L3 Differentiate As the national popular vote plan is gaining momentum throughout the nation, have students research the progress of this plan. Have students write a newspaper article, describing the proposed plan and reporting its history, current status, and prospects for eventual adoption.
L4 Differentiate Divide the class into four groups and assign a country to each group (suggested countries to assign: the United Kingdom, Mexico, France, and Germany). Have the groups research, either in the library or online, how their assigned country chooses its head of government. Each group should then present the results of its research to the rest of the class.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint They reduce the emphasis on the electoral vote and put more on the popular vote.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How do these reform plans change the relationship between the electoral vote and the popular vote?
scheme \(n\). a plan or system in which things are put together line with the popular vote Statewide. The State's other electors would be elected, separately, in each of that State's congressional districts. The votes of these electors would be cast in accord with the popular vote in their districts. Remember, two States-Maine and Nebraska-now choose their electors on a district plan basis.

Under the proportional plan, each presidential candidate would receive a share of each State's electoral vote equal to his or her share of that State's popular vote. So a candidate who won 62 percent of the votes cast in a State with 20 electors would receive 12.4 of that State's electoral votes.

In their basic forms, neither the district nor the proportional plan would require a constitutional amendment to become effective. Remember, the Constitution leaves the manner of selecting the electors up to the State legislatures. Any of them could decide to allocate the State's electoral vote by districts or proportion.

The Constitution would have to be amended to accomplish direct popular election, however. If the goal of reform is to ensure that the winner of the national popular vote would in fact win the presidency, only direct election would guarantee that result. Neither the district nor the proportional plan would do so.

If the district plan had been in place in 1960, Richard Nixon, not John F. Kennedy, would have won the presidency. And in 1976 the presidential election would almost certainly have had to be decided by the House.

If the Constitution had provided for a proportional plan in 1960, the KennedyNixon election would very likely have had to go to the House. Additionally, the House would almost certainly have had to decide who won the White House in 1968, 1976, 1992, 1996, and 2000.

Moreover, neither a district plan nor a proportional plan would overcome the electoral college arrangement that violates the core democratic value of equality. The district scheme prevents the weighing of all votes equally. It does, in major part, because, recall, every State has two electoral votes because it has two seats in the Senate, no matter what its population.

The proportional plan does do a better job of weighing popular votes equally. Still, because each of the smaller States is overrepresented by its two Senate-based electors, that arrangement would make it possible for the loser of the popular vote to win the White House in the electoral vote. And, again, the proportional plan would often throw the election into the House.

Direct Popular Election Proposals for direct popular election would not reform but, instead, would abolish the electoral college system. The voters in all 50 States and the District of Columbia would be given the power to actually choose the President and the Vice President. Each vote would count equally in the national result. The winner would, therefore, always be the majority or plurality choice.

A majority of the American people have consistently supported direct popular election for several decades now. The fact that the loser of the popular vote nevertheless won the presidency in 2000 has given added weight to the case for direct election.

Several obstacles stand in the way of that plan, however. Not the least of them is the constitutional amendment process itself. Recall, the smaller States are heavily overrepresented in the electoral college. They would lose that advantage with direct election. It is altogether likely that enough senators, or representatives, from smaller States would oppose a direct election amendment to kill it. \({ }^{26}\)

Some argue that direct election would weaken the federal system because the States, as States, would lose their role in the choice of a President. Others believe that direct election would put too great a load on the election process. They believe this because every vote, no matter where it was cast, would count in the national result. And so candidates would have to campaign strenuously everywhere. The impact that would have on campaign

\footnotetext{
26 The House did approve a direct election amendment by the required two-thirds majority in 1969; a Senate filibuster killed the measure in 1970. A similar proposal was defeated in a Senate floor vote in 1979.
}

\section*{Debate}
"[The national popular vote initiative] is basically an end run around the Constitution. The appropriate way would be to actually amend the Constitution. But [the plan's supporters] know that they can't do that because they wouldn't have the popular support, they wouldn't be able to get it through [Congress]. "
- Michael Hough, American Legislative Exchange Council from "Obama-McCain Contest: Should Winner of Popular Vote Always Win the White House? " Christian Science Monitor (September 3, 2008)
Use this quotation to begin a debate in your class. Ask: Should an amendment to the U.S. Constitution be required to abolish the electoral college system?

\section*{The Electoral College Today}

DDefenders of the electoral college say that it forces the candidates to campaign in the smaller, competitive States. Critics insist that the system can give and has given the presidency to the candidate who did not win the popular vote. What is this cartoon's objection to the electoral college?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have the students write a paragraph explaining how the electoral college system has influenced American politics. Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' work.Assign the Section 5 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 52)
\(L 2\) Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 53)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.
time, effort, and finances would be huge and, opponents argue, probably unmanageable.

Some claim that, inevitably, direct election would spur various forms of voter fraud. That, they predict, would lead to lengthy, bitter, and highly explosive post-election challenges.

In several States, a Statewide election often hinges on the behavior of some particular group in the electorate. The overall result in the State depends in large part on how that group of voters cast their ballots or, often more importantly, on how heavily they do or do not turn out to vote. As but one of many examples of the point, the African American vote in Cook County (Chicago) is regularly decisive in a presidential election in Illinois. With direct election, those key groups would not have the critical power they now enjoy, and so many of them oppose direct election of the President.

Given all of this, there seems little chance that the electoral college will be abolished and direct election put in its place any time in the near future.

The National Popular Vote Plan A quite different approach to electoral college reform has recently surfaced: the national popular vote plan-in effect, a proposal to accomplish direct popular vote without any change in the Constitution.

This new plan looks to the State legislatures to take the lead in electoral college reform. It calls upon each State's lawmaking body to (1) amend State election laws to provide that all of a State's electoral votes are to be awarded to the winner of the national popular vote and (2) enter into an interstate compact, the Agreement Among the States to Elect the President by National Popular Vote. That compact, and with it each State's election law changes, would come into force only if and when agreed to by enough States to account for a majority (at least 270) of the 538 electoral votes.

Of all the reforms under consideration, the national popular vote plan is progressing beyond mere debate. Over 20 State legislatures have approved the bill, but, in most cases, the bill was vetoed by the governor.

\section*{Background}
butterfly ballot Display Transparency 13J, Butterfly Ballot in Palm Beach County, Florida, when you discuss Bush v. Gore. In the 2000 election, Republican George W. Bush defeated Democrat Al Gore in Florida by a mere 537 votes. Gore called for a recount in four Florida counties, including Palm Beach County, where the Reform Party candidate, Pat Buchanan, received an unexpectedly high vote total. This result did not match the demographics of Palm Beach County, which was home to many elderly, mostly Democratic voters. The county used the butterfly ballot illustrated in the transparency. Gore's name was listed second on the ballot, but to select Gore, voters had to punch the third hole. This confused many voters, who punched the second hole for Buchanan by mistake. Many people still believe that the confusing butterfly ballot cost Gore the election.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons The cartoon suggests that the electoral college is an outdated system for today's voters.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Judging the election \\ process (Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Brainstorm the advantages and disadvan- \\ tages of the current election system.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding the \\ focus of candidates \\ on swing and \\ battleground States \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review this section's Core Worksheet A, and \\ discuss the importance of each electoral \\ college vote.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Describing the \\ election process \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
On the board, create a list showing each step \\ in election process.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying and \\ evaluating the op- \\ tions for reforming \\ the electoral college \\
(Questions 4, 5)
\end{tabular} & Review this section's Core Worksheet B. \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining how the \\ popular and elec- \\ toral votes can differ \\
(Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the content under the header "The \\ First Major Defect."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint it is a known process, it identifies the President-to-be quickly and certainly, and it helps promote the nation's two-party system

Checkpoint What are the arguments for keeping the electoral college system?

Yet, four States-Hawaii, Illinois, Maryland, and New Jersey-have signed the legislation into law. It will be interesting to see if or when other States will join their ranks in the future.

This innovative plan has attracted the support of several nonpartisan groups as well as several major newspapers around the United States. It has, in large part, because it appears to satisfy the major objections to the electoral college as it currently operates, and it does so without the need to amend the Constitution.

\section*{Defending the Electoral College}

Although their case is not often heard, the present electoral college system does have its defenders. They react to the several proposed reforms by raising the various objections to them you have just read. Beyond that, most of these supporters argue that critics regularly exaggerate the "dangers" they see in the present system. Thus, they note that only two presidential elections have ever gone to the House of Representatives and that none has gone there in more than 180 years.

Those who support the present system do grant the point that the candidate who loses the popular vote has in fact won the presidency four times-and most recently in 2000. But, they note, that has happened only four times over the course of 57 presidential elections, and they add that is has happened only once in more than a century.

Supporters also say that the present arrangement, whatever its warts, has three major strengths:
1. It is a known process. Each of the proposed, but untried, reforms may very well have defects that could not be known until they appeared in practice.
2. In nearly every instance, the present system identifies the President-to-be quickly and certainly. Rarely does the nation have to wait very long to know the outcome of the presidential election.
3. Although it does present an enormous obstacle to minor party candidates, the present arrangement does help promote the nation's two-party system.

\section*{SECTION 5 ASSESSMENT}

To continue to build a
Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your table to answer this question: Does the election process serve the goals of American democracy today?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Why do presidential campaigns focus heavily on swing voters and battleground States?
3. (a) What is the electoral college? (b) What are the steps involved in its creation and in its selection of the President?
4. What are the four options suggested as alternatives to the electoral college?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment (a) Which of the alternatives to the electoral college system do you think is the most democratic? (b) Considering its disadvantages, do you think that the existing system should be reformed?
6. Express Problems Clearly In several elections, most recently in 2000, the candidate who lost the popular vote became President. (a) How is this outcome possible? (b) Do you believe this is a fair result? Provide one argument in favor of this result and one argument against

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Make an Outline To help you structure a research report on the President you selected in Section 2, create an outline in which you identify each topic and subtopic in a single phrase. When you are ready to write your research report on how that President's professional and political experience influenced his administration, you can use the outline as a guide.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Although the electoral college system has flaws, the suggested reforms also have serious flaws. Until a less-flawed method is devised, the current system serves our democratic goals best.
2. Swing voters and battleground states are undecided and can be swayed.
3. (a) delegates chosen in each State and the District of Columbia to formally select the President and Vice President (b) Voters select electors in the popular election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November. On the Monday after the second Wednesday in December, the electors meet in their State capital and vote for the President and Vice President. The votes are sent to the President of the Senate, who opens and counts them on January 6. The candidate with at least 270 electoral votes wins.
4. district plan, proportional plan, direct popular election, national popular vote plan
5. (a) national popular vote plan (b) Yes. This plan is most democratic because each vote counts equally and the choice of the majority will be President. Also, candidates should campaign everywhere-not just in States with disproportionate influence.
6. (a) Because of the winner-take-all system and the distribution of the electoral votes among the States, a candidate who wins the popular vote could lose the electoral vote
(b) Argument for: electoral system preserves federalism by preventing dominance by large States; Argument against: undemocratic, because individual votes do not count equally QUICK WRITE Students should create an outline and structure their essay based on it.

How the Electoral College Works
```

In November.. on election day, voters in each State cast ballots for a slate of electors who are pledged to vote for a particular presidential candidate.

```

\section*{In December...}
the winning electors meet in their State capitals. Each elector casts a vote for President and Vice President. Those ballots are sent to the president of the Senate in Washington, D.C

\section*{On January 6th..}
the president of the Senate opens the electoral ballots before a joint session of Congress. The candidate who wins the majority of the electors votes is declared President.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
chief of state \(p .364\) chief executive \(p .364\) chief administrator p. 365 chief diplomat \(p .365\) commander in chief \(p .365\) chief legislator p. 365 chief of party p. 365 chief citizen p. 365 presidential succession p. 370 Presidential Succession Act of 1947 p. 370 balance the ticket p. 372 presidential elector p. 374 electoral vote \(p .375\) electoral college p. 375 presidential primary p. 378 winner-take-all p. 379 proportional representation p. 379 caucus p. 381 national convention p. 381 platform p. 382 keynote address p. 383 swing voter p. 386 battleground State p. 386 district plan p. 391 proportional plan p. 392 direct popular election p. 392 national popular vote plan p. 393

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Create Graphic Organizers To review for a test, divide the class into groups of three to five students. Give each group a large piece of paper with a topic written at the top and a set period of time to create a graphic organizer related to the topic, such as a web diagram, a Venn diagram, a table, or a flowchart. Then ask students to pass their paper to the next group, which must expand the organizer. Continue until each group has worked on each topic. If the class is large, two organizers can be prepared for each topic and later compared. Post the completed organizers around the classroom.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 366, 381, 392
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the presidency, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Levert, Suzanne. The Electoral College. Children's Press, 2005.
L2 Morris-Lipsman, Arlene. Presidential Races: The Battle for Power in the United States. Twenty-First Century Books, 2007.
L3 Kincade, Vance R. Heirs Apparent: Solving the Vice Presidential Dilemma. Praeger Publishers, 2000.
L4 Amy, Douglas J. Real Choices/New Voices: How Proportional Representation Elections Could Revitalize American Democracy. Columbia University Press, 2002.

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) political experience, managerial skills, decisiveness, integrity, vision, ability to work with others (b) diplomatic experience, cultural understanding, communication skills, patience, willingness to consider different viewpoints (c) military experience, intelligence, decision-making skills, calmness, ability to build alliances (d) integrity, principled, tolerant, open-minded, fair
2. (a) limits a President to two full terms (b) yes, because it disqualifies a current two-term President from running again; OR no, because a multi-term President could become too powerful
3. (a) natural born citizen, at least 35 years old, U.S. resident for at least 14 years (b) Sample answers: These formal qualifications are too mild because they do not sufficiently restrict the type of individual who can run nor define the prerequisites that should be required to hold the office. OR: These formal qualifications are neither too restrictive nor too mild as they merely ensure that candidates are U.S. citizens and old enough to have some life experience.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) The Presidential Succession Act of 1947 sets the order of succession following the Vice President. The 25th Amendment establishes that the Vice President becomes President if the President dies, resigns, or is removed from office. It also provides for presidential disability and for filling a vacancy in the vice presidency. (b) Sample answer: Yes. The voters should have evaluated the vice presidential candidate's credentials for succeeding the President before electing him or her. (c) Answers will vary but should show an understanding of government leadership and the democratic system.
5. (a) to preside over the Senate and to help decide the question of presidential disability (b) The vice presidency has held low status, because the Constitution gives the Vice President few formal duties and because the parties choose a vice presidential candidate to balance the ticket. Recent Vice Presidents have wielded more influence because of their impressive credentials.

\section*{SECTION 3}
6. (a) Each State selected electors by a means established by the State legislature. Each

13 Chapter Assessment

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. Identify character traits that would qualify a President to best perform each of these roles: (a) chief executive, (b) chief diplomat, (c) commander in chief, (d) chief citizen.
2. Some critics of the 22 nd Amendment claim it is undemocratic. (a) What does the 22nd Amendment do? (b) Do you think that it conflicts with the goal of electing the best President? Why or why not?
3. (a) What are the formal qualifications for the presidency? (b) Do you think these qualifications are too mild or too restrictive? Explain your reasoning.

\section*{Section 2}
4. (a) What are the provisions of the Presidential Succession Act of 1947 and of the 25th Amendment? (b) Do they provide for the best replacement for a President? (c) Suggest an alternative approach and identify one advantage and one disadvantage of your alternative.
5. (a) What are the duties of the Vice President? (b) Why have the responsibilities and traits of a successful Vice President changed over time?

\section*{Section 3}
6. (a) What were the original provisions of the electoral college? (b) How did the election of 1800 change the voting process? (c) Did that election represent a failure of the Framers' vision for the electoral college? Explain.

\section*{Section 4}
7. (a) What is a presidential primary? (b) What occurs to the number of presidential candidates as the primaries progress? (c) Is a primary vote more valuable than a general election vote in selecting a President? Explain.
8. (a) What is the purpose of a national convention? (b) How has it changed over time? (c) Do you think that national conventions are useful today?

\section*{Section 5}
9. (a) Explain how a presidential candidate can receive the largest number of popular votes but lose the election. (b) Do you think the Framers would consider this situation a flaw in the electoral college system? Why or why not?
10. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) At what factors in selecting a presidential candidate is the cartoonist poking fun? (b) Do you agree or disagree with this commentary?

Writing About Government
11. Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write a research paper on how the political and professional experience of your President influenced his administration. Make sure that your report supports your thesis with accurate details. See pp. S6-S7 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity with a partner, conduct research on either the Republican or Democratic primary/caucus results in your State for the most recent presidential election. Research the following: (a) Which method of delegate selection was used? (b) Where in the election schedule did your State's primary/caucus fall?
(c) How many candidates were in the race? (d) What percentage of your State's population voted in the primary/caucus? In the presidential election? Did your State's electoral college vote reflect the results of its popular election?
13. Essential Question Assessment Based on your research and the content of this chapter, create a chart that illustrates how your findings show the success or failure of the American presidential selection system. Then write a letter to your governor expressing how this research helps you answer the Essential Question: Does the cur helps you answer the Essential Question: Does the cur rent electoral \(\begin{array}{cl}\text { Essential Questions } \\ \text { Journal } & \begin{array}{l}\text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ \text { Question, to to your Essential } \\ \text { Questions Journal. }\end{array}\end{array}\)

396 Chapter 13 Assessment

State would have the same number of electors as it has members in the Senate and House. Each elector would cast two votes, one vote for two different candidates for President. The candidate with the most votes would be President. The second-place candidate would be Vice President. (b) The emergence of parties by 1800 led to electors pledged to vote for their party's candidates. Pledged voting created a tie for President in the election of 1800 , and the House cast 36 ballots to choose a President. The complications in this election led to enactment of the 12th Amendment, which separated the electoral vote for President and Vice President. (c) Sample answer: No, because the Framers made a good choice to create the electoral college, but they could not have anticipated the rise of political parties.

\section*{SECTION 4}
7. (a) an election in which a party's voters choose some or all of a State party organization's delegates to the national convention and/or express a presidential preference (b) the number dwindles (c) In a general election, the choice is limited to mainly two

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{The President's Term of Office}

The precedent limiting a President to two terms in office was set by George Washington. The 22nd Amendment officially restricted the number of terms to two, following Franklin D. Roosevelt's unique four-term tenure in office. As the documents below illustrate, the issue of term limits is still under debate.

\section*{Document 1}

Nothing appears more plausible at first sight, nor more ill-founded upon close inspection, than a scheme. of continuing the Chief Magistrate in office for a certain time, and then excluding him from it, either for a limited period or forever after. This exclusion . . . would be for the most part rather pernicious [destructive] than salutary [beneficial].

One ill effect . . . would be the depriving the community of the advantage of the experience gained by the Chief Magistrate in the exercise of his office.
[Another] ill effect . . . would be the banishing men from stations in which, in certain emergencies of the State, their presence might be of the greatest moment to the public interest or safety.
-The Federalist, No. 72

\section*{Document 2}
[T]he United States ought to be able to choose for its President anybody that it wants, regardless of the number of terms he has served. . . Now, some people have said "You let him get enough power and this will lead toward a one-party government." That, I don't believe. I have got the utmost faith in the long-term common sense of the American people.
-Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1956

\section*{Use your knowledge of the} to answer Questions 1-3.

What is the main point of Document 1 ?
A. Excluding candidates from reelection is democratic.
B. Term limits deprive the voters of qualified leaders.
C. Presidential term limits ensure that no individual can control the country in the manner of a monarch.
D. The benefits of term limits outweigh the drawbacks.
2. What basic anxiety about the leadership in a democratic system does Document 3 exploit? Explain.
3. Pull It Together Do you approve or disapprove of presidential term limits? Write a three-paragraph essay explaining your point of view.

To find more primary sources on presidential term limits, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. \(B\)
2. The symbol of the Trojan horse implies that something that appears good on the surface may hold hidden dangers. The American anxiety it illustrates is that even though a President seems worthy of ongoing leadership, a third term could lead to tyranny that threatens American liberties.
3. Example answers: Yes, I approve of presidential term limits. The policy ensures that no one President will acquire so much power that he or she could ignore minority viewpoints and squash dissent. Past Presidents could still serve as consultants, if needed, during times of crisis. OR: No, I do not agree with presidential term limits, because I believe a good leader should continue in the presidency as long as voters approve of that person's leadership.
Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.
candidates from the major parties. The primary offers more choices and determines the candidates in the general election.
8. (a) naming the party's vice presidential and presidential candidates, bringing the party together, and adopting the party platform (b) Originally, the convention was the site of serious negotiation over whom to nominate. Today the event is mainly a media event to garner support for the party and its candidate. (c) Yes, national conventions unify each party behind a platform of shared principles and goals. OR: No, national conventions no longer decide the nominees.

\section*{SECTION 5}
9. (a) In most States, the winner of the popular vote takes all of the State's electoral votes, even if the margin of victory is slim. Also, the distribution of electoral seats among States does not match population. The winner of the popular vote could lose the electoral vote. (b) Sample answer: No, because the Framers allotted electoral votes for Senate seats to preserve some power for less populous States.
10. (a) physical, unimportant traits of a candidate (b) Sample answer: The cartoonist is saying that unlike 150 years ago, voters are choosing candidates based on trivial qualities unrelated to the ability to do the job.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Papers should relate the President's background to the success of his administration.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Students' research should uncover facts about their State's primary/caucus and election results.
13. In their letters, students should support their assessment with facts.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 4}

What makes a good President?

\section*{CHAPTER 14}

How much power should the President have?
ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE Have students examine the photo and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the image and quotation suggest about the presidency? (that although the presidency is the highest office a person can hold, it is a tremendously difficult position). In this chapter, students will learn about the powers of the President and the limits on those powers. Tell students to begin to explore presidential powers by completing the Chapter 14 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}ELL Differentiate Chapter 14 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 69)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:
- The Confirmation Process
- Expanding Executive Power

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

You may wish to teach problem solving as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 14 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 94) to help students learn the steps in solving a problem. The worksheet asks students to identify the problem President Roosevelt faced in 1933, identify options to solve it, consider the pros and cons of each option, choose a solution, and evaluate it. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 95).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online The chapter WebQuest challenges} students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them to take part in a newscast or talk show about the Watergate scandal.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLock 1: Teach the Section 1, 2, and 4 lessons, omitting the Section 2 Modeling a Graphic Organizer, and the Section 1 and 4 Extend options.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 lesson. Select an Extend option from Sections 1, 2, 3 , or 4, depending on your preferences and State standards.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Begin the class with the Introduce the Chapter activity on the previous page. Then, organize the class into groups of three, with one person covering the President's executive powers; another, the diplomatic and military powers; and the third, the legislative and judicial powers. Have each group create a chart outlining the President's powers in each of these categories. Have each group present its chart to the class.
FoLLow UP Have students consider the President's powers and list real-life examples of each next to the appropriate power in their chart. Then, have volunteers share their examples and have the class determine to which power the example relates.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- evaluate the controversy over the growth of presidential power by analyzing a historic political cartoon.
- examine Article II, Sections 2 and 3, of the Constitution to determine the powers granted to the President.
- determine whether a President's action in selected scenarios reflects the Framers' intent in Article II.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- analyze Executive Order 9981 to learn about the ordinance power.
- identify the executive powers used in various scenarios and will determine how each is checked by the other branches.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- analyze a hypothetical scenario to learn about the tools available to the President to carry out foreign policy.
- summarize the President's diplomatic and military powers, and identify checks and balances on these powers.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- analyze the principle of checks and balances using Article I, Section 7, Clause 2 of the Constitution.
- define elements of the President's legislative and judicial powers.
- use primary sources to evaluate a President's use of the power to pardon.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
All Students
L4
Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What factors have contributed to the growth of presidential power?

1. Unity of presidency; 2. Authority delegated by Congress; 3. Citizens' demand for leadership;
4. President's ability to act quickly during crises;
5. President's views and way of fulfilling roles;
6. President's ability to use media

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- evaluate the controversy over the growth of presidential power by analyzing a historic political cartoon.
- examine Article II, Sections 2 and 3, of the Constitution to determine the powers granted to the President.
- determine whether a President's action in selected scenarios reflects the Framers' intent in Article II.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

To help students learn to analyze political cartoons, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S22, and use the steps explained there to complete the Bellringer activity. The steps are:
- identify the symbols in the cartoon;
- analyze the meaning of the cartoon;
- draw conclusions about what the cartoon conveys.

\section*{Guiding Question}

What factors have contributed to the growth of presidential power? Use a concept web like the one below to keep track of the main ideas on the growth of presidential power.

Political Dictionary
- Executive Article
- imperial presidency

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain why Article II of the Constitution can be described as "an outline" of the presidential office.
2. List several reasons for the growth of presidential power
3. Explain how the Presidents' own views have affected the power of the office.

Images Above: President George Washington; Mount Rushmore (background)

The presidency is regularly called "the most powerful office in the world," and it is. But is this what the Framers had in mind when they created the post in 1787? At Philadelphia, they purposely created a single executive with very broadly stated powers. Still, they agreed with Thomas Jefferson, who wrote in the Declaration of Independence that "a Tyrant is unfit to be the ruler of a free people." So, just as purposefully, they constructed a "checked," or limited, presidency.

\section*{Article II}

Article II of the Constitution is known as the Executive Article, which in only a few words established the presidency. It begins this way:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.
—Article II, Section 1
With this one sentence, the Framers laid the basis for the vast power and influence the nation's chief executive possesses today.

The Constitution also sets out other, somewhat more specific grants of presidential power. Thus, the President is given the power to command the armed forces, to make treaties, to approve or veto acts of Congress, to send and receive diplomatic representatives, and to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." \({ }^{1}\)

Still, the Constitution lays out the powers of the presidency in a very sketchy fashion. Article II reads almost as an outline. It has been called "the most loosely drawn chapter" in the nation's fundamental law. \({ }^{2}\) It does not

1 Most of the specific grants of presidential power are found in Article II, Sections 2 and 3 . A few are elsewhere in the Constitution-for example, the veto power, in Article e, Section 7, Clause 2 2 Edward S. Corwin, The President: Office and Powers.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: • Article II of the Constitution establishes and empowers the presidency.
- The brief outline of the presidential powers eternally pits advocates of a weaker presidency against those for a strong presidency. • Presidential power has grown as the nation's social and economic life has become more complex. - The power of the President is checked by the legislative and judicial branches.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, limited government, separation of powers ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The system of checks and balances helps prevent Presidents from overstepping their bounds. • Debate is ongoing regarding the interpretation of Article II and the extent of executive power.
define "the executive Power," and the other grants of presidential power are couched in similarly broad terms.

Much of our political history can be told in terms of the struggle over the meaning of the constitutional phrase "executive Power"-that is, over the extent of presidential power. That struggle has pitted those who have argued for a weaker presidency, subordinate to Congress, against those who have pressed for a stronger, independent, co-equal chief executive.

That never-ending contest began at the Philadelphia Convention in 1787. There, several of the Framers agreed with Roger Sherman of Connecticut, who, according to James Madison, considered the Executive Magistracy as nothing more than an institution for carrying the will of the legislature into effect, that the person or persons [occupying the presidency] ought to be appointed by and accountable to the Legislature only, which was the depository of the supreme will of the Society.

\section*{Primary Source}
—James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787

As you know, those delegates who argued for a stronger executive carried the day. The Framers established a single executive, chosen independently of Congress and with its own distinct field of powers.

\section*{The Growth of Power}

The Constitution's formal grants of power to the President have not been changed since 1789. Yet presidential power has grown remarkably over the past 200 years.

Reasons for the Expansion That extraordinary expansion has come, in no small part, because of the unity of the presidency. The office, and its powers, are held by one person. The President is the single, commanding chief executive. In contrast, Congress is composed of two houses, and both must agree before Congress can do anything. Moreover one of those two houses is made up of 100 separately elected members, and the other of 435 .

Several other factors have also been at work here. Not least among them have been the Presidents themselves, and especially the stronger ones-Abraham Lincoln and the two Roosevelts, for example.

The nation's increasingly complex economic and social life has also had a telling effect on presidential power. As the United States has become more industrialized and technologically advanced, the people have demanded that the Federal Government take a larger and still larger role in transportation, communications, health, welfare, employment, education, civil rights, and a host of other fields. And they have looked especially to the President for leadership in those matters.

Clearly, the need for immediate and decisive action in times of crisis, and most notably in times of war, has also had a major impact here. The ability of the President-the single, commanding chief executive-to act in those situations has done much to strengthen "the executive Power."

Congress has also been involved, as it has passed the thousands of laws that have been a key part of the historic growth of the Federal Government. Congress has neither the time nor the specialized knowledge to provide much more than basic outlines of public policy. Out of necessity, it has delegated substantial authority to the executive branch to carry out the laws it has enacted.

A number of other factors have also fed the growth of executive power. Among them have been the ways several Presidents have played their roles as chief legislator, party leader, and chief citizen. Another is the huge amount of staff support a President has, both in the White House and throughout the executive branch of the Federal Government. Still another lies in the unique position from which the President can attract and hold the public's attention, and so build support for policies and actions. Every President, from Franklin Roosevelt's day to this, has purposely used the mass media-forms of communication, especially radio, television, and the Internet-to that end.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What two views of the presidency were debated by the Framers?

\section*{couch}
v. to express using a particular style

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 73) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 74)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display the Transparency 14 A political cartoon. Write on the board: (1) What is the cartoonist saying about the presidential power of Andrew Jackson? (2) What details in the cartoon contribute to this interpretation? Answer in your notebook.

ELL Differentiate Ask: How is the President dressed? Is the clothing unusual for a President? Why? What is the President stepping on? What does that action mean?

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentation at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Have students discuss their responses to the Bellringer activity. Possible answers: (1)The President has become too powerful. His power equals that of a king. (2) The President is wearing king's clothing, carrying a scepter, wearing a crown, stepping on the Constitution, and holding a veto in his hand. Write common aspects of students' analyses on the board. Have students look at the section's "The Means of Gaining Power." Ask: How do these cartoons illustrate the gaining of power? Should the President's power have limits? List students' opinions on the board under "Reasons For" and "Reasons Against."
L1 Differentiate Ask students to share ideas early in the discussion.

L4 Differentiate Select a volunteer to write and categorize student opinions on the board.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 14 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 75), which presents several scenarios illustrating the use of the presidential powers. Have a volunteer read the directions aloud.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate For lower-level students, distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-inOne, p. 77). Students will use this worksheet to take notes and complete the activity.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint (a) a weaker presidency, subordinate to Congress (b) a stronger, independent, co-equal chief executive

\section*{READ THE CONSTITUTION}

Have students read Article II, Sections 2 and 3 of the Constitution in their textbook.

L2LPR Differentiate Have student volunteers read a paragraph of each Section aloud, including the annotation. After each paragraph, ask a different volunteer to paraphrase the powers granted to the President. Write the powers on the board.
L2 ELL Differentiate Have language learners record information in the graphic organizer on the Core Worksheet.

\section*{IDENTIFY THE PRESIDENT'S POWERS}

Have students complete the Core Worksheet by identifying the power granted by the Constitution to the President as it applies to each scenario. Then, have students determine whether the situation described is within or beyond the prescribed powers and explain their reasoning in the chart.
L1 52 ELL Differentiate Pair lower-level students with higher-level students to complete the worksheet.

\section*{REVIEW ACTIVITY}

Have students share their answers with the class. Discuss any scenarios that may have proved difficult to associate with a specific presidential power and how this may relate to the growth of presidential power over time.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L2ELL Differentiate Have students find print or online images of the current President that illustrate three presidential powers granted by the Constitution. Students should say which power is shown.Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "Information about the White House" (Unit 4 All-inOne, p. 80).
L3 Differentiate Have students read the presidential quotes at the end of this section and write an essay supporting one of them.
L4 Differentiate Have students compare the powers granted to the executive branch with those granted to the legislative and judicial branches by reading Articles I and III of the Constitution. Have them present their findings in a chart.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons In the left cartoon, strong presidential power is shown controlling the smaller, weaker Congress. In the right cartoon, the smaller, weaker President asks Congress for greater presidential authority.
Checkpoint The Constitution provides for a number of restraints on the exercise of presidential power.

\section*{The Means of Gaining Power}
1) Analyzing Political Cartoons The question of how much power a President should have has been hotly debated since 1787. Gradually, Presidents have increased their authority, and hence their power, both quietly and forcibly. The way in which several Presidents have exercised power has often reignited the debate over the "executive Power." In these cartoons, how and from whom is the President gaining power?

Checkpoint
What limits the growth of presidential power?
imperil
\(v\). to put in danger seizure
\(n\). the taking of something by force

Limits to the Growth of Power Even with this increase of authority, no President can become all-powerful. The Constitution, which grants much power to the President, also provides for a number of restraints on the exercise of that power. Here are just two illustrations of that crucial point.

In 1952, at the height of the Korean War, a labor dispute threatened to shut down the nation's steel industry and imperil the war effort. To avert a strike, President Harry Truman, acting as commander in chief, ordered the Secretary of Commerce to seize and operate several steel mills. But, the Supreme Court found that here the President had overstepped his constitutional authority. It held that only Congress, acting under its commerce power, could authorize the seizure of private property in time of war, and it had not done so (Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Saw yer, 1952).

In June 2006, the High Court struck down President George W. Bush's plan to use military tribunals to prosecute "enemy combatants," persons captured in the war against terrorism, held at Guantanamo Bay. The President, citing his powers as commander in chief, had ordered the formation of those tribunals. However, the Court held that the Contitution gives Congress, not the President, the power to provide for the creation of such court-like bodies.

In addition, the Court found that several features of the President's plan were unlawful. The Court held that the plan violated the Geneva Conventions of 1949, an international treaty dealing with the treatment of prisoners of war, and various provisions of the congressionally enacted Uniform Code of Military Justice (Hamdan v. Rumsfld, 2006).

\section*{The Presidential View}

What the presidency is at any given time depends, in large part, on how the President in office at the time sees the office and exercises its several powers. Presidents have generally taken one of two contrasting views.

The stronger, more effective chief executives have seen the office in a broad light-a

402 The Presidency in Action

\section*{Background}

Recess appointment In 2005, President George W. Bush nominated John Bolton as ambassador to the United Nations. Bolton's confrontational style made him a controversial choice for a post that typically requires tactful negotiating skills. But President Bush wanted to reform the United Nations, and he believed the tough Bolton could push through changes. Senate Democrats fought the nomination, holding up the confirmation vote for five months. Citing "partisan delaying tactics," Bush circumvented the Senate by appointing Bolton during recess. Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid (D., Nev.) said that Bush abused a presidential power intended for unusual situations in order to install "a seriously flawed and weakened candidate" in the United Nations.
view that Theodore Roosevelt called "the stewardship theory":
"My view was that every executive officer was a steward of the people bound actively and affirmatively to do all that he could for the people. . . . I declined to adopt the view that what was imperatively necessary for the Nation could not be done by the President unless he could find some specific authorization to do it."
-Theodore Roosevelt,
Theodore Roosevelt: An Autobiography, 1913
Ironically, the most strongly worded presidential statement of the opposing view came from Roosevelt's handpicked successor in the office, William Howard Taft. Looking back on his years in the White House, Mr. Taft had this to say:
" T ]he President can exercise no power which cannot be fairly and reasonably traced to some specific grant of power or justly implied and included within such express grant. . . . Such specific grant must be either in the Federal Constitution or in an act of Congress passed in persuance thereof. There is no undefined residuum remnant] of power which he can exercise because it seems to him to be in the public interest."
—William Howard Taft,
Our Chie fMagistrate and His Powers, 1916

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

In more recent times, critics of what they see as a too-powerful President have condemned what has been called the "imperial presidency." The term paints a picture of the chief executive as a strong-willed emperor, taking various actions without consulting Congress or seeking its approval-sometimes acting in secrecy to evade or even deceive Congress. Critics of the imperial presidency worry that Presidents have become isolated policymakers who are unaccountable to the American people through their elected representatives in Congress.

Theodore Roosevel (left) and William Howard Taft (right) held opposing views on the presidency. Which view has most often prevailed? -

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing a Graph, Chart, or Table (Unit 4 All-inOne, p. 286).Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 81)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 82)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining contributing \\ factors to growth of power \\
(Questions 1 & 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a table on the board listing \\ the source and the motive.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying the debate over the \\ Executive Article (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the Core Worksheet discus- \\ sion and reiterate how interpreta- \\ tions of the Constitution may differ.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding the use of \\ mass media (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write a television \\ spot advocating a specific presi- \\ dential policy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Illustrating public concern \\ about a too-powerful Presi- \\ dent (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a chart \\ indicating the advantages and dis- \\ advantages of limiting presidential \\ power.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining their view on the \\ presidency (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have pairs work together to para- \\ phrase each excerpt
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Caption Roosevelt's view of "the stewardship theory" has prevailed, although critics of toopowerful Presidents have condemned the "imperial presidency."

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. looseness of the Executive Article, unity of the presidency, delegation of authority by Congress, citizens' demand for leadership, ability of President to act quickly during crises, huge executive staff, President's own views and way of fulfilling roles, and President's ability to use the media
2. The sketchy nature of the Executive Article leaves much room for interpretation.
3. Because the media reaches most Americans, the President can use it to build public support for policies and actions.
4. Congress has increased presidential power by delegating more authority to the executive branch to carry out the laws, but the President still must abide by the laws. The courts restrict presidential power by reviewing presidential actions.
5. Sample answer: Some people believe Presidents have become isolated policymakers who do not listen to Congress and are thus unaccountable to the public.
6. Answers will vary, but should be supported with sound reasoning and specific examples.
QUICK WRITE Students' thesis statements should illustrate an understanding of presidential power and clearly express the students' point of view on the issue.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will examine and debate the President's ability to expand his or her power, using a contemporary example.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{TAKE A POLL}

\section*{Ask: Does the President have the constitutional} authority to take away personal freedoms in an effort to ensure national security?

\section*{SUMMARIZE THE ISSUE}

Have students read the feature and summarize the issue and views expressed in the quotes. Then, display Transparency 14 B , The United States Constitution, containing the 1 st and 4th amendments. Have volunteers summarize the content of the amendments.ELL Differentiate Have students read the annotations in the textbook's reprint of these amendments.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Tell students that Congress increases the President's power significantly during national emergencies in an effort to secure economic, national, and personal security. Ask: Is the President's action justified in this situation? Does the President have the legal authority to take such action? Make sure students use the quotes and the amendments to support their opinions. Then, using the initial question at the beginning of the lesson, take another poll. If students have changed their stance, ask why.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students select one quote on this page and write a short paragraph explaining why they agree or disagree with the speaker's opinion.

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) Sample answer: He claimed he had powers beyond those enumerated in the Constitution that allowed him to circumvent current laws. (b) Sample answer: The President would essentially be making the law on secret monitoring with no check by the legislative or judicial branches.
2. (a) actions justified under constitutional role of commander in chief (b) actions violated basic freedoms; President has no authority beyond that granted by the Constitution (c) Students should support their opinion.

\section*{Expanding Presidential Powers}

Track the Issue
Article II of the Constitution provides only a framework for the duties and powers of the presidency. Most Presidents have tried to extend their powers in order to perform their jobs more effectively.

The Constitution designs a strong Na tional Government with an independent presidency.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt expands the executive branch to overcome the effects of the Great Depression.

President Eisenhower claims executive privilege to keep conversations private from the courts and Congress.

The term "imperial presidency," in which the President ignores or misleads Congress, is used to describe the Nixon administration.

President Bush claims that the President has a practically absolute power to defend the United States.

President George W. Bush confers with Secretary of with Secretary of Homeland Security

\section*{Perspectives}

Following the \(9 / 11\) terrorist attacks, President George W. Bush, act ing in secret, directed the National Security Agency (NSA) to monitor communications between people in the United States and suspected terrorists. Under current law, the NSA must obtain a warrant from a federal court in order to conduct spying activities within the United States. The President defended his actions as necessary to protect the American people from harm.
"What we're trying to do is learn of communications, back and forth, from within the United States to overseas with members of al Qaeda. ... [W]e also believe the President has the inherent authority under the Constitution, as Commander-in-Chief, to engage in this kind of activity .... The operators out at NSA tell me that we don't have the speed and the agility that we need, in all circumstances, to deal with this new kind of enemy."

> -Attorney General

Alberto Gonzales, 2005

\section*{Connect to Your World}
1. Understand (a) How did President Bush expand the power of the presidency? (b) How does this affect the system of checks and balances?
2. Compare and Contrast (a) On what constitutional basis did the attorney general support the President's order? (b) On what constitutional basis did Judge Diggs Taylor reject the President's order? (c) Which of the positions do you think most appropriate? Why?

GOVERNMENT ONLINE In the News
For updates about the expansion of presidential powers, visit
PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Background}

WARRANTLESS WIRETAPPING In 1978, Congress passed the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act to protect Americans from unauthorized government spying. This law requires a warrant to conduct domestic wiretapping. After a judge declared warrantless wiretapping by the National Security Agency illegal in 2007, the Bush administration pushed Congress to amend the surveillance law. The result was the Protect America Act. This law greatly expanded the government's power to monitor communications without court oversight. Privacy-rights groups say the law goes too far. The law was intended as a stopgap measure to keep the surveillance program operating while Congress considers more permanent guidelines. The law will expire unless Congress decides to make it permanent.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{The Executive Powers}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What are the executive powers and how were they established? Use a flowchart like the one below to keep track of the supporting details of the President's executive powers.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- executive order - executive
- ordinance power privilege

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify the sources of the President's power to execute federal law.
2. Define the ordinance power.
3. Explain how the appointment power works and describe the limits on the removal power.
4. Examine the power of executive privilege.

Image above: President Ronald Reagan takes the oath of office in 1985

Thomas Jefferson wrote this to a friend in 1789: "The execution of the laws is more important than the making of them." Whether Jefferson was right about that or not, in this section you will see that the President's power to execute the law endows the chief executive with extraordinary authority.

\section*{Executing the Law}

As chief executive, the President executes (enforces, administers, carries out) the provisions of federal law. The power to do so rests on two brief constitutional provisions. The first of them is the oath of office sworn by the President on the day he or she takes office:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.
—Article II, Section 1, Clause 8
The other provision is the Constitution's command that "he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." \({ }^{3}\)

The President's power to execute the law covers all federal laws. In fact, the Constitution requires the President to execute all federal laws no matter what the chief executive's own views of any of them may be. Their number, and the many subjects they cover, nearly boggle the mind. Social security, gun control, affirmative action, immigration, minimum wages, terrorism, environmental protection, taxes - these only begin the list. There are scores of others.

The President-and, importantly, the President's subordinates-have much to say about the meaning of laws, as do Congress and the courts. In executing and enforcing law, the executive branch also interprets it.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - Article ll gives the President the power and responsibility to execute the laws. - The executive power gives the President a great deal of flexibility in deciding how laws are carried out. - Among the President's key powers are appointing and removing key federal officials.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, enumerated and implied powers, separation of powers ENDURING UNDERSTANDING: - Much of the power of the presidency rests on the discretion the President has in the use of his or her powers to issue executive orders, execute the laws, and appoint key federal officials.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What are the executive powers and how were they established?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Executive Powers} \\
\hline & & \\
\hline Power to Execute the Law & Ordinance Power & Appointment and Removal Power \\
\hline & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- To execute, enforce, and interpret all federal laws \\
- Oath of office \\
- "Take care" clause
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- To administer government using executive orders - Implied in Constitution \\
- Delegated by Congress
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- To appoint highranking officials \\
- To remove any officer (except federal judges) - Article II, Section 2, Clause 2; First Congress
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will.
- analyze Executive Order 9981 to learn about the ordinance power.
- identify the executive powers used in various scenarios and determine how each is checked by the other branches.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 83) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 84)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

To help students learn to analyze sources, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S14, and use the steps explained there to complete the Bellringer activity. The steps are:
- identify the author or source of the document;
- find the main idea;
- evaluate the document for point of view and bias.

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Have students read Executive Order 9981 on the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 85) and answer the questions in their notebook.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate For students who may need help with the vocabulary in the primary source, write the following terms and definitions on the board: vested (legally assigned to a person), statute (an established rule or law), effectuate (to put into operation), impair (to damage or weaken), designate (to choose or appoint), confer (to meet to discuss), and furnish (to provide or supply).

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{MODEL A GRAPHIC ORGANIZER}

Create a four-column table on the board with the following headings: "Executing the Law," "Ordinance Power," "Appointment Power," and "Removal Power. " Have students create a list of four facts that apply to each of the executive powers, such as:
Executing the Law: defined by Constitution, covers all federal laws, allows interpretation of federal law, details of a law are determined by executive branch
Ordinance Power: power to issue executive orders, equivalent to law, power is implied, allows executive branch to refine details of policies and programs Appointment Power: allows President to name topranking officers of Federal Government, Senate must confirm appointments, President can bypass Senate confirmation with recess appointments, most executive branch employees are not appointed Removal Power: President can remove any individual he or she appointed (except for federal judges) without Senate consent, reasons for removal are not clearly defined, Congress has tried to restrict the removal power, Supreme Court rulings have put some limitations on removal power
When discussing the appointment power, display Transparency 14C, which portrays the How Government Works visual about the confirmation process. Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive version of actual confirmation hearings.
L2 ELL Differentiate Provide students with definitions of the following: execute (to put into effect), ordinance (a law made by an authority), and appointment (the selection of a person for a position or office).

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible answer: An executive order has the effect of law and is more immediate than the congressional approval process.

\(\triangle\) President Bill Clinton, with Vice President Al Gore, signs the executive order establishing Utah's Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument. Why do you think an executive order was used for this purpose? discretion
n. the freedom to make a decision about

To look at the point more closely: Many laws that Congress enacts are written in fairly broad terms. Congress sets out the basic policies and standards to be followed. The specific details-much of the fine print necessary to the actual, day-to-day administration of the law-are usually left to be worked out by the executive branch.

For example, immigration laws require that all immigrants seeking permanent admission to this country must be able to "read and understand" some English. But what does this literacy requirement mean? How well must an alien be able to read and write? What words must he or she know, and how many? The law does not say. Rather, such answers come from within the executive branch-in this case, from the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services in the Department of Homeland Security.

\section*{The Ordinance Power}

The job of administering and applying most federal law is the day-to-day work of all of the many departments, commissions, and other agencies of the Federal Government. All of the some 2.7 million civilian men and women who staff those agencies are subject to the President's control and direction.

The chief executive has the power to issue executive orders, which are directives, rules, or regulations that have the effect of law. The power to issue these orders, the ordinance power, arises from two sources: the Constitution and acts of Congress.

The Constitution does not mention the ordinance power in so many words, but that power is clearly intended. In granting certain powers to the President, the Constitution obviously anticipates their use. In order to exercise those powers, the chief executive must have the power to issue the necessary orders, and, as well, the power to implement them. \({ }^{4}\)

The number, the scope, and the complexity of the problems that face the government of the United States have grown over the course of more than two centuries. As a result, Congress has found it necessary to delegate more and yet more discretion to the President and to presidential subordinates to spell out the policies and programs it has approved.

\section*{The Appointment Power}

A President cannot hope to succeed without loyal subordinates who support the policies of the President's administration. To that end, the Constitution says that the President

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}
by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate . . . shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for ... but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.
-Article II, Section 2, Clause 2
Those "Officers of the United States whose Appointments are . . . otherwise provided for" are the Vice President, members of Congress, and presidential electors.

4 All executive orders are published in the Federal Register, which appears five times per week. At least once per year, all Regulations. Botth of tore are published in the Code of Feder National Archives and Records Administration.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 14, Section 2 :
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 83)Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 84)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 85)
L3
Core Worksheet (p. 86)
\(L 3\) L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 87)
L3 Quiz A (p. 88)
L2
Quiz B (p. 89)

Acting alone, the President names only some 3,000 of the 2.7 million civilians who work for the Federal Government. The vast majority of the rest of the federal work force is hired under the civil service laws.

Appointees The President names most of the top-ranking officers of the Federal Government. Among them are (1) ambassadors and other diplomats; (2) Cabinet members and their top aides; (3) the heads of independent agencies; (4) all federal judges, U.S. marshals, and attorneys; and (5) all officers in the armed forces. When the President makes one of these appointments, the nomination is sent to the Senate. There, the support of a majority of the senators present and voting is needed for confirmation.

The unwritten rule of senatorial courtesy plays an important part in this process. That rule applies to the choice of those federal officers who serve within a State-a federal district judge or a federal marshal, for example. The rule holds that the Senate will approve only those federal appointees acceptable to the senator or senators of the President's party from the State involved. The practical effect of this custom is to place a meaningful part of the President's appointing power in the hands of particular senators.

Recess Appointments The Constitution does allow the President to make "recess appointments," that is, appointments "to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate." \({ }^{5}\) Any such appointment automatically expires at the end of the congressional term in which it is made.

Recess appointments have often been a matter of contention-in particular, because they make it possible for the President to bypass the Senate confirmation process. So, as a rule, Presidents have not usually given these appointments to highly controversial personalities or to someone whom the Senate has previously rejected. Over time, Presidents

5 Article II, Section 2, Clause 3. Over time, the words "may 5 Article II, Section 2, Clause 3. Over time, the words "may Recess of the Senate" has come to include both the period between regular sessions of Congress and the several short recesses during a session.

\section*{Background}

THE GRAND STAIRCASE With the stroke of a pen in 1996, President Bill Clinton issued an executive order setting aside a vast area of Southern Utah as the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument. Many Utah residents were outraged. This order would block a planned coal mine and other development, which would have created over 1,000 jobs for local residents. Several lawsuits ensued. In 2004, a Utah district judge upheld the order, ruling that President Clinton acted within his rights in using the Antiquities Act of 1906 to create the monument. In fact, several Presidents had used the act this way before, starting with Theodore Roosevelt, who used it 18 times. Since 1996, the people of Utah have warmed up to their monument. Tourists have flocked to this remote area to experience the beauty of its multicolored cliffs and twisting canyons-spending their money at local businesses in the process.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

As students begin to list the facts under the "Ordinance Power" column, remind them of the Bellringer activity. Answers to the Bellringer are as follows:
1. two goals: (a) the immediate desegregation of the armed services and (b) the creation of an advisory committee to determine needed changes in the rules, procedures, and practices of the armed forces to carry out this new policy
2. the ordinance power, or the presidential power to issue executive orders

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 14 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 86). Students will review various scenarios illustrating a President's use of one of the executive powers. They will then determine which power is illustrated, what step or steps will follow each situation, and which branch is responsible for those next steps.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Pair lower-level students with higher-level students to complete the worksheet.

\begin{tabular}{l|l|l}
L1 & L2 & ELL Differentiate Focus students' attention \end{tabular} on the specific portion or paragraph in the textbook that will help them determine the answers to the scenarios.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the confirmation process.

\section*{Answers}

How Government Works possible answer: to ensure that Presidents make appointments fairly, rather than for purely political or personal reasons

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L1 L2 Differentiate Have lower-level students work with more advanced students to create a graphic organizer to capture the main ideas and supporting details of this section.
L3 Differentiate Have students revisit the Guiding Question. As you say each power aloud, have them identify how the power was established. For powers that arise directly from the Constitution, ask students to read the appropriate clauses aloud.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students use the Chapter 14 Section 2 Extend Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 87) to research a recent presidential appointee who required Senate confirmation. Then, have them create a timeline of the events from the appointee's nomination to confirmation (or rejection).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\(L 3\)Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing a Graph, Chart, or Table (Unit 4 All-inOne, p. 286).
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 88)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 89)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Government}

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons Possible answer:
Reiterating (or parroting) the President's views implies that the President has political and public support.
Checkpoint (1) If an appointment requires Senate approval, Senate consent should also be required for removal. (2) The President cannot execute laws without a free hand to dismiss those who are unsuited to office.

| Analyzing Political Cartoons Presidential appointees are sometimes criticized for parroting the views of the President without expressing their own opinions. How might this actually benefit the President?

\section*{Checkpoint}

What are the two sides of the removal power debate?
depose
depose
\(v\). to remove from a position of power have made very few recess appointments. The number tends to increase when the President's party does not control the Senate.

\section*{The Removal Power}

The power to remove is the other side of the appointment coin, and is as important to presidential success as is the power to appoint. Yet, except for mention of the littleused impeachment process, the Constitution says nothing about how, by whom, or why an appointed officer may be dismissed. \({ }^{6}\)

The Historical Debate The matter was hotly debated in the first session of Congress, in 1789. Several members argued that, if an appointment required Senate approval, Senate consent should also be required for removal. They insisted that this restriction on presidential authority was essential to congressional supervision (oversight) of the executive branch. But others argued that the President could not "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" without a free hand to dismiss those who were incompetent or otherwise unsuited to office.

6 In Article I, Section 2, Clause 5 and Section 3, Clauses 6 and 7, and Article II, Section 4.

The latter view prevailed. The First Congress gave the President the power to remove any officer he appointed, except federal judges. Over the years since then, Congress has sometimes tried, with little success, to restrict the President's freedom to dismiss.

One notable instance occurred in 1867. Locked with Andrew Johnson in the fight over Reconstruction, Congress passed the Tenure of Office Act. That law's plain purpose was to prevent President Johnson from removing several top officers in his administration, in particular the secretary of war, Edwin M. Stanton. The law provided that any person holding an office by presidential appointment with Senate consent should remain in that office until a successor had been confirmed by the Senate.

The President vetoed the bill, charging that it was an unconstitutional invasion of executive authority. The veto was overridden, but Mr. Johnson ignored Congress and fired Stanton anyway. The veto and Stanton's removal sparked the move for Johnson's impeachment. Ultimately, the President was acquitted, and the law was ignored in practice. It was finally repealed in 1887.

Removal and the Court The question of the President's removal power did not reach the Supreme Court until Myers v. United States, 1926. In 1876, Congress had passed a law requiring Senate consent before the President could dismiss any first-class, second-class, or third-class postmaster.

In 1920, without consulting the Senate, President Woodrow Wilson removed Frank Myers as the postmaster at Portland, Oregon. The deposed postmaster then sued for the salary for the rest of his four-year term. He based his claim on the point that he had been removed in violation of the 1876 law.

The Court, led by a former President, Chief Justice Taft, found the law unconstitutional. It held that the removal power was an essential part of executive power, clearly necessary to the faithful execution of the laws.

The Supreme Court did place some limits on the President's removal power in 1935, in Humphre y's Executor v. United States. President Herbert Hoover had appointed William Humphrey to a seven-year term on the

\section*{Myths and Misperceptions}

EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE Contrary to popular belief, neither the term nor the concept of executive privilege appears anywhere in the Constitution. Legal historian Raoul Berger called it one of the greatest "constitutional myths." Yet Presidents as far back as George Washington have claimed the right to withhold certain information from public scrutiny, even when served a subpoena. Dwight D. Eisenhower was the first President to use the term. Eisenhower asserted executive privilege more than 40 times in refusing to allow his aides to testify during the McCarthy hearings. Presidents contend that executive privilege is implied in the Constitution's principle of separation of powers-they need candid and confidential advice from their aides to do their jobs.

