapted Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 102).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students answer the Thinking Critically questions in the student edition

\section*{IN THE NEWS}

Point out to students that they can learn about more cases involving implied powers by visiting PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}
1. The act of Congress must be needed to carry out its expressed powers without violating any other provisions of the Constitution.
2. The decision shifted significant power to the Federal Government.

How has the doctrine of implied powers increased the powers of Congress?

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{The Implied Powers}

\section*{Construction}
- Broad interpretation of congressional powers
- Upheld in McCulloch v. Maryland
- Led to growth in national power
- Eliminated need for frequent amendment of Constitution to meet changing needs
- Based on expressed powers

\section*{Implied Powers}

Necessary and Proper Clause
- Congress may choose means for carrying out its expressed powers
- Stretched so much that it is called "Elastic Clause"

Expressed Powers
- Commerce interpreted to include almost all economic activity
- Congress may not pass law solely to promote general welfare
- War powers include defense and waging war
- Power to raise military grants implied power to conduct a draft

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- use the example of a teacher's powers in the classroom to consider the meaning of implied powers.
- explore strict and liberal construction by evaluating congressional actions.
- decide upon and defend a position on implied powers.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

To help students learn to make decisions, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S18, and use the information explained there to complete this lesson's Core Worksheet.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The Necessary and Proper Clause allows Congress to exercise powers not expressly defined in the Constitution. - The scope of implied powers remains a subject of debate. - Liberal constructionists believe that the Constitution should be interpreted loosely, allowing Congress to do many things not expressly stated. - Strict constructionists believe that Congress should have only those implied powers absolutely necessary to carry out its expressed powers.
CONCEPTS: limited government, implied powers
ENDURING UNDERSTANDING: - The concept of implied powers has been a major factor in the growth of the powers of Congress. - The Necessary and Proper Clause has helped avoid the need for frequent amendments to the Constitution.

Guiding Question
How has the doctrine of implied powers increased the powers of Congress? Use a chart to record information about the implied powers.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- Necessary and - libera
- strict constructionist
constructionist - consensus

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how the Necessary and Proper Clause gives Congress flexibility in lawmaking.
2. Compare the strict construction and liberal construction positions on the scope of congressional power.
3. Describe the ways in which the implied powers have been applied.

Image Above: Congress established the United States Border Patrol to guard the nation's borders.

What does the Constitution have to say about education? Nothing, not a word. Still, Congress provides tens of billions of dollars every year for the United States Department of Education to spend in a variety of ways throughout the country. Look around you. What indications of these federal dollars can you find in your school? If you attend a public school anywhere in the United States, that evidence should not be hard to spot.

How can this be? You know that Congress has only those powers delegated to it by the Constitution, and that document says nothing about education. The answer to that question lies in the central topic of this section: the implied powers of Congress.

\section*{The Necessary and Proper Clause}

Remember, the implied powers are those powers that are not set out in so many words in the Constitution but are, rather, implied by (drawn from) those that are. The constitutional basis for the existence of the implied powers is found in one of the expressed powers. The Necessary and Proper Clause, the final clause in the lengthy Section 8 of Article I in the Constitution, gives to Congress the expressed power

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.
-Article I, Section 8, Clause 18
Much of the vitality and adaptability of the Constitution can be traced directly to this provision, and even more so to the ways in which both Congress and the Supreme Court have interpreted and applied it over the years. In effect, the Necessary and Proper Clause allows Congress to choose the means "for carrying into Execution" the many powers given to it by the Constitution.

The manner in which Congress has viewed the concept, together with the supporting decisions of the Supreme Court, have made the final clause in Article I, Section 8, truly the "Elastic Clause." It has earned that name, for it has been stretched so far and made to cover so much over the years.

Strict Versus Liberal Construction The Constitution had barely come into force when the meaning of the Elastic Clause became the subject of one of the most important disputes in American political history. The Framers of the Constitution intended to create a new and stronger National Government. The ratification of their plan was opposed by many, and that opposition was not stilled by the adoption of the Constitution. Rather, the conflict between the Federalists and the AntiFederalists continued into the early years of the Republic. Much of that conflict centered on the powers of Congress and the meaning of the Elastic Clause. Just how broad, in fact, were those powers?

The strict constructionists, led by Thomas Jefferson, continued to argue the Anti-Federalist position from the ratification period. They insisted that Congress should be able to exercise (1) its expressed powers and (2) only those implied powers absolutely necessary to carry out those expressed powers. They maintained that the States should keep as much power as possible. They agreed with Jefferson that "that government is best which governs least."

Most of these Jeffersonians did acknowledge a need to protect interstate trade, and they recognized the need for a strong national defense. At the same time, they feared the consequences of a strong National Government. They believed, for instance, that the interests of the people of Connecticut were \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What was the argumen of the strict constructionists?

GOVERNMENT ONLINE

\section*{The Implied Powers of Congress}

Many of the laws Congress makes today stem from the Necessary and Proper Clause. The Framers could not have made provisions for every situation that might arise in the modern world. Without its implied powers, how effectively could Congress address new situations?

The expressed power to lay and collect taxes

The expressed power to borrow money

The expressed power to create naturalization law

The expressed power to raise armies and a navy

The expressed power to regulate commerce

The expressed power to establish post offices

Implies the power to:
- Punish tax evaders
- Regulate (license) some commodities (such as alcohol) and outlaw the use of others (such as narcotics) - Require States to meet certain conditions to qualify for federal funding

Implies the power to establish the Federal Reserve System of banks
Implies the power to regulate and limit immigration
Implies the power to draft Americans into the military

\section*{Implies the power to:}
- Establish a minimum wage
- Ban discrimination in workplaces and public facilities - Pass laws protecting the disabled - Regulate banking

Implies the power to:
- Prohibit mail fraud and obstruction of the mails - Bar the shipping of certain items through the mail

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 11, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 81)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 82)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 83)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 85)
L3 Quiz A (p. 87)
L2 Quiz B (p. 88)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 81) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 82)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: Teachers will maintain order in the classroom. (1) What does this mean?
(2) What would such a rule allow teachers to do? Give examples. (3) What would it not allow teachers to do? Give examples. (4) Why are there limits on a teacher's power? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW beLLRINGER ANSWERS}

Ask about ways in which teachers can maintain order in class. (using grading systems, calling parents, or sending students to the principal) Ask students if they can think of any strategies that fall into a gray area. (Some teachers might find ridiculing a disruptive student to be appropriate, while others might find that technique objectionable.)
L2 ELL Differentiate Clarify the word implied (not stated, but suggested or understood).

\section*{draw parallels with powers of congress}

Display Transparency 11D, Implied Powers of Congress. Ask: What provision of the Constitution allows Congress to take these actions? (Article I, Section 8, Clause 18 , known as the Necessary and Proper Clause) Why is this also called the Elastic Clause? (It has allowed Congress to stretch its powers to meet changing needs.) What limits the power of teachers to impose discipline? (laws, school rules, and community standards for acceptable behavior) How is this similar to the implied powers of Congress? (Congress, too, may do what is necessary and proper to carry out its duties as long as it respects the Constitution.)
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the implied powers of Congress.

\section*{Answers}

The Implied Powers of Congress Congress could not effectively address new situations.
Checkpoint that Congress should exercise its expressed powers and only those implied powers necessary to carry out the expressed powers

Differentiate Display Transparency 11E, Necessary and Proper Clause. Underline the words necessary and proper. Ask students to define them. (necessary: "needed "; proper: "correct") Point out that an action by Congress would not be "proper" if it violated any part of the Constitution.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 11 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 83). Tell students that they will look at some specific actions by Congress to identify the expressed powers that form the basis for each implied power. Then they will evaluate each action and decide whether they think Congress overstepped its constitutional authority.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 11 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 85), which is shorter than the on-level version.

\section*{REVIEW CASES}

Walk through each congressional action on the worksheet. Ask: How is an act of Congress determined to be constitutional or unconstitutional? (A case challenging the law must be brought to court. ) Tell students which actions were overturned by the courts. Point out that not all of these actions were challenged, and many were controversial.

\section*{EXPLORE LIBERAL AND STRICT CONSTRUCTION}

Have students use their notes on the Core Worksheet to consider their position on how Congress uses its powers-Do they tend to agree more with strict constructionists or liberal constructionists? Point out that they are probably not completely one or the other. Use the Opinion Line strategy (p. T26) to gauge student understanding of the concept. Provide the following "talking points": (1) The States need to keep as much power as possible in order to protect their varying interests. (2) If Congress becomes too powerful, the States will have no say in matters that affect their residents directly. (3) The National Government should focus solely on protecting interstate and foreign trade and defending the nation. (4) The National Government needs broad powers in the areas of war, economic issues, and national emergencies. (5) There are some issues on which the States should have no power, such as immigration.

\section*{Answers}

Congress and Education Congress has used its commerce power to pass the Civil Rights Act and IDEA, which prohibit discrimination in schools.
not the same as those of South Carolinians or Marylanders or Pennsylvanians. They argued that only the States - not the far-off National Government-could protect and preserve those differing interests.

The liberal constructionists, led by Alexander Hamilton, had led the fight to adopt the Constitution. Now they favored a liberal interpretation of that document, a broad construction of the powers it gives to Congress. They believed that the country needed, as Hamilton put it in The Federalist No. 70, "an energetic Executive."

The strict constructionists were sorely troubled by that broad view of the powers of Congress. They were sure that it would all but destroy the reserved powers of the States.

Liberal Construction Prevails You know that the Supreme Court upheld the concept of implied powers in McCulloch v. Maryland in 1819. That victory for the liberal constructionists set a pattern that, in general, has been followed ever since. Over the years, the powers wielded by the National Government have grown to a point that even the most ardent supporters of liberal construction could not have imagined. It is impossible to see how the United States could have developed as it has over the past two centuries had the Court not ruled as it did in McCulloch.

Several factors, working together with the liberal construction of the Constitution, have been responsible for that marked growth in national power. They have included wars, economic crises, and other national emergencies. Spectacular advances, especially in transportation and communication, have also had a real impact on the size and the scope of government. Equally important have been the demands of the people for more and still more services from government.

Congress has been led by these and other factors to view its powers in broader and broader terms. Most Presidents have regarded their powers in like fashion. The Supreme Court has generally taken a similar position in its decisions in cases involving the powers of the National Government.

Moreover, the American people have generally agreed with a broader rather than a narrow reading of the Constitution. This consensus, or general agreement, has prevailed even though our political history has

\section*{Congress and Education}

Congress has no expressed powers related to education. In fact, education is one of the areas expressly delegated to the States. Yet Congress has used the powers implied by the Necessary and Proper Clause to make legislation that has drastically influenced schools in the United States. How has Congress interfered in schools?

Title III of the Civil Rights Act authorized the attorney general to initiate civill suits the ainst discriminatory public schools and colleges in the name of the United States.

314 Powers of Congress

\section*{Constitutional Principles}

FEDERALISM AND IMPLIED POWERS The Constitution delegates expressed powers to the National Government and reserves the remaining powers to the States. Congress's use of implied powers, however, sometimes encroaches into the realm of the States. Judicial interpretation of the expressed powers helps to establish the division of authority between State and National Governments in our federal system. The Court's decision in Gibbons v. Ogden interpreted the Commerce Clause broadly, allowing Congress to regulate many activities that are only indirectly related to commerce. In United States v. Lopez, the Court reined in congressional regulatory power by ruling that the federal firearms law depended on an overly broad definition of "commerce." Future cases will no doubt continue to adjust the line where federal authority ends and State powers begin.
been marked, and still is, by controversies over the proper limits of national power.

\section*{The Doctrine in Practice}

The ways in which the Necessary and Proper Clause has been construed (interpreted) and applied over the last 200 years has enabled the National Government to meet the changing needs of the times. As a result, it has virtually eliminated the need for frequent amendment of the Constitution.

Instances of the exercise of the doctrine of implied powers are almost too numerous to count. The concept of implied powers has made it possible for the Government of the United States to meet any number of problems that could not possibly have been foreseen by the Framers. It does not stretch matters too much to say that, today, the Constitution's words "necessary and proper" really mean "convenient and useful."

Every exercise of implied powers must be based on at least one of the expressed powers. Thus, in McCulloch v. Maryland the Supreme Court found that the creation of the Bank of the United States was "necessary and proper" to the execution of four expressed powers held by Congress: the taxing, borrowing, currency, and commerce powers.

Over the years, Congress has most often found a basis for the exercise of implied powers in (1) the commerce power, (2) its power to tax and spend, and (3) the war powers.

The Commerce Clause As you know, the Commerce Clause gives Congress the power to regulate both foreign and interstate trade. And you are aware, too, of the Supreme Court's hugely expansive reading of that provision, beginning with Gibbons v. Ogden in 1824. The word "commerce" has been held to include the production and the buying and selling of goods as well as the transportation of people and commodities. Commerce has been defined so broadly that it encompasses virtually every form of economic activity today. Congress has the authority to regulate manufacturing, wages and hours, labormanagement relations, foods and drugs, air travel, and much more. It can provide for the building of interstate highways, consumer protection, the protection of the environ-ment-the list goes on and on. In 1998,

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 11F, Power to Tax and Spend, when you discuss the power of Congress to appropriate funds. Give students a moment to analyze the cartoon. Point out that funding decisions always require tradeoffs. If the Congressional Ways and Means Committee decides more money is necessary for public use, it can exercise both expressed powers and implied powers to raise money. Ask: What is the setting for the cartoon? (the Washington, D.C., government office of the Committee on Ways and Means) How would you describe the tone of this cartoon? (as a slur by economic opponents of greater government spending on public programs) What does the cartoon suggest has happened to the Ways and Means Committee? (The committee is controlled by spending liberals now.)

ELL Differentiate Define liberal and strict in the context of Section 3. (liberal: broad, generous, loose; strict: kept within narrow limits, exact, precise) Have students say the words aloud and then write a sentence using each. Be sure students know what elastic means. If possible, demonstrate how an elastic stretches and explain again why the Necessary and Proper Clause is referred to as the Elastic Clause.

\section*{REVIEW MCCULLOCH V. MARYLAND}

If you didn't cover McCulloch v. Maryland in another class, have students read about that case now in this chapter's Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court feature. Explain that the case established the constitutionality of implied powers and a broad interpretation of the Constitution. This ruling helped shape the way in which the Necessary and Proper Clause has been interpreted in the years since 1819.
L2 Differentiate Make signs with these labels: "McCulloch," "State of Maryland," "Chief Justice Marshall," "Arguments for Maryland," and "Arguments for McCulloch." Tell the story of the case, while students holding the signs act it out. You may ask the student playing Marshall to read a segment of the Court's decision, and those holding the Arguments signs to read the arguments for each side.
L4 Differentiate Have students write a brief dialogue that might have taken place between a member of the Maryland State legislature and James McCulloch in 1818. The dialogues should reflect the basic facts in the case.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}Differentiate Have students do research to find recent legislation. They should identify the power by which Congress made the legislation and describe any controversy surrounding it.
L4 Differentiate Ask students to identify types of laws that the Framers could not have anticipatedsuch as environmental protection laws-and make a presentation giving their examples, reasons the need for such laws could not have been anticipated, and an argument for either national or State power in the arena.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint wars, economic crises, national emergencies, advances in transportation and communications, and people's demands for more services

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3
Ask students to write a journal entry arguing that liberal construction of the Constitution has been either good or bad for the United States. Suggest that students look at the chart "The Implied Powers of Congress" in their textbook for ideas.
L3 CAssign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 87)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 88)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ importance of the Neces- \\ sary and Proper Clause \\
(Questions 2, 4, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have them re-read the text material under \\ that heading and answer this question: \\
Congress may make laws that are neces- \\ sary and proper for what? (to carry out its \\ expressed powers)
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Recognizing how liberal \\ construction has affected \\
American history \\
(Questions 1, 3, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Direct them to the chart "The Implied \\ Powers of Congress" and point out \\ that some of these actions may have \\ been ruled unconstitutional under strict \\ construction.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Caption the power to declare war

Interpreting Cartoons Congress has several war powers, but the President has primary responsibility for the conduct of wars. To which war power does this cartoon refer?
moratorium
n. temporary suspension

Congress used the Commerce Clause to impose a three-year moratorium on State taxation of e-commerce and other Internet activities; that freeze was extended in 2007.

Limits on the Commerce Power Still, Congress is not free to use the Commerce Clause to do whatever it chooses. The Constitution places four explicit limitations on the exercise of the commerce power. And the Supreme Court does, at least on occasion, find that the lawmaking branch has overstepped its authority under that provision.

Congress cannot pass a law based solely on the grounds that a measure will somehow promote "the general Welfare of the United States." But it can and does levy taxes and provide for the spending of money for that purpose. Thus, for example, as we said on the opening page of this section, Congress appro-priates-assigns to a particular use-tens of billions of dollars per year to support education. And, similarly, it does so to provide for such things as farm subsidies, unemployment compensation, Social Security, Medicare, and a host of other programs.

The War Powers The several war powers reflect the fact that the National Government is responsible for the protection of this country against aggression and, when necessary, for the waging of war. As with its other expressed powers, Congress has the authority to do whatever is necessary and proper for the execution of its war power-with the exception that, in doing so, it cannot violate any other provision of the Constitution. Among many other examples of the point, Congress has the power to provide for compulsory military service-a draft-because Article I, Section 8 gives it the expressed power " \([t]\) o raise and support Armies" (in Clause 12) and " t\(] \mathrm{o}\) provide and maintain a Navy" (in Clause 13). The Supreme Court originally upheld the constitutionality of a draft in a series of cases challenging the Selective Service Act of 1917 (Selective Draft Law Cases, 1918).
\begin{tabular}{|cl|}
\hline Essential Questions & \begin{tabular}{l}
To continue to build a \\
response to the chapter \\
Essential Question, go to your \\
Essential Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}
response to the build a
Journal \(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal }\end{array}\)
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: How has the doctrine of implied powers increased the powers of Congress?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What is the Necessary and Proper Clause and why is it important?
3. Summarize the main disagreements between strict constructionists and liberal constructionists.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Draw Inferences How have war and economic crises increased the power of the National Government?
5. Predict Consequences If the strict constructionists had won the battle to limit the implied powers, how might the United States be different today?
6. Draw Conclusions Is it necessary for Congress to expand its powers to successfully carry out the expressed powers of commerce?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Make an Outline Write a thesis statement expressing your view and explaining the power you chose in Section 1. Explain why the Framers delegated this power to Congress and how it has been interpreted. Then use your lists from Sections 1 and 2 to make an outline of the arguments you will use to support it.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Possible response: The doctrine of implied powers has enabled Congress to apply the narrowly worded expressed powers to broad areas of American life. For example, the expressed power to regulate commerce led to the implied power to ban discrimination in public places.
2. Article I, Section 8 is the clause that allows Congress to make all laws that are necessary and proper to carry out the expressed powers. It is important because it has allowed the Congress to choose a wide variety of means to carry out its delegated powers.
3. Strict constructionists believe that the implied powers are limited to only those that are absolutely necessary to carry out the expressed powers. Liberal constructionists believe that the Necessary and Proper Clause gave Congress power to do anything that was reasonably related to carrying out its expressed powers.
4. Students should recognize that wars and economic crises lead to public support for strong national leadership and expanded national power to deal with the crises.
5. Possible response: The States would operate more like sovereign nations. Laws would be less uniform nationwide. The Federal Government might have been too weak to adjust to new situations.
6. Possible response: Yes; "commerce" has changed greatly over the years to include new forms of transportation, communication, and technology. The power to regulate commerce must expand to include these innovations.
QUICK WRITE Students should write a thesis sentence and outline of supporting arguments.

Congressional War Powers
Track the Issue
The Constitution divides the war powers between Congress and the President. However, it remains unclear whether Congress may control the conduct of war.

Continental Congress acts as the civilian authority over the armed forces.

President Abraham Lincoln clashes with Congress over the conduct of the Civil War, the appointment of generals, and the freeing of slaves.

Congress approves the use of force to secure Cuban independence, but prohibits its annexation.

The War Powers Resolution limits the President's ability to send troops abroad without Congressional approval.

President George W. Bush requests military authority to combat terrorism; Congress approves force only against those involved in the 9/11 attacks.
"Congress does, of course, play a critical role in . . . the conduct of a war. That role is defined and limited by the Constitution. After all, the military answers to one commander-in-chief in the White House, not 535 commanders-in-chief on Capitol Hill. Congress does have the purse strings. ... We expect the House and Senate to meet the needs of our military and the generals leading the troops in battle on time and in full measure." - Vice President Richard B. Cheney

Connect to Your World
1. Understand (a) What reason did Senator Feingold give for his argument that Congress should end the war in Iraq? (b) How did Vice President Cheney describe the role of Congress?
2. Compare and Contrast (a) How are the two views of congressional war powers alike and how do they differ? (b) Whose view do you agree with? Why?

Background
WAR FUNDING, WITH STRINGS With the approach of the 2008 election, which would end the administration of George W. Bush and Richard Cheney, the Democratcontrolled Congress passed a huge funding bill for the Iraq War. Congress, however, exacted some concessions from the White House in exchange for war funding. In the bill, Congress included funds for college scholarships for veterans and an extension of unemployment benefits-both measures that the President opposed. The bill also prohibited the use of the funds to reconstruct Iraq unless the Iraqi government matched every dollar spent. Passage of the war funding bill assured that the war would continue into the administration of the next President, who would then have to deal with the knotty problem of how to end the war and bring the troops home.

LESSON GOAL
- Students will evaluate the war powers of Congress and justify their positions.

Teach

INTRODUCE THE CONTENT
Point out that the war powers are divided between Congress and the President. This division of powers has been contentious, as Congress must raise and provide for the armed services, while the President is the commander in chief. The Constitution, however, gives no detail about the duties of the commander in chief. Have students review the war powers by reading Article I, Section 8, Clauses 11-16 and Article II, Section 2, Clause 1 of the Constitution.

READ THE POSITIONS
Have a student read the introduction below "Perspectives." Then have different students read each quotation. Ask students to practice summarizing by writing a one-sentence summary of each argument and then read a few aloud. You may wish to spend a few minutes discussing the ambiguity in the Constitution.

OPINION LINE
Use the Opinion Line strategy (p. T26) to have students take a position on whether Congress may withhold funds to force the President to end armed conflict.

Assess and Remediate
Have students answer the Connect to Your World questions.

Answers
1. (a) Senator Feingold argued that the power to declare war includes the implied power to end it. Since the President continues to pursue his failed war policy in Iraq, Congress has a duty to end the war. (b) Vice President Cheney saw Congress's power as limited to funding the troops, with all power to conduct the war residing in the President.
2. (a) Both views acknowledge that Congress has the power to fund the war effort. They differ on whether the power of the purse gives Congress the right to end the war by withholding funds. (b) Answers will vary. Students should support their positions.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What nonlegislative powers does the Constitution delegate to Congress?

1. Senate chooses Vice President if no one wins electoral majority
2. Confirm President's choice to fill vacancy in vice presidency
3. Senate confirms presidential appointments
4. House elects President if no one receives electoral majority
5. Senate advises on and confirms treaties
6. Oversee executive agencies
7. Propose amendment
8. Gather information for laws
9. Call national convention to propose amendment
10. Focus public attention on issue

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will . . .
- evaluate the impeachment process by examining primary sources and data about the impeachment of President Clinton.
- examine the nonlegislative duties of Congress, using the Jigsaw strategy.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{GIVE A MULTIMEDIA PRESENTATION}

Before students complete this lesson's Core Worksheet, you may want to review tips on giving a multimedia presentation in the Skills Handbook, p. S21.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{The Nontegislative Powers}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What nonlegislative powers does the Constitution delegate to Congress? Use a concept web to record the congressional powers described in this section.

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the role of Congress in amending the Constitution and its electoral duties.
2. Describe the power of Congress to impeach, and summarize presidenial impeachment cases.
3. Identify the executive powers of Congress.
4. Describe the investigatory powers of Congress.

Image Above: Bill Gates testifies at a congressional hearing on technology innovation.

Congress is a legislative body; its primary function is to make law. But the Constitution does give it some other chores-several nonlegislative duties-to perform as well.

\section*{Constitutional Amendments}

Article V says that Congress may propose amendments by a two-thirds vote in each house. It has done so 33 times. Article V also provides that Congress may call a national convention of delegates from each of the States to propose an amendment-but only if requested to do so by at least two thirds (34) of the State legislatures. No such convention has ever been called.

In recent years, several State legislatures have petitioned Congress for amendments-among them measures that would require Congress to balance the federal budget each year, prohibit flag burning, permit prayer in public schools, outlaw abortions, impose term limits on members of Congress, and prohibit same-sex marriages.

\section*{Electoral Duties}

The Constitution gives certain electoral duties to Congress. But they are to be exercised only in very unusual circumstances.

The House may be called on to elect a President. The 12th Amendment says that if no one receives a majority of the electoral votes for President, the House, voting by States, is to decide the issue. It must choose from among the three highest contenders in the electoral college balloting. Each State has but one vote to cast, and a majority of the States is necessary for election.

Similarly, the Senate must choose a Vice President if no candidate wins a majority of the electoral votes for that office. In that situation, the vote is not by States but by individual senators, with a majority of the full Senate necessary for election. \({ }^{10}\)

10 Notice that the 12 th Amendment makes it possible for the President to be of one party and the Vice President another. On the matter of presidential and vice-presidential selection, see Chapter 13.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Congress may propose constitutional amendments with a two-thirds vote in each house. - Congress must choose a President or Vice President if no candidate wins a majority of the electoral votes. - The House can impeach, or accuse, government officials, but the Senate conducts the trial. - The Senate has the power to confirm or reject presidential appointments and give advice and consent for treaties.
- Congress may investigate any matter that falls within the scope of its legislative powers.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, enumerated powers
ENDURING UNDERSTANDING: • Many nonlegislative duties of Congress help maintain the balance of power among the branches of government.

The House has had to choose a President twice: Thomas Jefferson in 1801 and John Quincy Adams in 1825. The Senate has had to pick a Vice President only once: Richard M. Johnson in 1837.

Remember that the 25th Amendment provides for the filling of a vacancy in the vice presidency. When one occurs, the President nominates a successor-a replacement, someone to fill the vacancy, subject to a majority vote in both houses of Congress. That process has also been used twice: Gerald Ford was confirmed as Vice President in 1973 and Nelson Rockefeller in 1974.

\section*{Impeachment}

The Constitution provides that the President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States may "be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." \({ }^{11}\) A close reading of those words suggests that the Framers expected that only serious criminal offenses, not political disagreements, would lead to impeachment. Politics has, nevertheless, been at the root of most impeachment controversies.

The House has the sole power to impeach-to accuse, or bring charges. The Senate has the sole power to try-to judge or sit as a court-in impeachment cases. \({ }^{12}\)

Impeachment requires only a majority vote in the House; conviction requires a twothirds vote in the Senate. The Chief Justice presides over the Senate when a President is to be tried. The penalty for conviction is removal from office. The Senate may also prohibit a convicted person from ever holding federal office again; and he or she can be tried in the regular courts for any crime involved

\footnotetext{
11 Article II, Section 4. Military officers are not considered "civil 11 Article II, Section 4 . Military officers are officers," nor are members of Congress. 12 Article I, Section 2, Clause 5 ; Section 3, Clause 6.
\(\mathbf{1 2}\) Article I, Section 2, Clause 5; Section 3, Clause 6 . later acquitted by the Senate. Two federal judges impeached by later acquitted by the Senate. Two federal judges impeached by the House resigned before the Senate could act in their cases. the House resigned before the Senate could act in their cases.
One of the seven judges removed from office was later elected to Congress. The only other federal officer ever impeached was William W. Bellknap, President Grant's Secretary of War. was Wiliam W. Bellknap, President Grant's Secretary of War.
Bellknap had been accused of accepting bribes and, although he had resigned from office, was impeached by the House in 1876. He was then tried by the Senate and found not guilty.
}
in the events that led to the impeachment. To date, there have been 17 impeachments and seven convictions; all seven persons removed by the Senate were federal judges. \({ }^{13}\)

Two Presidents have been impeached by the House: Andrew Johnson in 1868 and Bill Clinton in 1998. The Senate voted to acquit both men-that is, it found them not guilty.

Andrew Johnson The unsuccessfulattempt to remove Andrew Johnson grew out of the turmoil that followed the Civil War. Mr. Johnson had become the nation's 17th President when Abraham Lincoln was assassinated in April of 1865, and he soon became Checkpoint What is the penalty if a President is impeached and convicted?

\section*{How Government Works}

\section*{Electoral Duties of Congress Who Wins?}

Presidents regularly come from the two major parties. No law says that only two people may run in the general election, but the Constitution does say that the winner must receive a majority of the electoral college votes, now 270 . What would happen if a minor party candidate won enough electoral votes to prevent any candidate winning a majority?

STEP 1:
No candidate receives a majority of the electoral college votes.

STEP 2:
Each State's House delegation decides which of the top three candidates to support. Each State has one vote. Failure to agree means the loss of that State's vote.

STEP 3:
If a majority of the State delegations vote for one candidate, he or she becomes the next President. If no candidate wins a majority, 26 votes, another vote must be taken.
The Vice President is selected by the Senate.

Winner!

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 11, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 89)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 91)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 93)
L3 Core Worksheets A and B (pp. 95, 96)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 97)
L3 Quiz A (p. 98) L2 Quiz B (p. 99)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 104)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 107)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 89) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 91)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 93), which investigates the role of partisanship in the Clinton impeachment.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DEVELOP THE BELLRINGER}

Review students' answers to the Bellringer questions: Which house of Congress has the power to impeach? (the House) Which house conducts the trial? (the Senate) How many votes are required to convict an impeached official? (67 votes, or two thirds of the Senate) Was President Clinton impeached? (yes, on two articles) Was he convicted? (no) Then ask these additional questions: Why did the House vote on four articles of impeachment, while the Senate voted on only two? (The other two articles did not receive enough votes in favor of impeachment in the House and so were not sent on to the Senate.) How is Alexander's Hamilton's concern expressed in the excerpt from The Federalist No. 65 reflected in the data shown in the charts? (Hamilton expressed a concern that members of Congress would tend to let partisanship cloud their judgment during an impeachment trial. The data shows that President Clinton's impeachment trial did follow strict party lines-the Democrats overwhelmingly voted against the charges, while the Republicans overwhelmingly voted for impeachment and conviction.)
- 2 ELL Differentiate Have students look up the definitions of these words in the Bellringer Worksheet excerpt from Hamilton: impeachment, misdemeanor, concurrence, faction, animosity. Then have them read the excerpt again, this time substituting the definitions in place of these words.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint removal from office
Electoral Duties of Congress The House would choose the President and the Senate would choose the Vice President.

\section*{EMPHASIZE CHECKS AND BALANCES}

Tell students that today they will discuss the nonlegislative roles of Congress. Emphasize that Congress has many important functions related to checks and balances. Ask students to explain why Congress has the ultimate authority to override the President on many matters or propose amendments to the Constitution. (The Framers saw Congress as being most responsive to the needs and wishes of the people, because they are elected by the people and represent the diversity of each State. The Framers wanted the United States to have a government by and for the people.)
L1 Differentiate Help students understand the phrase checks and balances with a visual example. Place a flat rectangular block on top of a small block, so that the ends of the rectangular block extend well past the smaller block. Place three small blocks on each end of the rectangular block, so that the block remains balanced. Explain that this is how the Framers intended checks and balances to work, with each of the three branches keeping the government in balance. Then remove two blocks from one end so that the rectangular block crashes to one side. Explain that without checks and balances, the government might also become unbalanced, with one branch having more power than the others.

Checkpoint
Why was President Johnson impeached?

\section*{enmeshed} v. entangled; caught up in conciliatory adj. producing agreement enmeshed in a series of disputes with the Radical Republicans who controlled both houses of Congress. Many of those disagreements centered around the treatment of the defeated Southern States in the immediate post-war period.

President Johnson sought to carry out the conciliatory Reconstruction policies favored by Abraham Lincoln—policies that Mr. Lincoln had summarized in these memorable words in his Second Inaugural Address on March 4, 1865: "With malice toward none, with charity for all. . . ." The Radical Republicans supported a much harsher approach to Reconstruction.

Matters came to a head when Congress passed the Tenure of Office Act, over the President's veto, in 1867. President Johnson's violation of that law triggered his impeachment by a House bent on political revenge. The Senate fell just one vote short of removing him from office.

Bill Clinton Bill Clinton was impeached by the House in 1998. In proceedings steeped in partisanship, the House voted two articles of impeachment against him on December 19. Both articles arose out of the President's admitted "inappropriate relationship" with a White House intern. The first article charged the President with perjury-that is, lying under oath. The second article accused him of obstruction of justice because he had withheld information about his affair with the intern.

Members of the House who supported the articles of impeachment contended that the acts of lying under oath and of withholding evidence were within the meaning of the Constitution's phrase "other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." Therefore, they argued, the President's immediate removal from office was justified.

Their opponents argued that the facts involved in the case did not justify either charge. They insisted that, while the President's conduct was deplorable and should be condemned, that conduct did not rise to the level of an impeachable offense. Many of them pressed, instead, for a resolution to censure the President-that is, for a formal condemnation of his behavior.

The Senate received the articles of impeachment when the new Congress convened in 1999, and it began to sit in judgment of the President on January 7.

Richard Nixon A few officeholders have resigned in the face of falmost certain impeach-ment-most notably, Richard Nixon, who resigned the presidency in mid-1974. President Nixon's second term in office was cut short by the Watergate scandal.

The term Watergate comes from a June 1972 attempt by Republican operatives to break into the Democratic Party's national headquarters in the Watergate office complex in Washington, D.C. The investigation of that incident, by the Washington Post and then by other media, led to official investigations by the Department of Justice and by the Senate's Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, popularly known as the Senate Watergate Committee.

The probes unearthed a long list of illegal acts, including bribery, perjury, income tax fraud, and illegal campaign contributions.

\section*{Debate}

After students have studied the feature on "President Clinton's Impeachment," divide the class into two groups and use the Debate strategy (p. T25) to have them debate this question: Did President Clinton commit "high crimes and misdemeanors," as required for conviction?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint his violation of the Tenure of Office Act

\section*{The Impeachment Process}

\section*{President Clinton's Impeachment}

This chronology details the complex impeachment process and shows how the process worked in the impeachment of President Bill Clinton. What measures did the Framers build into the im

The House Judiciary Committee considers charges against the accused and votes on whether to send articles of impeachment to the full House. A simple majority vote is needed to start the process. v
December 11-12, 1998 After three months of hearings, the House Judiciary Committee approves four articles.

Acting much like a grand jury, the House considers the charge(s) brought by the Judiciary Committee. It can subpoena witnesses and evidence. It hears and debates arguments. v December 18-19, 1998 The House holds 13 hours of bitter, partisan debate, in which more than 200 House members speak. Democrats briefly walk out to protest Republican leaders' refusal to consider the lesser punishment of censure.

The House votes on each article. If any article is approved by a majority vote, the official is impeached, which is similar to being indicted. The House sends the article(s) of impeachment to the Senate. v December 19, 1998 The House votes to impeach Mr. Clinton on two counts. The votes are 228-206 on the count of perjury and 221-212 on obstruction of justice. Voting is mostly along party lines.