Federal Trade Commission (FTC) in 1931. When Franklin D. Roosevelt took office in 1933, he found Commissioner Humphrey to be in sharp disagreement with many of his policies. He asked the commissioner to resign, saying that his administration would be better served with someone else on the FTC. When Mr. Humphrey refused, President Roosevelt removed him. Humphrey soon died, but his heirs filed a suit for back salary.

The Supreme Court upheld the heirs' claim. It based its decision on the act creating the FTC. That law provides that a member of the commission may be removed only for "inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office."

The Court further held that Congress does have the power to set the conditions under which a member of the FTC and other such agencies might be removed by the President. It did so because those agencies, the independent regulatory commissions, are not purely executive agencies (see Chapter 15).

As a general rule, the President may remove those whom the President appoints. Occasionally, a presidential appointee does have to be fired. Most often, however, what was in fact a dismissal is called a "resignation."

\section*{Executive Privilege}

At times, the nation's chief executives have insisted that the Constitution gives to the President the inherent power to refuse to disclose certain information to Congress or to the federal courts. That is, they have claimed the power of executive privilege. Most often, a claim of executive privilege has been made with regard to conversations and other communications between the President and his or her closest advisors.

The chief executive must, of necessity, rely on the information and advice he or she receives from key staff and their ability to speak with utmost candor, which depends on the confidential nature of their relationship with the President. These officials must be sure that what they say will become known publicly only if and when the President chooses to disclose that information.

Congress has never recognized executive privilege. It has often tried to compel executive officials to testify at congressional committee hearings, and Presidents have frequently resisted those efforts, citing executive privilege.

The federal courts have been reluctant to become involved in this dispute between the executive and legislative branches. However, the Supreme Court has recognized both the existence of and the need for executive privilege in a historic case, United States v. Nixon, in 1974. There, a unanimous Court said that although the President might legitimately claim executive privilege in matters involving national security, that privilege cannot be used to prevent evidence from being heard in a criminal proceeding. This decision was a key factor in Mr. Nixon's resignation.
\(\checkmark\) checkpoint
What is the Court's stand on executive privilege?

\section*{candor} \(n\). the quality of being open and honest in speaking malfeasance
n. wrong or illegal conduct by a public official

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying the executive \\ powers and how they \\ were established (Ques- \\ tions 1, 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
As a class, have the students complete \\ this section's graphic organizer on the \\ board.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Describing the executive \\ branch's influence on law \\ interpretation (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have groups of students write a one- \\ sentence classroom law; then exchange \\ laws and have each group add details \\ clarifying the scope of the law.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining the officers \\ appointed by the President \\ and the confirmation \\ process (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an outine of \\ the Appointment Power content of the \\
section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying the controver- \\ sial nature of executive \\ privilege (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review and discuss the Landmark Deci- \\ sions of the Supreme Court feature.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Determining the impor- \\ tance of the appointment \\ power (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have pairs work together to create a list \\ of the benefits of selecting high-ranking \\ officers.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying their view on \\ senatorial courtesy \\
(Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review with students the principle of \\ separation of powers and the definition \\ of senatorial courtesy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)}

Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer this question: What are the executive powers and how were they established?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. How can the executive branch influence the meaning of a particular law?
3. What is the ordinance power and from what sources does it arise?
4. (a) What officers does the President appoint? (b) What is the Senate's role in the appointment process?
5. What is executive privilege and why is it controversial?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Identify Central Issues Why is the President's power of appointment so mportant to the success of his or her administration?
7. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Consider this statement: The unwritten rule of senatorial courtesy contradicts the principle of separation of powers. Do you agree or disagree?

\section*{Quick Write}

\section*{Persuasive Writing: Generate}

Arguments An effective way to persuade an audience is to address both sides of the issue. Using your thesis statement from Section 1, create a chart to record facts about the debate on presidential power. In one column, record the facts that support your position, and, in the second column, position, and, in the second column, note arguments that could be used note arguments that cour

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The Court has recognized both the existence of and the need for executive privilege.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. power to execute the law, established by oath of office and "take care" clause; ordinance power, implied in Constitution and delegated by Congress; appointment power, established by Article II, Section 2, Clause 2; removal power, established by First Congress
2. Laws are written in broad terms. It is up to the President and the President's subordinates to work out the details and the day-to-day administration of the laws.
3. President's power to issue executive orders; from the Constitution and acts of Congress
4. (a) ambassadors, diplomats, Cabinet members and their top aides, heads of independent agencies, federal judges, attorneys, marshals, and all officers of the armed forces (b) to confirm all the presidential nominations by a majority vote
5. power of President to refuse to disclose certain information to Congress or to the federal courts; controversial because executive privilege limits Congress's ability to check the power of the President
6. Loyal subordinates who support the President's policies and actions help ensure the administration's success.
7. Some students may disagree, saying senatorial courtesy falls within the Senate's right to offer advice and consent. Others may agree, saying it enables select senators' influence in the presidential appointment process.
QUICK WRITE Charts should illustrate appropriate supporting facts and arguments against each student's thesis statement.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will debate the claim of executive privilege from the perspectives of the executive and legislative branches.

\section*{Teach}

Have students read the feature as homework or at the beginning of class.

\section*{DEFINE EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE}

Write executive privilege on the board. Ask students to provide a definition. Display Transparency 14D. Tell students that executive privilege is a claim by the executive branch that it can refuse to disclose information and/or documents requested by Congress or the courts.ELL Differentiate Have students define executive (the senior manager responsible for making and implementing decisions-in this case, the President) and privilege (the right to special treatment or benefits). Then, have them define the key term executive privilege.

\section*{CREATE A TIMELINE}

Create a timeline on the board. Have students sequence the events from the Watergate break-in to Nixon's resignation. (Order should be: Watergate break-in, Senate hearing, existence of tapes revealed, Nixon ordered to provide tapes, Nixon denies request claiming executive privilege, Supreme Court overrules executive privilege claim, tapes released, Nixon resigns. ) Ask: What is the significance of the Supreme Court ruling? (The Court recognized executive privilege, but ruled that it is acceptable only as it relates to military and diplomatic matters. )

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE CAUSE AND EFFECT}

Before the debate in this lesson, you may want to review tips on analyzing cause and effect in the Skills Handbook, p. S1 6.

\section*{What Are the Limits on Executive Privilege?}

A number of chief executives have argued that the Constitution gives the President the authority to refuse to disclose certain information to Congress or to the federal courts. That authority, known as "executive privilege," was first recognized by the Supreme Court in the historic case, United States v. Nixon, in 1974.
"Richard Milhous Nixon announced last night that he will resign as the 37th President of the United States at noon today. . . After two years of bitter public debate over the Watergate scandals, President Nixon bowed to pressures from the public and leaders of his party to become the first President in American history to resign.
"'By taking this action,' he said in a subdued yet dramatic television address from the Oval Office, 'I hope that I will have hastened the start of the process of healing which is so desperately needed in America."'
-Carroll Kilpatrick, "Nixon Resigns," The Washington Post, 9 August 1974
What could possibly have led the President of the United States to resign his office? The answers to that question begin with a botched attempt to break into the Democratic National Committee's headquarters in the Watergate complex in Washington, D.C., in June of 1972, in the midst of the presidential campaign. The burglars, it turned out, were working for President Nixon's chief campaign organization, CREEP-the Committee to Re-Elect the President. Over the next two years the President and many of the major figures in his administration steadfastly denied any involvement in what came to be known as the Watergate scandal.

During Senate hearings on the issue, a White House aide revealed that the President had secretly taped most of his telephone calls and personal conversations

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

UNITED STATES v. NIXON Nixon's lawyers argued that the courts should accept executive privilege without question. Writing for the majority, Chief Justice Warren Burger asserted the right of the courts to decide whether the President's need for confidential communications outweighed the courts' need for the evidence in the communications. To support this assertion, Burger quoted from Marbury v. Madison: "[I]t is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is." The Nixon decision, however, did not rule out executive privilege. The Court recognized "the valid need for protection of communications between high Government officials and those who advise and assist them in the performance of their manifold duties. "This acknowledgment leaves the door open to valid claims of executive privilege by future Presidents. in the Oval Office. When both the special prosecutor and a federal district court ordered Mr. Nixon to release those tapes, he refused, asserting that executive privilege gave him the right to withhold the information. The Constitution does not provide for executive privilege in so many words; the concept is, instead, derived from the principle of separation of powers.

The matter was then carried to the Supreme Court. There in a unanimous decision, the Court ruled that although the confidentiality of communications between the President and his closest aides is important, their protection is not absolute. If the President possessed absolute executive privilege, the Court held, the executive branch would, in effect, be unchecked, and it ordered the tapes to be released. President Nixon resigned shortly after he obeyed the Court's order.

\section*{Arguments for Nixon}
- Under the doctrine of separation of powers, no court has the authority to question executive privilege.
- The President must have the power to keep his various communications with his aides secret
- The forced disclosure of communications between the President and his advisors could threaten the nation's security.

Arguments for the United States
- Separation of powers does not mean that the three branches are absolutely independent of one another.
- Withholding critical evidence damages the 6th Amendment guarantee of a fair trial to all defendants.
- While the secrecy of presidential communications is important, that protection should be limited to military and diplomatic matters.

\section*{Thinking Critically}
1. Should the President have the right to keep all communications with advisors private? Why or why not?
2. Constitutional Principles How does the decision in this case reflect

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

CHENEY v. U.S. DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA In 2001, President George W. Bush created an advisory task force on energy policy, headed by Vice President Dick Cheney. The task force included top executives from the energy industry, while excluding environmentalists. In secret proceedings, the task force produced recommendations for policies favorable to the energy industry. The Sierra Club and Judicial Watch sued, seeking to require the task force to make its records public. In 2004, the Supreme Court upheld the Bush administration's claim for privacy. However, in the majority opinion, Justice Anthony Kennedy issued this warning: "Executive privilege is an extraordinary assertion of power 'not to be lightly invoked'. Once executive privilege is asserted, coequal branches of the Government are set on a collision course."

\section*{DISCUSS}

Tell students that Presidents other than Richard Nixon have claimed executive privilege. Although the term was coined during the Eisenhower administration to fend off the anti-communist inquiries of Senator Joseph McCarthy, George Washington asserted the ability to withhold information from Congress regarding a treaty with England. Ask students for examples of when they think the claim of executive privilege would seem justified. (examples: when disclosure could endanger national policies, offend a foreign nation, or risk revealing national secrets)

\section*{LEAD A DEBATE}

Divide the class into two groups. One group will argue for the view of the executive branch; the other, for Congress. Give each group ten minutes to prepare their arguments. Using the debate strategy on p. T25 as a basic structure, begin the debate by asking: Should the executive branch have the power to keep communications secret?
\begin{tabular}{l|l|l}
\hline L1 & L2 & Differentiate Have students raise their \end{tabular} hands, and call on lower-level students first to ensure that they participate in the debate.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 L4 L2 Have students read and complete the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, pp. 105, 107).
L3 Have students write a brief paragraph on whether they think Nixon's claim of executive privilege and his subsequent resignation have affected the public's view of the claim by later Presidents.

\section*{IN THE NEWS}

Point out to students that they can learn about more cases in which a President has claimed executive privilege by visiting PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}
1. Sample for private communications: The executive branch needs to be able to discuss matters candidly without concern for public disclosure, especially related to issues of diplomacy and national security. Sample against private communications: Executive privilege can be used to conceal inappropriate or criminal activities and, as the executive branch is not above the law, it should be held responsible for its activities.
2. The case demonstrates how Congress and the Court can check as well as define the action and powers of the executive branch.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What tools are available to the President to implement foreign policy?

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will. .
- analyze a hypothetical scenario to learn about the tools available to the President to carry out foreign policy.
- summarize the President's diplomatic and military powers, and identify checks and balances on these powers.

\section*{before class}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 90) before class.
\(L 2\)
Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 91)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

To practice problem solving in this section, use the Chapter 14 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 94). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after reviewing the Bellringer. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 95).

\section*{Guiding Question}

What tools are available to the President to implement foreign policy? Use a concept web to keep track of the main ideas and supporting details on foreign policy tools.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- treaty - recognition
- executive - persona non

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how treaties are made and approved.
2. Explain why and how executive agreements are made.
3. Summarize how the power of recognition is used.
4. Describe the President's powers as commander in chief.

Images Above: Jimmy Carter meeting with Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping

Jinohn F. Kennedy once described the pressures of the presidency in the following manner:

\section*{Primary Source}

When I ran for the presidency . . . I knew the country faced serious challenges, but I could not realize-nor could any man who does not bear the burdens of this office -how heavy and constant would be those burdens.
-John F. Kennedy, radio broadcast (1961)
When President Kennedy made that comment, he had in mind the subject of this section: the President's awesome responsibilities as chief diplomat and as commander in chief.

\section*{Chief Diplomat}

The Constitution does not state that the President is the nation's chief diplomat. Rather, Presidents have won dominance over the field of foreign affairs through the use of the powers of the office. That happened mainly because the Constitution makes the President the commander in chief of the nation's armed forces-and several centuries of relationships between sovereign states tells us that military force is the ultimate language of diplomacy.

The Power to Make Treaties A treaty is a formal agreement between two or more sovereign states. The President, usually acting through the secretary of state, negotiates these international agreements. The Senate must give its approval by a two-thirds vote of the members present before a treaty made by the President can become effective. Recall, the Constitution, in Article VI, makes treaties a part of "the supreme Law of the Land."

Contrary to popular belief, the Senate does not ratify treaties. The Constitution requires the Senate's "Advice and Consent" to a treaty made by the President. Once the Senate has given its consent, the President ratifies a treaty by the exchange of formal notifications with the other party or parties to the agreement.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - The President negotiates treaties, but the Senate must approve them by a two-thirds vote before the President can ratify them. - Sovereign states can recognize other states or deny recognition. - Presidents have used the armed forces without declaring war and without a congressional resolution. - Debate continues over the constitutionality of the War Powers Resolution.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, enumerated and implied powers, separation of powers
ENDURING UNDERSTANDING: - The President shares diplomatic and military powers with Congress; however, in practice, the President's power as commander in chief is almost unlimited.

Treaties have the same legal standing as acts of Congress, and their provisions are enforceable in the courts. Congress may abrogate (repeal) a treaty by passing a law contrary to its provisions, and an existing law may be repealed by the terms of a treaty. When the provisions of a treaty and an act of Congress conflict, the courts consider the latest enacted to be the law (The Head Money Cases, 1884). The terms of a treaty cannot conflict with any provision in the Constitution (Missouri v. Holland, 1920); but the Supreme Court has never found a treaty provision to be unconstitutional.

Treaties and the Senate The Framers considered the Senate-with, originally, only 26 members-a suitable council to advise the President in foreign affairs. Secrecy was thought to be necessary and was seen as an impossibility in a body as large as the House.

The two-thirds rule for treaty approval creates the possibility that a relatively small Senate minority can kill an international agreement. For example, in 1920, the Senate rejected the Treaty of Versailles, the general peace agreement negotiated by Woodrow Wilson to end World War I. The treaty included provisions for the League of Nations. Forty-nine senators voted for the pact and 35 against, but the vote was 7 short of the necessary two thirds. More than once, a President has been forced to bow to the views of a few senators in order to get a treaty approved, even when this has meant making concessions opposed by the majority.

At times, a President has had to turn to roundabout methods in order to achieve his goals. When a Senate minority defeated a treaty to annex Texas, President John Tyler was able to bring about annexation in 1845 by encouraging passage of a joint resolu-tion-a move that required only a majority vote in each house. In 1898, President William McKinley used the same tactic to annex Hawaii, again after a treaty his administration had negotiated failed in the Senate.

Executive Agreements Recent Presidents have relied more heavily on executive agreements than on formal treaties in their dealings with foreign governments, especially in routine matters. An executive agreement is a pact between the President and the head of a foreign state, or their subordinates. Unlike treaties, these agreements do not have to be approved by the Senate.

These pacts have the same standing as treaties in the relationships between sovereign states, but they do not supersede federal law or the laws of any State. However, they are otherwise binding on the United States.

Most executive agreements flow out of legislation already passed by Congress or out of treaties to which the Senate has agreed. However, the President can make these agreements without any congressional action. Treaties, once made, become a permanent part of American law. Executive agreements do not. When a change of administrations occurs, only those the new President agrees to remain in force.

A few executive agreements have been extraordinary, most notably, the destroyers-for-bases deal of 1940 . Under its terms, the United States gave Great Britain 50 "over-age" U.S. destroyers, naval vessels that the British needed to combat German submarine attacks in the North Atlantic. In return, the United \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoin }}\) How do executive agreements differ from treaties?

\section*{supersede}
\(v\). to take the place of something previously in use

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright with Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak during Middle East peace discussions in 1999. Why does the President rely on the secretary on the secretary of state to perform diplomatic duties?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 14, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 90)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 91)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 92)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 94)
L2 Skills Worksheet (p. 95)
L3 Quiz A (p. 96)
L2 Quiz B (p. 97)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 1 4E, Diplomatic and Military Powers: A Scenario, which describes a hypothetical scenario involving foreign policy. Have students write their answers to the questions in their notebooks.
L1 L2 Differentiate Give students a choice of answering one or both questions.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Go around the class and have each student read one option from his or her list of options. Write each option on the board. Remind students to consider Congress's response to each action. Allow one minute for students to review the options listed on the board. Then, have each student assume the role of President and choose the option he or she considers best. Have volunteers share with the class their decision and why they chose it.
L2 Differentiate Create three columns on the board labeled "Option," "Pros," and "Cons." As students explain their options, write them in the first column. Discuss the pros and cons, reminding students to consider the response of Congress.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Divide the class into pairs. Designate each pair as either a Diplomatic Power or Military Power team. Give each pair the Chapter 14 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 92). Have pairs research their assigned power and complete the chart for that power.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Assign lower-level students the Diplomatic Powers chart.
L3 L4 Differentiate Assign on-level or higher-level students the Military Powers chart.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Executive agreements do not need Senate approval and do not supercede federal or State law.
Caption Possible answer: The President has too many other administrative duties to handle.

\section*{COMBINE PAIRS TO CREATE A QUIZ}

When all pairs have completed their chart, create groups of four that contain one pair from each team Have pairs that researched the Diplomatic Power share their information with their new teammates, who should then complete their Diplomatic Power chart. Then, have the Military Power pairs share their information, which their new teammates will use to complete their chart.
Next, have each group use their charts to create a ten-question quiz. Tell them that they can create any type of question, including multiple-choice, short answer, and fill-in-the-blank. Once each quiz is complete, have groups exchange quizzes and answer a quiz from a different group.

\section*{Answers}

Expanding Executive Power Possible answer: In a crisis, the President may be aware of confidential information that is unknown to Congress, he or she can act more quickly than Congress, and Congress needs to be conscious of public sentiment.

\section*{Expanding Executive Power}

By separating the military powers, the Framers created an enduring tension between Congress and the President as they battle over their war power authority. However, in times of national emergency, when our safety and national interests are threatened, there is a marked shift of power to the President. Why might Congress yield to a President's decisions regarding military actions?

\section*{Korea}

President Truman orders the use of military force to defend South Korea from communist North Korea. He claims that United Nations resolutions give him the legal authority for his actions.
Congress is not consulted by the President, but makes no attempt to block his "police action."

\section*{1064 Vetram}

President Johnson, citing a report of a North Vietnamese attack on an American destroyer, asks Congress to give him the authority to do whatever he considers necessary to deal with the threat.
Congress gives the President that authority by enacting the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution.
rebuke
\(n\). an expression of sharp disapproval

States received 99 -year leases to a string of air and naval bases extending from Newfoundland to the Caribbean.

The Power of Recognition When the President receives the diplomatic representatives of another sovereign state, the President exercises the power of recognition. That is, the President, acting for the United States, acknowledges the legal existence of that country and its government. The President's action indicates that the United States accepts that country as an equal member of the family of nations. Sovereign states generally recognize one another through the exchange of diplomatic representatives. \({ }^{7}\)

Recognition does not mean that one government approves of the character and conduct of another. The United States recognizes several governments about which it has serious misgivings. Among the most notable examples today is the People's Republic of China. The facts of life in world politics make relations with these governments necessary.

Recognition is often used as a weapon in foreign relations, too. President Theodore Roosevelt's quick recognition of Panama in 7 Recognition may be accomplished by other means, such as proposing to negotiate a treaty, since in international law only sovereign states can make such agreements.

1903 is a classic example of the use of the power as a diplomatic weapon. He recognized the new state less than three days after the Panamanians had begun a revolt against Colombia, of which Panama had been a part. Roosevelt's action guaranteed their success. Similarly, President Harry Truman's dramatic recognition of Israel, within minutes of its creation in 1948, helped that new state to survive among its hostile Arab neighbors.

The President may show American displeasure with the conduct of another country by asking for the recall of that nation's ambassador or other diplomatic representatives in this country. The official recalled is declared to be persona non grata, an unwelcome person. The same point can be made by the recalling of an American diplomat from a post in another country. The withdrawal of recognition is the sharpest diplomatic rebuke one government may give to another and has often been a step on the way to war.

\section*{Commander in Chief}

The Constitution makes the chief executive the commander in chief of the nation's armed forces, although Congress does have extensive war powers. \({ }^{8}\) However, the President

8 Article II, Section 2, Clause 1; see also Chapter 17.

\section*{Background}

RECOGNITION A President's decision to end diplomatic recognition of a foreign government can have long-lasting effects. In 1961, President Eisenhower cut off diplomatic relations with Cuba, primarily in response to Fidel Castro's appropriation of American-owned property there. Although the United States has established relations with other Communist states-most notably, the People's Republic of China-formal relations with Cuba have yet to be resumed. The U.S. has continued to oppose Cuba's entrance into international groups such as the Organization of American States and the Summit of the Americas. In 2007, President George W. Bush refused to lift the long-standing trade embargo against the island. Instead, he appealed directly to the Cuban people to push for a transition to democracy. In 2008, due to ill health, Castro stepped down from the Cuban leadership in favor of his brother, Raul.

\section*{Kuwait}

President George H.W. Bush, in reaction to President George H.W. Bush, in reaction to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, creates a coalition and negotiaties a United Nations resolution to use "all necessary force" to stop Iraqi aggression. Congress passes a resolution authorizing the use of force against Iraq a month later.
ident George W. Bush plans preemptive combat operations against Iraq in reaction to reports of the stockpiling of weapons of mass destruction. Congress passes the Iraq Resolution authorizing the President to use military force, which he exercises in 2003 dominates the field of military policy. In fact, the President's powers as commander in chief are almost without limit.

Consider this illustration of the point: In 1907, Theodore Roosevelt sent the Great White Fleet around the world. He did so partly as a training exercise for the Navy, but mostly to impress other nations with America's naval might. Several members of Congress objected to the cost and threatened to block funds for the President's project. To this, Roosevelt is said to have replied, "Very well, the existing appropriation will carry the Navy halfway around the world and if Congress chooses to leave it on the other side, all right." Congress was forced to give in.

Presidents delegate much of their command authority to military subordinates. They are not required to do so, however. George Washington actually took command of federal troops and led them into Pennsylvania during the Whiskey Rebellion of 1794. Abraham Lincoln often visited the Army of the Potomac and instructed his generals in the field during the Civil War.

Most Presidents have not become so directly involved in military operations. Still, the President has the final authority over and responsibility for all military matters, and the most critical decisions are invariably made by the commander in chief.

Making Undeclared War Does the Constitution give the President the power to make war without a declaration of war by Congress? Although many argue that it does not, 200 years of American history argue otherwise. Presidents have often used the armed forces abroad, in combat, without a declaration of war. \({ }^{9}\) In fact, most Presidents have done so, and on several hundred occasions.

John Adams was the first to do so, in 1798. At his command, the Navy fought and won a number of battles with French warships harassing American merchantmen in the Atlantic and the Caribbean. There have been a great many other foreign adventures since then. The long military conflicts in Korea, Vietnam, and now in Afghanistan and Iraq stand as the most extensive of these "undeclared wars."

Congressional Resolutions Congress has not declared war since World War II. On eight occasions since then, however, it has enacted joint resolutions to authorize the President to meet certain international crises with military force.

\footnotetext{
9 Congress has declared war 11 times. It did so against Great Britain in 1812; Mexico in 1848; Spain in 1898; Germany and Austria-Hungary in 1917; Japan, Germany, and Italy in 1941
} and Bulgaria, Hungary, and Romania in 1942.

\section*{\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)} How might a President exercise the role of commander in chief?
invariably adv. almost always,

\section*{Debate}

Use the quotation below to start a debate in your class. Use the debate rules on page T25 to structure the class.
"The President today believes he is free to pursue any policy he wants in the Balkans and the Persian Gulf without Congressional approval. It shouldn't be that way. It's dangerous politically, militar[ily], morally, and above all else undermines our entire system of the rule of law."
-Representative Ron Paul (R, Texas) on sending troops to Kosovo, Congressional Record (March 17, 1999) Ask students to take a position on this statement: Congress should act as a stronger check on the President's power to deploy American troops.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Tell students that the skillful use of diplomatic and military powers is critical in keeping good relationships with other nations as well as in dealing with tense and precarious relationships. Have students predict what the outcome would be to some of the options in the Bellringer. Then, ask students to reflect on the unit Essential Question: What makes a good President? Have students discuss the characteristics a President needs in order to perform well in foreign relations. Write the Essential Question on the board and use the Idea Wave strategy (p. TX) to create a list of characteristics. Write them on the board as well.
L1 L2 Differentiate To help students brainstorm, ask: How much should a President listen to advisors and experts? Should a President take time to consider options, or take action immediately? Should a President have experience dealing with foreign nations?

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L1 L2 Differentiate Have students look through newspapers or news magazines to find images of the President using one of the powers discussed in this section. Students should select three images, affix them to paper, identify the power illustrated, and state why they believe the image reflects this power.
L3 Differentiate To extend students' understanding of "Expanding Presidential Power," have them select one of the incidents described and write a brief essay on whether they believe the President's actions were appropriate at the time.
L4 Differentiate Display Transparency 1 4F, and discuss each President's war powers. Then have students research the controversy surrounding the War Powers Resolution. Divide students into two groups for a debate. Assign one group to support the constitutionality of the resolution and the other to oppose it.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of "Expanding Exectutive Power."

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Most Presidents delegate much of their command authority to military subordinates. However, the President always has the final authority over and responsibility for all military matters. Presidents have often used the armed forces abroad, in combat, without a declaration of war.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3Collect the Core Worksheet and student-created quizzes. Assess student participation using the Rubric for Assessing Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 287).

Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 96)

\(L 2\)Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 97)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying foreign policy \\ tools (Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Provide students with a matching exercise \\ with a list of the tools and a historic \\ example of each.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Describing the President's \\ role as chief diplomat \\
(Questions 2-4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Work with the class to make a concept \\ web on the board of the President's \\ diplomatic tools.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining the purpose \\ of the War Powers Reso- \\ lution (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Describe to students the actions of \\ Presidents Johnson and Nixon during \\ the Vietnam War to illustrate the reasons \\ behind the resolution's enactment by \\ Congress.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Evaluating the unlimited \\ military power of the \\ President (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have pairs review the "Expanding Execu- \\ tive Powers" feature and in one sentence \\ describe the President's action in each \\ undeclared war.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining the \\ constitutionality of the \\ War Powers Resolution \\
(Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review with students Article I, Section 8, \\ Clause 11 and Article II, Section 2, Clause \\
1 of the Constitution.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to limit the President's war-making power without congressional approval

Checkpoint Why did Congress enac the War Powers Resolution?

President Dwight Eisenhower sought the first of these measures in 1955, to block the designs the People's Republic of China had (and still has) on Taiwan. That show of American resolve, and the presence of American warships, defused the situation.

Most recently, in 2002, Congress agreed that President George W. Bush should take whatever measures were "necessary and appropriate" to eliminate the threat posed by Saddam Hussein and his Iraqi dictatorship. In March 2003, an international coalition, led by the United States, launched Operation Iraqi Freedom-a military campaign that ousted Saddam Hussein and his government from power. Some 140,000 American troops remain in Iraq today, engaged in the difficult and often dangerous tasks of stabilizing and rebuilding that country.

Other Uses of Military Power Since the end of World War II, there have been many other critical situations in which Presidents have deployed the nation's armed forceswithout a congressional resolution to support the action. Certainly, the Korean War stands as the foremost illustration of that fact. Among the other more notable instances: the attack on Grenada, ordered by President Ronald Reagan in 1983, to frustrate a military coup in that Caribbean island nation; the invasion of Panama, at the command of President George H.W. Bush in 1989, to oust the dictatorship of General Manuel Noriega and protect American interests there; and the dispatch of American forces to the Balkans by President Bill Clinton (to Bosnia in 1995 and to Kosovo in 1999) as part of NATO's response to a vicious civil war and the horrific "ethnic cleansing" campaign conducted by the forces of Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic.

War Powers Resolution The war-making power as it was exercised by Presidents Johnson and Nixon during the undeclared war in Vietnam moved Congress to enact (over President Nixon's veto) the War Powers Resolution of 1973. That statute provides that the President can commit American military forces to combat only (1) if Congress has declared war, (2) if Congress has authorized that action, or (3) when an attack on the nation or its armed forces has occurred.

If troops are ordered into combat in the third circumstance, the President must report it to Congress within 48 hours. Any such commitment of American forces must end within 60 days, unless Congress agrees to a longer involvement. At any time, Congress can end a commitment by the passage of a concurrent resolution (which is not subject to veto).

The constitutionality of the War Powers Resolution remains in dispute. A determination of the question must await a situation in which Congress demands that its provisions be observed but a President refuses to do so.

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}

To continue to build a
Essential Questions response to the chapter

1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What tools are available to the President to implement foreign policy?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Describe the treaty-making process
3. What is the difference between a treaty and an executive agreement?
4. What is the power of recognition and how can the President use it as a diplomatic tool?
5. Why did Congress enact the War Powers Resolution?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Synthesize Information Why can the military powers of the President be described as almost without limit?
7. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Do you think the War Powers Resolution is constitutional? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Sequence Your Arguments Do you want to give the audience your strongest statement first or save it until the end? In order to sequence your arguments appropriately, you will need to determine the strength of each. Using your chart from Section 2, rank the arguments that support your thesis from strongest to weakest. Then, make an outline that shows where your arguments will appear in your essay.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. exchange diplomats, recognize nations, recall diplomats, make executive agreements, seek congressional resolutions, deploy troops, and make treaties
2. The President, usually through the secretary of state, negotiates a treaty. The Senate then must approve the treaty by a two-thirds vote of members present, after which the President ratifies it.
3. Unlike a treaty, an executive agreement does not require Senate approval, supersede federal and State laws, or become a permanent part of U.S. Iaw. A subsequent President can end it.
4. Recognition is the acknowledgement of a country or government's legal existence. Quick recognition serves as a diplomatic seal of approval, while withholding recognition is a diplomatic rebuke.
5. to limit the President's power to make war without congressional approval
6. because the President always has the final authority over all military matters and may exert it without the approval of Congress
7. Students should support their opinion with facts from the War Powers Resolution and well-reasoned arguments.
QUICK WRITE Students should rank their arguments from strongest to weakest and order them appropriately in an outline to defend their thesis statement.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{Legislative and Judicial Powers}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How can the President check the actions of the legislative and judicial branches? Use a flowchart like the one below to keep track of the checks the President has on the other branches.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- pocket veto - clemency
- line-item veto - commutation
- reprieve
- pardon

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the President's legislative powers and how they are an important part of the system of checks and balances
2. Describe the President's major judicial powers.

Image Above: President George W. Bush gives the State of the Union address.

In,n The Federalist No. 51, James Madison analyzes the Constitution's elaborate system of checks and balances. Its "constant aim," he says, "is to divide and arrange the several [branches] in such a manner as that each may be a check on the other." And he adds, "the great security against a gradual concentration of the several powers in the same department consists in giving to those who administer each department the necessary constitutional means and personal motives to resist encroachments of the others. . . . "

The Constitution gives the President certain legislative and judicial powers. They are, in Madison's phrase, "the constitutional means" that make it possible for the President to check the actions of Congress or the federal courts.

\section*{Legislative Powers}

The President's legislative powers, exercised in combination with a skillful playing of the roles of chief of party and chief citizen, have made the President, in effect, the nation's chief legislator. It is the President who initiates, suggests, and demands that Congress enact much of the major legislation that it produces. However, a President whose party controls both houses on Capitol Hill may have an easier time of it than one who faces a hostile Congress.

Recommending Legislation The Constitution says that the President shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. . . .

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}
-Article II, Section 3
This provision gives the President what is often called the message power The chief executive regularly sends three major messages to Capitol Hill each year. The first is the State of the Union message, a speech almost always delivered in person to a joint session of Congress. The President's budget message and then

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How can the President check the actions of the legislative and judicial branches?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- analyze the principle of checks and balances using Article I, Section 7, Clause 2 of the Constitution.
- define elements of the President's legislative and judicial powers.
- use primary sources to evaluate a President's use of the power to pardon.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 98) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 99)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

To teach the skill of comparing viewpoints, have students read Compare Viewpoints in the Skills Handbook, p. S15. Then have them identify and evaluate the two viewpoints described in the article on the Core Worksheet.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - The President's legislative powers allow him or her considerable influence over the actions of Congress. - The President's key legislative powers are to submit legislation for Congress to consider and, using the veto power, to reject legislation that he or she opposes. - The presidential power to issue a pardon or reprieve applies only to federal offenses, but when given and accepted, is absolute.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, enumerated and implied powers, separation of powers enduring understanding: - The Constitution gives the President strong legislative and judicial powers as a part of the system of checks and balances.

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 1 4G showing part of Article I, Section 7, Clause 2 of the Constitution. Write on the board: (1) How does this clause relate to checks and balances? (2) Do you think the legislation approval process is sufficient to prevent abuse of power by the legislative or executive branch? Why or why not? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Have volunteers share their Bellringer answers. (1 establishes power of executive branch to check Congress using the veto and power of Congress to check the President using the override 2. No-the requirement for override is too high, giving the President too much power. Yes-the process requires all parties to consider legislation and resolve objections. )

\section*{DISCUSS}

Display Transparency 1 4H. Point out that checks and balances prevent abuse of power. The Constitution sets rules for each branch, and if any branch oversteps these rules, the other branches act as referees to rein in the offending branch. Ask: How do the President's legislative and judicial powers check the actions of the other branches? (legislative: veto can block a law; judicial: can alter court decisions through reprieve, pardon, commutation, or amnesty) L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students if they have heard the terms reprieve and pardon used in a different context. For example, pardon may be used as a way to say "excuse me." Have volunteers define these terms in the context of presidential power.

\section*{PLAY "WHERE DO YOU STAND?"}

The United States drafted many men to serve in the Vietnam War. Many Americans opposed the war. Men who refused to report for service were arrested. Ask: Should people have a right to refuse to serve in the military if they believe the war is unjust? Using the Opinion Line strategy (p. T26), write on the board: "Yes," "I Don't Know," and "No." Have students stand according to their answer and explain their decision. Then allow them to rethink their stance and relocate. Ask students who moved why they did.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint (1) sign the bill, making it law; (2) veto the bill, which returns to Congress; (3) allow a bill to become law by not acting on it, neither signing nor vetoing it, within ten days; (4) use a pocket veto at the end of a congressional session

Checkpoint What options are available to a President when presented with a bill?
the annual Economic Report soon follow. The President often sends the lawmakers a number of other messages on a wide range of topics. Each of them calls on Congress to enact those laws said to be necessary to the welfare of the country.

The Veto Power The Constitution says that "Every Bill" and "Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President." \({ }^{10}\) Remember, the Constitution presents the President with four options once a measure has been approved by Congress.

First, he may sign the bill, making it law, which is what usually happens. Or he can veto the bill, and the measure must then be returned to Congress. \({ }^{11}\) Congress can then override that veto, by a two-thirds vote in each of its two chambers, but it seldom does.

As a third option, the President may allow a bill to become law by not acting on it, neither signing nor vetoing it, within ten days (excluding Sundays). This rarely happens.

The fourth option, the pocket veto, can be used only at the end of a congressional session. If Congress adjourns within ten days (not counting Sundays) of sending a bill to the White House and the chief executive does not act on it, the measure dies.

Because Congress can seldom muster a two-thirds vote to overturn a veto, the power to use it is an exceedingly valuable tool in the President's dealings with the legislative branch. Even the mere threat of a veto is often enough to defeat a bill or, at the least, to prompt changes in its provisions as it moves through the legislative mill. When the chief executive makes such a threat, congressional leaders must do the math: Can they find enough votes in both houses to overcome a presidential veto?

George Washington rejected only two measures in his eight years in the presidency, and for nearly seven decades his successors

10 Article I, Section 7, Clauses 2 and 3 . Recall that, despite these words, joint resolutions proposing constitutional amendments and concurrent resolutions, which do not have the force of law, are not sent to the President also used their veto pens infrequently. But from Andrew Johnson in the 1860s onward, most chief executives have been much more willing to reject measures.
11 Veto, from the Latin meaning "I forbid."

Signing Statements From Andrew Jackson in the 1830s to today, various Presidents have issued "signing statements" as they approved some measures. On occasion, those statements were used to point out constitutional or other problems the President saw in a newly enacted law. More often, the statements have been used to do such things as to direct the manner in which a new law is to be enforced.

President George W. Bush issued signing statements far more than any of his predecessors, using them to question the constitutionality of more than 800 provisions in various measures he signed. In doing so, he claimed a power, on one hand, to refuse to enforce those provisions or, on the other, to interpret them "in a manner consistent with" his view of "the constitutional authority of the President." His critics claim that Mr. Bush, in effect, used these statements as a substitute for the veto power, deciding which new laws he would execute and how those laws would be interpreted and applied.

The Line-Item Veto If the President decides to veto a bill, he must reject the entire measure. He cannot veto only a portion of it.

Since Ulysses S. Grant's day, most Presidents have favored expanding the veto power to include a line-item veto. That is, they have sought the power to cancel out some provisions in a measure while approving others. Most often, those who have proposed this device would restrict its application to specific dollar amounts (line items) in spending bills enacted by Congress. Many argue that the line-item veto would be a potent weapon against wasteful and unnecessary federal spending.

Opponents of the line-item veto have long argued that the move would bring a massive and dangerous shift of power from the legislative branch to the executive branch. To this point, efforts to persuade Congress to propose a line-item veto amendment to the Constitution have failed.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 14, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 98)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 99)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 100)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 102)
L3 Quiz A (p. 103)
L2 Quiz B (p. 104)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 109)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 112)

\section*{The Power of the Veto}

When the President and the majority of Congress are of the same party, vetoes tend to be rare. They tend to be more frequent during periods of divided government. Do you think the veto gives the President too much authority?

In 1996, Congress did pass a Line-Item Veto Act. The Supreme Court struck it down, however, holding that Congress lacked the power to give the President a line-item veto (Clinton v. New York City, 1998). If the chief executive is to have that authority, said the Court, it can come only as the result of an amendment to the Constitution.

Other Legislative Powers According to Article II, Section 3 of the Constitution, only the President can call Congress into special session. The fact that Congress is now in session through most of each year practically eliminates the likelihood of special sessions and also lessens the importance of the President's power to call one. Still, as Congress nears the end of a regular session, Presidents have sometimes found it useful to threaten a special session if lawmakers do not act on some particular measure. President Harry Truman called the most recent special session in 1948, in an effort to force Congress to consider anti-inflation and welfare measures in the post-World War II period.

The same constitutional provision also gives the chief executive the power to prorogue (adjourn) Congress in the event the two houses cannot agree on a date for their adjournment. That has never happened.

\section*{Judicial Powers}

The Constitution gives the President the power to

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}
. . . Grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment. -Article II, Section 2, Clause 1

A reprieve is the postponement of the execution of a sentence. A pardon is legal forgiveness of a crime.

The President's power to grant reprieves and pardons is absolute, except in cases of impeachment, where they may never be granted. These powers of clemency (mercy Checkpoint How is a line-item veto different from a regular veto?

\section*{absolute}
adj. final, not subject to appeal

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Divide the students into three groups, one representing the President and the Cabinet, another representing the Senate, and the other one as the House of Representatives. Each group proposes a solution to a problem or issue in the class, the school, or the country. As the groups debate solutions, they also have to find out what is happening in the other groups. Finally, the President has to decide to sign the legislation or veto it.

To see this lesson plan, go to

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 14 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 100). Divide the class into pairs. Have pairs work together to answer the questions.

2 ELL Differentiate Have students write the main idea of each numbered point in the Executive Order.

\section*{DISCUSS STUDENTS' OPINIONS}

Ask volunteers to read their answer to question 3 of the Core Worksheet for class discussion.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Differentiate Have students select a President, research the number of vetoes and overrides of that President, and determine the party in control of Congress during the President's administration(s). Display Transparency 14 I . Have students write a brief paragraph on whether they think there is a correlation between the party in power and the number of presidential vetoes.

Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "State of the Union" (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 102).
Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive exploration of presidential vetoes.

\section*{Answers}

The Power of the Veto sample answers: yes, because veto power enables the President to stop legislation supported by most representatives; no, because the veto is part of checks and balances Checkpoint Unlike a regular veto, a line-item veto would allow the President to cancel out some provisions in a measure while approving others.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 103)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 104)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying presidential \\ checks and balances \\
(Questions 1, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Write the section's key terms on the \\ board and have students suggest the \\ legislative or judicial action to which they \\ are in response.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining the purpose \\ of signing statements \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review Document 2 of the Document- \\
Based Assessment with the class.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying the line-item \\ veto controversy (Ques- \\ tion 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a budget for spend- \\ ing $100. Then, have them exchange \\ budgets and delete purchases they think \\ are unnecessary.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Differentiating the judi- \\ cial powers (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Create a table on the board listing the \\ similarities and differences among the \\ key terms.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining the value of \\ the veto power (Ques- \\ tion 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review the process of overriding a veto. \\
\hline
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the power to grant conditional pardons, the power of commutation, and the power of amnesty Checkpoint What powers are included under the power to pardon?

or leniency) may be used only in cases involving \(\nless d e r a l\) offenses.

Presidential pardons are usually granted after a person has been convicted in court. Yet the President may pardon a federal offender before that person is tried, or even before that person has been formally charged.

Pardons in advance of a trial or charge are rare. The most noteworthy pardon, by far, was granted in 1974. In that year, President Gerald Ford gave "a full, free and absolute pardon unto Richard Nixon for all offenses against the United States which he . . . has committed or may have committed or taken part in during the period from January 20, 1969, through August 9, 1974." Of course, that pardon referred to the Watergate scandal.

To be effective, a pardon must be accepted by the person to whom it is granted. When a pardon is granted prior to a charge or conviction, as in the Nixon case, its acceptance is regularly seen as an admission of guilt by the person to whom it is given.

Nearly all pardons are accepted, of course, and usually gratefully. A few have been rejected, however. One of the most dramatic refusals led to a Supreme Court case, Burdick v. United States, 1915. George Burdick, a New York newspaper editor, had refused to testify before a federal grand jury regarding the sources for certain news stories his paper had printed. Those stories reported fraud in the collection of customs duties. He invoked the 5th Amendment, claiming that his testimony could incriminate him.

President Woodrow Wilson then granted Burdick "a full and unconditional pardon for all offenses against the United States" that he might have committed in obtaining material for the news stories.

Interestingly, Burdick refused to accept the pardon, and he continued to refuse to testify. With that, the federal judge in that district fined and jailed him for contempt. The judge ruled that (1) the President's pardon was fully effective, with or without Burdick's acceptance and (2) there was, therefore, no basis for Burdick's continued claim of protection against self-incrimination.

The Supreme Court overturned the lower court's action. It unanimously upheld the rule that a pardon must be accepted in order to be effective, and it ordered Burdick's release from jail.

The pardoning power includes the power to grant conditional pardons, provided the conditions are reasonable. It also includes the power of commutation, or the power to reduce a fine or the length of a sentence imposed by a court.

The pardoning power also includes the power of amnesty, which is in effect a blanket pardon offered to a group of law violators. Thus, in 1893, President Benjamin Harrison issued a proclamation of amnesty forgiving all Mormons who had violated the antipolygamy (multiple marriage) laws in the federal territories. In 1977, President Jimmy Carter granted amnesty to Vietnam War draft evaders.

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\) \\ Journal Essential Question, go to your \\ response to the chapter Essential Questions Journal.}

\section*{SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer this question: How can the President check the actions of the legislative and judicial branches?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the purpose of issuing signing statements?
3. What is the line-item veto and why is it controversial?
4. Explain how these presidential judicia powers differ: reprieve, pardon, clemency, commutation, amnesty.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Determine Relevance How do the President's legislative and judicial powers serve the principle of checks and balances?
6. Identify Central Issues Why do you think the threat of a veto is an important presidential tool?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Writing: Use Facts and Details To help build your case in your persuasive essay, you should have facts, statistics, quotations, and other details that support your thesis. Select the top three arguments you ranked in Section 3 and locate at least two specific details that you can use to support each of your arguments.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The President can check Congress by using the veto power, issuing signing statements, or calling special sessions. The President can check the judicial branch by issuing pardons and reprieves, commuting an individual's sentence, or granting amnesty.
2. Signing statements are a President's way to point out problems in a new law or direct the manner in which the law will be enforced.
3. A line-item veto is a proposed power that would enable the President to cancel some parts of a bill while accepting others. It is controversial because it potentially shifts a great deal of power to the President.
4. A reprieve postpones the execution of a sentence; a pardon legally forgives a crime; clemency refers to grants of mercy, which include pardons and reprieves; commutation reduces a sentence or fine; amnesty pardons a group of law violators rather than an individual.
5. These powers help balance the power among branches by serving as a check by the President on the other branches.
6. Because a two-thirds vote to override is difficult to achieve, the President can use the threat of a veto to defeat a bill before it even passes or to pressure Congress to address the President's concerns about the bill.
QuICK WRITE Students should gather supporting details that enhance the top three arguments they intend to use in their essay.

the President

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

When to Study Part of effective studying includes choosing the best time to study. Each of us has a time of day when we are at our best, whether it's early in the morning, during the evening, or some other time. Explain to students that once they identify this time of day for themselves, they should try to study during those hours. Additionally, tell students to keep in mind that shorter study sessions of one or two hours are usually more effective than marathon sessions. Even during short study sessions, students should remember to take a break every hour or so. Whenever possible, encourage students to take time to review class notes as soon after class as possible in order to identify problem areas and questions and to fix the information in their minds. Have students make a study schedule for the week, keeping in mind these pointers.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debate, p. 415
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the presidency, refer to these sources or assign them to students: L1 L2 Walker, Diana. Public & Private: Twenty Years of Photographing the Presidency. National Geographic, 2002.
L3 Hargrove, Erwin. The Effective Presidency: Lessons on Leadership from John F. Kennedy to George W. Bush. Paradigm Publishers, 2007.
L4 Graff, Garret M. The First Campaign: Globalization, the Web, and the Race for the White House. Farrar, Straus, and Giroux, 2007.

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) One view argued for a weaker presidency subordinate to Congress; the other, for a stronger, independent, and co-equal chief executive. (b) the stronger presidency (c) sample answers: no, because the Framers included methods within the Constitution to check the President's actions; yes, because the Framers did not define the executive powers clearly enough, which allowed the President to expand his powers beyond the prescribed expectations
2. (a) Factors include: looseness of the Executive Article, unity of the presidency, delegation of authority by Congress, citizens' demand for leadership, ability of the President to manage crises, President's own view of the presidency and way of fulfilling his or her roles, and President's use of the media. (b) Americans have looked to the President for leadership in a variety of fields. (c) Students might state that voters will look for qualities such as leadership and decision-making skills, government experience, and views on major issues.
3. Sample answer: It shows that presidential power has grown so much that today the other branches are subordinate to the executive branch.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) Article II Section 3 and the Oath of Office (b) by his or her interpretation of the law and the way in which subordinates work out the details (c) Some students might say yes, because administrators can interpret the broadly written laws to suit their own views. Other students might say no, because Congress should concentrate on the issue of the law and leave the execution to the executive branch.
5. (a) a presidential directive that has the effect of law; arises from the Constitution's implied ordinance power (b) because the Framers granted certain powers to the President, and to exercise those powers, the President must have the power to issue and implement the necessary orders
6. (a) ambassadors and other diplomats, Cabinet members and their top aides, independent agency heads, federal judges, U.S. marshals and attorneys, and all officers of the armed forces (b) Vice President, members of Congress, presidential electors (c) Some students might say the Framers

14 Chapter Assessment

Comprehension and Critical Thinking

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) What were the two views of the presidency held by the Framers? (b) Which view did they finally choose? (c) Do you think the Framers' decision predetermined the nature of presidential power? Why?
2. (a) What factors have led to the growth of presidential power? (b) In what way have the people contributed to that growth? (c) How might this increased power affect the way voters view the qualifications of a President?
3. Analyze Political Cartoons How does this cartoon illustrate the presidential power controversy?

Section 2
4. (a) From what two sources in the Constitution does the President get the power to execute the law? (b) How can a President alter the substance of a law? (c) Do you think Congress gives the executive branch too much authority to interpret laws?
5. (a) What is an executive order and how is it related to the ordinance power? (b) How do we know that the Framers intended the President to have the ordinance power?
6. (a) What positions are filled by presidential appointment? (b) What positions are not? (c) Why do you think the Framers made this distinction?

\section*{Section 3}
7. (a) What methods are available to the President to make agreements with foreign states? (b) Is it necessary to check the President's power to make international agreements?
8. (a) How does the President usually exercise the power of recognition? (b) How can the power be used as a weapon? (c) Why do you think it is important to other countries that they are recognized by the United States?
9. (a) What tools are available to the President as commander in chief? (b) How have they been limited?

Section 4
10. (a) What are the President's legislative powers? (b) What are the President's judicial powers? (c) How do these powers illustrate the principle of checks and balances?
11. (a) What is the difference between a veto and a lineitem veto? (b) How would a line-item veto increase the President's legislative powers?
12. Why do you think the President's judicial powers are included in the Constitution?

\section*{Writing About Government}
13. Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write a persuasive essay regarding the debate on the extent of presidential powers. Make sure to state your position clearly in the introduction and support it with detailed arguments. See pp. S9-S10 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
14. Essential Question Activity Take a survey of at least 10 voters (Democratic, Republican, and Independent) in your community. Ask:
(a) Over the past decade do you think the President has overstepped his authority? If so, when?
(b) Over the past decade do you think the President needed more authority? If so, when?
(c) Over your lifetime, do you think the power of the President has changed? How?
15. Essential Question Assessment Use the results of your survey and the content of this chapter to write a paragraph that helps answer the Essential Question:

How much power should a President have? Then, as a group, work with your classmates to create a chart that consolidates the results of each survey. Using the completed chart and your prepared paragraph, discuss the Essential Question as a class and reflect on the variety of answers that arise in response to the query. Following the discussion, if you find your opinion has changed, revise your paragraph accordingly.
\begin{tabular}{|cl|}
\hline Essential Questions \\
Journal & \begin{tabular}{l}
To respond to the chapter Essential \\
Question, go to your Essential \\
Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

422 Chapter 14 Assessment
wanted to prevent a President from filling positions that should be democratically elected. Others might say the Framers wanted to allow the President to appoint subordinates with whom he will work.

\section*{SECTION 3}
7. (a) treaties and executive agreements
(b) Sample answer: Treaties and agreements are binding on the United States and far-reaching in effect. Such decisions should not be made by one person unchecked.
8. (a) by exchanging diplomats (b) Quick recognition supports a government, helping it survive; removing recognition is a rebuke and often a step toward war. (c) Sample answer: Recognition by the strongest nation in the world lends legitimacy to a new government and may influence other nations to recognize it as well.
9. (a) can deploy troops with or without a declaration of war; can seek a congressional resolution to deploy troops in a crisis
(b) The Constitution gives Congress the power to declare war. Also, Congress has enacted the War Powers Resolution, which sets limits on a President's military actions.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\author{
Presidential Signing Statements
}

Although the practice has been around since the mid 1800s, the use of presidential signing statements has recently become quite controversial. As these documents show, The tensions between the executive and legislative branches become more intense as they quarrel over the proper use of these statements.

\section*{Document 1}

We are at a pivotal moment in our Nation's history, where Americans are faced with a President who makes sweeping claims for almost unchecked Executive power. One of the most troubling aspects of such claims is the President's unprecedented use of signing statements. Historically, these statements have served as public announcements containing comments from the President on the enactment of laws. But [the George W. Bush] Administration has taken what was otherwise a press release and transformed it into a proclamation stating which parts of the law the President will follow and which parts he will simply ignore.
Under our constitutional system of government, when Congress passes a bill and the President signs it into law, that should be the end of the story. It is the law of the land unless and until repealed by Congress or invalidated by the courts. For this reason, there are grave and inherent dangers to the extensive and unprecedented use of signing statements.
When the President uses signing statements to unilaterally rewrite the laws enacted by the people's representatives in Congress, he creates doubt about what the rule of law means in our Nation.
-Senator Patrick Leahy (D., Vermont), 2006

\section*{Document 2}

Presidential signing statements are . . . an essential part of the constitutional dialogue between the branches that has been a part of the etiquette of government since the early days of the Republic. . . . Many constitutional signing statements are an attempt to preserve the enduring balance between co-equal branches, but this preservation does not mean that the President will not enforce the provision as enacted. . . .
[S]igning statements do not diminish congressional power, because Congress has no power to enact unconstitutional laws. . . . [Also,] the statements do not augment presidential power. Where Congress, perhaps inadvertently, exceeds its own power in violation of the Constitution, the President is bound to defer to the Constitution. The President cannot adopt the provisions he prefers and ignore those he does not; he must execute the law as the Constitution requires. .
These statements are an established part of the President's responsibility to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." Members of Congress and the President will occasionally disagree on a constitutional question. This disagreement does not relieve the President of the obligation to interpret and uphold the Constitution, but instead supports the candid public announcement of the President's views.
-Michelle E. Boardman,
Deputy Assistant Attorney General, 2006

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. C
2. Sample answer: A veto rejects the entire law, including the provisions the President wants. A signing statement can function like a line-item veto, using interpretation to void provisions the President doesn't like. Signing statements are also a way to get around a hostile Congress. Instead of negotiating with Congress to settle their disagreements, the President simply uses a signing statement to refuse to enforce parts of the law.
3. Sample answer: No. The Framers intended Presidents to veto laws in which they saw problems, sending these laws back to Congress to address the concerns. Signing statements sidestep this reconsideration process, which is an essential part of checks and balances. Also, constitutionality of a law is a matter for the courts to decide-not the President. Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.
Use your knowledge of the controversy surrounding signing statements and Documents 1 and 2 to answer Questions 1-3.
1. How does each commentator cite the Constitution to his or her benefit?
A. Both speakers claim signing statements are unconstitutional.
B. Each speaker believes the Constitution supports signing statements.
C. Each speaker uses it to defend his or her stance on the issue.
D. Both take the Constitution out of context.
2. Why do you think a President would choose to approve a law with signing statements attached rather than vetoing the measure?
3. Pull It Together Do you think the use of signing statements follows the Framers' intention in Article Il of the Constitution?
GOVERNMENT ONLINE
Documents
To find more primary sources on signing statements, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{SECTION 4}
10. (a) message power and veto power
(b) power to grant pardons and reprieves
(c) The presidential legislative and judicial powers allow for the President's review of the actions of the other branches, and, if deemed necessary, override them.
11. (a) A veto rejects an entire bill. A line-item veto cancels some provisions in a bill while approving others. (b) Sample answer: A line-item veto would make Congress subordinate to the executive branch, allowing the President to write the law according to his or her views.
12. Sample answer: The powers are included in the Constitution to check the decisions of the judicial branch.
13. Essays should reflect all the steps in this chapter's section assessments and should be well-structured, with detailed arguments, a strong thesis statement, and an effective conclusion.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
14. Students' surveys should include welldocumented results of the interviews of ten individuals and should be neat and comprehensive.
15. Students should actively participate in the creation of the consolidated chart and share their thoughts on the results. Their paragraphs should be well-thought out and their answers well-reasoned, showing an understanding of the issues involved in defining presidential power.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 4}

What makes a good President?

\section*{CHAPTER 15}

Is the bureaucracy essential to good government?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the photo and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the image and quotation suggest about the role of the federal bureaucracy in American government? (that the federal bureaucracy is an expected part of living in a democracy and that the bureaucracy consists of many employees whose service supports the administration of government) In this chapter, students will learn how the federal bureaucracy functions in our government. Tell students to begin to further explore the role of the federal bureaucracy by completing the Chapter 15 Essential Question Warmup Activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{beFore reading}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 15 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 124)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

You may wish to teach decision making as a distinct skill within Section 4 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 15 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 160) to help students learn how to make decisions. The worksheet asks students to read information about the draft and to decide whether the draft should be reinstated. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 161).

\section*{WebQuest}
online The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the bureaucracy.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 and Section 2 lessons, omitting the Section 1 Describe a Bureaucracy activity and the Section 2 Extend options.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 and Section 4 lessons, omitting the political cartoon mini-lessons and the Section 3 Extend options.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Review the features of a bureaucracy and the major elements of the federal bureaucracy. Then divide the class into six groups and assign them one of these topics: Executive Office of the President, the Cabinet departments, independent executive agencies, independent regulatory commissions, government corporations, and the civil service. Groups should create a concept web or summary capturing the main ideas of their assigned topic. Using the Jigsaw strategy (p. T27), place one member of each group into a new group, so the class is organized with one representative for each topic. Students should share their expertise on their topic with the group.
FOLLOW UP Have students brainstorm a list of the benefits and drawbacks in the structure of the federal bureaucracy. Then lead a discussion on this chapter's Essential Question: Is the bureaucracy essential to good government?

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will..
- define a bureaucracy using the existing structure of their school.
- illustrate the bureaucratic structure using a specific organization they have chosen.
- determine the federal agency and its hierarchical level responsible for a specific activity using scenarios.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will.
- understand the importance of advisors by imagining themselves as President and choosing areas of expertise for their advisors.
- summarize features and functions of three agencies within the Executive Office of the President by using a Jigsaw activity.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will.
- list the top five services they think the Federal Government provides American citizens.
- work in pairs/groups to generate a list of the qualifications the President should take into consideration when nominating a specific Cabinet-level department head.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will...
- understand the need for regulatory agencies by reading an excerpt from The Jungle.
- compare types of independent agencies using a Venn diagram.
- research job opportunities within the civil service using information from the Office of Personnel Management.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1
Special Needs
L2
Basic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Federal Bureaucracy} \\
\hline 7 & & S \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Principles \\
- hierarchical authority \\
- job specialization \\
- formalized rules
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Purpose \\
organizes people to work together on large and complex tasks \\
- reduces conflicts by clarifying power relationships \\
- promotes efficiency through specialization \\
- enables work to continue through changes of personnel
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Structure \\
- Executive Office of the President \\
- 15 Cabinet departments \\
- many independent agencies
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- define a bureaucracy using the existing structure of their school.
- illustrate the bureaucratic structure using a specific organization they have chosen.
- determine the federal agency and its hierarchical level responsible for a specific activity using scenarios.

\section*{The Federal Bureaucracy}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What is the structure and purpose of the federal bureaucracy? Use a chart like the one below to keep track of the main ideas about the federal bureaucracy.
Federal Bureaucracy
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|l|}
\hline Principles & Purpose \\ \(\bullet \bullet\) & Structure \\ \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
\(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Political Dictionary } \\ \text { - bureaucracy } & \text { - staff agency } \\ \text { - bureaucrat } & \text { - line agency } \\ \text { - administration } & \end{array}\)

\section*{Objectives}
1. Define a bureaucracy.
2. Identify the major elements of the federal bureaucracy.
3. Explain how groups within the federal bureaucracy are named.
4. Describe the difference between a staff agency and a line agency.

Image Above: A Customs and Border Protection officer screens a passenger entering the United States.

T
 the mail, regulate business practices, collect taxes, defend the nation, administer Social Security programs, manage the national forests, explore outer space, and do dozens of other things every day. Indeed, you cannot live through a single day without somehow encountering the federal bureaucracy.

\section*{What Is a Bureaucracy?}

A bureaucracy is a large, complex administrative structure that handles the everyday business of an organization. \({ }^{1}\) To many Americans, the word bureaucracy suggests such things as waste, red tape, and delay. While that image is not altogether unfounded, it is quite lopsided. Basically, bureaucracy is an efficient and an effective way to organize people (bureaucrats) to do work.

Bureaucracies are found wherever there are large organizations, in both the public and the private sectors of this country. Thus, the United States Air Force, McDonald's, the Social Security Administration, MTV, your city government, Yahoo!, the Boy Scouts of America, and the Roman Catholic Church are all bureaucracies. Even your school is a bureaucracy.

Three Features of a Bureaucracy By definition, a bureaucracy is a system of organization built on three principles: hierarchical authority, job specialization, and formalized rules.

Hierarchical authority. The word hierarchical describes any organization structured as a pyramid, with a chain of command running from the top of the pyramid on down to its base. The few officials and units at the top of the structure have authority over those officials and units at the larger middle level, who in turn direct the activities of the many at the bottom level.

Job specialization. Each bureaucrat, each person who works for the organization, has certain defined duties and responsibilities. There is, then, a precise division of labor within the organization.

1 The term bureaucracy is a combination of the French word bureau, which originally referred to the desk of a government official and later to the place where an official works, and the suffix -cracy, signifying a type of social structure.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

Before students participate in this lesson's activity of describing how an organization could be arranged as a bureaucracy, you may want to review tips on thinking creatively in the Skills Handbook, p. S23.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - A bureaucracy features hierarchical authority, job specialization, and set rules. - The federal bureaucracy consists of all agencies, people, and procedures through which the government operates, and is the means by which the government makes and administers public policy. - The names given to agencies, including commission, administration, and corporation, may indicate the nature of the agency.
CONCEPTS: enumerated and implied powers, role of government enduring understandings: - Although often believed to be slow and disorganized, bureaucracies are in fact an efficient and effective way to organize people to do work. - The bureaucratic structure allows the government to function properly even through changes of personnel and presidential administrations.

Formalized rules. The bureaucracy does its work according to a number of established regulations and procedures. Those rules are set out in written form and so can be known by all who are involved in that work.

The Benefits of a Bureaucracy Those three features-hierarchical authority, job specialization, and formalized rules-make bureaucracy the most effective way for people to work together on large and complex tasks, whether public or private.

The hierarchy can speed action by reducing conflicts over who has the power and the appropriate authority to make decisions. The higher a person's rank in the organization, the greater the decisionmaking power he or she has.

Job specialization promotes efficiency because each person in the organization is required to focus on one particular job. Each worker thus gains a set of specialized skills and knowledge.

Formalized rules mean that workers can act with some speed and precision because decisions are based on a set of known standards, not on someone's likes, dislikes, or inclinations. Those rules also enable work to continue with little interruption even as some workers leave an organization and new workers are hired to replace them.

Recognize this very important point about public bureaucracies: their bureaucrats hold appointive offices. Bureaucrats are unelected makers and implementers of public policy. This is not to say that bureaucracies are undemocratic. However, in a democracy much depends on how effectively the bureaucracy is controlled by those whom the people do elect-the President and Congress. Listen to James Madison on the point:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

In framing a government which is to be administered by men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: you must first enable the government to control the governed; and in the next place oblige it to control itself. -The Federalist No. 51

D Analyzing Political Cartoons Although a bureaucracy may be the most effective governmental structure, the number of employees and time devoted to bureaucratic procedures are often criticized as a messy way to run the government. How does this cartoon illustrate this point?

\section*{The Federal Bureaucracy}

The federal bureaucracy is all of the agencies, people, and procedures through which the Federal Government operates. It is the means by which the government makes and administers public policy-the sum of all of its decisions and actions. Nearly all of that huge bureaucracy is located in the executive branch. Not all of it, however, because both Congress and the federal court system are bureaucracies as well.

The Constitution makes the President the chief administrator of the Federal Government. Article II, Section 3 declares that "he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed." But the Constitution makes only the barest mention of the administrative machinery through which the President is to exercise that power.

Article II does suggest executive departments by giving to the President the power to "require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments." \({ }^{2}\)

Article II anticipates two departments in particular, one for military and one for 2 Article II, Section 2, Clause 1. There is also a reference to "Heads of Departments" in Clause 2, and to "any Departmen or Officer" of the government in Article I, Section 8, Clause 18.

\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the benefits of the bureaucratic structure?
inclination n. a tendency, preference, attitude

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 15, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 124)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 128)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 129)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 130)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 132)
L3 Quiz A (p. 133)
L2 Quiz B (p. 134)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 128) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 129)

BELLRINGER
Write on the board: Answer these questions in your notebook: (1) What are some departments in this school? (2) Why do you think the school is organized into different departments?

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

List students' answers to the first Bellringer question on the board. (Common answers will probably include the Math Department, and so on.) Then use students' answers to the second question to discuss the ways in which your school is a bureaucracy and how its structure helps (or hurts) its effective operation.

\section*{DESCRIBE A BUREAUCRACY}

Display Transparency 15A, Federal Bureaucracy. Ask: What is the result of bureaucracy in the cartoon?
(U.S. food isn't distributed to the world's hungry people.) Students should each think of a group that could be organized as a bureaucracy-such as a club or business. Using the description of the features in the textbook, the students should describe in their notebooks the hierarchical structure of their organization, what kinds of specific roles people occupy, how they are assigned, and what formal regulations govern the operation of the organization.
L1 L2 Differentiate Get students started by using your own classroom as the example. In this hierarchical organization, the teacher is the head of the bureaucracy. Describe for them the different specific roles that the teacher and the students have, and some of the rules that govern the operation of your classroom.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons The cartoon suggests that a bureaucracy seems inefficient by showing a nameplate that implies a vast number of employees are working to combat the size of government.
Checkpoint Action can be faster because the hierarchy clarifies decision-making power, and formalized rules base decisions on known standards. Job specialization enables each worker to gain specialized skills and knowledge.

\section*{PAIR AND SHARE}

Once students have completed their descriptions, divide them into pairs and have them exchange notebooks. Each student should read through his or her partner's bureaucratic description. Make sure to give them time to ask questions about the structure and purpose of the bureaucracy. Then call on a few students to explain to the class how their partner's bureaucratic structure benefits the organization in question. Ask students to think about whether all types of organizations benefit from bureaucratic structure, and why or why not.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Hand out the Chapter 15 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 130), which uses scenarios to help students understand the federal bureaucracy. Explain that students will identify which units of the federal bureaucracy are responsible for different types of activities as well as determine what level of the bureaucracy should be contacted by the merits of each scenario. Have the students complete the table and the reflection question.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 15 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 132).

\section*{REVIEW CORE WORKSHEET}

Once students have completed their worksheets, have volunteers share their answers and explain their reasoning. If students disagree on what agency or level is responsible, have them discuss their analysis. Advise them that it might be possible that there could be multiple answers in some cases.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Executive Office of the President, 15 Cabinet departments, many independent agencies \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What three main groups make up the executive branch? uniformity
n. the condition of being alike standardize \(v\). to set up according to a rule or model foreign affairs. It does so by making the President the "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy," and by giving the chief executive both the power to make treaties and to appoint "Ambassadors, other public Ministers, and Consuls." \({ }^{3}\)

Beyond those references, the Constitution is silent on the organization of the executive branch. The Framers certainly intended that administrative agencies be created, however. They understood that no matter how wise the President and the Congress, their decisions still had to be carried out in order to be effective. Without an administra-tion-the government's many administrators and agencies-even the best policies would amount to just so many words and phrases. The President and Congress need millions of men and women to put policies into action in Washington, D.C., and in offices all around the country and the world.

The chief organizational feature of the federal bureaucracy is its division into areas of specialization. As you can see on the next page, the executive branch is composed of three broad groups of agencies: (1) the Executive Office of the President, (2) the 15 Cabinet departments, and (3) a large number of independent agencies. \({ }^{4}\)

\section*{The Name Game}

The titles given to the many units that make up the executive branch vary a great deal. The name department is reserved for agencies of Cabinet rank. Beyond the title of department, however, there is little standardized use of titles among the agencies.

The most commonly used titles for units in the executive branch include agency, administration, commission, corporation, authority, bureau, service, office, branch, and division.

The term agency is often used to refer to any governmental body. It is sometimes used to identify a major unit headed by 3 Article Il, Section 2, Clauses 1 and 2.

4 The charti s adapted trom the current edition of the United States Government Manual, published each year by the Office of the Federal Register in the National Acchives and Records Administration. The Manual includes a brief description of every agency in each of the tiree branches of the Federal Government More than 580 of its now nearly 700 pages are devoted to the executive branch.
a single administrator of near-cabinet status, such as the Environmental Protection Agency. But so, too, is the title administration; for example, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the General Services Administration.

The name commission is usually given to agencies charged with the regulation of business activities, such as the Federal Communications Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission. Top-ranking officers called commissioners head these units. The same title, however, is given to some investigative, advisory, and reporting bodies, including the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights and the Federal Election Commission.

Either corporation or authority is the title most often given to those agencies that conduct businesslike activities. Corporations and authorities are regularly headed by a board and a manager-as is this case with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Within each major agency, the same confusing lack of uniformity in the use of names is common. Bureau is the name often given to the major elements in a department, but service, administration, office, branch, and division are often used for the same purpose. For example, the major units within the Department of Justice include the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the United States Marshals Service, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Office of the Pardon Attorney, the Criminal Division, and the National Drug Intelligence Center.

Many federal agencies are often referred to by their initials. The EPA, IRS, FBI, CIA, FCC, NASA, and TVA are but a few of the dozens of familiar examples we hear and read about every day. \({ }^{5} \mathrm{~A}\) few are also known by nicknames. For example, the Government National Mortgage Association is often called "Ginnie Mae," and the National Railroad Passenger Corporation is better known to us as Amtrak.

\footnotetext{
5 The use of acronyms can sometimes cause problems. When the old Bureau of the Budget was reorganized in 1970, it was also renamed. It is now the Office of Management and Budget (OMB). However, it was for a time slated to be known as the Bureau of Management and Budget (BOMB)
}

428 Government at Work: The Bureaucracy

\section*{Myths and Misconceptions}
washington bureaucrats You will sometimes hear people refer to the federal bureaucracy as "those people in Washington. " In fact, of the approximately 3 million federal civilian employees, most of whom work for executive branch agencies, only about 15 percent work in the District of Columbia. Every major city in the country is home to at least some "Washington bureaucrats."

\section*{The Executive Branch}

The executive branch of the Federal Government is composed of a large number of agencies, all of them created by act of Congress to execute the laws of the United States. Nearly 80 percent of all of the men and women who work for those agencies in fact work some place other than Washington, D.C. Why do you think the executive branch makes up the majority of the federal bureaucracy?

\section*{EXECUTIVE OFFICE} of the President

The Executive Office of the President is an umbrella agency composed of several sub-agencies staffed by the President's closest advisors and assistants.

White House Office
- Office of the Vice President
- Council of Economic Advisors
- Council on Environmental Quality
- National Security Council
- Office of Administration
- Office of Management and Budget
- Office of National Drug Control Policy
- Office of Policy Development
- Office of Science and Technology Policy
Office of the United States Trade Representative

\section*{EXECUTIVE} Departments

Often called the Cabinet departments, the executive departments and their subunits carry out much of the work of the Federal Government.
- Department of State
- Department of the Treasury
- Department of Defense
- Department of Justice
- Department of the Interior

Department of Agriculture
- Department of Commerce
- Department of Labor

Department of Health and Human Services Department of Housing and Urban Development
Department of Transportation
- Department of Energy
- Department of Education
- Department of Veterans Affairs
- Department of Homeland Security

\section*{INDEPENDENT Agencies*}

These agencies are not attached to any of the Cabinet departments and exercise a wide range of responsibilities in the carrying out of government business as well as serving the public.

\section*{- Amtrak}
- Central Intelligence Agency
- Consumer Product Safety Commission
- Environmental Protection Agency
- Farm Credit Administration
- Federal Communications Commission
- Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation
- Federal Election Commission
- Federal Reserve System
- Federal Trade Commissio
- National Aeronautics and Space Administration
- National Endowment for the Arts
- National Labor Relations Board
- National Science Foundation
- National Transportation Safety Board
- Nuclear Regulatory Commission
- Office of Government Ethics
- Office of Personnel Management
- Peace Corps
- Securities and Exchange Commission
- Small Business Administration
- Social Security Administration
- Tennessee Valley Authority
- United States Postal Service

\section*{Background Note} bureaucratic red tape Historically, early bureaucrats in Europe used red cloth ribbons, commonly called "red tape," to hold together official records and documents. These actual red ribbons are the origin of the phrase "red tape" as used to describe the delays and excessive paperwork that many people associate with bureaucratic organizations. Elected officials will often say that they plan on "cutting through the red tape" when they are promising greater speed and efficiency in government action.

L1 L2 Differentiate Pair lower-level and higherlevel students to work together to complete their worksheet.
L4 Differentiate To challenge higher-level students, have them determine whether the agencies listed in the middle column of their worksheet function as a staff or line agency.
Tell students to go to the Online Update for more information on the executive branch agencies.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Assign each student one executive branch agency from the chart in the textbook, and have them research that agency, either in the library or online. Tell them that they should be looking for the agency's main functions, the name of the chief administrator, the number of employees, the year it was founded, and whether it is a staff or line agency. Once they have completed their research, divide them into groups of four or five. Each student should share the results of his or her research with the group, and the members of the group should work together to create a table listing all of their agencies and the relevant facts about them.
L4 Differentiate Have students select an executive department and research the agencies that are subunits of the department they selected. Then, have them create an organization chart that illustrates the hierarchical structure of that executive department.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' work.

L3Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 133)

\(L 2\)Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 134)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

The Executive Branch because a vast number of offices and personnel are required to execute and administer public policy

\section*{Government}
online
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A staff agency offers advice or other support to the administrators. A line agency performs the tasks for which the organization exists.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Describing the purpose \\ and structure of the \\ federal bureaucracy \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a concept web on the board that \\ illustrates the organization of the federal \\ bureaucracy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Defining the features of \\ bureaucracy \\
(Questions 2, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make an illustration depict- \\ ing each feature of a bureaucracy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying the names \\ of government units \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
With students, create a chart on the board \\ using this section's Name Game, describing \\ each and how they can at times overlap.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Contrasting staff and \\ line agencies \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students review the graphic organizer \\ in this chapter's Quick Study Guide.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Checkpoint How do staff agencies difffer from line agencies?

Have Trouble With
escribing the purpose and structure of the ederal bureaucracy

\section*{Defining the features of} bureaucracy
Identifying the names of government units Contrasting staff and (Question 4)

Make a concept web on the board that illustrates the organization of the federal

Have students make an illustration depicting each feature of a bureaucracy.

With students, create a chart on the board usch and how they can at times overlap.
in this chapter's Quick Study Guide.

\section*{Staff and Line Agencies}

The units that make up any administrative organization can be classified as either staff or line agencies. The Federal Government units are also described as such.

Staff agencies serve in a support capacity. They aid the chief executive and other administrators by offering advice and assistance in the management of the organization. Line agencies, on the other hand, actually perform the tasks for which the organization exists.

Congress and the President give the line agencies goals to meet, and the staff agencies help the line agencies meet these goals as effectively as possible through advising, budgeting, purchasing, management, and planning. The general public is much more aware of the work of line agencies than it is of that of most of the staff units. It is for a rather obvious reason: it is the line agencies that carry out public policies and, in doing so, deal directly with the public.

Two illustrations of the distinction here can be found in the several agencies that make up the Executive Office of the President and, in contrast, the Environmental Protection Agency. The agencies that make up the Executive Office of the President (the White House Office, the National Security Council, the Office of Management and Budget, and others, as you will see in the next section) each exist as staff support to the President. Their primary mission is to assist the President in the exercise of the executive power and in the overall management of the executive branch. They are not operating agencies. That is, they do not actually administer public programs.

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), on the other hand, has an altogether different mission. It is responsible for the day-to-day enforcement of the many antipollution laws Congress has enacted over the years. The EPA operates "on the line," where the action is.

This difference between staff agencies and line agencies can help you find your way through the complex federal bureaucracy. The distinction between the two can be oversimplified, however. For example, most line agencies do have staff units to aid them in their line operations. Thus, the Environmental Protection Agency's Office of Civil Rights is a staff unit. Its job is to ensure that the agency's personnel practices do not violate the Federal Government's antidiscrimination policies.
\begin{tabular}{cl}
Essential Questions & \begin{tabular}{l}
To continue to build a \\ response to the chapter \\
Jspential Question, go to your \\ Journal \\
Essential Questions Journal.
\end{tabular}
\end{tabular}

Essential Question, go to your
Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Ask Questions The numerous agencies that make up the federal bureaucracy administer public policy in a variety of fields. Think about subjects that you are interested in, for example, the economy, environment, defense, farming, transportation, or communication. Select the topic that interests you most. Then, write three questions that you would like to answer about the subject you selected as it relates to the Federal Government.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Analyze Information Explain how the defining features of a bureaucracy both help and hurt the effectiveness and efficiency of the Federal Government.
6. Categorize Think of a bureaucracy that you encounter or work with on a regular basis, and identify each of the three major features of bureaucracies in that organization.
7. Express Problems Clearly The bureaucrats who carry out government policy are appointed, not elected. Does this mean that bureaucracies are, therefore, undemocratic? Why or why not?
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: What is the structure and purpose of the federal bureaucracy?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Describe the three defining features of a bureaucracy.
3. List some of the more common names given to the various agencies in the executive branch.
4. What is the difference between a staf agency and a line agency?
h \(\quad\).

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The federal bureaucracy is all of the agencies, employees, and procedures through which the Federal Government operates. It is structured using hierarchical authority, job specialization, and formal rules. It is composed of the Executive Office of the President, 15 Cabinet departments, and many independent agencies. It organizes people to work on large, complex tasks.
2. hierarchical authority: pyramid-shaped, with a chain of command and each unit answering to a unit above it; job specialization: each person has a specific set of responsibilities; formalized rules: written work regulations and procedures
3. department: Cabinet-level agency; agency or administration: often a major unit headed by single administrator of near-cabinet rank; commission: regulates business; corporation or authority: conducts business-like activities
4. staff agency: offers advice or other support to the administrators; line agency: performs the tasks for which the organization exists.
5. Bureaucracy helps by allowing many people to work efficiently on complex projects. It hurts when there are too many levels or procedures that slow down the governing process.
6. Answers should include a description of the organization's hierarchy, job specialization, and rules.
7. Elected officials answer to the public but serve fixed terms in office. Appointed bureaucrats answer to elected officials, but they can be appointed or dismissed anytime.
QUICK WRITE Questions should relate to students' topics and to Federal Government involvement.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Executive Office of the President}

Guiding Question
What agencies and advisors are part of the Executive Office of the President and what are their functions? Use a table like the one below to keep track of those units and their functions within the Executive Office of the President

\section*{Political Dictionary}
\begin{tabular}{ll}
Political Dictionary \\
- Executive & - federal budge \\
Office of the & - fiscal year \\
President & - domestic affai
\end{tabular}

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the Executive Office of the President.
2. Explain the duties of the White House Office, the National Security Council, and the Office of Management and Budget.
3. Identify the other agencies that make up the Executive Office of the President.

Image Above: President Bush works on his State of the Union address with speechwriter Michael Gerson.

Thomas Jefferson performed his presidential duties with the help of two aides, one a messenger and the other his secretary. Like other early Presidents, he paid their salaries out of his own pocket. Indeed, Congress did not provide any money for presidential staff until 1857, when it gave President James Buchanan $2,500 for one clerk.

President Jefferson presided over an executive branch that employed, altogether, only some 2,100 people. The situation is remarkably different today. Approximately 2.7 million men and women work in the Obama administration. Two institutions-the Executive Office of the President and the President's Cabinet-are at the center of today's huge executive branch.

\section*{The Executive Office of the President}

Every officer, every employee, and every agency in the executive branch of the Federal Government is legally subordinate to the President. They all exist to help the President-the chief executive-in the exercise of the executive power.

The President's right arm, however, is the Executive Office of the President (the EOP). The Executive Office of the President is, in fact, an umbrella agency, a complex organization of several separate agencies staffed by some 900 of the President's closest advisors and assistants.

President Franklin Roosevelt persuaded Congress to establish the Executive Office of the President in 1939. It has been reorganized in every administration since then, including the Obama Administration.

\section*{The White House Office}

The nerve center of the Executive Office of the President-in fact, the nerve center of the entire executive branch of the Federal Government-is the White House Office. It houses much of the President's key personal and political staff.

The two wings on either side of the White House hold the offices of most of the President's staff. These employees occupy much of the crowded West Wing, which the public seldom sees and where the legendary Oval Office and the Cabinet Room are located.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The Executive Office of the President is a complex organization of separate agencies staffed by the President's closest advisors and assistants. - The White House Office is the nerve center of the EOP and of the entire executive branch. - The agencies of the EOP, including the National Security Council and the Office of Management and Budget, make sure the President's policies are being carried out in areas such as trade, environment, legislation, and foreign and domestic affairs.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, role of government enduring understandings: - The Executive Office of the President is composed of the President's closest advisors and several support agencies. - The EOP is the President's right arm in the formation and execution of the nation's public policies.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What agencies and advisors are part of the Executive Office of the President and what are their functions?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|r|}{Executive Office of the President} \\
\hline Agency & Function \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- White House Office \\
- National Security Council \\
- Office of Management and Budget \\
- Office of National Drug Control Policy \\
- Council of Economic Advisors \\
- Office of Policy Development \\
- Council on Environmental Quality \\
- Office of the Vice President \\
- Office of United States Trade Representatives \\
- Office of Science and Technology Policy
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- President's inner circle; advises on foreign policy, defense, homeland security, the economy, and other areas \\
- advises President on domestic, foreign, and military matters related to national security \\
- prepares federal budget; monitors spending; keeps President up to date on work of all agencies \\
- prepares national drug control strategy; coordinates war on drugs \\
- advises on state of nation's economy; helps prepare annual Economic Report \\
- advises on domestic affairs \\
- advises on environmental policy and in writing annual state of the environment report \\
- supports duties of Vice President \\
- advises on foreign trade; represents President in foreign trade negotiations \\
- advises on scientific, engineering, and other technological matters related to national policies and programs
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

The Extend the Lesson activity in this section asks students to do online or print research about executive branch agencies. Have students turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S14, to learn how to analyze sources.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will .
- understand the importance of advisors by imagining themselves as President and choosing areas of expertise for their advisors.
- summarize features and functions of three agencies within the Executive Office of the President by using a Jigsaw activity.

\section*{before class}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 135) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 136)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: The President's advisors help plan policy in different areas. If you were President, what areas of expertise would you like your advisors to have? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Ask volunteers to read their list of advisors' areas of expertise. Have them discuss why they chose those particular kinds of expertise.

\section*{EXECUTIVE AGENCIES JIGSAW}

Conduct a Jigsaw activity (p. T27) on the agencies of the executive branch. Divide students into three groups. Distribute the Chapter 15 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 137) and assign each group either the White House Office, National Security Council, or Office of Management and Budget. Have groups use the information in the chapter to complete their worksheet and answer the discussion questions related to their agency.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint This office is the nerve center of the executive branch of government and includes the President's closest aides.
The West Wing Such close proximity allows the President quick access to the information and advice of the key advisors.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is the role of the White House Office staff?
inner circle
n. those most influentially closest to

The chief of staff to the President directs all of the operations of the White House Office and is among the most influential presidential aides. The counselor to the President and a number of senior advisors are also key members of the President's inner circle.

Several top officials work in the White House Office. A number of assistants and deputy assistants to the President aid the chief executive in such vital areas as foreign policy, defense, homeland security, the economy, political affairs, congressional relations, speech writing, and contacts with the news media and the public.

The staff of the White House Office also includes such major presidential aides as the press secretary, the appointments and scheduling assistant, and the President's physician. The first lady's very visible place in public life today is reflected by the fact that one of the assistants to the President serves as her chief of staff and one of the several deputy assistants is her press secretary.

Altogether, the staff of the White House Office now includes more than 400 men and women who, in a very real sense, work for the President. The titles of a few of the subunits within the White House Office suggest the scope of that work: the Office of Global Communications, the Office of National AIDS Policy, and the USA Freedom Corps.

\section*{National Security Council}

Most of the President's major steps in foreign affairs are taken in close consultation with the National Security Council (NSC). It meets at the President's call, often on short notice, to advise him in all domestic, foreign, and military matters that relate to the nation's security.

The President chairs the Council. Its other members include the Vice President and the secretaries of state, treasury, and defense. The Director of National Intelligence and the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff regularly attend its meetings.

The NSC has a small staff of foreign and military policy experts. They work under the direction of the President's assistant for national security affairs, who is often called the President's national security advisor. The government's several intelligence agencies do much of their often super-secret work at the direction of the National Security Council.

The National Security Council is a staff agency. That is, its job is to advise the \section*{The West Wing}

The White House is a vast structure that includes two office buildings and the President's residence. The East and West wings extend from the residence and host key presidential aides and advisors. The President's closest advisors are located in the West Wing only steps away from the Oval Office. Why is it important that these advisors be so close to the President's office?

432 Government at Work: The Bureaucracy

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 15, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 135)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 136)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 137)
L3 Quiz A (p. 139)
L2 Quiz B (p. 140)

President in all matters affecting the nation's security. However, during the Reagan administration in the 1980s, the NSC's staff actually conducted a number of secret operations, including the sale of arms to Iran. The disclosure of the NSC's role in this sale led to the Iran-Contra scandal of the mid-1980s.

\section*{Office of Management and Budget}

The Office of Management and Budget (OMB) is the largest and, after the White House Office, the most influential unit in the Executive Office. The OMB is headed by a director who is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The OMB's major task is the preparation of the federal budget, which the President must submit to Congress every year.

The federal budget is a very detailed estimate of receipts and expenditures, an anticipation of federal income and outgo, during the next fiscal year. A fiscal year is the 12 -month period used by government and business for record keeping, budgeting, and other financial management purposes. The Federal Government's fiscal year runs from October 1 through September 30

The budget is more than just a financial document. It is a plan-a carefully drawn, closely detailed work plan for the conduct of government. It is an annual statement of the public policies of the United States, expressed in dollar terms.

The creation of each fiscal year's budget is a lengthy process that begins more than a year before the start of the fiscal year for which it is intended. Each federal agency prepares detailed estimates of its spending needs for that 12-month period. The OMB reviews those proposals and gives agency officials the opportunity to defend their dollar requests. Following that agency-by-agency review, the revised (and usually lowered) spending estimates are fitted into the President's overall program before it is sent to Congress. The OMB then monitors the spending of the funds Congress appropriates.

Beyond its budget chores, the OMB is a sort of presidential "handy-man" agency. It

\section*{How Government Works \\ Federal Budget \\ How is the President's budget created?}

The Office of Management and Budget must consider a variety of factors before it creates the President's final budget proposals. Detailed analyses of those elements help the OMB determine the appropriate level of funding for each agency. Which of these factors might be the most difficult to quantify?

What can the Government spend?
The OMB must estimate how much income, principally from taxes, the government will receive in an upcoming fiscal year. Much of that sum must be spent for purposes and at levels previously set by Congress (mandatory spending).

What do Americans want?
People expect the Federal Government to maintain existing programs. Only about 20 percent of all federal spending can be directed to expanding these programs and/or creating new ones (discretionary spending).

makes continuing studies of the organization and management of the executive branch and keeps the President up to date on the work of all its agencies. The OMB checks and clears agency stands on all legislative matters to make certain they agree with the President's policy positions. It also helps prepare the hundreds of executive orders the President must issue each year and the veto messages the chief executive occasionally sends to Congress.

\section*{Other EOP Agencies}

The EOP's umbrella covers several otherand quite important-agencies. Each of those agencies provides essential staff help to the chief executive.

Then have students form new groups comprised of one student from each previous group. Have students share the information on their agency and the results of their discussion with their new group. Tell students that each of them should be able to act as an "expert" on his or her agency and teach that material to the new group.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have the groups do research on their agency to include information in their core worksheet beyond that provided in the text. Encourage them to add more categories to the chart for additional information they find. Then conduct the peer-teaching part of the jigsaw.
L2 ELL Differentiate Assign students who work more slowly the White House Office as the agency on which they should focus in this activity.
L4 Differentiate Assign higher-level students the OMB on which to focus in this activity.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Display Transparency 15B, The Executive Branch, which contains a blank version of the table in the Jigsaw activity. For each agency, select a student who was not an expert on that agency. Ask these students to provide the details on the agency that was "taught" to them by that agency's expert. Write the answers on the transparency and have students check the accuracy of their worksheets.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L1 L2 Differentiate Ask students to use print or online resources to find an article about one of the executive branch agencies in the text. Have students write a short summary of the article.
L3 Differentiate Ask students to use print or online resources to find an article about one of the executive branch agencies in the text. Ask them to prepare a brief oral presentation for the class based on their article. Presentations should focus on what they learned about how the agency operates and its role in the Federal Government.

\section*{L4 D}

Differentiate Have students research the career of a person who currently heads one of the executive branch agencies described in the text. Have them write a short biography, which should focus on accomplishments and qualifications for the office.

\section*{Answers}

How Is the President's Budget Created? possible response: success of current programs; predicted strength of economy
Checkpoint prepares federal budget, monitors spending, informs President on work of all agencies, checks agency stands on legislative matters to assure consistency with President's views, helps prepare executive orders and veto messages

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Have students write a summary of the major activities of the White House Office, National Security Council, and Office of Management and Budget.Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 288).
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 139) L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 140)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying the EOP \\ agencies and functions \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an outine of the \\ section using the red and blue heads \\ as a structure.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing the OMB \\ responsibilities (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a concept web on the board that \\ tracks the main ideas in the section's \\ 0ffice of Management and Budget.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding how the \\ budget reflects presidential \\ priorities (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the section's Creating the \\ President's Budget feature.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Examining the purpose of \\ the EOP (Questions 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the Executive Branch graphic in \\ Section 1 while leading a discussion on \\ the purpose of the federal bureaucracy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Determining how the agen- \\ cies maintain the principle \\ of checks and balances \\
(Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Remind students about the principle \\ and have them find references in the \\ section that mention the legislative or \\ judicial branch.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint approves the President's appointments to top positions

Office of National Drug Control Policy The Office of National Drug Control Policy was established in 1988. It is headed by a director who is appointed by the President, with Senate approval. The Office prepares an annual national drug control strategy, which the President sends on to Congress. The director also coordinates the ongoing efforts of the more than 50 federal agencies that participate in the continuing war on drugs.

Council of Economic Advisers Three of the country's leading economists, chosen by the President with Senate consent, make up the Council of Economic Advisers. The Council is the chief executive's major source of information and advice on the state of the nation's economy. It also helps the President prepare the annual Economic Report to Congress, which goes to Capitol Hill in late January or early February each year.

Other EOP Units A number of other agencies in the Executive Office house key presidential aides. These men and women make it possible for the President to meet the manysided responsibilities of the presidency.

The Office of Policy Development advises the chief executive on all matters relating to the nation's domestic affairs-that is, all matters not directly connected to the realm of foreign affairs.

The Council on Environmental Quality aids the President in environmental policy and in writing the annual "state of the environment" report to Congress. It sees that federal agencies comply with presidential policy and the nation's environmental laws. The council's three members are appointed by the President, with the Senate's consent.

The Office of the Vice President houses the now more than fifty men and women who help the Vice President perform the duties of that office. The marked growth in the size of that staff in recent years illustrates the increase in the importance and political clout of the vice presidency.

The Office of United States Trade Representative advises the chief executive in all matters of foreign trade. The trade representative, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, carries the rank of ambassador and represents the President in foreign trade negotiations.

The Office of Science and Technology Policy is the President's major advisor in all scientific, engineering, and other technological matters. Its director is drawn from the nation's scientific community.

The Office of Administration is the general housekeeping agency for all the other units in the Executive Office. It provides them with the many support services they must have in order to do their jobs.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Gather
Details When writing a research report, you should include facts, examples, and other information to help support your findings. Make a list of details related to the research topic you selected in the Quick Write of Section 1. Make sure to indicate how your topic is specific to a government your topic is specific to a government and what its responsibilities are.

Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer this question: What agencies and advisors are part of the Executive Office of the President and what are their functions?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Which agency in the Executive Of fice of the President has the largest impact on foreign affairs?
3. Describe the major duties of the Office of Management and Budget.
4. How can the federal budget be used to advance the President's policy agenda?

\section*{Critical Thinking \\ 5. Summarize}

Hur does the White House Office help the President fulfil of administrator?
. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Do you think that the number of distinct agencies within the Executive Office of the President is too large, too small, or just right? Explain your answer.
7. Draw Conclusions Which particular agency in the executive branch do you think best illustrates the concept of checks and balances?
5. includes the President's most trusted advisors, who consult on policy making
6. Answers should weigh the administrative costs of so many agencies against the benefits of bureaucratic specialization.
7. The OMB checks the legislative branch through creating the federal budget and monitoring federal spending. Some agencies are checked by the legislative branch by Senate approval on the selection of agency heads.
QUICK WRITE Details should relate a government agency to the student's chosen topic.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{The Cabinet Departments}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What is the Cabinet and what does it do? Use a concept web like the one below to keep track of the supporting details about the Cabinet.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
\(\begin{array}{ll}\text { - executive } & \text { - secretary } \\ \text { department } & \text { - attorney }\end{array}\)
- civilian

n
aThe Federalist No. 76, Alexander Hamilton declared that "the true test of a good government is its aptitude and tendency to produce a good administration." Given that comment, it seems strange that Hamilton and the other Framers of the Constitution spent so little time on the organization of the executive branch of the government they were creating. Instead, the machinery of federal administration has been built over time to meet the changing needs of the country.

\section*{Executive Departments}

Much of the work of the Federal Government is done by the 15 executive departments. Often called the Cabinet departments, they employ nearly twothirds of the Federal Government's civilian, or nonmilitary, workforce. They are the traditional units of federal administration, and each of them is built around some broad field of activity.

The First Congress created three of these departments in 1789: the Departments of State, Treasury, and War. As the size and the workload of the Federal Government grew, Congress added new departments (see chart on the following pages). Some of the newer ones took over various duties originally assigned to older departments, and gradually assumed new functions, as well. Over time, Congress has also created and later combined or abolished some departments.

Chief Officers and Staff Each department is headed by a secretary, except for the Department of Justice, whose work is directed by the attorney general. As you will see, these department heads serve in the President's Cabinet. Their duties as the chief officers of their specific department take up most of their time, however.

Each department head is the primary link between presidential policy and his or her own department. Just as importantly, each of them also strives to promote and protect his or her department with the White House, with Congress and its committees, with the rest of the federal bureaucracy, and with the media and the public.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The federal administration has been built over time to meet the changing needs of the country. - Each executive department manages federal policy in a broad field. - The 15 executive department heads make up the President's Cabinet. - The President appoints department heads; the Senate confirms.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, role of government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Although most employees of the executive departments are career civil servants, the President appoints those who will fill the top positions with Senate approval. - The Cabinet is an informal advisory body to the President; however, its influence on policies and decision making has varied from President to President.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What is the Cabinet and what does it do?

1. others as President desires: often Vice President, director of OMB, domestic policy advisor, President's counselor, chief of staff, trade representative, heads of Office of National Drug Control Policy and Environmental Protection Agency

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- list the top five services they think the Federal Government provides American citizens.
- work in pairs/groups to generate a list of the qualifications the President should take into consideration when nominating a specific Cabinet-level department head.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

To help students learn to draw inferences and conclusions, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S19, and use the steps explained there to complete this lesson's Core Worksheet.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 141 ) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 142)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: What do you think are the five most important services provided to American citizens by the Federal Government? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Ask students to share their answers to the Bellringer and write them on the board. Then, refer students to the "Executive Departments" diagrams in the textbook, which show the 15 executive branch departments, and have students determine which branch is responsible for the services they considered the most important. Write the answers on the board. Tell students that most of the Federal Government's work is completed by the various agencies and working groups that make up the executive departments.
L2 ELL Differentiate Help students make their lists by providing them with prompts such as: Do you think healthcare for seniors is an important service? How important is national security? Should the quality of meat and vegetables be controlled? How would you rate protecting the environment?

\section*{Answers}

The Executive Departments Answers will vary, but should reflect an understanding of what areas are already under Cabinet department auspices and those that they think should be covered.

How Government Works
The Executive Departments
Each of the now 15 executive departments was created by Congress. Their respective areas of responsibility generally reflect the conditions of the period and the major issues facing the nation when each of them was established. What new department(s) do you think might be created in the 21 st century?

\section*{Industrial Era} economy.

An under secretary or deputy secretary and several assistant secretaries aid the secretary in his or her multidimensional role. These officials are also named by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Staff support for the secretary comes from assistants and aides with a wide range of titles in such areas as personnel, planning, legal advice, budgeting, and public relations.

Subunits Each department is made up of a number of subunits, both staff and line. Each of these subunits, or agencies, is usually further divided into smaller working units. Thus, the Criminal Division in the Department of Justice is composed of a number of sections, including, for example, the Counterterrorism Section and the Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs Section. Approximately 80 percent of the men and women who head the bureaus, divisions, and other major units within each of the executive departments are career people, not political appointees.

Many of the agencies in executive departments are structured geographically. Much of their work is done through regional and/or district offices, which, in turn, direct the activities of the agency's employees in the field. In fact, nearly 90 percent of all of the men and women who work as civilian employees of the Federal Government are stationed outside the nation's capital.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 15, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 141)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 142)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 143)
L2 Extend Activities (pp. 144, 145)
L3 Quiz A (p. 146)
L2 Quiz B (p. 147)

\section*{Postwar Era}

Following World War II, the Cabinet expands to match the Federal Government's larger role in the nation's economy, social services, and education.

\section*{Health and human \(1-5\)}

Services
- Founded as the Department of Health. Education, and Welfare; separated and renamed in 1979
- Funds healthcare research programs - Conducts programs to prevent and - Entrol disease

Enforces pure foods and drug laws Administers Medicare and Medicaid

\section*{Housing and Urbanl 965} Development
- Operates home-financing and public housing programs
- Enforces fair housing laws

Transportation 1
- Administers programs to promote and regulate highways, mass transit, railroads, waterways, air travel, and oil and roads, waterways, air travel, and oil and gas pipelines gas pipelines energy resource and local levels on land, energy, resource, and technology programs

21st Gentury
 focus on national security and the newest executive department is established.

\section*{Energy -- Promotes production of renewable energy, fossil - Transmits and sells hydroelectric power - Conducts nuclear weapons research and production}

Elucation y
- Administers federal aid to schools - Ensures equal access to educatio
 - Administers benefits, pensions, and medical programs for veterans of the armed forces
- Oversees military cemeteries
 Seburity - Ensures border and transportation security - Develops emergency preparedness and response programs - Safeguards national infrastructure and information systems

Take the Veterans Health Administration, part of the Department of Veterans Affairs, to illustrate the point. That administration does nearly all of its work providing medical care to eligible military veterans at some 150 medical centers, more than 800 outpatient clinics, and a large number of other facilities throughout the country.

The Executive Departments Today Today, the executive departments vary a great deal in terms of visibility, size, and importance. The Department of State is the oldest and the most prestigious department; but it is also among the smallest, with only some 25,000 employees. The Department of Defense is the largest, with nearly 700,000 civilian workers, and another 1.4 million men and women in the military services.

The Department of Health and Human Services has the largest budget; it accounts for just about a fourth of all federal spending each year. In contrast, the Department of Commerce has the smallest budget and contributes to less than one percent of all federal expenditures.

The Department of Homeland Security became the newest of the executive departments when Congress created it in 2002. The 15 departments, the dates they were established, and their principal functions are profiled in the chart above.

\section*{How Government Works}
name that department To help students understand the functions of the executive departments, have them create an identification game. Ask each student to choose one department from "The Executive Departments" feature in the textbook without revealing the name. Instruct them to write a scenario that relates to the department's functions. Have students read their scenario aloud. After each reading, ask the class to identify the department that should handle the situation. Provide this example to get them started: "Ranchers near Yellowstone Park are angry that the park's wolves have killed some of their sheep. " Ask: What department should handle this situation? (the Department of the Interior)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Remind students that most employees of the executive departments are career civil servants, who, in many cases, have the background and education as well as years of experience in a field related to their department. The President, with Senate approval, selects those individuals who will hold high-level positions in each department. Divide the class into pairs or into groups of three, and give each pair/group the name of one executive department on which to focus. Make sure each department is covered in this exercise. Tell students that they are career employees for their department and they have been asked to provide the President with the qualifications to look for in determining the best candidate for their department head. Distribute the Chapter 15 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 143), which provides prompts to help them with this activity.

L2 Differentiate When designating executive departments, assign lower-level students to departments that may be more familiar and therefore easier to qualify, such as the Department of Defense or the Department of Education.
L4 Differentiate When designating executive departments, assign higher-level students to departments that may be less familiar and therefore more difficult to qualify, such as the Department of the Interior or the Department of Commerce.
L2 ELL Differentiate Go over the functions of the students' assigned department, using the lists in the textbook feature. Have students restate each function in their own words to check understanding.

Tell students to go to the Online Update for more information on the Cabinet departments.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Have volunteers read their lists of department head qualifications they created for the President. Write them on the board. Ask: Are there any similarities among the lists of qualifications? What are the common denominators? (personal: leadership, decision making, and managerial skills; professional: extensive experience in the department's field, respect and/or admiration by peers) Remind students that each department head is a member of the President's Cabinet, an informal advisory board. As such, the department heads provide the expert advice needed to help determine foreign and domestic policy. Ask: Do you think the Cabinet should be the key advisors of the President? Why or why not? (yes: because the department heads' expertise should help the President in decision making; no: because the Cabinet secretaries are too focused on their departments and the President should rely on a smaller group of close friends and advisors)
L4 Differentiate Have a volunteer write the qualifications on the board and categorize them by personal and professional as well as indicating those that are common among the recommendations.

\title{ Checkpoint
}

What officials are members of the Cabinet? practical
adj. learned through practice or action

\section*{The Cabinet}

The Cabinet is an informal advisory body brought together by the President to serve his needs. The Constitution makes no mention of this group of advisors, nor did Congress create it. \({ }^{6}\) Instead, the Cabinet is the product of custom and usage.

At its first session in 1789, Congress established four top-level executive posts: secretary of state, secretary of the treasury, secretary of war, and attorney general. By his second term, President George Washington was regularly seeking the advice of the four outstanding people he had named to those offices: Thomas Jefferson (State), Alexander Hamilton (Treasury), Henry Knox (War), and Edmund Randolph (attorney general). So the Cabinet was born, and it has grown over time.

By tradition, the heads of the now 15 executive departments form the Cabinet. Each of the last several Presidents has regularly added a number of other top officials to the group, including the director of the Office of Management and Budget and the President's chief domestic policy advisor. The Vice President is a regular participant, and several other major figures usually attend Cabinet meetings-today, in particular, the counselor to the President, the White House chief of staff, the United States trade representative, the director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, and the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Choosing Cabinet Members The President appoints the head of each of the 15 executive departments. Each of these appointments is subject to confirmation by the Senate, but rejections have been exceedingly rare. Of the more than 600 appointments made since 1789 , only 12 have been rejected. The most recent rejection occurred in 1989, when the Senate refused to confirm President George H.W. Bush's selection of John Tower as secretary of defense.

6 The closest approach to it is in Article II, Section 2, Clause 1, where the President is given the power to "require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the duties of their respective Offices." The Cabinet was first mentioned in an act of Congress in 1907 , well over a century after its birth.

Many factors influence the President's Cabinet choices. Party is almost always important. Republican Presidents do not often pick Democrats, and vice versa. One or more of a new President's appointees invariably come from among those who played a major role in the recent presidential campaign.

Of course, professional qualifications and practical experience are also taken into account in the selection of Cabinet secretaries. Geography also plays a part. In broad terms, each President tries to give some regional balance to the Cabinet. Thus, the secretary of the interior almost always comes from the West, where most of that department's wideranging work is carried out. Similarly, the secretary of agriculture usually comes from one of the farm States in the Midwest and the secretary of housing and urban development often comes from one of the nation's major metropolitan centers.

Various interest groups care about Cabinet appointments, and they influence some of the choices. Thus, the secretary of the treasury regularly comes out of the financial world, the secretary of commerce from the ranks of business, the secretary of education from among professional educators, the attorney general from the legal community, and so on.

Other considerations also guide the President's choices. Gender and race, management abilities and experience, and other personal characteristics-these and a host of other factors play a part in the process.

Today, a President makes Cabinet choices with an eye to racial, ethnic, and gender balance. But this has not always been the case. Thirty-one Presidents had named more than 300 Cabinet officers before Franklin Roosevelt appointed the first woman to that body: Frances T. ("Ma") Perkins, who served as secretary of labor from 1933 to 1945. In 1966, the first African American, Robert C. Weaver, was selected by Lyndon Johnson to head the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Ronald Reagan named the first Hispanic Cabinet officer, Lauro F. Cavazos, as secretary of education in 1988.

Bill Clinton's Cabinetchoices(1993-2001) included five women, seven African Americans, three Hispanics, and the first Asian

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 15C, Bush's New Cabinet, when you discuss the makeup of the Cabinet. This cartoon illustrates a problem that might result from a President choosing his or her own closest advisors. Ask: Whom do the mirrors represent? (members of President Bush's Cabinet) What do the mirrors say about the people they represent? (The Cabinet members simply reflect back the President's own views.) What problem might President Bush's choice of Cabinet members create? (He might hear no opposing views to help him consider all sides of an issue.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint heads of the 15 executive departments

American: Norman Mineta, secretary of commerce. Madeleine Albright became the first woman to become secretary of state and Janet Reno, the first to serve as attorney general.

Over his two terms (2001-2009), George W. Bush named six women, four African Americans, and three Hispanics to the Cabinet. Two African Americans, Colin Powell and then Condoleezza Rice, served as secretary of state. His secretary of labor, Elaine Chao, was born in China and became the first Chinese American to hold a Cabinet office.

The Cabinet's Role Cabinet members have two major responsibilities. Individually, each is the administrative head of one of the executive departments. Collectively, they are advisors to the President.

Once a central cog in presidential government, the overall importance of the Cabinet has declined in recent years. Through much of our history, the Cabinet was a principal source of presidential advice. It met frequently, sometimes as often as twice a week, to offer counsel to the chief executive, and its influence could be seen in virtually all areas of public policy.

The growth of other presidential resources-particularly the vast amount of staff assistance centered in the Executive Office of the President-has eclipsed the Cabinet's role, however. Indeed, during his presidency, John Kennedy said that he could see no need to discuss, say, Defense Department matters with his secretaries of labor and agriculture, and he found Cabinet meetings to be "a waste of time."

Still, Presidents do continue to call Cabinet meetings, though certainly not nearly as frequently as was once the case. More often than not, those sessions are held to do such things as show the administration's unified support for some particular presidential policy, rather than to thrash out the details of \(\underline{\operatorname{cog}}\)
n. part, element of an organization

\section*{Background}

LABOR RULES FOR TEENS The Department of Labor enforces the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. State laws also apply, so work rules vary from State to State. In general, nonfarm workers age 14 or 15 can work only outside school hours. They can work 3 hours on a school day and no more than 18 hours in a school week. They may work in jobs such as offices, grocery or retail stores, restaurants, amusement parks, and movie theaters. They may not work in jobs such as construction, mining, manufacturing, and warehousing. Young people age 16 to 18 can work any hours and in any jobs not declared hazardous by the Secretary of Labor. Teen work rules are designed to protect young workers from workplace hazards, ensure sufficient time for school, yet still allow them to gain skills and experience. To learn more about how the Department of Labor affects teen employment, have students visit the YouthRules! link on the DOL Web site.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students research the Cabinet members of the current administration and select five individuals on which to do additional research. Students should look into the background of these five department heads and, in a brief paragraph for each, describe the factors that played a role in the President's nomination of each person.

\section*{L2}

ELL Differentiate Have students research one Cabinet member of the current administration. Have them create a poster that includes the name of the department, an image of the department head, hisher title, a list of three agencies that are sub-units of the department, and a brief description of what each agency does.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activities "The Executive Departments" and "The President's Cabinet in the News" (Unit 4 All-in-One, pp. 144, 145).