1999

The Senate tries the case If the President is to be tried, the Chief Justice of the United States presides. Selected members of the House act as managers (prosecutors). v January 7, 1999 Chief Justice William Rehnquist opens a televised trial. Representative Henry Hyde of Illinois leads a team of 13 House managers. White House Counsel Charles Ruff leads the defense.

Senators hear testimony and evidence. House prosecutors and law yers for both sides present their cases. Additional witnesses may be called. Senators may also vote to curb testimony. January 7-February 11, 1999 With public distaste for impeachment growing, the Senate limits testimony to Senate limits test the intern three witnesses, three witnesses, the intern among them. Closing arguamong them. Closing arg ments follow. For three ments follow. For three days, the Senate deliberdays, the Senate delibe ates in secret (despite Democrats' objections).

The Senate debates the articles, publicly or privately. It need not render a verdict. It could, for example, vote to drop the case example, vote to drop the case and instead censure the official. Atwo-thirds vote is required for conviction. v
February 12, 1999 In a televised session, the Senate acquits the President on both charges, falling well short of the two-thirds vote needed for conviction. There are 55 Republicans and 45 Democrats in the Senate. On the perjury count, 45 Democrats and 10 Republicans vote not guilty. On the obstruction charge, 5 Republicans break with their party to vote with all of the Demo crats against conviction.

\section*{How Government Works}
electoral duties Four candidates ran for President in 1824. The electoral vote was as follows: Andrew Jackson, 99; John Quincy Adams, 84; William Crawford, 41 ; and Henry Clay, 37. Since no candidate received a majority of the electoral vote, the decision went to the House of Representatives. The Constitution requires the House to choose among the top three candidates in the electoral vote. This requirement knocked Clay, the powerful speaker of the House, out of the running. Clay threw his support to Adams, assuring a majority vote in the House to elect Adams. Shortly after his election, Adams offered Clay the job of secretary of state, which Clay accepted. Jackson's supporters were outraged. They charged Adams and Clay of entering into a "corrupt bargain," robbing Jackson of the presidency. This charge cast a cloud over Adams' administration and helped Jackson defeat Adams in the election of 1828.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEETS}

Explain that students will use the Jigsaw strategy (p. T27) to learn about the nonlegislative duties of Congress. Distribute Chapter 11 Section 4 Core Worksheet A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 95) to some students and Core Worksheet B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 96) to others. These worksheets give students directions about what type of information to include in their presentation. Divide students into groups and assign each group one of the topics listed on their worksheet (Worksheet A: "Appointments," "Treaties," or "Investigatory Powers"; Core Worksheet B: "Amending the Constitution," "Electoral Duties," or "Impeachment").
L2 Differentiate Give these students Core Worksheet B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 96) and assign "Electoral Duties" or "Impeachment."
L3 Differentiate Any of the topics are appropriate for on-level students. The topics on Core Worksheet B are more straightforward but no less important for all students to learn. Refer students using Core Worksheet A to Unit 4 for more information. Refer students using Core Worksheet B to Chapter 3 for more information.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of The Impeachment Process.

\section*{Answers}

The Impeachment Process The Framers divided the process, giving the power to impeach to the House and power to convict to the Senate. Conviction requires a two-thirds vote, which is a high bar. Also, the Chief Justice presides over the trial. The attempt to remove Clinton probably failed because it was more politically motivated than based on "high crimes and misdemeanors."

\section*{JIGSAW}

After students have time to answer the questions with their "expert" group, jigsaw the groups and let students explain their topic to their new group. Instruct students to ask at least one question of an "expert." Experts will record these questions to discuss with their expert groups.

\section*{RECONVENE EXPERT GROUPS}

Expert groups should reconvene and discuss the questions they were asked after their jigsaw presentations. One group member should stand up and address these questions for the class. To finish, ask each group to submit three quiz questions on their topic.

L2Differentiate Have students use the Click and Clunk strategy (p. T23) to assess which topics from the jigsaw they understood and which need further clarification.

They also revealed the use of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Internal Revenue Service, and other government agencies for personal and partisan purposes.

The House Judiciary Committee voted three articles of impeachment against President Nixon in late July 1974. He was charged with obstruction of justice, abuse of power, and failure to respond to the Judiciary Committee's subpoenas. A committee's subpoena is a legal order directing one to appear before that body and/or to produce certain evidence. Mr. Nixon had ignored the committee's subpoena of several tape recordings of Watergate-related conversations in the Oval Office.

It was quite apparent that the full House would impeach the President and that the Senate would convict him. Those facts prompted Mr. Nixon to resign the presidency on August 9, 1974.

Beyond doubt, the Watergate scandal involved the most extensive and the most serious violations of public trust in the nation's history. Among its other consequences, several Cabinet officers, presidential assistants, and others were convicted of various felonies and misdemeanors-and many of them served jail time.

\section*{Executive Powers}

The Constitution gives two executive powers to the Senate. One of those powers has to do with appointments to office, and the other with treaties made by the President. \({ }^{14}\)

Appointments All major appointments made by the President must be confirmed by the Senate by majority vote. Each of the President's nominations is referred to the appropriate standing committee of the Senate. That committee may then hold hearings to decide whether or not to make a favorable recommendation to the full Senate for that appointment. When the committee's recommendation is brought to the floor of the Senate, it may be, but seldom is, considered in executive (secret) session.

The appointment of a Cabinet officer or of some other top member of the President's "official family" is rarely rejected by the Senate. The Senate has explicitly rejected only 12

\footnotetext{
14 Article II, Section 2, Clause 2
15 The first was Roger B. Taney, Andrew Jackson's choice for secretary of the treasury in 1832 . Jackson later named Taney Chief Justice. The most recent rejection came in 1989, when John Tower as secretary of defense
}

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Have student groups examine the impeachment process in the cases of Andrew Johnson, Bill Clinton, and Richard Nixon. Each group will research and write a speech either supporting or opposing impeachment of these Presidents. After all groups present their speeches, the class will vote on the President who they think most deserved impeachment and conviction.

To see this lesson plan, go to

of more than 350 Cabinet appointments. \({ }^{15}\) More commonly, the President will withdraw a nomination if the Senate sends signals that it will reject the nominee in a confirmation vote. For example, President George W. Bush withdrew the nomination of Harriet Miers, his White House Counsel, to the Supreme Court. Bush later nominated Samuel Alito, who was confirmed by the Senate.

It is with the President's appointment of federal officers who serve in the various States (for example, U.S. attorneys and federal marshals) that the unwritten rule of "senatorial courtesy" comes into play. The Senate will turn down such a presidential appointment if it is opposed by a senator of the President's party from the State involved. The Senate's observance of this unwritten rule has a significant impact on the President's exercise of the power of appointment; in effect, this rule means that some senators virtually dictate certain presidential appointments.

Treaties The President makes treaties "by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, . . . provided two thirds of the Senators present concur." \({ }^{16}\) For a time after the adoption of the Constitution, the President asked the advice of the Senate when a treaty was being negotiated and prepared. Now the President most often consults the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and other influential senators of both parties.

The Senate may accept or reject a treaty as it stands, or it may decide to offer amendments, reservations, or understandings to it. Treaties are sometimes considered in executive session. Because the House has a hold on the public purse strings, influential members of that body are often consulted in the treatymaking process, too.

\section*{The Power to Investigate}

Congress has the power to investigate-to inquire into, or inform itself on-any matter that falls within the scope of its lawmaking authority. The authority to do so is implied by the Constitution's grant of the legislative power to Congress, in Article I, Section 1. As

\footnotetext{
16 Article II, Section 2, Clause 2. It is often said that the Senate "ratifies" a treaty. It does not The Senate may give or withhold "ratifies" a treaty. It does not. The Senate may give or witth its "advice and consent" to a treaty made by the President Once the Senate has consented to a treaty, the President other parties to the agreement We discuss the treaty-making } process at some length in Chapter 14.

Checkpoint What is the unwritten rule known as "senatorial courtesy"?

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 11G, Judicial Nominees, when you discuss Senate committee hearings about presidential appointments. This cartoon implies that the nomination process for federal judges takes a long time. Ask: Whom do the two skeletons represent? (judicial nominees) What does the cartoon illustrate about how long it takes before Senate confirmation hearings begin? (It illustrates an exaggerated length of time by showing that nominees die and cobwebs form while the nominees wait to be seen.) What is suggested by the clipboard labeled "Political Deal"? (Full Senate hearings begin only after political deals are struck in committee.)

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute Chapter 11 Section 4 Extend Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 97), which asks students to research the path of a treaty sent to the Senate for ratification or a Senate confirmation hearing and write a summary of the proceedings and the media coverage.
L3 Differentiate Have students research one instance in which Congress has recently exercised its nonlegislative powers. Ask them to write a critique explaining whether Congress used its power wisely and how partisanship affected the action.

Differentiate Have students find and read a portion of a recent congressional hearing in which members question a presidential appointee or investigate a matter of national concern. Evaluate the hearing for partisan motives and evaluate the quality of the hearing. Students should explain whether they would have asked different questions or think that members of Congress should have investigated an issue further.

> Government
> online
> All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of Congressional Influence.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

3Compile students' questions into a quiz and give it to the class.
L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess each student's work in the Jigsaw activity, using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 167).

L3
Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 98)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 99)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\footnotetext{
Answers
Checkpoint The Senate will reject a presidential appointment if it is opposed by a senator of the President's party from the State involved.
}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying the nonlegisla- \\
tive powers of Congress \\
(Questions 1, 4, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have them write the five main headings \\ in this text section across the top of a \\ broadside sheet of paper. Ask them to \\ add a bullet list of powers under each \\ heading as they review the section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Remembering how \\ a President and Vice \\ President are chosen if no \\ candidate wins a majority \\ of electoral votes \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have them draw a flowchart showing \\ the steps in the electoral process, using \\ information provided in the text
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the im- \\ peachment and conviction \\ processes (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Suggest they create a chart, comparing \\ the reasons for the impeachment of \\ Johnson, Clinton, and Nixon, the results, \\ and the reasons for these results.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Cartoons The cartoonist is making fun of congressional oversight by suggesting that a nonbinding resolution doesn't amount to much of a threat to the President.
Checkpoint to gather information for legislation, oversee executive agencies, focus public attention on a matter, expose questionable activities of public official or private person or group, and/or promote the interests of some members of Congress

- Interpreting Cartoons In February 2007, the House passed a nonbinding resolution opposing the President's plan to send more troops to Irac What point does the cartoonist make?
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are some of the reasons that Congress holds hearings?
we noted, both the House and Senate exercise that power through the standing committees and their subcommittees and often through special committees, as well.

Both houses may choose to conduct investigations for any one or a number of reasons. Most often, those inquiries are held to (1) gather information necessary to the framing of legislation, (2) oversee the operations of various agencies in the executive branch, (3) focus public attention on some particular matter, (4) expose the questionable activities of some public official or private person or group, and/or (5) promote the particular interests of some members of Congress. Notice that the second of these motives, oversight, is a little-noted but quite important aspect of the constitutional system of checks and balances. Note, too, that Congress is more inclined to exercise its oversight function when one or both of its chambers is controlled by the party that does not hold the presidency, most recently in 2007 and 2008.

Over recent years, Congress has improved its ability both to inform itself and to perform its oversight responsibilities by increasing the staff resources available to the standing committees of both houses. The three little-known agencies in the legislative branch which also add to that capability are:
1. Congressional Budget Office, which committees of both houses rely on quite heavily in taxing, spending, and other budget-related matters;
2. Congressional Research Service, in the Library of Congress, whose several hundred staff specialists provide members with factual information on virtually any subject; and
3. Government Accountability Office, also called Congress' watchdog because it has broad authority to monitor the work of the Federal Government and report its findings to Congress.
Essential Questions
Journal \begin{tabular}{l}
To continue to build a \\
response to the chapter \\
Essential Question, go to your \\
Essential Questions Journal.
\end{tabular}

Journal Essential Question, go to your

\section*{SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What nonlegislative powers does the Constitution delegate to Congress?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. If the vice presidency becomes vacant, how is a successor chosen?
3. Summarize the circumstances of President Richard Nixon's resignation from office.
4. Outline the process by which Congress approves or rejects presidential appointments.
5. What powers does Congress have with regard to treaties negotiated by the President?
Critical Thinking
6. Draw Conclusions In what two ways may Congress propose amendments to the Constitution? Do you think the Framers made amending the Constitution too difficult? Explain
7. Determine Cause and Effect How do each of the nonlegislative powers of Congress illustrate the principle of checks and balances?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Review and Revise Review and revise your outline from Section 3, making sure that your points are presented in a logical sequence. Use transition words, such as although, because, and then to guide readers through your ideas. Add details that will make your presentation more interesting.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. amending the Constitution; electoral duties; impeachment; appointments and treaties; power to investigate
2. President nominates successor, and a majority vote of both houses of Congress confirms
3. People with ties to the White House broke into the Democratic Party's national headquarters. Investigations found evidence of illegal activities and abuses of power. Congress subpoenaed tape recordings from Nixon, who refused. Realizing he would be impeached and convicted, Nixon resigned.
4. Each presidential nomination is referred to the appropriate standing committee of the Senate. The committee may hold hearings before making a recommendation to the full Senate. The Senate approves by majority vote.
5. The President makes treaties with the "advice and consent" of the Senate. A two-thirds vote of the Senate is required for approval.
6. by a two-thirds vote in each house or by calling a national convention of State delegates
7. Each nonlegislative power involves more than one branch or level of government, or divides responsibilities between houses of Congress. This design enables one part of government to check the power of another.
QUICK Write Students will sequence their outlines logically and add transitions and details.

\section*{Comparing the House and the Senate}

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the powers of Congress, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Skog, Jason. The Civil Rights Act of 1 964. Compass Point Books, 2007.
L2 Murphy, John. The Impeachment Process (The U.S. Government: How It Works). Chelsea House Publications, 2007.
L3 Abernathy, Scott. No Child Left Behind and the Public Schools. University of Michigan Press, 2007.
L4 Ellis, Richard E. Aggressive Nationalism: McCulloch v. Maryland and the Foundation of Federal Authority in the Young Republic. Oxford University Press, USA, 2007.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Active Reading Effective readers interact with the material they are reading to help them absorb and comprehend information. Before reading each section in Chapter 11, have students scan the section by reading the introduction, headings, and conclusion. Ask them to look at the photographs, charts, and other visuals. Then have them write a question about the material, such as "How important are the expressed powers of Congress? " As they read, students should look for an answer to their question; this will give them a purpose for reading. Additional strategies include chunking the material into short segments and paraphrasing that section before continuing to read, and drawing diagrams, flowcharts, or other graphic organizers to map ideas visually. Students might also consider reading aloud or photocopying the material so they can highlight or underline key points. The Checkpoint questions in the margins will also keep students engaged as they read.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 3 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 3 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 300, 320
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) expressed powers, implied powers, inherent powers (b) Congress cannot: favor different State ports; require vessels bound to or from one State to be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another; tax for private benefit; tax exports; tax at different rates in different parts of the country.
2. (a) the power of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign trade (b) to build a strong and united country (c) It established a broad "commerce" definition.
3. (a) to ensure that the Federal Government would obtain revenue (b) to raise money to meet public needs, but also to protect domestic industry against foreign competition (c) They are both expressed powers.
4. With independence, the former currency system collapsed. Congress needed to provide a uniform, stable monetary system for the nation.

\section*{SECTION 2}
5. (a) Congress can: declare war; raise and support armies and a navy; make rules for the governing of the nation's military forces; call forth, organize, arm, and discipline the militia; grant letters of marque and reprisal and make rules concerning captures on land and water. (b) Students should recognize that Congress' power to declare war serves as a check on the President's power as commander in chief. (c) The President must be able to respond rapidly and effectively to national security threats. However, there could be dangers inherent in a presidential power to involve the country in undeclared wars.
6. (a) Copyrights and patents provide a financial incentive for progress in the arts and sciences by granting exclusive rights to a work for a period of time. (b) to provide a centralized process for registering copyrights and patents across the country
7. (a) money; foreign and interstate commerce; foreign policy; war powers; domestic powers (b) Answers will vary.

\section*{SECTION 3}
8. (a) The meaning of the clause led to conflict between the strict constructionists (who wanted a limited interpretation of the Constitution) and the liberal constructionists (who favored a broad interpretation).

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) Identify the three different types of congressional powers. (b) Explain how the Constitution limits the power of Congress.
2. (a) Describe the commerce power. (b) Why did the Framers grant this power to Congress? (c) What was the significance of the Supreme Court's decision in Gibbons v. Ogden?
3. (a) Why did the Framers grant Congress the power to tax? (b) What is the purpose of taxes? (c) How is the borrowing power related to the taxing power?
4. Why did Congress issue a national currency?

\section*{Section 2}
5. (a) What powers does the Constitution grant to Congress affecting war and national defense? (b) Why do you think the Framers gave Congress the sole power to declare war? (c) What tensions may arise from the division of the war powers between the Congress and the President?
6. (a) How do copyrights and patents "promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts"? (b) Why do you think the Framers granted these powers to Congress?
7. (a) List the expressed powers of Congress. (b) Are there any powers which, in your view, Congress should possess, but does not? Explain.

Section 3
8. (a) Describe the conflict over the meaning of the Necessary and Proper Clause. (b) Why is that clause also called the Elastic Clause?
9. (a) What is the significance of the Court's decision in McCulloch v. Maryland? (b) Is the concept of implied powers a misrepresentation of federalism? Why or why not?
Section 4
10. (a) What nonlegislative powers does the Constitution grant to Congress? (b) How does each of those powers check or balance the executive branch?
11. (a) Outline the steps of the impeachment process. (b) Has the definition of "high crimes and misdemeanors" as impeachable offenses been taken too far? Explain.
Writing About Government
12. Persuasive Writing Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write a persuasive essay arguing that Congress has used its power too little or too much. Remember that your writing will be most effective if you emphasize arguments your audience will find convincing. See pp. S9-S10 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
13. Essential Question Activity Do research to find legislation that Congress has passed or considered in a recent session. Choose two pieces of legislation that are based on expressed powers of Congress and two pieces that are based on implied powers. Summarize each of the measures and explain which power allows Congress to be involved.
14. Essential Question Assessment Based on your summaries and the content you learned in this chapter, explain in a paragraph how current congressional activity might be different if the Constitution were interpreted strictly. This will help you think about the chapter Essenstrictly. This will help you think about the chapter tial Question: What should be the limits on the powers of Congress?

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ & \text { Question, go to your Essential }\end{aligned}\) Journal \(\begin{aligned} & \text { Question, go to your } \\ & \text { Questions Journal }\end{aligned}\)
(b) It has been stretched very far and been made to cover so much over the years.
9. (a) The Court upheld the concept of implied powers, which set a pattern over the years of the National Government wielding wide powers. (b) possible answer: no, because the doctrine of implied powers has enabled the Federal Government to deal with problems that have evolved over time and which the Framers could not have anticipated.

\section*{SECTION 4}
10. (a) Congress can: propose or call a national convention to propose amendments to Constitution; elect President or Vice President if no candidate receives electoral majority; confirm President's choice to fill vacancy in vice presidency; impeach (House) and try impeached officials (Senate); confirm President's appointments and give advice and consent for treaties (Senate); and conduct investigations to frame legislation, oversee executive agencies, focus attention on issues, expose questionable activities, and promote interests of members of Congress.
(b) Congress' confirmation powers ensure that the President must appoint people

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Strict v . Liberal Construction of the Constitution}

The dispute over the extent of the powers the Constitution grants to the National Government has continued to the present day. As you see in Document 1, some make the argument that big government can be dangerous. Others see small government as insufficient to meet the needs of the people, as in Document 2

\section*{Document 1}
[Americans] are a lot better economists than most economists care to admit. They know that a government big enough to give you everything you want is a government big enough to take from you everything you have.
-President Gerald R. Ford,
Remarks to a Joint Session of Congress

Document 2

Use your knowledge of the debate over the limits of federal power and these three documents to answer Questions 1-3.
- In Document 2, what do "apples" represent? A. Supreme Court rulings
B. wasteful federal program
C. things people want from government
D. taxes
2. What did President Ford mean when he said that "a government big enough to give you everything you want is a government big enough to take from you everything you have"?
3. Pull It Together Compare the viewpoints of each document. How do you think the Federal Government should balance these points of view?
(.) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Documents
To find more primary sources on interpreting the Constitution, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. \(C\)
2. President Ford meant that, in order to get services from government, the people have to give it increasing power, which is a potential threat to their liberty. He was warning Americans to think carefully about how much power the federal government should have.
3. A good answer will explain that Ford warns of granting too much power to government, while the cartoon warns of the risk of taking too much away. Students should then explain their own viewpoint using these documents and what they learned in this chapter.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.

Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.
acceptable to Congress. Impeachment allows Congress to remove officials from office. Congress also oversees executive agencies and can investigate questionable activities, assuring executive branch accountability.
11. (a) A majority of the House Judiciary Committee sends articles of impeachment to the full House, which hears evidence and then votes on each charge. Articles approved by a majority of the House are sent to the Senate for trial. Members of the House act as managers (prosecutors). House managers and lawyers for both sides present their cases. The Senate debates the articles and decides to drop the case, censure, or convict the official. A two-thirds vote is required to convict. (b) Students should consider the difficulty of drafting this wording so that it would cover a wide range of potential misconduct by federal officials.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
12. Students' essays should reflect the principles of good persuasive writing.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
13. A good answer will show a firm grasp of the meaning of the concept of expressed and implied powers.
14. Students should understand both strict versus liberal construction and the complexities of deciding how much power Congress needs to do its work effectively.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 3}

What makes a successful Congress?

\section*{CHAPTER 12}

Can and should the lawmaking process be improved?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: What does this photograph tell you about Congress "on exhibition"? (Much of what Congress does is scrutinized by the public and the media. ) In this chapter, students will learn about the organization of Congress and how a bill becomes a law. Tell students to begin to explore Congress in action by completing the Chapter 12 Essential Question Warmup Activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}ELL Differentiate Chapter 12 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 121)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:

\section*{- Congressional Committee Staffers}
- How a Bill Becomes a Law

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{GIVE AN EFFECTIVE PRESENTATION}

You may wish to teach giving an effective presentation as a distinct skill within Section 4 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 12 Skills Worksheet (Unit 3 All-inOne, p. 156) to help students learn how to give an effective presentation. The worksheet asks students to create a multimedia presentation demonstrating how a bill becomes a law. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 157).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the lawmaking process.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Review the "Leadership in the 111 th Congress" chart and explain the role of each congressional leader. An online update for this chart is available at PearsonSuccessNet.com. Then introduce committees and have students do the Chapter 12 Section 2 Core Worksheet, which describes the standing committees of Congress, before beginning the Section 3 lesson.
BLock 2: Finish teaching the Sections 3 and 4 lessons in their entirety.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

To cover this chapter quickly, direct students to the "Leadership in the 111 th Congress" chart in the text or the online update to review the current congressional leaders. Briefly explain the role of each congressional leader and the seniority system in Congress. Then use "The 2007 Farm Bill in the House" to explain how a bill moves through the House. Complete the Chapter 12 Section 2 Core Worksheet and Extend Worksheet to explain the role of committees and committee chairmen, the division of labor, and jurisdiction. Then review "How a Bill Becomes a Law" in detail.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- complete a flowchart of opening-day events in the House.
- describe the leadership roles in Congress by taking part in a press conference simulation.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- examine the need for committees to divide work by creating an organization for an event.
- identify jurisdictions of House committees by matching committee names to descriptions.
- trace the path of the 2007 Farm Bill through the House.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- recognize the need for committees by examining a transparency showing the volume of bills flowing through Congress.
- write a bill using guidelines and following a sample.
- simulate how a bill passes through the House, using a bill created by students.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- use a dramatization to learn about filibusters.
- examine the work of conference committees by simulating negotiations to iron out differences between versions of a bill.
- identify a bill's final steps toward becoming law by completing a flowchart.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1 S
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4
Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{How do constitutional and party officers keep Congress organized?}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|l|}{Congressional Leaders and Their Duties} \\
\hline House & Senate \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Speaker of the House \\
- presides and keeps order \\
- chairs sessions \\
- allows members to speak by recognizing them \\
- interprets and applies the rules \\
- refers bills to committee \\
- rules on points of order \\
- puts motions to a vote and decides outcome \\
- names members of select and conference committees \\
- signs all bills and resolutions passed by House \\
Majority Leader \\
- controls order of business on floor \\
- carries out decisions of party's caucus \\
Minority Leader \\
- carries out decisions of party's caucus \\
Majority and Minority Whips \\
- same as in Senate \\
Committee Chairmen \\
- same as in Senate
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
President of the Senate \\
- presides \\
- Vice President \\
- cannot speak or debate on Senate floor \\
- may vote only to break tie \\
President pro tempore \\
- presides in Vice President's absence \\
Majority Leader \\
- controls order of business on floor \\
- carries out decisions of party's caucus \\
Minority Leader \\
- carries out decisions of party's caucus \\
Majority and Minority Whips \\
- liaison between party leaders and members \\
- make sure party members are present for important votes \\
- influence party members to vote with leaders \\
Committee Chairmen \\
- head standing committees \\
- have major say in which bills the committee will consider, in what order, and at what length, and what withesses the committee will call \\
- manage debate and steer passage on floor
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

Before students begin the role-playing activity in this section, you may want to review tips on comparing viewpoints in the Skills Handbook, p. S15.

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{Congress Organizes}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How do constitutional and party officers keep Congress organized? Use a table like the one below to keep track of the officers in each house.
\begin{tabular}{|l|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Congressional Leaders and Their Duties } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ House } & Senate \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Speaker of the House \\
- presides and \\
keeps order
\end{tabular} & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- Speaker of the - floor leader House - majority leader - President of the - minority leader Senate President President \(p r\) tempore tempore - minority leader
- committee
chairman

Objectives
1. Describe how and when Congress convenes.
2. Compare the roles of the presiding officers in the Senate and the House
3. Identify the duties of the party officers in each house.
4. Describe how committee chairmen are chosen and explain their role in the legislative process.

Image Above: John Boehner (R., Ohio), hands the Speaker's gavel to Nancy Pelosi (D., California).

What comes to mind when you hear the word Con gress? The Capitol? Your members of Congress? Some particular bill? Those senators and representatives you often see on the evening news? Of course, you know that the nation's lawmaking body is much more than that. It is in fact a very complex enterprise, and much larger than most people realize. Some 30,000 men and women work for the legislative branch today; and Congress appropriates some \($ 4\) billion every year to finance its own many-sided operations. \({ }^{1}\)

\section*{Congress Convenes}

Congress convenes-begins a new term-every two years, on January 3 of every odd-numbered year. Each new term follows the general elections in November.

Opening Day in the House Every other January, the 435 men and women who have been elected to the House come together at the Capitol to begin a new term. At that point, they are, in effect, just so many representatives-elect. Because all 435 of its seats are up for election every two years, the House technically has no sworn members, no rules, and no organization until its open-ing-day ceremonies are held.

Senator Sherrod Brown (D., Ohio) sat in the House of Representatives for seven terms before he won election to the Senate in 2006. He remembers his first opening day, in 1993, this way:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

Walking around the chamber the first day, I was awed and nervous. . . . [Q]uestions gnawed at me when I walked into that august [grand] room, when I met several members about whom I had read and whom I had seen on television. And then I thought about the President of the United States coming to address us - 'Do I deserve to be here with all these people? How did I get here? Will I measure up? How was I chosen for this privilege?'
-Sherrod Brown, Congress From the Inside

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Congress begins each new term in early January of every odd-numbered year. - The Speaker of the House controls the agenda in the House of Representatives. - The Vice President is the President of the Senate but votes only to break a tie. - The majority and minority leaders of each house carry out the decisions of their party's caucus. - Party whips act as liaisons between members and leadership. - Committee chairmen are usually chosen by seniority.
CONCEPTS: continuous body, seniority rule
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Speaker of the House and the majority leaders and committee chairmen in both houses are members of the majority party, and wield the most power in Congress.

The clerk of the House in the preceding term presides at the beginning of the first day's session. \({ }^{2}\) The clerk calls the chamber to order and checks the roll of representativeselect. Those members-to-be then choose a Speaker, who will be their permanent presiding officer. By custom, the Speaker is a longstanding member of the majority party, and election on the floor is only a formality. The majority party's members in the House have settled the matter beforehand

The Speaker then takes the oath of office. By tradition, the oath is administered by the Dean of the House, the member-elect with the longest record of service in the House. \({ }^{3}\) With that accomplished, the Speaker swears in the rest of the members, as a body. The Democrats take their seats to the right of the center aisle; the Republicans, to the left.

Next, the House elects its clerk, parliamentarian, sergeant at arms, chief administrative officer, and chaplain. None of these people are members of the House, and their elections are also a formality. The majority party has already decided the matter.

Then, the House adopts the rules that will govern its proceedings through the term. The rules of the House have been developing for over 200 years, and they are contained in a volume of about 400 pages. They are readopted, most often with little or no change, at the beginning of each term, though they are occasionally and sometimes extensively amended during a term. For example, the 110th Congress strengthened ethics rules governing relationships with lobbyists. Among other things, these rules limit gifts to members, ban the use of privately owned airplanes, and require members to attend annual ethics training.

1 More than 15,000 of those who work in the legislative branch have jobs in the House or Senate-in members' offices, as committee staff, or in some part of the congressional administrative organization. The other 15,000 or so work in the various support agencies Congress has, over time, established within the legislative branch-including the Library of Congress, the Government Printing Office, the Congressional Budget Office, and the Government Accountability Office.
2 The clerk, a nonmember officer of the House, is picked by the majority party and usually keeps the post until that party lose control of the chamber.
3 Today, John D. Dingell (D., Michigan), who first became a member of the House on December 13, 1955.

Finally, members of the 20 permanent committees of the House are appointed by a floor vote. With that, the House is organized.

Opening Day in the Senate The Senate is a continuous body. It has been organized without interruption since its first session in 1789. Recall that only one third of the seats are up for election every two years. Two thirds of the Senate's membership is carried over from one term to the next. As a result, the Senate does not face large organizational problems at the beginning of a term. Its first-day session is nearly always fairly short and routine, even when the elections have brought a change in the majority party. Newly elected and reelected members must be sworn in, vacancies in Senate organization and on committees must be filled, and a few other details attended to.

State of the Union Message When the Senate is notified that the House of Representatives is organized, a joint committee of the two chambers is appointed and instructed "to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make."

Within a few weeks-in late January or early February-the President delivers the \section*{preside} \(v\). to act in the role of chairperson

\section*{quorum}
\(n\). a minimum number of members required to do business

Opening day in the House of Representatives,
February 8, 1906

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- complete a flowchart of opening-day events in the House.
- describe the leadership roles in Congress by taking part in a press conference simulation.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 125) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 127)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 12A, Opening Day in the House of Representatives. Ask students to copy and complete the flowchart in their notebook.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 12, Section 1 :
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 121)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 125)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 127)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 129)
L3 L2 Core Worksheet B (p. 130)
L3 Quiz A (p. 131)
L2 Quiz B (p. 132)

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{discuss opening-day activities}

Tell students that today's lesson will introduce them to the organization of Congress and the details of how that organization helps it get its work done. Display Transparency 12B, Opening Day in the House of Representatives, which contains the solutions to the Bellringer transparency. Discuss each step in the process of organizing the House on opening day. Ask: What happens in the Senate on opening day? (New and reelected members are sworn in. Organizational and committee vacancies are filled.) Why is opening day in the Senate so different from opening day in the House? (In the House, all seats are up for election each term. Therefore, the House needs to be organized each term. In the Senate, only a third of the seats are up for election, so only one third of the Senate needs to be sworn in and few positions need to be filled, making openingday activities shorter and more routine than in the House.)

\section*{PRESENT THE TOPIC}

Direct students to the "Leadership in the 111 th Congress" chart in this section (or to the updated version at PearsonSuccessNet.com). Walk through these positions, pointing out the differences between the constitutional officers (Speaker, President of the Senate, and President pro tempore) and the party officers (the remainder). Ask: Why does Congress have party officers in addition to constitutional officers? (Constitutional officers facilitate the work of the entire chamber as well as their own party's agenda. Party officers focus on party business. They organize members to prepare and pass measures on the party's legislative agenda.)
L4 Differentiate In a classroom with a number of advanced students, you may wish to extend the discussion to cover the reasons that parties and party officers evolved. (Parties are not part of the Constitution, but have existed since it was signed. The size of Congress has grown tremendously and requires more organization than is specified in the Constitution. Congress also has the power to organize itself.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The State of the Union address reports on the status of the nation, as the President sees it, in terms of domestic and foreign policy. The address also lays out the broad policies the administration expects to follow and includes specific legislative recommendations.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is the purpose of the State of the Union address?
judicious
adj. reasonable annual State of the Union message to a joint session of Congress. The speech is a major political event and is based on this constitutional command:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient...
—Article II, Section 3
From Woodrow Wilson's first message in 1913, the President has almost always presented his annual assessment in person. Members of Congress, together with the members of the Cabinet, the justices of the Supreme Court, the foreign diplomatic corps, and other dignitaries, assemble in the House chamber to hear him.

In the address, the President reports on the state of the nation as he or she sees it, in both domestic and foreign policy terms. The message is widely covered by the news media, and it is very closely followed, both here and abroad. In fact, the chief executive's speech is as much a message to the American people, and to the world, as it is an address to Congress. In it, the President lays out the broad shape of the policies the administration expects to follow and the course the chief executive has charted for the nation. The message regularly includes a number of specific legislative recommendations, along with a plea that Congress will enact them. Its presentation is soon followed by scores of bills drawn up in the executive branch and introduced in the House and Senate by various members of the President's party.

With the conclusion of the speech, the joint session is adjourned. Each house then separately turns to the legislative business that will come before it.

\section*{The Presiding Officers}

The Constitution provides for the presiding officers of each house of Congress-the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. Article I, Section 2, Clause 5 directs that "The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other Officers. . . ." And Article I, Section 3, Clause 4 declares: "The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate.

The Speaker of the House Of the two positions, the Speaker of the House is by far the more important and more powerful within the halls of Congress. This is particularly so because the Speaker is both the elected presiding officer of the House and the acknowledged leader of its majority party.

Although neither the Constitution nor its own rules require it, the House has always chosen the Speaker from among its own members. Today, the post is held by Nancy Pelosi (D., California). The first woman to serve as Speaker, she was originally elected to the House in 1987 and became Speaker in 2007. \({ }^{4}\)

The Speaker is expected to preside in a fair and judicious manner, and she regularly does. The Speaker is also expected to aid the fortunes of the majority party and its legislative goals, and regularly does that, too.

Nearly all of the Speaker's powers revolve around two duties: to preside and to keep order. The Speaker chairs most sessions of the House, but often appoints another member as temporary presiding officer. No member may speak until he or she is recognized by the Speaker. The presiding officer also interprets and applies the rules, refers bills to committee, rules on points of order (questions of procedure raised by members), puts motions to a vote, and decides the outcome of most votes taken on the floor of the House. (The Speaker can be overridden by a vote of the House, but that almost never happens.) The Speaker also names the members of all select and conference committees and must sign all bills and resolutions passed by the House.