L4 Differentiate Ask students to choose a department in which they might like to work. Have them do research to identify one job in that department that appeals to them and find out the credentials they would need to qualify. Ask them to use their research to write a brief description of the job, including the job title and department, duties, and requirements. They should conclude by explaining why this job might be a good fit for their skills and interests.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

3 Have each student identify three executive departments and list their primary functions.
L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' work.Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 146)Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 147)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint party, role in presidential campaign, professional qualifications, practical experience, management abilities, geography, gender, race, ethnicity
Caption The Cabinet grew as the number of departments grew. Recent Presidents have included more diversity in appointments.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing the Cabi- \\ net and its function \\
(Questions 1, 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write a one- or two-sentence \\ summary of each red and blue head in "The \\ Cabinet" portion of this section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining how the \\ executive departments \\ were established \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students review this section's Executive \\ Department graphic and lead a discussion \\ on how the issues of the time resulted in the \\ creation of additional Cabinet departments.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Summarizing the ap- \\ pointment trocess of \\ the department heads \\
(Questions 3, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students reread the text on the appoint- \\ ment power in Chapter 14, Section 2.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Comparing the first \\ and current Cabinets \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Create a list on the board of obvious similari- \\ ties and differences between the Cabinets \\ using the photo montage in this section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Caption Cabinet members may be selected for political reasons and be unfamiliar personally, so the President may prefer to rely on the advice of trusted and long-standing friends instead.

President Franklin Roosevelt meets with Raymond Moley, a member of his "Brain Trust." Why might a President rely on the advice of people outside of the Cabinet?
that matter. And Cabinet members still do offer their advice-which need not be taken, of course-to the chief executive. President Abraham Lincoln once laid a proposition he favored before his seven-member Cabinet. Each member opposed it, whereupon Lincoln, who was for it, declared: "Seven nays, one aye: the ayes have it.'

William Howard Taft put the role of the President's Cabinet in its proper light nearly a century ago:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

The Constitution . . . contains no suggestion of a meeting of all the department heads, in consultation over general governmental matters. The Cabinet is a mere creation of the President's will. . . . It exists only by custom. If the President desired to dispense with it, he could do so.
—William Howard Taft, Our Chief Magistrate and His Powers

No President has ever suggested eliminating the Cabinet. However, several Presidents have leaned on other, unofficial advisory groups and sometimes more heavily than on the Cabinet. Andrew Jackson began the practice when he became President in 1829. Several of his close friends often met with him in the kitchen at the White House and, inevitably, came to be known as the Kitchen Cabinet. Franklin Roosevelt's Brain Trust of the 1930s and Harry Truman's Cronies in the late 1940s were in the same mold.

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What is the Cabinet and what does it do?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. How were the executive departments created?
3. (a) How are the executive department secretaries and attorney general selected? (b) What personal and professional factors are considered in the selection process?
4. How have various Presidents differed in their reliance on the Cabinet?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Make Comparisons Compare the Cabinet of today with the first Cabin under President Washington. (a) How are the two alike? (b) How do they differ? (c) Why do you think the size of the Cabinet has grown since Washington's day?
6. Synthesize Information Why do you think it is important that the President select the heads of the executive departments?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Narrow Your Topic The Federal Government's involvement in the subject you selected in this chapter's Quick Writes can vary greatly. Create a concept web to help you narrow your topic to a more manageable focus. Write your subject in the middle circle, then identify subtopics in circles that link to the main subject. Include the details you have found in your research and generate specific ideas until you find topic that narow enough to cova topic that is narrow enough to cover in a research paper.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Cabinet consists of the heads of each executive department in addition to top officials that the President selects. Its function is to advise the President on matters relative to foreign and domestic policy.
2. over time, as needed, by Congress
3. (a) appointed by President with approval of Congress (b) personal: party affiliation, relationship to the presidential campaign, race, gender, ethnicity; professional: practical experience, professional qualifications, management abilities
4. The President's reliance on the Cabinet has changed over time from regular meetings to less frequent ones. Some have felt that each department does not need to supply input on issues unrelated to their department, and, in some cases, the President has relied on a separate inner circle of advisors.
5. (a) alike: made up of the heads of the existing executive departments and act as advisors to the President (b) different: today, 15 department heads instead of 4 and diverse in race, gender, and ethnicity (c) Sample answer:

Departments have been added over time and the President has included other trusted advisors. Also, the President needs access to expertise in more areas than in earlier times. 6. sample answer: to ensure that these key people will support the President's policies and are people whose advice the President values Quick write Students' concept webs should illustrate a clear connection between the subtopics and the main idea that guided them to their research topic.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{Independent Agencies}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What are the roles and structures of the independent agencies? Use a table like the one below to keep track of the distinctions among the three categories of independent agencies.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{4}{|c|}{ Federal Independent Agencies } \\
\hline Executive & Regulatory & Corporation \\
\hline\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\ \(\bullet\) & & \(\bullet\) \\ \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- independent •sp
agency • spoil
- independent - independent executive agency
- civil service
regulatory commission
- patronage corporation

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain why Congress has created the independent agencies.
2. Identify the characteristics of independent executive agencies.
3. Describe the history and formation of NASA, the OPM, and Selective Service.
4. Explain the structure and function of the independent regulatory commissions and government corporations.

Image Above: A U.S. Post Office employee sorts through the day's mail.

Until the 1880s, nearly all that the Federal Government did was done through its Cabinet departments. Since then, however, Congress has created a large number of additional agencies - the independent agencieslocated outside the departments. Today, they number more than 100 . Some of the more important ones are included in the chart on page 447.

Several independent agencies administer programs similar to those of the Cabinet departments. The work of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), for example, is similar to that of a number of agencies in the Department of Defense. NASA's responsibilities are also not very far removed from those of the Department of Transportation.

Neither the size of an independent agency's budget nor the number of its employees provides a good way to distinguish these agencies from the executive departments. Thus the Social Security Administration (SSA) is the largest of the independent agencies today. Only one Cabinet department, Health and Human Services, has a larger budget. The SSA now employs some 65,000 people-more than work for several Cabinet agencies.

\section*{Why Independent Agencies?}

The reasons these agencies exist outside of the Cabinet departments are nearly as many as the agencies themselves. A few major reasons stand out, however. Some have been set up outside the regular departmental structure simply because they do not fit well within any of the departments. The General Services Administration (GSA) is a leading example of the point.

The GSA is the Federal Government's major housekeeping agency. Its main chores include the construction and operation of public buildings, purchase and distribution of supplies and equipment, management of real property, and a host of similar services to most other federal agencies.

Congress has given some agencies, such as the Social Security Administration, the Federal Election Commission, and the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, an independent status to protect them from the influence of both partisan and pressure politics. But, notice, this point can be turned on its head: Congress has located some of these agencies outside any of the Cabinet departments

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What are the roles and structures of the independent agencies?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Federal Independent Agencies} \\
\hline Executive & Regulatory & Corporation \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- most non-Cabinet agencies \\
- organized like Cabinet agencies \\
- executive bodies that administer programs for which they were created, such as NASA (space programs), OPM (civil service), and Selective Service System (conscription)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- not under presidential control \\
- monitor/police aspects of economy \\
- headed by board of 5-7 members appointed by President with Senate consent \\
- terms of board members are long and staggered \\
- have executive, legislative, and judicial powers
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- under presidential control \\
- carry out businesslike activities \\
- structured like a business \\
- run by a board of directors and general manager - produce income that folds back into the business \\
- President selects top officials with Senate approval \\
- financed by public funds
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- understand the need for regulatory agencies by reading an excerpt from The Jungle.
- compare types of independent agencies using a Venn diagram.
- research job opportunities within the civil service using information from the Office of Personnel Management.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

To practice decision making in this section, use the Chapter 15 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 160). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after discussing the Selective Service System. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 161).

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 148) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 149)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 15D, showing an excerpt from Upton Sinclair's The Jungle. Write on the board:
Could these conditions exist in a U.S. meatpacking plant today? Why or why not? Are regulatory commissions still needed? Answer in your notebook.
L2 ELL Differentiate On the board, define difficult words in the excerpt: dung (animal droppings), nuisance (a thing that causes trouble), hopper (a funnel that, in this case, leads into a meat grinder).

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Discuss students' answers to the Bellringer. (Regulatory agencies make such conditions less likely to occur today. Most students will likely think that regulatory commissions still perform needed functions. ) Tell them that although The Jungle was written as a piece of fiction, its graphic details of the conditions within the meatpacking industry in 1906 caused great public and political outrage. In fact, the book is thought to have helped influence the creation of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), which regulates the safety of cosmetics, blood products, and sanitation in addition to regulating food and drugs. The FDA is one of the many independent agencies that exist within the executive branch. Ask: What are independent agencies? (They are government bodies that work outside the realm of the executive departments. They have been set up by Congress because they do not fit within the Cabinet departments and/or to protect them from the influence of partisan politics. There are three types of independent agencies: independent executive agencies, independent regulatory commissions, and government corporations.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint They are not located within any of the 15 Cabinet departments. Only a few are largely free of presidential control.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
Why are some federal agencies considered independent agencies?

\section*{limelight}
n. the focus of attention \(\frac{\text { catchall }}{n \text { all-incl }}\)
n. all-inclusive, covering a wide range of possibilities
because that is exactly where certain special interest groups want them.

Some agencies were born as independents largely by accident. In short, no thought was given to the problems of administrative confusion when they were created. Finally, some agencies are independent because of the peculiar and sensitive nature of their functions. This is especially true of the independent regulatory commissions.

The label independent agency is really a catchall. Most of these agencies are independent only in the sense that they are not located within any of the 15 Cabinet departments. But they are not independent of the President and the executive branch. A handful of them are independent in a much more concrete way, however. For most purposes, they do lie outside the executive branch and are largely free of presidential control.

Perhaps the best way to understand all of these many independent agencies is to divide them into three main groups: (1) the independent executive agencies, (2) the independent regulatory commissions, and (3) the government corporations.

\section*{The Independent Executive Agencies}

The independent executive agencies include most of the non-Cabinet agencies. Some are huge, with thousands of employees, multimillion-dollar or even multibilliondollar budgets, and extremely important public tasks to perform.

The GSA, NASA, and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) are, for example, three of the largest of the independent executive agencies. They are organized much like the Cabinet departments: they are headed by a single administrator with subunits operating on a regional basis, and so on. The most important difference between these independent executive agencies and the 15 executive departments is simply in the fact that they do not have Cabinet status.

Some of these bureaucracies are not administrative or policy giants. But they do important work and they do sometimes attract public notice. The U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, the Peace Corps, the Small Business Administration, and the National Transportation Safety Board fall into that category.

Most independent executive agencies operate far from the limelight. They have few employees, comparatively small budgets, and rarely attract any attention. The American Battle Monuments Commission, the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee, and the National Indian Gaming Commission are typical of the dozens of these seldom seen or heard public bodies.

Neither the scope nor the importance of the many tasks performed by a number of these independent bureaucracies can be overstated. To make the point, take a quick look at three specific examples.

NASA The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) was created by Congress in 1958 to handle this nation's space programs. Today, the scope of those programs is truly astounding. NASA's work ranges from basic scientific research focusing on the origin, evolution, and structure of the universe, to ongoing explorations of outer space.

The military importance of NASA's work can hardly be exaggerated. Still, Congress has directed the space agency to bend its efforts "to peaceful purposes for the benefit of all humankind," as well. Its wideranging research and development efforts have opened new frontiers in a great many areas: in astronomy, physics, and the environmental sciences; in communication, medicine, and weather forecasting; and many more. Many scientific advances, pioneered by NASA, have been put to productive use in the civilian realm.

In the 1980s, NASA developed the space shuttle program wherein ships were reused for regular space flights in an effort to conduct research more efficiently. This and other NASA programs were so successful that its space flight and other extraterrestrial projects became routine and attracted little public notice. However, NASA's space activities were put on hold for several years following the shocking and tragic explosions of the shuttle Challenger in 1986 and then the shuttle Columbia in 2003.

Today, the shuttle delivers personnel and supplies to the international space station.

442 Government at Work: The Bureaucracy

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 15, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 148)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 149)
L3 L2 Core Worksheets (pp. 150, 155)
L3 L2 Skills Worksheets (pp. 160, 161)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 162)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 163)
LL3 Quiz A (p. 164) LL2 Quiz B (p. 165)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 166) L2 Chapter Test B (p. 169)

This permanently occupied station now tops NASA's to-do list. Rotating three-member international crews have lived aboard the outpost since late 2000. By 2020, in addition to the completion of this advanced research laboratory in space, NASA plans to have more robotic missions exploring Mars and other planets in the solar system and eventually return to the moon as well.

The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) The Federal Government is the nation's largest employer. Nearly 2.7 million civilians now work for Uncle Sam (and, recall, another 1.4 million men and women serve in the military today). While many people tend to stereotype all civilian employees as "faceless paper-pushers," they are, in fact, a quite diverse lot. Their ranks include computer programmers, forest rangers, electricians, chemists, physicists, FBI agents, security guards, engineers, librarians, truck drivers, botonists, and men and women in literally hundreds of other occupations.

Most of the civilians who work for the Federal Government are members of the civil service. That is, they are career employees who were hired, and who are paid and promoted, in accord with acts of Congress administered by an independent agency, the Office of Personnel Management.

The History of the Civil Service For most of the first century following the adoption of the Constitution, federal employees were hired according to the patronage system-the practice of dispensing jobs, contracts, and other favors of government to political supporters and friends. That practice is often known, too, as the spoils system. The phrase comes from a comment on the floor of the Senate in 1832. Senator William Learned Marcy of New York, defending President Andrew Jackson's appointment of an \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Who makes up the civil service?
stereotype
\(v\). to regard or classify some persons or thing in an oversimplified in an way

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN To save money, Congress is thinking about discontinuing an independent agency. Divide students into groups, and allow each group to select one agency mentioned in this section. Tell the students that they are the top officials in their agency. Their task is to prepare a presentation to Congress to justify their agency's continued existence. The groups will do research to learn more about the functions of their agency. Each group will prepare an oral presentation, with visuals, to describe to Congress the vital functions the agency performs for American society.

To see this lesson plan, go to Teacher Center
at PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{COMPARE INDEPENDENT AGENCIES}

Explain that although the three types of independent agencies are distinctly different, they do have features in common. To help students compare and contrast the three types, display Transparency 15E, Independent Agencies. Each circle in this Venn diagram is labeled as one type of independent agency: executive, regulatory, government corporation. Read the following characteristics and have students identify where each characteristic belongs on the diagram.
A. most common type (executive)
B. under President's control (executive and government corporation)
C. structured like a business (government corporation)
D. located outside Cabinet departments (all three)
E. exercises executive, legislative, and judicial powers (regulatory)
F. organized like Cabinet departments (executive)
G. produces income that is reinvested in the agency (government corporation)
H. headed by board of directors and general manager (government corporation)
I. monitors parts of the economy (regulatory)

ELL Differentiate Explain that a regulation is a rule. Regulatory agencies make sure businesses follow certain rules. Point out that a corporation is a type of business. A government corporation works like a business.
L3 Differentiate Have students name specific agencies that belong to each category.

\section*{Answers}

Modifying Space Innovations Possible response: Part of NASA's mission is to benefit the public. Also, patents might bring in money and help justify continued funding of the space program.
Checkpoint most civilians who work for the Federal Government

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 15 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 150), which illustrates how the OPM helps prospective employees find work in the civil service. Remind students that nearly all employees of the various independent agencies, as well as the rest of the Federal Government for that matter, are members of the civil service. Most of these civil servants are career employees who found a permanent career within a specific field in the Federal Government. The OPM Web site provides an excellent tool for soon-to-be graduates to find opportunities within all aspects of the bureaucracy. Ask: What do you think of when you think of civil service jobs? (Answers may include park rangers, security guards, IRS agents, or postal clerks.) To give students a sense of the diversity of civil service jobs, refer them to the Careers in the Civil Services in this section. Then ask: Have you ever considered a career in the civil service? Why or why not? Have students follow the instructions on the worksheet and complete the activity and the questions provided.
If students do not have Internet access, provide the handouts included with the Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, pp. 152-154). These handouts describe three jobs related to an interest in writing, each at a different employment level and setting within the government. Have students do additional research in the library to compile a list of government jobs that appeal to their interests.
L2 2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 15 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 155).

L2
ELL Differentiate Help students come up with key-word search terms by asking questions that help them determine their interests. These questions may include: Do you like to work with wildlife? Are you interested in office or field work? Would you like to work in a foreign country? Are you interested in space travel?

Careers in the Civil Service
Contrary to what many think, the civil service has a great variety of career opportunities in a wide range of fields. With such variety in its workforce, why is working for the civil service often negatively stereotyped as paper-pushing?

The National Zoo's chief veterinarian treats a baby panda.

Checkpoint
Why was there a push to reform the civil service in the 1800s?
ambassador, declared: "To the victor belongs the spoils of the enemy."

Every change of administration brought a new round of patronage-based rewards and punishments. Inefficiency, even corruption, became the order of the day. Huge profits were made on public contracts, at the people's expense. Political power became centered in officeholders and others who owed their livelihoods to the party in power. Able people, in and out of government, pressed for reform, but little came of their efforts.

Unfortunately, it was a tragedy that at last brought about fundamental changes in the hiring and other staffing practices of the Federal Government. In 1881, President James Garfield was fatally shot by a disappointed office-seeker, Charles J. Guiteau. Garfield had rejected the mentally unstable Guiteau's request that he be appointed to a high diplomatic post. The nation was horrified and outraged. Congress, pushed hard by Garfield's successor, Chester Arthur, passed the Pendleton Act-the Civil Service Act of 1883.

The Pendleton Act laid the foundation for the present federal civil service system. Its main purpose was to make merit-the quality of one's work-the basis for hiring, promotion, and other personnel actions in the federal workforce.

The law set up two categories of employment in the executive branch: the classified and the unclassified services. All hiring for positions in the classified service was to be based on merit. That quality was to be measured by "practical" examinations given by an independent agency, the Civil Service Commission (since 1978, the OPM).

The Pendleton Act placed only about 10 percent of the Federal Government's then 130,000 employees in the classified service; it did give the President the power to extend that coverage, however. Theodore Roosevelt championed the merit system, and by the end of his term in 1909 the classified umbrella covered two thirds of the federal workforce. Today, nearly 90 percent of all of the men and women who work for executive branch agencies are covered by the merit system. \({ }^{7}\)

The Civil Service Today The first goal of civil service reform-the elimination of the spoils system-was largely achieved in the early years of the last century. Gradually, a new purpose emerged: recruiting and keeping the

\footnotetext{
7 This number does not take into account employees of the United States Postal Service and a few other federal agencies. The Postal Service is the largest agency not covered by the civil service system. It is the only federal agency in which employment policies are set by collective bargaining and labor union contracts.
}

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible answer: Many Americans do not know about the variety of job opportunities in the civil service and assume that most government employees are paper-pushing bureaucrats.
Checkpoint Patronage spawned inefficiency and corruption. When a disappointed office-seeker assassinated President Garfield, the nation was outraged, and Congress pushed for reform.

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 15F, Government Job, to help explain why the civil service system is an improvement over the patronage system. This cartoon pokes fun at political appointees. Ask: How did the speaker get his government job? (by appointment) What is the cartoonist saying about political appointees? (They don't have to work hard. ) If the man had to get his job through the civil service system, how might his attitude toward the job change? Why? (Civil service jobs are based on merit. He would realize that he has to perform well, or he would be fired.)
best available people in the federal workforce. On the whole, efforts to reach that newer goal have succeeded. Today, most federal employees are hired through a competitive process. They are paid and promoted on the basis of written evaluations by their superiors. They are generally protected from disciplinary actions or dismissal for partisan reasons.

Still, the federal civil service is not perfect. Critics often claim that not enough attention is paid to merit in the merit system. Another independent agency, the Merit Systems Protection Board, actually enforces the merit principle in the federal bureaucracy. The Board is bipartisan-that is, its five members, appointed by the President and Senate, must include members of both major political parties. It hears appeals from those federal workers who have complaints about personnel actions-for example, denials of pay increases, demotions, or firings.

The Selective Service System Through most of our history, the nation's armed forces have depended on voluntary enlistments to fill their ranks. From 1940 to 1973, however, the draft-also called conscription, or compulsory military service-was a major source of military manpower.

Conscription has a long history in this country. Several colonies and later nine States required all able-bodied males to serve in their militia. However, in the 1790 s, Congress rejected proposals for national compulsory military service.

Both the North and the South did use limited conscription programs during the Civil War. It was not until 1917, however, that a national draft was first used in this country, even in wartime. More than 2.8 million of the 4.7 million men who served in World War I were drafted under the terms of the Selective Service Act of 1917.

The nation's first peacetime draft came with the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as World War II raged in Europe but before the United States entered the war. Eventually, more than 10 million of the 16.3 million Americans in uniform during World War II entered the service under that law.

The World War II draft ended in 1947. The crises of the postwar period, however, quickly moved Congress to revive the draft, which was reestablished by the Selective Service Act of 1948. From 1948 through 1973, nearly 5 million young men were drafted.

Mounting criticisms of compulsory military service, fed by opposition to our Vietnam policy, led many Americans to call for an end to the draft in the late 1960s. By 1972, fewer than 30,000 men were being drafted per year, and selective service was suspended in 1973. Nevertheless, the draft law is still on the books, and is administered by an independent agency, the Selective Service System.

The draft law places a military obligation on all males in the United States between the ages of 18 and 26 . During the years in which the draft operated, it was largely conducted through hundreds of local selective service boards. All young men had to register for service at age 18 . The local boards then selected those who were to enter the armed forces.

In 1980, President Jimmy Carter reactivated the registration requirement, and his executive order is still in force. All young males are required to sign up soon after they reach their 18th birthday. However, the President's power to order the actual induction of men into the armed forces expired on June 30, 1973. If the draft is ever to be reactivated, Congress must first renew that presidential authority. \({ }^{8}\)

\section*{Independent Regulatory Commissions}

The independent regulatory commissions stand out among the independent agencies because they are largely beyond the reach of presidential direction and control. There are eleven of these agencies today, each created to regulate-monitor, police-important aspects of the nation's economy. Their vital statistics appear in the table on page 447.

Structured for Independence The independent regulatory commissions' large measure of independence from the White House comes mainly from the way in which Congress has structured them. Each is headed by a board

8 The Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the dratt in the Selective Draft Law Cases in 1918 . The Court also found its all-male features constitutional in Rostkerv. Goldberg in 1981.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What agency manages the draft?

\section*{induction} \(n\). the process of installing somebody into military service

\section*{Debate}
"And so, my fellow Americans: ask not what your country can do for you-ask what you can do for your country." Soon after John F. Kennedy issued this challenge in 1961, he created the Peace Corps. Since then, thousands of Americans have served worldwide. Initially part of the State Department, the Peace Corps was made an independent agency in 1981. In 1964, Lyndon Johnson created Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA). Now AmeriC orps, it is part of the Corporation for National & Community Service, a government corporation. The idea of community service for all young Americans was a campaign issue in 2008. Some candidates favored community service as a requirement for high school graduation, while others proposed incentives, such as money for college, in exchange for either volunteer or military service.
Ask: Should some form of national service be mandatory?

4 Differentiate Have students focus on the duties and qualifications of each position. Then have them determine what they would need to do after high school in order to become a valid candidate for the position available.

\section*{REVIEW THE ACTIVITY}

Create a list on the board of the various types of careers and employment opportunities that students found of interest in their research. Ask the following questions:
1. Were you surprised by the number and variety of jobs available in the civil service?
2. Were there any types of jobs that you discovered that you didn't expect to find in the Federal Government?
3. What, if any, key-word searches did not result in a listing?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Selective Service System

\section*{DISCUSS}

Remind students that the Federal Government is the largest employer in the country. As they have found, the types of jobs available can run from postal clerks to park rangers and doctors to mathematicians to foreign language teachers. The variety of jobs available is immense. Have students reflect on the diversity of jobs they discovered. Then ask: Would you consider pursuing a career in the civil service? Ask students to explain why their research did or did not change their minds about working for the government. on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Checkpoint What makes the regulatory commissions different from other independent agencies?
stagger
v. to arrange something so that it does not or commission made up of five to seven members appointed by the President with Senate consent; and those officials have terms of such length that it is unlikely a President will gain control over any of these agencies through the appointment process, at least not in a single presidential term.

Several other features of these boards and commissions put them beyond the reach of presidential control. No more than a bare majority of the members of each board or commission may belong to the same political party. Thus, several of those officers must belong to the party out of power.

Moreover, the appointed terms of the members are staggered so that the term of only one member on each board or commission expires in any one year. In addition, the officers of five of these agencies can be removed by the President only for those causes Congress has specified. \({ }^{9}\)

As with the other independent agencies, the regulatory commissions are executive bodies. That is, Congress has given them the power to administer the programs for which they were created. However, unlike other independent agencies, the regulatory commissions are also quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial bodies. \({ }^{10}\) That is, Congress has also given these agencies certain legislativelike and judicial-like powers.

These agencies exercise their quasilegislative powers when they make rules and regulations. Those rules and regulations have the force of law. They implement and spell out the details of the laws that Congress has directed these regulatory bodies to enforce.

To illustrate the point: Congress has said that those who want to borrow money by issuing stocks, bonds, or other securities must provide a "full and fair disclosure" of all pertinent information to prospective investors. The Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) makes that requirement effective and indicates how those who offer securities are to meet it by issuing rules and regulations.

9 Recall the Supreme Court's holding in Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 1935. Congress has provided that the members of six of these bodies (the SEC, FCC, EEOC, CPSC, NRC, and CFTC) can be removed at the President's discretion.
10 The prefix quasi- is from the Latin, meaning "in a certain sense, resembling, seemingly."

The regulatory commissions exercise their quasi-judicial powers when they decide disputes in those fields in which Congress has given them policing authority. For example, if an investor in Iowa thinks a local stockbroker has cheated him, he may file a complaint with the SEC's regional office in Chicago. SEC agents will investigate and report their findings, and the agency will judge the merits of the complaint much as a court would do. Decisions made by the SEC, and by the other independent regulatory bodies, can be appealed to the United States courts of appeals.

In a sense, Congress has created these agencies to act in its place. Congress could hold hearings and set interest rates, license radio and TV stations and nuclear reactors, check on business practices, and do the many other things it has directed the regulatory commissions to do. These activities are complex and time-consuming, however, and they demand constant and expert attention. If Congress were to do all of this work, it would have no time for its other and important legislative work

Note that these regulatory bodies possess all three of the basic governmental powers: executive, legislative, and judicial. They are, then, exceptions to the principle of separation of powers. Technically, they should not be grouped with the other independent agencies. Instead, they should, somehow, be located somewhere between the executive and legislative branches, and between the executive and judicial branches, as well.

Rethinking Regulation Several authorities, and most recent Presidents, have urged that at least some of the administrative functions of the independent regulatory bodies be given to executive department agencies. Critics have raised other serious questions about these regulatory commissions and many think that they should be either abolished or, at the least, redesigned.

The most troubling questions are these: Have some of the regulatory commissions been unduly influenced by the special interests they are expected to regulate? Are all of the many and detailed rules created by these agencies really needed? Do some of those regulations have the effect of stifling

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint They are largely beyond the reach of presidential control. Also, they have executive, legislative, and judicial powers.

\section*{Background}

OVERSIGHT OR OVERLOOK? To do their job properly, government regulators need to understand the industry they monitor. As a result, regulatory agencies often hire executives from companies they regulate, and vice versa. For example, an executive at an airline might become a top official of the Federal Aviation Administration, or an FAA official might one day be CEO of an airline or a lobbyist for the airline industry. Critics point out that this relationship can turn regulators into industry advocates rather than watchdogs. This relationship came under renewed scrutiny in 2008 when two federal inspectors accused top officials at the FAA of ignoring safety violations at Southwest Airlines. "We need an FAA that actually fixes problems as they are found, rather than one that rushes into a public relations campaign to assure everyone that there isn't a problem," said Senator Patty Murray (D., Wash.).

\section*{Regulatory Commissions} commissions a
PearsonSuccessNet.com
The focus of the independent regulatory commissions is to ensure the stability of the nation's economy. Eleven federal agencies have been established to set and enforce standards on financial markets, employment, business practices, and public safety. Should the government regulate these industries?

Chapter 15 • Section 4447

Tell students to go to the Online Update for more information on the regulatory commissions.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

4 4 ㄴDifferentiate NASA is an independent executive agency that encompasses a variety of civil service careers. The research and development group has come up with a number of innovations for NASA that have transferred to the public's use. Have students use the Internet, library, or news magazines to find images that reflect how innovations developed by NASA have affected our everyday lives. Then, have students create a collage of these products and post them around the room.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "Getting Information from Independent Agencies" (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 163).
L3 L4 Differentiate The Selective Service System is an independent executive agency that administers military manpower and coordinates the draft. Give students the Extend Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 162), which provides a list of questions about Selective Service to which they need to find the answers. Tell students to visit their local post office or library, or access the Selective Service System Web site (www.sss.gov/) to obtain the information they need to complete their worksheet.
L4 Differentiate To ensure the safety of consumers, some independent agencies establish standards and regulations that need to be met by businesses and industries. Display Transparency 15G, U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. Ask: How can you learn of recalled products if you do not have access to the Internet? (radio, television, newspaper) Have students conduct research on a recent product that has been recalled due to health and/or safety hazards to consumers. Students should write a newspaper article detailing what the issues surrounding the product are, when the public was alerted, which federal agency is involved, who the manufacturer is, and how it and the government responded.

\section*{Debate}

Ben Stein, economist and columnist for The Wall Street Journal, blames deregulation for financial crises past and present. Use this quote to start a debate in your class:
"Deregulation has made Wall Street into a casino."
-Ben Stein
Ask students to explain the meaning of Stein's words. (He means that with reduced regulatory protection, investing in the stock market has become a risky gamble. ) Have students take a position on this statement: Regulation is good for the economy. Have them do research on the positive and negative aspects of regulation to prepare for the debate.

\section*{Answers}

Regulatory Commissions Possible response: Citizens and the economy need protection from dishonest, unsafe, or anticompetitive practices.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\(L 3\)Have students identify the three types of independent agencies, summarize the basic function of each, and include one example of each type.
43 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' work.

Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
\(L 3\) Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 164)Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 165)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

* Analyzing Political Cartoons Red tape is a term often used to describe a perceived excess of bureaucratic rules, complicated procedures, and unnecessary paperwork. How does the use of this term convey the cartoonist's attitude toward government regulations?

Checkpoint
Who is ultimately responsible for regulatory agency reform?
legitimate competition in the free enterprise system? Do some of them add unreasonably to the costs of doing business and therefore to the prices that consumers must pay?

Congress sets the basic policies of the regulatory agencies, and so it has a major responsibility to answer these questions. It has responded to some questions in recent years, particularly by deregulating much of the nation's transportation industry. Airlines, bus companies, truckers, and railroads have greater freedom to operate today than they did only a few years ago. The same trend can be seen in the field of communications, notably with regard to cable television.

Two major regulatory bodies have actually disappeared in recent years. The Civil Aeronautics Board was created in 1938 to oversee commercial air traffic in the United States. For decades it assigned the routes to be flown and the rates charged by airlines and other commercial air carriers, until it was abolished by Congress in 1985.

The Interstate Commerce Commission was the very first of the regulatory commissions to be established by Congress, in 1887. For a century it issued licenses and regulated the rates and routes and most other aspects of commercial transportation by rail, highway, and water. It, too, was abolished by Congress, in 1996.

\section*{Government Corporations}

A number of independent agencies are government corporations. They, too, are located within the vast executive branch and are subject to the presidential direction and control. Unlike the other independent agencies, however, they were set up by Congress to carry out certain businesslike activities.

Congress established the first government corporation when it chartered the Bank of the United States in 1791. However, government corporations were little used until World War I and then the Great Depression. In both periods Congress set up dozens of corporations to carry out emergency programs. Several still exist-among them, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), which insures bank deposits, and the Export-Import Bank of the United States (Eximbank), which makes loans to help the export and sale of American goods abroad.

There are now more than 50 of these corporations. They do such things as deliver the mail (the U.S. Postal Service); provide intercity rail passenger service (the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, Amtrak); protect pension benefits (the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation); and generate, sell, and distribute electric power (the Tennessee Valley Authority). \({ }^{11}\)

Government v. PrivateCorporations The typical government corporation is set up much like a corporation in the private sector. It is run by a board of directors, with a general manager who directs the corporation's operations according to the policies laid 11 State and local governments maintain their own government corporations, most often called authorities, to operate airports, turnpikes, seaports, power plants, liquor stores, and housing developments, and to conduct many other corporate activities. The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey is one of the best known.

\section*{Background}
federal deposit insurance corporation The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) is a government corporation managed by a five-person board of directors, all appointed by the President with Senate approval. No more than three directors can be from one political party. The FDIC was created in 1933 during the Great Depression, when thousands of bank failures threatened the U.S. financial system. The FDIC insures bank deposits up to at least \($ 100,000\) and monitors risks in the industry. The FDIC receives no public funds. Banks pay for this insurance out of their earnings. When a bank fails, the FDIC sells the bank's loans and deposits to another bank. The failed bank's customers automatically become customers of the heal thy bank. The FDIC's activities limit the effects on the economy of bank failures, thus promoting confidence in, and the stability of, the banking system.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons Using a pun on books on tape, the cartoonist is able to humorously express discontent with regulations.

\section*{Checkpoint Congress} down by the board. Most government corporations produce income that is plowed back into the business.

There are several differences between government and private corporations, however. Congress decides the purpose for which the public agencies exist and the functions they perform. Their officers are public officers; in fact, all who work for these corporations are public employees. The President selects most of the top officers of government corporations with Senate approval.

In addition, these public agencies are financed by public funds appropriated by Congress, not by private investors. The Federal Government, representing the American people, owns the stock.

The advantage most often claimed for these agencies is their flexibility. It is said that the government corporation, freed from the controls of regular departmental organization, can carry on its activities with the incentive, efficiency, and ability to experiment that make many private concerns successful. Whether that claim is valid or not is open to question. At the very least, it raises this complex issue: Is a public corporation's need for flexibility compatible with the basic democratic requirement that all public agencies be held responsible and accountable to the people?

Degrees of Independence The degree of independence and flexibility government corporations have varies considerably. In fact, some corporations are not independent at all. They are attached to an executive department.

The Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC), for example, is the government's major crop-loan and farm-subsidy agency. It is located within the Department of Agriculture, and the secretary of agriculture chairs its seven-member board. The CCC carries out most of its functions through a line agency in the Department of Agriculture-the Farm Service Agency-which is also subject to the direct control of the secretary.

Some corporations do have considerable independence, however. The Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA) is a case in point. It operates under a statute that gives it considerable discretion over its own programs. Although its budget is subject to review by the OMB, the President, and Congress, the TVA has a large say in the uses of the income its several operations produce. \({ }^{12}\)
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How do government and private corporations

12 Congress established the TVA in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933. Its operations include electric power, flood control, reforestation, soil conservation, agricultural research The TVA's power program is self-supporting Much of its oth The TVA's power program is self-supprting. Much of its othe activities are supported by Congress.

\section*{SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\) Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer this question: What are the roles and structures of the independent agencies?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Why has Congress created independent agencies?
3. What was the spoils system and what replaced it?
4. How do independent regulatory commissions differ from the many other independent agencies?
5. (a) How are government corporations similar to private corporations? (b) How are they different?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Identify Central Issues Why do you think Congress purposefully structured a few independent agencies so that they are largely beyond the control of the President?
7. Draw Conclusions Why do you think special interest groups become involved in the structure and function of independent agencies?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Writing: Develop a Thesis A thesis statement summaa Thesis A thesis statement summarizes the main idea of your research paper. Use the research you gathered and the activities you have completed for this chapter's Quick Writes and look for an idea that can be supported by the information you found. Determine how the details are related and decide on the idea that best summarizes your research. Then, write a manizes that sums up the main idea on which you will focus your paper.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying the roles \\ and structures of the \\ independent agencies \\
(Questions 1, 2, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an outline of the \\ section using the red and blue heads as the \\ main structure.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Describing the spoils \\ system (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a political cartoon \\ illustrating the spoils system.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining how regu- \\ latory commissions \\ differ from other \\ agencies (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Recreate or review the Venn diagram illus- \\ trated earlier in this section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Comparing govern- \\ ment and private \\ corporations \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review the Government v. Private Corporation \\ portion in this section and help students find \\ the terms sor phrases that indicate comparison \\ in the text.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining why \\ interest groups \\ are involved with \\ independent agencies \\
(Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Brainstorm a list of reasons why students \\ think interest groups would benefit from \\ being involved in the work of independent \\ agencies.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Congress decides the purpose of government corporations and their functions. All employees are public. The President selects most top officials, with Senate approval. Government corporations are financed by public funds.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Executive agencies administer specific programs and are structured like Cabinet departments. Regulatory commissions are structured to remove them from partisan influence, and use executive, legislative, and judicial powers to monitor and police aspects of the economy. Government corporations have business-like functions and are structured with a board of directors and general manager. They produce income that is folded back into the business. They are financed by public funds, not private investors.
2. main reasons: some agencies do not fit in the department structure; to protect agencies from partisan and political influence; and some agencies have sensitive responsibilities
3. The spoils system was the practice of giving jobs, contracts, and other government favors to friends and political supporters. It was replaced by the civil service, based on the merit system.
4. Regulatory commissions have quasi-legislative powers to make the rules and regulations that they enforce, and quasi-judicial powers to decide disputes in their fields of authority.
5. (a) Similarities: board of directors, general manager, income is folded back into the business
(b) Differences: Government corporations consist of public officials, are publicly funded, and have purposes set by Congress.
6. to ensure that their actions are not influenced by partisan policy or political pressures
7. Special interest groups have expertise and economic interest in the functions of the agency.
QUICK WRITE Thesis statements should articulate the main ideas of the research papers.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will examine the debate on the size of government using the question of the extent of the government's involvement in education.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{TAKE A POLL}

Ask: What level of government should be responsible for the quality of your education? (a) federal (b) State (c) local (d) none of these

\section*{SUMMARIZE THE ISSUE}

Have students read the feature and summarize the issue and the views expressed in the quotes.
L2 ELL Differentiate Write these terms and definitions on the board: curricula (courses taught in school), meddle (interfere), illiteracy (cannot read or write), abysmal (very bad), sanction (penalize).

\section*{DISCUSS}

Since the enactment of No Child Left Behind in 2002, there has been continuing debate on the program's value. Display Transparency 15H, No Child Left Behind. Supporters claim that it makes schools accountable for the quality of their education, while critics state that it promotes lower achievement goals. The program has also revived the debate on whether the Federal Government is interfering in a realm that should be a State and local responsibility.
Ask: Should the Federal Government control the quality of our education system? (yes: because education affects the nation's competitive edge; no: because federal funding to states should not be tied to students' test results) Does this program overstep the scope of National Government? (Answers will vary.) Then take another poll using the question at the beginning of the lesson. If students have changed their stance, ask why.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students select one of the quotes and write a paragraph opposing the speaker's opinion

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) none (b) low expectations, illiteracy, selfdoubt
2. (a) Federal Government has no constitutional authority to meddle in education, which is the responsibility of parents, teachers, and school boards. (b) He believed the current quality of schools was unacceptable. (c) Answers will vary.

\section*{The Size of Government}

Track the Issue
The Constitution makes no provisions for federal involvement in education, but in the last few decades, the Federal Government has taken an increasingly larger role in funding and supervising local schools.

Thomas Jefferson argues that a democratic state must educate its citizens in order to survive.

Congress establishes the Freedmen's Bureau that builds over 1,000 schools for newly freed black Americans.

In response to the Soviet Union's successful launch of the Sputnik satellite, the National Defense Education Act funds math and science education in local public schools.

Congress creates the Department of Education to oversee federal funding of educational programs.

The No Child Left Behind Act gives the Federal Government unprecedented influence over local schools.

President George W. Bush promotes his

\section*{Perspectives}

The issue of federal involvement in schools is closely related to the larger question of the size and purpose of the Federal Government. People who favor a government with a more limited scope often point to agencies like the Department of Education as an example of unnecessary "big government" policies. However, others believe that the Federal Government has an important role to play in education.
"Our goal is nothing less than a renaissance in American education, begun by returning its control to parents, teachers, [and] local school boards. . . . The federal government has no constitutional authority to be involved in school curricula. . . . That is why we will abolish the Department of Education [and] end federal meddling in our schools. . . We further urge that federal attempts to impose outcome- or performance-based education on local schools be ended."
-1996 Republican Party platform
"The quality of our public schools directly affects us all. . . Yet too many children in America are segregated by low expectations, illiteracy, and self-doubt ... The federal government is partly at fault for tolerating these abysmal results. The federal government currently does not do enough to reward success and sanction failure in our educational system. [These reforms] address a general vision for . linking federal dollars to specific performance goals to ensure improved results."
- President George W. Bush on the

No Child Left Behind Act 2002

\section*{Connect to Your World}
1. Understand (a) What role did the Republican Party suggest the Federal Government should play in education? (b) What issues did President Bush think governmental involvement could solve?
2. Compare and Contrast (a) Why did the 1996 Republican Party platform seek to limit federal involvement? (b) Why did President Bush suggest that it get more involved? (c) With which position do you agree? Why?

GOVERNMENT ONLINE
In the News
For updates about education and the Federal Government visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Background}

GOVERNMENT ROLE IN EDUCATION In the United States, education remains mostly a State and local responsibility. Local school boards oversee community schoolsapprove budgets, hire the superintendent, approve curricula, and establish policies for the district. In the 2007-2008 school year, over 91 percent of funds for elementary and secondary schools came from non-federal sources, especially State taxes and local property taxes. Local funding gives communities a greater say in the operation of their schools. However, it also leads to inequalities. In communities with high real estate values, more property tax money will be available for schools than in communities with low real estate values. State spending for education varies from State to State as well. The U.S. Department of Education tries to fill gaps in State and local support for education by targeting areas where the funds can do the most good.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
bureaucracy p. 426 bureaucrat \(p .426\) administration p. 428 staff agency \(p .430\) line agency \(p .430\) Executive Office of the President \(p .431\) federal budget \(p .433\) fiscal year \(p .433\) domestic affairs p. 434 executive departments p. 435 civilian p. 435 secretary \(p .435\) attorney general p. 435 independent agency \(\rho .441\) independent executive agency \(p .442\) civil service p. 443 patronage \(p\). 443 spoils system \(p .443\) draft \(p .445\) independent regulatory commission p. 445 government corporation p. 448

\section*{Executive Branch}

Executive Office of the President
White House Office comprises the President's key personal and political staff.

National Security Council advises on matters relating to national security.

OMB prepares federal budget and assists in executive branch management.

Other units provide advice on issues ranging from the economy to domestic affairs.
Executive Departments Traditional units of the federal administration
Built around broad fields of authority Headed by a department secretary, serving as link between presidential policy and department Structured geographically, with much work done through regional offices
work done through regional offices

Chapter 15 Assessment 451

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the federal bureaucracy, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Buckwalter, Stephanie. Independent Government Agencies: Working for America. Enslow Publishers, Incorporated, 2008.

L2
Damp, Dennis V. The Book of U.S. Government Jobs: Where They Are, What's Available & How to Get One (9th Edition). Bookhaven Press, 2008.
L3 Sollenberger, Mitchel A. The President Shall Nominate: How Congress Trumps Executive Power. University Press of Kansas, 2008.
L4 Lewis, David E. The Politics of Presidential Appointments: Political Control and Bureaucratic Performance. Princeton University Press, 2008.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Listening in Class Be sure students understand the difference between hearing and listening. Listening requires effort and concentration. To enhance their listening skills, have students practice the following steps. Before they even arrive at class, students should make sure they have reviewed their notes from the previous class, finished assignments, and kept up with the reading. As they listen, students should watch for main ideas and notice how the details fit into them. To stay focused, suggest that students maintain eye contact with the speaker and try to ignore their physical surroundings. It will also help students stay focused if they are active listeners, which means taking notes, marking content about which they have a question, and asking questions when appropriate. To avoid daydreaming, students can try to anticipate what the speaker will say next as well as mentally evaluating and summarizing what they hear.

\section*{assessment at A glance}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 445, 447
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. possible response: more effective, because the hierarchical structure reduces conflicts, job specialization develops specific expertise, and standard work rules enable work to continue as personnel changes; OR: less effective, because the sheer size requires navigation through a maze of bureaucrats before anything gets done
2. (a) Possible response: It implies that bureaucracy complicates matters that may be quite simple. (b) Answers will vary, but should show an understanding of advantages and disadvantages of a bureaucracy.

\section*{SECTION 2}
3. (a) The Executive Office is the branch of the government that most directly executes the President's wishes. (b) Answers will vary, but should reflect an understanding of the different activities undertaken by the Executive Office.
4. (a) The Office of Management and Budget
(b) The OMB monitors the spending of the funds Congress appropriates.
5. (a) The National Security Council advises the President on all domestic, foreign, and military matters related to national security. (b) Because the other branches often do not know about the NSC's secret work, the system of checks and balances sometimes cannot operate, which may lead to situations like the Iran-Contra scandal.

\section*{SECTION 3}
6. (a) 15 Cabinet-level departments built around some broad field of activity
(b) appointed by President with approval of Congress (c) Possible responses: Yes, because they would be more familiar with the work and processes of the department and have extensive experience in the organization. No, because the President needs advisors whom he or she trusts.
7. (a) The executive department heads make up the Cabinet. (b) Possible responses: Yes, because they likely hold the same views as the President, who needs to hear opposing views to consider all sides of an issue. No, because the people elected the President for his or her policy views, and the Cabinet of close advisors helps the President implement these policies.

16 Chapter Assessment

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. Do you think the bureaucratic organization of the Federal Government makes it more effective or less effective?
2. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) What does this cartoon imply about bureaucracy? (b) Do you think it is an accurate portrayal? Why or why not?

\section*{Section 2}
3. (a) Why is the Executive Office sometimes called the President's "right arm"? (b) Which activity of the Executive Office do you think has the most impact on the lives of the American people?
4. (a) Which unit of the EOP is responsible for preparing the federal budget? (b) What responsibility does that agency have once Congress has appropriated funds to the executive branch?
5. (a) What is the major responsibility of the National Security Council? (b) How does the constitutional system of checks and balances apply to the NSC?

\section*{Section 3}
6. (a) What are the executive departments? (b) What is the process for selecting their high-ranking officers? (c) Do you think the department heads should be career bureaucrats? Why or why not?
7. (a) How are executive departments connected to the Cabinet? (b) Considering its relationship with the President, do you think the Cabinet can exercise too much influence on public policy?
Section 4
8. (a) What are the three types of independent agencies? (b) What is the basic role of each type? (c) Which type do you think affects your life the most?
9. (a) What is the purpose of the civil service? (b) How has the service changed since the enactment of the Pendleton Act in 1883?
10. (a) What is the function of the regulatory commissions? (b) Do you think laws regulating specific industries affect our personal and economic freedom? Why or why not?

\section*{Writing About Government}
11. Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write a research paper on how the government is involved in the administration of the topic you selected. Make sure your thesis statement is clear and supported with wellresearched details, and that your conclusion reviews the key points of your thesis. See pp. S6-S7 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity Look through the government pages of a local telephone book or online to locate the federal agencies in your area. Select one that interests you and conduct an interview of a civil that interests you and conduct an interview servant who works for that agency. Ask: (a) What department is responsible for the work of your agency? In which Cabinet department is your agency located? Is it one of the larger agencies of that department?
(b) What are your agency's key responsibilities? (c) How and by whom are the agency's decisions made?
(d) Do you think the organizational structure of your agency is efficient? Could it be improved? If so, how?
13. Essential Question Assessment Based on your interview and this chapter's content, make a graphic organizer that illustrates the hierarchy of the agency you selected. Then, write a short essay on how this chart helps answer the Essential Question: Is the bureaucracy essential to good government?

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ & \text { Question, go to your Essential }\end{aligned}\) Journal Question, go to your

452 Chapter 15 Assessment

\section*{SECTION 4}
8. (a) independent executive agencies, independent regulatory commissions, government corporations (b) executive: perform tasks related to a specific area of authority, such as the space program or the budget; regulatory: monitor aspects of the economy; government corporations: carry out business-like activities (c) Answers will vary, but should be supported.
9. (a) to recruit and keep the best available people in the federal work force (b) The Pendleton Act set up hiring and promotion practices for classified employees based on merit. The Act placed about 10 percent of federal employees in the classified designation. Since then, coverage has been extended. Today, merit rules apply to nearly 90 percent of executive branch employees.
10. (a) to ensure the stability of the nation's economy (b) Possible responses: Regulations interfere with the freedom of business owners to choose how they want to run their businesses. Free market forces will prevent most abuses. OR: While regulations do interfere with freedom in some ways, they are necessary to protect

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Protecting the Environment}

Environmental protection is a major focus of the world today. However, the issue did not come to the forefront until the 1960s. Since then, as these documents show, the public and several independent agencies have become actively involved in protecting the nation's environment.

\section*{Document 1}

Since 2001, our nation has funded nearly \($ 10\) billion in developing energy sources that are cleaner, cheaper and more reliable. [The] EPA has played a substantial role in this effort. . . . But we're not doing it alone.
Today, instead of having only 17-thousand EPA employees working to protect the environment, we now have over 300 million Americans as environmental partners. Americans from all sectors of society-communities, businesses and individuals-have begun to embrace the fact that environmental responsibility is everyone's responsibility.
-Stephen Johnson, EPA Administrator, 2007
Document 2

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. B
2. Document 1 illustrates the growing emphasis on environmental concern by the shear amount of funds allocated to the effort as well as stating how citizens, in addition to the government, are making an effort to protect the environment. Document 2 shows that recycling has been increasing since 1960.
3. Possible responses: Yes, because environmental problems extend beyond State boundaries, affecting all of us, so we need policies applied uniformly across the nation. No, because environmental regulations increase business costs, making American businesses less competitive in world markets.
Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.
consumers and the economy from unscrupulous or unsafe business practices.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Students' papers should discuss agency involvement in their chosen topic. Students should focus on the thesis statement and draw a conclusion supported by details from their research.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Student interviews should include comprehensive answers to the questions provided in the text and document the information gathered.
13. Graphic organizers should illustrate an understanding of the organization of the agency the student selected. Student essays should be well thought out and their answers well-reasoned, showing an understanding of the federal bureaucracy.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 4}

What makes a good President?

\section*{CHAPTER 16}

How should the federal budget reflect Americans' priorities?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: What is the main source of funds for the Federal Government? (taxes) Each year the Federal Government creates a plan for how it will spend its revenue in the coming year. What is this plan called? (the federal budget) In this chapter, students will learn how government acquires revenue and creates a plan for spending it. Then tell students to begin to further explore the financing of the Federal Government by completing the Chapter 16 Essential Question Warmup Activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{beFore reading}
\(\square\) ELL Differentiate Chapter 16 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 181)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION
The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE GRAPHIC DATA}

You may wish to teach analyzing graphic data as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 16 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-inOne, p. 200) to help students learn how to analyze graphic data. The worksheet asks students to interpret a graph about U.S. federal budget surpluses and deficits and then draw conclusions. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 201).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online The chapter WebQuest challenges} students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the federal budget.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLock 1: Teach the Section 1 and Section 2 lessons, omitting the political cartoon mini-lessons, extend activities and the Section 1 debate.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 and 4 lessons, omitting both sections' extend activities.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Discuss how the Federal Government acquires revenue. Then have students brainstorm the types of programs and government activities this revenue funds and list them on the board. Help students understand controllable and uncontrollable spending by categorizing each item on the board as one or the other. Review the government's budget-creation process. Then conduct the Section 3 Core Worksheet activity.
follow UP Have students write a summary of the process by which their group resolved the steps in each task in the activity. Students should keep in mind the chapter's Essential Question: How should the federal budget reflect Americans' priorities?, and should include in their summary how their group's choices were informed by the priorities of their constituents.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- examine how taxes affect wages by calculating withholding and net pay using a sample paycheck.
- discuss how and why government raises money.
- examine sources of government funding using scenarios about the types of federal taxes.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- analyze the annual deficits and surpluses and the public debt by interpreting graphs.
- describe the federal borrowing process.
- analyze key events in the history of the public debt by examining a timeline.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- distinguish between controllable and uncontrollable spending categories on a federal budget circle graph.
- understand the difficulty of setting budget priorities by completing a ranking activity.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will . .
- discuss the nation's current economic situation and the tools available to the government to address it.
- analyze monetary and fiscal policy tools, using a transparency.
- analyze graphs of economic performance on the government's main economic goals and suggest policy actions.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1
Special Needs
L2
Basic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How is the Federal Government financed?

Financing Government
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Financing Government} \\
\hline & & \\
\hline Constitution & Tax Revenue & Non-tax Revenue \\
\hline & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
grants Congress power to tax taxes may not violate other provisions \\ tax only for public purposes \\
- no export taxes direct taxes must be equally apportioned among States by population \\
- income tax may be laid without regard to population \\ indirect taxes must be same rate throughout country \\
- Federal Government may not tax State or local governmental activities
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- individual income taxes \\
- corporate income taxes \\
- social insurance taxes \\
- excise taxes \\
- estate taxes \\
- gift taxes \\
- customs duties
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Federal Reserve interest charges - other interest, tolls, fees \\
- sale or lease of public lands \\
- fines imposed by federal courts \\
- "conscience fund" \\
- seigniorage from minting coins \\
- stamps sold to collectors
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- examine how taxes affect wages by calculating withholding and net pay using a sample paycheck.
- discuss how and why government raises money.
- examine sources of government funding using scenarios about the types of federal taxes.

SECTION 1

\section*{Taxes and} Other Revenue

\section*{Guiding Question}

How is the Federal Government financed? Use a chart like the one below to keep track of the main ideas about financing government.

Political Dictionary
- fiscal policy - estate tax
- progressive tax - gift tax
- payroll tax - customs duty
- regressive tax - interest
- excise tax

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how the Constitution gives Congress the power to tax and places limits on that power.
2. Identify the most significant federal taxes collected today.
3. Describe nontax sources of revenue

Image Above: Taxpayers finalize their federal income tax forms.

This chapter is mostly about fiscal policy-a subject that has a tendency to make most people's eyes glaze over. \({ }^{1}\) It is, nonetheless, a matter of very considerable importance to everyone in the United States.

A government's fiscal policy consists of the various means it uses to raise and spend money and thereby influence the nation's economy. No one needs to be told that the rate at which government takes in money and the level at which it spends that income have a very substantial impact on economic conditions. In simplest terms, it comes to this: A cut in taxes means more money in the hands of consumers, and their increased spending power means more jobs. An increase in taxes takes money away from consumers and so tends to slow the economy and reduce inflation.

In this section, we turn to taxes. Later, we shall look at borrowing-another source of governmental income-how the government spends what it takes in, and, finally, how the government's fiscal policy affects the economy.

\section*{The Power to Tax}

No one really likes taxes-except, perhaps, late-night television personalities who often find fodder for their monologues in that subject. They are far from the first to joke about taxes, however. More than two centuries ago, Benjamin Franklin famously said that "in this world nothing can be said to be certain, except death and taxes."