As an elected member of the House, the Speaker may debate and vote on any matter

4 Speaker Pelosi is the 52nd person to hold the post. The first Speaker, elected by the House in 1789 , was Frederick A C. Speaker, elected by the House in 1789 , was Frederick A. C.
Muhlenburg, a Federalist from Pennsylvania. Sam Rayburn Munilenburg, a Federalist from Pennsylvania. Sam Rayburn (D., Texas) held the office for a record of nearly ten terms in (D., Texas) held the office for a record of nearly ten terms in the period from 1940 to 1961 . Ms. Pelosi succeeded Dennis Hastert (R., Illinois). Only two Republicans-Newt Gingrich of Georgia (1995-1999) and Mr. Hastert (1999-2007)-have held the Speakership over the past 50 years.

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

After discussing opening-day activities, display Transparency 12C, State of the Union Message, to begin a discussion of the President's annual address to Congress. Point out that the man in the cartoon is President George W. Bush. Ask: Why is the dog snarling? (The dog has identified President Bush's energy proposals as a bomb.) How do you think members of Congress will react to the President's proposals? (The cartoon suggests that members of Congress will react negatively, like the dog.) Based on this cartoon, do you think the President's party controls Congress? How do you know? (No. Members of the President's party usually agree with his proposals, so he would get a warmer reception if his party were the majority.)

- Interpreting Charts Party and constitutional leadership roles are very important in both houses of Congress. How can you tell which party holds power in the House? The Senate?
before that body. That seldom happens, but when it does, the Speaker appoints another member as the temporary presiding officer and he or she then occupies the Speaker's chair. The Speaker does not often vote, and the House rules say only that the Speaker must vote to break a tie. Notice then, that because a tie vote defeats a question, the Speaker occasionally votes to cause a tie and so defeat a proposal.

The Speaker of the House follows the Vice President in the line of succession to the presidency. That fact is a considerable testimony to the power and importance of both the office and the person who holds it.

The President of the Senate The Constitution makes the Vice President the President of the Senate, the Senate's presiding officer. This means that (1) unlike the House, the Senate does not choose its own presiding officer and (2) unlike the Speaker of the House, the Senate's presiding officer is not in fact a member of that body. Indeed, the Vice President might not even be a member of the party that controls the Senate.

All of this adds up to the major reason why the Vice President plays a much less powerful role in the Senate than that played by the Speaker in the House. Also note this important point: the Vice President's career path, the route traveled to the post, is a much different path than the one the Speaker has followed. The Vice President has not become the Senate's presiding officer out of long service in that body. He has, instead, come to the post out of a much different process-as you will see when we take a more detailed look at the vice presidency in Chapter 13.

The president of the Senate does have the usual powers of a presiding officer: to recognize members, put questions to a vote, and so Checkpoint When must the Speaker vote?

\section*{Leadership Mini-Lesson}

Leaders of congress Use the chart on this page or the online update at PearsonSuccessNet.com as a starting point for students to research the current congressional leaders. In groups or individually, ask students to research the backgrounds of these leaders, which can be found on their personal websites at www.house.gov or www.senate. gov. Then have students present a brief summary of each member's background and discuss what these leaders have in common.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Tell students that today they will learn about the organization of Congress by playing the role of a congressional leader or a member of the media during a press conference.
L2 ELL Differentiate Explain what a press conference is, who attends, and what happens there. If possible, play a video clip of a national press conference.

\section*{ASSIGN ROLES FOR PRESS CONFERENCE}

Assign each student a role to play for a simulated press conference. Tell students that the press conference is for foreign journalists unfamiliar with the U.S. legislative system. The media's goal is to ask questions that would help them write a story for a foreign newspaper, describing the roles of congressional leaders.
Assign students to these roles:
- Speaker of the House
- Majority floor leader (House)
- Majority whip (House)
- Minority floor leader (House)
- Minority whip (House)
- President of the Senate
- President Pro Tempore
- Majority floor leader (Senate)
- Majority whip (Senate)
- Minority floor leader (Senate)
- Minority whip (Senate)
- Members of the media

L1 L2 Differentiate Assign students to be members of the media.

\section*{L2}

ELL Differentiate Assign ELLs a native-speaking partner to help address errors in grammar and to practice questions before asking them in front of the full class.
Tell students to go to the Online Update to find out who the congressional leaders are today.

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Charts The Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore of the Senate will be members of the majority party in that chamber.
Checkpoint to break a tie

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

To congressional leaders, distribute the Chapter 12 Section 1 Core Worksheet A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 129), which guides students in preparing for their role.

To members of the media, distribute the Chapter 12 Section 1 Core Worksheet B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 130), which guides students in preparing questions for the congressional leaders.
Give students adequate time to prepare their roles. Tell students to go to the Online Update to learn about today's party strength.

Party Strength of House and Senate*

1) Analyzing Charts This chart shows the strength of each party at the start of the past fifteen terms of Congress. Independents are placed with their caucus party. What is the largest majority that each party has held in each house?
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
Who presides over the Senate if the Vice Presi dent is absent?
on. However, the Vice President cannot take the floor to speak or debate and may vote only to break a tie.

Any influence a Vice President may have in the Senate is largely the result of personal abilities and relationships. Several of the more recent Vice Presidents came to that office from the Senate: Harry Truman, Alben Barkley, Richard Nixon, Lyndon Johnson, Hubert Humphrey, Walter Mondale, Dan Quayle, Al Gore, and Joseph Biden. Each of them was able to build at least some power into the position out of that earlier experience.

The Senate does have another presiding officer, the President pro tempore, who serves in the Vice President's absence. The President pro tem pore, or President pro tem for short, is elected by the Senate itself and is always a leading member of the majority party-usually its longest serving member. Today, the post is occupied by Senator Robert C. Byrd (D., West Virginia). Senator Byrd, who was elected to his first term in the upper house in 1958, became President pro tem pore in 2007.

The President pro tem follows the Speaker in the line of presidential succession. Other senators often preside over the Senate, on a temporary basis if the Vice President is absent; newly elected members regularly do so early in their terms.

\section*{Party Officers}

Congress is a political body. This is so for two leading reasons: (1) Congress is the nation's central policy-making body, and (2) Congress is partisan. Reflecting its political character, both houses of Congress are organized along party lines.

The Party Caucus The party caucus is a closed meeting of the members of each party in each house. These meetings are regularly held just before Congress convenes in January and occasionally during a session. In recent years

\section*{Background}

PORTRAIT OF A SPEAKER Physically, Sam Rayburn was not a big man. But as Speaker of the House for a record 17 years, "Mr. Sam" cast a long shadow. Becoming Speaker in 1940, Rayburn, a staunch Democrat, presided at a time when most formal power in the House resided with the committee chairs, not the Speaker. According to Mr. Sam, "You cannot lead people by trying to drive them. Persuasion and reason are the only ways to lead them. " Rayburn put his considerable persuasive skills to work in his famous "Board of Education," a room tucked away beneath the House chamber. There he regularly summoned influential Democrats to discuss issues and twist arms. Today, as Congress organizes each new term, members vie for newly vacated offices. But one room is not up for grabs. By tradition, the new Speaker inherits Rayburn's legendary hideaway.
the Republicans have called their caucus in each house the party conference, and the Democrats now use this term in the Senate, too.

A caucus deals mostly with matters related to party organization, such as the selection of the party's floor leaders and questions of 5 Anumber of informal groupings of members of Congress meet to discuss matters of mutual interest. Some are parisan, others are bipartisan, and several use the word caucus in their tites. Some of these groups include, for example, the Congressional Black Caucus, the House Republican Study Committee, the Pro-Life Caucus, and the Congressional Hispanic Caucus.

committee membership. It sometimes takes stands on particular bills, but neither party tries to force its members to follow its caucus decisions, nor can it. \({ }^{5}\)

The policy committee is composed of the party's top leadership. It acts as an executive committee for the party caucus. That body is known as the policy committee in each party's structure in the Senate and in the Republicans' organization in the House. However, it is called the steering and policy committee by the Democrats in the lower chamber.

\section*{Representation by State, 111th Congress* \\ The colors on these maps show the compostition of congressional delegations. Today, these color designations are commonly used to indicate the typical partisan voting Update Check out updated representation by State at PearsonSuccessNet.com} patterns among the States. Which States are the same color on both maps?
\(\sqrt{ }\) Checkpoint What is a party caucus?

Chapter 12 • Section 1335

\section*{Background}

RED STATES, bLUE STATES As election results roll in, television viewers see States on a map turn red for a Republican win and blue for a Democratic win. News outlets also regularly refer to "red States" and "blue States." This has not always been the case. Earliest red-blue references date back to 1900, when the Chicago Tribune followed the traditional European practice of associating red with liberal parties and blue with conservative parties. In the aftermath of the disputed 2000 election, news sources began to reach consensus on the current color scheme. However, stereotyping a State as "red" or "blue" ignores the diversity within each State. For example, California has gone Democratic in all recent presidential elections, yet it has a Republican governor. In using these polarizing designations, we must keep in mind that no State is all red or all blue

\section*{CONDUCT A PRESS CONFERENCE}

Organize the congressional leaders in front of the members of the media. Have the leaders introduce themselves, using their title followed by their last name. Allow each member of the media to ask a question, being sure that all leaders have a chance to answer at least one. Instruct the journalists to address each leader in the following proper form:
- Mr. Madam Speaker
- Mr. Madam Vice President

All others:
- Representative (last name)
- Senator (last name)

Remind all students to take notes on important information or questions they have for the follow-up discussion.
L2 ELL Differentiate Write important key terms and phrases from answers on the board. Remind students to ask clarifying questions.

\section*{FOLLOW UP}

Conclude the lesson with a recap of the leadership roles in Congress. Include a brief discussion of the seniority system, committees, and the role of the majority party in setting the agenda for a Congress. Emphasize that since the leaders of the houses assign bills to committee, they have significant control over what will be discussed.
L2 ELL Differentiate Clarify the terms majority and minority for students, confirming that they understand that the party in control is the majority.

CONNECT TO THE ESSENTIAL QUESTION
Make connections to the unit's Essential Question:
What makes a successful Congress? Ask students if the constitutional officers, party officers, and seniority system con tribute to a more or less successful Congress. Students may discuss the criteria for success, which you may want to keep in mind for lessons later in the chapter.
Tell students to go to the Online Update to check out updated representation by State.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint a closed meeting of the members of each party in each house Representation by State Washington, Oregon, California, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, North Dakota, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Alaska, Hawaii

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Display Transparency 12D, Representation by State, 111 th Congress. Use this map and the information in the Background Note to lead a discussion about the "red state" and "blue state" labels used by the media.
L4 Differentiate Have students go to www.house. gov to research each party's position on a specific issue. For example, how does each party stand on the issue of the rising cost of healthcare? Students will be able to gather information by following links to the office of the Speaker, majority and minority leaders and whips, and the caucuses for each party. Have students present a summary of the issue and the parties' positions to the class.
L2 Differentiate Display Transparency 12E, which is the graph "Party Strength of House and Senate" in the student text. Help students read the graph. Point out that there are actually two graphs-one representing the House and the other, the Senate.
Ask: Which party was the majority in the House between 2007 and 2009? (Democrats) How do you know? Name three ways. (blue bar is longer than red bar; number on blue bar is larger than number on red bar; the blue donkey symbol means majority Democrat)

L4 D
Differentiate Have students conduct research on the changing role of the Speaker of the House. Ask them to summarize their research in brief reports.

- Interpreting Cartoons Congressional committees hold hearings about a wide variety of matters. What does the cartoon say about the feelings of those who are asked to give testimony?

Checkpoint
What do floor leaders do?

The Floor Leaders Next to the Speaker, the floor leaders in the House and Senate are the most important officers in Congress. They do not hold official positions in either chamber. Rather, they are party officers, picked for their posts by their party colleagues.

The floor leaders are legislative strategists. Assisted by paid staff, they try to carry out the decisions of their parties' caucuses and steer floor action to their parties' benefit. Each of them is also the chief spokesman for his party in his chamber. All of that calls for political skills of a high order. Senator Howard Baker (R., Tennessee), one of the Senate's most effective floor leaders, often likened his job to that of "herding cats."

The floor leader of the party that holds the majority of seats in each house of Congress is known as the majority leader. The floor leader of the party that holds the minority of seats in each house is the minority leader. The majority leader is the more powerful in each house-for the obvious reason that the majority party has more seats (more votes) than the other party has. And, the majority leader very largely controls the order of business on the floor in his or her chamber.

The two floor leaders in each house are assisted by party whips. The majority whip and the minority whip are, in effect, assistant floor leaders. Each of them is chosen at the party caucus, almost always at the floor leader's recommendation. A number of assistant whips serve in the House.

Whips serve as a liaison-a two-way link-between the party's leadership and its rank-and-file members. \({ }^{6}\) The whips check with party members and tell the floor leader which members, and how many votes, can be counted on in any particular matter. The whips also see that all members of the party are present for important votes and that they vote with the party leadership. If a member must be absent for some reason, a whip sees that that member is paired with a member of the other party who will also be absent that day or who agrees not to vote on certain measures at that day's session-so one nonvote cancels out another.

\section*{Committee Chairmen}

The bulk of the work of Congress, especially in the House, is really done in committee. Thus, committee chairmen-those members who head the standing committees in each chamber-hold very strategic posts. The chairman of each of these permanent committees is chosen from the majority party by the majority party caucus. \({ }^{7}\) These men and women are always ranking members of the majority party.

Although committee chairmen are less powerful now than in years past, they still have a major say in such matters as which bills a committee will consider and in what order and at what length, whether public hearings are to be held, and what witnesses the committee will call. When a committee's bill has been

6 The term whip was borrowed from British politics. There, it The term whip was borrowed from British politics. There, it came from the "whipper-in" in a fox hunt, the rider who is supposed to keep the hounds bunched in a pack.
7 The title chairman is used here because this is the form used in both houses of Congress today, both officially and informally. olyared a standing ( in the Senate, three in the House) are chaired by women today as you can see in the tables in Section 3 where the current chairmen of the standing committees are identified.

\section*{Debate}

BEHIND THE SCENES At age 85, Representative Ralph Hall (R., Texas) was the oldest member of the House in 2008-but not the oldest to have ever been elected to Congress (he was elected at age 57). That honor goes to Representative Isaac Bloom of New York, who was elected in 1803 at the age of 87 . Second in line is Representative James Bowler, a Chicago Democrat, who won a special election for a seat left vacant by Representative Al Sabath's death. Long before that event, Bowler and Sabath had served together on the city council. The council reached a deadlock over which of the two men should run for a congressional seat. Finally, the two men tossed a coin. Sabath won, with Bowler agreeing to fill the seat when Sabath left. Forty-six years later, he did. Bowler was sworn into Congress for his first term in the early 1950 s, at the age of 78 . reported-approved for consideration-to the floor, the chairman usually manages the debate and tries to steer it to final passage.

We shall take a closer look at committees and their chairs in a moment. But, first, consider the seniority rule.

The Seniority Rule The seniority rule is, in fact, an unwritten custom. It dates from the late 1800 s, and is still more or less closely followed in both houses today. The seniority rule provides that the most important posts in Congress, in both the formal and the party organizations, will be held by those party members with the longest records of service. (Notice that seniority rule does not apply to the presiding officers or to the floor leaders in either chamber. As you've seen, their selection is otherwise provided for.)

The rule is applied most strictly to the choice of committee chairmen. The head of each committee is almost always the longestserving majority party member of that committee. The rule is also followed quite closely in the selection of those members who chair the several subcommittees into which nearly all the standing committees are divided.

Criticism of the Seniority Rule Critics of the seniority rule are many, and they do make a strong case. They insist that the seniority system ignores ability, rewards mere length of service, and works to discourage younger members. Its opponents also note that the rule means that a committee head often comes from a "safe" constituency-a State or district in which one party regularly wins the seat. With no play of fresh and conflicting forces in those places, critics claim, the chairman of a committee is often out of touch with current public opinion.

Defenders of the seniority rule argue that it ensures that a powerful and experienced member will head each committee. They also say that the rule encourages members to stay on a particular committee and so, over time, gain a wide-ranging knowledge of matters that fall within that committee's jurisdiction. In addition, they note that the rule is fairly easy to apply and that it very nearly eliminates the possibility of fights within the party.

The rule's opponents have gained some ground in recent years. Thus, the House Republican Conference (caucus) now picks several GOP members of House committees by secret ballot. House Democrats use secret ballots to choose a committee chairman whenever 20 percent of their caucus requests that procedure.

Whatever the arguments against the seniority rule, it is unlikely to be eliminated. Those members with the real power to abolish the rule are also the ones who reap the largest benefits from it.

\section*{jurisdiction}
\(n\). the range of matters under the committee's control

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}
\begin{tabular}{|cc|}
\hline Essential Questions & \begin{tabular}{l}
To continue to build a \\
response to the chapter \\
Journal \\
Essential Question, go to your \\
Essential Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer this question: How do constitutional and party officers keep Congress organized?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Describe opening day in the House.
3. Summarize the duties of the floor leaders in each house
4. (a) What is the seniority rule? (b) What are the arguments for and against it?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Understand Point of View (a) Senator Howard Baker likened his job as majority leader to that of "herding cats." What does that mean? (b) What problems do majority leaders face?
6. Make Comparisons Compare and contrast the positions of Speaker of the House and President of the Senate. Which is more powerful, and why?
7. Draw Conclusions How important are committee chairmen in Congress? Explain.

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Essay: Gather
Details The structure of Congress has evolved over time. As you read the chapter, take notes on the organizational structure and how it affects the lawmaking process.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Distribute the Rubric for Assessing a News Article (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 169). Have students write an article explaining the U.S. legislative system.
L2 ELL L1 Distribute the rubric noted above. Have students write an article about one leadership position in either the House or Senate. Ask students to construct an organizational chart that shows the hierarchy of power in Congress. Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 131) Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 132)

Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The organization of \\
Congress (Question 1)
\end{tabular} & Make a chart showing the leadership roles. \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The duties of floor lead- \\ ers (Questions 3, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make posters comparing \\ leadership in the House with leadership in \\
the Senate.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The seniority rule and \\
committee chairmen \\
(Questions 4, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a T chart showing the arguments for \\ and against the seniority rule.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Opening day in the \\ House (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Lead students in a exercise in which they \\ portray opening day in the House. Divide \\ students into two groups: Democrats and \\ Republicans.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Constitutional officers preside and keep formal order over the proceedings. Party officers keep legislative order by explaining party positions and educating party members on bills coming before each chamber.
2. The members choose a Speaker, who administers the oath to the rest of the House. Then they elect officers, adopt the rules, and select members of standing committees.
3. Floor leaders are legislative who carry out the decisions of their party's caucus. Majority leaders control the order of business on the floor.
4. (a) custom in which most important posts go to party members with the longest service (b) Arguments for: ensures a powerful, experienced member will head each committee; prevents fights within party. Arguments against: discourages younger members; rewards longevity instead of merit; chairmen often come from "safe" seats and are thus out of touch with public opinion
5. (a) and (b) It is often hard to get Congress members to go along with the party position.
6. The President of the Senate is the Vice President, who is not a member and holds little power there. He or she cannot speak in floor debate and may vote only to break a tie. The Speaker is the most powerful member of Congress, because he or she is the elected presiding officer and leader of the majority party.
7. Committee chairs have great influence over what bills Congress will pass in their committee's jurisdiction.
QUICK WRITE Students should note organizational structures and their effects on lawmaking.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{How do committees help Congress do its work?}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|}
\hline Standing Committee & Select Committee & Joint Committee & Conference Committee \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- permanent considers all bills of simiIar subject matter \\
- 20 in House; 16 in Senate - decides fate of most bills \\
- divided into subcommittees \\
- House Rules Committee controls flow of bills to floor and sets conditions for their consideration there
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- set up for special purpose, often for limited time \\
- Speaker or President of Senate appoints members \\
- investigate current issue
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- composed of members of both houses some are temporary select committees \\
- some are permanent \\
- some investigate and issue periodic reports
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- temporary joint committee \\
- resolves differences in House and Senate versions of a bill \\
- produces compromise bill that both houses will accept
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- examine the need for committees to divide work by creating an organization for an event.
- identify jurisdictions of House committees by matching committee names to descriptions.
- trace the path of the 2007 Farm Bill through the House.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Committees in Congress}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How do committees help
Congress do its work? Use a table to keep track of the purpose and characteristics of each type of congressional committee.

\section*{Political Dictionary}

\section*{- standing} committee
- subcommittee
- joint committee conference committee
committee

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how standing committees function.
2. Describe the responsibilities and duties of the House Rules Committee.
3. Describe the role of select committees.
4. Compare the functions of joint and conference committees.

Image Above: Former Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld testifying at a defense appropriations hearing

Do you know the phrase "a division of labor"? It means dividing the work to be done, assigning the several parts of the overall task to various members of the group. The House and the Senate are both so large, and their agendas are so crowded with so many different matters, that both chambers must rely on a division of labor. That is to say, much of the work that Congress does is in fact done by committees. Indeed, Representative Clem Miller (D., Calif.) once described Congress as "a collection of committees that come together in a chamber periodically to approve of one another's actions."

\section*{Standing Committees}

In 1789 , the House and Senate each adopted the practice of naming a special committee to consider each bill as it was introduced. By 1794, there were more than 300 committees in each chamber. Each house then began to set up permanent panels, standing committees, to which all similar bills can be sent. The number of these committees has varied over the years. There are 20 standing committees in the House and 16 in the Senate today. Each House committee has from 10 to as many as 75 members, and each Senate committee has from 14 to 28 . Representatives are normally assigned to one or two standing committees and senators to three or four.

The pivotal role these committees play in the lawmaking process cannot be overstated. Most bills receive their most thorough consideration in these bodies. Members of both houses regularly respect the decisions and follow the recommendations they make. Thus, the fate of most bills is decided in the various standing committees, not on the floor of either house. More than a century ago, Woodrow Wilson described "Congress in its committee rooms" as "Congress at work," and that remains true today.

Some panels are more prominent and more influential than others. As you would expect, most members try to win assignments to one of these major panels. The leading committees in the House are the Rules, Ways and Means, Appropriations, Armed Services, Judiciary, Foreign Affairs, and Agriculture committees. In the Senate, senators usually compete for places on the Foreign Relations, Appropriations, Finance, Judiciary, Armed Services, and Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs committees.

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

Before students begin the Bellringer activity, you may want to review the information on decision making in the Skills Handbook, p. S1 8.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Standing committees decide the fate of most bills. - The powerful House Rules Committee can speed, delay, or even prevent House action on a bill. \(\bullet\) Both houses create temporary select committees to investigate current issues. - Joint committees are composed of members of both houses. - The majority party holds the majority in each committee. • Conference committees resolve differences in House and Senate versions of a bill to produce a single compromise bill.
CONCEPTS: separation of powers, role of government in public policy enduring understandings: • Most work in Congress is divided among committees that focus on particular policy areas. - Most bills never make it out of committee. • Bills must pass both houses in identical form to go to the President.

Of course, some of the other committees are particularly attractive to some members. Thus, a representative whose district lies wholly within a major city might want to sit on the House Committee on Education and the Workforce. A senator from one of the western States might angle for assignment to the Senate's Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Most of the standing committees review bills dealing with particular policy matters say, public lands, taxes, or veterans' affairs. However, there are four standing committees that are not organized as subject-matter bodies: in the House, the Rules Committee, the Committee on House Administration, and the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, and in the Senate, the Committee on Rules and Administration.

When a bill is introduced in either house, the Speaker or the President of the Senate refers the measure to the appropriate standing committee. Thus, the Speaker sends all tax measures to the House Ways and Means Committee; in the Senate, tax measures go to the Finance Committee. A bill dealing with the creation of additional federal district judgeships will be sent to the Judiciary Committee in both chambers, and so on.

Recall that the chairman of each of the standing committees is chosen according to the seniority rule. As a consequence, most committee chairmen have served in Congress for at least 12 years and some much longer. The seniority rule is also closely applied in each house when it elects the other members of each of its committees.

The members of each standing committee are formally elected by a floor vote at the beginning of each term of Congress. In fact, each party has already drawn up its own committee roster before that vote, and the floor vote merely ratifies those party choices.

The majority party always holds a majority of the seats on each standing committee. \({ }^{8}\) The other party is well represented, however.

8 The only exception is the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, with five Democrats and five Republicans. Often called the House Ethics Committee, it investigates allegations of misconduct by House members. In the Senate, a six-member bipartisan Select Committee on Ethics plays a similar role.

\section*{A Bill in the House}

In the past, bills were usually referred, or sent, to one committee for review. Recently, however, bills have been more frequently referred to two or more committees. Here is the path of the Food and Energy Security Act through the House in 2007.

Introduced in the House

Speaker Referred Bill - The Speaker of the House referred the bill to two committees.

Committee on Agriculture
Subcommittees
- Conservation, Credit, Energy, and Research
- Department Operations, Oversight, Nutrition, and Forestry
- General Farm Commodities and Risk Management
- Horticulture and Organic

Agriculture
- Livestock, Dairy, and Poultry
- Specialty Crops, Rural Development and Foreign Agriculture
Bill Was Reported
- The bill was discharged from the committees on Foreign Affairs and reported by the committee on Agriculture. Then it went to the Rules Committee.
- The Rules Committee set aside one hour for general debate, plus time to consider amendments. It also instructed the House to consider a bill in the Committee of the Whole (see Section 3).

Bill Was Sent to Full House
- The bill was considered in the Committee of the Whole-that is, the full House sitting as a committee rather than under typical floor rules.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 12, Section 2 :
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 133)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 134)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 135)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 137)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 139)
L3 Quiz A (p. 141)
L2 Quiz B (p. 142)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 133) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 134)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: Think of a big event that you might like to plan, such as homecoming, a fundraiser, a science fair, or a sports tournament. Suppose you are the chairperson of the planning committee. Make a list of tasks required to plan and carry out the event. Then develop a system of committees and divide up the tasks among them. You may use paragraph or chart form.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Review students' organizational plans for their event. Ask them what committees they would form and the duties they would assign to each committee. Tell students that, similarly, Congress is broken down into committees to divide up the huge volume of work into manageable portions. Tell students that in Congress, committees do the bulk of the work. Ask: Why does Congress use committees, rather than the full House or Senate, to shape bills? (With so many people, it would be difficult to get anything done. In addition, committees allow more work to be done because different committees address different issues.)

\section*{REVIEW COMMItTEES}

Write the following terms and definitions on the board, or ask students to provide definitions: standing committees: permanent groups set up to consider bills on similar topics; select committees: temporary groups established for a specific purpose, usually for a limited time; joint committees: committees with members from both houses; conference committees: temporary joint committees that work out differences in bills passed in each house
Spend a few minutes discussing why each type of committee is needed.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 12 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 135), which asks students to match committees to their jurisdictions. Explain that jurisdiction means "area of authority. " Point out that a committee's name gives clues to its jurisdiction.
L1 L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 12 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 137), which asks students to identify fewer committees and employs simpler vocabulary to describe the committees.

\(L 2\)
ELL Differentiate Explain the meanings of difficult words in committee names, such as agriculture (farming), appropriations (spending), armed services (military), commerce (business), judiciary (having to do with the courts, or judicial branch), and infrastructure (basic public facilities and services, such as transportation and communications systems, water lines, and power plants).
Tell students to go to the Online Update to check out House standing committee chairs today.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|l|}{\begin{tabular}{l}
House Standing Committee Chairs \\
Committee \\
Name, Party, State, Year Elected
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline Agriculture & Collin C. Peterson (D., Minn.), 1990 \\
\hline Appropriations & David Obey (D., Wis.), 1969 \\
\hline Armed Services & Ike Skelton (D., Mo.), 1976 \\
\hline Budget & John M. Spratt, J. (D., S. C.), 1982 \\
\hline Education and Labor & George Miller (D., Calif.), 1974 \\
\hline Energy and Commerce & John D. Dingell (D., Mich.), 1955 \\
\hline Financial Services & Barney Frank (D., Mass.), 1980 \\
\hline Foreign Affairs & Howard Berman (D., Calif.), 1982 \\
\hline Homeland Security & Bennie G. Thompson (D., Miss.), 1993 \\
\hline House Administration & Robert A Brady (D., Penn.), 1998 \\
\hline Judiciary & John Conyers, Jr. (D., Mich.), 1964 \\
\hline Natural Resources & Nick J. Rahall II (D., W. Va.), 1976 \\
\hline Oversight and Government Reform & Henry A. Waxman (D., Calif.), 1974 \\
\hline Rules & Louise M. Slaughter (D., N. Y.), 1986 \\
\hline Science and Technology & Bart Gordon (D., Tenn.), 1984 \\
\hline Small Business & Nydia M. Velazquez (D., N. Y.), 1992 \\
\hline Standards of Official Conduct & Vacant \\
\hline Transportation and Infrastructure & James L. Oberstar (D., Minn.), 1974 \\
\hline Veterans' Affairs & Bob Filner (D., Calif.), 1992 \\
\hline Ways and Means & Charles B. Rangel (D., N. Y.), 1970 \\
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|l|}{} \\
\hline D Analyzing Charts These are the House standing committees and their chairs. What predictions can you make about the committees' jurisdiction based on their titles? & \begin{tabular}{l}
Update \\
To check out who holds these positions today, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Subcommittees Most standing committees are divided into subcommittees-divisions of standing committees which do most of the committees' work. Each subcommittee is responsible for a portion of the committee's workload. There are now some 150 subcommittees in the two houses-nearly 70 in the Senate and 99 in the House.

Take the Senate's 19 -member Judiciary Committee (currently composed of 10 Democrats and 9 Republicans). It does most of its work in its seven subcommittees. Each member serves on at least two of these, and their titles describe their focuses: Adminstrative Oversight and the Courts; Antitrust, Competition Policy and Consumer Rights; The Constitution; Crime and Drugs; Human Rights and the Law; Immigration, Refugees and Border Security; and Terrorism, Technology and Homeland Security.

The House Rules Committee The House Committee on Rules is the Speaker's "right arm." It controls the flow of bills to the floor and sets the conditions for their consideration there. The panel is often described as the "traffic cop" in the lower house. So many measures are introduced in the House each term that some sort of screening device is absolutely necessary

Most bills die in the committees to which they are referred. Still, several hundred are reported out every year. So, before most of these bills can reach the floor of the House, they must also clear the Rules Committee.

Normally, a bill gets to the floor only if it has been granted a rule-been scheduled for floor consideration-by the Rules Committee. The committee decides whether and under what conditions the full House will consider a measure. As you will see, this means that the powerful 13 -member Rules Committee can speed, delay, or even prevent House action on a measure. In the smaller Senate, where the process is not so closely regulated, the majority leader controls the appearance of bills on the floor.

\section*{Select Committees}

At times, each house finds a need for a select committee, sometimes called special committees. They are panels set up for some specific purpose and, most often, for a limited time. The Speaker of the House or the President of the Senate appoints the members of these special committees, with the advice of the majority and minority leaders.

The congressional power to investigate is an essential part of the lawmaking function. Congress must decide on the need for new laws and gauge the adequacy of those already on the books. It also must exercise its vital oversight function, to ensure that federal agencies are following the laws it has already passed. At times, too, a committee may conduct an investigation of an issue-for example, the threat of domestic terrorism-in order to focus public attention on that matter. Most investigations are conducted by standing committees, or by their subcommittees.

However, select committees are sometimes formed to investigate a current issue,

\section*{How Government Works}

FARM BILL In addition to continuing current farm subsidies, the 2007 Farm Bill specified billions of dollars of new spending for anti-hunger and conservation programs, fruit and vegetable growers, dairy farmers, and the biofuel industry. The bill passed both houses of Congress. When it reached President Bush's desk, he vetoed it. He objected to what he saw as the bill's wasteful spending: "Americans sent us to Washington to achieve results and be good stewards of their hard-earned taxpayer dollars. This bill violates that fundamental commitment. " Breaking with the President, House Republican Conference Chairman Adam Putnam (Florida) supported the bill, explaining: "The principal purpose of agriculture policy in the United States is to guarantee we're not as dependent on other countries for our food as we are for our fuel. " Both the House and Senate overrode the veto, and the bill is now law.
as the Senate's Select Committee on Indian Affairs recently did. That 15 -member panel spent nearly three years investigating the behavior of a number of well-connected lobbyists who represented several Native American tribes as they sought to establish gambling casinos. The committee's extensive probe uncovered massive instances of fraud, bribery, tax evasion, and other illegal activities for which several offenders began to serve long prison sentences in 2006 and 2007. The most prominent of those miscreants were Washington-based lobbyist Jack Abramoff and a member of Congress, Representative Robert Ney (R., Ohio), who had been chairman of the House Committee on Administration.

At times, select committees have been spectacularly important.This happened, for example, with the Senate's Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, popularly known as the Senate Watergate Committee. As the Watergate scandal began to unfold in 1973, the Senate created that committee. Chaired by Senator Sam Ervin (D., North Carolina), its job was to investigate "the extent, if any, to which illegal, improper, or unethical activities were engaged in by any persons . . . in the presidential election of 1972 ." Its sensational hearings riveted the nation for months. Eventually, they formed a key link in the chain of events that led to President Richard Nixon's resignation from office in mid-1974.

Another notable instance came in 1987, with the work of two panels: the Senate's Select Committee on Secret Military Assistance to Iran and the Nicaraguan Opposition, and the House Select Committee to Investigate Covert Arms Transactions with Iran. These twin committees, often referred to jointly as the Iran-Contra Committee, probed the Reagan administration's conduct of two highly secret projects abroad: the sale of arms to Iran and efforts to give military aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. The operation in Iran was intended, at least in part, as an arms-for-hostages deal, and it failed. The aid to the Contras was funded in part with money from the Iranian arms sales, despite an act of Congress that expressly prohibited such aid by the United States.

Most congressional investigations are not nearly so visible, nor so historic. Their more usual shape can be seen when, for example, the House Committee on Agriculture probes the spruce budworm problem (an infestation affecting trees in the Pacific Northwest) or the Senate's Armed Services Committee looks at the Army's recruiting programs.

\section*{Joint and Conference Committees}

A joint committee is one composed of members of both houses. Some of these are select committees set up to serve some temporary purpose. Most are permanent groups that serve on a regular basis. Because the standing committees of the two houses often duplicate one another's work, many have long urged that Congress make much greater use of the joint committee device.

Some joint committees are investigative \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is a select committee?
miscreants
n. criminals
in nature and issue periodic reports to the

\section*{Background} ways and means committee Ways and Means is the oldest standing committee in Congress. Yet the idea of a committee to handle public finances is even older. Britain established a ways and means committee in 1641. America's colonial and early State legislatures adopted the British practice. Congress created a Ways and Means Committee in its first session in 1789. As a select committee, it was disbanded and reinstituted each session. Congress redefined it as a standing committee in 1802. Its jurisdiction has changed many times through its history. At first its duties included appropriations as well as revenues, In 1865, Congress created new committees on banking and appropriations to relieve Ways and Means of some of its huge workload. Today, Ways and Means remains one of the most powerful committees in Congress, with responsibilities for government revenues, borrowing, and Social Security.

\section*{FOLLOW A BILL THROUGH THE HOUSE}

Direct students to the chart in the text showing the path of the 2007 Farm Bill in the House. Point out that while most of the work of Congress happens in committees, most of the work of committees happens in subcommittees. Follow the path of the Farm Bill through the House. Students may be interested to learn that the bill included provisions for foreign food aid, which led to the referral to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. During this portion of the lesson, be sure to point out that bills are referred, or sent, to committees by the Speaker or President of the Senate.
L2 ELL Differentiate Teach the prefix sub-, which means "under" or "subordinate."
L4 Differentiate If you have classroom Internet access, you may have students access current legislation through GPOaccess.gov and trace its path through committees and subcommittees. Students should then make a flowchart showing the path of one of those bills.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 12 Section 2 Extend Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 139), which summarizes bills referred to House committees. Have students use the descriptions of committee jurisdictions in the Core Worksheet to predict which committees worked on each bill.
L3 Differentiate Assign student groups one committee of Congress. Have them create a poster that explains the jurisdiction of each committee, its history, its chairman, and its ranking member.
L2 Differentiate Have students research and identify the committees on which their representative and senators serve, and in what capacity.
Tell students to go to the Online Update to check out Senate standing committee chairs today.

Government
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A select committee is a committee appointed for a specific purpose, often for a limited time.
Analyzing Charts The Senate is smaller.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3
Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 141)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 142)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The role of commit- \\ tees (Questions 1, 2, \\
\(3,5,6)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review the Chapter 12 Section 2 Core Work- \\ sheet, which lists committee jurisdictions. \\
Refer students to the graphic in Section 3 \\ showing how many bills become laws. Ask \\ students to propose ways that Congress \\ could review all these bills on a vast range of \\ topics without committees.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The power to investi- \\ gate (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Draw a triangle with each of the branches \\ of government on the board. Point out that \\ Congress can investigate the other branches, \\ which is part of the system of checks and \end{tabular} \\ balances.
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A joint committee is any committee that is made up of members from both houses. A conference committee is a particular type of joint committee that has the job of reconciling House and Senate versions of a bill.
Analyzing Charts to avoid duplication of efforts between standing committees in each house

The Joint Economic Committee addresses matters related to the U.S. addresses Chair: Sen. Charles Schumer (D., N.Y.)

The Joint Committee on the Library addresses matters related to the Library addresses of Congress.
Chair: Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D., Calif.)
The Joint Committee on Printing oversees the Government Printing Office and other printing by the Federal Government. Chair: Rep. Robert A. Brady (D., Penn.)

The Joint Committee on Taxation is involved in legislation about taxes. The chair position rotates between the chair of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee.

Analyzing Charts The Joint Committees of Congress include members from both houses. Why do you think these matters are dealt with by joint committees?

House and Senate-for example, the Joint Committee on Taxation. It conducts indepth studies of the federal tax system and presents its findings to the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate's Finance Committee. Most often, those committees perform more routine duties-for example, the Joint Committee on the Library oversees the administration of that remarkable institution, the Library of Congress.

Before a bill may be sent to the President, each house must pass it in identical form. Sometimes, the two houses pass differing versions, and the first house will not agree to the changes the other has made. When this happens, a conference committee-a temporary, joint body-is created to iron out the differences in the bill. Its job is to produce a compromise bill that both houses will accept-as you will see shortly.

1. Guiding Question Use your com pleted table to answer this question How do committees help Congress do its work?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What are standing committees? (b) What rule determines which members of Congress will serve as chairs and which as members of each committee?
3. Describe the role of (a) select committees, (b) joint committees, and (c) conference committees.
4. Why is the power of Congress to investigate a vital part of its legislative functions?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Predict Consequences What might happen if all proposed bills were sent directly to the full House for a vote?
6. Express Problems Clearly What are the benefits and drawbacks of the committee and subcommittee system used by Congress?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Essay: Establish a Point of View Make a graphic organizer to keep track of the pros and cons of each aspect of congressional organization. Start thinking about whether you would change any aspect of how Congress is organized to make it more efficient or effective.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Committees help by dividing up the labor. Each committee and its subcommittees specialize in evaluating bills in a specific area. Each house forms temporary select committees to investigate current issues. Conference committees reconcile differences between House and Senate versions of a bill before it is sent to the President.
2. (a) permanent panels to which all bills within their subject area are referred (b) seniority
3. (a) Select committees are temporary committees set up for a specific purpose. (b) Joint committees are composed of members of both houses; most are permanent and perform routine duties. (c) Conference committees reconcile differences between House and Senate versions of a bill.
4. Congress investigates to gauge the adequacy of existing laws, decide whether new ones are needed, determine whether the executive branch is carrying out the existing laws, and focus public attention on important problems.
5. Members of Congress would be overwhelmed. It is not possible for each member to have expertise in every policy area or time to investigate every proposed bill.
6. Benefits: committee members gain expertise by specializing; cuts down workload; provides flexibility; allows members of both houses to work together. Drawbacks: most bills never receive a floor vote; majority party controls agenda of every committee.
QUICK WRITE Students will make a pro-con graphic organizer to evaluate congressional organization.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{Making Law:} The House

Guiding Question
What steps does a successful bill follow as it moves through the House? Use a flowchart to keep track of the progress of a bill through the House.

Political Dictionary
- bill - pigeonhole
- joint resolution - discharge - concurrent petition resolution - quorum - resolution - engrossed
- rider

Objectives
1. Identify the first steps in the introduction of a bill to the House.
2. Describe what happens to a bill once it is referred to a committee.
3. Explain how House leaders schedule debate on a bill
4. Explain what happens to a bill on the House floor, and identify the final step in the passage of a bill in the House.

Image Above: Rep. Greg Walden (R. Ore.) waves a bill during a committee markup.

These numbers may surprise you: From 6,000 to 9,000 bills and resolutions are introduced in the House and Senate during each session of Congress. Fewer than 10 percent become law. Where do all those measures come from? Why are so few of them passed? How, by what process, does Congress make law?

\section*{The First Steps}

A bill is a proposed law presented to the House or Senate for consideration. Most bills introduced in either house do not originate with members themselves. Instead, however, many of the most important bills are born somewhere in the executive branch. Business, labor, agriculture, and other special interest groups often draft measures, as well. And some bills, or at least the ideas for them, come from private citizens who think "there ought to be a law. . .." Many others are born in the standing committees of Congress.

According to Article I, Section 7, Clause 1 of the Constitution, "bills for aising Revenue shall originate in the House." In other words, tax bills must first be acted upon by the House. Measures dealing with any other matter may be introduced in either chamber. Only members can introduce bills in the House, and they do so by dropping them into the hopper, a box hanging on he edge of the clerk's desk. \({ }^{9}\)

Often, before a member introduces a bill, he or she will circulate a letter informing other members about the measure and why its sponsor thinks it should become law. That is, he or she hopes to persuade several other members to become cosponsors, thereby increasing the chances that the bill will be passed. By the time many measures are introduced, in either house, a number of members are listed on them as cosponsors.

Types of Bills and Resolutions The thousands of measures-bills and resolutions-Congress considers take several forms. To begin with, there are two types of bills: public bills and private bills.

9 Puerto Rico's resident commissioner and the delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands also may introduce measures in the House. Only a senator may introduce a measure in the upper house. He or she does so by addressing the chair:

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Only a member can introduce a bill in either house. • Bills approved by the appropriate committee and the Rules Committee are given floor consideration. - Measures that win House approval are sent to the Senate. - All bills are scheduled on the appropriate calendar.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, public policy
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Only a small fraction of the bills introduced become laws. • Bills are referred to standing committees and most to subcommittees. - Important bills are referred to the Committee of the Whole to speed business on the floor with rules that are less strict than those of the House itself.

GUIDING QUESTION
What steps does a successful bill follow as it moves through the \section*{House?}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

Since the activities in this section require students to brainstorm and debate issues, you may want to have students review the information on innovating and thinking creatively in the Skills Handbook, p. S23.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- recognize the need for committees by examining a transparency showing the volume of bills flowing through Congress.
- write a bill using guidelines and following a sample.
- simulate how a bill passes through the House, using a bill created by students.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 143) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 145)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 12 F, Number of Bills that Become Laws, which shows the number of bills at different stages of the legislative process. Write on the board: What do these numbers say about the lawmaking process? Instruct students to answer the transparency questions in their notebooks. Then tell them to write an answer to the question on the board.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentation at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Have a volunteer answer the first two Bellringer questions. (bills introduced: 7,558 ; number that became law: 465) Then have several students read their answer to the third question. (Possible responses: Congress does a good job weeding out frivolous bills. Members of Congress have a huge workload. Work must be divided up because the volume is too great for all members to be able to work on all bills. ) Remind students of the unit Essential Question:
Can and should the lawmaking process be improved? Tell them to think about this question as they study the last two sections of the chapter.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible response: to gain public support for the bill to put pressure on other members of Congress to vote to pass it
Checkpoint by the addition of multiple riders

The Democratic House leadership held a rally before an all-night debate on a bill that would withdraw U.S. troops from Iraq. Why might members of Congress hold a public rally before holding a debate on a bill?

Checkpoint
How does an appropriations bill become a "Christmas tree"?
voluminous
adj. massive; lengthy

Public bills are measures applying to the nation as a whole-for example, a tax measure. Private bills are measures that apply to certain persons or places rather than to the entire nation. As an example, Congress once passed an act to give a sheep rancher \($ 85,000\) for his losses resulting from attacks by grizzly bears. The bears had been moved to public lands on which the rancher grazed his flock.

Joint resolutions are measures which are similar to bills, and, when passed, have the force of law. Joint resolutions most often deal with unusual or temporary matters. For example, they may be used to appropriate money for the presidential inauguration ceremonies. Joint resolutions are used, too, to propose constitutional amendments, and they have also been used to annex territories.

Concurrent resolutions deal with matters in which the House and Senate must act jointly. However, they do not have the force of law and do not require the President's signature. Concurrent resolutions are used most often by Congress to state a position on some matter-for example, in foreign affairs.

Resolutions, often called "simple resolutions," deal with matters concerning either house alone and are taken up only by that house. They are regularly used for such matters as the adoption of a new rule of procedure or the amendment of some existing rule.

Like concurrent resolutions, a resolution does not have the force of law and is not sent to the President for approval.

A bill or resolution usually deals with a single subject, but sometimes a rider dealing with an unrelated matter is included. A rider is a provision not likely to pass on its own merit that is attached to an important measure certain to pass. Its sponsors hope that it will "ride" through the legislative process on the strength of the main measure.

Most riders are tacked onto appropriations measures, which provide money to pay for something. In fact, some money bills have so many riders attached that they are called "Christmas trees." The opponents of those "decorations" and the President are almost always forced to accept them if they want the bill's major provisions to become law.

Introduction and First Reading The clerk of the House numbers each bill as it is introduced. Thus, H.R. 3410 would be the 3,410th measure introduced in the House during the congressional term. Bills originating in the Senate receive the prefix S.-such as S. 210. Resolutions are similarly identified in each house in the order of their introduction. \({ }^{10}\)

The clerk also gives each bill a short title-a brief summary of its principal contents. Having received its number and title, the bill is then entered in the House Journal and in the Congressional Record for the day.

The Journal contains the minutes, the official record, of the daily proceedings in the House or Senate. The Con gressional Record is a voluminous account of the daily proceedings (speeches, debates, other comments, votes, motions, etc.) in each house. The Record is not quite a word-for-word account, however. Members have five days in which to make changes in each temporary edition. They often insert speeches that were in fact never made, reconstruct "debates," and revise thoughtless or inaccurate remarks.

With these actions the bill has received its first reading. All bills are printed immediately after introduction and distributed to all members of the House.

Each bill that is finally passed in either house is given three readings along the legislative route. In the House, second reading

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 12, Section 3:
L 3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 143)
\(\boxed{L 2}\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 145)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 147)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 149)
L3 Quiz A (p. 150)
L2 Quiz B (p. 151)

comes during floor consideration, if the measure gets that far. Third reading takes place just before the final vote on the measure. Each reading is usually by number and title only: "H.R. 341 0, A bill to provide. . . ." However, the more important or controversial bills are read in full and taken up line by line, section by section, at second reading.

The three readings, an ancient parliamentary practice, are intended to ensure careful consideration of bills. Today, the readings are little more than way stations along the legislative route. They were quite important in the early history of Congress, however, when some members could not read.

After first reading, the Speaker refers the bill to the appropriate standing committee. A bill's content largely determines where it will go. The Speaker does have some discretion, however, particularly over complex measures with provisions covering a number of subjects. Which committee gets a bill can matter. For example, a controversial provision in the bill might receive a more favorable welcome in one committee than it might in another.

\section*{The Bill in Committee}

The Constitution makes no mention of standing committees. These bodies do play an absolutely essential role in the lawmaking process, however-and in both houses of Congress. Indeed, their place is so pivotal that they are sometimes called "little legislatures."

The standing committees act as sieves. They sift through all of the many bills referred to them-rejecting most, considering and reporting only those they find to be worthy of floor consideration. In short, the fate of most bills is decided in these committees rather than on the floor of either house.

10 Thus, H.J. Res. 12 would be the 12th joint resolution introduced in the House during the term, and similarly in the Senate, S.J. Res. 19. Concurrent resolutions are identified as H . or S. Con. Res., and simple resolutions as H . or S . Res.
11 The term comes from the old-fashioned roll top desks with pigeonholes-slots into which papers were put and often soon forgotten. Most "by request" bills are routinely pigeonholed; they are the measures that members introduce but only because some consitituent or some interest group has asked them to do so.

\section*{The Number of Bills That Become Laws}

SOURCE: Library of Congress. Figures are for the 109th Congress.
1) Interpreting Charts A bill must pass through many steps before it becomes law. After which step do most bills die?

Most of the thousands of bills introduced in each session of Congress are pigeonholed. \({ }^{11}\) That is, they are buried; they die in committee. They are simply put away, never to be acted upon.

Most pigeonholed bills deserve their fate. On occasion, however, a committee buries a measure that a majority of the members of the House want to consider. When that happens, the bill can be blasted out of the committee with a discharge petition.

A discharge petition enables members to force a bill that has remained in committee 30 days ( 7 in the Rules Committee) onto the floor for consideration. Any member may file a discharge motion. If that motion is signed by a majority (218) of House members, the committee has seven days to report the bill. If it does not, any member who signed the motion may, on the second and fourth Mondays of each month, move that the bill be \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What happens to the majority of bills that are introduced?
sieve
\(\frac{\text { n. gatekeeper }}{}\)

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 12G, Spending Bill, when you discuss riders. Explain that riders are commonly called "pork." Ask: Who is the man driving the sled? (President George W. Bush). Whom does the elf represent? (Congress) What has Congress done? (attached a lot of pork, or riders, to the President's spending bill) Why do you think Congress chose to attach the riders to this particular bill? (Riders are typically attached to appropriations bills because such bills are important and likely to pass. The fact that the President is steering this bill means that it is important to him.) Why do you think the cartoonist shows the riders pulling the sled? (The President will have to accept the riders if he wants his spending bill to move forward toward passage.)

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

As a class, brainstorm a list of issues and laws that affect students from the federal level. Examples include: drinking age, age to serve in the military, voting age, smoking age, mandatory physical education, minimum wage laws, juvenile offenders/sentencing, environmental issues, testing in schools. Explain that many of these issues are addressed at the State and local level. Based on the Constitution, the Federal Government has no power to dictate many of its own policies. However, Congress ties funding for roads, disaster management, and other important functions to States' meeting specific requirements. Then direct students' attention to the list of issues and tell them that they will now write a bill about one of these topics or another of their choosing.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 12 Section 3 Core Worksheet A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 147), which helps students write a bill. The worksheet explains each part of a typical bill and provides a sample. Advise students to look at the sample as they read the descriptions. Divide the class into groups of 4 or 5 students to write bills. Distribute Core Worksheet B to each group, which will guide them in writing their bill. Remind students that groups should choose a national rather than local issue.
L3 Differentiate Alternatively, you may wish to walk through the lesson as a class rather than dividing students into groups.

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Charts after introduction, when they've been referred to committee Checkpoint Most are pigeonholed.

\section*{MAKE IT VISUAL}

After students have finished writing their bills, choose one bill to use an example. The least controversial would be the easiest for the activity. Tell students that you will walk this bill through the legislative process in the House of Representatives. Write the summary title of the group's bill on a large piece of paper. Holding the bill, tell students that you hold a bill that has been written to address a current issue. Ask what you should do with it. (They should tell you that a member of the House needs to submit it.)

Then tell students to suppose that they are all members of the House. Ask members who support the bill to come sign their names as cosponsors. Then ask if any students oppose the bill. If so, ask what it would take to make them support it, including adding unrelated provisions. Write these provisions on sticky notes and stick them to the paper. Explain that these provisions are riders, which may not pass on their own. If these riders will persuade students to support the bill, have them add their names to the list of cosponsors. Point out that the bill's sponsors just gained support for their bill.

\section*{WALK THROUGH THE STEPS}

Tell students that you will walk their bill through the steps of the first reading. Assign the bill a number, H.R.1, for example, and write the number on the bill. Then ask a sponsor to read the title. Ask students what happens next. (The entire bill is entered into the House Journal and Congressional Record. Then the Speaker refers it to a committee. ) Point out that bills are no longer "read" in their entirety upon introduction. Entering the text of the bill into the Congressional Record serves a similar purpose.
Explain that the bill gets a second and third reading. Ask: Why were these readings important in the early days of Congress? (At that time, not all members could read.)

Post the bill, including riders, on the board for the whole class to see. petition?
discharged from the committee-that is, sent to the floor. If the motion carries, the rules require the House to consider the bill at once. This maneuver is not often tried, and it seldom succeeds.

The process was most recently successful in 2002, however. What went on to become the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 was blasted out of the Committee on House Administration-where the House leadership had managed to bury it for several years. That measure marked the first major change in federal campaign finance law in 23 years.

The Committee at Work Once a bill reaches a committee, the chairman almost always refers it to one of several subcommittees. For an important or controversial measure, a committee, or most often one of its subcommittees, holds public hearings. Interested parties, including the representatives of interest groups, public officials, and others, are invited to testify at these information-gathering sessions. If necessary, a committee can issue a subpoena, forcing a witness to testify. \({ }^{12}\)

Occasionally, a subcommittee will make a trip to locations affected by a measure. Thus, several members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee's Subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere may visit Rio de Janero for a firsthand look at Brazil's successful efforts to reduce that country's dependence on foreign oil.

These trips are made at public expense, and members of Congress are sometimes criticized for taking them. Some of these junkets deserve criticism. But an on-the-spot investigation often proves to be among the best ways a committee can inform itself.

Committee Actions When a subcommittee has completed its work on a bill, the measure goes to the full committee. At the chairman's direction, that body may do one of several things. It may:
1. Report the bill favorably, with a "do pass" recommendation. It is then the chairman's job to steer the bill through debate on the floor.

12 A subpoena is an order compelling one to testify and/or produce evidence. Failure to obey a subpoena may lead the House or Senate to cite the offender for contempt of Congress-a federal crime punishable by fine and/or imprisonment.
2. Refuse to report the bill-that is, pigeonhole it. Again, this is the fate suffered by most measures in both houses.
3. Report the bill in amended form. Many bills are changed in committee, and several bills on the same subject may be combined into a single measure.
4. Report the bill with an unfavorable recommendation. This does not often happen. Occasionally, however, a committee feels that the full House should have a chance to consider a bill or does not want to take the responsibility for killing it.
5. Report a committee bill. This is a new bill, a measure that the committee has substituted for one or several bills referred to it.

\section*{Scheduling Floor Debate}

Before it goes to the floor for consideration, a bill reported by a standing committee is placed on one of several calendars in the House. A calendar is a schedule of the order in which bills will be taken up on the floor.

Calendars There are five calendars in the lower house. The Calendar ofthe Committee ofthe Whole House on the State ofthe Union, commonly known as the Union Calendar, is for all bills having to do with revenues, appropriations, or government property. The House Calendar is for all other public bills. The Private Calendar is for all private bills. The Corrections Calendar, for all bills from the Union or House Calendar taken out of order by unanimous consent of the House of Representatives. These are most often minor bills to which there is no opposition. The Discharge Calendar is for petitions to discharge bills from committee.

Under the rules of the House, bills are taken from each of these calendars for consideration on a regularly scheduled basis. For example, bills from the Corrections Calendar are supposed to be considered on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month. Measures relating to the District of Columbia can be taken up on the second and fourth Mondays, and private bills on the first and third Tuesdays. On "Calendar Wednesdays," the various committee chairmen may each call battle for power Following Democratic victories in the 2008 election, the House Energy and Commerce Committee witnessed a fight for control that tested the seniority system. The chair of the committee was expected to shape important environmental legislation by working with Democrats in the Senate and President Obama. The incoming chair, Rep. John Dingell (D., Michigan), had served more than 50 years in the House and often represented the interests of the auto industry and its workers against stricter environmental laws. Rep. Henry Waxman (D., California), who supported strong moves toward energy efficiency and lower CO2 emissions, challenged Dingell for control of the committee. Waxman defeated Dingell in a vote of all Democratic representatives, 137-1 22, unexpectedly unseating the veteran legislator. In exchange, Waxman named Dingell to lead the committee's efforts on health care reform.

\section*{Background}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint a motion to force a bill out of committee for floor consideration

\section*{Congressional Committee Staffers}

PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{What Are Their Duties?}

More than 2500 men and women serve on congressional committees. These staffers must be experts not only in the subject matter their committees cover, but in political maneuvering. Their hard work enables members of Congress to do their jobs more effectively and to keep their eyes on the bigger picture. How might staffers contribute to the effectiveness of congressional committees?

Committee staffers deliver press copies of a Special Committee report on China's theft of U.S. nuclear weapons secrets.

A committee staffer presents information about the possible impact of oil exploration on Alaska's polar bears.
up one bill from the House or Union calendars that has cleared their committees.

Rules None of these arrangements is followed too closely, however. What most often happens is even more complicated. Remember that the Rules Committee plays a critical role in the legislative process in the House. It must grant a rule before most bills can in fact reach the floor. That is, before most measures can be taken from a calendar, the Rules Committee must approve that step and set a time for its appearance on the floor.

By not granting a rule for a bill, the Rules Committee can effectively kill it. Or, when the Rules Committee does grant a rule, it may be a special rule-one setting conditions under which the members of the House will consider the measure. A special rule often sets a time limit on floor debate. It may even prohibit amendments to certain, or even to any, of the bill's provisions.

Then, too, certain bills are privileged. That is, they may be called up at almost any time, ahead of any other business before the House. The most privileged measures include major appropriations (spending) and general revenue (tax) bills, conference committee reports, and special rules granted by the Rules Committee.

On certain days, the House may suspend its rules. A motion to that effect must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the members present. When that happens, as it sometimes does, the House moves so far away from its established operating procedures that a measure can go through all the many steps necessary to enactment in a single day.

All of these-the calendars, the role of the Rules Committee, and the other complex procedures-have developed over time to help members of the House manage their heavy workload. Because of the large size of the House and the sheer number and variety of bills its members introduce, no one member could possibly know the contents, let alone the merits, of every bill on which he or she has to vote.

\section*{\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)} What power makes the Rules Committee so important?

\section*{Debate}

Explain that virtually all bills introduced in the House go to committee, and most of them die there. Have students consider whether this demonstrates a fundamental problem in the House. Organize the class into two teams: one will argue that the pigeonholing of so many bills reveals a failure of the legislative process, and the other will argue that it contributes to its success. Ask: Does the fact that most bills fail to become law represent a basic flaw in the legislative process?

\section*{FORM COMMITTEES}

Have students identify the committee(s) to which their bill should be sent. Write the name(s) of the committees on the bill and on the board.
Divide the class into three committees. Each committee will debate the bill. They can change the bill according to their discussions or leave the bill the same. Throughout their debate, the following could happen:
1. The bill could die in committee. If most committee members dislike the bill and disagree with the ideas behind it, they can vote to kill it.
2. The bill could pass as is. If most committee members agree with the bill as it stands, they can vote to move it on to the whole class for a vote.
3. The bill could change and the committee will have to defend that change. Committee members should propose their changes during debate, and the full committee should vote on whether to make the change.
The three actions above are the most likely to happen with this simulation, but you could remind the students of the other routes a bill might take.

\section*{VOTE ON THE BILLS}

When the class comes back together, set rules for debate as the Committee of the Whole. Then spend a short time debating the bill. Have students vote on each version, or allow students to add amendments from one version to another version.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the "Congressional Committee Staffers" feature.

\section*{Answers}

What Are Their Duties? Possible response: Staffers can do the research and political arm-twisting for the members of Congress. Also, by specializing, the staffers can contribute expert knowledge to the committee's decision making.
Checkpoint the power to allow or prevent a bill from reaching the House floor

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L4 Differentiate Have students research current legislation and its progress through the House and write a news article summarizing the key points of the bill and its current status.
L3 Differentiate Ask students to watch a floor debate on cable television or the Internet and summarize the proceedings.
L2 Differentiate Have students make a flowchart that shows the steps of a bill through the House.

\section*{The Bill on the Floor}

If a bill finally reaches the floor, it receives its second reading in the House. Many bills the House passes are minor ones, with little or no opposition. Most of these less important measures are called from the Corrections Calendar, get their second reading by title only, and are quickly disposed of.

Nearly all of the more important measures are dealt with in a much different manner. They are considered in the Committee of the Whole, an old parliamentary device for speeding business on the floor.

The Committee of the Whole includes all the members of the House, sitting as one large committee of the House, not as the House itself. The rules of the Committee of the Whole are much less strict than the rules of the House, and floor action moves along at a faster pace. For example, a quorum, which is a majority of the full membership (218), must be present in order for the House to do business. Only 100 members need be present in the Committee of the Whole.

When the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole, the Speaker steps down because the full House of Representatives is no longer in session. Another member presides. General debate begins, and the bill receives its second reading, section by section. As each section is read, amendments may be offered. Under the five-minute rule, supporters and opponents of each amendment have just that many minutes to make their cases. Votes are taken on each section and its amendment as the reading proceeds.

1) Analyzing Political Cartoons This cartoon mocks the lawmaking process. Is the cartoon a reference to how Congress actually works or how people think it works? Explain.

When the bill has been gone through -and many run to dozens and sometimes hundreds of pages-the Committee of the Whole has completed its work. It then rises, that is, dissolves itself. Presto! The House is now back in session. The Speaker resumes the chair, and the House formally adopts the committee's work.

Debate Its large size has long since forced the House to impose severe limits on floor debate. A rule first adopted in 1842 forbids any member from holding the floor for more than one hour without unanimous consent to speak for a longer time. Since 1880, the Speaker has had the power to force any member who strays from the subject at hand to give up the floor.

The majority and minority floor leaders generally decide in advance how they will split the time to be spent on a bill. But at any time, any member may "move the previous question." That is, any member can demand a vote on the issue before the House. If that motion is adopted, debate ends. An up-or-down vote must be taken. This device is the only motion that can be used in the House to close (end) debate, but it can be a very effective one.

Voting A bill may be the subject of several votes on the floor. If amendments are offered, as they frequently are, members must vote on each of them. Then, too, a number of procedural motions may be offered, for example, one to table the bill (lay it aside), another for the previous question, and so on. The members must vote on each of these motions. These several other votes are very often a better guide to a bill's friends and foes than is the final vote itself. Sometimes, a member votes for a bill that is now certain to pass, even though he or she had supported amendments to it that, had they been adopted, would have in fact defeated the measure.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons The cartoon probably refers to the way people think Congress works. Hearings may seem like a lengthy diversion to many people, but they are an important way for Congress to gather information to find a solution.

\section*{Background}

CONGRESSIONAL STAFF Because of the volume and complexity of their work, members of Congress rely on congressional staff. Each member has a personal staff. An administrative assistant or chief of staff runs the office. Legislative assistants analyze bills under consideration and present the pros and cons to their boss. Legislative assistants often specialize in specific areas, such as taxes or energy issues. The press secretary promotes the member's views in communications with the media and the public. The appointment secretary allocates the member's time and may arrange travel or speaking engagements. Caseworkers solve problems and fulfill requests from constituents. In addition to personal staff, more than 2,500 staff members serve specific congressional committees or subcommittees. These staffers assist in writing, analyzing, and amending legislation within committee jurisdiction.

The House uses four different methods for taking floor votes:
1. Voice votes are the most common. The Speaker calls for the "ayes" and then the "noes," the members answer in chorus, and the Speaker announces the result.
2. If any member thinks the Speaker has erred in judging a voice vote, he or she may demand a standing vote, also known as a division of the House. All in favor, and then all opposed, stand and are counted by the clerk.
3. One fifth of a quorum ( 44 members in the House or 20 in the Committee of the Whole) can demand a teller vote. When this happens, the Speaker names one teller from each party. The members pass between the tellers and are counted, for and against. Teller votes are rare today. The practice has been replaced by electronic voting.
4. A roll-call vote, also known as a record vote, may be demanded by one fifth of the members present. \({ }^{13}\)

In 1973, the House installed a computerized voting system for all quorum calls and record votes to replace the roll call by the clerk. Members now vote at any of the 48 stations on the floor by inserting a personalized plastic card in a box and then pushing one of three buttons: "Yea," "Nay," or "Present." The "Present" button is most often used for a quorum call-a check to make sure that a quorum of the members is in fact present.

\footnotetext{
13 The Constitution (Article I, Section 7, Clause 2) requires a record vote on the question of overriding a presidential veto. No } record votes are taken in the Committee of the Whole.

Otherwise, it is used when a member does not wish to vote on a question but still wants to be recorded as present. \({ }^{14}\)

A large master board above the Speaker's chair shows instantly how each member has voted. The House rules allow the members 15 minutes to answer quorum calls or cast record votes. Voting ends when the Speaker pushes a button to lock the electronic system, producing a permanent record of the vote at the same time. Under the former roll-call process, it took the clerk up to 45 minutes to call each member's name and record his or her vote. Before 1973, roll calls took up about three months of House floor time each session.

Voting procedures are much the same in the Senate. The upper house uses voice, standing, and roll-call votes, but does not take teller votes or use an electronic voting process. Only six or seven minutes are needed for a roll-call vote in the smaller upper chamber.

Final Steps in the House Once a bill has been approved at second reading, it is engrossed, or printed in its final form. Then it is read a third time, by title, and a final vote is taken. Invariably, a bill is approved at third reading, and then the Speaker signs it. A page-a legislative aide-then carries it to the Senate side of the Capitol and places it on the Senate president's desk.

14 A "present" vote is not allowed on some questions-for example, a vote to override a veto.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the four types of votes that the House can take?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{L3 C \\ Collect Core Worksheet B and assess students'} work.
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 150)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 151)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying the steps \\ of a bill a it moves \\ through the House \\
(Questions 1, 3)
\end{tabular} & Make a flowchart showing the steps \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying types of \\ resolutions (Ques- \\ tion 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review the text under the heading, "Types of \\ Bills and Resolutions"
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ work of committees \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a list of pros and cons of the commit- \\ tee system
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ role of the calendar \\
system (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & Make a real calendar with sample days \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Essential Questions To continue to build a
Journal \(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal. }\end{array}\)

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer this question: What steps does a successful bill follow as it moves through the House?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Compare and contrast a simple resolution, a joint resolution, and a concurrent resolution.
3. What happens to most bills in committee? Why?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Make Decisions Congressional committees are sometimes called "little legislatures."Explain this expression Is it an accurate one? Why or why not?
5. Draw Inferences Why does the House use such a complicated calendar system?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Essay: Make an Outline Using your graphic organizer from Section 2, choose one aspect of congressional organization that you think is very effective or one aspect that you think should be changed. Describe think should be changed. Describe that point in a thesis statement and write an outline that includes at least three supporting points.

 nal.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will formulate and defend an opinion on whether the filibuster protects minority rights or gives the minority too much power.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Ask a volunteer to define filibuster. (It is a tool used by senators to hold up legislation they oppose by "talking a bill to death" and holding up floor action by following certain rules.) Then ask students how a filibuster can be forced to end. (The Senate can invoke cloture, in which 60 senators vote to end debate.)

\section*{SUMMARIZE THE ISSUE}

Have students read the feature and summarize the situation in 2005. (After filibusters held up judicial appointments, the majority threatened to rule out the use of the filibuster for jidicial appointments.) Ask: How does the filibuster protect the rights of the minority? (Possible response: A filibuster forces the majority to consider the minority's point of view. Under cloture rules, a filibuster can be stopped by a three-fifths vote. If the majority does not have that many votes, they will have to compromise with the minority. This prevents domination by a slim majrity and assures stronger bipartisan support.)

\section*{OPINION LINE}

Use the Opinion Line strategy (p. T26) to have students declare an opinion on this question: Does the filibuster protect minority rights, or does it allow a tyranny of the minority? Label the sides of the line "protects minority rights" and "tyranny of the minority." Ask students to defend their positions.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students support their view on this issue in a letter addressed to one of the quoted senators.

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) He threatened to ask the Senate's presiding officer to rule judicial filibusters unconstitutional. (b) because it would destroy a critical tool of the minority to pressure the majority to compromise
2. (a) The minority would have no leverage to effect compromise, and individual senators would have no bargaining power. (b) Possible response: I agree. Compromise results in a more lasting solution than does brute force.

\section*{Minority Rights: The Filibuster}

\section*{Perspectives}

The term flibuster was first used in 1851 to describe the tactic of talking a bill to death. By 2005, Democratic filibusters had prevented confirmation of a number of President Bush's judicial appointments. The Republican Majority Leader threatened to ask the Senate's presiding officer to rule judicial filibusters unconstitutional. Democrats countered by threatening to bring the Senate to a halt. A group of moderate Senate Democrats and Republicans arrived at a compromise that

Track the Issue
A minority in the Senate has used strategies such as the filibuster to ensure its voice will be heard.

Southern senators used the first filibuster to oppose the move of the First Congress to Philadelphia.

Congress admitted new States in pairs of one slave State and one free State to ensure a balance in the Senate.

The cloture rule, requiring a two-thirds vote of the Senate to end debate, arose from a filibuster against arming American merchant ships.

A newly introduced two-track option allowed the Senate to continue its work during a filibuster.

The number of votes needed for cloture was reduced to three fifths.

Today's Senate is often referred to as the 60-vote Senate, a reference to the number needed to invoke cloture.
Senator Robert Byrd
(D., West Virginia)
ended the crisis.
"TThe filibuster] presents a serious challenge to ...the principle so essential to our general liberty-the separation of powers....[T]he Framers concluded that the President should have the power to appoint. But the Minority's filibuster prevents the Senate from giving "advice and consent." They deny the Senate the right to carry out its Constitutional duty....This filibuster is....a formula for tyranny by the minority."
-Majority Leader Bill Frist
(R., Tennessee)

\section*{Connect to Your World}
1. Understand (a) What tactic did the majority leader threaten to use to end the crisis? (b) Why do you think the term "nuclear option" was used to describe this tactic?
2. Draw Inferences (a) What does Senator Byrd say would happen if the majority used the "nuclear option"? (b) Do you agree or disagree with their view that this was a crisis that called for compromise?
(.) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

In the News
For updates about minority rights visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 12H, Changing the Rules, when you discuss Senator Frist's viewpoint on the filibuster. Ask: What does the machinery represent? (the Senate's advise-and-consent procedure that Senator Frist refers to in his quote) What has the filibuster done? (It has broken the machine, so that advise-and-consent does not work.) What do the Republicans want to do? As a hint, direct students' attention to the last entry in the Track the Issue column of the feature. (Cloture requires 60 votes. In the cartoon, the Republicans want to change the rules so that only 51 votes are needed to end a filibuster.) What is the Democrats' objection? (Changing the rules will damage the system.) What opinion about the filibuster does the cartoon express? (The cartoon suggests that the filibuster has broken the system, and the rule change will fix it.)