The Constitution underscores the central importance of the power to tax by listing it first among all of the many powers granted to Congress. The Constitution gives to Congress the power

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States. . —Article I, Section 8, Clause 1

\footnotetext{
The word fiscal comes from the Latin word fiscus, meaning originally a reed basket and later a purse or treasury. In ancient Rome, the fiscus was the public treasury the emperor's purse.
}

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

Before students do this section's Core Worksheet, which contains tax calculations, you may wish to review the information on problem solving in the Skills Handbook, p. S17.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Article I gives Congress the power to levy taxes to operate the Federal Government. - The Constitution states that Congress may tax only for public purposes, may not tax exports, must apportion direct taxes equally among the States, and must set indirect taxes at the same rate across the country. - Progressive taxes impose higher rates for higher incomes. - Regressive taxes apply the same rate to all, regardless of income.
CONCEPTS: enumerated and implied powers, limited government, federalism
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The power to tax is used not only to raise revenue to operate the government, but also to regulate and even discourage some activities. the taxing power in order to raise the money needed to operate the Federal Government. However, Congress does sometimes exercise that power for purposes other than the raising of revenue. Usually, that other purpose is to regulate, even discourage, some activity that the government believes to be harmful to the general public

Thus, much of the Federal Government's regulation of narcotics and other dangerous drugs is based on the taxing power. Federal law provides that only those who hold a valid license can legally manufacture, sell, or otherwise deal in those drugs-and licensing is a form of taxation. The government also regulates a number of other things by licens-ing-including, for example, the sale and purchasing of certain firearms, prospecting on public lands, and the hunting of migratory birds.

In 1912, Congress used its taxing power to destroy a part of the domestic match industry. It did so by levying a tax of two cents a hundred on matches made with white or yellow phosphorus. Those highly poisonous substances were harmful to workers who produced the matches. Matches made from other substances commonly sold for a penny a hundred at the time. So, as a result, the two-cent tax drove phosphorus matches from the market.

The Supreme Court first upheld the use of the taxing power for nonrevenue purposes in Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 1869. In 1861, Congress had created a national paper money system to provide a single, sound currency for the country. Private bank notes, which also circulated as money, soon interfered with the government's new "greenbacks." So, in 1865 , Congress imposed a 10 percent tax on the issuing of those private notes-and they soon disappeared.

Constitutional Limitations The power to tax is not unlimited. As with all of its other powers, Congress must exercise the taxing power in accord with every provision in the Constitution. Thus, for example, Congress cannot levy a tax on church services-clearly, such a tax would violate the 1 st Amendment. In more specific terms, the Constitution puts four expressed limits-and one very significant implied limit-on the power to tax.

First, it declares that Congress is given the power to tax in order to "pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States." That is, taxes can be levied only for public purposes, not for the benefit of some private interest.

The second expressed limit is the prohibition of export taxes. Article I, Section 9, Clause 5 declares that "No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State." Thus, customs duties (tariffs) can be applied only to imports-goods brought into the United States. They may not be applied to exports, goods sent out of the country. Recall, this restriction was a part of the Commerce Compromise made by the Framers at Philadelphia in 1787.

While Congress cannot tax exports, it can and does prohibit the export of certain items. It does so under its expressed power to regulate foreign commerce, usually for reasons of national security. For example, Congress has banned the export of computer software that allows people to encrypt files in a code no government can crack.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How does the Constitution limit the power to tax? levy
\(v\). to charge, impose
\(v\). to encode, especially to prevent unauthorized access

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 185) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 187)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 4 All-inOne, p. 189), which shows a sample paycheck and earnings statement for Chris Torres, a weekend employee. Have students follow the directions to complete Chris's earnings statement and paycheck.
L2 ELL Differentiate Help students with the earnings statement terminology by writing the following terms and definitions on the board: deductions: amounts subtracted from pay; gross pay: total pay before any deductions are subtracted; net pay: remaining pay after deductions are subtracted.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 16A, Earnings Statement, which shows the completed earnings statement and paycheck from the Bellringer Worksheet. Go over the calculation of gross pay, deductions, and net pay. Students should have found the rates of \(6.2 \%\) for OASDI and \(1.45 \%\) for Medicare in their text. Make sure students recognize that net pay on the earnings statement is the amount that they should write on the paycheck. This is the employee's take-home pay. Ask: Which deductions are federal withhold-ings? (Federal Income Tax, OASDI, Medicare) Why does the government require employees to pay OASDI and Medicare taxes? (so that the government can provide financial aid and medical care to the elderly and to people with disabilities)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Taxes can be levied only for public purposes, exports cannot be taxed, direct taxes must be equally apportioned among the States, and all indirect taxes must be set at the same rate across the country.
Analyzing Cartoons The taxpayer is so heavily taxed that his salary cannot actually pay for all taxes due.

\section*{DISCUSS TYPES OF TAXES}

Have students look at the earnings statement. Tell them that the federal income tax is a progressive tax, or a tax that applies a higher rate to higher incomes. The social insurance taxes-OASDI (Social Security) and Medicare on the statement-are regressive taxes, or taxes that apply the same rate to everyone. Point out that no tax for unemployment compensation appears on the earnings statement. Explain that this is a type of payroll tax. However, the federal tax and almost all State taxes to support this joint program are paid completely by the employer. Nothing is deducted from the employee's pay. The amount the employer pays for this tax is based on wages paid to employees.
Remind students that in addition to these payroll taxes, the government imposes several others, including excise taxes, estate and gift taxes, and custom duties-all of which produce revenue. However, the government also imposes taxes for reasons other than to raise revenue. For example, the government places an excise tax on tobacco to discourage people from smoking. It requires licenses to hunt migratory birds to limit the number birds taken, to protect the species from overhunting.
L1 L2 Differentiate Write the definitions of the terms progressive tax and regressive tax on the board. Have students label the taxes on their Bellringer Worksheet with the appropriate type of tax and have them include the definitions on their worksheet.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A direct tax is paid by the individual on whom it is levied while an indirect tax is paid by another, usually the consumer.

Third, direct taxes must be equally apportioned, or evenly distributed, among the States. The Constitution originally provided that

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census of Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.
-Article I, Section 9, Clause 4
This restriction was a part of the ThreeFifths Compromise the Framers made at the Philadelphia Convention. In effect, delegates from the northern States insisted that if slaves were to be counted in the populations of the southern States, those States would have to pay for them.

Recall that a direct tax is one that must be borne by the person upon whom it is levied. Examples include a tax on land or buildings, which must be paid by the owner of the property; or a capitation tax-a head or poll tax-laid on each person. Other taxes are indirect taxes, levies that may be shifted to another for payment-as, for example, the federal tax on liquor. That tax, placed initially on the distiller, is ultimately paid by the person who buys the liquor.

The direct tax restriction means, in effect, that any direct tax that Congress levies must be apportioned among the States according to their populations. Thus, a direct tax that raised \($ 1\) billion would have to produce just about \($ 120\) million in California and close to \($ 10\) million in Mississippi, because California has about 12 percent of the nation's population and Mississippi nearly 1 percent.

Wealth is not evenly distributed among the States, of course. So, a direct tax laid in proportion to population would be grossly unfair; the tax would fall more heavily on the residents of some States than it would on others. As a result, Congress has not imposed a direct tax-except for the income tax-outside the District of Columbia since 1861

An income tax is a direct tax, but it may be laid without regard to population:

FROM THE CONSTITUTION
The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.
-16th Amendment
Congress first levied an income tax in 1861, to help finance the Civil War. That tax, which expired in 1873, was later upheld by the Supreme Court in Springer v. United States, 1881. A unanimous Court found that that income tax was an indirect rather than a direct tax.

However, a later income tax law, enacted in 1894, was declared unconstitutional in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., 1895. There, the Court held that the 1894 law imposed a direct tax that Congress should have apportioned among the several States. The impossibility of taxing incomes fairly in accord with any plan of apportionment led to the adoption of the 16th Amendment, in 1913.

The fourth and final limit, in Article I, Section 8, Clause 1, declares that "all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." That is, all of the indirect taxes levied by the Federal Government must be set at the same rate in all parts of the country.

The Implied Limitation The Federal Government cannot tax the States or any of their local governments in the exercise of their governmental functions. That is, federal taxes cannot be imposed on those governments when they are performing such tasks as providing public education, furnishing healthcare, providing police protection, or building streets and highways.

Recall, the Supreme Court laid down that rule in McCulloch v. Maryland in 1819, when it declared that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." If the Federal Government could tax the governmental activities of the States or their local units, it could conceivably tax them out of existence and so destroy the federal system.

The Federal Government can and does tax those State and local activities that are of a nongovernmental character, however. For

\section*{Myths and Misperceptions}

TAX BRACKETS Tax brackets are widely misunderstood. Many people believe that if a pay raise bumps them up to the 15 percent tax bracket, then they will have to pay 15 percent of their entire income in taxes. In fact, they will pay the higher rate only on the amount above the previous bracket. To help students understand the use of tax brackets in the text feature "Progressive Taxes," write these brackets on the board:
Income $0-$8,000 = 10\% bracket; Income $8,001-$32,000=15\% bracket. Ask: Lori earns \($ 8,000\). How much income tax will she pay? \(($ 8,000 \times 0.1=\) \($ 800\) ) Lori gets a raise, so the next year she earns \($ 9,000\). How much income tax will she pay? \(($ 8,000 \times 0.1=$ 800 ; $ 1,000 \times 0.15=$ 150 ; $ 800+$ 150=\) \($ 950\) total income tax) Income taxes are progressive-rates increase as total income increases, but the higher rates apply only to the "extra," not total, earnings.
example, in 1893, South Carolina created a State monopoly to sell liquor, and it claimed that each of its liquor stores was exempt from the federal saloon license tax. But in South Carolina v. United States, 1905, the Supreme Court held that the State was liable for the tax, because the sale of liquor is not a necessary or usual governmental activity. Today, most State and many local governments are engaged in a variety of businesslike enterprises.

\section*{Current Federal Taxes}

Oliver Wendell Holmes once described taxes as "what we pay for civilized society." Society does not appear to be much more civilized today than it was when Justice Holmes made that observation in 1927. However, "what we pay" has certainly gone up. In 1927, the Federal Government's tax collections altogether came to less than \($ 3.4\) billion. Compare that figure with the figures in the chart on this page.

Income Tax You will recall that the income tax was authorized by the 16th Amendment, in 1913. It is the largest source of federal revenue today. It first became the major source in 1917 and 1918. And, except for a few years in the midst of the Depression of the 1930s, it has remained so.

Several features of the income tax fit its dominant role. It is a flexible tax, because its rates can be adjusted to produce whatever amount of money Congress thinks is necessary. The income tax is also easily adapted to the principle of ability to pay. It is a progressive tax-that is, the higher one's income, the higher the tax rate. The tax is levied on the earnings of both individuals and corporations.

Individual Income Tax The tax on individuals' incomes regularly produces the largest amount of federal revenue. For fiscal year 2009, the individual income tax was expected to provide more than \($ 1.2\) trillion.

The tax is levied on each person's taxable income-that is, one's total income in the previous year less certain exemptions and deductions. On returns filed in 2009, covering income received in 2008, most taxpayers had a personal exemption of \($ 3,650\), and another

\section*{Taxes}

At-a-Glance
The Federal Government acquires most of its revenue through taxes. The OMB reported that the government received \($ 2.5\) trillion in tax revenue for 2008. Who bears the greatest burden in providing funding for the Federal Government?

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 16B, Tax Cuts, when you discuss income taxes. This cartoon illustrates the general public attitude toward tax cuts. Ask: Whom do the people represent? (taxpayers) What is the significance of the people's clothing? (The clothes show people in different walks of life, such as business people, construction worker, and teacher.) What is the message in the cartoon? (Everyone wants his or her taxes cut.) What problems does this attitude create for politicians who make tax policy? (It is difficult to make tax policies that everyone views as fair. Cutting taxes would please everyone, but would cost the government needed revenue. However, raising taxes would be politically risky, because the increase would displease whatever group has to pay it. As a result, candidates for office often promise tax cuts but seldom tax increases.)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 16 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 4, All-In-One, p. 190), which provides scenarios and prompts allowing students to delve more deeply into the types of taxes imposed by the Federal Government. Pair students or divide the class into small groups to complete the worksheet. As students do so, circulate and answer questions to keep them on track.
L2 ELL Differentiate For these students, distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 191), which uses easier vocabulary and provides help with the calculations.

\section*{REVIEW THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Have students share their worksheet answers with the class. Tell students that the government receives most of its revenue from income taxes paid by individual citizens. However, these funds go toward programs that benefit the whole population. Have students create a list of five government programs or services that benefit Americans. (examples: national defense, national parks, school funding, college scholarships, grants for medical research, community health centers, aid for people with disabilities, low-cost housing for people living in poverty, airport security, Social Security aid for the elderly, food stamps, disaster relief) Ask: Do you think the value of these programs justifies the amount of money that you must pay in taxes?

Tell students to go to the Online Update to learn more about federal tax revenue.

\section*{Answers}

Taxes At-a-Glance individuals

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "Taxes" (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 193) to lower-level students. It asks them to use the Internet to find information about income taxes.
L3 Differentiate Have students use the library or Internet to research some of the licenses the government issues in order to regulate activities. Then, have them create a collage illustrating the variety of activities that the government regulates through licenses.
L4 Differentiate Some people in the United States maintain that the federal income tax is unconstitutional, and that by taxing individual wages and earnings, the national government is overstepping its bounds. Have students research, either online or in the library, what some of these anti-tax arguments are, and write a paragraph explaining why they agree or disagree with this position.

\section*{Government}

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What programs do payroll taxes support? of the same amount for each dependent. The personal exemption is adjusted to account for inflation each year. Deductions are allowed for a number of things, including the cost of some medical care, most State and local taxes (except sales taxes), interest paid on home mortgages, and charitable contributions.

By April 15 of any given year, everyone who earned taxable income in the preceding calendar year must file a tax return-a declaration of that income and of the exemptions and deductions he or she claims. The returns are filed, by mail or online, with the Internal Revenue Service. The IRS now receives more than 120 million returns each year; more than 60 million of them are e-filed.

At President George W. Bush's urging, Congress passed major tax-cut legislation in 2001, 2002, and again in 2003. As a result, all taxable income earned in 2008 was taxed (in 2009) at one of six rates (brackets). Those rates range from 10 percent in the lowest bracket on up to 35 percent on the highest incomes. Thus, in the lowest bracket in 2009, a single person paid 10 percent of his or her taxable income up to \($ 8,350\). Taxpayers in the highest bracket sent 35 percent of their taxable income above \($ 372,950\) to the IRS.

Most people who pay income taxes do so through withholding, a pay-as-you-go plan. Employers are required to withhold a certain amount from each employee's paycheck and send that money to the IRS. When the employee files a tax return, he or she receives a refund if the employer withheld more money than the employee owed in taxes, or must pay an additional amount if too little was withheld. Those who earn income from sources not subject to withholding (for example, rent or royalties) must estimate the tax they will owe and make quarterly payments on that amount through the year.

Corporation Income Tax Each corporation must pay a tax on its net income-that is, on all of its earnings above the costs of doing business. The corporate tax is the most complicated of all federal taxes because of the many deductions allowed. Nonprofit organizations such as churches and charitable foundations are not subject to the corporation income tax.

For 2009, the corporate tax rates ran from 15 percent on the first \($ 50,000\) of taxable earnings up to a top rate of 35 percent on taxable incomes of more than \($ 10\) million.

Social Insurance Taxes The Federal Government collects huge sums to finance three major social welfare programs: (1) the OldAge, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (OASDI) program-the basic Social Security program, established by the Social Security Act of 1935; (2) Medicare-healthcare for the elderly, added to the Social Security program in 1965; and (3) the unemployment compensation program-benefits paid to jobless workers, a program also established by the Social Security Act in 1935.

OASDI and Medicare are supported by taxes imposed on nearly all employers and their employees, and on self-employed persons. These levies are often called payroll taxes because the amounts owed by employees are withheld from their paychecks. For 2009, employees paid an OASDI tax of 6.2 percent on the first \($ 106,800\) of their salary or wages for the year, and their employers had to match that amount. The self-employed were taxed at 12.4 percent on the first \($ 106,800\) of their income.

For Medicare, employees pay a 1.45 percent tax on their total annual income. Employers must match the amounts withheld from their employees' paychecks. The selfemployed pay the full 2.9 percent Medicare tax on their annual incomes.

The unemployment insurance program is a joint federal-State operation that makes payments to workers who lose their jobs for reasons beyond their control. The program now covers most workers in this country. Each State and the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands have their own unemployment compensation laws. The amount of a worker's weekly benefits, and how many weeks these benefits last, are determined by State law.

The unemployment compensation program is financed by both federal and State taxes. The federal tax is 6.2 percent of the first \($ 7,000\) an employer pays to each employee in a year. Each employer is given a credit of up to 5.4 percent against that tax for unemployment

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint OASDI, Medicare, and unemployment compensation

\section*{Background}

STATE INCOME TAXES All citizens are required to pay federal income taxes, but individual State governments may also levy personal and corporate income taxes against vidual State governments may also levy personal and corporate income taxes against their residents. A number of States have chosen not to have individual income taxes, including Alaska, Florida, Nevada, South Dakota, Texas, Washington, and Wyoming. In addition, Tennessee and New Hampshire apply only limited personal income taxes, In addition, Tennessee and New Hampshire apply only limited personal income taxes, taxing dividend and interest income but not earned wages. While individual States do have the power to tax their residents, they are also bound by certain limitations. States cannot impose taxes for the purpose of impeding interstate commerce, and they cannot impose taxes that discriminate among taxpayers on the basis of age, race, religion, gender, or nationality. States also cannot use the payment of taxes as they cannot impose taxes that discriminate among taxpayers on the basis of age, race, religion, gender, or nationality. States also cannot use the payment of taxes as a criterion for voting eligibility.

\section*{Progressive Taxes}

A progressive tax is structured so that the higher a taxpayer's income is, the greater percentage he or she must pay in taxes. The federal income tax is progressive and, in principle, works like the simplified, hypothetical example shown below. What percentage of total income would be paid on salaries of \($ 30,000\) and \($ 95,000\) ?

Second $25,000

First $25,000
of taxable income taxed at \(10 \%\)

Total tax \(=$ 2,500\) 10\% of Income

Total tax \(=$ 7,500\) 15\% of Income

\section*{Third $25,000}
of taxable income taxed at \(30 \%\)

and collected excise taxes since Congress acquired its taxing power in 1789 .

Today, federal excise taxes are imposed on a long list of items, including gasoline, oil, tires, tobacco, alcohol, firearms, telephone services, airline tickets, and more. Many excise taxes are called "hidden taxes" because they are collected from producers who then figure them into the price that the retail customer finally pays. Some are called "luxury taxes" because they are imposed on goods not usually considered necessities. And some excise taxes are known as "sin taxes," particularly those laid on tobacco, alcohol, and gambling.

Estate and Gift Taxes An estate tax is a levy imposed on the assets (the estate) of someone who dies. \({ }^{2}\) A gift tax is one imposed on a giff from one living person to another. Congress first provided for the estate

2 An inheritance tax is another form of the so-called death tax. It is not levied on the entire net estate but, instead, on the portion is not levied on the entire net estate but, instead, on the por estate, taxes; most States also levy gift taxes.

\section*{Debate}
"There is no such thing as a good tax. " - Winston Churchill
Use this quote and the Debate strategy (p. T25) to start a class debate on the merits of taxation. Ask students who agree with the quote to explain what happens to social services (such as public schools, road maintenance, and police and fire departments) in the absence of taxes. Are these programs and services cut? If not, how do they propose funding them? Ask students who disagree with the quote to explain how the tax burden should be distributed among the population, what limits they believe should be imposed on taxation, and how much involvement individual citizens should be given in determining tax policy.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to find out more about how progressive taxes work.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.

L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
43 Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 194)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 195)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Progressive Taxes \($ 30,000\) salary: 11.7 percent; $95,000 salary: 18.4 percent

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{l}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Listing the revenue \\ sources of the Federal \\ Government \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make an outine of the sec- \\ tion using the headings.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining the differ- \\ ence between progres- \\ sive and regressive \\ taxes (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review this section's "Progressive Tax" \\ feature and lead a discussion on the two \\ types of taxes.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining the three \\ social welfare programs \\ supported by payroll \\
taxes (Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students reread the first paragraph \\ of the "Social Insurance Taxes" portion of \\ the section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Listing the four consti- \\ tutional limitations to \\ taxation (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students reread the direct quotes \\ from the Constitution in the section and \\ rewrite them in their own words.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Describing their opinion \\ on the equity of direct \\ and indirect taxes \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Remind students of the definition of the \\ two taxes (introduced in Chapter 11), and \\ lead a discussion on the advantages and \\ disadvantages of both.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining their opinion \\ on using taxes for \\ regulatory purposes \\
(Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a Pros and Cons \\ chart to list the positive and negative \\ aspects of regulating through taxes.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying reasons for \\ withholding monies \\ from paychecks instead \\ of lump sum payments \\
(Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Conduct a debate on paycheck withholding \\ vs. annual payments.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint any three of the following: interest, tolls, fees, sale or lease of public lands, federal court fines, seigniorage, postage stamps ence between progres sive and regressive

Determining the three social welfare programs supported by payroll

Listing the four constiona (Question 4)

Describing their opinion on the equity of direct and indirect taxes

Explaining their opinion on using taxes for regulatory purposes

Identifying reasons for withholding monies of lump sum payments (Question 7)

Checkpoint What are three examples of federal nontax revenues?

\section*{bequest} \(\frac{\text { bequest }}{n \text {. something left }}\) n. something left, handed down, passed on ax in 1916. It added the gift tax in 1932 to plug a loophole in the estate tax that allowed people to avoid the estate tax by giving away money or other property before death.

The first \($ 3.5\) million of an estate is exempt from the federal tax in 2009. So, in fact, most estates are not subject to the federal levy. Deductions are allowed for such things as State death taxes and bequests to religious and charitable groups. Anything a husband or wife leaves to the other is taxed, if at all, only when the surviving spouse dies.

Any person may now make up to \($ 12,000\) in tax-free gifts to any other person in any one year. Gifts that spouses make to each other are not taxed, regardless of value.

The estate and gift taxes are separate federal taxes, but they are levied at the same rates. For 2009, those rates range from 18 percent, on an estate or gift with a net value of under \($ 20,000\), to a maximum of 45 percent on an estate or gift worth more than \($ 3.5\) million.

Customs Duties Customs duties are taxes laid on goods brought into the United States from abroad. Customs duties are also known as tariffs, import duties, or imposts. Congress decides which imports will be dutied and at what rates. Most imports are dutied; but some are not-for example, Bibles, coffee, bananas, and up to \($ 800\) of a tourist's purchases abroad. Once the major source of income for the Federal Government, custom duties now only produce just over 1 percent of government revenue taken in each year.

\section*{Nontax Revenues}

Large sums of money reach the federal treasury from a multitude of nontax sources. These miscellaneous receipts now total nearly \($ 50\) billion a year and come from dozens of places. A large portion comes from the earnings of the Federal Reserve System, mostly in interest charges. Interest is a charge for borrowed money, generally a percentage of the amount borrowed. The interest on other loans, canal tolls, and fees for such items as passports, copyrights, patents, and trademarks also generate large sums. So do the sale or lease of public lands and such other items as the fines imposed by the federal courts.

The Treasury Department maintains a "conscience fund" for the money that people send in to ease their minds over their past taxpaying mistakes. Another little-known source of nontax money is seigniorage-the profit the United States Mint makes on the production of coins. The U.S. Postal Service sells more than \($ 100\) million in mint-condition stamps to collectors each year, and collectors spend untold millions more at local post offices.

\section*{Essential Questions \\ response to the chapter \\ Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Question, go to your}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: How is the Federal Government financed?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the difference between a progressive tax and a regressive tax?
3. Payroll taxes support which three major social welfare programs?
4. (a) What are the four constitutional limitations on the power to tax? (b) What is the one implied limitation on that power?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Demonstrate Reasoned

Judgment Which do you think is more fair, a direct or an indirect tax? Explain.
6. Draw Conclusions Do you think it is appropriate for the Federal Government to use taxes for regulatory purposes? Why or why not?
7. Identify Central Issues Why do you think the Federal Government requires employers to withhold money from each paycheck instead of allowing taxpayers to pay their taxes in one annual payment?

\section*{Quick Write}

Cause-and-Effect Writing: Ask Questions To determine what our national priorities are today or once were, one must reflect on the conditions of the time. Select an administration in office between 1952 and today. Write five questions that you think will help you determine what might have influenced the Federal Government in its allocation of funds for that period. Think about subjects such as the economy, national security, and the environment.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Constitution gives Congress the power to tax to pay for the operation of government, defense, and national welfare, but only in accord with other constitutional provisions. Revenue comes from taxes (individual income, corporation income, social insurance, excise, estate, gift, and custom duties) and nontax sources (such as interest, tolls, fees, sale or lease of public lands, and federal court fines).
2. A progressive tax imposes a higher rate on people with higher incomes; a regressive tax places an equal rate on everyone, regardless of income.
3. OASDI (Old Age, Survivor, Disability Insurance), Medicare, unemployment compensation
4. (a) (1) may tax only for the public purposes; (2) no taxes on exports; (3) direct taxes must be distributed evenly among the States; (4) indirect tax rates must be uniform throughout country (b) The Federal Government cannot tax State or local governmental functions.
5. The income tax is the only direct tax the Federal Government has imposed since 1861, because a direct tax laid in proportion to population, as required by the Constitution, would be grossly unfair. A direct tax would fall more heavily on the residents of some States than on others.
6. Possible answer: Yes; the Federal Government is responsible for protecting the public's best interests.
7. Withholding provides the government with monies throughout the year and spreads out the tax burden on individuals.
Quick write Students' questions should target budget priorities, such as national security, healthcare, and the environment.

Guiding Question
What effect does borrowing have on the federal budget and the nation's economy? Use a concept web like the one below to keep track of the main ideas about the government's influence on the economy.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- deficit - supply-side
- surplus economics
- demand-side - public debt
economics

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe federal borrowing.
2. Explain how the Federal Government's actions can affect the economy.
3. Analyze the causes and effects of the public debt.

Image Above: Work Projects Administration (WPA) workers build sidewalks during the Great Depression.
n Hamlet, Shakespeare wrote, "Neither a borrower nor a lender be." That advice may make good sense in many situations. However, it most certainly has not been followed by the government of the United States, which has been both a borrower and a lender for more than 200 years now.

\section*{Borrowing}

The Constitution gives Congress the power " \([t]\) o borrow Money on the credit of the United States" in Article I, Section 8, Clause 2. Congress first exercised that power in 1790, and it has done so hundreds of times since then. For the better part of 150 years, the power to borrow was seen as a way for the government to (1) meet the costs of crisis situations, most notably wars, and/or (2) pay for large-scale projects that could not be financed out of current incomefor example, the construction of the Panama Canal in the early 1900s.

Beginning with the Depression years of the 1930s, the Federal Government has borrowed, regularly and heavily, for yet another purpose: to finance budget deficits. In nearly every one of the last 80 years, it has spent more than it has collected from taxpayers. That is, the government has run up a deficit (the shortfall between income and outgo) in each of those years-and it has borrowed to make up the difference.

Indeed, the government's financial books did not show a surplus, more income than outgo, in any fiscal year from 1969 to \(1998 .{ }^{3}\) For fiscal year 2009, which extends from October 1, 2008 to September 20, 2009, the government expects to spend just over \($ 3\) trillion -and it will take in some \($ 500\) billion less than that stupendous sum. It will have to borrow to cover that shortfall.

The Depression and Deficit Spending The collapse of the stock market in October 1929 triggered the Great Depression of the 1930s. To meet that catastrophe, deficit financing became a constant element of federal fiscal policy.

A few statistics begin to suggest the depths of that economic calamity, and the miseries that accompanied it. Two million Americans were unemployed in 3 From 1930 to 2009, the Federal Government ended only 11 fiscal years "in the black"-that is, with a budget surplus: fiscal years \(1947,1948,1951,1956,1957,1960,1969,1998,1999,2000\), and 2001.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Article I gives Congress the power to borrow money, which allows the government to meet the costs of crisis situations and finance large-scale projects through deficit spending. - The public debt is the government's total outstanding indebtedness, including money borrowed and not yet repaid, plus accrued interest. - Years of deficit spending have resulted in a monumental public debt.
CONCEPTS: enumerated and implied powers
Enduring understandings: • Federal Government revenue seldom exceeds its spending, requiring it to borrow heavily almost every year. - The ever-increasing public debt raises concerns about the burden on future taxpayers.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What effect does borrowing have on the federal budget and the nation's economy?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- analyze the annual deficits and surpluses and the public debt by interpreting graphs.
- describe the federal borrowing process.
- analyze key events in the history of the public debt by examining a timeline.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 196) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 197)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE GRAPHIC DATA}

To practice analyzing graphic data in this section, use the Chapter 16 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 200). You may wish to teach the skill before or after reviewing the Bellringer. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 201).

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 16C, Annual Deficits/Surpluses and Public Debt, which shows a graph of federal receipts and outlays and a graph showing the growth of the public debt. Write on the board: (1) Approximately how much was the annual deficit in 1945? (2) About how much was the public debt in 1945? (3) Approximately how much is the estimated annual surplus in 2012? (4) About how much is the estimated public debt in 2012? (5) Using the Public Debt chart, estimate how much the public debt was when your parents were your age. How much less was it then than the debt is now? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Review with students the answers to the Bellringer questions. (1. about \($ 450\) billion 2. about \($ 260\) million 3. about $45 billion 4. nearly $11.5 trillion 5. Answers will vary, but students should recognize that the public debt now is much larger than when their parents were their age.) Ask: Do you think it is fair to put the responsibility of paying back the public debt on future generations? Why or why not?
L2 ELL Differentiate Write these terms and definitions on the board: interest (fee that a borrower owes to the lender), deficit (amount that spending is greater than income), surplus (amount that income is greater than spending), public debt (total amount that the Federal Government owes). Discuss each term and how it relates to government spending. Have students write the terms and definitions in their notebook.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Ask: If the government needs more money to operate than it takes in, how does it acquire extra funds? (The government borrows by issuing securities, such as Treasury notes and bills, to investors-mostly individuals, banks, investment companies, and other financial institutions.) Why do investors lend to the U.S. Government? (because Treasury securities are very safe and investors receive interest on the amount they lend)

\section*{Answers}

Surpluses and Deficits possible response: wars, because they are expensive and do not add anything productive to the economy 1929. By 1935, that number had climbed to 13.5 million. One fourth of the nation's labor force was out of work-and millions more were working for, literally, pennies a day. By 1935, 18 million people, including children and the aged, were completely dependent on emergency public relief programs. Between 1929 and 1932, more than 5,000 banks-one of every five in the country-had failed, and their customers' deposits had vanished. By 1932, net farm income had plunged to 20 percent of its level in 1929.

Few States had made any provision for such a crisis, and those that had were overwhelmed. So, too, were private charities. Poverty and need had become national problems overnight.

\section*{Surpluses and Deficits}

The federal budget is created one year before it is implemented and hinges on estimates of federal revenue. Events during the fiscal year, however, can greatly affect actual government spending. What factor mentioned below do you think had the greatest effect on the budget?

In the elections of 1932, the American voters overwhelmingly rejected the tentative efforts of President Herbert Hoover and a Republican-controlled Congress to solve the nation's economic woes. Mr. Hoover and his advisors were committed to the traditional view of the place of government in the economy. They held that government had only a very limited power to deal with what they believed was a private economic crisis. Government, they thought, should ensure a stable money supply; beyond that, the success or failure of businesses was a matter best left to the workings of the free market.

The voters turned, instead, to the Democrats. Franklin D. Roosevelt won the presidency in a landslide and his party captured huge majorities in both houses of Congress.

Keynesian Economics Almost immediately, the President and Congress launched the New Deal—a series of government spending and jobs programs designed to stimulate the economy and put Americans back to work. That response to the Depression was built largely on the economic theories advanced by British economist John Maynard Keynes. The New Deal was based on the Keynesian view that government can and should influence the economy by large increases in public spending in times of high unemployment. \({ }^{4}\)

Keynesians argue that even if government must borrow to support that increased spending, the higher employment that results will soon produce higher tax revenues. This element of Keynesian economics is sometimes called demand-side economics.

Keynesian economic thinking continues to influence federal fiscal policy. However, President Ronald Reagan (1981-1989) and more recently George W. Bush (2001-2009) insisted that lower taxes, not greater spending, provide the best route to a stronger economy. This view, which is sometimes called supply-side economics or "Reaganomics," is based on the assumption that tax cuts increase the supply of money in private hands and so stimulate the economy.

\footnotetext{
4 John Maynard Keynes' economic theories were most fully developed in his work The General Theory of Employment } Interest, and Money, published in 1936

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 16, Section 2 :
```

L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 196)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 197)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 198)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 199)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 200)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 201)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 202)
L3 Quiz A (p. 203) L2 Quiz B (p. 204)

```

The sale of bonds is an efficient way for the government to get funding. However, with each sale, the public debt increases. In fact, it is estimated that the debt currently grows at a rate of \($ 1\) billion dollars a day. To which group of investors does the Federal Government owe the most?

Mutual Funds \(4 \%\)
Pension Funds 4\%
Other Investors 3\%
Bond Holders 2\%
Insurance Companies 2\%
Commercial Banks 1\%
*Borrowed from Social Security and federal pension funds SOURCE: Treasury Department, Financial Management Service

A downturn in the nation's economy in 2007 and 2008 prompted President Bush and Congress to take two extraordinary steps to meet the financial crisis. The first step was an "economic stimulus plan" in which most federal income tax payers received a check from the IRS of \($ 600\) (for single filers) or \($ 1,200\) (for those filing a joint return) totaling some \($ 170\) billion. The second was a massive intervention in the collapsed home mortgage market in which Congress gave the Treasury Department some \($ 700\) billion to "bail out" distressed home lenders. Both of these steps were purely Keynesian in nature.

How Borrowing Occurs Congress must authorize all federal borrowing. The actual borrowing is done by the Treasury Department, which issues various kinds of securities to investors. These investors are principally individuals and banks, investment companies, and other financial institutions. The securities usually take the form of Treasury notes or bills, often referred to as T-bills, for short-term borrowing, and bonds for longterm purposes. They are, in effect, IOUspromissory notes in which the government agrees to repay a certain sum, plus interest, on a certain date.

The Federal Government is regularly able to borrow money at lower rates of interest than the rates charged to private borrowers. This is true largely because investors, both citizens of the United States and from other countries, can find no safer securities than those issued by the United States. If the United States could not pay its debts, no one else would be able to do so, either. Federal

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Your computer-savvy students might en joy analyzing Transparency 16D, White House Budget, as part of a discussion of deficits and the public debt. The cartoon shows a budget deficit being transferred to future generations electronically. Ask: When do you see an image like this on your computer screen? (when downloading, or transferring a file from one computer to another) What file is being transferred in this cartoon? (a file containing a budget deficit) Who is receiving the file? (The caption says the file is going to Congress, but it is really being transferred to future generations.) How much deficit is the White House budget adding to the public debt? ($407 billion) What is the message of this cartoon? (The huge deficit in the President's budget will add to the debt burden to be paid by future generations of taxpayers.)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 16 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-In-One, p. 198). Have students review the chronology and answer the questions.
L2 ELL Differentiate Distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 199).

\section*{REVIEW WORKSHEET ANSWERS}

Have volunteers share their answers to the Core Worksheet questions. Ask: What do you think the government can do to control the public debt? (enact balanced budget legislation, reduce some social services, require the government to operate using only the revenue it receives, increase taxes)

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L1 L2 Use this example to help students understand surpluses and deficits: You have \($ 10\) to spend on a movie ticket and popcorn. When you get to the theater, you find that the ticket costs $7 and the popcorn, $5, for a total $12. Do you have a budget deficit or surplus? How do you know? (deficit; you have less money than you need) What choices do you have? (You can give up the popcorn and jist buy the ticket, borrow \($ 2\) to get the popcorn, or find a way to earn the extra $2.)
What are the government's choices when it has a budget deficit? (The government can spend less, borrow, or bring in more money by raising taxes.)
L3 L4 Have students complete the Extend Worksheet (Unit 4, All-in-One, p. 202), which contains excerpts on the tax cut debate. Discuss students' answers as a class.

Tell students to go to the Online Update to learn more about the public debt.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students'

Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 203) Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 204)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

The Public Debt The Federal Government owes most to individual Americans, because it has borrowed the most from Social Security and federal pension funds.
Checkpoint The Treasury Department issues various securities that are invested in by individuals, banks, and other financial institutions.

\section*{REMEDIATION}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint all the money the government has borrowed and not yet repaid, plus accrued interest
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline If Your Students Have Trouble With & Strategies For Remediation \\
\hline Determining the effects of government borrowing (Question 1) & Review the data on the "Surpluses and Deficits" graphic in this section. \\
\hline Understanding the difference between the deficit and public debt (Question 2) & Compare the graph of annual deficits to the graph of accumulated debt to illustrate the difference. \\
\hline Describing government borrowing (Question 3) & Have students create a concept web illustrating the main points described in "How Borrowing Occurs." \\
\hline Explaining how the government can create a budget surplus (Questions 4, 6) & Define surplus and remind students of the concept of a balanced budget. \\
\hline Determining their opinion on deficit financing (Question 5) & Create a list of government programs that people expect and lead a discussion on how these programs can be cut or funded without deficit financing. \\
\hline Understanding the ramifications of deficit spending (Question 7) & Review the graphic on public debt \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
securities are also attractive because the interest they earn cannot be taxed by any of the States or their local governments.

\section*{The Public Debt}

Borrowing produces a debt, of course. The public debt is the result of the Federal Government's borrowing over time. More precisely, the public debt is the total outstanding indebtedness of the Federal Government. It includes all of the money the government has borrowed and not yet repaid, plus the accrued interest on that borrowing. \({ }^{5}\)

The Federal Government has built up a huge debt over the years. Indeed, in the years since the first federal budget was formulated in 1789 , the government has recorded a surplus in only 19 years. Recall, the Federal Government first went into debt during George Washington's administration. Still, it took 192 years-from 1789 to 1981 -for the public debt to reach \($ 1\) trillion. As you can see from the graph on the previous page, the debt has exploded over the past three decades and now (2009) tops \($ 10\) trillion.

The amounts involved here are absolutely mind-boggling. In 1981, as the debt approached \($ 1\) trillion, President Reagan said that he found "such a figure-a trillion dol-lars-incomprehensible." He then drew this verbal picture: "[I]f you had a stack of \($ 1,000\) bills in your hand only four inches high, you would be a millionaire. A trillion dollars would be a stack 67 miles high." Mr. Reagan's stack would have to be nearly 700 miles high to equal the national debt today!

5 The Treasury Department's Bureau of the Public Debt acts as the Federal Government's borrowing agent It issues Treasury bills, notes, and bonds and manages the U.S. Savings Bond Program.

There is no constitutional limit on the amount that may be borrowed, and so there is no constitutional limit on the public debt. Congress has put a statutory ceiling on the debt, but simply raises that ceiling whenever fiscal realities seem to call for it.

The debt has always been controversial, and its rapid rise in recent years has fueled the fire. The annual interest on the debt is the amount that must be paid each year to those from whom the government has borrowed. That interest came to some \($ 250\) billion in 2008 and will be even higher for 2009. Approximately one in every ten dollars the Federal Government now spends goes just to service-to pay the interest on-the debt.

Most of those who are concerned about the size of the debt are worried about its impact on future generations of Americans. They say that years of shortsightedness and failure to operate government on a pay-as-you-go basis has produced monumental debt and interest obligations that will have to be met by tomorrow's taxpayers.

\section*{Essential Questions ro continue to build a} \(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Journal } & \begin{array}{ll}\text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal. }\end{array}\end{array}\) Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What effect does borrowing have on the federal budget and the nation's economy?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the difference between an annual deficit and the public debt?
3. (a) How does the Federal Government borrow money? (b)Why can it do so at a lower interest rate than can private borrowers?
4. How does the Federal Government create a budget surplus?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Do you think deficit financing is an acceptable method to fund the Federal Government? Explain why or why not.
6. Analyze Information Why do you think that for many years Congress and the President have chosen to borrow money rather than to balance the federal budget?
7. Draw Conclusions What do you think are the long-term consequences of ongoing deficit spending?

\section*{Quick Write}

Cause-and-Effect Writing: Gather Details Using magazines, newspapers, and that fiscal year's federal budget, conduct research on the presidential administration you selected for the Section 1 Quick Write. Did any of the questions you developed reflect the conditions and priorities of the time? How did the Federal Government respond to those priorities? Record the results of your research relating to each of your questions in your notebook.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Borrowing over more than 200 years has run up a huge public debt, requiring even more borrowing just to pay the interest on the debt. The monumental debt and interest obligations will have to be paid by future taxpayers.
2. The annual deficit is the amount that spending exceeds revenue for one year. The public debt is the accumulation of annual deficits, or the total indebtedness of the Federal Government.
3. (a) The Treasury Department issues securities, such as bonds or Treasury bills, to investors. (b) because investors consider U.S.

Government securities to be the safest investment available
4. by spending less on government programs and operations to reduce outgo, or by raising taxes to increase income; either way, the government must take in more than it spends to produce a surplus
5. Students should note that deficit financing provides services the public expects, but also creates a debt burden on future generations.
6. Students should note that balancing the budget would require making unpopular decisions, such as raising taxes or cutting government programs. Politicians risk getting voted out of office for such decisions. Borrowing is politically safer.
7. Students should recognize that ongoing deficit spending results in an ever-increasing debt burden on future generations and a drag on the economy. The money spent on debt interest could be spent more productively in other ways.
QUICK WRITE Students should research the answers to the questions on their note cards.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{Spending and the Budget}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How is federal spending determined? Use a concept web like the one below to keep track of how the federal budget is determined.

Political Dictionary
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- entitlement & e uncontrollable \\
- controllable & spending \\
spending & • continuing \\ & resolution
\end{tabular}

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify the key elements of federal spending.
2. Define controllable and uncontrollable spending.
3. Explain how the President and Congress work together to create the federal budget.

Image Above: An elderly patient receives medical care through federally funded Medicare.

The Federal Government will spend more than \($ 3\) trillion in fiscal year 2009 . If you were to place three trillion \($ 1\) bills end to end, they would stretch out some 270 million miles, which is more than the distance from Earth to the sun and back again. In this section, you will see how the Federal Government spends that vast amount of money, and how it plans for that spending through the budget process.

\section*{Federal Spending}

For more than half of our national history-from independence in 1776 to the mid-1930s-the government's income and spending were so comparatively small that they had little real impact on the nation's economy. That situation changed, dramatically, with the coming of the Great Depression of the 1930s and then World War II in the early 1940s.

Today, the Federal Government takes hundreds of billions of dollars from some segments of the national economy. It then pumps those many billions back into other segments of the economy-all with huge effects on the economy as a whole, of course.

Spending Priorities Look at the right-hand side graph on the next page. As you can see, the Department of Health and Human Services now spends more money than any other federal agency-over \($ 700\) billion a year, in fact. Most of this department's spending goes for Medicare, Medicaid, and other entitlement programs.

Entitlements are benefits that federal law says must be paid to all those who meet the eligibility requirements, such as being above a certain age or below a certain income level. OASDI (the Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance program)—often called "Social Security"-is the largest entitlement program today, and, recall, is funded by the social insurance taxes withheld from the paychecks of American workers. Other major examples include Medicare, Medicaid, food stamps, unemployment insurance, and veterans' pensions and benefits. The government guarantees assistance for all who qualify for those benefits. In effect, the law says that the people who receive those benefits are entitled (that is, have a right) to them.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The largest categories of federal spending are entitlements, defense, and interest on the public debt. - The Constitution gives Congress the power to control federal financing. - The President initiates the budget, which then goes to Congress.
- Various House and Senate committees review and revise the budget into final appropriations bills sent to the President to sign into law.
CONCEPTS: enumerated and implied powers, separation of powers, limited government, balance of power ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The budget is a major political statement of the public policies of the U.S. - The budget is a joint effort of the President and Congress. • Lobbying by special interest groups influences the budget and thereby influences public policy.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How is federal spending determined?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- distinguish between controllable and uncontrollable spending categories on a federal budget circle graph.
- understand the difficulty of setting budget priorities by completing a ranking activity.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 205) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 207)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

Before students do the Core Worksheets in this section, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S18, to review information on decision making.

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 16E, Government Spending 2007, which contains a pie graph showing outlays of the federal budget. Have students answer the questions on the transparency.

ELL Differentiate Have students work in pairs to complete the Bellringer activity.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Have students share their answers to the Bellringer questions. Write the answers on the board. (1 . Discretionary spending is controllable-Congress and the President can decide how much to spend on these programs in any given year. Mandatory spending is uncontrollable. These budget items are written into law and must be paid unless the law is changed. Congress and the President cannot alter these costs. 2. Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security, other Health and Human Services programs, interest on the debt 3. defense and security and other services and programs 4. More is spent on mandatory programs. )

\section*{DISCUSS}

Remind students of this chapter's Essential Question: How should the federal budget reflect Americans' priorities? Ask: If the budget is supposed to reflect Americans' priorities, why is the budget so difficult to create? Point out that Americans don't agree on spending priorities. For example, social service spending for programs such as food stamps or Medicaid makes up a significant portion of the budget. Some people believe that the size of those programs represents unnecessary federal spending, while others believe that the Federal Government has a responsibility to provide for the needy in our society. Any federal budget decision requires taking into account both of these positions, which are conflicting, but both represent American priorities.

Tell students to go to the Online Update to learn more about Federal Government revenue spending.

\section*{Answers}

Federal Spending Comparison Defense is the largest expenditure in 1968 because the Vietnam War and the cold war were in progress. Healthcare costs and the beginning of the baby-boomer access to Medicare made Health and Human Services the highest spender in 2008.

\section*{Federal Spending Comparison}

The manner in which the Federal Government spends its revenue hinges on the events of the time as well as the priorities of the American public. What trends in federal spending can you determine from these charts?

$2,978,664,000
Health and \(\square\) Defense \(\left.\square \begin{array}{l}\text { Social Security } \square \text { Treasury } \square \text { Agriculture } \square \text { Veterans Affairs } \square \text { Other } \\ \text { Administration }\end{array}\right)\)

SOURCE: Office of Management and Budget stoke
v. strengthen, stir up

OASDI is administered by an independent agency, the Social Security Administration (SSA). The department's outlays on OASDI make SSA the third-largest government spender.

Outlays for national defense now account for a much larger share of the budget than they have over the past decade. The Department of Defense (DoD) spent more than \($ 550\) billion in 2008. It will likely spend even more in 2009, and the department's spending will continue to grow as the war on global terrorism wears on.

The defense-spending percentage in the graph is somewhat misleading. It does not include the defense-related expenditures of several other federal agencies, notably the nuclear weapons development work of the Department of Energy and many of the functions of the Department of Homeland Security.

Interest on the public debt is now the fourth-largest category of federal spending.

Stoked by years of deficit financing, it has consumed a larger and still larger part of the federal budget over the last several years. In the graph above, interest on the debt is included in the Treasury Department's spending. For fiscal year 2008, the net interest on the debt came to more than \($ 250\) billion.

Controllable and Uncontrollable Spending What the Federal Government spends can be described in terms of controllable spending and uncontrollable spending. Most specific items in the federal budget are controllable. That is, Congress and the President can decide each year just how much will be spent on many of the things that the Federal Government does-for example, on national parks, highway projects, aid to education, military hardware, civil service pay, and so on. Economists often use the term "discretionary spending" to describe spending on those budget items about which Congress and the President can make choices.

468 Financing Government

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 16, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 205)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 207)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 209)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 210)
L3 Quiz A (p. 211)
L2 Quiz B (p. 212)

Much federal spending is uncontrollable, however. It is because "mandatory spending" was built into many public programs when Congress created them; thus, neither Congress nor the President have the power to change the funding directly.

Take the interest on the public debt as a leading example of uncontrollable spending. Paying the interest due cannot be avoided. That interest amounts to a fixed charge; once the Federal Government borrows the money, the interest on that loan must be paid when it comes due-and at the rate the government promised to pay.

Social Security benefits, food stamps, and most other entitlements are also largely uncontrollable. Once Congress has set the standards of eligibility for those programs, it really has no control over just how many people will meet those standards. Thus, Congress does not-really cannot-determine how many people covered by Social Security will become eligible for retirement benefits each year.

Those expenditures are not completely uncontrollable, however. Congress could redefine eligibility standards, or it could reduce the amount of money each beneficiary is to receive. But clearly those actions would be politically difficult.

In general, the percentage of federal spending that is uncontrollable has grown in recent years, while the percentage of controllable spending has decreased. In fact, the Office of Management and Budget estimates that nearly 80 percent of all federal spending today falls into the uncontrollable category. These trends cause concern to those officials who are responsible for maintaining control of the budget.

\section*{The Federal Budget}

The Constitution gives to Congress the fabled "power of the purse"-the very significant power to control the financing of the Federal Government and all of its operations:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law. ...
-Article I, Section 9, Clause 7

Congress-and only Congress-has the power to provide the enormous sums that the government consumes each year. In short, it is Congress that decides how much the government can spend and, just as important, for exactly what it can spend that money.

Still, despite the fact that Congress holds the power of the purse, it is the President who initiates the process by which the Federal Government spends its money. The chief executive does so by submitting (proposing) a budget to Congress soon after that body begins each of its yearly sessions. \({ }^{6}\)

Remember, the federal budget is a hugely important document. It is, of course, a financial statement-a lengthy and detailed estimate of federal income and proposed outgo for the upcoming fiscal year. But it is also much more than that, and much more than a dry listing of so many dollars from this and so many dollars for that. The budget is a major political statement, a declaration of the public policies of the United States. Put another way, the federal budget is the President's work plan for the conduct of the government and the execution of its public policies.

The annual budget-making process is a joint effort of the President and both houses of Congress. The President prepares the budget and submits it to Congress. Congress then reacts to the President's budget proposals, over a period of several months. It usually enacts most of those proposals, many of them in some altered form, in a number of appropriations measures.

The President and the Budget The process of building the budget is a lengthy one. In fact, it begins at least eighteen months before the start of the fiscal year for which the budget is intended. First, each federal agency prepares detailed estimates of its spending needs for that twelve-month period. Each agency then submits its spending plans to the President's budget-making agency, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB). (See Chapter 15, Section 2.)

6 The word budget comes from the French bougette, meaning a small pouch or bag with its contents. In the eighteenth century, the budget was the bag in which the British chancellor of the exchequer (the treasurer) carried financial documents.
\(\checkmark\) checkpoint How is the budget both a financial and political statement?

\section*{PRIORITIZE SPENDING OPTIONS}

Distribute the Chapter 16 Section 3 Core Worksheet A (Unit 4 All-In-One, p. 209), which has students work through the budgeting process. Have each student complete Task 1, according to their own opinion. Then distribute Core Worksheet B (Core Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 210) and assign each student to one of the districts. Explain that they are now acting as representatives of different congressional districts. Ask them to read the description of their district on the worksheet. Then have the students return to Core Worksheet A and revise their spending priority rankings based on this new information. They should record their new rankings in the Task 2 column.

\section*{NEGOTIATE SPENDING PRIORITIES}

After students revise their priorities, have them work in groups of four to determine which programs to fund. Groups should have a representative from each district and needs to produce a list of the top six programs they wish to fund. Ask them to record their list under Task 3 on their worksheet. Then have the groups share with the class their list and explain why they allocated their priorities in that manner.
Next, tell the groups that for Task 4, they have two options: they can choose to fund only two of the six programs on their list, or they can choose to raise taxes and fund all six programs. Once the groups have finished making this choice, have volunteers share their results with the class, explaining their reasoning. Ask students to discuss the difficulties in coming up with a unified spending list.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It is the President's work plan for the government as well as an estimate of federal income and outgo.

L2 Differentiate Assign congressional districts A and \(B\) to struggling students.

Differentiate Assign congressional districts \(C\) and \(D\) to stronger students.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L2 ELL Differentiate Pair English Language Learners with more advanced students to create a graphic organizer that details the steps involved in the creation of federal budget.

\section*{L3 54 Differentiate Have students select the} agency that was the highest priority on their Core Worksheet and research that agency's budget allocation from its initial request, the amount allocated by the President, and the final amount approved by Congress. Then, in a short essay, have students describe what they think may have influenced any changes made in the steps toward final approval.

Tell students to go to the Interactivity to learn more about the budget creation process.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\(\square 3\)Have students write a brief summary of the class activity and how it illustrates why the federal budget process is so difficult.

L3Collect Core Worksheets and assess students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 4, All-inOne, p. 288).

Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 211)Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 212)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

Creating the Federal Budget

Individually and as one body, the House and Senate spend eight months determining the final allocation of federal funds. Why are both the legislative and executive branches involved in this process?

\section*{1 Presenting the Budget}

On the first Monday in February, the President proposes a budget outining his or her policy and funding priorities and estimating spending, income, and borrowing for the coming fiscal year.
- President submits budget request to Congress.

\section*{2 Creating a Budget Resolution}

Using the President's budget as a guide, the House and Senate work individually and then together to determine the size of the budget, estimate revenue, and set discretionary spending levels.
- House and Senate Budget Committees conduct hearings on a Budget Resolution.
- House and Senate debate and vote on their committees' Budget Resolution.
- Conference Committee works to resolve and merge each chamber's resolution into one final resolution.
- Congress votes on final version of the Budget Resolution.

\section*{3 Setting Appropriations}

Guided by the Budget Resolution, the House and Senate work individually and then in conference to divide monies among federal agencies. Appropriations measures set out the budgets of the federal agencies in detail and provide the legal authority to spend their funds.
- House and Senate Appropriations Committees develop 13 separate spending bills each.
- Conference Committee settes on one bill for each of the 13 appropriation measures.
- Congress votes on final version of each appropriation bill.

\section*{4 Approving the Final Budget}

As each appropriation bill is approved by Congress, it is presented to the President to veto or sign into law.
- President signs or vetoes the appropriation bills. If a bill is not approved by October 1st, Congress must pass a continuing resolution for unfunded agencies to ensure their continued operation.

The OMB reviews all of the many agency proposals, often in budget hearings at which agency officials must defend their dollar requests. Following the OMB's review, revised and usually lowered spending plans for all of the agencies in the executive branch are fitted into the President's overall program. They become a part of the budget document-a part of the political statement-the President sends to Capitol Hill. \({ }^{7}\)

Congress and the Budget Remember, Congress depends upon and works through its standing committees. The President's budget proposals, therefore, are referred to the Budget Committee in each chamber. There, in both the House and Senate committees, those money requests are studied and dissected with the help of the Congressional Budget Office (CBO).