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{Making Law: The Senate}

Guiding Question
What are the major differences in the lawmaking process in the House and the Senate? Use a Venn diagram to keep track of ways the House and Senate procedures compare.

Political Dictionary
- filibuster - veto
- cloture - pocket veto

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe how a bill is introduced in the Senate.
2. Compare the Senate's rules for debate with those in the House
3. Describe the role of conference committees in the legislative process.
4. Evaluate the actions the President can take after both houses have passed a bill.

Image Above: Senate pages carry copies of a bill to the Senate floor.

The House and the Senate really are two quite different places. Overall, however, the basic steps in the lawmaking process are much the same in the two chambers. Still, there are a few critical differences in their processes.

\section*{The Senate Floor}

The chief differences in House and Senate procedures involve the consideration of measures on the floor. With introduction by a senator formally recognized for the purpose, a measure is given a number, read twice, and then referred to a standing committee, where it is dealt with much as are bills in the House. The Senate's proceedings are less formal and its rules less strict than those in the much larger lower house. For example, the Senate has only one calendar for all bills reported out of its committees. (Recall, there are five of these schedules in the House.) Bills are called to the Senate floor by the majority leader, usually, but not always, in consultation with the minority leader. \({ }^{15}\)

\section*{Rules for Debate}

Where debate in the House is strictly limited, it is almost unrestrained in the Senate. Indeed, most members of the Senate are intensely proud of belonging to what has often been called "the greatest deliberative body in the world."

As a general matter, a senator may speak on the floor for as long as he or she pleases. Unlike the House, the Senate has no rule that requires a member to speak only to the measure before the chamber. In short, a senator can talk about anything he or she wants to. And the Senate's rules do not allow any member to move the previous question.

Many bills, and particularly the most important pieces of legislation, come to the Senate floor under a unanimous consent agreement. The majority leader regularly negotiates these agreements with the minority leader, and they become effective only if no senator objects. Unanimous consent agreements usually limit the amount of floor time to be devoted to a particular measure 15 The Senate does have one other calendar, the Executive Calendar, for treaties and appointments made by the President. The majority leader controls that schedule, too.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Debate in the Senate is largely unrestricted. - After both houses approve a bill, it is sent to the President. - The President can sign the bill, allow it to become law without signing, veto it, or apply a pocket veto. - The House of Representatives and the Senate must pass a bill in the same form for it to become law.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Senate procedures are less formal and its rules less restrictive than in the House. - The lawmaking process is intentionally cumbersome in order to ensure that each law has been thoroughly considered.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What are the major differences in the lawmaking process in the House and the Senate?

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{GIVE AN EFFECTIVE PRESENTATION}

To practice giving an effective presentation in this section, use the Chapter 12 Skills Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 156). You may want to teach the skill before the Core Worksheet activity. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 157).

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will. .
- use a dramatization to learn about filibusters.
- examine the work of conference committees by simulating negotiations to iron out differences between versions of a bill.
- identify a bill's final steps toward becoming law by completing a flowchart.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 152) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 153)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Show the filibuster scene from the famous movie Mr. Smith Goes to Washington or distribute the Chapter 12 Section 4 Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 3 All-inOne, p. X), which is a Senate historical minute essay about the film. Ask students to answer the questions on the worksheet. If you show the scene from the movie, write the worksheet questions on the board for students to answer in their notebooks.

and the number and content of amendments that may be offered to it.

The Senate does have a "two-speech rule." It provides that no senator may speak more than twice on a given question on the same legislative day. By recessing-temporarily interrupting-rather than adjourning a day's session, the Senate can prolong a "legislative day" indefinitely. Thus, the two-speech rule can successfully limit the amount of time the Senate spends on some matters.

The Senate's dedication to freedom of debate is almost unique among modern legislative bodies. That freedom is intended to encourage the fullest possible discussion of matters on the floor. But, notice, the great latitude it allows also gives rise to the filibuster.

The Filibuster Essentially, a filibuster is an attempt to "talk a bill to death." It is a stalling tactic by which a minority of senators seeks to delay or prevent Senate action on a measure. The filibusterers try to so monopolize the Senate floor and its time that the Senate must either drop the bill or change it in some manner acceptable to the minority.

Talk-and more talk-is the filibusterers' major weapon. In addition, senators may use time-killing motions, quorum calls, and other parliamentary maneuvers. Indeed, anything to delay or obstruct is grist for the minority's mill as it works to block a bill that would very likely pass if brought to a vote.

Among the many better-known filibusterers, Senator Huey Long (D., Louisiana) spoke for more than 15 hours in 1935. He stalled by reading from the Washington telephone directory and giving his colleagues his recipes for "pot-likker," corn bread, and turnip greens. Senator Strom Thurmond (R., South Carolina) set the current filibuster record. He held the floor for 24 hours and 18 minutes in an unsuccessful, one-person effort against what, despite his arguments, became the Civil Rights Act of 1957.

No later efforts have come close to matching Senator Thurmond's record. In fact, both in the past and today, nearly all filibusters are team efforts, with a number of senators taking turns on the floor, relieving one another as they monopolize the Senate's time. Well over 300 measures have been killed by filibusters. Just the threat of a filibuster has resulted in the Senate's failure to consider a number of bills and the amending of many others.

The Senate often tries to beat off a filibuster with lengthy, even day-and-night, sessions to wear down the participants. At times, some little-observed rules are strictly enforced. Among them are the requirements that senators stand-not sit, lean on their desks, or walk about-as they speak and that they not use "unparliamentary language" on the floor. These countermeasures seldom work.

The Cloture Rule The Senate's real check on the filibuster is its Cloture Rule, Rule XXII in the Standing Rules of the Senate. It was first adopted in 1917, after one of the most notable of all filibusters in Senate history. That filibuster, which lasted for three weeks, took place less than two months before the United States entered World War I.

German submarines had renewed their attacks on shipping in the North Atlantic, so President Wilson asked Congress to permit the arming of American merchant vessels. The bill, widely supported in the country, quickly passed the House, by a vote of 403-13. The measure died in the Senate, however, because

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 3, Chapter 12, Section 4:
\(L 3\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 152)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 153)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 154)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 155)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 156)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 157)
L3 Quiz A (p. 158) L2 Quiz B (p. 159)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 160) L2 Chapter Test B (p. 163)

twelve senators filibustered it until the end of the congressional term on March 4th.

The public was outraged. President Wilson declared: "A little group of willful men, representing no opinion but their own, has rendered the great Government of the United States helpless and contemptible." The Senate passed the Cloture Rule at its next session.

Rule XXII provides for cloture-limiting debate. The rule is not in regular, continuing force; it can be brought into play only by a special procedure. A vote to invoke the rule must be taken two days after a petition calling for that action has been submitted by at least 16 members of the Senate. If at least 60 senators - three fifths of the full Senate-vote for the motion, the rule becomes effective. From that point, no more than another 30 hours of floor time may be spent on the measure. Then it must be brought to a final vote. Invoking the rule is no easy matter. More than 600 attempts have been made to invoke the rule, and only about a third have succeeded. Many senators hesitate to support cloture motions for two reasons: (1) their dedication to the tradition of free debate, and (2) their practical worry that the frequent use of cloture will undercut the value of the filibuster that they may someday want to use.

The Situation Today Filibusters have become much more common in recent years because, for more than a decade now, party control of the upper house has been a very narrow thing. In the 110th Congress (2007-2009), there were 49 Democrats and 49 Republicans in the Senate. The Democrats were able to control the chamber only because its two independent members, Joe Lieberman of Connecticut and Bernie Sanders of Vermont, chose to suppport them, not the Republicans, for organizational purposes.

Over the past several years, the minority party, at times the Democrats, currently the Republicans, has made frequent use of the filibuster to block legislation backed by the majority party. And their filibusters have been regularly successful. They have because, given the Cloture Rule, the minimum number of votes necessary to pass an important bill in the Senate today is not 51 or a simple majority of the members present and voting. It is, instead, 60 , the minimum number of votes necessary to invoke cloture (end debate). It is true that filibusters can protect the minority and prevent hasty and illconsidered legislation. It is also true that they can promote gridlock, and public ridicule.

\section*{Conference Committees}

As you have seen, a bill must survive any number of challenges in order to become a law. Most don't. A measure can be killed, or simply buried, in a subcommittee, in the full committee, in the House Rules Committee, or in any of the parallel committees in the Senate. The remainder must make it through votes on the floor in both houses.

Any measure that does survive the legislative process must have been passed by both houses in identical form. Most often, a bill approved by one house and then passed by the other is left unchanged by the second. When the House and Senate do pass different versions of the same bill, the first house usually concurs in the other's amendments, and congressional action is completed.

There are, of course, times when the House or the Senate will not accept the other's version of a bill. When that happens, the measure is turned over to a conference committee, a temporary joint committee of the two houses. It seeks to iron out the differences and come up with a compromise bill.

The conferees-managers-are named by the respective presiding officers. Mostly, they are leading members of the standing committee that first handled the measure in each house.

Both the House and Senate rules restrict a conference committee to the consideration of those points in a bill on which the two houses disagree. The committee cannot include any new material in its compromise version. In practice, however, the conferees often make changes that were never considered in either house.

Once the conferees agree, their report, the compromise bill, is submitted to both houses. It must be accepted or rejected without amendment. Only rarely does either house turn down a conference committee's work. This is not surprising, for two major Checkpoint What caused the Senate to pass the Cloture Rule in 1917 ?

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentation at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS THE FILIBUSTER}

Ask students to identify the tool that Mr. Smith used on the floor of the Senate. (the filibuster) Ask: What is a filibuster? (an attempt by a minority of senators to delay or defeat a bill, especially by making extended speeches) Have students share their answers to the Bellringer questions. Make sure they understand that the objection of a single senator will defeat a unanimous consent agreement.

\section*{COMPARE THE HOUSE AND SENATE}

Explain that filibusters and unanimous consent agreements are two differences between the House and Senate. Direct students to open their books to "How a Bill Becomes a Law. " Ask volunteers to read each step aloud and then describe each step in more detail, based on their reading and previous classes. At step 7, discuss the differences between the House and Senate and reasons for them. Specifically, discuss the less formal rules and the role of the filibuster. Ask: Does the filibuster improve the lawmaking process?

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

When students reach step 8 on the chart, distribute the Chapter 12 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. X), which provides a different version of the sample bill from the Section 3 Core Worksheet A. Briefly describe a conference committee. (a committee made up of powerful members of both houses, formed when each house passes a different version of the same bill; the committee must write a compromise bill)
Divide students into groups of four or five. Explain that each group is a conference committee. The bill on the Core Worksheet has been passed by the Senate. However, the version that passed in the House is the one shown in Section 3 Core Worksheet A. Each conference committee should compare the two versions to identify the differences. Then they should negotiate to come up with a compromise bill.
Before they begin, divide each committee in half. Designate one half as members of Party \(Y\) and the other half as members of Party Z . Party Y is dedicated to reducing government spending. Party \(Z\) is dedicated to improving science and math education.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The Cloture Rule was passed after a filibuster prevented Congress from passing a popular bill that would have allowed the arming of American merchant ships in 1917.

\section*{BEGIN NEGOTIATIONS}

Have the conference committees begin by identifying the differences in the bills. Then have them begin negotiations. Remind them that they must produce one compromise bill that is acceptable to all. Have students record their group's compromises at the bottom of the worksheet.

L2 ELL Differentiate Have students place the two versions side by side and compare each sentence individually. Whenever they find a difference, have them circle it on both bills.
L4 Differentiate In addition to negotiating compromises, have students propose new amendments from their party's viewpoint and negotiate passage of the amendments in committee.

\section*{DISCUSS THE PROCESS}

After the committees finish their negotiations, have them share their compromises with the class. Ask:

\section*{Which original bill was most restrictive: the} House version or Senate version? (the Senate ver-sion-it would have paid out much less in benefits than would the House bill) Ask students how the conflicting goals of the two parties affected the negotiations.
Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive of "How a Bill Becomes a Law. "

\section*{Answers}

How a Bill Becomes a Law In the House, the Rules Committee sets conditions for debate and amendment on the floor. Senate debate is less restricted.

Abill may be introduced in either chamber. The path to the right is that of a bill that begins in the House. If a bill were to start in the Senate, steps 5,6 , and 7 would precede steps 1, 2, 3, and 4. In what ways does the lawmaking process in the House differ from the Senate?
S. 1 introduced in senate.
(1)
H.R. 1 NTRODUCED IN HOUSE.

COMMITtEE ACTION H.R. 1 referred to standing committee for study, hearings, revisions, and approval.

(3)RULES COMMITTEE The Rules Committee sets conditions for debate and amendment on the floor.

COMMItTEE ACTION S. 1 referred to standing committee for study, hearings, revisions, and approval.
S. 1 debated, then passed or defeated.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE Conference Committee resolves differences between House and Senate versions of bill.
(9) CONGRESSIONAL approval House and Senate vote on final passage. Approved bill is sent to the President.
(11) Presidential action The President signs or vetoes the bill or allows it to become law without signing. A vetoed bill returns to Congress; the veto may be overridden.

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Divide the class into groups to make a timeline showing a "typical" day for a student. Compile a list of daily activities on the board. Then have students write down the events in the stories that would be affected by laws-for example, FDA regulations on the foods they eat or the products they use, laws affecting education, etc. Help students identify the laws and decide which are federal, State, or local. Should any of the federal laws be changed? Should there be more federal laws, or fewer? How do federal laws get added or changed?

To see this lesson plan, go to Teacher Center.
at PearsonSuccessNet.com

A House-Senate conference committee

\section*{Lawmaking Behind the Scenes}

Thhe simplified path at the left it does not fully reveal the complexity of the lawmaking process or the subtle changes to the process over the past several decades. As partisanship has increased in Congress, the majority party leaders in both houses have taken a much more important role, and lawmakers have introduced several unofficial, informal steps to the process. How does the majority leadership influence legislation?

The Hopper \(\triangle\)

\section*{D) Before a Bill Is Submitted}

Building Support Much work happens before a member of Congress submits a bill. Members may work with their own staff, experts in the field, interest groups, or the executive branch to draft the bill. They revise and edit to ensure broad sup port and ask other members to announce their support by cosponsoring the bill. This talking and dealing with allies behind the scenes is vital to the success of a proposed bill.

Getting It Right The exact wording of the bill determines its future in more ways than one. If a bill deals with matters that fall within the jurisdiction of more than one committee, the author of the measure may tweak its wording to ensure that the primary responsibility for the bill will fall to the committee most likely to report it favorably.

Howard McKeon, (R., Calif. ) and Roscoe G. Bartlett (R., Md.)

\section*{Committee Action} talk during a House Armed Services Committee markup. \(\quad\).

Multiple Committees The most important measures are now often referred to more than one committee. This reduces the clout of members of each committee by adding more voices to the committee debate.

Majority Rules The majority leadership in the House regularly uses the Rules Committee to advance its party's agenda. For example, the Rules Committee may restrict debate about a bill when it reaches the floor. In an emergency situation, the leadership may even bypass committees and bring a bill directly to the floor for a vote. This seldom happens, but it illustrates the increased power of party leaders over committees.

\section*{How Government Works}
bUILDING SUPPORT BEHIND THE SCENES Each party's leaders work behind the scenes to rally members to support measures that advance the party's agenda. This is not an easy task. Members of Congress have responsibilities to their constituents as well as to their party, and these responsibilities sometimes conflict. Much of the leader's influence is based on exchange. The leader is in a position to help individual party members achieve their political goals. For example, in exchange for a senator's cooperation, the party's floor leader might help the senator gain a seat on a desirable committee or might support legislation that benefits the senator's constituents. Party leaders must persuade rather than command, because they are elected and reelected by the same people they lead.

\section*{TRACK THE BILL'S FINAL STEPS}

Display Transparency 12 J , which shows the start of a flowchart. Complete the flowchart as you review the bill's remaining steps with the class. The completed flowchart is shown below. Begin by telling students that the conference committee has produced a compromise bill. Ask: What happens next? (The compromise bill goes to the floor of both houses for a vote.) The bill passes both houses. What's next? (It goes to the President.) What options does the President have? (sign, veto, allow the bill to become law without signing, pocket veto).

\section*{DISCUSS THE ESSENTIAL QUESTION}

Discuss the unit's Essential Question with students: Can and should the lawmaking process be improved?

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students take the role of the President, who vetoed the compromise bill passed by the House and Senate. Have them write a veto message, explaining to Congress why they rejected the bill.
. 2 Differentiate Prepare flash cards on which various stages that a bill goes through in the Senate are written. For stages that have several possible outcomes, write each outcome on a separate card and stack them. Have students take turns choosing necessary cards to enact the path of a bill.
L4 Differentiate Have students research the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the filibuster surrounding that passage. Then have a follow-up discussion in class.

\section*{Answers}

Lawmaking Behind the Scenes Majority leadership in the House uses the Rules Committee to advance their party's agenda. They may even bypass committees and bring a bill directly to the floor.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the compromise bills and ask students to write a paragraph explaining how their party compromised.Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 158)Section Quiz B (Unit 3 All-in-One, p. 159) Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Differences between \\ the House and Senate \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & Make a T-chart comparing the two houses. \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The filibuster (Ques- \\ tions 2, 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a chart of the positive and negative \\ effects of a filibuster.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The President's \\ options for a bill \\
(Questions 3, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review the text under the heading "The \\ President Acts."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A conference committee composed of members of both houses irons out the differences and presents a compromise bill for a floor vote in both houses.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What usually happens when House and Senate identical?

President George W. Rights Act of 2006 during a ceremony on the South Lawn of the White House. - reasons: (1) the powerful membership of the typical conference committee, and (2) the fact that its report usually comes in the midst of the rush to adjournment at the end of a congressional session.

The conference committee stage is a most strategic step. A number of major legislative decisions and compromises are often made at that point. Indeed, the late Senator George Norris (R., Nebraska) once quite aptly described conference committees as "the third house of Congress."

\section*{The President Acts}

The Constitution requires that bills and resolutions be sent to the President after they have passed both houses of Congress. The President has four options at this point:
1. The President may sign the bill, and it then becomes law.

2. The President may veto-refuse to sign-the bill. The measure must then be returned to the house in which it originated, together with the President's objections (a veto message). Although it seldom does, Congress may then pass the bill over the President's veto, by a two-thirds vote of the full membership of each house.
3. The President may allow the bill to become law without signing it-by not acting on it within 10 days, not counting Sundays, of receiving it.
4. The fourth option is a variation of the third, called the pocket veto. If Congress adjourns its session within 10 days of submitting a bill to the President, and the President does not act, the measure dies. (Sundays are not counted.)

Congress added another element to the President's veto power with the passage of the Line Item Veto Act of 1996. That law gave the chief executive the power to reject individual items in appropriations bills. The Supreme Court held the law unconstitutional, however, in Clinton v. City of New York, 1998.

Because Congress can seldom muster the votes necessary to override a veto, the power can play an extremely effective part in the President's dealings with Congress. The weight of power in the executive-legislative relationship is underscored by this fact: The mere threat of a veto is often enough to defeat a bill or to prompt changes in its provisions as it moves through the legislative process.
\begin{tabular}{|cl}
Essential Questions & \begin{tabular}{l}
To continue to build a \\
response to the chapter \\
Jossential Question, go to your \\
Essential Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
response to the chapter Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed Venn diagram to answer this question: What are the major differences in the lawmaking process in the House and the Senate?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What is a filibuster? (b) How can it be ended?
3. What are the four options a President has when a bill reaches his desk?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Draw Inferences Consider what you have read about the filibuster. Identify two reasons why it has become a valued Senate tradition.
5. Understand Point of View Why might some Presidents have used the veto power frequently, while others have used it very little?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Essay: Consider Your Audience Look at your outline from Section 3. Suppose that the audience for your essay is members of Congress. Add details to your outline that will help you present your view in the most persuasive way. Begin with a clear statement of your argument. Be sure to address the opposing point of view.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Senate's proceedings are less formal and its rules less strict than those of the larger House. The Senate has one calendar; the House has five. During floor debate, House members must speak to the bill at hand and follow certain conditions. Senators may speak on any topic in nearly unlimited debate. House members can move the previous question. Senators cannot; they must use cloture to end a filibuster.
2. (a) A filibuster is the use of long speeches by senators to delay or prevent a floor vote on a bill likely to pass. It is intended to kill the bill or force changes acceptable to the minority. (b) It can be ended by cloture, which requires a three-fifths Senate vote.
3. sign the bill into law; veto the bill; allow the bill to become law without signing it by not taking action on it within ten days of receiving it; kill the bill with a "pocket veto" if Congress adjourns within ten days of submitting it
4. The filibuster protects the rights of the minority by pressuring the majority to compromise. A filibuster prevents passage of ill-considered legislation or legislation supported by only a narrow majority. Also, senators are proud of their strong tradition of free debate.
5. Possible response: A President whose party holds a majority in Congress will have less reason to use a veto than a President whose party is in the minority.
QUICK WRITE Students will state their argument, add supporting details to their outlines, and address opposing views.

Comparing the House and the Senate
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline House of Representatives & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Senate } \\
\hline Smaller personal staffs & Larger personal staffs \\
Fewer committee assignments & More committee assignments \\
More formal, less flexible rules & Fewer, more flexible rules \\
Committee work usually & \begin{tabular}{l} Floor debate often more \\ important than committee work \\ in shaping outcome of \\ more important than floor \\ lebate in shaping outcome of \\ legislation
\end{tabular} \\
\begin{tabular}{l}
Floor debate strictly limited
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Floor debate largely unlimited, \\ but subject to cloture vote by \\ 60 senators to end debate
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}

Speaker of the House p. 332 President of the Senate \(\rho\). 333 President pro tempore p. 384 party caucus \(p\). 334 floor leader \(p\). 336 majority leader p. 336 minority leader \(p\). 336 whip p. 336 committee chairman \(p .336\) seniority rule p. \({ }^{337}\) standing committee \(p .338\) subcommittee \(p .340\) select committee p. 340 joint committee p. 34 conference committee p. 342 bill p. 343 joint resolution p. 344 concurrent resolution p. 344 resolution \(p .344\) rider p. 344
pigeonhole \(p .345\) discharge petition \(p .345\)
quorum \(\rho\). 348
engrossed \(p .349\)
filibuster p. 352
cloture p. 353 veto \(p .356\)
pocket veto \(p .356\)

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the lawmaking process, refer to these sources or assign them to students:

\footnotetext{
L1 Donovan, Sandra. Making Laws: A Look at How a Bill Becomes a Law. Lerner Publishing Group, 2004.
L2 Fish, Bruce and Becky Durost Fish. The Speaker of the House of Representatives. Chelsea House Publications, 2001.
L3 Anderson, Janet. The Senate. Chelsea House Publishers, 2007.
L4 Sinclair, Barbara. Unorthodox Lawmaking: New Legislative Processes in the U. S. Congress. Congressional Quarterly, Inc., 2000.
}

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Taking Notes Perhaps the most important point for students to remember when taking notes in class is that they should not attempt to write down everything the teacher is saying. Rather than writing in sentences, students should use phrases or even a single word when that will suffice. Abbreviations and symbols should be used whenever possible. Caution students, however, that they should copy anything the teacher writes on the board, anything the teacher repeats, and all terms and definitions. It is a good idea to leave space between ideas so that students can go back and add information later. As they write, students should highlight important ideas by underlining, circling, or starring them. If the teacher is talking too fast, suggest that students jot down nouns and verbs only and fill in the rest after class.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 3 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 3 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 336, 347
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) every two years (b) The House must be reorganized each opening day because all seats are up for election each term. All members must be sworn in. All officers must be selected and committee seats filled. Opening day activities in the Senate are shorter and more routine than in the House, because the Senate is a continuous body. Only a third of the seats are up for election each term. Only new and reelected members must be sworn in and only a few committee vacancies must be filled.
2. (a) Chairmen are chosen by the majority party caucus, based on seniority. (b) Constitutional officers serve the chamber as a whole. Party officers focus on advancing their party's agenda.

\section*{SECTION 2}
3. (a) Standing committees are permanent panels that address bills pertaining to matters within a specific jurisdiction. (b) the party that holds the majority of seats in that chamber (c) Most committees review bills dealing with particular policy matters. When a bill is introduced, the Speaker or President of the Senate refers it to the appropriate committee.
4. (a) The parties choose committee members, and a floor vote ratifies their choices. (b) Some committees are more prestigious or powerful than others. Also, members of Congress whose constituents are heavily influenced by the actions of a particular committee may seek a seat on that committee.

\section*{SECTION 3}
5. (a) resolution (b) joint resolution (c) private bill
6. (a) report the bill favorably, report it unfavorably, refuse to report it, report it in amended form, or report a committee bill-a new bill substituted for one or more bills referred to the committee (b) when the committee feels that the full House should have a chance to consider the bill or when the committee does not want to take responsibility for killing it (c) Possible response: Killing a bill that is popular with constituents can have political consequences. By reporting the bill unfavorably rather than killing it, committee members can share the blame with the other members of Congress.

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) How often does a new term of Congress begin? (b) Compare opening day in the House and the Senate.
2. (a) How are House and Senate committee chairmen chosen? (b) Why are there both constitutional and party officers in Congress?

\section*{Section 2}
3. (a) What are the standing committees in the House and Senate? (b) Which party holds the majority of seats on each committee? (c) What factors determine which committee will deal with a bill?
4. (a) Who determines who will serve on each congressiona committee? (b) Why are some committee assignments more desirable than others?
Section 3
5. What type of measure would the House or Senate use if it wanted to (a) amend one of its rules? (b) express an opinion that would have the force of law on some temporary matter? (c) make a law affecting only one person?
6. (a) What are the five options a committee has when it has finished work on a bill? (b) Describe a situation in which a committee might decide to report a bill with an unfavorable recommendation rather than pigeonhole it. (c) Evaluate the usefulness of this practice.
7. Why might a member of Congress vote in favor of a bill once it is certain to pass even though he or she had supported previous attempts to scuttle it?

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity Go online to find information about bills recently introduced in Congress. Find a bill that became law and another that died in committee. Make a flowchart to show the progression of each bill through Congress and explain how that process compares to the chart "How a Bill Becomes a Law" in Section 4.

Section 4

8. (a) Analyzing Political Cartoons Study the cartoon above. (a) What point is the cartoon making? (b) Do you agree or disagree with its point of view?
9. (a) Why are conference committees rarely necessary? (b) Why are their recommendations usually accepted?
10. Compare and contrast the rules for debate in the House and Senate.

\section*{Writing About Government}
11. Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write a persuasive essay about the organization of Congress. Make sure that your thesis is stated clearly and that it is illustrated with specific examples and supported by your arguments. When you are finished, ask a friend to read the essay and give you feedback about its clarity and persuasiveness. Use this feedback to fine tune your writing. See pp. S9-S10 of the Skills Handbook.

\author{
358 Chapter 12 Assessment
}
7. Possible response: Attempts to kill a bill often occur behind the scenes, but the record of final votes is highly visible. If a member's constituents favor the bill, the member might want to go on record as supporting it when his less-visible attempts to kill it fail. Also, there may be political advantages to voting with the winning side.

\section*{SECTION 4}
8. (a) The cartoon suggests that Congress is broken because of the filibuster. (b) Possible response: I disagree. Although the filibuster allows a minority to stall legislation, it also ensures broad support and sufficient consideration for bills that reach the Senate floor.
9. (a) Most bills passed in one house are then passed in the other unchanged. When different versions do pass, the first house usually concurs with the other's amendments, so no conference committee is needed to resolve differences. (b) because the members of conference committees are usually powerful
10. The House has more restrictive rules to control the flow of business and limit debate. The Senate's rules are less formal and more flexible and debate is almost unlimited.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Divided Government}

Over recent decades, the majority party in Congress has not been the President's party Some critics say that divided government produces deadlock, as in Document 1. Many see divided government as a useful mechanism to force compromise and ensure that laws have wide popular support, as in Document 4.

\section*{Document 1}

One fallacious viewpoint too often expressed this election season is that a Democrat takeover of one or both houses of Congress would be desirable, since we then would have "divided government," with each party holding a share of power. Given the problems our nation faces today, this would be disastrous for America. [T]he fundamental problems our nation faces today require a full commitment to coherent solutions, not a little of the left and a little of the right jumbled together. -Peter Ferrara, National Review Online, November 1, 2006

\section*{Document 2}

The voters gave the country divided government last week, [in the 2006 congressional elections] and Americans tend to believe divided government is a good thing, although the belief is not overwhelming. \(42 \%\) say it's better for the country when one party controls the Presidency and the other the Congress, while \(33 \%\) (and even more Republicans) favor one party government. Independents [ \(51 \%\) ] are particularly happy with divided control.
-CBS News Poll, November 14, 2006

\section*{Document 3}
[D]ivided government is the main reason voters should be mistrustful of the decisions and nondecisions made in Washington. Division produces deadlock. Deadlock produces a mélange [mix] of actions and nonactions that no elected official can or will defend, and for which every elected official in each party blames the elected officials in the other.
-Lloyd Cutler, Counsel to President Carter Letter to The New York Times, September 16, 1992

\section*{Use your know} Questions 1-3.

Which statement does Document 2 support?
A. Independents are most likely to support divided government.
B. Republicans are most likely to support divided government.
C. Democrats are most likely to support divided government.
D. A majority of Americans support divided government.
2. What point does Document 4 make?
3. Pull It Together Using these documents, explain whether divided government enhances or hinders the lawmaking process.
- GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Documents
To find more resources on divided government, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. \(A\)
2. Partisanship in Congress has brought the work of government to a halt, and some people view that as positive.
3. Possible response: Some people support divided government because it slows down the pace of legislation in Congress.
Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Persuasive essays should include a clear thesis statement with supporting details and specific examples.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Students' flowcharts should show a grasp of the lawmaking process and its variations.
13. Students' answers should reflect a thoughtful assessment of the lawmaking process.

\section*{ANSWERS TO ESSENTIAL QUESTION WARMUP}

Before assigning these questions, distribute the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 3 All-inOne, p. 168). Use the criteria and the guidelines below to grade students' answers to the Essential Question Warmup questions. Then send students to the Essential Questions Journal to answer the unit Essential Question.
1. To answer this question, students must grapple with the several roles of members of Congress. A good answer to this question will demonstrate an understanding of the competing goals of a member of Congress. Specifically, members of Congress must legislate for the good of the nation, yet satisfy the constituents who elect them. Students should take a position on the role of Congress and defend that position with evidence.
2. As with question 1 , students must again consider competing roles of members of Congress. To answer this question successfully, students must demonstrate an understanding of the party system and the lawmaking process. They must outline and defend a strategy for members of Congress to balance the competing roles of party member and lawmaker.
3. A good answer will articulate an opinion about the role of debate in Congress and support that opinion with evidence.

\section*{Assessment Resources}

Unit 3 AYP Monitoring Assessment
ExamView Test Bank CD-ROM
SuccessTracker Assessment
Online Student Self-Tests
Chapter Tests
Section Quizzes
Chapter-level Document-Based Assessment

Essential Question What makes a good President?

\section*{ESSENTIAL QUESTION PERSPECTIVES}

Essential questions frame each unit and chapter of study, asking students to consider big ideas about government. The question for this unit-What makes a good President?-demands that students ask further questions. How closely does a good President follow the advice of others? Is firm leadership more or less important than consensus building? Should a President's governing style change in times of crisis? What qualities have made for our greatest Presidents? Do the qualities that make for a good candidate also make for a good President?
To begin this unit, assign the Unit 4 Warmup Activity on page 103 of the Essential Questions Journal. This will help students start to consider their position on the Unit 4 Essential Question: What makes a good President?
Show the Unit 4 American Government Essential Questions Video to help students begin thinking about the unit Essential Question and designate a classroom bulletin board for students to post news articles related to the unit Essential Question. Use the Conversation Wall strategy ( p . T27) to encourage students to post articles and comments on other students' postings.
Later, students will further explore the chapter-level essential questions:
Chapter 1 3: Does the current electoral process result in the best candidates for President?

Chapter 14: How much power should the President have?
Chapter 15: Is the bureaucracy essential to good government?
Chapter 16: How should the federal budget reflect Americans' priorities?
Chapter 17: How should the United States interact with other countries?
Use the Essential Questions Journal throughout the program to help students consider these and other big ideas about government.

\section*{Government Online Resources}

Government Online Teacher Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Online Teacher's Edition with lesson planner and lecture notes
- Teacher's Resource Library with All-in-One Resources, Color Transparencies, Adequate Yearly Progress Monitoring, and an alternative lesson plan for each chapter
- SuccessTracker Assessment

Government Online Student Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Interactive textbook with audio
- American Government Essential Questions Video
- Chapter-level WebQuests
- Guided Audio Tours and Interactivities
- Student Self-Tests

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions: \\ UNIT 4}

What makes a good President?

\section*{CHAPTER 13}

Does the current electoral process result in the best candidates for President?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: In what way is the presidency "the people's office"? (The President is elected by a vote of citizens nationwide, making him or her the representative of all Americans.) In this chapter, students will learn about the job of the President, and the election process. Tell students to begin to further explore the presidency by completing the Chapter 13 Essential Question Warmup Activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 13 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 11)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:
- Who Is Next in Line?
- The 2008 Presidential Election

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

You may wish to teach analyzing political cartoons as a distinct skill within Section 5 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 13 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 50) to help students learn to analyze political cartoons. The worksheet asks students to study a cartoon about the electoral college and then answer questions about it. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 51).

\footnotetext{
WebQuest
online The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the presidential electoral process.
}

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1, 2, and 3 lessons omitting the Section 1 Core Worksheet activity, the Section 2 political cartoon analysis, and the sections' extend activities.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 4 and 5 lessons omitting the Section 4 Core Worksheet B activity, the Section 4 debate, and both sections' extend activities.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Begin the class with a brainstorming session on the roles of the President and the qualifications and skills students think a President needs. Then, review the election process, clarifying how the primary and caucus elections work and the part the electoral college plays in the election system. Divide the class into groups of four and have each group research the results of the primary/caucus in their State or a State of their choosing and the results of the most recent presidential election with a focus on the Essential Question: Does the current electoral process result in the best candidates for President? Have students share their research results and opinion on the Essential Question with the class.
FOLLOW UP Have students write an essay expressing how their research illustrates the success or failure of the presidential election system in the United States.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- describe the roles and formal qualifications of the President.
- categorize each activity on a President's actual appointment schedule, according to the roles involved.
- compile a list of informal qualifications for a President, based on an analysis of roles.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- evaluate the importance of the position of Vice President.
- describe the process of succession.
- reflect on the importance of the Vice President's role as presidential successor.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- describe the Framers' original plan for selecting the President and Vice President.
- analyze how historical events led to changes in the way the President and Vice President are selected.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- discuss the influence of early primaries on the presidential nomination process.
- compare the nomination process in different States by researching and completing a chart.
- explore the goals of national conventions by analyzing nomination acceptance speeches.

\section*{SECTION 5}

Students will
- examine the distribution of electoral votes.
- recognize the influence of the electoral system on campaign strategy, using a map of pre-election opinion poll results.
- evaluate proposals to reform the electoral college system, using a Jigsaw strategy.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
41
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{What are the roles and qualifications of the office of the President?}

\section*{SECTION 1 \\ \\ The President's \\ \\ The President's \\ Job Description}

\section*{I. The President's Roles}
A. chief of state
1. ceremonial head of government
2. symbol of the people
B. chief executive
1. executive power
2. limited by checks and balances
C. chief administrator of executive branch
D. chief diplomat
1. main architect of foreign policy
2. nation's chief spokesman to world
E. commander in chief
1. head of military
2. dominant in military and foreign affairs
F. chief legislator
1. main author of public policy
2. shapes congressional agenda
G. chief of party
1. leads party that controls executive branch
2. role not mentioned in Constitution
H. chief citizen
1. representative of all the people
2. champions public over private interests
3. role not mentioned in Constitution
II. Formal Qualifications
A. natural born citizen
B. at least 35 years old
C. resident at least 14 years

\section*{Guiding Question}

What are the roles and qualifications of the office of the President? Use an outline like the one below to keep track of the presidential roles and qualifications.

\section*{I. The President's Roles}
A. Chief of state
A. Chief
1.
2.
B.

\section*{B. \({ }_{1 .}\).}
1. 2.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- chief of state

\section*{commander}
- chief executive
in chief
- chief admin- - chief legislator istrator
chief of party
- chief diplomat - chief citizen

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the President's many roles
2. Understand the formal qualifications necessary to become President.
3. Explain how the President's term of office has changed over time.
4. Describe the President's pay and benefits.

Image Above: President Ronald Reagan addresses U.S. troops in South Korea in 1983.

Do you know who the youngest person ever to be President of the United States was? The oldest? Who held the presidency for the longest time? The shortest? Can a person born abroad become President? You will find the answers to these questions, and much more, in this section, which provides a basic overview of the presidential office.

\section*{Presidential Roles}

At any given time, of course, only one person is the President of the United States. The office, with all of its awesome powers and duties, belongs to that one individual. Whoever that person may be, he-and most likely someday she \({ }^{1}\)-must fill several different roles, and all of them at the same time. The President is simultaneously (1) chief of state, (2) chief executive, (3) chief administrator, (4) chief diplomat, (5) commander in chief, (6) chief legislator, (7) chief of party, and (8) chief citizen.
1. To begin with, the President is chief of state, the ceremonial head of the government of the United States. He or she is, then, the symbol of all of the people of the nation-in President William Howard Taft's words, "the personal embodiment and representative of their dignity and majesty."

In many countries, the chief of state reigns but does not rule. That is certainly true of the queens of England, Denmark, and the Netherlands; the kings of Norway, Sweden, and Belgium; the emperor of Japan; and the presidents of Italy and Germany. It is just as certainly not true of the President of the United States. The President both reigns and rules.
2. The President is the nation's chief executive, vested by the Constitution with "the executive Power" of the United States. That power is immensely broad in both domestic and foreign affairs. Indeed, the American presidency is often described as "the most powerful office in the world."

But remember, the President is not all-powerful. He or she lives in an environment filled with constitutional checks and balances in which there are

1 To this point, all of the Presidents have been men, but nothing in the Constitution precludes the possibility of a woman in that office.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

The Core Worksheet activity in this section asks students to analyze President Truman's appointment schedule. Before doing the activity, you may want to have students review the steps in analyzing sources on page S14 of the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The Constitution establishes the President's roles as chief of state, chief executive, chief administrator, chief diplomat, commander in chief, and chief legislator.
- The President's roles of chief of party and chief citizen developed over time. - The Constitution requires the President to be a natural born citizen, at least 35 years old, and a U.S. resident for at least 14 years. - The 22 nd Amendment limits a President to two full terms and no more than ten years.
CONCEPTS: leadership, separation of powers, checks and balances ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The Constitution defines the roles and qualifications of the President. - Term limits check the power of the President.
many practical limits on what he or she can and cannot do.
3. The President is also the chief administrator, the director of the huge executive branch of the Federal Government. He or she heads one of the largest governmental machines the world has ever known. Today, the President directs an administration that employs more than 2.7 million civilians and spends more than \($ 3\) trillion a year.

Managing the sprawling executive branch is only one of the President's several jobs. Harry Truman complained that he had to spend too much of his time "flattering, kissing, and kicking people to get them to do what they were supposed to do anyway."
4. Every President is also the nation's chief diplomat, the main architect of American foreign policy and the nation's chief spokesman to the rest of the world. "I make foreign policy," President Truman once said-and he did. Everything the President says and does is closely followed, both here and abroad.
5. In close concert with the President's role in foreign affairs, the Constitution also makes him or her the commander in chief of the nation's armed forces. The 1.4 million men and women in uniform and all of the nation's military might are subject to the President's direct and immediate control. The Constitution does give Congress some significant powers in foreign affairs and over the military, but the President has long since become dominant in both fields.
6. The President is also the nation's chief legislator, the principal author of its pub lic policies. Most often, it is the President who sets the overall shape of the congressional agenda-initiating, suggesting, requesting, insisting, and demanding that Congress enact most of the major pieces of legislation that it does.

President Bill Clinton meets with Israeli and Palestinian leaders at Camp David in 2000 to conduct peace talks. What role is President Clinton fulfilling here?

The President and Congress do sometimes clash, and the President does not always get his or her way on Capitol Hill. Still, working with Congress occupies a major part of the President's time.

These six presidential roles all come directly from the Constitution. Yet they do not complete the list. The President has still other vital roles to play.
7. The President is, automatically, the chief of party, the acknowledged leader of the political party that controls the executive branch-and is virtually unchallengeable in that role. As you know, parties are not mentioned in the Constitution, but they do have a vital place in the workings of the American governmental system. Much of the real power and influence of the President depends on his or her ability to play this critical role.
8. The office also automatically makes its occupant the nation's chief citizen. The President is expected to be "the representative of all the people." He or she is expected to take the high road and champion the public interest against the many different and competing private interests. "The presidency," said Franklin Roosevelt, "is not merely an administrative office. That is the least of it. It is, preeminently, a place of moral leadership."

Listing the President's several roles is a useful and convenient way to describe the President's job. But, remember, the President

\section*{concert}
\(n\). with all in agreement, together as one

\section*{champion \\ \(v\). to fight for, defend, or \\ promote}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- describe the roles and formal qualifications of the President.
- categorize each activity on a President's actual appointment schedule, according to the roles involved.
- compile a list of informal qualifications for a President, based on an analysis of roles.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 15) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 16)

\section*{beLLRINGER}

Write on the board: In your notebook, list five specific examples of things a President does as part of the job.ELL Differentiate Provide prompts, such as
"meet with foreign leaders," "sign bills into law," "give the State of the Union address," and "throw out the ceremonial first pitch in a baseball game. "

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Write students' examples of the President's activities on the board. Then, have students categorize each example according to one or more of the presidential roles.
L1 L2 Differentiate Ask students to share their answers early in the discussion.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 13, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 11)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 15)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 16)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 17)
L3 Quiz A (p. 19)
L2 Quiz B (p. 20)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint being principal author of the nation's public policies and setting the overall shape of the congressional agenda
Caption chief diplomat and chief citizen

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 13 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 17), which uses President Truman's actual appointment schedule for a day during his administration. Have students read the schedule and categorize each activity by the presidential role(s) it fulfills. Remind students that some activities may fulfill more than one role.

L4 DDifferentiate For each role the students identify, have them locate the text in the Constitution that spells out that presidential role. Have students include in the second column of the worksheet the Article and Section of the Constitution in which it is located. Remind students that not all roles are delineated by the Constitution.

\section*{COMPARE WORKSHEET ANSWERS}

Read the schedule items one by one, and for each item, call on a student to state the presidential role(s) he or she assigned to this activity. After each item, have the other students in the class raise their hand if they categorized the item differently. If so, ask the student to explain his or her own answer. Then discuss both answers with the class until the group has agreed on a category (or categories).

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint a natural born citizen, at least 35 years of age, been a U.S. resident for 14 years
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What are the three requirements a potential President must meet to be eligible for office?
agonizing
adj. causing great pain or anguish sordid adji involving dishonorable action and motives
must play all of these roles simultaneously, and they are all interconnected. None of them can be performed in isolation. The manner in which a President plays any one role can have a real effect on his or her ability to play another and even all of them.

As but two illustrations of the point, take the experiences of Presidents Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon. Each was a strong and relatively effective President during his first years in office. However, President Johnson's actions as commander in chief during the agonizing and unpopular war in Vietnam seriously damaged his stature and effectiveness in the White House. In fact, the damage was so great that it helped persuade LBJ not to run for reelection in 1968.

The many-sided and sordid Watergate scandal brought President Nixon's downfall. The manner in which he filled the roles of party leader and chief citizen so destroyed Mr. Nixon's presidency that he was forced to leave office in disgrace in 1974.

\section*{Formal Qualifications}

Whatever else a President must be, the Constitution says that he-and, again, certainly one day she-must meet three formal qualifications for office. \({ }^{2}\) The President must:
1. Be "a natural born Citizen . . . of the United States." Do the words "natural born" mean "native born"-that is, born in the United States? By law, a person born abroad to an American-citizen parent becomes an American citizen at birth. That law leads many to argue that it is therefore possible for a person born outside the United States to become President. \({ }^{3}\) Some dispute that view, however. The question of what the Constitution means here cannot be answered until someone born a citizen, but born abroad, does in fact become President.

2 Article II, Section 1, Clause 5.
3 Martin Van Buren, who was born December 5, 1782, was the first President actually born in the United States. His seven predecessors (and his immediate successor) were each born in the colonies, before the Revolution-that is, before there was a United States. But notice, the Constitution anticipated that circumstance with these words: "or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution."
2. " \([\mathrm{H}]\) ave attained. . . the Age of 35 years." John F. Kennedy, at 43, was the youngest person ever elected to the office. Theodore Roosevelt reached the White House by succession at age 42 . Only six other chief executives took the oath of office before age 50 : James K. Polk in 1845, Franklin Pierce in 1853, Ulysses S. Grant in 1869, James Garfield in 1881, Grover Cleveland in 1885, and Barack Obama in 2008.

Ronald Reagan, who was 69 when he was first elected in 1980, was the oldest candidate ever to win the office; and, when he left office in 1989 at age 77, he was the oldest person ever to hold the presidency. Most chief executives have been in their 50 s when they gained the White House.
3. "[H]ave . . . been fourteen years a Resident within the United States." Given the elections of Herbert Hoover (in 1928) and Dwight Eisenhower (in 1952), we know that here the Constitution means any 14 years in a person's life. Both Mr. Hoover and General Eisenhower spent several years outside the country before winning the White House.

While these formal qualifications do have some importance, they are really not very difficult to meet. Indeed, well over 100 million people in this country do so today. There are several other informal qualifications for the presidency, as you will see in Section 4.

\section*{The Presidential Term}

The Framers considered a number of different limits on the length of the presidential term. Most of their debate centered on a four-year term, with the President eligible for reelection, versus a single six-year or seven-year term without being eligibile for reelection. They finally settled on a four-year term. \({ }^{4}\) They agreed, as Alexander Hamilton wrote in The Federalist No. 71, that four years was a long enough period for a President to have gained experience, demonstrated his abilities, and established stable policies.

Until 1951, the Constitution placed no limit on the number of terms a President might serve. Several Presidents, beginning

4 Article II, Section 1, Clause 1.

366 The Presidency

\section*{Debate}

Arnold Schwarzenegger, California's governor, would like to run for President, but he is not eligible. Fearing the influence of foreign powers, the Framers wrote into the Constitution a requirement that the President be native-born. Schwarzenegger, born in Austria, became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1983. He believes the restriction is outdated. "Look at the kind of contribution that people like Henry Kissinger have made, Madeleine Albright," Schwarzenegger said, referring to two former secretaries of state who were foreign-born. In the post-9/1 climate, however, many Americans want to tighten, not loosen, restrictions on immigrants. The governor's supporters launched a drive for a constitutional amendment that would allow an immigrant who has been a naturalized citizen for 20 years to run for President. To begin a class debate, ask: Would you support this amendment?

with George Washington, refused to seek more than two terms, however. Soon, the "no-thirdterm tradition" became an unwritten rule.

Franklin D. Roosevelt broke the tradition by seeking and winning a third term in 1940, and then a fourth in 1944. To prevent this from recurring, the 22nd Amendment made the unwritten custom limiting presidential terms a part of the written Constitution.

Each President may now serve a maximum of two full terms-eight years-in office. A President who succeeds to the office after the midpoint in a term could possibly serve for more than eight years. In that case, the President may finish out the predecessor's term and then seek two full terms of his or her own. However, no President may serve more than ten years in the office.

Many people, including Presidents Truman, Eisenhower, and Reagan, have called for the repeal of the 22nd Amendment. They insist that the two-term rule is undemocratic because it places an arbitrary limit on the people's right to decide who should be President. Critics also say that it undercuts the authority of a two-term President, especially in the latter part of a second term. Supporters of the amendment defend it as a reasonable safeguard against "executive tyranny."

Several Presidents have urged a single six-year term. They and others have argued that a single, nonrenewable term would free a President from the pressures of a campaign for a second term -and so would allow the chief executive to focus on the pressing demands of the office.

\section*{arbitrary} \(\frac{\text { arbitrary }}{\text { adj. based on one's }}\) adj. based on one's preference, notion, or

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 13A, President Calvin Coolidge, to begin a discussion about term limits. Ask: The cartoonist portrays President Coolidge as what historical leader? (Julius Caesar) Why do you think the cartoonist chose this portrayal? (possibly to show respect for Coolidge as a leader and because Rome at that time was a republic, not a monarchy) What is President Coolidge doing? (refusing the offer of a third term) What is the significance of the crown? (It suggests that a third term would turn the President into a king.) Based on the cartoon, why do you think Americans approved the 22nd Amendment? (From the nation's early days, Americans feared that the President might gain so much power that he would become a monarch. Term limits established by the 22nd Amendment removed that possibility.)

\section*{DISCUSS}

Ask: Why is it important for a citizen to understand the roles of the President? Have students suggest reasons, and then lead a discussion about how knowing the President's roles helps voters determine whether an individual has the personal qualities to be President.
List the three formal qualifications required by the Constitution on the board. (natural born citizen, at least 35 years old, U.S. resident at least 14 years) Then, have students reflect on the job of the President and determine qualifications beyond those listed in the Constitution that they believe an individual should have in order to be President. Allow students to expand their list to personal traits such as leadership skills, integrity, and so on.
L1 L2 Differentiate Help students by providing them with prompts, such as "Is experience in foreign affairs important?" or "What characteristics do you look for in a leader?" Allow a few minutes for students to think and write some notes before beginning the discussion.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L2 Differentiate Have students make a graphic organizer showing the roles of the President.

\section*{\(L 3\)}

Differentiate Assign two presidential roles for each student to illustrate through drawings or photographs taken from newspapers, magazines or the Internet. Each illustration should have a one-sentence caption explaining the presidential role shown. Post each in the classroom for students to review. Make sure to assign all eight roles.
L4 Differentiate Have students create a list of the ways discussed in this section that the Constitution provides Congress with checks on the President's job. Then, in a brief essay, have students describe which check they think is the most important and why.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 19)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 20)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Constitutional Principles The publicly elected members of Congress deemed term limits necessary in order to prevent a President from gaining too much power.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Determining the roles \\ and qualifications of the \\
President (Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Create a graphic organizer on the board \\ of the eight roles and the three formal \\ qualifications.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing the roles \\ of chief of state, chief \\ diplomat, and chief \\ citizen (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Brainstorm with students activities in \\ which the President performs these roles.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Listing the roles not \\ defined by the Constitu- \\ tion (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students reread content under #7 and \\
## of the "Presidential Roles."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\
22nd Amendment \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & Review the "From the Constitution" feature. \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Drawing conclusions \\ about the formal quali- \\ fications (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review the three formal qualifications and \\ create a list of undesirable scenarios these \\ qualifications would prevent.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Judging the salary and \\ benefits provided to the \\
President (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Discuss with students the compensation \\ that film and sports celebrities enjoy, and \\ weigh them against the work they perform. \\
Then compare them with the responsibili- \\ ties of the President.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Government
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Caption The security of the President is of the utmost importance and providing transportation services ensures his or her security. Also, these services enhance the prestige and authority that comes with the presidency.

\(\Delta\) Air Force One and a fleet of automobiles are some of the benefits that come with the presidency. of the benefits that come with the presidency.
Why is it necessary for these services to be made available to the President?

\section*{Pay and Benefits}

Congress determines the President's annual salary, which can neither be increased nor decreased during a presidential term. The President's pay was first set at \($ 25,000\) a year, in 1789. \({ }^{5}\) It is now \($ 400,000\) a year. Congress set that figure in 1999, and it became effective on January 20, 2001.

Congress has also provided the President with a \($ 50,000-\mathrm{a}\)-year expense allowance. That money may be spent however the President chooses. This allowance is, in effect, a part of his or her pay, and it is taxed as part of his or her income.

The Constitution forbids the President "any other emolument [payment for work] from the United States, or any of them." This clause does not prevent the President from being provided with a great many benefits, however.

These benefits include the White House, a magnificent 132 -room mansion set on an 18.3 -acre estate in the heart of the nation's capital; a sizable suite of offices and an extremely large staff; a fleet of automobiles; the lavishly fitted Air Force One and several other planes and helicopters; Camp David, the resort hideaway in the Catoctin Mountains in Maryland; the finest medical, dental, and other healthcare available; generous travel and entertainment funds; and many other fringe benefits.

5 Article II, Section 1, Clause 7. At Philadelphia, Benjamin Franklin argued that, as money and power might corrupt a man, the President ought to receive nothing beyond his expenses; his suggestion was not put to a vote at the Convention.

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

To continue to build a
Essential Questions response to the chapter
Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: What are the roles and qualifications of the office of the President?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) How does the President function as chief of state? (b) In what manner might this role be performed simultaneously with those of chief diplomat and chief citizen?
3. (a) Which two presidential roles did not come from the Constitution? (b) How did they come about?
4. What is the purpose of the 22nd Amendment?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Conclusions Why do you think the Framers chose formal qualifications for the office of the President?
6. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Do you think the pay and benefits with which the President is compensated are adequate and appropriate for the job? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Explore a Topic Choose three U.S. Presidents from this section and write a list of questions about each one for which you will research to find the answers. Focus on their personal background and political experience prior to their election. For example, you might ask: What legislative experience did President Eisenhower have before his election?

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. roles: chief of state, chief executive, chief administrator, chief diplomat, commander in chief, chief legislator, chief of party, and chief citizen; qualifications: a natural born citizen, at least 35 years old, has been a resident for 14 years
2. (a) greeting foreign dignitaries, giving a college commencement address, attending the Olympic Games, lighting the national Christmas tree, and awarding medals for national service (b) In any international interaction, the President is acting as chief of state and chief diplomat simultaneously. The President also serves as chief citizen in performing ceremonial duties.
3. (a) chief of party, chief citizen (b) They developed over time and with the rise of parties.
4. to limit the number of terms a President can serve
5. Sample answer: The Framers created the formal qualifications to ensure that the President would be a solid U.S. citizen, without loyalties to another nation, and would bring years of life experience to the office.
6. Yes. As leader of a powerful nation, the President has one of the most complex jobs in the world. The high compensation and generous benefits are appropriate for the difficulty of the job. OR: No. With excessive benefits and salary, the President lives like a king rather than an elected public servant. He should have to pay for rent, food, and necessities not related to his job.
QUICK Write Questions should focus on the background and experience of three Presidents.

\section*{CITIZENSHIP 101 Evaluating Leadership}

\author{
"Tuesday's election for the State Assembly seat in Gloucester County is going to be a close one. Recent polls show that Jane Arbino is leading among voters who say that coalition-building is a key factor in their choice, but that voters who favor fiscal responsibility are much more likely to vote for her opponent, Keith James."
}

What qualities do you consider important when you choose whom to vote for in an election? Many different factors can make someone the right candidate for you, and your factors might not be the ones that matter to someone else. It is important to decide what you consider essential before you cast your ballot.
1. Decide what factors are most important to you. Before you begin evaluating leadership abilities, you should determine which qualities you care about the most. Do you want a leader with a proven track record? Past actions can be a good indicator of what someone will do in the future. It can be important for a leader to have demonstrated his or her ability to get things done. You may wish to evaluate candidates based on aspects of their personalities or characters. Does the candidate have the ability to motivate or inspire others? Does the candidate share your personal beliefs and values?
2. Match the skills to the job. Your evaluation of the candidates may depend on what leadership position is being filled. Your town mayor may need different leadership qualities than the town clerk, and the qualities of a good senator might be different from those of a good Board of Education member. For some positions, it is important for the leader to have a strong vision and the ability to unite conflicting groups. For others, you might be looking for someone who can stand his or her ground in the face of opposition. A candidate might be a good choice for one position but not another, so you should make sure to think about the specific requirements of the job when you evaluate leadership abilities.

369
3. Compare their qualifications. Once you have determined the factors that are important to you and have evaluated the skills necessary for the position, you will need to compare each candidate against those factors. Who meets most of your requirements? Does your list of requirements reduce your options to one candidate? If not, you will need to compare the remaining choices against each other to determine who you think is the best choice for the position.

\section*{(v) What do you think?}
1. What do you think is the most important leadership quality for a United States senator? What about for a high school principal?
2. Do you think it's a good idea for a leader to admit when he or she has made a mistake?
3. You Try It Make a list of the criteria that you think make someone a good leader. Choose someone in a leadership position, such as a member of Congress or the President. Evaluate that person using the leadership criteria that you selected.
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE Citizenship Activity Pack For activities on evaluating leadership, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Evaluate Leadership. It includes a lesson plan for you and materials that help students identify leadership styles. Each student group will make a poster supporting a fictional leader profiled on a Build a Leader Card. Then you will give each group a News Flash Bulletin containing a surprise disclosure about their leader. Students will write a paragraph describing whether the news altered their perception of their leader and, if so, how. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on How to Evaluate Leadership at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will identify and evaluate qualities for different leadership roles.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{CREATE A LIST}

Ask students: What qualities do you think are important for your class president? (experience intelligence, responsibility, listening skills, popularity, attractiveness) Record the list on the board. Then ask: Which of these qualities really matter in the class president's ability to do the job? Cross off factors that students say are not job-related.

\section*{DEFINING LEADERSHIP QUALITIES}

Divide the class into six groups. Assign each group one of these leadership positions: U.S. senator, town mayor, school principal, football coach, film director, or business owner. Have each group determine the qualities they think are important for that person.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Have a volunteer from each group share the results of their discussion. Create a list on the board of the qualities that are repeated in one column and those that are unique in another. Ask: Why do these leadership positions have these qualities in common? (because they are important skills for most leaders) Pointing at the unique list, ask: Why don't all the positions have these qualities? (because they are unique to each position) Then have students add to the common list the qualities that they think are important for the President. Then ask: Would you vote for a presidential candidate who had all of these qualities?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students choose the five most important qualities for a President and explain their choices.
Correct answers to the You Try It activity.

\section*{Answers}
1. U.S. senator: political experience, legal knowledge, trustworthiness, integrity; school principal: understanding, fairness, patience
2. yes, because it shows that the person is honest
3. Students should evaluate a leader based on criteria appropriate to the position.

GUIDING QUESTION
What occurs when the President is unable to perform the duties of the office?

\section*{Presidential Succession}

Constitution
- powers and duties of President transfer to Vice President if President unable to serve
- 25th Amendment establishes that Vice President becomes President in sucPresiden cession
- 25th Amend ment provides for disability of President
- 25th Amendment provides for vice presidential vice pres

\section*{Congress}
- sets order of succession following Vice President
- Presidential Succession Act of 1947: after VP, Speaker of House, President pro tem of Senate, secretary of state, each head of other Cabinet departments in the order of precedence
- decides if President can resume duties if Vice President Vice President and majority of Cabinet disagree with President's declaration that no inability exists
- confirms

President's nomination to fill vacancy of office of Vice President

Vice President - succeeds to presidency if President dies, resigns, or is removed by impeachment - becomes Acting President if President or Vice President and majority of Cabinet inform Congress in writing that President is incapacitated
- vacancy filled by President's nominee confirmed by Congress

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

Before students begin the Core Worksheet activity on deciding presidential and vice presidential succession, have them review the information on decision making in the Skills Handbook, p. S18.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Presidential Succession and the Vice Presidency}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What occurs when the President is unable to perform the duties of the office? Use a chart like the one below to keep track of the main ideas about presidential succession.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Presidential Succession} \\
\hline / & , & \} \\
\hline Constitution & Congress & Vice President \\
\hline - & - & \\
\hline \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) & - \\
\hline - & - & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- presidential - balance the succession
Succession Act of 1947

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how the Constitution provides for presidential succession.
2. Understand the constitutional provisions relating to presidential disability.
3. Describe the role of the Vice President.

Image Above: Service men read of President Franklin Roosevelt's death in a newspaper, April 12, 1945.

Consider these facts. To this point, forty-seven people have served as Vice President. Fourteen of them have reached the Oval Office-most recently, George H.W. Bush in 1989. Indeed, five of the last twelve Presidents were once Vice President.

\section*{The Constitution and Succession}

Presidential succession is the scheme by which a presidential vacancy is filled. If a President dies, resigns, or is removed from office by impeachment, the Vice President succeeds to the office.

Originally, the Constitution did not provide for the succession of a Vice President. Rather, it declared that "the powers and duties" of the office-not the office itself-were to "devolve on [transfer to] the Vice President." \({ }^{6}\)

In practice the Vice President did succeed to the office when it became vacant. Vice President John Tyler was the first to do so. He set the precedent in 1841 when he succeeded President William Henry Harrison, who died of pneumonia just one month after taking office. What had been practice became a part of the written Constitution with the adoption of the 25th Amendment in 1967, which states, "In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President."

Congress fixes the order of succession following the Vice President. \({ }^{7}\) The present law on the matter is the Presidential Succession Act of 1947. By its terms, the Speaker of the House and then the President pro tempore of the Senate are next in line. They are followed, in turn, by the secretary of state and then by each of the other 14 heads of the Cabinet departments, in order of each position's precedence-that is, the order in which their offices were created by Congress. \({ }^{8}\)

\footnotetext{
Read carefully Article II, Section 1, Clause 6
7 Article II, Section 1, Clause 6 . On removal of the President by impeachment, see Chapter 11 .
8 A Cabinet member is to serve only until a Speaker or a president pro tem is available and qualified. Notice that the 25 th Amendment also provides for the filling of any vacancy in the vice presidency. In effect, that provision makes the Presidential Succession Act a law with litte real significance-except in the highly unlikely event of } simultaneous vacancies in the presidency and vice presidency.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • If a President dies, resigns, or is removed from office, presidential powers and duties transfer to the Vice President. - The 25 th Amendment officially makes the Vice President the President's successor. - Congress fixed the order of succession after the Vice President with the Presidential Succession Act of 1947. - The Constitution lists only two formal duties of the Vice President: preside over the Senate and help decide presidential disability.
CONCEPTS: leadership, separation of powers, checks and balances enduring understandings: - The order of succession is Vice President, Speaker of the House, President pro tem of the Senate, secretary of state, followed by the other Cabinet heads. - The Vice President is the President's successor and must be prepared to serve.

\section*{Presidential Disability}

Until the 25th Amendment was adopted in 1967, there were serious gaps in the arrangement for presidential succession. Neither the Constitution nor Congress had made any provision for deciding when a President was disabled such that he could not perform the duties of the office. Nor was there anything to indicate by whom such a decision was to be made.

For nearly 180 years, then, the nation played with fate. President Eisenhower suffered three serious but temporary illnesses while in office: a heart attack in 1955, ileitis in 1956, and a mild stroke in 1957. Two other Presidents were disabled for much longer periods. James Garfield lingered for 80 days before he died from an assassin's bullet in 1881. Woodrow Wilson suffered a paralytic stroke in September of 1919 and was an invalid for the rest of his second term. He was so ill that he could not meet with his Cabinet for seven months after his stroke. In 1981, Ronald Reagan was gravely wounded in an assassination attempt.

Sections 3 and 4 of the 25th Amendment fill the disability gap, and in detail. The Vice President is to become Acting President if (1) the President informs Congress, in writing, "that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office," or (2) the Vice President and a majority of the members of the Cabinet inform Congress, in writing, that the President is so incapacitated. \({ }^{9}\)

The President may resume the powers and duties of the office by informing Congress by "written declaration" that no inability exists. However, the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet may challenge the President on this score. If they do, Congress has 21 days in which to decide the matter.

Thus far, the disability provisions of the 25th Amendment have come into play on three occasions: In 1985, Ronald Reagan transferred the powers of the presidency to Vice President George H.W. Bush for nearly

\footnotetext{
9 The 25th Amendment gives this authority to the Vice President and the Cabinet or to "such other body as Congress may by law provide." To this point, no "such other body" has been created.
}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How does the Presidential Succession Act of 1947 build on the 25th Amendment?

\section*{How Government Works}

\section*{Who Is Next in Line?}

The Vice President is first in line to succeed to the presidency should the office become vacant. A vacancy has occurred nine times. In each case, the Vice President did succeed to the office. When did the practice of vice presidential succession actually become part of the written Constitution?

President when John \(F\) Kennedy was assassinated on November 22, 1963

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 13, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 21)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 22)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 23)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 24)
L3 Quiz A (p. 25)
L2 Quiz B (p. 26)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- evaluate the importance of the position of Vice President.
- describe the process of succession using a variety of scenarios.
- reflect on the importance of the Vice President's role as presidential successor by analyzing a political cartoon.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 21) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 22)

\section*{bell}

Write on the board: Describe the duties of the Vice President. In your opinion, how important is the position? Support your answer with evidence from the chapter. Answer in your notebooks.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Using the Opinion Line strategy (p. T26), write at one end of the board "Very Important," at the other end "Not At All Important," and in the middle "Somewhat Important," Have students take a position along the opinion line based on their answer to the second part of the Bellringer question. Ask a few students at each position on the line to explain the reasons for their position.
L1 L2 Differentiate Write key phrases from students' responses on the board, and have students copy the phrases in their notebooks.
Tell students to go to the Online Update to check out who holds the offices in the line of succession today.

\section*{Answers}

Caption with the adoption of the 25 th Amendment in 1967
Checkpoint It extends the list of successors beyond the Vice President through specific members of Congress and the Cabinet in order of precedence.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 13 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 23), which describes situations involving potential presidential and vice presidential succession. Have students read the scenarios and describe how the vacancy would be filled in each case.
L1 Differentiate Read each scenario to the class and ask volunteers to explain how the vacancy would be filled in each case. Discuss correct answers with the class.
L2 ELL Differentiate Pair students and have them work together to complete the worksheet.

\section*{ANALYZE A POLITICAL CARTOON}

Begin a discussion of presidential succession by displaying Transparency \(13 B\), a political cartoon about Vice President Dick Cheney temporarily assuming presidential powers. Point out that the man in the bed is President George W. Bush. Ask: In the cartoon, what happened to President Bush? (He underwent a medical procedure while under anesthetic. )

\section*{What role of the Vice President does this} cartoon illustrate? (The Vice President assumes presidential powers while the President is temporarily disabled.) What comment is the cartoonist making about Vice President Cheney? (that he assumes more power than he should)Have students reflect on the scenarios in the Core Worksheet and the chance that the Vice President could be elevated to President at a moment's notice. Ask them if they still hold firm to their view of the Vice President's importance from the Opinion Line activity at the beginning of class.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Give students a copy of the Chapter 13 Section 2 Extend Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 24), which lists the offices in the chain of succession to the presidency. Have students use the Internet or the library to identify who currently occupies each position and answer the Reflection Questions.
L3 Differentiate Have each student select a Vice President from the last 40 years and research how that person helped balance the ticket in the presidential election. Then ask students to write a paragraph stating whether they think the President made a good choice for running mate.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint preside over Senate and help decide question of presidential disability
Analyzing Political Cartoons The cartoonist is suggesting that the current Vice President is actually running the country.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the formal duties of the Vice President?
contrive
v. to create or bring about ideological adi having to do with the beliefs or ideas of a person or group eight hours, while surgeons removed a tumor from Mr. Reagan's large intestine. In 2002, and again in 2007, George W. Bush conveyed his powers to Vice President Dick Cheney for some two hours, while Mr. Bush was anesthetized during a routine medical procedure.

\section*{The Vice Presidency}
"I am Vice President. In this I am nothing, but I may be everything." So said John Adams, the nation's first Vice President. Those words could have been repeated, very appropriately, by each of the 46 Vice Presidents who have followed him in that office.

Importance of the Office The Constitution pays little attention to the office of the Vice President. It assigns the position only two formal duties: (1) to preside over the Senate \({ }^{10}\) and (2) to help decide the question of presidential disability. \({ }^{11}\) Beyond those duties, the Constitution makes the Vice President, in effect, a "President-in-waiting."

Throughout much of the nation's history, in fact, the vice presidency was treated as an

10 Article I, Section 3, Clause 4; see Chapter 12.
11 25th Amendment, Sections 3 and 4.

- Analyzing Political Cartoons Today, there is some criticism regarding the growth of the power of the Vice President. How does this cartoon illustrate the Vice President. How does this cartoon illustrate this attitude?
office of little real consequence and, often, as the butt of jokes. Indeed, many Vice Presidents themselves have had a hand in this. John Adams described his post as "the most insignificant office that ever the invention of man contrived or his imagination conceived."

John Nance Garner, who served for two terms as Franklin D. Roosevelt's Vice President (1933-1941), once declared, "The vice presidency isn't worth a warm pitcher of spit." Alben Barkley, who served during Harry Truman's second term, often told the story of a woman who had two sons. One of them, Barkley said, went away to sea and the other one became Vice President, "and neither of them was ever heard from again."12

Despite these and a great many other unkind comments, the office is clearly an important one. Its occupant is literally "only a heartbeat away" from the presidency. Remember, eight Presidents have died in office, and one, Richard M. Nixon, was forced to resign.

Much of the blame for the low status of the vice presidency can be laid on the two major parties and the way they choose their candidates for the office. Traditionally, each national convention names the handpicked choice of its just-nominated presidential candidate. Usually, the newly minted presidential candidate picks someone who will "balance the ticket." That is, the nominee chooses a running mate who can strengthen his or her chance ofbeing elected by virtue of certain ideological, geographic, racial, ethnic, gender, or other characteristics. In short, fate-presidential succession-does not very often have a high priority in the vice presidential candidate selection process.

The Vice President Today Although the vice presidency is still at times the target of late-night television humor, recent Presidents have made much greater use of their Vice Presidents. The office has been, in effect, reinvented. Vice President Dick Cheney was

\footnotetext{
12 Indeed, one Vice President, William Rufus King, never actually served in the office. A five-term senator from Alabama, he was served in the office. A five-term senator from Alabama, he was elected with President Franklin Pierce in 1852. Shorty after the elected with President Franklin Pierce in 1852 . Shorty after the election, he became ill and went to Cuba hoping the climate would election, he became ili and went to cuba hoping the cimate would aid his health. His condition worsened, however, and he could not return to Washington for the inauguration. Athough sworn in while in Cuba, he died upon his return to the United States.
}

372 The Presidency

\section*{Background}

CABINET SUCCESSION The line of succession to the presidency has long been legally defined. Throughout most of American history, however, there were no formal provisions for what would happen to other offices in the executive branch in the event that one of their officers dies, resigns, or otherwise is unable to perform his or her duties. This is no longer the case. One effect of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States was a series of executive orders signed by President George W. Bush that leave no question as to who is to fulfill a vacancy in any of the Cabinet departments. Bush's action was prompted by the feeling of many in the executive branch and elsewhere that the unpredictable nature of terrorist attacks requires the nation to be prepared to continue to function regardless of which government official or building is attacked.
widely seen as the most influential Vice President in the nation's history when he came to the office in 2001. Experience again proved instrumental when Barack Obama chose Senator Joe Biden of Delaware as his vice presidential running mate in 2008. Vice President Joe Biden's 36 -year Senate career, capped by his experience as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, is viewed as particularly beneficial as the nation struggles to wage wars in both Afghanistan and Iraq.