The CBO is a staff agency created by Congress in 1974. It provides both houses of Congress and their committees with basic budget and economic data and analyses. The information that the CBO supplies is independent of the information provided by the OMB, which, recall, is the President's budget agency.

The President's budget is also sent to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees. \({ }^{8}\) Their subcommittees hold extensive hearings in which they examine agency requests, quiz agency officials, and take testimony from a wide range of interested parties. Lobbyists for most of the interest groups discussed earlier (in Chapter 9) are actively involved in those hearings. They testify, bring grass-roots pressures to bear, and otherwise work to promote the interests of the organizations they represent. (And campaign contributions from these groups often find their way to members of those subcommittees-in particular, to their chairmen and ranking members.)

The two Appropriations Committees shape measures that later are reported to the 7 Congress enacts a separate budget to cover its own expenses. The federal courts' spending requests are prepared by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts and sent directly to Congress.

8 All tax proposals included in the budget are referred to the House Ways and Means Committee and to the Senate's Finance Committee.

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}
alternate lesson plan To help students understand the federal budget, give them a summary budget showing the major categories of entitlement and discretionary spending and figures for what the Federal Government spends on each. Then give students the major categories of federal revenue and how much money the government receives. Ask them to balance the budget without raising taxes. They must justify what they did, and then evaluate if they would raise revenue instead of just cutting spending.

To see this lesson plan, go to floor of each house. Those measures are the bills that actually appropriate the funds on which the government will operate.

The two Budget Committees propose a concurrent resolution on the budget to their respective chambers. That measure, which must be passed by both houses by May 15 , sets overall targets for federal receipts and spending in the upcoming fiscal year. The estimates are intended to guide the committees in both houses as they continue to work on the budget.

The two Budget Committees propose a second budget resolution in early September. Congress must pass that resolution by September 15 , just two weeks before the beginning of the next fiscal year. That second budget resolution sets binding expenditure limits for all federal agencies in that upcoming year. No appropriations measure can provide for any spending that exceeds those limits.

Congress passes thirteen major appropriations bills each year. Recall, each of these measures must go to the White House for the President's action. Every year, Congress hopes to pass all thirteen of the appropriations measures by October 1 -that is, by the beginning of the Federal Government's fiscal year.

It seldom does so, however. Congress must then pass emergency spending legislation to Singer and songwriter John Legend testifies before a House Appropriations hearing on funding for the arts. Why do you think the congressional appropriation hearings are open to the public?

avoid a shutdown of those agencies for which appropriations have not yet been signed into law. That legislation takes the form of a continuing resolution. When signed by the President, the measure allows the affected agencies to continue to function on the basis of the previous year's appropriations. Should Congress and the President fail to act, many agencies of the Federal Government would have to suspend their operations.
binding
adj. creating a legal obligation to do something

Essential Questions To continue to build a Journal
response to the chapter
Essential Questions Journal

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: How is federal spending determined?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. (a) What are entitlement programs? (b) List three examples of those government programs.
3. Why is controllable spending sometimes referred to as "discretionary spending?"
4. What is the purpose of a continuing resolution?
5. Describe the basic steps involved in creating the federal budget.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Identify Central Issues (a) What programs do you think are considered high priorities by most Americans? (b) How are these priorities taken into account during the creation of the federal budget?
7. Predict Consequences (a) What might occur if the OMB accepted all agency funding requests without holding budget hearings? (b) What would be the advantages and disadvantages if this were to occur?

\section*{Quick Write}

Cause-and-Effect Writing: Identify Causes and Effects Using your research for the Section 2 Quick Write, create a graphic organizer to help you determine how government spending priorities were affected by the needs of the nation at the time and identify possible explanations for the government's actions. Were programs created? Were taxes affected? Did the actions remedy the problem? Keep in mind that there can be multiple causes and effects.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining the \\ budgetary process \\
(Questions 1, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the "Federal Budget" graphic in this \\
section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Listing entitlement \\ programs (Questions \\ 2, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students review the content under \\ "Spending Priorities" and create a list of \\ programs that are American priorities.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding \\
controllable spending \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a graphic organizer \\ capturing the main points under "Control- \\ lable and Uncontrollable Spending."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining a continu- \\ ing resolution (Ques- \\ tion 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review with students the budget process \\ and what results if a budget is not approved \\ in time.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining the \\ ramifications of \\ the OMB accepting \\ all agency budget \\ requests (Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students brainstorm the positive and \\ negative effects of this scenario.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Caption Open hearings allow interested parties to give testimony, bringing grass-roots pressures to bear.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Most federal spending is uncontrollable and must be paid, such as entitlements and interest on the public debt. Congress and the President can decide how much to spend on controllable items. Their decisions on discretionary spending are influenced by the President's policies, federal agency estimates, congressional hearings and revisions, and lobbyist pressure.
2. (a) programs in which federal law requires payments to be made to all citizens who meet the eligibility requirements (b) OASDI (social security), Medicare, Medicaid, food stamps, unemployment insurance, veterans' benefits 3. because Congress and the President can decide how much money to allocate-they can use their discretion
4. to allow government agencies whose budgets have expired to continue operating until new appropriations are approved
5. Each federal agency submits spending estimates to the OMB, which revises these plans and fits them into the overall budget. The President sends this proposed budget to Congress. Budget Committees set overall revenue and spending targets. Appropriations Committees hold hearings and fashion final bills. Congress votes on the final bills and sends them to the President to sign or veto.
6. (a) Answers will vary. (b) through lobbying efforts and through the President and Congress members, who represent citizens' interests
7. (a) Answers should include wasteful spending and a ballooning public debt. (b) People might be happy initially, but the uncontrolled public debt might crash the economy.
QUICK WRITE Organizers should show the effects of national needs on spending priorities.

\section*{LESSON GOALS}
- Students will analyze news programs by selecting stories to air from a newspaper.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{SURVEY}

Ask students what television news programs they watch and list them on the board. Have students explain why they choose to watch that specific program. Is it because it covers local stories? Is it unbiased? Is it sensational? I s it the most popular program? Ask: Which of these programs do you think is the best in delivering the news? Record the results on the board.

\section*{SELECT NEWS STORIES}

Divide the class into four groups and provide each group with a section of this morning's newspaper: international news, local news, sports, or entertainment. Have each group select five stories from their section that they think should be covered in that morning's television news program. Then, divide the class into new groups so that one individual from each section is a member of the new group. Assign each group to either a local or national program. Have groups select eight stories to cover and determine in which order they will be aired.

\section*{Defend the selections}

Have each group share the results of their discussion and explain the reasoning for their choices. Ask: How did limiting the number of stories to air affect their selection process? What stories got cut and why? How did their group's designation as a local or national news program affect their decision making?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

You may wish to have students answer the What Do You Think questions.

\section*{Answers}
1. Sample answer: The producers may differ in their opinion of the story's importance to their audience or to the producers' political agenda.
2. sample answer: to shape viewer opinion in one direction or another
3. Summaries should reflect an understanding of the differing goals of local and national news programs and should express an opinion on program quality.

Television news programs are one of the major ways that most Americans keep up with local, national, and world events. These news programs are a valuable resource for people who want to stay aware of current events, but they also have the potential to influence public opinion.

Whenever you watch a television news program, you should think critically about how the information is presented to you.
1. Think about the choice of stories. There are more news events in any given day than a single news program can hope to cover. The producers of news shows have to choose which stories to report, and how long to spend on each story. By keeping track of which stories are covered, and for how long, you can get a sense of the priorities of the television news program.

2. Pay attention to headlines and pictures. Television news programs often use pictures and headline graphics to shape viewer reactions. For each news story, look closely at the headline graphics. Which words are the biggest? Are there any visual elements that are used just for entertainment or shock value?
3. Compare with news coverage on other stations. It can sometimes be very interesting to watch multiple television news programs on the same day, to see how they handle the news differently. Are they covering the same stories? Do they describe those stories the same way? Does one program include information about the news story that another program leaves out?
4. Look for signs of bias. You will often hear people talk about a "liberal bias" or a "conservative bias" in certain television news programs. Whatever their intentions may be, all news programs have to make choices in terms of what stories to report and how to report them, and sometimes these choices might be informed by political opinions.

\section*{What do you think?}
1. What does it mean when one television news program spends more time on a story than does another news program?
2. Other than time constraints, why would a television news program choose to leave information out of a particular story?
3. You Try It Watch the coverage of one local and one national television news station and compare their coverage of the same day's news. Then, write a brief summary of your investigation and indicate which of the two you think is the more useful and informative news broadcast.

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Analyze Television News Programs. It includes a lesson plan for you and worksheets to help students analyze news for content, structure, and point of view. Breaking News scenario cards supply each team with details of a breaking story to guide their own newscast. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on How to Analyze Television News Programs at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{Fiscal and Monetary Policy}

Guiding Question
How does the Federal Government achieve its economic goals? Use a table like the one below to keep track of the methods used by the government to meet its broad economic goals.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{4}{|c|}{ Types of Economic Policy } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Goal } & \begin{tabular}{c} Fiscal \\ Policy
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{c} Monetary \\ Policy
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} \(\bullet\) \\
- Full \\ employment
\end{tabular} & \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\ \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- gross domestic • monetary policy product
- inflation
- deflation
- recession
- fiscal policy
- open market open marke
- reserve
requiremen
- discount rate

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the overall goals of the Federal Government's actions in the economy.
2. Explain the features and purposes of fiscal policy.
3. Explain the features and purposes of monetary policy.

Image Above: Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke testifies on monetary policy at a congressional hearing.

"t's the economy, stupid." That slogan has become a watchword in electoral politics. It first appeared during the presidential campaign of 1992, on a sign that hung on the wall of political advisor James Carville's office in Bill Clinton's campaign headquarters. Mr. Clinton, the Democratic Party's nominee, faced a daunting challenge in that election: How could he possibly convince the voters that he, not incumbent George H.W. Bush, should sit in the White House?

Mr. Bush, the 41 st President of the United States, brought a substantial record to the contest-a record highlighted by the end, at long last, of the cold war and a stunning victory in the Persian Gulf War. Mr. Clinton, and Carville and Paul Begala, his chief campaign advisors, were convinced that the key to success in November lay in the domestic, not the foreign policy realm. The nation's economy was in shambles and, to their minds, the incumbent President was vulnerable on that score, and events proved them right.

The successful management of the economy is vital not only to a President's political survival. It has a very direct and immediate effect on the well-being of every man, woman, and child in this country. In this section, we explore the Federal Government's key economic goals and the principal mechanisms with which it attempts to achieve those ends.

\section*{Overall Economic Goals}

The American economy is enormously complex. The nation's gross domestic product (GDP) -the total value of all final goods and services produced in the country each year-is now some \($ 14\) trillion. Over recent decades, the American people have come to expect that the government will actively and effectively control the behavior of this gigantic beast. The fortunes of presidencies, of members of Congress, and of political parties rise and fall in no small part on the basis of the economy's performance. In response to popular demand, the Federal Government seeks to achieve three main goals in the economic realm: full employment, price stability, and economic growth.

Full employment, as you might guess, means that there are enough jobs available to employ all those who are able and willing to work. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, in the Department of Labor, compiles employment and

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Since the Great Depression, Americans have grown to expect the Federal Government to take action to influence the economy. - The Federal Government has three broad economic goals: full employment, price stability, and economic growth. • Fiscal policy influences the economy by adjusting taxes and government spending. • Monetary policy influences the economy by using open market operations, reserve requirements, and the discount rate to adjust the supply of money in circulation.
CONCEPTS: enumerated and implied powers, separation of powers enduring understandings: - The Federal Government uses fiscal and monetary policy as tools to promote full employment, price stability, and economic growth.

GUIDING QUESTION
How does the Federal Government achieve its economic goals?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Types of Economic Policy} \\
\hline Goal & Fiscal Policy & Monetary Policy \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- Full employment \\
- Price stability \\
- Economic growth
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Increase government spending or cut taxes to stimulate economic activity \\
- Cut government spending or raise taxes to slow economic activity
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Increase money supply to stimulate economic and employment growth \\
- Decrease money supply to slow inflation \\
- Fed can increase money supply by buying back government securities, decreasing reserve requirement, or lower discount rate \\
- Fed can decrease money supply by selling securities, increasing reserve requirement, or raising discount rate
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- discuss the nation's current economic situation and the tools available to the government to address it.
- analyze monetary and fiscal policy tools, using a transparency.
- analyze graphs of economic performance on the government's main economic goals and suggest policy actions.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

Before distributing this section's Core Worksheet to students, have them review the information in the Skills Handbook, p. S19, about drawing inferences and conclusions.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 213) before class.

Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 214)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: What is our current economic situation? What tools can the government use to address the situation? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Ask for volunteers to read their responses to the Bellringer questions. Make sure the tools suggested are applicable to the current situation.

\section*{DISCUSS ECONOMIC POLICY TOOLS}

Ask: When the Fed buys back securities from banks or sells securities to banks, what are these operations called? (open market operations) Display Transparency \(16 F\), Government's Economic Tools, which is a diagram of the uses of fiscal and monetary policies. Ask: What actions might the government consider in a recession? (increasing government spending, cutting taxes, buying back securities, decreasing reserve requirement, reducing discount rate) What is the reserve requirement? (the amount of money that the Fed requires banks to hold in reserve) How does lowering the reserve requirement increase the amount of money in circulation? (Banks must hold less in reserve, freeing up more money for loans. Increased borrowing puts more money into circulation.) What actions might the government consider if prices rise too fast? (cutting government spending, increasing taxes, selling securities, increasing reserve requirement, raising discount rate) What is the discount rate? (the rate of interest a bank must pay to borrow money from a Federal Reserve Bank) How does raising the discount rate decrease the money supply? (Higher interest rates make borrowing more expensive for banks and their customers. As a result, borrowing decreases-resulting in less money flowing into the economy.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Increased prices due to inflation can reduce the purchasing power of consumers.
Caption fiscal policy
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How can inflation affect the economy?
dampen \(v\). to deaden or check tamp
v. to push down, press unemployment data. Its reports are a major indicator of the nation's economic health.

Price stability refers to the absence of significant ups and downs in the prices of goods and services. A general increase in prices throughout the economy is called inflation. A general decrease in prices is known as deflation. The Consumer Price Index (the CPI), also reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, tracks trends in the prices of consumer goods.

Both inflation and deflation have harmful effects on the economy. Higher prices due to inflation rob consumers of purchasing power because their dollars buy less than they once did. Deflation makes it difficult for people and businesses to borrow money because the assets they use to borrow against decline in value. Deflation also hurts farmers and other producers, who receive less for their products. This makes it difficult for them to pay their loans, which in turns hurts banks and investors.

A growing economy is one in which the GDP constantly increases. That growth helps produce a higher standard of living. When there is an absence of growth and the economy shrinks, a recession occurs.

\section*{Fiscal Policy}

Fiscal policy is a major tool with which the Federal Government seeks to achieve its broad economic goals. Fiscal policy consists of the government's powers to tax and spend to influence the economy.

Earlier in this chapter, you read about the generating of revenue and the making of spending decisions through the federal budget process. In addition to deciding how to raise and how to spend money, policymakers must consider what effects their taxing and spending decisions will have on the overall economy. Federal spending represents about 20 percent of the nation's GDP. How money is collected and spent can have a real effect throughout the economy-on employment, on prices, and on growth.

As a general matter, an increase in government spending means heightened economic activity; spending cuts tend to dampen that activity. Tax increases take money out of people's pockets and can slow economic growth. Tax cuts can boost economic activity.

For the better part of 150 years, the Federal Government did not make vigorous use of fiscal policy. Federal income and outgo represented just a bare fraction of GDP. As recently as 1930, that fraction amounted to just over 3 percent of GDP. The Federal Government simply stood by as ups and downs rippled through the economy. Those ups and downs were seen as an inevitable and even a healthy feature of a free enterprise system.

The Great Depression of the 1930s was a particularly severe downturn. Recall that, in the midst of that crisis, British economist John Maynard Keynes advocated an increase in governmental spending and a decrease in taxes to help end the economic misery. Over time, Keynes's ideas have gained wide acceptance. Now, during a downturn, policymakers usually seek to expand the economy with greater spending and/or lower taxes. Thus, when President George W. Bush took office in 2001, a slowdown loomed and he urged massive tax cuts. He hoped that by putting more money in people's pockets, he could help the economy rebound.

Fiscal policy can also be used to slow inflation. In theory, cuts in government spending and/or tax increases can tamp down inflation across the entire economy.

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 16, Section 4:
L \(\mathbf{L}\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 213)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 214)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 215)
L3 Quiz A (p. 217)
L2 Quiz B (p. 218)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 219)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 222)

1) Analyzing Political Cartoons Influencing the economy can be an extremely delicate matter. A small action can result in an unexpected outcome requiring a change in policy that may lead to unexpected results. How does this cartoon illustrate the complexity of monetary policy?

Fiscal policy does have its limits. For one thing, it takes time for policy changes-for example, an increase or reduction in spend-ing-to have a measurable effect on the economy. Timing the delivery of hikes or cuts is a very tricky matter. So policymakers often resort to other means to influence economic activity.

\section*{Monetary Policy}

Monetary policy is the most significant of those other means by which the Federal Government can influence the nation's economy. Monetary policy involves the money supply (the amount of currency in circulation) and the availability of credit in the economy.

The Federal Reserve Board (the Fed) is responsible for the execution of the government's monetary policy. Its seven members are appointed by the President and Senate to serve overlapping 14 -year terms. The Board directs the work of the Federal Reserve System as an independent agency created by Congress. It was established to function as the nation's central bank Congress intended the Fed to impose some order on a patchwork banking system that had become increasingly prone to panics. \({ }^{9}\) Panics occur when depositors lose confidence in banks and rush to recover their funds. If enough customers do so, a bank can be overrun and driven out of business. A panic can spread to infect other banks and, conceivably, an entire banking system. The Fed was designed to avert such a calamity. It serves as a source of emergency funding to prevent panics.

Again, the key function of the Fed is to frame monetary policy. By taking steps to increase the money supply, it can provide a short-term boost to the economy, leading to economic growth and an increase in employment. The Fed can produce the opposite

9 Panic comes from the Latin panicus, meaning "terified"; also from, Pan, the Greek god of nature, thought to inspire fear

\section*{prone}
adj. likely, subject or liable to

\section*{Background}

INFLATION AND FISCAL POLICY The government's fiscal tools-taxing and spend-ing-influence the economy by affecting demand for goods and services. When overall demand rises, prices rise. This is inflation-a general increase in prices throughout an economy. When demand declines, prices decline. The Federal Government is a huge consumer. Its spending represents about 20 percent of the economy. When the government wants to reduce inflation, it can decrease its own spending. This drop in demand for products slows price increases. The government can also increase taxes to control inflation. Higher taxes leave less money for consumers to spend-decreasing demand and inflation. Fiscal policy is not a popular way to control inflation. Cuts in government spending can mean less money for education, highways, and other programs, and no one likes to pay higher taxes.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 16 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 215), which shows data about the performance of the U.S. economy in three areas.
Divide the class into groups to complete the worksheet.
L2 Differentiate Group students with higher-level students to help them interpret the data shown.

ELL Differentiate Review each graph as a class and discuss the information shown.

\section*{REVIEW CORE WORKSHEET}

Have groups share their proposal for addressing economic concerns. Tell students that in 2008 President George W. Bush approved a tax rebate and the Fed dropped the discount rate several times to help stabilize the economy. Display the Bellringer transparency again and ask: Did the Bush Administration use fiscal or monetary policy, or both? (both-tax rebates are fiscal policy; reducing the discount rate is a monetary policy) What economic goals did the Bush policies target? (Both cutting taxes and reducing the discount rate promote full employment and economic growth. ) How might these government actions affect inflation? (Both actions would be expected to increase inflation. Reducing inflation requires the opposite actions-increasing taxes and raising the discount rate.) Why is making economic policy challenging? (Actions to improve some aspects of the economy may worsen others. Also, it takes some time for actions to influence the economy, and it is difficult to determine whether changes in the economy resulted from the government's actions or from other factors.)

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L1 L2 Differentiate List on the board each fiscal and monetary policy option discussed in the text. Have students draw a cause-and-effect diagram for each government action.
[4 Differentiate Have students research an effort by the Federal Government to influence the economy using fiscal policy or monetary policy between 1970 and 2000. Then, have them determine whether those efforts were successful and write a brief summary of their conclusions.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons Addressing one economic issue can result in a larger problem with another.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{\(L 3\)} work.
\(L 3\) Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 217)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 218 )
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding how \\ fiscal and monetary \\ policy can influence \\ the economy \\
(Questions 1, 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Create a flowchart illustrating how specific \\ government actions affect elements of the \\ economy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding gross \\ domestic product \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a graphic illustrating \\ how to calculate a nation's GDP.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding the \\ difference between \\ inflation and deflation \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students look up each term in the \\ glossary or other sources and write their \\ definition in their own words.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining how \\ exonomic goals are \\ critical to economic \\ stability (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students brainstorm a list of reasons \\ why these goals are critical to a stable \\
economy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Determining govern- \\ ment involvement in \\
the economy \\
(Questions 6, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Create a list of the actions the government \\ can take and brainstorm possible results if \\ the government did not take action.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint buy back government securities, decrease reserve requirements, cut discount rate

Checkpoint In what ways can the Fed increase the money supply?
effect by decreasing the supply of money and consequently slowing inflationary pressures.

The Fed can alter the money supply through three major mechanisms. Its tools for that purpose are open market operations, reserve requirements, and the discount rate.

Open Market Operations When the Fed seeks to alter the money supply, it does not simply send out trucks that carry bundles of cash to or from member banks. Its operations are far more sophisticated. It operates through what are called open market operations-a process that involves the buying or selling of government securities, such as bonds, from and to the nation's banks. By buying these government securities back from the banks, the Fed provides money to banks, which can then make loans to individuals and to businesses. If its aim is to decrease the money supply, the Fed sells government bonds through its open market operations. As it receives money from the banks that buy those securities, money is removed from circulation. Subsequently, the banks have less money to loan or invest, and so business activity slows.

Reserve Requirements The Fed can also influence or alter the amount of money in circulation by changing the reserve requirements that all banks and similar financial institutions must meet. The reserve requirement is the amount of money that the Federal Reserve Board determines banks must keep "in reserve" in their vaults or on deposit with one of the 12 Federal Reserve Banks. Those funds cannot be used to make loans or for any other purpose. They remain, instead, out of circulation, available for use in the event of sudden, unexpected demand.

If the Fed sees a need to lower the money supply, on the other hand, it can require that banks increase the amount they have in reserve. Or the reserve requirement can be relaxed by the Fed to increase the amount of money in circulation.

Discount Rate The third mechanism available to the Fed involves the discount rate. The discount rate is the rate of interest a bank must pay when it borrows money from a Federal Reserve Bank. Interest, recall, is the cost borrowers incur and must repay in order to borrow money. If the Fed raises the discount rate, banks find it more difficult to obtain money. Banks must then charge higher interest rates to their customers; borrowing decreases and less money flows into the economy. Cutting the discount rate has the opposite effect.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapte }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your

\section*{SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT} Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer this question: How does the Federal Government achieve its economic goals?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What is the gross domestic product?
3. What is the difference between inflation and deflation?
4. How can the use of fiscal policy and monetary policy influence the overall national economy?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Identify Central Issues (a) What are the three main economic goals the government aims to achieve? (b) Why do you think these goals are critical to a healthy economy?
6. Drawing Conclusions Should the Federal Government have the author Federal Government have to take actions that can alter the ity to take actions that can alter the nation's economy? Why or why not?
7. Predict Consequences Why might policymakers hesitate to use fiscal policy to influence the nation's economy?

\section*{Quick Write}

Cause-and-Effect Writing: Create an Outine Review your notes and graphic organizer from Section 3 to clarify the cause-and-effect relationships between the issues and the data you found. What issues seemed data you foun time? Did the fedeal budget and e. Did the federal budget and governme actions reflect those concerns? Create an outline of the relationships with supporting data to help you determine how best to present the information -chronologically or by order of importance-to your audience.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Federal Government uses fiscal and monetary policy to adjust taxes, government spending, and the money supply to achieve its goals of full employment, price stability, and economic growth.
2. the total value of all final goods and services produced by a nation in a year
3. Inflation is a general increase in prices throughout an economy, while deflation is a general decrease in prices.
4. Fiscal policy adjusts the level of taxes and government spending to increase economic activity or slow inflation. Monetary policy uses open market operations, reserve requirements, and the discount rate to adjust the money supply in order to stimulate economic growth or slow inflation.
5. (a) full employment, price stability, economic growth (b) Full employment, stable prices (and therefore stable purchasing power), and a growing economy promote a high standard of living for the nation's citizens, leading to a stable nation.
6. Yes, because government actions can promote economic stability by reducing the extremes in the economy's ups and downs; OR No, because the free market will make the necessary economic adjustments more efficiently without government interference
7. Fiscal policy takes a long time to work. How the government taxes and spends can also have unintended consequences on the overall economy-affecting employment, prices, and growth. Cutting programs and raising taxes are politically unpopular.
QUICK WRITE Outlines should show a chronological or a rank-order organization.

Sources of Government Revenue
\begin{tabular}{|ll|}
\hline Income tax & \begin{tabular}{l} Progressive tax on the income of both individuals and \\ corporations
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Social insurance tax & \begin{tabular}{l} Regressive tax withheld from employee paychecks to \\ support social programs
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Excise tax & \begin{tabular}{l} Regressive tax on the manufacture, sale, or consumption of \\ goods and/or on services rendered
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Estate tax & Tax on the assets of someone who dies \\
\hline cift tax & Tax on a gift of money or property \\
\hline Custom duty & Tax on goods imported into this country \\
\hline Interest & Monies paid on charges to governmental loans \\
\hline Licenses and fees & Monies paid for licenses, passports, patents, fines, etc. \\
\hline Seigniorage & Income gained from production of coins and paper money \\
\hline Borrowing & Monies gained through the sale of bonds \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary} fiscal policy \(p .456\) progressive tax p. 459 payroll tax \(p\). 460 regressive \(\operatorname{tax} \rho .461\) excise tax \(p .461\) estate tax \(p\). 461 gift tax \(p .461\) customs duty \(p .462\) interest \(p .462\) deficit \(p\). 463 surplus \(p .468\)
demand-side economics p. 464 supply-side economics p. 464 public debt \(\rho\) - 466 entitement \(p .467\) controllable spending \(\rho .468\) uncontrollable spending \(p .468\) continuing resolution \(p .471\) gross domestic product \(p .473\) inflation \(p .474\) deflation \(p\). 474 recession p. 474 fiscal policy p. 474 monetary policy p. 475 open market operations p. 476 reserve requirement \(p .476\) discount rate p. 476

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the federal budget, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 De Capua, Sarah. Paying Taxes. Children's Press, 2002.
L2 Grote, Joann A. The Internal Revenue Service. Chelsea House, 2001.
L3 Boortz, Neal and John Linder. The FairTax Book: Saying Goodbye to the Income Tax and the IRS. HarperCollins Publishers, 2006.
L4 Bittle, Scott and Jean Johnson. Where Does the Money Go?: Your Guided Tour to the Federal Budget Crisis. HarperCollins Publishers, 2008.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Making Audio Study Guides For auditory learners, there is no better way to review and absorb information than an audio study guide. In fact, most types of learners can benefit from listening to information while they are performing other tasks. Even if students are not actively paying attention to the content, they will still retain some of it. Tell students they can make their own audio study guide by using a computer, a CD burner, or an MP3 player and audio software. Students can record their own voices reading summaries of text information or lectures, asking questions and then providing the answers, reciting terms or key dates followed by their definitions or meanings, and more. The audio files can be listened to while traveling to school, waiting in line, exercising, or during any "down time."

\section*{assessment at a glance}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debate, p. 461
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) Taxes must be for public purposes only; export taxes are prohibited; direct taxes must be equally apportioned among States by population; and all indirect taxes must be levied at the same rates nationwide.
(b) Students might suggest that these provisions help limit the power of government and preserve federalism by ensuring that federal taxes are applied equally to all States. Students might also note that the Framers included the export-tax restriction as part of the Commerce Compromise and the direct-tax restriction as part of the Three-Fifths Compromise.
2. (a) individual income tax, corporation income tax, social insurance taxes, excise tax, estate/gift taxes, and customs duties (b) individual income tax (c) Excise tax is paid practically on a daily basis because the retail price of many consumer purchases contains some form of excise tax.
3. Answers will vary, but should show an understanding that federal regressive taxes do require some individuals to pay more proportionally, but that the progressive income tax requires those with more income to pay more than those with less.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) The government borrows money through the sale of federal securities, such as Treasury notes, bills, and bonds. (b) Answers will vary, but should note that monies borrowed by the government are often used to fund programs that benefit the public. (c) Answers will vary, but should note that government borrowing increases the public debt, which future taxpayers will have to pay.
5. (a) the total amount of money the government owes, including interest (b) Yes, the huge and increasing debt puts a drag on the economy and unfairly transfers the burden of payment to future generations. OR No, the government's need to raise revenue to fund necessary programs and provide for national security is more important than the increasing debt.

\section*{SECTION 3}
6. (a) Controllable spending refers to items for which Congress and the President can decide how much to spend. Uncontrollable spending refers to spending that neither

11 Chapter Assessment

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) What are the four limits on the power to tax as set out in the Constitution? (b) Why do you think these limitations were included by the Framers?
2. (a) What are the different types of taxes? (b) Which federal tax raises the most revenue? (c) Which tax are you most likely to pay on a regular basis? Why?
3. Do you think the current federal taxation system is equitable? Why or why not?

\section*{Section 2}
4. (a) How does the government borrow money? (b) Who benefits from this borrowing system? (c) Who, if anyone, is disadvantaged by government borrowing?
5. (a) What is the public debt? (b) Do you think the concern about the size of the public debt is justified? Why or why not?

\section*{Section 3}
6. (a) What is the difference between controllable and uncontrollable spending? (b) How would you classify entitlement programs? (c) Why do you think Congress structured the financing of these programs in this manner?
7. (a) What is the President's role in the budget-making process? (b) What is Congress's? (c) Is this process a joint effort between the President and Congress? Explain.
8. (a) Should the Constitution be amended to require a balanced budget each year? (b) What might be the results of such an amendment?

\section*{Section 4}
9. (a) What are the principal economic goals of the Federal Government? (b) What methods are used by the government to meet these goals? (c) Should the government be involved in the economy? Why or why not?
10. (a) What agency is responsible for implementing monetary policy? (b) What tools are available to this agency to influence the nation's economy? (c) Which of these tools do you think might produce the quickest results? Why do you think so?
11. Analyzing Political Cartoons (a) Who do the characters in this cartoon represent? (b) What comment is being made through the doctor's diagnosis?

\section*{Writing About Government}
12. Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write a cause-and-effect essay on the relationship between the actions of the government and the nation's priorities. Make sure that your thesis statement is clearly stated, your ideas are well-organized and your argument is supported. See pp. S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
13. Essential Question Activity Take a poll of 10 to 15 individuals in your community. Ask: (a) What issues are priorities for Americans today? Which one is the most important to you?
(b) Within the last six months, has the Federal Government taken any action to address that issue? If so, what? (c) Which federal programs or services do you think could be cut back or abolished to help deal with the issue? Would you be willing to pay additional taxes to cover the cost? If not, how should the government pay for it? (d) Do you think the Federal Government is responsive to the priorities of Americans? Why or why not?
14. Essential Question Assessment Using the results of your poll, create a chart illustrating the top priorities of Americans today to help you answer the Essential Question: How should the federal budget reflect Americans' priorities? Then, write a letter to your Americans' priorities? Then, write a letter to your congressperson expressing the issues that are the top congressperson expressing the issues that are the top concerns and suggesting metho could use to address the issues.

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{gathered}\text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ \text { Question }\end{gathered}\) Journal Questions Journal.}

478 Chapter 16 Assessment

Congress nor the President has the power to change. (b) uncontrollable (c) Entitlement programs are structured to ensure that the programs continue to run from administration to administration, and that those eligible for the programs continue to get the services needed.
7. (a) Through the work of the OMB, the President makes the initial proposal for the federal budget to Congress. The President also signs the finished legislation. (b) Through their budget and appropriations committees, both houses of Congress review the President's budget and fashion bills to appropriate funds. Both houses vote on these bills. (c) Yes. The budget process is a negotiation between the President and both houses of Congress to arrive at a final spending plan. OR No. Although Congress creates the appropriation bills, the President can veto any appropriations, which gives the President the power to control the results of the budgetary process.
8. (a) Yes, because an amendment would force the government to balance the budget, which it won't do on its own; OR No, because an amendment would take away the flexibility needed to raise funds

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Addressing the Rising Cost of Healthcare}

The costs of entitlement programs and the constraints they place on the federal budget have been debated at great length. Most Americans agree that these programs are critical to the public's well-being, however. As the documents below illustrate, keeping these programs going without undermining others is proving to be a very difficult fiscal challenge.

\section*{Document 1}

In the United States a large and growing portion of both federal and state expenditures is for subsidized health insurance. In 1975, federal spending on Medicare and Medicaid was about 6 percent of total non-interest federal spending. Today, that share is about 23 percent. Because of rising costs of health care and the aging of the population, the CBO projects that, without reform, Medicare and Medicaid will be about 35 percent of non-interest federal spending in 2025. This trend implies increasingly difficult tradeoffs for legislators and taxpayers, as higher government spending on health care spending will. . . require reductions in other government programs, higher taxes, or larger budget deficits.
-Ben S. Bernanke, Chairman, Federal Reserve, 2008

\section*{Document 2}

If the major entitlement programs grow as forecast, our children will be forced to choose between massive tax increases, near-elimination of all government programs outside of entitlements (including defense and essential services), or some combination. . . . Because of these rising entitlement obligations, ensuring longterm fiscal stability requires much more than addressing current spending and deficits, important as that is. Also necessary is finding a means of controlling the costs of the major entitlement programs, without compromising their essential functions.
-Katherine Baicker
Council of Economic Advisors, 2005

Document 3
Federal Healthcare Expenditures

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. D
2. Both documents are concerned with the fact that without reform, the cost of entitlement programs will have dire effects on other programs and the federal budget.
3. Possible response: Yes, the Federal Government should continue to subsidize heal thcare, because our society has a responsibility to provide the necessities of life to citizens in need. Also, in the end, those with insurance will be forced to pay for those without insurance through their own premiums. OR No, the federal government should not continue to subsidize heal thcare, because buying insurance should be the responsibility of the individual-not the government.
Differentiate Students use all the documents on he page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

\section*{Use your knowledge of financing government and the documents} above to answer Questions 1-3.
1. What is the main point of Document 3?
A. Controllable expenditures are becoming uncontrollable.
B. Entitlement programs are too costly.
C. Revenue from healthcare has increased.
D. Subsidized healthcare costs have risen considerably over time.
2. What concerns are discussed in both Document 1 and Document 2?
3. Pull It Together Considering the expense of the entitlement program, do you think that the Federal Government should continue to provide subsidized healthcare? Why or why not?

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.
quickly in crisis situations (b) A balanced budget would require painful cuts in some programs and the elimination of some altogether. It would also likely require large tax increases.

\section*{SECTION 4}
9. (a) full employment, price stability, and economic growth (b) altering taxes, the money supply, and spending (c) Answers will vary, but should take into account the pros and cons of government involvement.
10. (a) the Federal Reserve Board (b) The Fed can alter the supply of money in circulation by buying or selling federal securities, changing the required reserve amount, and adjusting the discount rate. (c) Economic policies take time to show results especially in times of economic slumps since people are less likely to spend money even if they have it.
11. (a) Uncle Sam (the U.S.) and the Fed chairman Ben Bernanke (b) that the American economy is seriously ill

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
12. Essays should follow the organization students outlined in an earlier step, show clear cause-and-effect relationships, and be well supported with appropriate details.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
13. Student polls should summarize opinions on economic priorities and government actions to address these priorities.
14. Letters should state the priorities that the student found to be of greatest importance, and the methods of addressing the issues should be reasonable and practical.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 4}

What makes a good President?

\section*{CHAPTER 17}

How should the United States interact with other countries?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: How does this image reflect Americans' aspiration for peace? (A visiting foreign dignitary shows the American desire to use diplomacy to promote international interaction and peace while the ritual of reviewing the troops is a symbolic illustration of the U.S. military's strength and power to maintain peace. ) In this chapter, students will learn about U.S. foreign policy and its role in national security. Have students further explore U.S. foreign policy and national defense by completing the Chapter 17 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.
before reading
L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 17 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 234)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

You may wish to teach thinking creatively and innovating as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 17 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 253) to help students learn to think creatively and to innovate. The worksheet asks students to read an excerpt about the redeployment of U.S. troops in Iraq, identify the problem, brainstorm solutions, and understand the factors involved. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 254).

\section*{WebQuest \\ Online The chapter WebQuest challenges} students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about foreign policy and national security.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 and Section 2 lessons, but instead of the Section 1 skit, complete the first Section 1 Extend activity in class. Omit the Section 2 Extend activities and Debate BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 and Section 4 lessons, omitting the Bellringers, Debates, and Extend activities.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Divide the class into six groups and assign each group one of the following: the State Department, the army, the air force, the navy, the Department of Homeland Security, or the Director of National Intelligence. Have students use the textbook and other sources to research each of these groups, focusing on how they are involved in the formulation and implementation of foreign policy. Then, review the history of American foreign policy using Section 3 and have students correlate the appropriate policy with the research they conducted on their assigned department or organization. Have each give a brief summary of their findings to the class.
FOLLOW UP Have students create a list of the key foreign policies of the United States and provide examples and/or summaries of what methods the Federal Government used or uses in exercising these policies.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- list examples of internationalist policies and discuss whether these policies have benefitted or harmed U.S. interests.
- explore the State Department's role in protecting Americans by role-playing and writing a newspaper article on an incident involving American travelers abroad.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- explore the tension between security and personal liberty by analyzing a quotation.
- analyze possible government responses to potential security threats.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- describe foreign policies from U.S. history, using a transparency.
- understand U.S. foreign policies as they relate to historic events by creating a timeline.
- analyze primary source passages from the Truman Doctrine, using a worksheet.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- describe how foreign aid programs and defense alliances promote U.S. interests.
- evaluate current international issues and how foreign aid benefits the region affected as well as the United States.
- compare and contrast the rights delineated in the UN Universal Declaration on Human Rights with those in the U.S. Constitution.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1 S
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4
Advanced Students

How is foreign policy made and conducted?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Foreign Policy} \\
\hline & & , \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
President \\
- Interacts with foreign officials as chief diplomat \\
- Responsible for military actions as commander in chief \\
- Responsible for making and conducting foreign policy \\
- Appoints secretary of state and ambassadors \\
- May handle foreign policy matters directly, but often relies heavily on the secretary of state
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Secretary of State \\
- Leads State Department \\
- Advises President on foreign policy
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
State Department \\
- Carries out foreign policy \\
- Bureaus organized geographically and functionally \\
- Foreign Service members represent U.S. abroad \\
- Ambassadors stationed at capital of each recognized state \\
- Ambassadors also represent U.S. at the UN, NATO, and international conferences \end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- list examples of internationalist policies and discuss whether these policies have benefitted or harmed U.S. interests.
- explore the State Department's role in protecting Americans by role playing and writing a newspaper article on an incident involving American travelers abroad.

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{Foreign Affairs and Diplomacy}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How is foreign policy made and conducted? Use a chart like the one below to keep track of the main themes in the conduct of American foreign policy.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Foreign Policy} \\
\hline 7 & | & \} \\
\hline President & Secretary of State & State Department \\
\hline - & & - \\
\hline \(\bullet\) & - & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline - & - & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- domestic affairs • ambassador
- foreign affairs - diplomatic
- isolationism immunity
- foreign policy - passport
- right of legation • visa

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the difference between isolationism and internationalism.
2. Define foreign policy.
3. Understand that a nation's foreign policy is composed of its many foreign policies.
4. Describe the functions, components, and organization of the Department of State.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

Image Above: Secretary of State John Foster Dulles meets with General Chiang Kai-Shek.
n The Federalist No. 72, Alexander Hamilton noted that the "actual conduct" of America's foreign affairs would be in the hands of "the assistants or deputies of the chief magistrate," the President. Today, most of the President's "assistants or deputies" in the field of foreign affairs are located within the Department of State.

Foreign affairs have been of prime importance from the nation's very beginnings, more than a dozen years before Hamilton penned his comment in The Federalist. Indeed, it is important to remember that the United States would have been hard pressed to win its independence without the aid of a foreign ally, France.

\section*{Isolationism to Internationalism}

With the coming of independence, and then for more than 150 years, the American people were chiefly concerned with domestic affairs-with events at home. Foreign affairs, the nation's relationships with other nations, were of little or no concern to them. Through that period, America's foreign relations were very largely shaped by a policy of isolationism -a purposeful refusal to become generally involved in the affairs of the rest of the world.

The period from the 1940s onward, however, has been marked by a profound change in the place of the United States in world affairs. The coming of World War II finally convinced the American people that neither they nor anyone else can live in isolation-that, in many ways, and whether we like it or not, the world of today is indeed "one world." The well-being of everyone in this country-in fact, the very survival of the United States-is affected by much that happens elsewhere on the globe. If nothing else, the realities of ultra-rapid travel and instantaneous communications make it clear that we now live in a "global village."

Wars and other political upheavals abroad have an impact on the United States and on the daily lives of the American people. Five times over the past century, the United States fought major wars abroad; and in several other instances, the nation has committed its armed forces to lesser, but significant, foreign conflicts. Terrorists in Europe, Asia, and at home; racial strife in southern Africa; Arab-Israeli conflicts in the Middle East; and other events in many

To help students learn to draw inferences and conclusions, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S19, and use the information there to write a newspaper article about the Core Worksheet activity in this lesson.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - Foreign policy consists of all stands and actions a nation takes in its relationships with other nations. - The President is responsible for making and conducting foreign policy. - The State Department is led by the secretary of state appointed by the President. • State Department officials promote U.S. interests abroad.
CONCEPTS: enumerated powers, limited government, separation of powers enduring understandings: • The United States has been moving away from isolationism toward more involvement in world affairs. - U.S. internationalist foreign policy reflects the belief that world events affect the well-being of Americans.
places around the globe have threatened this nation's security.

Economic conditions elsewhere also have a direct and often immediate effect on and in this country. The American economy has become part of a truly global economy, linked by international banking, multinational corporations, and worldwide investments that transcend national boundaries.

Clearly, today's world cannot be described as "one world" in all respects, however. The planet remains, in many ways, a very fractured and dangerous place. Acts of terrorism, various civil wars, the threat of "rogue states"-these dangers, and more, make the point abundantly clear. In the interconnected yet divided world of today, only those policies that protect and promote the security of all nations can assure the security and well-being of the United States.

\section*{Foreign Policy Defined}

Every nation's foreign policy is actually many different policies on many different topics. It is made up of all of the stands and actions that a nation takes in every aspect of its relationships with other countriesdiplomatic, military, commercial, and all others. To put the point another way, a nation's foreign policy includes everything that that nation's government says and everything that it does in world affairs.

Thus, American foreign policy consists of all of the Federal Government's official statements and all of its actions as it conducts this nation's foreign relations. It involves treaties and alliances, international trade, the defense budget, foreign economic and military aid, the United Nations, nuclear weapons testing, and disarmament negotiations. It also includes the American position on oil imports, grain exports, human rights, immigration, climate change, space exploration, fishing rights, cultural exchange programs, economic sanctions, computer technology exports, and a great many other matters.

Some aspects of foreign policy remain largely unchanged over time. For example, an insistence on freedom of the seas has been a basic part of American policy from the nation's beginnings. Other policies are more flexible. Two decades ago, resisting the ambitions of the Soviet Union was a basic part of American foreign policy. Since the fall of the Soviet Union, the United States and Russia have built close, if not always friendly, political, military, and economic ties; the United States has also developed close relations with other former Soviet republics.

The President is both the nation's chief diplomat and the commander in chief of its armed forces. Constitutionally and by tradition, the President bears the major responsibility for both making and conducting foreign policy. The President depends on a number of officials and agencies-Hamilton's "assistants or deputies"-to meet the immense responsibilities that come with this dual role. Here we will examine the President's diplomatic support. In the next section, we will look at the defense and military departments.

\section*{The State Department}

The State Department, headed by the secretary of state, is the President's right arm in foreign affairs. The President names the secretary of state, subject to confirmation by the Senate. It is to the secretary of state and to the Department of State that the President
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)

\section*{sanction} n. penalty imposed for some hostile act(s)
- Analyzing Political Cartoons In an effort to bring peace to the region, several Presidents have brokered talks between Palestinian and Israeli leaders. According to this cartoon, how successful have these diplomatic efforts been?

What is foreign policy?
fractured adj. divided, split

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 17, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 234)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 238)
\(\boxed{\boxed{ } 2}\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 239)
L3 Core Worksheets A and B (pp. 240, 241)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 244)
L3 Quiz A (p. 245)
L2 Quiz B (p. 246)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 238) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 239)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following on the board: After World War II, American foreign policy shifted from an isolationist position to an internationalist one. What types of foreign policy activities demonstrate internationalism? Answer in your notebook.
L2 Differentiate For students who might have difficulty with some of the vocabulary in the Bellringer statement, write these terms and definitions on the board: internationalism (active involvement with the concerns and interests of other nations) and isolationism (staying out of the concerns and interests of other nations).
14 Differentiate Have higher-level students complete the Bellringer activity, but add the following to the statement on the board: Has the policy of internationalism been helpful or harmful to the United States?

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Read the Bellringer question aloud and ask for student volunteers to read their responses. Encourage a classroom discussion of students' opinions; any students who strongly disagree with the responses that are read out loud should read their own responses, as a way of stimulating discussion.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It is made up of all the stands and actions that a nation takes in every aspect of its relationships with other countries.
Analyzing Political Cartoons Not very successful. The cartoon portrays the peace deal as standing on a house of cards, which is not a firm foundation.

Implementing Foreign Policy
The State Department aims to achieve four major goals as it carries out America's foreign polices. It employs the methods outlined below. How might achieving one of these goals relate to achieving the others? in the fictional country of Zabrin. Assign a student to each role. Then explain that students without acting roles are reporters who will write a newspaper article about the incident. Instruct them to use Core Worksheet \(B\) to take notes as they watch the skit to help them write their article.
The teacher-only worksheet "Scenario: Incident in Zabrin" (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 242) provides the sequence of events as the incident unfolds. Have students who are playing roles stand up and take their positions around the room. Explain that as you narrate the unfolding incident, you will pause after each event for the actors to act it out. Explain that the actors should move around as needed to play the scenes.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about implementing foreign policy.

\section*{Answers}

Implementing Foreign Policy Possible response: Promoting American values helps to advance the other goals of advancing democracy, protecting America, and supporting the efforts of diplomatic officials. If people in other nations gain a better understanding of American values, hopefully they will become allies rather than adversaries.

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}
alternate lesson plan The U.S. Department of State Web site (www.state.gov) has a wealth of information that can give students a first-hand glimpse into State Department affairs, including biographies, videos, press releases, virtual tours, and information about careers. Ask students to explore the site and choose an area of interest to describe to the class through a poster, brochure, or oral report.

To see this lesson plan, go to successor, Condoleezza Rice, who is both a woman and an African American, served from 2005 to 2009.

Today, the duties of the secretary relate almost entirely to foreign affairs. That is, they center on the making and conduct of policy and on the management of the department, its many overseas posts, and its workforce of more than 20,000 men and women. \({ }^{1}\)

Some Presidents-most famously, Woodrow Wilson and Franklin Roosevelt-have tended to ignore their secretaries of state and have handled many foreign policy matters personally and quite often directly. Others, notably Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, and George H.W. Bush, have chosen instead to rely on their national security advisors (whose formal title in the Executive Office of the President is, recall, Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs). Some chief executives-in particular, the earlier ones-have chosen to delegate a large share of the responsibility for matters of foreign policy to the secretary. Whatever the relationship between this Cabinet officer and the President, the secretary of state has been an important figure in every administration.

Organization and Components The State Department is organized along both geographic and functional lines. Some of its agencies, such as the Bureau of African Affairs and the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs, deal with matters involving particular regions of the world.

Other agencies have broader missionsfor example, the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs, sometimes called "Drugs ' \(n\) ' Thugs." Most bureaus are headed by an assistant secretary and include several offices. Thus, both the Office of Passport Services and the Office of Visa Services are found in the Bureau of Consular Affairs.

1 The secretary does have some domestic responsibilities. Thus, when Richard Nixon resigned the presidency on August, 9 1974, his formal, legal announcement of that fact had to be submitted to Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. Over the years, the secretary and the department have had (and been relieved of) a fairly wide range of domestic functions-including publishing the nation's laws, issuing patents, and supervising the decennial census.

\(\triangle\) An architect's conceptual drawing of the new U.S. embassy in Beijing, China. Why do you think the design has the building set back and surrounded by water?

\section*{Overseas Representatives}

Some 12,000 men and women now represent the United States as members of the Foreign Service, many of them serving abroad. Under international law, every nation has the right of legation - the right to send and receive diplomatic representatives. International law consists of those rules and principles that guide sovereign states in their dealings with one another and in their treatment of foreign nationals (private persons and groups). Its sources include treaties, decisions of international courts, and custom. Treaties are the most important source today. The right of legation is an ancient practice. Its history can be traced back to the Egyptian civilization of 6,000 years ago.

The Second Continental Congress named this nation's first foreign service officer in 1778. That year, it chose Benjamin Franklin to be America's minister to France. He served in that capacity for nearly eight years.

Ambassadors An ambassador is the official representative of a sovereign state in the conduct of its foreign affairs. \({ }^{2}\) For some five 2 See Chapter 14, Section 3. An ambassador's official title is Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary. When the office is vacant or the ambassador is absent, the post is usually filled by the next-ranking Foreign Service officer in the embassy. That officer, temporarily in charge of embassy affairs, is known as the chargé d'affaires.

\section*{Debate}
"An ambassador is an honest man sent to lie abroad for the good of his country." -Henry Wotton Use this quote to start a classroom debate on the role of diplomacy in implementing foreign policy. Prompt students to consider situations in which an ambassador (or other diplomat or foreign service official) might feel a conflict between the best interests of his or her home country and the country in which he or she is stationed.

\section*{DISCUSS THE GUIDED SKIT}

Conduct a brief discussion with the class about the guided skit activity. Ask students to describe their reactions to the events that occurred, and ask them whether the actions of the characters in the skit illustrated the qualities needed to be a good diplomat.

\section*{WRITE A NEWSPAPER ARTICLE}

Divide students into small groups, making sure that each group has some students who played roles in the guided skit and some students who were observers. Tell them that they are reporters for the local newspaper and that they have been assigned to write an article on the incident in Zabrin. They should work as a group to produce their newspaper article. Group members should share their notes on Core Worksheet B to help the group identify significant moments to include in the article. Encourage students to include quotes from the characters in the skit in their articles.

L2 Differentiate Before students begin writing their articles, have students who observed the skit (rather than acting in it) recap the major events. Use their descriptions to write a timeline on the board.

> Government
> All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Caption The construction of an embassy needs to take into consideration the security of those working inside. Setting it back from the street or providing a protective moat can supply a subtle defense system against possible attacks or infiltration.
Checkpoint Ambassadors are appointed by the President with the consent of Congress. Although they are now being selected more frequently based on their background, they are sometimes chosen for their support of the President.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L1 L2 Differentiate Have each student bring in one article involving U.S. foreign policy. Students can find the article in print or online resources. Display Transparency 17A, Implementing Foreign Policy. Have a volunteer read aloud the State Department's goals listed. Then ask students to summarize the foreign policy actions described in their article. After each summary, have the class identify the foreign policy goals that the actions promote.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "U.S. Foreign Relations" (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 244), which has students research the media for reports about U.S. involvement in foreign countries.
L3 54 Differentiate Have students choose a nation and research, either online or in the library, the United States ambassador to that nation. Ask students to write a short biography of their research sub ject.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing a Newspaper Article (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 290).
L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 245)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 246)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

The Iran Hostage Crisis Possible response: Diplomats can help work out our differences with these nations and promote better relationships.

\section*{An American hostage is paraded in front of the media by lranian militants in 1979.}

Although an embassy serves a specific diplomatic function, it is also a symbol of the nation it represents. Occasionally, tensions between nations can cause citizens of one country to protest or even attack another country's embassy to express their anger at that country.
In 1979, Iranian students occupied the U.S. embassy in the capital, Tehran, and held embassy staff hostage for 444 days. The Iran Hostage Crisis was an unusual and unprecedented assault against both a nation and international diplomatic law. Why does the United States send diplomats to posts where political conditions are unstable?

For the first time, yellow ribbons were tied to trees to symbolize public support for the hostages.
centuries now, most of the formal contacts between sovereign nations-that is, most of their diplomatic relationships-have been conducted through their duly appointed ambassadors.

In this country, ambassadors are appointed by the President, with Senate consent, and they serve at his pleasure. Today, the United States is represented by an ambassador stationed at the capital of each sovereign state this nation recognizes. Thus, American embassies are now located in more than 180 countries around the world.

The United States now maintains over 260 diplomatic and consular offices abroad as well. There, Foreign Service officers promote American interests in a multitude of ways for example, encouraging trade, gathering intelligence data, advising persons who seek to enter this country, and aiding American citizens who are abroad and in need of legal advice or other help.

Some ambassadorships are much desired political plums, and whenever a new President moves into the White House, he typically makes many new appointments. Too often, Presidents have appointed people to ambassadorships and other major diplomatic posts as a reward for those individuals' sup-port-financial and otherwise-of the President's election to office. However, in many cases these ranks are filled with career diplomats in the Foreign Service.

President Harry Truman named the first African American, Edward R. Dudley, as an ambassador to Liberia, in 1949. Later that same year President Truman also appointed the first woman, Eugenie Anderson, as ambassador to Denmark

Special Diplomats Those persons whom the President names to certain other top diplomatic posts also carry the rank of ambassador. Examples include the United States representative to the UN and the American member of the North Atlantic Treaty Council. The President also often assigns the personal rank of ambassador to those diplomats who take on special assignments abroad-for example, representing the United States at an international conference on arms limitations or Arab-Israeli relations.

Diplomatic Immunity In international law, every sovereign state is supreme within its own boundaries. All persons or things found within that state's territory are subject to its jurisdiction.