Still, even with the elevation of the office in recent years, no President has been willing to make his Vice President a true "Assistant President." The major reason: Of all the President's official family, only the Vice President is not subject to the ultimate discipline of removal from office by the President. No matter what the circumstances, the President cannot fire the Vice President.

Vice-Presidential Vacancy The vice presidency has been vacant 18 times thus far: nine times by succession to the presidency, twice by resignation, and seven times by death. \({ }^{13}\) Yet not until 1967 and the 25th Amendment did the Constitution deal with the matter. The amendment provides, in part:

13 John C. Calhoun resigned to become a senator from South Carolina in 1832. Spiro T. Agnew resigned in 1973, after a conviction for income tax evasion. The seven who died in office were George Clinton (1812), Elbridge Gerry (1814), William R. King (1853), Henry Wilson (1875), Thomas A Hendricks (1885), Garret A. Hobart (1899), and James S. Sherman (1912),

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.
-25th Amendment, Section 2
This provision was first implemented in 1973. In that year, President Richard Nixon selected and Congress confirmed Gerald R. Ford to succeed Spiro Agnew as Vice President. It came into play again in 1974 when, following Mr. Nixon's resignation, President Ford named and Congress approved Nelson Rockefeller.

Essential Questions rosponse to the chapte

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: What occurs when the President is unable to perform the duties of the office?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. (a) How does the Constitution address presidential succession? (b) In what way did the Presidential Succession Act of 1947 clarify this procedure?
3. What official duties does the Constitution assign to the Vice President?

Critical Thinking
4. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Do you think the attempt to balance the ticket" is an acceptable method of selecting a Vice President? Why or why not?
5. Synthesize Information How has the office of the Vice President changed in recent years?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Narrow a
Topic Using the questions you drafted in the Section 1 Quick Write, conduct preliminary research to find the answers to your questions. Browse the Internet or other sources and take notes on what you find. Th ase this a use this normate to dermin which President you are most interested in researching further.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess the students' work.

Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 25)
Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 26)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing the process of \\ succession (Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students read the 25th Amend- \\ ment and summarize each Section in \\ their own words.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining the manner in \\ which the Constitution and \\ the Presidential Succession \\
Act address succession \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review with students this section's \\ feature on "Who Is Next in Line?"
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing the duties of the \\
Vice President (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students read the only locations \\ in the Constitution where the Vice \\ President's duties are defined: Article \\
1, Section 3, Clause 4, and the 25th \\
Amendment, Sections 3 and 4.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Making a judgment on \\ balancing the ticket (Ques- \\ tion 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Lead a discussion on how the current \\ President and Vice President illustrate \\ this point.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining how the vice \\ presidency has changed in \\ recent years (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students look through newspa- \\ pers, magazines, and the Internet to \\ find articles on the current activities of \\ the Vice President
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Chapter 13 • Section 2373

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Vice President becomes President if the President dies, resigns, or is removed by impeachment. The new President then nominates someone to fill the Vice President vacancy, upon confirmation of Congress. If a President becomes incapacitated, the Vice President becomes Acting President until the President informs Congress, in writing, that the inability no longer exists.
2. (a) Initially, the Constitution simply stated that the President's duties would devolve to the Vice President. The 25th Amendment establishes that the Vice President would become President. This amendment also provides for presidential disability and for filling a vacancy as Vice President. (b) The Act provides the order of succession after the Vice President.

3. to preside over the Senate and to help decide the question of presidential disability
4. Sample answers: Yes, a balanced ticket ensures that the views of the majority of Americans are represented in the two highest offices. OR: No, the Vice President is a heartbeat away from the presidency and must have the qualifications to serve effectively, if needed. 5. Sample answer: Although the Constitution created the vice presidency as a relatively unimportant position with few responsibilities, recent Presidents have made greater use of their Vice President. Still, the Vice President's role has not risen to the level of an Assistant President.

QUICK WRITE Students will conduct research to answer their questions and select a President to research further.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How did the process of choosing a President change over time?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- describe the Framers' original plan for selecting the President and Vice President.
- analyze how historical events led to changes in the way the President and Vice President are selected.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 27) before class.

L2
Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 28)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 13C, the Election of 1800 map. Instruct students to study the map and answer the question in their notebook.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE MAPS}

If students have difficulty analyzing maps, refer them to page S27 of the Skills Handbook as they do the Bellringer activity.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{Presidential Selection: The Framers' Plan}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How did the process of choosing a President change over time? Use a flowchart like the one below to keep track of the main ideas about selecting a President.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- presidential - electoral elector college
- electoral vote

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the Framers' original provisions for choosing the President.
2. Understand how the rise of political parties changed the process of choosing a President as set out in the Constitution.

Images Above: 1800 Presidential candidates Aaron Burr (left) and Thomas Jefferson n formal terms, the President is chosen according to the provisions of the Constitution. \({ }^{14}\) In practice, however, the President is elected through an altogether extraordinary process-one that is not very well understood by most Americans. It is a combination of constitutional provisions, State and federal laws, and a number of practices born of the nation's political parties. To make sense of this very complex system, you must first understand what the Framers had in mind when they designed the presidential election process.

\section*{Original Provisions}

The Framers gave more time to the method for choosing the President than to any other matter. It was, said James Wilson of Pennsylvania, "the most difficult of all on which we have had to decide." The difficulty arose largely because most of the Framers were against selecting the President by either of the obvious ways: by Congress or by a direct vote of the people.

Early in the Convention, most of the delegates did favor selection by Congress. Later, nearly all of them came to believe that congressional selection would, as Alexander Hamilton said, put the President "too much under the legislative thumb." Only a few of the Framers favored choosing the President by popular vote. Nearly all agreed that that process would lead to "tumult and disorder." Most delegates felt, too, that the people, scattered over so wide an area, could not possibly know enough about the available candidates to make wise, informed choices. George Mason of Virginia spoke for most at the convention: "The extent of the Country renders it impossible that the people can have the requisite capacity to judge of the respective pretensions of the Candidates."

After weeks of debate, the Framers finally agreed on a plan first put forward by Hamilton. Under it, the President and Vice President were to be chosen by a special body of presidential electors. These electors would be chosen in each State in a manner the State legislature directed, and each State would have as many electors as it has senators and representatives in Congress.

\footnotetext{
14 The Consitution deals with the process of presidential selection in several places: Article II, Section 1, Clauses 2, 3 , and 4 ; and the 12th, 20th, and 23rd amendments.
}

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The Framers determined that electors selected by each State would cast two votes each for different candidates for President, with the winner becoming President and the runner-up, Vice President. - The election of 1800 introduced party nomination of candidates, pledged electors, and electoral votes cast as pledged. - The 12th Amendment requires electors to vote separately for President and Vice President.
CONCEPTS: popular sovereignty, separation of powers, representative democracy
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The rise of political parties created a need to alter the Framers' electoral plan. - The election of 1800 led to changes, including the 12 th Amendment, that form the framework for today's presidential election system.

Once selected, these electors would each cast two electoral votes, each for a different candidate. The candidate with the most votes would become President. The person with the second-most votes would become Vice President.

The Framers intended the electors to be "the most enlightened and respectable citizens" from each State. They were to act as "free agents" in choosing the people best qualified to fill the nation's two highest offices.

\section*{The Rise of Parties}

The electoral college, then, is the group of people (electors) chosen from each State and the District of Columbia to formally select the President and Vice President. The original version of the electoral college worked as the Framers intended only as long as George Washington was willing to seek and hold the presidency. He did so twice, and was unanimously elected President, in 1789 and in 1792.

Flaws began to appear in the system in 1796, however, with the rise of political parties. John Adams, the Federalist candidate, was elected to the presidency. Thomas Jefferson, an arch-rival and DemocraticRepublican, lost to Adams by just three votes in the electoral balloting. Jefferson then became Adams's Vice President.

The Election of 1800 The system broke down altogether in the election of 1800 . By then there were two well-defined parties: the Federalists, led by Adams and Hamilton, and the Democratic-Republicans, headed by Jefferson. Each of these parties nominated presidential and vice-presidential candidates. They also nominated candidates to serve as presidential electors in the several States. Those elector-candidates were picked with the clear understanding that, if elected, they would vote for their party's presidential and vice-presidential nominees.

Each of the 73 Democratic-Republicans who won posts as electors voted for his party's nominees: Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr. In doing so, they produced a tie for the presidency. Remember that the Constitution flaw
n. a defect, shortcoming, or weaknes

\section*{The Electoral College}

\section*{Crisis Causes Change}

The Framers saw the electoral college as an appropriate way to select the President and Vice President. They did not foresee the development of political parties, however, and the parties' participation in the election of 1800 caused a serious breakdown in the Framers' presidential selection process. What did the Framers hope to accomplish by designing the electoral college system as they did?

\section*{The Framers' Original Plan}
- Each elector casts two electoral votes, each for a different person for President.
- The person receiving a majority of the electoral votes becomes President.
- The person with the second highest number of electoral votes becomes Vice President. Original Plan
- The 12 th Amendment to the Constitution separates the presidential and vicepresidential elections.
- Each presidential elector now casts one vote for President and one vote for Vice President.

In accord with the Framers' original plan in 1800 the electors cast their two votes for two different persons. Each of the 73 Democratic-Republican electors voted for that party's two nominees, producing a tie. In the end, it took 36 separate votes in the House of Representatives to finally select the President and, by default, the Vice President.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 13, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 27)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 28)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 29)
L3 Quiz A (p. 30)
L2 Quiz B (p. 31)

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Chapter 13 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 29), which shows milestones in the development of the presidential election process. Have students share their answers to the Bellringer question, and as they do so, have them categorize the information under the four headings on the Core Worksheet. If students have missed any important issues, make sure to discuss them and have students categorize the additions on the worksheet.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L2 L3 Differentiate Pair students and have them create a map that illustrates the distribution of electoral votes in the most recent presidential election.
L4 Differentiate Have students conduct research on the method used today in the selection of the President and Vice President. Then have them create a graphic organizer that compares and contrasts the Framers' plan with the actual events as they occur today.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess the} students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 30)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 31)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Crisis Causes Change Possible response: They hoped the process would ensure the equitable selection of the best possible candidate for the office of President.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Determining how the \\ process of selecting \\ the President has \\ changed over time \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review with students this section's "Crisis \\ Causes Change" feature.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining the Fram- \\ ers' plan for selecting \\ presidential electors \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review Article II, Section 1, Clause 2 and \\ have students \\
own words.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Determining the \\ makeup and func the clause in their \\
of the electoral col-- \\ lege (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Create a flowchart showing how electors are \\ nominated and selected, and how they vote \\ to elect the President and Vice President
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\
12th Amendment \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students compare the content in \\ Article II, Section 1, Clause 3 and the 12th \\ Amendment.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining the \\ Framers' view of the \\ presidential electors \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Brainstorm the characteristics of the typical \\ voter at that time to identify reasons why \\ the Framers thought electors would produce \\ a better result than would a direct popular \\ vote.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Determining the \\ effect of parties on \\ the election of 1800 \\
(Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Create a chronological list of the events of \\ the election on the board.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Maps The map illustrates how the States were virtually (and in two cases literally) divided in two by the political division. The charts indicate that the electoral college was also almost equally divided along party lines.

The Election of 1800
Differing attitudes on the role of the government and the interpretation of the Constitution gave rise to political parties in the United States. How do the map and chart below illustrate these political divisions?

gave each elector two votes, each to be cast for a different person, but each to be cast for someone as President. Popular opinion clearly favored Jefferson. Still, the House of Representatives had to take 36 separate ballots before it finally settled on Mr. Jefferson as the third President of the United States.

The spectacular election of 1800 marked the introduction of three new elements into the process of selecting a President: (1) party nominations for the presidency and vice presidency, (2) nominations of candidates for presidential electors in the States who pledged to vote for their party's presidential ticket, and (3) automatic casting of the electoral votes in line with those pledges.

The 12th Amendment The election of 1800 produced another notable result: the 12th Amendment. This amendment was added to the Constitution in 1804 to make certain there would never be another such fiasco. The amendment is lengthy, but it made only one major change in the electoral college system. It separated the presidential and vicepresidential elections: "The Electors . . . shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President. . . ."15

With the appearance of parties, the election of 1800 , and the 12 th Amendment, the constitutional framework had been laid for the presidential selection system as it exists today. That system is, indeed, a far cry from what was agreed to in 1787 , as you will see in the sections ahead.

15 Not only does the amendment mean there cannot be a repea of the circumstances that produced a teie in 1800, it also almost certainly guarantees that the President and Vice President will be of the same party.

Essential Questions response to the chapter
Journal Essential Question, go to your Journal Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer this question: How did the process of choosing a President change over time?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. How were the presidential electors selected according to the Framers' original plan?
3. (a) Who makes up the electoral college? (b) What does it do?
4. What change did the 12th Amendment make to the electoral college?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Recognize Bias The Framers believed that the presidential electors would be "the most enlightened and respectable citizens" in each State. How does this statement reflect the voting population of the time?
6. Determining Relevance How did party allegiances complicate the election of 1800 ?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Gather Details When writing a research report, you should include facts, examples, descriptions, and other information to help explain your findings. Use the library and reliable Internet sources to do more indepth research on the President you selected in Section 2. Record information on notecards to help you organize your thoughts.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. In 1787 , the Framers developed a presidential selection plan centered on a body of electors who would vote for two different candidates for president. The winner would become President and the second-place candidate, Vice President. By 1800, two well-defined parties had evolved, and each party nominated candidates and electors pledged to vote for their party's candidates. During the 1800 election, the electors voted along party lines and caused a tie for the presidency. In 1804, the 12 th Amendment was added to the Constitution, requiring electors to cast separate ballots for President and Vice President.
2. Electors would be chosen in each State in a manner set by the State legislature.
3. (a) people nominated by the parties and chosen by popular vote in each State and the District of Columbia (b) casts votes to formally elect the President and Vice President
4. The 12 th Amendment separated the election of the President and Vice President.
5. Sample answer: The Framers likely believed that the average citizen was not well enough informed or intelligent enough to make wise choices for President and Vice President.
6. Parties nominated the candidates and electors who pledged to vote for the party's candidates. Each elector voted once for the party's presidential candidate and once for the party's vice presidential candidate. Since the highest vote-getter was to be President, the electoral votes created a tie for President. It took 36 ballots to make the final selection.
QuIck write Students should record their research data on notecards.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{Presidential Nominations}

Guiding Question
Does the nominating system allow Americans to choose the best candidates for President? Use a chart like the one below to keep track of the main ideas about the nomination process
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Presidential Nominee} \\
\hline Personal Characteristics \(\bullet\) & Primaries and Caucuses & National Conventions \\
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|l|}{Political Dictionary} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the role of conventions in the presidential nominating process.
2. Evaluate the important of presidential primaries.
3. Understand the caucus-convention process.
4. Outline the events that take place during a national convention.
5. Examine the characteristics that determine who is nominated as a presidential candidate.

Image Above: Delegates cheer on a speaker at the 2008 Democratic National Convention.

The Constitution makes no provision for the nomination of candidates for the presidency. Rather, the Framers designed a system in which presidential electors would select the "wisest and best man" to be President. But the rise of political parties and the election of 1800 altered that system drastically. In this section, you will examine what emerged from that historic revision of the Framers' plan: the modern-day presidential nominating process.

\section*{National Conventions}

Recall, the congressional caucus was the first method the parties developed to pick their presidential candidates. The closed, unrepresentative character of that arrangement led to its downfall in the mid-1820s. For the election of 1832, both major parties turned to the national convention as their presidential nominating device, and it has continued to serve them ever since.

Convention Arrangements Not only does the Constitution say nothing about presidential nominations, but there is, as well, almost no federal or State statutory law on the matter. The convention process has been built over the years almost entirely by the two major parties.

In both parties, the national committee makes the arrangements for the party's convention. The committee picks the place and also sets the date for that meeting. Several of the nation's larger cities regularly bid for the honor (and the financial boost to local business) of hosting the quadrennial gatherings. For their 2008 meeting, the Democrats picked Denver, and the GOP opted for Minneapolis-St. Paul.

Apportioning Delegates With the date and the location set, the national committee issues its "call" for the convention. That formal announcement names the time and place. It also tells the party's State organizations how many delegates the States may send to the national gathering.

By tradition, both parties give each State party a certain number of delegates based on that State's electoral vote. Over the past several conventions, both parties have developed complicated formulas that also award bonus delegates to those States that have supported the party's candidates in recent elections.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The major parties, not the Constitution, define the nomination process. - In primaries and caucuses, party voters express a preference among potential nominees or select delegates to the party's national convention. - At the national conventions, each party adopts a platform, officially selects its presidential and vice presidential candidates, and attempts to unify the party.
CONCEPTS: popular sovereignty, federalism enduring understandings: - Delegate selection systems differ from State to State.
- Primaries and caucus-conventions help narrow the field of presidential candidates.
- In addition to selecting the presidential nominee, national conventions strive to capture national attention and generate support for the party ticket.

GUIDING QUESTION
Does the nominating system allow Americans to choose the best candidates for President?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Presidential Nominee} \\
\hline & & - \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Personal Characteristics \\
- Seen as most electable \\
- Broad appeal \\
- Record free of controversies \\
- Held elective office \\
- Most from larger States \\
- Pleasant and healthy appearance \\
- Most happily married \\
- Well-developed speaking ability
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Primaries and Caucuses \\
- Primary-party's voters choose convention delegates or express preference for presidential nominee \\
- Delegates awarded in proportion to votes candidate received in primary \\
- Republican Party holds winner-take-all primaries in a few States \\
- Preference primaries-party chooses delegates later, in line with preference vote \\
- Precinct caucus chooses delegates to local or district convention, which chooses delegates to State convention, which chooses delegates to national convention
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
National Conventions \\
- National committees number of delegates per State \\
- Delegates choose party nominees predetermined by caucus and primary votes - Presidential nominee named through roll-call vote of State delegations
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

To teach the skill of drawing inferences and conclusions, have students read the information on p. S19 in the Skills Handbook. In this section's Core Worksheet B activity, students will analyze and discuss speeches by presidential candidates.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will .
- discuss the influence of early primaries on the presidential nomination process by analyzing a political cartoon.
- compare the nomination process in different States by researching and completing a chart.
- explore the goals of national conventions by analyzing nomination acceptance speeches.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 32) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 34)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 13D, The United States of America, Revised. This cartoon comments on the oversized influence of the early lowa caucuses and New Hampshire primary. Explain to students that this cartoon appeared while the nation was in the process of nominating candidates for the presidency. Have students answer the questions on the transparency in their notebooks.

For 2008, the GOP's formula produced a convention of 2,380 delegates. The Democrats' more complicated plan called for 4,233 delegates. Given those large numbers, it should be fairly clear that neither party's national convention can be called "a deliberative body," an assembly able to give each of its decisions thoughtful consideration.

Selecting Delegates There are really three campaigns for the presidency every four years. One is the final contest between the Republican candidate and the Democratic candidate in the fall, leading up to the election in November. The other two occur earlier and are quite different affairs. They take place within each of the major parties: the struggles for Republican and, separately, for Democratic convention delegates.

State laws and/or party rules fix the procedures for picking delegates in each State. That system is a reflection of federalism, and it has produced a jigsaw puzzle of presidential primaries, conventions, and caucuses among the 50 States.

To a large extent, the Republican Party leaves the matter of delegate selection to its State organizations and to State law. The Democratic Party, on the other hand, has adopted several national rules to govern the process. Most of those rules reflect the Democratic Party's attempts to broaden participation in the delegate selection process, especially by the young, African Americans, other minorities, and women.

\section*{Presidential Primaries}

More than three fourths of all the delegates to both parties' conventions come from States that hold presidential primaries. Many of those primaries are major media events. Serious contenders in both the Democratic and Republican parties must make the best possible showing in at least most of them.

Depending on the State, a presidential primary is an election in which a party's voters (1) choose some or all of a State party organization's delegates to their party's national convention, and/or (2) express a preference among various contenders for their party's presidential nomination. \({ }^{16}\)

History of the Presidential Primary The presidential primary first appeared in the early 1900s as part of the reform movement aimed at the party boss-dominated convention system. Wisconsin passed the first presidential primary law in 1905, providing for the popular election of national convention delegates. Several States soon followed that lead, and Oregon added the preference feature in 1910. By 1916 nearly half the States had adopted presidential primary laws.

For a time, the primary system fell into disfavor so that by 1968, primaries were found in only 16 States and the District of Columbia. Efforts to reform the national convention process, especially in the Democratic Party, reversed that downward trend in the 1970s, however. Some form of the presidential primary can now be found in most States. For 2008, the device was in place in 40 States, and in the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico, as well. \({ }^{17}\)

Primaries Today Recall, a presidential primary is either or both of two things: a del-egate-selection process and/or a candidate preference election. Once that much has been said, however, the system becomes very hard to describe, except on a State-by-State basis.

The difficulty comes largely from two sources: (1) the fact that in each State the details of the delegate-selection process are set by State law-and those details vary from State to State, and (2) the ongoing reform efforts in the Democratic Party.

Ever since 1968, when the Democratic Party was shattered by disputes over Vietnam and civil rights policies, the Democratic National Committee has written and rewritten

\footnotetext{
6 Both parties allot delegates to the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa; the Demo crats also provide for delegates who represent Democrats Abroad. The Democratic convention also includes alarge number of "superdelegates"-mostly party officers and Democrats who hold major elective offices, and other party activists. More than 750 superdelegates were seated at the 2008 Democratic convention.
17 In a few States-Mississippi and South Carolina, for exampleonly one party held a primary. Presidential primaries were not held in ten States in 2008: Alaska, Colorado, Hawaii, lowa, Kan sas, Maine, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, and Wyoming. In some States, the law permits but does not require a major party to hold a primary. In South Carolina the presidential primary is a product of party rules, not State law.
}

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 13, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 32)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 34)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 36)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 37)
L3 Primary Sources A & B (pp. 38-41)
L3 Quiz A (p. 42)
L2 Quiz B (p. 43)

the party's rules in an effort to promote greater grass-roots participation in the Democratic primaries. Most States treat the two major parties alike in their election laws; so, as States have responded to the Democratic Party's reform efforts, the Republicans have had to revise some of their procedures, as well.

Even a matter that seems as simple as the date for the primary illustrates the crazy-quilt pattern of State laws. New Hampshire holds the first of the presidential primaries every four years, and it has done so since 1940. The State guards its first-in-the-nation title with a law that its primary is to be held at least a week before the date any other State picks for its contest.

Most States have come to prefer an early date, so the primary schedule has become heavily "front-loaded" in recent elections. In 2008, the scramble for an earlier date meant that 16 States held their primaries on the same day-"Super Tuesday," February 5and three fourths of the contests had been held by mid-March.

Name recognition and money have always been important factors in the primary process, and front-loading has multiplied their importance. Until lately, a candidate who was not very well-known nationally could hope to build a following from primary to primary over several weeks-as, for example, Bill Clinton did in 1992. The front-loaded process leaves little or no time for that strategy now. Contenders have to mount (and pay for) campaigns in a number of widely separated States that hold their primaries early and, often, on the same day or within a few days of one another.

Proportional Representation For decades, most presidential primaries were both delegateselection and preference exercises. Several were also winner-take-all contests: The candidate who won the preference vote automatically won the support of all of the delegates chosen at that primary.

Winner-take-all primaries have now all but disappeared, however. The Democratic Party's rules actually prohibit them. Instead, the Democrats now have a complex proportional representation rule. Any candidate who wins at least 15 percent of the votes cast in a primary gets the number of that State's Democratic convention delegates that corresponds to his or her share of that primary vote. Take, for example, a State that has 40 convention delegates. If a candidate wins 45 percent of the primary vote, he or she automatically gains the support of at least 18 of the delegates.

Most States had to change their primary laws to account for the Democrats' proportional representation rule. So in many States, Republican delegates are also chosen on a proportional representation basis. Still, a few States do permit winner-take-all primaries, and the Republicans hold them where they can-in California, for example.

The proportional representation rule had another major impact on the shape of presidential primaries. It led several States-among them Oregon and Wisconsin, the States that had pioneered the presidential primary-to give up the popular selection of delegates. More than half of the presidential primary States now hold only a preference primary. The delegates themselves are actually chosen \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How do State laws affect the presidential primary system?
crazy-quilt adj. made up of a mixture of things, hodgepodge

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Ask for student volunteers to share their Bellringer answers with the class. Tell students that since 1952, New Hampshire has been the first State in the nation to hold its presidential primary and since 1976, lowa has been the first to hold its caucuses. Because these are the contenders' first opportunities to showcase their candidacy on a major political stage, they focus a great deal of their time and energy campaigning in both States. Critics feel that the early States have too much influence on the presidential nomination process. Because there is a sense that States with early primaries or caucuses have greater influence on who wins the nomination, many States have jockeyed for an early date in recent campaigns.

\section*{INTRODUCE ACTIVITY}

Explain that the methods as well as the dates of nominating events differ from State to State. Most States use primaries but some use caucuses, and there are even different types of primaries and caucuses.
L2 ELL Differentiate Discuss the meanings of the terms primary and caucus. Tell students that primary means "first, basic, main," and provide examples such as primary colors (three basic colors), primary school (the first grades taught in school), primary tooth (a child's first tooth). Tell students that the word caucus may come from an Indian word for counsel, or advisory group. Provide examples such as counselor (legal advisor) and guidance counselor (career and education advisor).

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint In each State, the details of the delegateselection process are set by State law, and those details vary from State to State. Most States have had to change their primary laws to account for the Democrats' proportional representation rule.
Analyzing Charts Possible answer: An individual who receives less than 15 percent of the vote is most likely going to eventually drop out of the race and the parties' need to draw a line at a reasonable percentage that would be both democratic and realistic.

\section*{CONDUCT A JIGSAW ACTIVITY}

Use the Jigsaw strategy ( p. T27) to evaluate the process of selecting convention delegates. Divide students into four groups, and assign a particular State to each group. Assign one group a State with a closed primary (such as California, Massachusetts, Florida, or Utah), assign one a State with an open primary (such as Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, or Vermont), assign one a State with caucuses (such as lowa or Nevada), and assign the fourth group the State in which your school is located. Do not tell the students at this point that each group has a State with a different type of delegate-selection process. They will figure this out as part of the activity. Distribute the Chapter 13 Section 4 Core Worksheet A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 36), which lists questions each group should use to guide their research.
After the groups complete their research, put the students in new groups, each containing one member from each of the previous groups. Have the students share the results of their research with their new groups to complete the chart in their worksheet. Ask students to discuss with their group the differences between the nominating processes in each of the assigned States.
When the students finish sharing their results with the Jigsaw groups, conduct a brief class discussion on the different types of primaries and caucuses.
Ask: Which process do you think best expresses the wishes of the voters? Why?

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons The emphasis of the delegate-selection process in Iowa and New Hampshire is such that both States are more prominent and important than any other State in the union.
Checkpoint They have played the major part in deciding the presidential nominating contests in both parties.

1) Analyzing Political Cartoons The first delegate-selection event in a presidential election by caucus is held in lowa, followed afterward by the first scheduled primary in New Hampshire. How does this cartoon illustrate the emphasis placed on the elections held in these two States?

Checkpoint
Why are the primaries considered vital to the nomination process?
\(\frac{\text { vie }}{\text { v. to compete with }}\) someone to achieve something later, at party conventions. In most of these States, the delegates must be picked in line with the results of the preference primary-for example, for the Republicans in 2008, so many delegates for John McCain, so many for Mitt Romney, so many for Mike Huckabee, and so on. In a few States, the preference vote does not govern the choice of the delegates. In those States-Nebraska, for example-the preference primary is often called a "beauty contest."

Most of the preference contests are also "all-candidate" primaries. These are contests in which all generally recognized contenders for a party's presidential nomination must be listed on that party's preference ballot.

\section*{Primary Appraisal}

No one who has surveyed the presidential primary system needs to be told that it is complicated, or that it is filled with confusing variations. Still, these primaries are vital. For half a century now, they have played the major part in deciding the presidential nominating contests in both parties-and particularly in the party out of power.

Evaluation of the Primary Presidential primaries tend to democratize the delegate-selection process. And, importantly, they force would-be nominees to test their candidacies in actual political combat. For the party out of power, especially, the primaries are often "knock-down, drag-out" affairs. Without the unifying force of the President as party leader, several top personalities and factions in the party vie with one another, vigorously, for the presidential nomination. Here, a key function of the presidential primary can be seen: the screening out of the lesser possibilities to the point where only one or a few contenders for the nomination remain in the contest.

Such hard-fought contests do occur, but are not common, in the party in power. This tends to be true either because the President (1) is himself seeking reelection, or (2) has given his backing to someone he favors for the nomination. In either case the President regularly gets his way.

A sitting President is seldom challenged for his renomination, but that situation does sometimes happen. Thus, for example, Ronald Reagan made a stiff run at President Gerald Ford in the Republican Party in 1976, and Senator Edward Kennedy gave President Carter a real fight in 1980.

Reform Proposals The fact that so many States now hold presidential primaries places large demands on contenders in terms of time, effort, money, scheduling, and, not least, fatigue. The lengthy primary season tests the public's endurance, as well.

Some think that each of the major parties should hold a single, nationwide primary, and have both parties choose their presidential candidates in those contests. National conventions would be done away with-except perhaps to pick their vice-presidential nominees and/or write party platforms.

Most often, however, critics of the present arrangement favor one version or another of a regional primary plan. A series of primaries would be held at two- or three-week intervals across the country.

The hope for any reform is uncertain at best. Significant change would require joint action by Congress, several States, and both major parties. Neither major party has ever expressed any interest in abandoning voting day For years, Americans have cast their ballots for President on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November. The tradition of voting in November originally developed in order to accommodate the schedules of farmers, who were often too busy to vote before the harvest was in for the year. The religious practices of early Americans contributed to the designation of Tuesday as the election day of choice; voting could not take place on a Sunday or Monday because voters from outlying areas would be forced to break the Christian Sabbath in order to travel to central polling locations.

\section*{Background}
its national convention. Both parties see the conventions as a device to promote compromise and, out of it, party unity.

\section*{Caucuses}

In those States that do not hold presidential primaries, delegates to the national conventions are selected in a system of local caucuses and district and/or State conventions. A caucus is a closed meeting of members of a political party who gather to select delegates to the national convention. The process works basically as it is described here, but the details differ from State to State.

A party's voters meet in local caucuses, most often at the precinct level. There they often express a preference among the contenders for the party's presidential nomination and select delegates to a local or district convention, where delegates to a State convention are elected. At the State level, and sometimes in the district conventions as well, delegates to the national convention are chosen.

The caucus-convention process dates back to the 1840 s and is the oldest method for choosing national convention delegates. Its use has declined significantly over the years, however. In 2008, less than a fourth of all delegates to either party's national convention came from States that still use this method of delegate choice.

The Iowa caucuses generally get the most attention, largely because they are now the first delegate-selection event held in every presidential election season. Iowa schedules the start of its caucus process early, and has purposely done so ever since 1972. In 2008 the event took place on January 3 , five days before New Hampshire held its first-in-the-nation presidential primary.

The national conventions are organized so that the energy and fervor heighten in intensity with each passing day. Why do you think the conventions are designed to stir the emotions of party members?

\section*{Securing the Nomination}

Once all the primaries and caucuses have been held and all of the delegates have been chosen, another event looms large. The two major parties hold their national conventions, the quadrennial meetings at which the delegates select their presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

For over a century, those gatherings were highly dramatic, often chaotic, and even stormy affairs at which, after days of heated bargaining, the party would finally nominate its presidential and vice-presidential candidates. Both parties' meetings have become much tamer in recent years-largely because there is now little doubt about who will win the party's grand prize. Regularly, the leading contender has won enough delegates in the primaries and caucuses to lock up the nomination long before the convention meets.

Each party's convention remains a major event, nonetheless. The conventions have three major goals: (1) naming the party's presidential and vice-presidential candidates,
\(\sqrt{ }\) checkpoint
Who are the voters electing in the system of caucuses and conventions?

\section*{loom}
\(v\). to come into sight in a significant way quadrennial adj. occurring every fourth year

\section*{Debate}
"One of the expedients [methods] of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations. They tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. "
This quote from George Washington's Farewell Address was a warning against the growth of political parties. Use it to start a classroom debate. Ask: Have political parties had a positive or a negative impact on our political process?

\section*{DISCUSS THE CONVENTIONS}

Review with students the "Race for the Presidency" graphic in the text. Have volunteer students read one of the captions in each step of the race. Tell students that the climax of the primaries and caucuses is the national conventions. Have volunteers list the goals of the conventions and write them on the board (adopt the party platform, name the presidential and vice presidential nominees, promote party unity, mobilize support for the party ticket, and capture the interest and attention of the nation). Ask: How do the conventions meet these goals? (showing solidarity through the presence of other candidates and different factions of the party, delegate enthusiasm, barnburner speeches, disparaging the other party, media coverage, patriotic adornment, showcasing the party's nominees and their acceptance speeches)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B}

Distribute the Chapter 13 Section 4 Core Worksheet B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 37), which asks students to answer questions about a presidential nomination acceptance speech. Divide the class into pairs and assign each pair either the Democratic or Republican Party. Then distribute Primary Source A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 38) to those assigned to the Democratic Party and Primary Source B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 40) to those assigned to the Republican Party. Have students read their assigned speech and answer the questions in the worksheet.
L2 ELL Differentiation Either read or have volunteers read one of the excerpts aloud. With each paragraph, have a volunteer summarize the general idea as well as describe the emotion they think it evokes. Then work with the class as a whole to answer the questions on the worksheet.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Precinct caucuses select delegates to the local or district convention, those delegates select delegates to the State convention, who then select the delegates to the national convention.
Caption Possible answer: Encouraging party unity and enthusiasm bolsters the party spirit during the convention and into the upcoming campaign, increasing the members' desire and efforts to help ensure the election of their party's candidate.

\section*{DISCUSS THE SPEECHES}

Have student volunteers brainstorm adjectives to describe the acceptance speech they read. (sample answers: patriotic, partisan, enthusiastic, visionary, disparaging, unifying, resolute, nationalistic) Then have students share their answers to the questions on the worksheet, making sure to get input on each party's speech. Ask: Based on the acceptance speech, would you vote for the nominee? Then lead a discussion on whether students felt that the speech they read successfully achieved the goals of the national convention, expressed the goals of the nominee, and provided insight into the vision and qualities of the nominee.
L3 Differentiation Have students read both speeches and compare the two on what they say about the nominee's policies, the reasons they should be elected, and the other candidate. Then have students create a poster supporting the candidate of his or her choice.
L4 Differentiation Have students select one of the parties. Ask them to read that party's platform and compare its contents to the contents of the acceptance speech of that party's nominee. Then have them write a brief essay describing how the speech and the platform are similar and how they are different.

\section*{Answers}

The Race for the Presidency Voters express their preferences throughout the race, through contributions and through votes in primaries and caucuses. To win, a candidate must attract strong popular support.

\section*{The Race for the Presidency}

The race begins as presidential contenders vie to become their party's nominee. As the pace intensifies, the field dwindles to a contest between two contenders for the ultimate prize - the presidency. How does the contest for the White House reflect the American democratic ideal?

(2) bringing the various factions and the leading personalities in the party together in one place for a common purpose, and (3) adopting the party's platform-its formal statement of basic principles, stands on major policy matters, and objectives for the campaign and beyond.

Both parties hope that their convention will do a number of other things, as well. They want the meeting to promote party unity, capture the interest and attention of the country at large, and generate support for the party's ticket in the upcoming campaign.

The First Days Each party's convention now meets in one or two sessions per day over three or four days. Each of those sessions is tightly scheduled and closely scripted. In short, they are now made for television.

The first day is dedicated to welcoming the delegates and organizing the convention, and to dozens of short speeches by an array of party figures. The second day sees a continuing parade of speakers but is highlighted by two major events: the adoption of the party's platform and the delivery of the keynote address.

The platform comes to the convention floor as a report by the committee on platform and resolutions. In fact, it has been drawn up by the party's leadership beforehand.

Platform-writing is a fine art. Recall, the platform is a statement of party principles and stands on policy matters. But it is also an important campaign document aimed at appealing to as many people and as many groups as possible. So both parties tend to produce somewhat generalized comments on some of the hard questions facing the nation at

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

Pass out a primary source document related to each step of a presidential election. Have groups of students create a tableau based on one of the documents from the set. The other groups will try to guess which document the tableau represents. A tableau is a frozen image illustrating the sense and feel of a primary source. As students present their tableau, have the class write down their impressions of the scene. The audience will ask questions, and student actors will answer in single sentences. At this point, the audience should be able to guess which document the actors are acting out.

To see this lesson plan, go to

National Conventions
Debates
Election Day
the time. Platforms are regularly criticized for blandness. Still, the platforms are important. They do set out a number of hard-and-fast stands in many policy areas. They also reflect the compromising nature of American politics and of the two major parties.

The keynote address is usually a barnburner, delivered by one of the party's most accomplished orators. The address, like nearly all the speeches the delegates hear, follows a predictable pattern. It glorifies the party, its history, its leaders, and its programs, blisters the other party, and predicts a resounding victory for the party and its candidates in November.

The Last Two Days The convention turns to its chief task on the third day: the nomination of the party's candidates for President and Vice President. The delegates turn first to the vice-presidential choice. Historically, that task often involved some suspense and a good deal of bargaining among party factions. Nowadays, however, the soon-to-be-nominated presidential candidate sometimes announces his or her choice of a running mate before the convention meets-and the delegates ratify that choice with little or no dissent.

The vice-presidential candidate then delivers his or her acceptance speechanother effort to fire up the party faithful and appeal to as many other voters as possible.

The third day's session culminates with the selection of the party's presidential candidate. The names of several contenders may be offered, especially in the party out of power. Once the nominating (and several seconding) speeches are made, the delegates vote. The convention secretary calls the States in

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Divide the class into groups of four or five and tell students that their group is forming a new political party and must come up with a platform. Have groups use library or online resources to find copies of the most recent party platforms. Although party platforms tend to be very long and comprehensive, tell students that their platforms should state at least five political ideas or principles held by their new political party. Have a member from each group present the platform to the class. Discuss which platform "planks" are the most common and which are the most controversial.

L4 DDifferentiate Using the Internet or the library, have students conduct research to determine what percentage of eligible voters in their State participated in the most recent presidential primaries or caucuses, and what percentage voted in the most recent presidential election. Students should present their findings in the form of a graph, accompanied by a short essay explaining what difference (if any) exists between the two participation rates and a possible explanation for that difference. Does this difference in participation rates affect their opinion on whether the presidential nomination and election process fairly represents the wishes of the voters?
Tell students to go to the Interactivity to learn more about the race to the presidency.

\section*{Background}
frontloading In the 2008 campaign, Florida and Michigan moved their primaries earlier, ruining the primary schedules that both parties had carefully planned to allow a diverse group of States to participate early. Both parties imposed penalties for violating party rules. The Republican Party cut in half these States' convention votes, but this mattered little because McCain had already clinched the nomination. With its nomination still in doubt, the Democratic Party imposed harsher penalties. The Florida and Michigan primaries would be nonbinding-no convention delegates would be awarded based on the results. Also, no Democratic candidates would campaign in these States. As the convention neared, frontrunner Barack Obama agreed to restore full voting rights to promote party unity. However, the problem remains-How can parties prevent frontloading in future elections?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Have students draw a flowchart illustrating the different steps in the nomination process, and ask them to note at each step on the flowchart what qualities a candidate must possess in order to succeed in that step.Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 42)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 43)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

Presidential candidate Bill Clinton plays the saxophone in 1992 on the Arsenio Hall show, and candidate John McCain appeared with Jay Leno in 2008. How do talk shows help candidates reach new audiences?
alphabetical order, and the chair of each State delegation announces how that delegation's votes are cast. Each complete roll call is known as a ballot, and the balloting continues until one of the contenders wins a majority of the delegates' votes.

Most often, the first ballot produces a winner. Over the 28 conventions held by each party since 1900, the Republicans have made a first ballot choice 24 times and the Democrats 23 times. Indeed, the GOP has not had to take a second ballot since 1948, and the Democrats since 1952. \({ }^{18}\)

With its candidates named, the convention comes to the final major item on its agenda: the presidential candidate's acceptance speech. That speech caps the convention and launches the party's general election campaign.

\section*{Who Is Nominated?}

If an incumbent President wants another term, and the 22nd Amendment is not in play, the convention's choice is easily made. The sitting President is virtually certain to gain the nomination, and usually with no real opposition from within the party. The 18 A convention can become deadlocked. In that case, a "dark horse"- that is, someone who did not seem a likely choice before the convention-may finally emerge as the nominee. The most spectacular deadlock in convention history occurred at the Democratic convention in New York in 1924. That convention took 103 ballots before John W. Davis of West Virginia won the nomination.

President's advantages are immense: the majesty and publicity of the office and close control of the party's machinery. \({ }^{19}\)

When the President is not in the field, up to a dozen or more contenders may surface in the preconvention period. At most, two or three of them may survive to contest the prize at the national convention.

Political Experience Who will win the nomination? The historical record suggests that this will be the usual answer: The contender who is the most electable. Both parties want to pick candidates who can win, those with the broadest possible appeal, within the party and in the electorate.

Most presidential candidates come to their nominations with substantial, wellknown records in public office. Thus, in 2008, the Republicans picked John McCain, who had spent 26 years in Congress. But, notice, his Democratic opponent did not have nearly so lengthy a record. Barack Obama had served only four years in the Senate. However long the record, it is usually free of controversies that could have antagonized key elements in the party and the voting public.

Almost always, the major party candidates have served in elective offices, where they have demonstrated vote-getting abilities. Only rarely does a candidate step from the private world or from the military directly into a presidential candidacy-although Wendell Willkie did in 1940, and Dwight Eisenhower in 1952, both in the Republican Party.

Historically, the governorships of the larger States have produced the largest number of presidential candidacies. Of the 35 men nominated by the two major parties from 1908 to 2008, sixteen were either serving or had once served as a governor.

It is true that neither party picked a governor in 2008; but, notice, several governors

\footnotetext{
19In fact, only four sitting Presidents have ever been denied nomination: John Tyler (1844), Millard Fillmore (1852), Franklin Pierce (1856), and Chester Arthur (1884).
}

\section*{Answers}

Caption Talk shows have specific audiences to which they are directed and candidates can use these forums as a method to reach those audiences.

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 13E, Change, as a wrap-up activity after students read the candidates' acceptance speeches. Tell students that this cartoon appeared shortly after the candidates gave their acceptance speeches at their party's national convention in 2008. Ask: According to the cartoon, how were the two speeches alike? (both focused on change) What was the main difference in the two speeches? (the tone, or the way the candidates expressed their message of change) According to the cartoon, how did the tone of the two speeches differ? (Obama expressed his message optimistically, as a bright future through change. McCain's message was less hopeful, expressing change as a way to fix what's broken.) Which tone do you think would appeal most to voters? Why? (probably Obama's, because a happy vision of the future is appealing during economic hard times) were among the also-rans that year. The major party tickets were also notable in this respect in 2008: For the first time, both major parties selected sitting members of the United States Senate as their standard bearers.

Other Characteristics Most of the leading contenders for the nomination have been Protestants. The most notable exceptions to that statement, all Democrats and all Catholics, are Alfred E. Smith (1928), John F. Kennedy (1960), and John Kerry (2004).

Most nominees have also come from the larger States. So hopefuls from such pivotal States as New York, Ohio, Illinois, Texas, and California tend to have an advantage.

Television and now the Internet have reshaped this consideration, however. Thus, the Republicans nominated Bob Dole of Kansas in 1996 and John McCain of Arizona in 2008. And the Democrats selected Jimmy Carter of Georgia in 1976 and Bill Clinton of Arkansas in 1992.

Nominees usually have a pleasant and healthy appearance, seem to be happily married, and have an attractive (and exploitable) family. Only five have ever been divorced.

A well-developed speaking ability has always been a plus in American politics. The ability to project well over television, pioneered by John F. Kennedy in 1960, has long since become a must, as well.

Shattering Barriers Until 2008, neither major party had ever seriously considered a woman or nominated a member of any minority group as its presidential candidate. The Democrats broke with tradition in the most recent election, however.

Senator Hillary Clinton of New York came remarkably close to being the Democratic Party's presidential candidate in 2008. It is generally thought that the longstanding barrier to a woman at the top of a major party's national ticket has now been shattered.

The Democratic Party's presidential candidate in 2008, Barack Obama, was the child of a white mother from Kansas and a black father from Kenya. His historic election in 2008 shattered the racial barrier for the nation's highest office.

The Republicans also defied the historical record in 2008. Over time, most major party presidential candidates have been in their 50s or early 60 s, with only a few in their 40 s, when nominated. But none has ever been as old as John McCain, who turned 72 only a few weeks before he became the GOP's candidate in 2008. Indeed, the age spread between the two major party candidates was greater than it had been in any presidential election.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What characteristics of the presidential nominees have influenced the voting public?

\section*{standard bearer \\ v. a leader of a} movement or party

\section*{SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{gathered}\text { To continue to build a } \\ \text { response to the chapte }\end{gathered}\)}

Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: Does the nominating system allow Americans to choose the best candidates for President?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What is the purpose of a presidential primary and a caucus? (b) How do these processes differ?
3. (a) Where is the first primary held? (b) Why do you think there is such a great desire for a State to hold its primary as early as possible?
4. What are the three main goals of the national conventions?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Conclusions Do you think the proportional representation rule allows for a more democratic election? Why or why not?
6. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment (a) What characteristics are common to people who have been nominated to run for President by a major party? (b) What other characteristics would you like to see in a presidential candidate? (c) Explain how these characteristics would help a President perform the job more effectively.

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Write a Thesis Statement As in other types of essays and reports, the backbone for a research report is the thesis, or main idea. Review your notes to find relationships between ideas. Focusing on his qualifications and administration, write a thesis statement that is supported by the majority of the information that you have found on the President you chose.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The nomination process assures strong candidates by putting contenders through many tests along the way. The candidates who survive these tests will likely have broad appeal and a high degree of electability.
2. (a) to select delegates to the party's national convention or express a preference among contenders for nomination (b) A primary is a vote by party members. A caucus-convention process is a series of meetings of party members at the precinct, local, district, and State levels.
3. (a) New Hampshire (b) Candidates spend a lot of time and money in early States. Some late primary voters feel their votes are unimportant because early States have already decided the nominee.
4. naming the party's presidential and vicepresidential candidates, bringing party factions and the leading personalities together, adopting the party's platform
5. Compared to the winner-take-all contests, proportional representation seems more democratic. The delegate selection more closely represents the voice of the people.
6. (a) record free of controversies, held elective office, many were governors, Protestant, from big States, good speakers (b) Sample answer: I would like a presidential candidate to hold an advanced degree and to have graduated near the top of his or her college class.
(c) These characteristics are a measure of above-average intelligence, which would help a President decide complex issues.
QUICK WRITE The thesis statement should express the main idea supported by research.

Does the election process serve the goals of American democracy today?

\section*{SECTION 5}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{Electoral College} \\
\hline Defects & Significance \\
\hline - winner-take-all system & - winner of popular vote not guaranteed presidency \\
\hline - two electors in each State allotted based on Senate seats & \begin{tabular}{l}
- allotment of electoral votes does not match population and voter distribution \\
- winner of popular vote not guaranteed presidency
\end{tabular} \\
\hline - electors not required to vote in accord with popular vote & - electors who break their pledge could influence outcome \\
\hline - House may have to decide election & \begin{tabular}{l}
- House votes by State, so States with small or large populations have equal weight \\
- State loses vote if no candidate favored by majority of that State's representatives \\
- election requires majority of States, so third-party candidate could prevent decision
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will . .
- examine the distribution of electoral votes, using a table.
- recognize the influence of the electoral system on campaign strategy, using a map of pre-election opinion poll results.
- evaluate proposals to reform the electoral college system, using a Jigsaw strategy.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

Guiding Question
Does the election process serve the goals of American democracy today? Use a table like the one below to keep track of the main ideas about the election process.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Electoral College } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Defects } & Significance \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
\(\bullet\) - Winner-take-all \\ system
\end{tabular} & \(\bullet\) \\
\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- swing voter & - direct popular \\
- battleground & election \\
State & - national \\
- district plan & popular vote \\
- proportional & plan \\ plan &
\end{tabular}
- proportional popula
plan

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the features of the presidential campaign.
2. Explain how the electoral college provides for the election of the President.
3. Identify several flaws in the electoral college system.
4. Outline the advantages and disadvantages of proposed reforms of the electoral college.

Image Above: Young volunteers encourage voter participation

As you know, the Constitution calls for a presidential election to be held every four years. The first one was held in 1789, and, like clockwork, 56 of those contests have followed along, right on schedule. That remarkable fact is unmatched in the history of any other nation in the world. Even during a civil war, two world wars, several economic depressions, and various other crises, the Constitution's command has been met.

\section*{The Presidential Campaign}

The presidential campaign is an all-out effort to win the votes of the American people. For decades, that slugfest began soon after the two parties' conventions had adjourned. But, over recent decades, it has been quite apparent some weeks, or even a month or more, before the conventions who the delegates would nominate. So the campaigns have in fact begun at some point before the candidates were formally nominated.

The campaign itself is organized chaos, and it dominates the national news scene up to election day. The candidates' campaign organizations work to show their standard bearers in the best possible light and, with negative jabs, to undercut the claims of the opposition. The voters are bombarded with radio and television interviews, speeches and advertisements, direct mail, Internet messages, "whistle-stop" tours, press conferences and press releases, rallies and party dinners, stickers and buttons, pamphlets, balloons, and billboards. The candidates pose for hundreds of photographs and shake thousands of hands as each of them tries to convince the voters that he (and, one day, she) is the best bet for the country.

Both campaigns focus much of their efforts on swing voters-the roughly one third of the electorate who have not made up their minds at the start of the campaign and are open to persuasion by either side. Campaign strategy is also driven by the electoral college, as you will see in a moment. The would-be Presidents target the battleground States-those States in which the outcome is "too close to call" and either candidate could win. Both campaigns tend to concentrate their organizational efforts, campaign funds, and candidate appearances in those States.

To practice analyzing political cartoons in this section, use the Chapter 13 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-inOne, p. 50). You may teach the skill explicitly before or after discussing the electoral college. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 51).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Voters do not vote directly for the President, but for presidential electors.
- In most States, electors are chosen on a winner-take-all basis, so the party with the largest popular vote in a State wins all of that State's electors. - Today's electors are pledged to vote for their party's candidates, contrary to the Framers' intent. • Some people say that the electoral college is flawed and are working to reform it.
CONCEPTS: popular sovereignty, representative democracy
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Although the popular vote represents the people's choice, the electoral votes actually elect the President. - A candidate can win the popular vote and fail to win the presidency. - Supporters of the electoral college say that, although it may be flawed, it is a known system that works in most cases. lights the campaign. An incumbent President, or a candidate ahead in the polls, may not really want to debate, but both major party contenders now regularly agree to do so. \({ }^{20}\)

The first presidential debates, in 1960, featured then-Vice President Richard Nixon and his Democratic opponent, John F. Kennedy. Their three televised debates, which were little more than joint appearances, generated a great deal of interest, and many analysts credit John Kennedy's strong performance in them as one of the keys to his very narrow victory in the election that year.

The next set of debates came in 1976, between President Gerald Ford and his Democratic opponent, Jimmy Carter; with another involving their vice-presidential running mates, Bob Dole and Walter Mondale. That general pattern has been followed in every campaign since then. Thus, in 2008, there were three debates between John McCain and Barack Obama and one that pitted Sarah Palin against Joe Biden.

The most recent presidential debatesstill more joint appearances than real debates-included one on foreign policy, a second with a "town hall" format, and a third on domestic and economic policy. Whether or not, and how much, the candidates' performances in these debates affected their ratings is still being discussed. In all, an average of 57 million people watched each debate. Surprisingly, more viewers tuned in to watch the single vice-presidential debate between Democratic senator Joe Biden and Governor Sarah Palin of Alaska than watched any of the Obama-McCain debates.

The presidential campaign finally comes to an end on election day. Millions of voters go to the polls in all 50 States and the District of Columbia. But the President, whoever that is to be, is not formally elected until 20 The debates are now sponsored by an independent, nonpartisan body created by Congress, the Commission on Presidential Debates. The participants must be party-nominated candidates who are (1) supported by at least 15 percent of the respondents in five national polls and (2) listed on the ballot of States which, taken together, will cast at least a majority (270) of the electoral votes in the upcoming election. In effect, the Commission's rules exclude minor party and independent candidates from the debates.

the presidential electors votes are cast and counted, several weeks later.

\section*{The Election}

You have arrived at one of the least understood points in the American political process. As the people vote in the presidential election, they do not cast a vote directly for one of the contenders for the office of the President. Instead, they vote to elect presidential electors.

Recall, the Constitution provides for the election of the President by the electoral college, in which each State has as many electors as it has members of Congress. The Framers expected the electors to use their own judgment in selecting a President. Today the electors, once chosen, are really just "rubber stamps." They are expected to vote automatically for their party's candidates for President and Vice President. In short, the electors go through the form as it is set out in the Constitution in order to meet the letter of the Constitution, but their behavior is far from the original intent of that document.

Choosing Electors The electors are chosen by popular vote in every State on the same day everywhere: the Tuesday after the first Monday in November every fourth year. \({ }^{21}\) So the 2012 presidential election was set for November 6, 2012. In every State except Maine and Nebraska, the electors are chosen at large. \({ }^{22}\) That is, they are chosen on 21 The Constitution (Article II, Section 1, Clause 2) says that the electors are to be chosen in each State "in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct" In several States the legislatures themselves chose the electors in the first several elections. By 1832, however, every State except South Carolina had provided for popular election. The electors were picked by the legislature in South Carolina through 1860. Since then, all presidential electors have been chosen by popular vote in every State, with two exceptions. The State legislatures chose the electors in Florida in 1868 and in Colorado in 1876. 22 Maine (beginning in 1972) and Nebraska (1992) use the "district plan." In those States, two electors are chosen from the State at large and the others are picked in each of the State's congressional districts. The district plan was used by several States in the first few presidential elections, but every State except South Carolina had provided for the choice of the electors from the State at large by 1832 . Since then, the district plan has been used only by Michigan in 1892 and by Maine and Nebraska. In 2008, Barack Obama won one electoral vote from Nebraska's Second District

Checkpoint What role does the popular vote play in a presidential election?

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 44) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 46)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 13F, which shows a quotation supporting direct election of the President. Have students answer the question in their notebooks.
L2 Differentiate Explain key terms from the Bellringer quote: thwarts (blocks or prevents), distorts (twists out of shape), and bipartisan (including members of both parties).

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

On opposite sides of the board, write "Agree" and "Disagree." Call on students to say which side they chose, and have each student you call on give one of his or her specific facts in support of the position. As students name facts, write them on the board under the relevant header. (Possible arguments for direct election: most democratic; each vote counts equally; the winner will always be the majority choice; loser of popular vote has actually become President in past elections; most Americans support this plan. Possible arguments against direct election: abolishes Framers' original plan; weakens federalism because the States, as States, would lose their role in choosing a President; weakens the voice of small States; could lead to electoral dominance of large States; would require widespread campaigning that would strain electoral resources; could lead to voter fraud and post-election challenges)

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 13, Section 5:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 44)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 46)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 48)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 49)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 50)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 51)
L3 Quiz A (p. 52) L2 Quiz B (p. 53)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 54) L2 Chapter Test B (p. 57)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The popular vote elects presidential electors who will actually vote for the President and Vice President.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 13 Section 5 Core Worksheet A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 48) containing a table of electoral college votes by State. Have students read the table and answer the questions on the worksheet. When they have completed the worksheet, review the answers with the class.

\section*{CALCULATE ELECTORAL COLLEGE VOTES}

Display Transparency 13G, Electoral Vote Projection. Explain that this map represents the results of opinion polling shortly before the 2008 election. Based on this map, ask students how many electoral votes are either "solid" or "leaning" toward each candidate. (Obama: 164 solid, 38 leaning; McCain: 163 solid, 26 leaning)
Next, have students identify the States that were considered "battleground" States, meaning that their electoral votes could have gone to either candidate at the time this map was created. (Nevada, Colorado, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Virginia, Florida) Ask students how many electoral votes were at stake in these battleground States. (147)
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about the nation's electoral votes.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Maps The States in the northeast have much larger electoral strength than other States relative to their actual size.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What role does the popular vote play in a presidential election?
slate
n. a list of candidates in an election
a winner-take-all basis. The presidential candidate-technically, the slate of electorcandidates nominated by his party-who receives the largest number of popular votes in a State regularly wins all of that State's electoral votes.

Today, the names of the individual electorcandidates appear on the ballot in only a handful of States. In most States, however, only the names of the presidential and vicepresidential candidates are listed. They stand as "shorthand" for the elector slates.

Counting the Electoral Votes The Constitution provides that the date Congress sets for the electors to meet "shall be the same throughout the United States."23 The 12th

23 Article II, Section 1, Clause 4.

Amendment provides that "the Electors shall meet in their respective States." The electors thus meet at their State capital on the date set by Congress, now the Monday after the second Wednesday in December. There they each cast their electoral votes, one for President and one for Vice President. The electors' ballots, signed and sealed, are sent by registered mail to the president of the Senate in Washington.

Which party has won a majority of the electoral votes, and who then will be the next President of the United States, is usually known by midnight of election day, more than a month before the electors cast their ballots. But the formal election of the President and Vice President finally takes place on January \(6 .{ }^{24}\)

\section*{24 If that day falls on a Sunday, as it did most recently in 1985 (but will not again until 2013), then the ballot-counting is held the following day.}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline & ()couennmentonline \\
\hline Electoral Votes by State &  \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

A cartogram is a thematic map that shows a relationships between two factors, distorted to convey the data. The large map below relates the number of electoral votes of a State to its actual size. Note how some small, populous States have more electoral votes than some larger, rural States. What do these maps suggest about the electoral vote strength of the Northeast?

388 The Presidency

\section*{Background}

ALLOCATION OF ELECTORAL VOTES In the electoral college, each State has the same number of electors as it has members of Congress (both senators and House representatives). Each State has at least three electors, because each State has two senators and at least one representative. After each census, when the distribution of congressional representatives changes, the distribution of electors also changes. The exception to this rule is the District of Columbia, which does not have senators or representatives but nonetheless has three votes in the electoral college.

On that date, the president of the Senate opens the electoral votes from each State and counts them before a joint session of Congress. The candidate who receives a majority of the electors' votes for President is declared elected, as is the candidate with a majority of the votes for Vice President.

If no candidate has won a majority-at least 270 of the 538 electoral votes today-the election is thrown into the House of Representatives. This happened in 1800 and again in 1824. The House chooses a President from among the top three candidates voted for by the electoral college. Each State delegation has one vote, and it takes a majority of 26 to elect. If the House fails to choose a President by January 20, the 20th Amendment provides that the newly elected Vice President shall act as President until a choice is made.

The 20th Amendment further states that "the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified" by Inauguration Day. Congress has done so in the Succession Act of 1947. The Speaker of the House would "act as President . . . until a President or Vice President shall have qualified."

If no person receives a majority of the electoral votes for Vice President, the Senate decides between the top two candidates. It takes a majority of the whole Senate to elect. The Senate has had to choose a Vice President only once; it elected Richard M. Johnson in 1837.

\section*{Flaws in the Electoral College}

The electoral college system is plagued by three major defects: (1) the winner of the popular vote is not guaranteed the presidency; (2) electors are not required to vote in accord with the popular vote; and (3) any election might have to be decided in the House of Representatives

The First Major Defect There is the everpresent threat that the winner of the popular vote will not win the presidency. This continuing danger is largely the result of two factors. The most important is the winner-take-all feature of the electoral college system. That is, the winning candidate customarily receives all of a State's electoral votes. Thus, in 2008, Barack Obama won just 51 percent of the popular vote in Ohio. Still, he won all of that State's 20 electoral votes-despite the fact that some 2.5 million Ohioans voted for his Republican opponent, John McCain.

The other major culprit here is the way the electoral votes are distributed among the States. Remember, two of the electors in each State are allotted because of a State’s Senate seats, regardless of population. So the allotment of electoral votes does not match the facts of population and voter distribution.

Take an extreme case to illustrate this point: California, the country's most populous State, has 55 electoral votes, one for each 615,848 persons in the State, based on its 2000 population of \(33,871,698\) residents. Wyoming has three electoral votes, one for each 164,594 persons, based on its 2000 population of 493,782 residents.

The popular vote winner has, in fact, failed to win the presidency four times: in 1824, 1876, 1888, and most recently \(2000 .{ }^{25}\) In that latest instance, the Democratic candidate, Vice President Al Gore, won 50,992,335 popular votes - 537,179 more votes than his Republican opponent, the then-governor of Texas, George W. Bush. However, Mr. Bush received 271 electoral votes-one more than the bare majority in the electoral college, and so he became the nation's 43rd President.

Florida's 25 electoral votes proved to be decisive in the 2000 election. The popular vote results in several Florida counties were challenged immediately after the polls closed there. The next five weeks were filled with partisan infighting, several recounts, and a number of court disputes.

25 The election of 1876 , pitting Republican Rutherford B. Hayes against Democrat Samuel J. Tilden, is often called the "Stolen from Florida ( 4 votes) Louisiana ( 8 votes), and South Carolina ( 7 votes), and the validity of one vote from Oregon was dis( 7 votes), and the validity of one vote from Oregon was dismatter It was composed of five senators, five representatives, and five Supreme Court justices. The Commissioners, eight Republicans and seven Democrats, voted on strict party line so all 20 disputed votes were awarded to Hayes, who won the presidency with 185 electoral votes to Tilden's 184 allotment
\(\frac{\text { allotment }}{n . \text { an amount or share }}\) assigned to somebody or something

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 131, I Survived Campaign 2004, when you discuss campaign strategies in battleground States. This cartoon illustrates how campaigns target battleground States. Ask: Who does the man represent? (a typical voter in battleground States) What happened to the voter? (He was hit with a barrage of campaign-related messages.) Why? (Candidates focus a lot of attention and resources on battleground States, because these States are still up for grabs. ) Based on the cartoon, how do voters in battleground States feel when the election finally arrives? (They feel beat up or worn out.)

\section*{CREATE ELECTION STRATEGY}

Remind students that a candidate needs 270 electoral votes to win the presidential election. Based on their analysis of the transparency, ask them how many votes each candidate needed from battleground States to become President. (Assuming that both candidates won all their "solid" and "leaning" States, Obama would need 68 additional votes from battleground States and McCain would need 81.)
Designate each student as either a Democrat or a Republican. Tell students that they are the campaign managers for their party's 2008 candidate in the last weeks of this election. Based on the map and the electoral vote projections, ask the Democratic campaign managers what advice they would give to their candidate. Write their answers on the board. Then repeat for the Republican campaign managers. Discuss the answers as a class, finding the similarities and differences between the two parties' strategies.

\section*{\(\square 2\)} Differentiate Pair students and use the Think-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to have students come up with their advice for both candidates.

\section*{DISPLAY TRANSPARENCY}

Display Transparency 13H, which is a map of the 2008 election results. Ask students to think about the ways that the results map differs from the previous transparency of the opinion poll map.
Ask: How many States did each candidate actually win? (Obama: 28; McCain: 22) What was the final count of electoral votes for each candidate? (Obama: 349; McCain: 163) Which battleground States did each candidate win? (Obama: Florida, Indiana, North Carolina, Ohio; McCain: North Dakota, Montana, Missouri) How many total votes did each candidate gain from battleground States? (Obama: 73; McCain: 17) Based on these results, how effective were the winning candidate's campaign efforts in the final weeks before the election?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the winner of the popular vote may not win the presidency, the electors are not required to vote in accord with the popular vote, any election might be decided by the House

\section*{JIGSAW ACTIVITY}

Discuss the relationship between the popular vote and the electoral college vote, and the reasons why the electoral vote does not always reflect the popular vote. Ask: Do you feel that this issue represents a flaw with the electoral college system?
Distribute the Chapter 13 Section 5 Core Worksheet B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 49), which has a chart for students' use in this exercise. Use the Jigsaw strategy (p. T27) to conduct an activity on possible reforms to the electoral college system. Divide the students into five groups, one for each of the four major reform plans discussed in the chapter (district plan, proportional plan, direct popular election, and national popular vote) and one for the current electoral college system. Instruct them to work with their group to complete the part of the chart for their assigned election plan. Give each group five or ten minutes to discuss the advantages and disadvantages, and record their notes on the chart. While they discuss, circulate through the classroom and help any groups that are having difficulty.
At the end of the discussion time, have the students form new groups, each composed of one student from each previous group. In their new configuration, have students share the results of their previous discussions and complete the remaining parts of the chart. Finally, have them work with their group to answer the question at the end of the worksheet. This question asks them to choose which of the five options they think is the best method for selecting a President.

The United States Supreme Court finally brought an end to the bitter contest on December 12. It ruled, in Bush v. Gore, that the differing ways in which various counties were recounting votes violated the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. The Court's 5-4 decision ended those recounts. It also preserved Mr. Bush's 537vote lead in the Statewide count, and so gave him Florida's 25 electoral votes. The High Court's split decision in Bush v. Gore remains highly controversial.
To this point, 15 Presidents have won the White House with less than a majority of the popular votes cast in their elections. The most recent of these "minority Presidents" were Bill Clinton in both 1992 and 1996, and George W. Bush in 2000.

By now, you see the point: The winner-take-all factor produces an electoral vote that is, at best, only a distorted reflection of the popular vote.

The Second Major Defect Nothing in the Constitution, nor in any federal statute, requires the electors to vote for the candidate favored by the popular vote in their States. Several States do have such laws, but they are of doubtful constitutionality, and none has ever been enforced.

To this point, however, electors have "broken their pledges," refused to vote for their party's presidential nominee, on only eleven occasions-most recently in 2004. That year, one Minnesota elector, a Democrat, did not cast his ballot for his party's presidential candidate, John Kerry.

He voted, instead, for the Democrats' vicepresidential choice, John Edwards. In fact, he voted for Senator Edwards twice-once for President and then, again, on his other ballot, for Vice President.

In no case has the vote of a "faithless elector" had a bearing on the outcome of a presidential election. But the potential is most certainly there.

The Third Major Defect In any presidential election, it is possible that the contest will be decided in the House. This has happened only twice, and not since 1824. In several other elections, however-most recently, 1968-a strong third-party bid has threatened to make it impossible for either major party candidate to win a majority in the electoral college, and so throw the election into the House of Representatives.

Three serious objections can be raised regarding election by the House. First, the voting in such cases is by States, not by individual members. A State with a small population, such as Alaska, Wyoming, or Vermont, would have as much weight as the most populous State. Second, if the representatives from a State were so divided that no candidate was favored by a majority, that State would lose its vote. Third, the Constitution requires a majority of the States for election in the House-today, 26 States. If a strong third-party candidate were involved, there is a real possibility that the House could not make a decision by Inauguration Day.

In such a case, Section 3 of the 20th Amendment states that "the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified." If no Vice President elect is available, the Presidential Succession Act would come into play. Note that it is even mathematically possible for the minority party in the House to have control of a majority of the individual State delegations. That party could then elect its candidate, even though he or she may have run second or even third in both the popular and the electoral vote contests.

\section*{Background}

COLORADO ATtEMPTS REFORM In 2000, Al Gore won the popular vote but lost the election to George W. Bush by five electoral votes. The closeness of this race renewed attention on the electoral college system. In Colorado, a group proposed a State constitutional amendment, Amendment 36, which would make Colorado the first State to adopt a proportional plan. Had Amendment 36 been in place in 2000, Al Gore would have become President. Colorado has nine electoral votes. Under the proportional plan, a candidate who wins 60 percent of Colorado's popular vote would take five electoral votes, with the other four going to the loser. Supporters pointed out that Amendment 36 would make each individual's vote count. Critics argued that it would take away Colorado's influence. Candidates would not campaign in the State if they might win only one vote more than their opponent. Amendment 36 failed.

\section*{Proposed Reforms}

The several shortcomings of the electoral college have long been recognized. To that point, Thomas Jefferson once called its original version "the most dangerous blot" on the Constitution. Amendments to revise or eliminate the electoral college have been introduced in every term of Congress since 1789. Most of the proposals fall under four headings: the district plan, the proportional plan, direct popular election, and the national popular vote plan. Over recent years, most advocates of change have supported the direct election of the President.

Far Left: An election official uses a magnifying glass to deciper whether a "chad" was punched through on a Florida ballot. Middle and Right: Voters take to the streets to show their views on the contested 2000 election.

District and Proportional Plans Under the district plan, each State would choose its electors much as it chooses its members of Congress. That is, two electors would be chosen from the State at large, and they would be required to cast their electoral votes in

\section*{Background}

FAITHLESS ELECTORS Electors are expected to vote for the candidate that carries their State, and they usually do. However, electors have broken ranks with their parties and voted for other candidates a few times in American history. Electors who do this are known as "faithless electors." Some faithless electors have even voted for people who were not officially declared candidates. In 1976, one Republican elector voted for Ronald Reagan instead of the party's candidate, incumbent Gerald Ford. Reagan, though he had competed in the primary, was not on the ticket. That elector seemed to have a good instinct, though-Reagan was elected President four years later.

\section*{DISCUSS THE RESULTS}

Ask each group to share its choice with the class, and then conduct a class discussion about why each group made the choice that it did. As part of this discussion, remind students of the Bellringer quote, and ask if any changed their opinion about the electoral college as a result of this activity. If so, have them explain what made them change their minds.
Tell students to go to the Online Update to learn more about the results of recent elections.

Government
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Although McCain won nearly 50 percent of the popular vote, he only acquired about one third of the electoral vote, which would not have been the case had the winner-take-all element not be in place.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