As a major exception to that rule, ambassadors are regularly granted diplomatic immunity-they are not subject to the laws of the state to which they are accredited. They cannot be arrested, sued, or taxed. Their official residences (embassies) cannot be entered or searched without their consent, and all official communications and other properties are

\section*{Myths and Misconceptions}

AMBASSADORS Most Americans are surprised to learn that the United States did not have ambassadors for nearly half of its history. The Constitution called for the establishment of embassies abroad, and the United States did send diplomatic representatives to many countries. But these representatives were ministers or consulate officials, not ambassadors. Why the delay? In the early years of the country, ambassadors were associated with monarchies, and anything viewed as a tool of the monarchy was something the United States understandably tried to stay far away from.
protected. All other embassy personnel and their families receive this same immunity.

Diplomatic immunity is essential to the ability of every nation to conduct its foreign relations. The practice assumes that diplomats will not abuse their privileged status. If a host government finds a diplomat's conduct unacceptable, that official may be declared persona non grata and expelled from the country. The mistreatment of diplomats is considered a major breach of international law.

Diplomatic immunity is a generally accepted practice. There are exceptions, however. The most serious breach in modern times occurred in Iran in late 1979. Militant followers of the Ayatollah Khomeini seized the American embassy in Tehran on November 4 of that year; 66 Americans were taken hostage and 52 were held for 444 days. The Iranians finally released the hostages moments after Ronald Reagan became President on January 20, 1981.

Passports A passport is a legal document issued by a state that identifies a person as a citizen of that state. It grants that person a right of protection while traveling abroad and the right to return to the homeland. Passports entitle their holders to the privileges accorded to them by international custom and treaties. Few countries will admit persons who do not hold valid passports.

\section*{Travel Documents}

Some years ago, a valid passport was all one needed to travel abroad and enter most other countries. Today, most countries also require a visa. Why do you think this is now the case?

Passports
- Issued by a government and identifies the bearer as a citizen or national of the issuing country
- Entitles the bearer to consular protection abroad and to return to his or her country of citizenship
- Valid for 10 years
- Three types: diplomatic, official, tourist

Visas
Issued by the country the individual requests permission to enter
- Permits the traveler to remain in a country for a specified period of time, but does not guarantee entry
- Valid only for the time period stated
- Of many types, including: transit, tourist, business, and student

The State Department's Office of Passport Services now issues more than ten million passports to Americans each year. Do not confuse passports with visas. A visa is a permit to enter another state and must be obtained from the country one wishes to enter. Trips to most foreign countries require visas today. Most visas to enter this country are issued at American consulates abroad.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing how foreign policy \\ is made and conducted \\
(Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Work with students to create on the \\ board the graphic organizer shown \\ at the beginning of the section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining the U.S. move from \\ isolationism to internationalism. \\
(Questions 2, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students brainstorm ways \\ in which nations are tied together \\ more closely today than ever \\ before; for example, global trade, \\ instant communication through \\ the Internet, terrorist organizations \\ operating across borders.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Identifying foreign policies \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students look through \\ newspapers or magazings to find \\ images and articles on American \\ foreign policies.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Analyzing the selection and \\ roles of diplomats (Questions \\ 4, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have pairs of students brainstorm \\ the benefits of career diplomats \\ and the reasons for stationing \\
American diplomats abroad.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding diplomatic \\ immunity (Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students suggest scenarios \\ about what might happen if dip- \\ lomats did not have immunity in a \\ foreign country.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible response: As visas are provided by the admitting country, that country's government can place limits on the number of people coming into the country and can control and keep track of those who are actually permitted to enter the country.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Foreign policy goals and agendas are set by the President, who relies on the secretary of state and the State Department to determine the best ways to implement them.
2. because the nations of the world have become increasingly interconnected, both politically and economically, and it is now clear that the problems in other nations can directly affect our safety and well-being
3. (a) all stands and actions that a nation takes in relationships with other countries-diplomatic, military, commercial, and all others (b) possible examples: treaties, alliances, nuclear weapons agreements, import and export policies, economic sanctions, economic aid, military aid
4. A career diplomat would have the skills and experience needed for the job.
5. Yes. Foreign conflicts are costing the lives of American soldiers and economic resources that could be better used at home. Economic globalization is costing American jobs. No. Globalization is happening and cannot be stopped. What happens in one country affects us all, whether we like it or not. Isolationist policy is simply putting our heads in the sand.
6. Possible response: Foreign relationships are complex. The people implementing foreign policy can better assess the diplomatic situation when they are present in the foreign country.
7. Diplomatic immunity allows diplomatic officials to act as official representatives of their home nations without fear of harassment or coercion.
QUICK WRITE Students should clearly describe the problem they selected.

GUIDING QUESTION
How does the Federal Government safeguard this nation's security?

\section*{SECTION 2}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline & \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Protecting National Security } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Secretary of \\ Defense
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- President's chief advisor on defense policy \\
- Leads Defense Department
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Joint Chiefs of \\ Staff
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Military advisors to secretary of defense, Presi- \\ dent, and National Security Council
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Military Departments: \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Department of \\ the Army
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Military operations on land \\
- Defends the U.S. if attacked \\
- Protects American interests abroad
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Department of \\ the Navy
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Defends the nation through sea warfare
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Marine Corps & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Provides support to navy and air force operations \\
- Carries out land operations to reinforce naval \\ campaigns
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Department of \\
the Air Force
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Protects the U.S. from enemy air, ground, or \\ sea forces \\
- Provides support for land and sea operations
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Director of \\ National Intel- \\ ligence
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- President's chief advisor on national security \\
- Directs and supervises intelligence agencies \\
- Gathers intelligence and dispenses it as \\ necessary
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Department \\ of Homeland \\
Security
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Protects U.S. against terrorism \\
- Conducts border and transportation security \\
- Protects national infrastructure \\
- Prepares for and responds to national \\ emergencies \\
e Defends the nation against chemical, biological, \\ radiogical, and nuclear attack
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{INNOVATE AND THINK CREATIVELY}

Image Above: Two members of the Joint Service Color Guard present the colors at a military ceremony.

\section*{Guiding Question}

How does the Federal Government safeguard this nation's security? Use a table like the one below to keep track of the methods used to safeguard the nation.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{ Protecting National Security } \\
\hline Secretary of Defense & • \\
\hline & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- espionage
- terrorism

\section*{Objectives}
1. Summarize the functions, components, and organization of the Department of Defense and the military departments.
2. Explain how the Director of Nationa Intelligence and the Department of Homeland Security contribute to the nation's security.

To practice thinking creatively and innovating in this section, use the Chapter 17 Skills Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 253). You may teach the skill before the Opinion Line activity in this lesson. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 254).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The secretary of defense is the President's chief advisor on military matters.
- The military departments protect the U.S. domestically and internationally. The DNI advises the President on national security issues. - The Department of Homeland Security coordinates public and private organizations on issues related to national emergencies.

CONCEPTS: role and purpose of government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The Constitution ensures civilian control of the military by making the President the commander in chief and granting broad military powers to Congress. • U.S. intelligence agencies covertly acquire information to help secure the nation. - The size and extensive infrastructure of the U.S. makes it nearly impossible to protect against all terrorist activities.

Thus, the Constitution makes the elected President the commander in chief of the armed forces. To the same end, it gives broad military powers to Congress - that is, to the elected representatives of the people. \({ }^{3}\)

3 Recall that the Constitution makes defense a national function and practically excludes the States from that field. Each State does have a militia, which it may use to keep the peace within its own borders. Today, the organized porion ( Aricl। Section 8 Clauses 15 and 16 ) to "provide for calling forth the Militia" and to provide for organizing arming and disciplining it and to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining it militia into federal service in 1795 , and the commander in chief has had that authority ever since Today the governor of each State is the commander in chief of that State's units of the Army and the Air National Guard, except when the President orders those units into federal service.

The principle of civilian control has always been a major factor in the making of defense policy and in the creation and staffing of the various agencies responsible for the execution of that policy. The importance of civilian control is clearly illustrated by this fact: The National Security Act of 1947 provides that the secretary of defense cannot have served on active duty in any of the armed forces for at least 10 years before being named to that post.

The Secretary of Defense The Department of Defense is headed by the secretary of defense, whose appointment by the President is subject to confirmation by the Senate. The secretary, who serves at the President's Checkpoint Who are the nation's civilian authorities?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 17, Section 2:
\(L 3\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 247)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 249)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 251)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 252)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 253)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 254)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 255)
L3 Quiz A (p. 256) L2 Quiz B (p. 257)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- explore the tension between security and personal liberty by analyzing a quotation.
- analyze possible government responses to potential security threats.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 247) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 249)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: "Our history has shown us that insecurity threatens liberty. Yet, if our liberties are curtailed, we lose the values that we are struggling to defend." Do you agree or disagree with this statement? Why or why not? Answer in your notebook.
L2 ELL Differentiate For students who might have difficulty with some of the vocabulary in the Bellringer statement, provide definitions on the board for insecurity (the feeling of being unsafe or vulnerable) and curtail (reduce or restrict).
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the constitutional principle of civilian control of the military.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the President and Congress
Civilian Control of the Military Military power can pose a threat to free government. Civilian control reduces the risk that the military might overpower the civilian government.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Ask volunteers to read their responses to the Bellringer activity. Guide a class discussion of the quotation by asking students to consider the statement in the context in which it was published, as part of the 9/11 Report, an analysis of the attacks on the United States on September 11, 2001. It may help to separate some of the premises behind the statement: that freedom and security are necessarily in conflict with each other, that giving up some measure of freedom can increase our security, and that giving up some measure of security is one of the prices we pay for living in a free society. Remind students that there are no easy or right answers here-no society yet, ours included, has found an easy balance between freedom and security.

\section*{DISCUSS}

The security of the United States is monitored and guarded by a variety of government agencies. These agencies endeavor to keep the nation secure to the best of their ability, but sometimes security and freedom conflict. Tell students that a good example of this tension between freedom and security is flying on commercial airplanes.
Use the Think-Write-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to lead this class discussion. Tell students a few of the ways that commercial airline travel has changed since September 11, 2001. Specifically, explain that the Federal Government put in place much stricter security procedures for airline passengers. Passengers are now required to present a government-issue ID before flying, and must take off shoes, belts, hats, jackets, and other personal items for a security screening. Also, passengers cannot carry more than three ounces of liquid through the security checkpoints, and cannot have sharp objects with them on the plane.
Remind students that all of these measures represent some degree of a loss of privacy, but the government implemented them in response to specific threats to the security of aircraft and passengers. Then, for the Think-Write-Pair-Share activity, ask: Can we safeguard the nation without giving up too much personal freedom?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the secretary of defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff pleasure, is charged with two major responsibilities. He is simultaneously (1) the President's chief aide and advisor in making and carrying out defense policy, and (2) the operating head of the Defense Department.

The secretary's huge domain is often called the Pentagon-because of its massive five-sided headquarters building in Virginia, across the Potomac River from the Capitol. Its operations regularly take a large slice of the federal budget every year for more than 70 years-and nearly a fourth of all federal spending today. The global war on terrorism has forced vast increases in expenditures for the military. The Department of Defense spent nearly \($ 300\) billion in fiscal year 2001, the year of the September 11 attacks. The Department of Defense will almost certainly spend more than twice that amount in fiscal year 2009.

Chief Military Aides The six members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff serve as the principal military advisors to the secretary of defense, and to the President and the National Security Council. This collective body is made up of the chairman of the Joint Chiefs, the vice chairman, the army chief of staff, the chief of naval operations, the commandant of the Marine Corps, and the air force chief of staff. The highest ranking uniformed officers in the armed services, the members of the Joint Chiefs are named by the President, subject to Senate approval.

\section*{The Military Departments}

The three military departments-the Departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force-are major units and sub-Cabinet departments within the Department of Defense. A civilian secretary, named by the President and directly responsible to the secretary of defense, leads each military department. The nation's armed forces-the army, the navy, and the air force-operate within that unified structure.

The Department of the Army The army is the largest of the armed services, and the oldest. The American Continental Army, now the United States Army, was established by the Second Continental Congress on June 14,1775 -more than a year before the Declaration of Independence.

The army is essentially a ground-based force, and it is responsible for military operations on land. It must be ready (1) to defeat any attack on the United States itself, and (2) to take swift and forceful action to protect American interests in any other part of the world. To these ends, it must organize, train, and equip its active duty forces-the Regular Army, the Army National Guard, and the Army Reserve. Over 350,000 Army National Guard soldiers and reservists have been called to service since September 11, 2001, many of them for the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq. All of the army's active duty forces are under the direct command of the army's highest ranking officer, the army chief of staff.

The Regular Army is the nation's standing army, the heart of its land forces. There are now over a half million soldiers on active duty-officers and enlisted personnel, professional soldiers, and volunteers. The army has been downsized dramatically in the postcold war era. At the time of the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991, there were more than 700,000 men and women on active duty.

Women make up about 15 percent of the Army and now serve in all Regular Army units, except the Special Forces. Over recent years, women's roles have come to include many combat-related duties in the army and in each of the other armed services, as well.

The army trains and equips its combat units to fight enemy forces. The infantry takes, holds, and defends land areas. The artillery supports the infantry, seeks to destroy enemy concentrations with its heavier guns, and gives anti-aircraft cover. The armored cavalry also supports the infantry, using armored vehicles and helicopters to spearhead assaults and oppose enemy counteroffensives.

Other units of the army provide the many services and supplies in support of combat troops. Those soldiers could not fight without the help of members of the engineer, quartermaster, signal, ordnance, transportation, military police, and medical corps.

The Department of the Navy The United States Navy was first formed as the Continental Navy-a fledgling naval force created by

490 Foreign Policy and National Defense

\section*{Background}

The Cost of defending the nation The cost of supplying our armed forces is enormous. In fiscal year 2007 alone, the U.S. Government spent nearly \($ 90\) billion on weapons systems and supplies for the armed forces. If Pentagon procurement were a Cabinet agency, it would rank fifth, with a budget about \($ 15\) billion less than that of the Department of Agriculture. Navy procurement ( \($ 32.6\) billion) and Air Force procurement ( \($ 33.4\) billion) combined exceed the budget for the Department of Transportation ($61.4 billion). Army procurement, at nearly \($ 20\) billion, was closest to the budget for the Department of Energy ( \($ 20.3\) billion).

\section*{The Armed Forces Overseas}

\section*{Major Military Deployments}

Protecting the nation's security does not end at the nation's borders. In fact, nearly one fourth of the armed forces of the United States is now stationed abroad. Today, the top five areas to which the men and women of the American military are deployed are in East Asia, Southwest Asia, and Europe. Why is it necessary to post the armed forces overseas in order to protect national security?

the Second Continental Congress on October 13, 1775. Ever since, its major responsibility has been sea warfare.

The chief of naval operations is the navy's highest ranking officer and is responsible for its preparations and readiness for war and for its use in combat. Similar to the army, the navy's ranks also have been thinned in the post-cold war period. Today, some 330,000 officers and enlisted personnel serve in the navy, with women making up about 15 percent of the force.

The Second Continental Congress established the United States Marine Corps (USMC) on November 10, 1775. Today, it operates as a separate armed service within the Navy Department, but it is not under the control of the chief of naval operations. Its commandant answers directly to the secretary of the navy.

The marines are a combat-ready land force for the navy. They have two major combat missions: (1) to seize or defend land bases from which the ships of the fleet and the air power of the navy and marines can operate, and (2) to carry out other land operations essential to a naval campaign. Today, about 180,000 people serve in the USMC. The proportion of women in the marines is lower than it is in the other service branchesabout 6 percent.

The Department of the Air Force The air force is the youngest of the military services. Congress established the United States Air Force (USAF) and made it a separate branch of the armed forces in the National Security Act of 1947. However, its history dates back to 1907, when the army assigned an officer and two enlisted men to a new unit called the Aeronautical Division of the Army Signal Corps. Those three men were ordered to take "charge of all matters pertaining to military ballooning, air machines and all kindred subjects."

Today, the USAF is the nation's first line of defense. It has primary responsibility for military air and aerospace operations. In time

Checkpoint
What are the main responsibilities of each of the military departments?

\section*{campaign}
\(n\). a series of military actions taken toward a specific goal

\section*{Background}

ORIGIN OF THE NATIONAL SECURITY ACT The National Security Act of 1947, widely considered to be one of the most important pieces of defense legislation ever passed, was born at the end of World War II. America's experience in that war pointed to the need for more coordinated and efficiently-run armed forces. President Harry Truman spearheaded the effort to devise a plan that would not only coordinate all branches of the armed forces, but would also ensure that the executive branch and Congress were given powers equal to those of the military. The act created the National Security Council to coordinate domestic, foreign, and military policies relating to national security, and the CIA to fill the need for gathering and disseminating intelligence. Additionally, the act merged the War Department and Navy Department with the newly created Department of the Air Force into a single Departmet of Defense.

\section*{CONDUCT AN OPINION LINE}

Write "Agree" on the left side of the board, "Disagree" on the right side, and "Not Sure" in the center. (For more direction on the Opinion Line strategy, see p. T26.) Then, hand out the Chapter 17 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 251). In this activity, you will read a series of statements, and students will stand on the side of the room that applies to their opinion of the statement you have read. Tell students that they should be prepared to explain why they chose their position and should write their explanations on their Core Worksheet next to each statement.
L2 Differentiate For these students, distribute the adapted Chapter 17 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 252).

Tell students to go to the Online Update to find out where American troops are currently deployed.

\section*{Answers}

Major Military Deployments Overseas bases position American forces to protect our national interests abroad and to counter threats arising from other nations or extremist groups within other nations.
Checkpoint Army: responsible for military land operations domestically and where American interests lie abroad; Navy: responsible for warfare at sea and national defense; Air Force: responsible for military air and aerospace operations

Read the statements aloud one at a time and give students time to think about their answers, write their explanation in the space provided on their worksheet, and then move to the appropriate part of the room. After each statement, call on one student from each position and ask him or her to explain his or her choice. For statements 2 and 3 , ask students if their opinions would vary if the country were facing a major security crisis.
After one student from each side has explained his or her reasoning, ask the class to take a moment to think about what they have just heard and to consider whether they would like to change their own positions. If students do change positions, ask one or two of these students what new information persuaded them to change their minds. At the end of the activity, have students revise their written explanations as needed.

\section*{OPINION LINE REVIEW}

Tell students that each decision they made about the statements in the Opinion Line activity represents the type of decisions made regularly by members of the Office of the Director of National Intelligence and the Department of Homeland Security. Many important decisions about protecting our nation's security involve the possibility of compromising individual liberties. Conduct a brief class discussion about why these types of decisions are difficult, and have students use their experiences in the Opinion Line activity as the basis for the discussion.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to ensure that intelligence is received, evaluated, and shared in a timely and efficient manner among government agencies \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Why was the Office of the Director of National Intelligence established?
shroud
\(v\). to hide from view ideological
adj. having to do with the ideas or beliefs of of war, its major duties are to defend the United States; attack and defeat enemy air, ground, and sea forces; strike military and other war-related targets in enemy territory; and provide transport and combat support for land and naval operations.

Reduced by 150,000 since 1991 , the air force now has about 340,000 officers and enlisted personnel, about 20 percent of whom are women. All who serve in the USAF are under the direct command of the chief of staff of the air force.

\section*{The Director of National Intelligence}

The Director of National Intelligence (DNI) heads the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, established in 2005. The Office was born out of the pre-9/11 failure of the government's several intelligence agencies to collect and share information that might have warned of al Qaeda's coming attacks.

The President, with Senate approval, appoints the DNI, who is now the President's chief advisor in all matters relating to intelligence. The DNI supervises the operations of the 16 separate agencies that make up the federal intelligence community and directs the work of the National Counterterrorism Center (NCTC). The NCTC's hundreds of specialists receive and evaluate all information gathered by the intelligence community and relay it to all those who have "the need to know." As the first DNI, John Negroponte, put it: "Our job is to integrate foreign, military, and domestic intelligence in defense of the homeland and of United States interests abroad."

Some of the agencies controlled by the DNI are fairly well known, among them the FBI, the DEA, and the CIA. Indeed, for more than half a century, one of them, the Central Intelligence Agency, was-as its title sug-gests-the government's principal, its central, intelligence gathering organization. The CIA remains a major "cloak and dagger" agency, but the DNI now holds its once leading role in the intelligence community.

Some of the agencies in the intelligence community are little known, however, including the National Geospatial Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, and the world's largest spy organization, the National Security Agency. Much of their work involves espionage-spying-and is shrouded in deepest secrecy. Even Congress has generally shied away from more than a passing check on their activities, and their operating funds are disguised at several places in the federal budget each year.

Nearly all Americans agree that the work of the several agencies that comprise the intelligence community is absolutely essential to the security of the United States. At the same time, however, it is essential that both the policymaking leaders in the government and the American people clearly recognize the potential dangers of a complex of government agencies whose operations are conducted in utmost secrecy.

\section*{Department of Homeland Security}

The Department of Homeland Security (DHS) is charged with the awesome and complex task of protecting the United States against terrorism. Terrorism is the use of violence to intimidate a government or a society, usually for political or ideological reasons.

Congress created the department in 2002, and it became operational in 2003. It is responsible for the coordination and the direction of all antiterrorist activities of all of the public agencies that operate in the field of domestic security-including thousands of police departments, fire departments, emergency medical and search and rescue units, and other disaster response agencies across the country.

The Homeland Security Act of 2002 gives the department major operating responsibilities in five specific areas:
- border and transportation security
- infrastructure protection
- emergency preparedness and response
- chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear defense
- information analysis (intelligence)

The department was built mostly of agencies transferred to it from other Cabinet departments. Those agencies include the national guard The National Guard, part of U.S. reserve forces, is in many ways a direct descendent of the colonial-era State militias. The oversight and training of National Guard forces are under the direction of the individual States in addition to the Federal Government. Throughout their history, Guard forces have played a major role in military campaigns. National Guard units deployed overseas in both World War I and World War II; in World War I, nearly 40 percent of the American units stationed in France were National Guard rather than Regular Army. More recently, many Americans came to think of the National Guard primarily in terms of domestic service, as Guard units were often deployed both for defense and emergency response, but National Guard units also make up a significant percentage of the combat troops deployed in Iraq and Afghanistan.

\section*{Myths and Misconceptions}

\section*{Safeguarding} the Nation's Security
The attacks of September 11, 2001 illustrated the vulnerability of this nation and its people. Since those tragic events, the Department of Homeland Security was created and charged with the large and complicated task of protecting the security of this vast country. Achieving this goal requires the coordinated effort of the department's several agencies, State and local governments, and the American people. Why do you think coordinating the efforts of all levels of government is necessary in the safeguarding of the nation's security?

\section*{Prevention}

To detect and deter threats to the United States, the department
- Secures the nation's borders against terrorists, means of terrorism, illegal drugs, and other illegal activity
- Develops technology to detect and prevent the illegal possession and use of chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear materials
- Coordinates the collection and sharing of information
- Strengthens the security of the Nation's transportation system
- Enforces the nation's immigration laws
U.S. Border Patrol agent examines a pedestrian barrier in New Mexico.

\section*{Protection}

To safeguard the nation's infrastructure, economy, and citizens from acts of terrorism, or other emergencies, the department
- Implements a plan to protect both the nation's physical infrastructure and cyber infrastructure
- Combats financial and electronic crimes and identity theft
- Protects the President and other key government officials
- Works with other agencies to protect governmental activities
- Administers a unified preparedness strategy affecting all levels of government and the private sector

Secret Service agents ensure the President's safety.

\section*{Response}

To lead, manage, and coordinate the national response to acts of terrorism or other emergencies, the department - Maintains catastrophic all-hazard plans focusing on the nation's most vulnerable communities
- Promotes response readiness through integrated planning to meet such crises as health and medical emergencies or acts of terrorism
- Provides emergency housing following major disasters
- Partners with other agencies and the private sector to assist mariners in distress and to protect property
A U.S. Coast Guard officer searches for survivors of Hurricane Katrina.

\section*{Debate}
"This concept of 'national defense' cannot be deemed an end in itself, justifying any exercise of legislative power designed to promote such a goal. Implicit in the term 'national defense' is the notion of defending those values and ideals which set this Nation apart. "
-Chief Justice Earl Warren, 1967
Use this quote to begin a classroom debate. Explain that this was part of a Supreme Court ruling, and the heart of the issue was whether national security should be more important than personal liberty. In that context, Warren argued that the core values expressed in the Constitution were more important than the immediate problems of defense and security. Ask students to think about the quotation in that context, and to debate whether they agree with Warren that security is less important than liberty.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Display Transparency 17B, U.S. Overseas Troop Deployment by Country, which shows the U.S. overseas troops' changing demographics in specific locations over time. Explain that armed forces overseas defend and protect the national security of the United States. Have students analyze the graph and then write a brief paragraph utilizing their historical knowledge to determine why those locations were the focus of American troop deployment and buildup. Have them discuss their reasoning.
L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 17 Section 2 Extend Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 255), which asks students to answer questions about the Department of Homeland Security and come up with examples of how the government meets its security responsibilities.
L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students to review the text material under "Department of Homeland Security" while you distribute the Chapter 17 Section 2 Extend Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 255). Help students identify the five areas of responsibility of the Department of Homeland Security to write in the first column of the worksheet. (1. border and transportation security; 2. infrastructure protection; 3. emergency preparedness and response; 4. chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear defense; 5. information analysis) Define difficult words in this list: infrastructure (important structures and systems serving a society, such as dams, power plants, and subways); radiological (radioactive substances, or things that give off waves that could be harmful) Have students work in pairs to complete the worksheet. Discuss their responses as a class.
L4 Differentiate Have students write a letter to one of their senators or representatives that expresses their opinion on the questions of security and freedom covered in this chapter.
Tell students to go to the Online Update to learn more about the Department of Homeland Security.

\section*{Answers}

Safeguarding the Nation's Security The United States is a vast nation. No centralized agency could hope to protect it all. However, reasonable security can be achieved by enlisting the help of local public and private organizations to gather intelligence, secure key structures, and respond to emergencies.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the Core Worksheet and assess students' work.
\(L 3\) Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 256)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 257)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}

\section*{Answers}

Caption to guard against threats of bioterrorism and to protect the nation's oil supply
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing how the Federal \\ Government safeguards \\ security (Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Have students create a concept web of \\ the main ideas of the section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Identifying key defense \\ advisors (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review with students the content under \\ the Defense Department heading.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing the main duties \\ of the military departments \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Create a graphic organizer of the military \\ departments on the board.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining why espionage \\ is a tool in protecting \\ national security \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students for another word for espio- \\ nage (spying and have them brainstorm \\ the kinds of information spies might \\ discover.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Defining terrorism \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students list examples of recent \\ terrorist acts and help them determine \\ the similarities between these actions.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding civil control \\ of the military (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the Civilian Control of the Military \\ infographic with students.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Describing the duties and \\ responsibilities of the \\ Department of Homeland \\
Security (Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students complete the Extend \\ Worksheet.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

The State of Alaska and DHS jointly protect this 800 -mile pipeline that carries crude oil to a seaport. Why is the integrity of the Alaska pipeline important to national security?

the Secret Service and the newly entitled U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), from the Treasury Department; the Coast Guard and the Transportation Security Administration, from the Transportation Department; the renamed U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, from the Justice Department; and the independent Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

The threat of bioterrorism-the use of such biological agents as smallpox or anthrax as weapons-dramatizes the immensity of the problems facing the Department of Homeland Security. So, too, do these facts: There are nearly 600,000 bridges, 170,000 water systems, and more than 5,000 power plants (104 of them nuclear) in the United States. There are also 220,000 miles of rail lines, 1.5 million miles of natural gas pipelines, 25,000 miles of inland waterways, and 1,000 harbor channels. Additionally, there are some 470 skyscrapers (each over 500 feet high), nearly 19,000 airports (including some 300 major facilities), thousands of stadiums and other large gathering places, and nearly 20,000 miles of international border

Add to those fundamental facts such critical matters as the nation's food and water supply, its healthcare system, and its communications networks, and this point becomes clear: This country cannot be pro-tected-completely and absolutely-against terrorist acts. Terrorism thrives on unpredictability and uses it as a weapon to foment fear and anxiety.

It seems quite apparent that the best that can be hoped for in current circumstances is that (1) most-nearly all-terrorist attacks will be thwarted or their impacts will at least be minimized; and (2) those responsible for the attacks will be rooted out and brought to justice.

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\) Journal \(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Essential Question, go to your }\end{array}\) Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.}

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer this question: How does the Federal Government safeguard this nation's security?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Who are the key advisors to the President on issues of defense?
3. Describe the main duties of each military department.
4. Why might espionage be considered an important tool in protecting national security?
5. What is terrorism?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Identify Central Issues (a) Why do you think the Framers thought civilian control of the military to be so important? (b) Do you think it remains a matter of valid concern today?
7. Analyze Information (a) What are the five areas of responsibility tasked to the Department of Homeland Security? (b) How might the supervision of those areas help prevent terrorist attacks in the United States?

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Brainstorm Possible Solutions Recognizing that a problem exists may be quite simple, but coming up with a solution is often a difficult task. Using the description you wrote in Section 1, brainstorm ideas for possible solutions to the problem you selected. Then, organize your list to rank the solutions from most effective to least effective.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. America's defense consists of federal agencies and military departments under civilian control. The President makes defense policy and the Defense Department implements it. The Joint Chiefs of Staff advise the President, National Security Council, and secretary of defense. The military departments are responsible for protecting the United States domestically as well as its interests and citizens in other parts of the world. The Office of the Director of National Intelligence oversees the nation's intelligence agencies. The Department of Homeland Security coordinates efforts against terrorism and other national emergencies.
2. secretary of defense, secretary of state, Director of National Intelligence, Joint Chiefs of Staff
3. Army: land operations; Navy: sea warfare and defense; Air Force: air and aerospace
4. Possible answer: Espionage can help uncover secret plots targeting the United States.
5. the use of violence to intimidate a government or a society
6. (a) to prevent a powerful military from taking control of the government (b) Possible response: Yes. Military coups still occur today.
7. (a) border and transportation security; infrastructure protection; emergency preparedness and response; chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear defense; information analysis
(b) by reducing risk of terrorists entering the country, guarding critical targets; preparing local groups for quick response; developing technology to detect chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear weapons QUICK WRITE Solutions should be realistic and student rankings well-reasoned.

\section*{section 3}

\section*{American Foreign Policy Overview}

Guiding Question
How has American foreign policy changed over time? Use a timeline to keep track of the major changes in American foreign policy.

Policy of isolationism begins 1789

\section*{Political Dictionary}
\(\begin{array}{ll}\text { - collective } & \bullet \text { cold war } \\ \text { security } & \bullet \text { containmen }\end{array}\)
- deterrence - détente

\section*{Objectives}
1. Summarize American foreign policy from independence through World War I.
2. Show how the two World Wars affected America's traditional policy of isolationism.
3. Explain the principles of collective security and deterrence and their use during the cold war.
4. Describe American foreign policy since the end of the cold war.
5. Understand why the world remains a dangerous place.

Image Above: American diplomat Ben Franklin is received at the French court in Versailles in 1778.

The basic purpose of American foreign policy has always been to protect the security and well-being of the United States-and so it is today. It would be impossible to present a full-blown, detailed history of America's foreign relations in these pages, of course. But we can review its major themes and highlights here.

Why should you know as much as you can about the history of the United States? Because history is not "bunk," as automaker Henry Ford once described it. Let Robert Kelly, a leading historian, tell you what history really is: "History is our social memory. Our memories tell us who we are, where we belong, what has worked and what has not worked, and where we seem to be going."4

\section*{Foreign Policy Through World War I}

From its beginnings, and for 150 years, American foreign policy was very largely built on a policy of isolationism. Throughout that period, the United States refused to become generally and permanently involved in the affairs of the rest of the world.

Isolationism arose in the earliest years of this nation's history. In his Farewell Address in 1796, George Washington declared that "our true policy" was "to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world." Our "detached and distant situation," Washington said, made it desirable for us to have "as little political connection as possible" with other nations

At the time, and for decades to come, isolationism seemed a wise policy to most Americans. The United States was a new and relatively weak nation with a great many problems, a huge continent to explore and settle, and two oceans to separate it from the rest of the world.

The policy of isolationism did not demand a complete separation from the rest of the world, however. From the first, the United States developed ties abroad by exchanging diplomatic representatives with other nations, making treaties with many of them, and building an extensive foreign commerce. In fact, isolationism was, over time, more a statement of our desire for

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • The Monroe Doctrine and the concept of Manifest Destiny, which focused on isolationism and national growth, shaped American foreign policy through World War I. - The two world wars ended America's traditional policy of isolationism and led to a policy of internationalism. - Victory in World War II made the U.S. one of two world superpowers and led to the policies of collective security, deterrence, and containment.
CONCEPTS: role and purpose of government, democratic values and principles ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Knowledge of the history of American foreign policy is essential to understanding the foreign policy issues facing the U.S. today. - Although the cold war is over, the world is still a dangerous place requiring continued vigilance.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How has American foreign policy changed over time?

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE TIMELINES}

To help students learn to analyze timelines, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S29, and use the information explained there to complete this lesson's Core Worksheet A.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- describe foreign policies from U.S. history.
- understand U.S. foreign policies as they relate to historic events by creating a timeline.
- analyze primary source passages from the Truman Doctrine, using a worksheet.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 258) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 260)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following on the board: isolationism, Monroe Doctrine, Manifest Destiny, Roosevelt Corollary to Monroe Doctrine, Good Neighbor Policy, Open Door Policy, internationalism, collective security, deterrence, containment, détente. Write brief descriptions of three of these policies in your notebook.
L2 ELL Differentiate Allow students to choose two policies to describe.Differentiate Challenge students to describe as many policies as they can in the allotted time.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What was the intent of the Monroe Doctrine?
doctrine \(n\). a rule or principle that forms the basis of a policy or belief noninvolvement outside the Western Hemisphere than a description of United States policy within our own hemisphere.

The Monroe Doctrine James Monroe gave the policy of isolationism a clearer shape in 1823. In a historic message to Congress, he proclaimed what has been known ever since as the Monroe Doctrine.

A wave of revolutions had swept Latin America, destroying the old Spanish and Portuguese empires there. The United States viewed the prospect that other European powers would now help Spain and Portugal to take back their lost possessions as a threat to this country's security and a challenge to its economic interests.

In his message, President Monroe restated America's intentions to stay out of European affairs. He also warned the nations of Europe to stay out of the affairs of both North and South America. He declared that the United States would look on any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety.

\section*{Primary Source}
-Speech by President James Monroe to Congress, December 2, 1823

At first, most Latin Americans took little notice of this doctrine. They knew that it was really the Royal Navy and British interest in Latin American trade that protected them from European domination. But in 1867, the Monroe Doctrine got its first real test. While Americans were immersed in the Civil War, France invaded Mexico. The French leader, Napoleon III, installed Archduke Maximilian of Austria as Mexico's puppet emperor. In 1867, the United States backed the Mexicans in forcing the French to withdraw, and the Maximilian regime fell.

Later, as the United States became more powerful, many Latin Americans came to view the Monroe Doctrine as a selfish policy designed to protect the political and economic interests of the United States, not the independence of other nations in the Western Hemisphere.

A World Power Following its victory in the Revolutionary War, the United States began to expand across the continent almost at once. The Louisiana Purchase in 1803 doubled the nation's size in a single stroke and the Florida Purchase Treaty in 1819 completed its expansion to the south.

Through the second quarter of the nineteenth century, the United States pursued what most Americans believed was this nation's "Manifest Destiny": the mission to \section*{Remember the Maine}

Images of the sunken battleship and the "Remember the Maine" battle cry led to American intervention in Cuba.

The battleship U.S.S. Maine was sent to Cuba to protect American interests there during Cuba's struggle for independence from Spain. Its mysterious sinking in 1898 caused American outrage and demand for action. With its victory in the SpanishAmerican War, the United States itself became a colonial power by acquiring Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines. How are these events examples of the application of the Monroe Doctrine?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 17, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 258)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 260)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 262)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 263)
L3 Quiz A (p. 265)
L2 Quiz B (p. 266)

expand its boundaries across the continent to the Pacific Ocean. By 1900, the nation had not only accomplished that task, it had spread its influence beyond the continental boundaries to become both a colonial and a world power. The nation's interests now extended to Alaska, to the tip of Latin America, and across the Pacific to the Philippines.

The Good Neighbor Policy The threat of European intervention in the Western Hemisphere that troubled President Monroe declined in the second half of the nineteenth century. That threat was replaced by problems within the hemisphere. Political instability, revolutions, unpaid foreign debts, and injuries to citizens and property of other countries plagued Central and South America.

Under what came to be known as the Roosevelt Corollary to the Monroe Doctrine, the United States began to police Latin America in the early 1900s. Several times, the marines were used to quell revolutions and other unrest in Nicaragua, Haiti, Cuba, and elsewhere in Latin America.

In 1903, Panama revolted and became independent of Colombia, with America's blessing. In the same year, the United States gained the right to build a canal across the Isthmus of Panama. In 1917, the United States purchased the Virgin Islands from Denmark to help guard the canal. Many in Latin America resented these and other steps. They complained of "the Colossus of the North," of "Yankee imperialism," and of "dollar diplomacy"-and many still do.

This country's Latin American policies took a dramatic turn in the 1930s. Theodore Roosevelt's Corollary was replaced by Franklin Roosevelt's Good Neighbor Policy, a conscious attempt to win friends to the south by reducing this nation's political and military interventions in the region.

Today, the central provision of the Monroe Doctrine-the warning against foreign encroachments in the Western Hemisphereis set out in the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (the Rio Pact) of 1947. Still, the United States is, without question, the dominant power in the Western Hemisphere, and the Monroe Doctrine remains a vital part of American foreign policy.

Analyzing Political Cartoons To prevent European intervention in Latin America, President Theodore Roosevelt proclaimed that the United States should be the only policeman of the western hemisphere. Accord ing to this cartoon, what is involved in implementing this policy?

The Open Door in China Historically, American foreign-policy interests have centered on Europe and Latin America. But America has also been involved in Asia since the mid-1800s. Forty-five years before the United States acquired territory in the Pacific, the U.S. Navy's Commodore Matthew Perry had opened Japan to American trade.

By the late nineteenth century, however, America's thriving trade in Asia was being seriously threatened. The British, French, Germans, and Japanese were each ready to take slices of the Chinese coast as their own exclusive trading preserves. In 1899, Secretary of State John Hay announced this country's insistence on an Open Door policy in China. That doctrine promoted equal trade access for all nations, and demanded that China's independence and sovereignty over its own territory be preserved.

The other major powers came to accept the American position, however reluctantly. Relations between the United States and Japan worsened from that point on, up to the climax at Pearl Harbor in 1941. Over the same period, the United States built increasingly strong ties with China; but those ties were cut when communists won control of the Chinese mainland in 1949. For nearly 30 years, the United States and the People's \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How did the Good Neighbor policy differ from Roosevelt's Corollary?

\section*{plague} \(v\). to cause continuing trouble, distress

\section*{quell} \(\frac{\text { quell }}{v . \text { to put down }}\)

\section*{Background}
monroe doctrine The Monroe Doctrine was initially intended as a warning to European nations, particularly Spain and Russia, but appears to have had little effect on the actions of those nations. The United States was not generally recognized as a military force to be reckoned with at the time of President Monroe's proclamation. While aimed at a European audience, the Monroe Doctrine's real impact was felt domestically, since it outlined a general belief that the political affairs on this side of the Atlantic Ocean should be kept separate from affairs on the European side.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Go through the list of foreign policies. Ask volunteers to describe each policy. Discuss the policies with the class. (isolationism: purposeful refusal to become generally involved in the affairs of the rest of the world; Monroe Doctrine: warning to Europe to stay out of affairs of North and South America; Manifest Destiny: mission to expand U.S. boundaries across the continent to the Pacific Ocean; Roosevelt Corollary to Monroe Doctrine: U.S. would police Latin America to quell revolutions and other unrest; Good Neighbor Policy: attempt to win friends in Latin America by reducing U.S. political and military intervention in the region; Open Door Policy: equal trade access to China for all nations and preservation of China's independence and sovereignty; internationalism: greater involvement with other nations, due to the recognition that events in other parts of the world affect the well-being of the United States; collective security: acting together with other nations against any nation that threatens world peace; deterrence: strategy of maintaining military might so great that no nation would dare to attack, containment: prevent communism from expanding beyond its existing boundaries, leading to its eventual collapse; détente: purposeful attempt to improve relations with the Soviet Union and China)
Ask: Up to World War II, U.S. foreign policy was based on which broad concept? (isolationism) After World War II, which foreign policy concept dominated? (internationalism)

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons Possible answer: The United States had to act as intermediary between Europe and Latin America as well as arbitrate what needs are addressed for both sides.
Checkpoint It reduced American interference in Latin America and encouraged a more diplomatic and less forceful relationship.

\section*{DISCUSS}

Tell students that in order to understand the foreign policy issues of today, they must understand the historical evolution of U.S. foreign policy. The foreign policy of the United States has changed dramatically over time and, subsequently, so have its relationships with other nations. Remind students that after the American Revolution, our political relationship with Great Britain was tenuous at best, but in the years since then that country has become one of our closest allies.
To illustrate foreign policy evolution further, ask:
How would you describe the relationship between the U.S. and Soviet Union following World War II? (tense, competitive, dangerous) What foreign policy toward the Soviet Union did the U.S. adopt at that time? (containment), After the Vietnam War, what was the American policy on handling the Soviet Union? (détente) What major event ended the cold war relationship between the U.S. and Soviet Union? (the fall of the Soviet Union) What is our relationship with Russia today? (relatively friendly, but cautious)

ELL Differentiate To help students understand the key terms used in this section, review the definitions with them. Have students write down the definition and then, next to the definition, include a drawing that helps them understand the concept.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
How did World War II change the foreign policy position of the United States?
scourge
\(n\). something that causes great trouble or suffering

Republic of China refused diplomatic recognition of one another.

\section*{World At War}

Germany's submarine campaign against American shipping in the North Atlantic forced the United States out of its isolationist cocoon in 1917. America entered World War I "to make the world safe for democracy." However, with the defeat of Germany and the Central Powers, America pulled back from the involvements brought on by the war. The United States refused to join the League of Nations, and many Americans strongly believed that problems in Europe and the rest of the world were no concern of ours.

America's historic commitment to isolationism was finally ended by World War II. The United States became directly involved in the war when the Japanese attacked the American naval base at Pearl Harbor in Hawaii on December 7, 1941. From that point on-along with the British, the Russians, the Chinese, and our other Allies-the United States waged an all-out effort to defeat the Axis Powers (Germany, Italy, and Japan).

Under the direction and leadership of President Franklin Roosevelt, the United States became the "arsenal of democracy." American resources and industrial capacity supplied most of the armaments and other materials we and our Allies needed to win World War II. Within a very short time, the United States was transformed into the mightiest military power in the world-and it has remained so ever since.

\section*{Two New Principles}

The coming of World War II brought a historic shift from a position of isolationism to one of internationalism. This nation's foreign policy has been cast in that newer direction for more than 60 years now. Even so, the overall objective of that policy remains what it has always been: the protection of the security and well-being of the United States.

Collective Security Following World War II, the United States and most of the rest of a war-weary world looked to the principle of collective security to keep international peace and order. America hoped to forge a world community in which at least most nations would agree to act together against any nation that threatened the peace.

To that end, this country took the lead in creating the United Nations in 1945. The organization's charter declares that the UN was formed to promote international cooperation and so "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war . . . and to maintain international peace and security."

It soon became clear, however, that the UN would not shape the future of the world. Rather, international security would depend largely on the nature of the relations between the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union. Those relations, never very close, quickly deteriorated-and for the next 40 years, American foreign policy was built around that fact.

With the breakup of the Soviet Union, the United States became the only superpower in today's world. Still, collective security remains a cornerstone of American policy. The United States has supported the United Nations and other efforts to further international cooperation. This country has also taken another path to collective security: the building of a network of regional security alliances.

Deterrence The principle of deterrence has also been a part of American foreign policy since World War II. Basically, deterrence is the strategy of maintaining military might at so great a level that that very strength will deter-discourage, prevent-an attack on this country by any hostile power.

President Harry Truman initiated deterrence as U.S.-Soviet relations worsened after World War II. Every President since President Truman's day has reaffirmed the strategy, and deterrence was a key factor in the collapse of the Soviet Union.

\section*{Resisting Soviet Aggression}

One cannot hope to understand either recent or current American foreign policy without a knowledge of the long years of the cold war. The cold war was a period of more than 40 years during which relations

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 17D, U.S. Foreign Policy, May 1941, when you discuss World War II as a turning point in U.S. foreign policy. Ask: What is happening in this cartoon? (Nazi aggression has toppled many European nations.) What is the U.S. foreign policy toward these events? (isolationism) What is the cartoonist's view toward American isolationism? (The cartoonist suggests that isolationism is unrealistic. When the energetic Nazi bird finishes with the England tree, it will likely start on the U.S. tree. ) Explain that before the attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, many Americans believed strongly that the U.S. should stay out of the conflict in Europe. Ask students if they can identify the cartoonist. Many students might recognize the style of Dr. Seuss (Theodor Geisel), the famous writer of children's books. Students may not realize that Geisel also drew political cartoons.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The U.S. needed to discard the policy of isolationism and be an active participant in world affairs and accept the policy of internationalism.
between the two superpowers were at least tense and, more often than not, distinctly hostile. It was, for the most part, not a "hot war" of military action, but rather a time of threats, posturing, and military buildup.

At the Yalta Conference in early 1945, Soviet Premier Josef Stalin had agreed with President Franklin Roosevelt and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill to promote the establishment of "democratic governments" by "free elections" in the liberated countries of Eastern Europe. Instead, the Soviets imposed dictatorial regimes on those countries. The Soviets also looked to exploit postwar chaos in other nations, as well. In 1946, Churchill declared that "an iron curtain" had descended across the continent.

The Truman Doctrine The United States began to counter the aggressive actions of the Soviet Union in the early months of 1947. Both Greece and Turkey were in danger of falling under Soviet control. At President Harry Truman's urgent request, Congress approved a massive program of economic and military aid, and both countries remained free. In his message to Congress, the President declared that it was now the policy of the United States to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures.

\section*{Primary Source}
-Speech by President Harry S Truman to Congress, March 12, 1947

The Truman Doctrine soon became part of a broader American plan for dealing with

V Checkpoint
What policy developed communism?

\section*{posture}
\(v\). to adopt a pose,
usually intended to deceive

\section*{Cold War Conflicts, 1947-1991}

The ideological differences and competition for power between the two superpowers became the source of political tension worldwide. Many nations chose to side with one or the other. Several became battlefields and others political flashpoints where Soviet aggression and the U.S. desire to contain communism clashed. What do most of these locations have in common?

\section*{Background}

TURNING POINTS IN FOREIGN POLICY Only a few single events in U.S. history have brought about major and lasting changes to our foreign policy. The attack on Pearl Harbor was one of those events. The same can be said of the attacks of September 11, 2001. Addressing Congress nine days after the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, President George W. Bush said, "Americans have known the casualties of war-but not at the center of a great city on a peaceful morning. Americans have known surprise attacks-but never before on thousands of civilians. All of this was brought upon us in a single day-and night fell on a different world, a world where freedom itself is under attack. " The September 11 attacks led the Bush administration to develop a policy aimed at defeating global terrorism.

\section*{CREATE A TIMELINE}

Distribute a copy of the Chapter 17 Section 3 Core Worksheet A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 262) to each student. In this activity, students will create a timeline of specific historical events and determine which American policy applied to that event.
When students have completed the timeline, divide them into small groups to share their answers. Ask them to discuss events that marked changes in foreign policy. Explain that some disagreement is possible, since foreign policy changes often happen gradually rather than in response to any single event. Then come together as a class to discuss ways in which U.S. foreign policy changed over time.

ELL Differentiate Display Transparency 17C, which contains a blank version of the timeline for this activity. Have students work as a class to place the events and policies from Core Worksheet A in their proper locations on the transparency timeline.

Tell students to go to the Interactivity to find out more about cold war conflicts.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint containment Cold War Conflicts, 1947-1991 Each conflict is near a communist-controlled region or an ally of the U.S.S.R.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B}

Distribute copies of the Chapter 17 Section 3 Core Worksheet B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 263). This worksheet contains passages from President Truman's speech outlining a foreign policy known as the Truman Doctrine. Assign students one of the excerpts to read. Then, in the space provided, have students rephrase the text in their own words. Have student volunteers read their version of the excerpt. Write these on the board so that students have a revised version of each excerpt.
L2 ELL Differentiate Assign Passage C. Before students read it, define the words subjugation (takeover), assist (help), destiny (fate or fortune), primarily (mainly), essential (important), orderly (organized).
L4 Differentiate Assign all four excerpts to advanced students and have them complete Core Worksheet B in its entirety.

\section*{dISCUSS CORE WORKSHEET B}

Tell students that this speech was President Truman's first major public presentation of a key change in American foreign policy, and remind the class that the Truman Doctrine, along with most U.S. foreign policy in the decades after World War II, was developed as a response to what was seen as the immediate threat of communism and the Soviet Union. Use the Think-Write-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to lead a discussion on Truman's speech by asking students whether they believe that the Truman Doctrine has any significance to U.S. foreign policy today. Student answers may vary, and good reasons can be offered on both sides. If students are having difficulty formulating a response, ask them to consider whether there are meaningful parallels to be drawn between the threat posed by communism and the threat posed by terrorism today.

\section*{Answers}

Caption The U.S. will live up to its policy of helping nations resist subjugation from outside pressures.

Grateful citizens of Berlin wave to an American plane delivering badly needed supplies during the Berlin airlift. How did the Berlin airlift symbolize America's commitment to the Truman Doctrine?
armistice \(n\). an agreement to stop fighting for a time, a cease-fire the Soviet Union. From mid-1947 through the 1980s, the United States followed the policy of containment. That policy was rooted in the belief that if communism could be kept within its existing boundaries, it would collapse under the weight of its own internal weaknesses.

The United States and the Soviet Union confronted one another often during the cold war years. Two of those confrontations were of major, near-war proportions. The first, the Berlin blockade, occurred in 1948-1949, when the Soviets tried to force the United States and its allies to abandon the German city of Berlin to Soviet domination. The other major incident, the Cuban missile crisis, arose in 1962. The United States threatened war over the placement of Soviet nuclear missiles on the island of Cuba. In both cases, the Soviets backed down in the face of determined American resistance.

Not all cold war conflicts ended peacefully, however. During the postwar period, the United States fought two hot wars against communist forces in Asia.

The Korean War The Korean War began on June 25, 1950. Communist North Korea (the People's Democratic Republic of Korea) attacked South Korea (the UN-sponsored Republic of Korea). Immediately, the UN's Security Council called on all UN members to help South Korea repel the invasion.

The war lasted for more than three years. It pitted the United Nations Command, largely made up of American and South Korean forces, against Soviet-trained and Soviet-equipped North Korean and communist Chinese troops. Cease-fire negotiations began in July 1951, but fighting continued until an armistice was signed on July 27, 1953.

The long and bitter Korean conflict did not end in a clear-cut UN victory. Still, the invasion was turned back, and the Republic of Korea remained standing. For the first time in history, armed forces of several nations fought under an international flag against aggression. There is no telling how far the tide of that aggression might have been carried had the United States not come to the aid of South Korea.

The War in Vietnam In the years following World War II, a nationalist movement arose in French Indochina-today, Vietnam. Vietnamese nationalists were seeking independence from their French colonial rulers. Made up mostly of communist forces led by Ho Chi Minh, the nationalists fought and defeated the French in a lengthy conflict. Under truce agreements signed in 1954, the country was divided into two zones. The communist-dominated North Vietnam, with its capital in Hanoi, and an anticommunist South Vietnam, with its capital in Saigon.

Almost at once, communist guerrillas (the Viet Cong), supported by the North Vietnamese, began a civil war in South Vietnam. Because President Dwight Eisenhower and other foreign policy experts believed that South Vietnam was critical to the security of all of Southeast Asia, the Eisenhower administration responded with economic and then military aid to Saigon. President John Kennedy increased that aid, and President Lyndon Johnson committed the United States to full-scale war in early 1965.

In 1969, President Richard Nixon began what he called the "Vietnamization" of the war. Over the next four years, the United States gradually pulled troops out of combat. Finally, the two sides reached a cease-fire agreement in early 1973, and the United States withdrew its last units.

\section*{Debate}

During the 2008 election campaign, the views of candidates Barack Obama and John McCain differed significantly on continuing the Iraq War. Use the quotes below to start a debate. Ask: Would continued involvement in Iraq promote U.S. security?
"[F]ighting in a war without end will not make the American people safer. . . . I will end this war . . . because it is the right thing to do for our national security.

> —Barack Obama
"It would be a grave mistake to leave before Al Qaeda in Iraq is defeated. . . . The best way to secure long-term peace and security is to establish a stable, prosperous, and democratic state in Iraq.
—John McCain

The ill-fated war in Vietnam cost the United States more than 58,000 American lives. As the war dragged on, millions of Americans came to oppose American involvement in Southeast Asia-and traces of the divisiveness of that period can still be seen in the politics of today.

\section*{American Policies Succeed}

As the United States withdrew from Vietnam, the Nixon administration embarked on a policy of détente. The term is French, meaning "a relaxation of tensions." In this case, the policy of détente included a purposeful attempt to improve relations with the Soviet Union and, separately, with China.

Improving Relations President Richard Nixon flew to Beijing in 1972 to begin a new era in American-Chinese relations. His visit paved the way for further contacts and, finally, for formal diplomatic ties between the United States and the People's Republic of China. Less than three months later, Mr. Nixon journeyed to Moscow. There, he and Soviet Premier Leonid Brezhnev signed the first Strategic Arms Limitations Talks agreement, SALT I-a five-year pact in which both sides agreed to a measure of control over their nuclear weapons.

Relations with mainland China have improved in fits and starts since the 1970s. Efforts at détente with the Soviets, however, proved less successful. Moscow continued to apply its expansionist pressures and provided economic and military aid to revolutionary movements around the world.

In 1979, an effort by the Soviet Union to impose a communist regime in Afghanistan was met by unexpectedly stiff resistance of armed groups of Afghans and their supporters around the region. The United States, acting largely in secret through the CIA, provided support to some of the groups resisting communist expansion. This type of war by proxy between the United States and the Soviet Union became common during the cold war. After the aggression against Afghanistan, the Carter and then the Reagan administrations placed a renewed emphasis on the containment of Soviet power.

The Cold War Ends Relations between the United States and the USSR improved remarkably after Mikhail Gorbachev came to power in Moscow in 1985. He and President Reagan met in a series of summit conferences that helped pave the way to the end of the cold war. Those meetings, focused on arms limitations, eased long-standing tensions.

Certainly, Mikhail Gorbachev deserves much credit for the fundamental change in the Soviets' approach to world affairs. But, just as certainly, that historic change was prompted by deepening political and economic chaos in Eastern Europe and within the Soviet Union itself-by conditions that ultimately brought the collapse of the Soviet Union in late 1991.

The fact that the cold war is now a matter of history should also been seen in this light:

1972 President Nixon's meetings with Chinese diplomats begin the process of improving relations between the United States and China \(\mathbf{2 0 0 0}\) President Clinton removes one of the last hurdles in American-Chinese relations by approving a law permitting freer trade between the two nations.
divisiveness n. disagreement hostility, split

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L2 Differentiate Have students use print or online resources to research the current administration's foreign policies and find images that correspond to them. Then, have students create a collage of the current U.S. foreign policies.
L2 Differentiate Have students make a poster explaining how U.S. foreign policy affects a country of their choosing.
L3 Differentiate Divide the class into groups of three or four, and have each group choose one foreign policy discussed in this section. Ask the groups to draw a political cartoon that represents some aspect of that foreign policy. Display the cartoons on the classroom wall.

Differentiate President Truman's address to Congress in 1947 included the following statement: "One of the primary objectives of the foreign policy of the United States is the creation of conditions in which we and other nations will be able to work out a way of life free from coercion." Have students write a brief essay in response to this statement as it relates to American foreign policy today.

\section*{Myths and Misconceptions}
hot line The Cuban missile crisis shook the U.S. and Soviet leaders. Both realized that the incident brought them to the brink of nuclear war and mutual annihilation. After the crisis, the leaders agreed to set up a hot line for emergency communication. Contrary to popular myth, the hot line is not two red telephones connecting the White House to the Kremlin. At first, it was a set of teletype machines, on which operators punched in messages. In the 1970s, the two superpowers became linked by satellite and undersea cable. The American end is located in the Pentagon, not in the White House. Messages are transmitted by coded text, not voice or video. Despite the fall of the Soviet Union, the hot line remains in effect. It is tested hourly, with operators on each side sending a test message. The operators practice their translation skills by deciphering recipes and book excerpts sent in the other's native language.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the collapse of the Soviet Union

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect the Core Worksheets and grade students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 265)Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 266)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What international concerns challenge the world today?
U.S. Special Forces and Afghan National Army personnel travel from town to town working together to bring stability to Afghanistan. Which American foreign policy does this effort illustrate?

The American policies of deterrence and containment, first put in place in 1947, finally realized their goals. As President Reagan put it, the Soviet Union was left "on the ash heap of history."

\section*{Today's Dangerous World}

The sudden collapse of the Soviet Union and, with it, the end of the cold war, did not mean that the world had suddenly become a peaceful place. Far from it. The planet is still plagued by conflicts and it remains a very dangerous place. Osama bin Laden, al Qaeda and other terrorist groups, and the global war against them certainly testify to that daunting fact.

Then, too, there is the worrisome fact that Iran, Iraq's neighbor in the Middle East, appears bent upon becoming a nuclear power. North Korea's nuclear aspirations may also threaten worldwide security. And there are a number of seemingly endless quarrels elsewhere in today's world-not the least of them are protracted civil wars in Africa, and repeated clashes between India and Pakistan, both nuclear powers.

In our own neighborhood, the rise of Venezuela's president Hugo Chávez raises concerns. A vocal critic of American policy, Chávez has managed to win wide support in the region. Many consider him the prime source of much anti-American feeling in Latin America today.

The Middle East The Middle East is both oil rich and conflict ridden. America's foreign policy interests in the Middle East have, for decades, been torn in two quite opposite directions: by its long-standing support of Israel and by the critical importance of Arab oil.

The United Nations created Israel as an independent state on May 14, 1948, and the United States recognized the new Jewish state within a matter of minutes. The day after it was established, Israel was invaded by Egypt, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, and Iraq. The Israelis won that first Arab-Israeli war, decisively. Over the years since then, they have been engaged in countless other large and small military conflicts with various Arab states.

The United States has been Israel's closest friend for more than 60 years now. At the same time, however, this country has attempted to strengthen its ties with most of the Arab states in that volatile region.

With the active involvement of President Carter, Israel and Egypt negotiated a groundbreaking peace treaty, which became effective in 1979. That agreement, the Camp David Accord, ended more than 30 years of hostilities between those two countries. Israel and Jordan signed a similar pact in 1994.

Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) took a huge, but so far unfulfilled, step toward peace in 1993. In the Oslo Accords, the PLO at last recognized Israel's right to exist. Israel recognized the PLO as the legitimate agent of the Palestinian people, and it also agreed to limited Palestinian self-rule under an autonomous Palestinian Authority.

The promise of the Oslo Accords remains to be realized. Both the United States and the UN have tried to bring the two parties together in a continuing dialogue. But, recurring cycles of violence and reprisal continue to characterize the Israeli-Palestinian relationship.

Afghanistan The Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan in 1979 introduced an era of war and devastation to that Central Asian country.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint terrorism, nuclear proliferation, civil wars, cultural and religious conflict
Caption collective security and the Truman Doctrine

\section*{Background}

NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION The cold war arms race raised concern among the world's nuclear powers about how to control the spread of the fearsome weapons they had created. Negotiations led to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (1970). The nuclear powers-the U.S., Britain, Russia (and now France and China)-agreed not to give nuclear weapons or the technology to make them to any state without nuclear capability. Non-nuclear signers would receive help in developing nuclear power, but must accept on-site monitoring to verify peaceful use only. Nearly all nations have joined the treaty. Recent concern has focused on Iran and North Korea. In 2003, North Korea withdrew from the treaty and returned to weapons development. International pressure persuaded North Korea to begin dismantling its nuclear program in 2007. Iran continued its program, insisting on peaceful intent.

Although the Soviets left Afghanistan in defeat in 1989, fighting in the country continued. The groups that had defeated the Soviets now competed for power. Among the factions to emerge from this civil war was an Islamic fundamentalist movement, the Taliban. By the late 1990s, the Taliban had gained control over most of Afghanistan.

In 2001, following the terrorist attacks of September 11, the United States moved to topple the Taliban regime, which had sheltered Osama bin Laden and the al Qaeda terrorists who had carried out the attack. Initially, the war was a marked success. After a few short weeks of fighting, the Taliban took flight. The United States and its allies helped orchestrate the creation of a new democratically chosen government. Eventually the United States removed many of its forces, and a NATO force took the lead in providing security for the fledgling Afghan government.

Yet, while the Taliban had been forced from power, it had not been destroyed. Since 2002, in fact, the Taliban has mounted an increasingly effective insurgency in Afghanistan.

Iraq The situation in Iraq is particularly troubling for the United States. At the end of the first Gulf War in 1991, Iraq's president, Saddam Hussein, agreed to destroy his country's stock of chemical and biological weapons and to abandon his efforts to acquire a nuclear capability. He also agreed to allow UN inspectors to monitor his regime's compliance with those commitments.

Convinced that Hussein had not honored those promises and that Iraq had secretly amassed large stores of weapons, President George W. Bush sought to hold Iraq to account in 2002. Efforts to persuade the UN Security Council to support that move proved unsuccessful. But, at his urging, both houses of Congress did adopt a joint resolution authorizing the President to take those actions "necessary and appropriate" to eliminate Iraq's "continuing threat to the national security of the United States and to international peace."

In March 2003, the United States and Great Britain, supported by a number of smaller nations, launched the second Gulf War. Iraq was conquered and Saddam Hussein's regime toppled in less than six weeks.

The ongoing efforts to stabilize and rebuild Iraq, and to establish a democratic government there, have proven to be more than difficult. Much of the country faced violence bordering on civil war, and the Iraqi government, led by Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki, has been hard put to contain it. It is quite apparent that the United States-and, it is hoped, the UN and a large number of other countries - will be engaged in the huge task of reconstructing Iraq for some years to come.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing the change in \\ American foreign policy \\
over time (Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Review with students the timelines cre- \\ ated in class on Core Worksheet A.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining the goal of \\ American foreign policy \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write each key foreign policy mentioned \\ in this section on the board and have \\ students supply a one-line summary of \\ each. Then have students identify the \\ common element among them.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing how the UN \\
reflects collective security \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write the definition of collective security \\ on the board. Then have students brain- \\ storm current UN activities that illustrate \\ this principle.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Defining and analyzing \\ deterrence (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students read the chapter's \\ Document-Based Assessment and lead \\ a discussion on how deterrence may be \\ used today.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Explaining the cold war \\ policy of containment \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students review the Cold War \\ Conflicts map and lead a discussion on \\ how the fear of communism affected \\
American policy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Analyzing the responsibility \\ of tye U.S. in maintaining \\ freedom (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Create a list of the places where the \\ United States has fought to maintain \\ freedom around the globe. Have students \\ make inferences about how each loca- \\ tion might be different today had the \\ United States not become involved.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular} United States not become involved.

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Recognize Ideologies In 1947, President Truman said, "The free peoples f the world look to us for support in hining their freedoms. If walter maintaining their freedoms. If we falter in our leadership, we may endanger he peace of the world, and we shal surely endanger the welfare of this nation." (a) Was that belief valid in 1947? (b) Do you think this belief remains valid in the world today? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Gather
Evidence Using your list of solutions from Section 2, select the one you believe is best suited to resolving the issue. Then, conduct research to find evidence that supports your proposed solution. Keep in mind which organizations you may need to carry out your solution and how your solution may affect the region concerned
1. Guiding Question Use your cometed timeline to answer this ques tion: How has American foreign policy changed over time?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the aim of American foreign policy?
3. How did the creation of the United Nations reflect the principle of collective security?
4. (a) What is the policy of deterrence? (b) Is it in force today?
5. Why was containment a major American policy during the cold war?
the U.S. has pursued collective security through the UN and regional alliances. Today the U.S. and its allies work to oppose global terrorism
2. to protect the security of the U.S.
3. The UN was intended to be a world community in which most nations would act together against any nation that threatened peace.
4. (a) strategy of maintaining such military might that no nation will risk attacking (b) The policy is still useful in preventing attacks from other nations, but is less useful against terrorist attacks or rogue states.
5. The cold war was a period of tension between the U.S. and Soviet Union. Containment was intended to prevent the Soviet Union from expanding communism.
6. (a) In 1947, the U.S. was seen as the defender of freedom against communist aggression. (b) Possible response: Yes. Our actions in Afghanistan and Iraq reflect a belief that establishing democratic governments there will bolster world peace and U.S. security.
QUICK WRITE Students should consider groups needed to carry out the solution and effects on the region.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will examine the U.S. role in the world by debating whether foreign aid undermines domestic programs.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{DEFINE FOREIGN AID}

Ask: What is foreign aid? (economic and military aid to other countries) Have students brainstorm where and what type of foreign aid is currently being supplied by the United States around the world. Ask:
How important is this aid to the security and well-being of the United States?

L2 Differentiate Provide news articles or have students search the Internet to list the types of foreign aid supplied by the United States.

\section*{SUMMARIZE THE ISSUE}

Have students read the feature and summarize the issue and the views expressed in the quotes.

L2 ELL Differentiate Write these terms and their definitions on the board: capacity (ability to do something), burden (heavy responsibility), infrastructure (large-scale public systems, services, and facilities of a country).

\section*{DEBATE THE ISSUE}

Divide the class into small groups and assign one quote to each group. Allow the groups time to discuss the position assigned and to come up with ways to defend that opinion. Then, divide the class by those defending Secretary Rice and those defending Congressman Duncan. Lead a short debate. Ask: Is foreign aid worth the expense?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students summarize the argument made during the debate that they felt was the strongest and explain why.

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) to improve U.S. security by improving people's lives and promoting just governance around the world (b) We are spending so much on foreign aid that we will not be able to fulfill the needs of our own people.
2. (a) Foreign aid improves American security. (b) by listing key domestic programs that he believes will suffer due to lack of funds (c) Students should support their position.

\section*{America's Role in the World}

\section*{Track the Issue}

United States foreign policy deals not just with military conflicts, but with humanitarian and economic matters as well.
George Washington, in his Farewell Address, cautions the nation against any significant involvement in foreign affairs.

With the
With the "Open Door" policy, the United States insists that China be free to establish economic relationships with many nations.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt's
"Good Neighbor" policy cultivated diplomatic involvement in Latin America.

Through the Marshall Plan, the United States takes an active role in the economic rebuilding of Europe.

The United States finances humanitarian missions to many famine- and disasterstruck regions of the world.

The head of USAID with the first delivery of aid to cyclonestruck Myanmar -

\section*{Perspectives}

For the most part, the main goal of American economic and humanitarian foreign aid programs is to better serve our foreign policy interests and ensure national security. However, some critics believe we expend too much money and human resources on international aid and place our domestic issues and concerns at risk.
"In today's world, America's security is linked to the capacity of foreign states to govern justly and effectively. . . . We have begun an effort to relieve the poorest countries of the crushing burden of debt and we have doubled our overseas development assistance. America's taxpayers must know that we are using their hard-earned dollars efficiently and effectively to improve our own security, but also to improve people's lives around the world."
-Secretary of State
Condoleezza Rice, 2006
" N\(]\) ]o country has ever done as much for another. . . as the United States has done for Iraq. We have spent hundreds of billions rebuilding their infrastructure, providing police protection,.. . giving free medical care. . . . [T]here needs to be some limit to our generosity. . . We need to start putting our own people first If we do not, we are soon not going to be able to pay all the Social Security and. . . other things we have promised our own people...
-Rep. John J. Duncan, Jr. (R., Tenn.), 2007

\section*{Connect to Your World}
1. Understand (a) What is the intended goal of the economic development agenda described by Secretary Rice? (b) What is Congressman Duncan's main concern?
2. Compare and Contrast (a) How does Secretary Rice justify the costs of foreign aid? (b) How does Congressman Duncan justify cutting foreign aid? (c) Which argument do you find more convincing? Explain your answer.
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE In the News
For updates about American foreign aid, visit
PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Background}

HUMANITARIAN AID The United States has historically been the world's largest provider of emergency food aid during international disasters. For example, after Hurricane Mitch destroyed food supplies and the food distribution system in Honduras in 1998 , the U.S. provided \($ 67\) million of food aid from the U.S. Agency for International Development, along with \($ 63\) million of commodity surpluses from the U.S. Department of Agriculture. As a result of such actions by the U.S., there is an assumption that, especially in the case of emergencies, the U.S. will make the largest contribution. However, there is often strong competition for U.S. food aid resources. After the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami, the U.S. pledged millions of dollars in aid but was also faced with large demands for food resources in response to other emergencies in Sudan, Chad, and the Caribbean.

\section*{section 4}

\section*{Foreign Aid and Alliances}

\section*{Guiding Question}

In what ways does the United States cooperate with other nations? Use a chart like the one below to keep track of the methods used in international cooperation.

Political Dictionary
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- foreign aid & - NATO \\
- regional & - United Nations \\ security & - Security \\ alliance & Council
\end{tabular}

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify two types of foreign aid and describe the foreign aid policy of the United States.
2. Describe the major security alliances developed by the United States
3. Examine the role and structure of the United Nations and the problems it addresses.

Image Above: Marshall Plan fundin helps in the rebuilding of West Berlin.

Do you know this ancient saying: "Those who help others help themselves"? You will see that that maxim underlies two basic elements of present-day American foreign policy: foreign aid and regional security alliances.

\section*{Foreign Aid}

Foreign aid-the economic and military aid given to other countries-has been a basic feature of American foreign policy for more than sixty years. It began with the Lend-Lease program of the early 1940s, through which the United States gave nearly \($ 50\) billion in food, munitions, and other supplies to its allies in World War II. Since then, this country has sent more than \($ 500\) billion in aid to more than 100 countries around the world.

Foreign aid became an important part of the containment policy beginning with American aid to Greece and Turkey in 1947. The United States also helped its European allies rebuild after the devastation of World War II. Under the Marshall Plan, named for its author, Secretary of State George C. Marshall, the United States poured some \($ 12.5\) billion into 16 nations in Western Europe between 1948 and 1952.

Foreign aid has taken several different directions over the years. Immediately after World War II, American aid was primarily economic. Since that time, however, military assistance has assumed a larger role in aid policy. Until the mid1950s, Europe received the lion's share of American help. Since then, the largest amounts have gone to nations in Asia, the Middle East, and Latin America.

Most aid, which makes up less than 1 percent of the federal budget, has been sent to those nations regarded as the most critical to the realization of this country's foreign policy objectives. In recent years, Israel, Egypt, the Philippines, and various Latin American countries have been the major recipients of American help, both economic and military.

Most foreign aid money must be used to buy American goods and services. So, most of the billions spent for that aid amounts to a substantial subsidy to both business and labor in this country. The independent United States Agency for International Development (USAID) administers most of the economic aid programs, in close cooperation with the Departments of State and Agriculture. Most military aid is channeled through the Defense Department.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The United States sends economic and military foreign aid to countries regarded as critical to American interests. - The U.S. belongs to several regional security alliances, including NATO. - The U.S. is a permanent member of the UN Security Council and provides a large portion of UN funding.
CONCEPTS: role and purpose of government, democratic values, and principles enduring understandings: - The United States works with other nations for peace and political stability around the world. - Security alliances seek to deter aggression. - The purpose of the United Nations is to promote peace among nations and to improve living conditions around the world.

GUIDING QUESTION
In what ways does the United States cooperate with other nations?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|l|}{Methods of American International Cooperation} \\
\hline & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Foreign Aid \\
- Economic and military aid to other countries \\
- Most aid to nations critical to U.S. policy goals \\
- Most aid must be spent on U.S. products \\
- United States Agency for International Development administers most economic aid
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Security Alliances \\
- mutual defense treaties in different regions \\ NATO-defend Europe and North America; peacekeeping in Balkans, Afghanistan, Darfur \\
- Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio Pact)-defend the Americas \\
- ANZUS Pact with Australia and New Zealand \\
- Japanese Pact \\
- Philippines Pact \\
- Korean Pact with South Korea
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
United Nations \\
- U.S. and all other members have one vote in General Assembly \\
- The Security Council, of which the U.S. is one of 5 permanent members with veto power, has the main responsibility for international peace \\
- The U.S. funds over 20\% of UN operating budget for work that includes peacekeeping; promoting development in poorer nations; protecting health, environment, and human rights; partnering with NGOs
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

Core Worksheet \(B\) in this section asks students to analyze excerpts from the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Have students turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S14, to learn how to analyze sources.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- describe how foreign aid programs and defense alliances promote U.S. interests.
- evaluate current international issues and how foreign aid benefits the region affected as well as the United States.
- compare and contrast the rights delineated in the UN Universal Declaration on Human Rights with those in the U.S. Constitution.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 267) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 269)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following assignment on the board: Foreign aid programs and regional security alliances are ways that the United States can protect its own interests by helping other nations protect their interests. List one type of foreign aid program and one regional security alliance, and describe how each may benefit the region and the United States. Write your response in your notebook.
L2 Differentiate Write this short list of key programs and alliances on the board, and have students choose one from the list for this activity: Alliances: NATO, Rio Pact, Japanese Pact, ANZUS, Philippines Pact; Programs: economic, military, and humanitarian aid Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to find out more about the members of NATO.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Maps Sample answer: Because there are still ideological differences between most NATO members and Russia, it seems unlikely that Russia will be invited to join NATO.

The Expansion of NATO (Analyzing Maps Membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization alliance has extended beyond western Europe with the addition of several nations that were once part extended beyond western Europe with the addition of several nations that were once \(p\) of the Soviet-dominated Eastern Bloc. Do you think an invitation to join will ever be of the Soviet-dominate

\section*{Security Alliances}

Since World War II, the United States has constructed a network of regional security alliances built on mutual defense treaties. In each of those agreements, the United States and the other countries involved have agreed to take collective action to meet aggression in a particular part of the world.

NATO The North Atlantic Treaty, signed in 1949, established NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The alliance was formed initially to promote the collective defense of Western Europe, particularly against the threat of Soviet aggression. NATO was originally composed of the United States and 11 other countries (see map above).

With the collapse of the Soviet Union, NATO's mutual security blanket was extended to cover much of Eastern Europe. Though it has grown in size, the alliance remains dedicated to the basic goal of protecting the freedom and security of its members through political and military action. Each of the now 26 member countries has agreed that "an armed attack against one or more of them in Europe or in North America shall be considered an attack against them all."

What has changed with NATO since its founding? Clearly, the threat of Soviet (if not Russian) aggression has lessened, yet the

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 4, Chapter 17, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 267)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 269)
L3 Core Worksheets A and B (pp. 271, 272)
L2 Extend Activities (pp. 275, 276)
L3 Quiz A (p. 277)
L2 Quiz B (p. 278)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 279)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 282)

basic function of the alliance is the same. NATO was formed for defensive purposes and-if defense includes military intervention in conflicts that may destabilize Europe, and with it, the prevention of humanitarian disasters-defense remains its basic charge.

Increasingly, however, NATO is focused on what it calls "crisis management and peacekeeping." Its involvement in the Balkans provides a leading illustration of this role. First in Bosnia in 1995 and then in Kosovo in 1999, NATO air and ground forces, drawn mostly from the United States, Great Britain, and Canada, brought an end to years of vicious civil war in what was once Yugoslavia. Those military interventions also put an end to the horrific campaigns of "ethnic cleansing," directed by Serbia's President Slobodan Milosevic. NATO troops continue to maintain a fragile peace in the Balkans today.

In mid-2003, NATO took command of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) in Afghanistan. The United Nations established this multinational peacekeeping force in late 2001 in the wake of the American-led war that ousted Afghanistan's Taliban regime.

Today, ISAF is composed of over 40,000 combat and support troops drawn from 37 nations. The ISAF includes almost half of the American troops in the country. The American units now operating under NATO command battle stubborn Taliban resistance in eastern Afghanistan, in remote areas near the Pakistani border. The ISAF has assumed the leading role in rebuilding war-shattered Afghanistan. There has been disagreement within NATO, however, about how many troops member nations will commit to military operations in the country. This conflict has flared as the Taliban has shown surprising resilience.

Since 2005, NATO has also played a small peacekeeping role in Darfur. This conflict-plagued region of the African nation of Sudan has been the scene of what observers have described as a campaign of genocide, with government-backed militia targeting rival ethnic groups. NATO forces have helped train and transport troops taking part in a multinational peacekeeping mission to end the bloodshed in Darfur.

Alliances Around the World The InterAmerican Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, the Rio Pact, was signed in 1947. It pledges the United States, Canada, and now 32 Latin American countries to treat any "armed attack . against an American state . . . as an attack against all the American states." The treaty commits those nations to the peaceful settlement of their disputes. Cuba is not a party to the agreement.

Beyond NATO and the Rio Pact, the United States is party to several other regional alliances. Thus, the ANZUS Pact of 1951 unites Australia, New Zealand, and the United States to ensure their collective security in the Pacific region.

The Japanese Pact also dates from 1951. After six years of American military occupation, the allies of World War II (with the exception of the Soviet Union) signed a peace treaty with Japan. At the same time, the United States and Japan signed a mutual defense treaty. In return for American protection, Japan permits the United States to maintain land, sea, and air forces in and around its territory.

The Philippines Pact was ratified in 1951 as well. It, too, is a mutual defense agreement. The pact remains in force, but disagreements over its redrafting prompted the withdrawal of all American military forces from the Philippines in 1992. The Korean Pact, signed in 1953, pledges the United States to come to the aid of South Korea should it be attacked again.

The Taiwan Pact was in effect between the United States and Nationalist China from 1954 to 1980. When the United States and the People's Republic of China established full diplomatic relations in 1979, the United States withdrew its recognition of the Nationalist Chinese government, and the Taiwan pact became obsolete.

\section*{The United Nations}

You know that a fundamental change occurred in American foreign policy during and immediately after World War II. That dramatic shift from isolationism to internationalism, is strikingly illustrated by this country's participation in the United Nations. Remember, the United States refused to join the League of Nations \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How has NATO's purpose changed?

\section*{destabilize}
v. to make something unstable, undermine, upset

\section*{oust}
\(v\). to use force to remove someone from office

\section*{resilience} \(n\). ability to resume
its original condition, bounce back

\section*{genocide}
\(n\). the deliberate
n. the deliberate extermination

\section*{Background}

MARSHALL PLAN In June 1947, Secretary of State George Marshall unveiled a largescale plan for American aid to war-torn Europe. The Marshall Plan achieved several strategic goals at one time. By providing humanitarian aid during a time of severe economic and agricultural crisis, the Marshall Plan helped ensure that America's allies would not fall prey to political chaos. By encouraging recipients to spend the aid money on American-made goods, the plan also benefited the domestic economy. Finally, Marshall attached a significant condition to the aid package: Before they could receive any financial support, recipient nations had to work together to develop a plan for spending the money. This required European nations to cooperate with each other at a time when relations on the continent were under severe pressure, and may have helped ensure peace during the turbulent decades that followed.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER}

Group students into pairs and have each student read his or her partner's response to the Bellringer. Then call on four or five students to read and explain one of their partner's answers, either a foreign aid program or a regional security alliance. List the answers on the board, including the name of the program or alliance and a short description of its benefits. When you have recorded the answers, ask students if they see any patterns or commonalities between the answers, such as the proximity of aggressive nations near nations with whom the U.S. has security alliances.
L2 Differentiate Direct students to the world political map at the back of the textbook. As you review the Bellringer activity, use the map to help students locate the regions or nations involved so they can more easily visualize locations and influences.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Originally created to promote collective defense of Western Europe, NATO has extended its focus to assisting in peacekeeping around the world.

\section*{BRAINSTORM}

Distribute the Chapter 17 Section 4 Core Worksheet A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 271), which is a graphic organizer in which to categorize different types of aid. Divide the class into pairs and have each reflect on current international issues. Have pairs identify one issue for each category on the organizer: environmental, humanitarian, or economic. Then they should determine the region or country affected, any government or nongovernmental organization providing aid, and the type of aid. Then, have pairs brainstorm how the aid benefits the region and the United States. (some benefits to region: alleviates potential political or civil unrest or war, ensures the continuation of democratic governments, improves standard of living, assists economic development, reduces the spread of disease; some benefits to the U.S.: aid money often spent on U.S. products, new markets for U.S. trade, safeguards access to critical resources in that region such as oil, strengthens foreign relations, friendly governments more likely to partner with the U.S. in fighting terrorism) Have volunteers share their answers with the class.
L1 L2 Differentiate Display Transparency 17 E , Foreign Aid, which is a blank version of the graphic organizer used in this activity. As a class, brainstorm international issues and the benefits of the aid provided and write students' answers on the transparency as they complete their worksheet.
L4 Differentiate Have students do research to learn more about the issues and then complete the worksheet in greater detail.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about the United Nations and its programs.

\section*{Answers}

The UN by the Numbers Sample answer: Peacekeeping is a major focus and expenditure of the UN. Audio Tour To learn more about the United Nations and its programs, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{The UN}

\($ 4.19\) billion
Current 2-year operating budget
22\%
Operating budget share contributed by the United States
UN Peacekecping

\section*{\($ 7.1\) billion}

Current budget for UN peacekeeping operations

\section*{16}

Peacekeeping operations in progress

88,000
UN troops deployed in peacekeeping missions around the world
SOURCE: The United Nations
after World War I. With the end of World War II, however, the American people realized that America was a world power with worldwide interests and responsibilities.

The United Nations (UN) came into being at the United Nations Conference on International Organization, which met in San Francisco from April 25 to June 26, 1945. There, the representatives of 50 nations-the victorious allies of World War II-drafted the United Nations Charter. \({ }^{5}\) The charter is a treaty among all of the UN's member-states, and it serves as the body's constitution.

The United States became the first nation to ratify the UN Charter. The Senate approved it by an overwhelming vote, 89-2, on July 24, 1945. The other states that had taken part in the San Francisco Conference then ratified the charter in quick order, and it went into force on October 24, 1945. The UN held the first session of its General Assembly in London on January 10, 1946.

Charter and Organization The UN's charter is a lengthy document. It opens with an eloquent preamble which reads in part:

\section*{Primary Source}

We, the peoples of the United Nations Determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and...
To practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbors, and To unite our strength to maintain international peace and security ... Have resolved to combine our efforts to accomplish these aims.
-Charter of the United Nations
The body of the document begins in Article I with a statement of the organization's purposes: the maintenance of international peace

5 Fifty nations attended the San Francisco conference. Poland did not attend, but it did sign the charter on October 15,1945 , and is considered an original member of the UN .

\section*{Background}

COUNTERING TERRORISM WITH AID From the end of the cold war until the early 1990s, the major focus of U.S. foreign aid programs was the defeat of communism. During the presidency of George W. Bush, the majority of U.S. foreign aid was directed toward the global fight against terrorism. Toward this end, foreign aid programs were organized around three core principles or "strategic pillars": (1) encouraging economic growth through boosting agriculture and trade, (2) global health initiatives, and (3) humanitarian aid and peacekeeping support in the service of encouraging democracy. The State Department and other agencies overseeing foreign aid programs believe that this multi-layered approach is the most promising for combating global terrorism.
and security, the development of friendly relations between and among all nations, and the promotion of justice and cooperation in the solution of international problems.

The UN has 192 members today. Membership is open to those "peace-loving states" that accept the obligations of the charter and are, in the UN's judgment, able and willing to carry out those obligations. New members may be admitted by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly, upon recommendation by the Security Council.

The charter sets forth the complicated structure of the UN. It is built around six principal organs: the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, the International Court of Justice, and the Secretariat.

The General Assembly The UN's General Assembly has been called "the town meeting of the world." Each of the UN's members has a seat and a vote in the Assembly. It meets once a year, and sessions take place at the UN's permanent headquarters in New York City. The secretary-general may call special sessions, at the request of either the Security Council or a majority of the UN's members.

The Assembly may take up and debate any matter within the scope of the charter, and it may make whatever recommendation it chooses to the Security Council, the other UN organs, and any member-state. \({ }^{6}\) The recommendations it makes to UN members are not legally binding on them, but these recommendations do carry some considerable weight, for they have been approved by a significant number of the governments of the world.

The Assembly elects the 10 nonpermanent members of the Security Council, the 54 members of the Economic and Social Council, and the elective members of the Trusteeship Council. In conjunction with the Security Council, it also selects the secretary-general and the 15 judges of the International Court of Justice. The Assembly shares with the Security Council the power to admit, suspend, or expel members. But the Assembly alone may propose amendments to the charter.

\footnotetext{
6 Except those matters currently under consideration by the } Security Council.

The Security Council The UN's Security Council is made up of 15 members. Fivethe United States, Britain, France, Russia (originally the Soviet Union's seat), and China-are permanent members. The General Assembly chooses the 10 nonpermanent members for two-year terms; they cannot be immediately reelected. The council meets in continuous session

The Security Council bears the UN's major responsibility for maintaining international peace. It may take up any matter involving a threat to or a breach of that peace, and it can adopt measures ranging from calling on the parties to settle their differences peacefully to placing economic and/or military sanctions on an offending nation. The only time the Security Council has undertaken a military operation against an aggressor came in Korea in 1950. It has, however, provided peacekeeping forces in several world trouble spots, with varying degrees of success.

On procedural questions-routine mat-ters-decisions of the Security Council can be made by the affirmative vote of any nine members. On the more important mat-ters-substantive questions-at least nine affirmative votes are also needed. However, a negative vote by any one of the permanent members is enough to kill any substantive resolution. Because of that veto power, the Security Council is effective only when and if the permanent members are willing to cooperate with one another.

The veto does not come into play in a situation in which one or more of the permanent members abstains. When, on June 25, 1950, the Security Council called on all UN members to aid South Korea in repelling the North Korean invasion, the Soviet delegate was boycotting sessions of the Security Council and so was not present to veto that action.

Economic and Social Council The Economic and Social Council(ECOSOC) is made up of 54 members elected by the General Assembly to three-year terms. It is responsible to the Assembly for carrying out the UN's many economic, cultural, educational, health, and related activities. It coordinates the work of the UN's specialized agen-cies-a number of independent international
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
Which members of the Security Council have the veto power?

\section*{organ}
n. a unit of organization that performs a specific function

\section*{RESPOND TO READING}

Distribute Core Worksheet B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 272) to the class. Have a volunteer read aloud the Preamble of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights from the first page of the worksheet. Ask:
According to the Preamble, how might people respond if their rights are not protected? (They might resort to rebellion against their oppressors.) Have students create a list on their worksheet of what they believe to be essential human rights. (Answers may include freedom of speech, freedom of religion, equality for all without discrimination, freedom from fear and want. ) After students have completed their lists individually, have them share their lists with the class.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint U.S., Britain, France, Russia, and China

\section*{ANALYZE PRIMARY SOURCE}

The next page of Core Worksheet B contains excerpts from the UN's Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Have each student read aloud one passage from the Declaration. As the passages are read aloud, students should mark each with a \(Y\) (if they think the right is guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution) or an \(N\) (if they do not think the right is guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution). After all passages have been read aloud, go through the list again, this time asking students to raise their hand to indicate whether they marked a \(Y\) or an \(N\) for each item. Keep a tally on the board. If students are having difficulty correctly identifying any passage as a \(Y\) or an \(N\), have them consult the U.S. Constitution in their text. Point out that some rights that we take for granted, such as the right to move from State to State, may not actually appear in the Constitution.
L4 Differentiate If time allows, you may wish to have students analyze the full text of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which is available at the United Nations Web site (www.un.org).

\section*{DISCUSS}

Conduct a class discussion of the rights in the UN Declaration. Ask: What distinguishes some rights contained in the UN Declaration from rights found in the U.S. Constitution? (For example: the Declaration refers to some economic and social rights not mentioned in the Constitution, such as the right to hold a job, the right to form a union, the right to education, and so on.) Are you surprised by any of the rights listed in the Declaration? (Rights such as the ability to move around the countryor to hold a job appear so universal that it seems unnecessary to list them; however, the fact that these rights are listed indicates that they are not universally available. ) Then have students reflect on this section's activities. Ask: Why is foreign aid vital to the well-being of the United States? (Possible response: Oppression and lack of the basic necessities of life in parts of the world breed violence that can endanger the security and interests of all nations in the global community.)
Tell students to go to the Online Update to learn more about specialized agencies of the UN.

\section*{Answers}

The Specialized Agencies Possible response: These agencies work to solve international problems, such as poverty, hunger, illiteracy, and low living standards. Such problems often underlie regional conflicts. By alleviating these conditions, the agencies are contributing to the other UN goals of international peace and friendly relations.
bodies that have a working relationship with the world organization. There are several of these independent international bodies, including the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank Group, and the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). (See the feature below.)

Trusteeship Council The United Nations Charter requires each member to promote the well-being of the peoples of all "non-selfgoverning territories" as a "sacred trust." To that end, and for several decades, the Trusteeship Council monitored the way in which various UN members met that responsibility in their administration of (originally) eleven Trust

The UN was established to eliminate "the scourge of war." To that end, the Economic and Social Council coordinates the work of 15 specialized agencies international organizations that seek to promote economic and/or social programs in many parts of the world. How do these agencies reflect the goals of the United Nations?

510 Foreign Policy and National Defense

\section*{Background}

UN AT WORK Many diplomatic observers have noted a "renaissance" of the United Nations. Of the 63 UN peacekeeping operations set up since 1948, nearly three quarters have been established since 1991. In that time, the UN has played a key role in shaping the Gulf War coalition and in aiding Kurdish refugees after the war. In the early 1990s, the UN also helped Namibia achieve independence and mediated civil strife in Angola, Nicaragua, El Salvador, and Yugoslavia. As of 2008, the United Nations was involved in 16 active peace missions with more than 100,000 people serving worldwide. The UN election support missions in nations such as Afghanistan, Burundi, Iraq, Liberia, and the Democratic Republic of Congo have contributed to over 56 million voters having the opportunity to exercise their right to vote.

Territories. Those entities included (1) several colonies that had been mandates under the League of Nations in the years between World War I and World War II, (2) colonial possessions taken from enemy nations in World War II, and (3) some colonial areas voluntarily placed under the UN's trusteeship system by UN members. By 1994, however, the last of those Trust Territories had achieved selfgoverning status and so, today, the Trusteeship Council exists in name only.

International Court of Justice The International Court of Justice (ICJ), also known as the World Court, is the UN's judicial arm. All members of the UN are automatically parties to the ICJ Statute. Under certain conditions, the services of the court are also available to nonmember states. A UN member may agree to accept the court's jurisdiction over cases in which it may be involved either unconditionally or with certain reservations (exceptions that may not conflict with the ICJ Statute).

The ICJ is made up of 15 judges selected for nine-year terms by the General Assembly and the Security Council. It sits in permanent session at the Peace Palace in The Hague, the Netherlands, and handles cases brought to it voluntarily by both members and nonmembers of the UN. The ICJ also advises the other UN bodies on legal questions arising out of their activities. If any party to a dispute fails to obey a judgment of the court, the other party may take that matter to the Security Council.

The Secretariat The civil service branch of the UN is the Secretariat. It is headed by the secretary-general, who is elected to a fiveyear term by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security Council.

The secretary-general heads a staff of some 9,000 persons who conduct the day-to-day work of the UN. Beyond his or her administrative chores, the charter gives to the secretary-general this hugely important power: He or she may bring before the Security Council any matter he or she believes poses a threat to international peace and security.

The secretary-general prepares the UN's two-year budget, which must be approved by the General Assembly. For 2008-2009, the operating budget totals \($ 4.19\) billion. The Assembly apportions the UN's expenses for each two-year period among its member-states.

Early on, the secretary-general was seen as little more than the UN's chief clerk. The post amounts to much more than that, however, because the eight men who have thus far held it transformed the office into a major channel for the negotiated settlement of international disputes. \({ }^{7}\)

\section*{The Work of the UN}

The purpose of the United Nations can be summed up this way: to make the world a better place. To that end, the UN is involved in a wide variety of activities.

Peacekeeping is a primary function of the United Nations. More than 100,000 military and civilian personnel provided by some 120 member countries are currently engaged in 16 UN global peacekeeping operations.

The UN's specialized agencies spend some several billion dollars a year for economic and social programs to help the world's poorest nations. Those monies are beyond that loaned by the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and the other UN agencies that further development in poorer countries.

Health is the major concern of several UN agencies. A joint program of UNICEF and WHO has immunized 80 percent of the world's children against six killer diseases, and it is estimated that this program saves the lives of more than 2 million children a year. Smallpox, which plagued the world for centuries, has now been all but eliminated by a WHO-led campaign. Today, that organization coordinates a massive global effort to control the spread of AIDS.

The health of the environment is also a significant concern of the world organization. United Nations environmental conventions have helped reduce acid rain, lessened marine pollution, and phased out the production of 7 The eight secretaries-general: Trigve Lie (Norway, 1946-1953), Dag Hammarskjold (Sweden, 1953-1961), U Thant (Burma, 1962-1972), Kurt Waldheim (Austria, 1972-1982), Javier Perez de Cuellar (Peru, 1982-1992), Boutros Boutros-Ghali (Egypt, 1992-1997), Kofi Annan (Ghana, 1997-2006), and Ban Kimoon (South Korea, 2007-).

\section*{jurisdiction} \(n\). authority of a court to decide a dispute

\section*{Background}

DOCTORS WITHOUT BORDERS The nongovernmental organization Doctors Without Borders provides humanitarian medical assistance in nations where epidemics, malnutrition, conflict, and natural disasters threaten survival. It fields more than 27,000 heal th professionals and support staff of many nationalities, including more than 200 Americans. In recent years, medical teams have responded to pandemics of AIDS and tuberculosis. They have cared for victims of floods in Mexico and cyclones in Bangladesh. They have brought essential medical services to refugees, street children, and migrants who otherwise would have no access to healthcare. When their teams witness atrocities in the course of their work, they speak out to focus international attention on the situation. The group alerted the UN Security Council to the crisis in Darfur. In 1999, the group received the Nobel Peace Prize.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Have students select a region-Europe, Asia, South America, Africa, or the Middle East-and research one alliance that exists between the United States and countries of that region. Then, have students create a map of the region, highlighting the members of the alliance and noting when each nation became a member.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activities "Foreign Aid" and "The United Nations" (Unit 4 All-in-One, pp. 275, 276), which have students research to learn more about foreign assistance and the role of the UN around the world.

L3 Differentiate Have students create an advertisement, commercial, jingle, or poster for the UN, promoting the need to guarantee one of the rights in the UN Declaration.
[3] Differentiate Have students visit the United States Agency of International Development Web site (www.usaid.gov) and research the types of assistance provided by the agency. Then, students should create a poster to illustrate the work of this government agency.
[4] Differentiate Have students research, either online or in the library, the reactions to the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights at the time the document was created and any issues relating to it today. Students should prepare a short oral presentation based on their research.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}
\(L 3\)
Collect the Core Worksheets and grade students' work.
\begin{tabular}{l}
\(\boxed{L 1}\) \\
\(\boxed{L 1}\) \\
\hline L2 \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 277)
Section Quiz B (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 278)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Government}

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint heads the UN administrative staff, prepares the organization's budget, and is a major channel in the settlement negotiations of international disputes

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Describing how the U.S. \\ cooperates with other \\ nations (Question 1)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Create a version of the section's graphic \\ organizer on the board and review the \\ answers with the class.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Defining and providing \\ examples of foreign aid \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students look through newspapers \\ and magazines to find examples of the \\ types of foreign aid.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Explaining how NATO \\ has changed over time \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students re-read the text material \\ on NAT0 and create a concept web of \\ the main ideas.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Summarizing the function \\ of the UN Security Council \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write a summary of each \\ Security Council paragraph in the text.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding the pur- \\ pose of regional alliances \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Use the world political map at the back \\ of the book to review the regional alli-- \\ ances mentioned in the section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Analyzing the General \\ Assembly (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Define a "town hall meeting" and discuss \\ the similarities and differences.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Comparing American \\ attitudes on foreign policy \\
(Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Define the terms isolationist and interna- \\ tionalist on the board and have students \\ create a list of reasons why the U.S. has \\ become more involved with other nations \\ today.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint international peace, economic development, solving health and environmental problems, protecting human rights the UN?
gases that destroy the ozone layer. The UN also helped establish the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. That body was created to examine the large volume of information about climate change generated by the scientific community and to help provide government decision-makers with accurate, balanced analysis of this data.

Human rights have long been a leading priority for the United Nations. In 1948, the UN drafted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and it has sponsored more than 80 treaties that help protect specific rights. Various United Nations agencies work to aid and protect refugees and displaced persons, and the international organization raises more than \($ 1\) billion a year for assistance to victims of war and natural disasters.

The UN also works closely with nongovernmental organizations, NGOs, around the world. As the name suggests, NGOs are independent of governments, and the list of issues and topics that they exist to address is nearly endless. On issues ranging from public health to the environment to the status of women, these groups perform valuable work around the world. The United Nations actively seeks to partner with those organizations as a means of achieving its goals. A prime example is the International Committee of the Red Cross, a humanitarian NGO with which the UN works to assist victims of disasters ranging from military conflicts to those inflicted by Mother Nature.

\section*{The UN and the U.S.}

The United States has a long and close relationship with the UN. It was President Franklin Roosevelt who, with Britain's Winston Churchill, first proposed the formation of the UN. The United States occupies a permanent place on the Security Council. Though the United States is one of 192 members of the UN, it funds some 22 percent of the UN budget. (Each member's contribution is roughly equal in proportion to its share of the world's gross domestic product.)

The relationship with the UN is complex, however. The United States has at times been critical of the UN. In fact, the United States has even withheld payment of funds to the institution. Also, the United States has not always agreed with some formal policy positions taken by the UN. In 2003, for example, the Bush administration was frustrated in its efforts to win UN support for military action against Iraq. Yet, the United States often works closely with the UN on a variety of issues to further policies that are important to both, including environmental and humanitarian causes. For example, the UN is now closely involved with American efforts to bring peace and stability to Iraq.

Essential Questions ro continue to build a Journal \(\begin{aligned} & \\ & \text { Essential Question, go to }\end{aligned}\) Essential Question, go to your
Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your com pleted table to answer this question: In what ways does the United States cooperate with other nations?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What is foreign aid? (b) Cite two examples of that policy
3. (a) What is NATO? (b) How has it changed over the years?
4. Summarize the organization and function of the UN Security Council.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Identify Central Issues Why do you think the U.S. has formed regional security alliances around the globe?
6. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Do you think the United Nations General Assembly deserves to be called "the town meeting of the world"? Why or why not?
7. Make Comparisons (a) Compare the basic foreign policy of the United States early on to that of today. (b) How do this nation's alliances illustrate this change?

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Write a Thesis Statement A thesis statement can summarize the focus of your problemsolution essay. To help you determine your thesis statement, use the problem you identified in Section 1, the solution you selected, and its supporting research to determine how best to research to determine how best to summarize your findings. Then, write a sentence that clearly states the pura sentence that clearly states the pu pose and goal of your essay.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The U.S. provides economic and military aid to other countries. The U.S. belongs to several regional mutual defense alliances, including NATO, the Rio Pact, ANZUS, and pacts with Japan, the Philippines, and South Korea. The U.S. is a founding member of the UN, which aims to maintain global peace and security through international cooperation.
2. (a) military and economic aid to other nations (b) possible examples: providing food, medicines, funds, and military training and supplies
3. (a) an alliance for the collective defense of Europe and North America (b) The original goal was to protect Western Europe, the U.S., and Canada against Soviet aggression. Since the collapse of the Soviet Union, NATO has expanded to include Eastern European nations. It now focuses on peacekeeping around the world.

4. The Security Council has five permanent members (the U.S., Britain, France, Russia, and China), and ten elected nonpermanent members. It is mainly responsible for maintaining international peace. It evaluates security threats and can take actions such as placing economic or military sanctions and sending UN forces to stop aggression or keep the peace.
5. to promote U.S. security by partnering with other nations for mutual defense
6. Possible response: Yes, because each member nation has one seat and one vote
7. (a) Early American policymakers were more isolationist than policymakers now. (b) American alliances illustrate how the U.S. has become more active in international affairs.

QUICK WRITE Thesis statements should clearly state the essay's purpose and goal.

Key American Foreign Policies
\begin{tabular}{|ll|}
\hline Monroe Doctrine & \begin{tabular}{l} Isolates the U.S. from international affairs unless \\ North or South America is threatened.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Roosevelt Corollary & \begin{tabular}{l} Extends the Monroe Doctrine by giving the U.S. the \\ authority to intervene in the affairs of Latin America.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Good Neighbor Policy & \begin{tabular}{l} Reduces American political and military interference \\ in Latin America.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Deterrence & \begin{tabular}{l} Maintains that superior military strength will deter \\ hostile powers from attacking the nation.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Truman Doctrine & \begin{tabular}{l} Affirms that the U.S. will oppose any aggressor's \\ attempt to control another nation and its people.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Containment & \begin{tabular}{l} Prevents the spread of communism by assisting \\ threatened nations.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Détente & \begin{tabular}{l} Reduces tensions between the United States and \\ other countries.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Collective Security & \begin{tabular}{l} Unifies nations against any nation that threatens the \\ peace.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary} domestic affairs p. 482 foreign affairs p. 482 isolationism p. 482 foreign policy \(p .483\) right of legation p. 485 ambassador p. 485 diplomatic immunity p. 486 passport p. 487 visa p. 487 espionage p. 492 terrorism p. 492 collective security p. 498 deterrence p. 498 cold war p. 498 containment p. 500 détente p. 501 foreign aid p. 505 regional security alliance \(p .506\) NATO p. 506
United Nations p. 508
Security Council p. 509

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about foreign policy and national defense, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Ross, Stewart. United Nations. Heinemann, 2003.
L2 Kallen, Stuart A., ed. What Are the Most Serious Threats to National Security? Greenhaven Press, 2005.
L3 Renehan, Edward J. The Monroe Doctrine: The Cornerstone of American Foreign Policy. Chelsea House Publications, 2007.
L4 Kissinger, Henry. Does America Need a Foreign Policy?: Toward a Diplomacy for the 21 st Century. Simon & Schuster, 2002.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

True/False Tests There are a few concrete strategies students can use when taking true/false tests. First, point out that every part of a statement must be true in order for the answer to be "true." If any part of the statement is false, the answer is "false." Words that qualify a statement, such as sometimes, often, generally, and most, often indicate a true answer because they make a statement more accurate. Conversely, qualifiers such as never, always, all, and every often indicate a false answer because they are too broad. If a sentence uses negatives, try dropping the negative and re-reading it. Decide if that answer is true or false, and then choose the opposite for your real answer. Finally, be sure students realize they should guess at answers they don't know on a true/false test. They have a 50 percent chance of being right.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 4 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 485, 493, 500, 509
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) Isolationism is the purposeful refusal to become generally involved in the affairs of the rest of the world. Internationalism is a policy to become involved with the problems of other nations. (b) during and after World War II, because it became clear that the problems of other nations affected U.S. security and prosperity (c) possible advantages: promotes U.S. security by promoting political and economic stability around the world, increases markets for U.S. products; possible disadvantages: foreign aid reduces funds available for domestic programs, interfering in the affairs of other nations can involve us in armed conflicts
2. (a) to represent the U.S. in diplomatic matters (b) Ambassadors are appointed by the President with Senate consent. Appointees may have experience as career diplomats, but often their only qualification is their support for the President. (c) Ambassadors are located in foreign nations, so they can promote policy goals by negotiating with foreign governments and monitoring U.S. programs within those nations.

\section*{SECTION 2}
3. (a) The ultimate authority over the military lies with civilian branches of government.
(b) The Constitution makes the President, a civilian, commander in chief, and gives broad military powers to Congress, the civilian elected representatives of the people. The Department of Defense implements the President's national security policies, and the department head cannot have served on active military duty for at least ten years before being named to the post. (c) The military might use its power to overthrow the civilian government.
4. (a) mostly the Office of the Director of Na tional Intelligence and the Department of Homeland Security (b) The U.S. has a vast number of potential terrorist targets that could not be fully secured.

\section*{SECTION 3}
5. (a) the strategy of maintaining such military might that no nation would risk attacking (b) Deterrence is believed to have been a key factor in the downfall of the Soviet Union. (c) Deterrence is still useful now in preventing attacks from other

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) What is the difference between isolationism and internationalism? (b) When and why did the United States stop pursuing a largely isolationist foreign policy? (c) What are the advantages and disadvantages of an internationalist foreign policy?
2. (a) What is the major responsibility of an ambassador? (b) How are ambassadors appointed, and what qualifications do they usually have? (c) How does the work of an ambassador help advance American foreign policy?

\section*{Section 2}
3. (a) What does "civilian control of the military" mean? (b) How is civilian control of the military guaranteed in the United States? (c) What are the dangers of a military not under civilian control?
4. (a) Which executive branch agencies are primarily responsible for protecting the United States from terrorist attacks? (b) Why is it so difficult to protect this nation completely against terrorist attacks?

\section*{Section 3}
5. (a) What is the policy of deterrence? (b) How effective has it been as a tool in American foreign policy? (c) Do you think it is still an effective policy in today's world? Why or why not?
6. (a) What is the basic goal of American foreign policy? (b) How does the history of American foreign policy illustrate that goal? (c) What do you think should be the overall goal of American foreign policy?

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
11. Essential Question Activity Select a country to which the United States has provided humanitarian, military, or economic aid within the last 20 years. Conduct research and use the following questions to help you create a cause-and-effect chart
(a) What event led to U.S. involvement? For how long did the United States provide support?
(b) Was American support military or humanitarian in nature? Did its purpose change over time?
(c) Were other organizations involved? If so, which ones?
(d) What were the results of American aid?
7. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) What is the cartoonist suggesting in this cartoon? (b) Is it an accurate portrayal? (c) Should the United States armed forces be more or less involved in the affairs of other nations? Explain.

\section*{Section 4}
8. (a) Cite three regional alliances and the countries associated with them. (b) What effect do you think a pact between the United States and countries in the Middle East would have on world affairs today?
9. (a) What is the main purpose of the United Nations?
(b) What are the six main bodies of the UN and how do they support that purpose? (c) Do you think the United Nations should be a means of advancing American international policy? Why or why not?
Writing About Government
10. Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write a problem-and-solution essay on a current international issue. Make sure you clearly define the problem, explain your solution, and provide supporting details illustrating how your solution could succeed. See pp. S3-S5 in the Writing Handbook.

514 Chapter 17 Assessment
nations, but is less useful as a strategy against terrorist attacks or rogue states.
6. (a) to protect the security and well-being of the U.S. (b) Originally, isolationist policies were designed to keep the U.S. safe by staying out of foreign conflicts. Over time, more internationalist policies were designed to keep the U.S. safe by entering into collective security agreements. (c) Some students might agree with the current goal of protecting U.S. security and well-being. Others might suggest that humanitarian aid should be part of the overall goal of U.S. foreign policy.
7. (a) that the U.S. military bears the burden of supporting the world (b) Possible response: Yes; the U.S. military is involved in so many actions around the globe. (c) Possible response: The armed forces should be less involved in the affairs of other nations unless the security of the U.S. is genuinely at risk.

\section*{SECTION 4}
8. (a) Answers may include: NATO (Canada, the U.S., and most European nations), the Rio Pact (nations of North, South, and Central America), the ANZUS Pact (Australia,

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Deterrence and Foreign Policy}

The destructive force of a nuclear weapon is horrifying, not only in its actual detonation but in the mere possibility of its use. As illustrated by the following documents, having and stockpiling weapons with such destructive capabilities became the American foreign policy of deterrence that continues to this day.

\section*{Document 1}

The Japanese began the war from the air at Pear Harbor. They have been repaid many fold. And the end is not yet. With this bomb we have now added a new and revolutionary increase in destruction to supplement the growing power of our armed forces. In their present form these bombs are now in production and even more powerful forms are in development.

We are now prepared to obliterate more rapidly and completely every productive enterprise the Japanese have above ground in any city. We shall destroy their docks, their factories, and their communications Let there be no mistake; we shall completely destroy Japan's power to make war.

President Harry Truman on the bombing of Hiroshima, 1945

\section*{Document 2}

Our reluctance for conflict should not be misjudged as a failure of will. When action is required to preserve our national security, we will act. We will maintain sufficient strength to prevail if need be, knowing that if we do so we have the best chance of never having to use that strength.

\section*{Document 3}

The effort to develop ballistic missile defenses is part of a broader effort to move beyond the Cold War and establish a new deterrence framework for the 21 st century. .

We no longer worry about a massive Soviet first strike. We worry about terrorist states and terrorist networks that might not be deterred by our nuclear forces. To deal with such adversaries we need a new approach to deterrence. This approach combines deep reductions in offensive nuclear forces with new, advanced conventional capabilities and defenses to protect free people from nuclear blackmail or attack.

As we reduce our nuclear arsenal, we're investing in advanced conventional capabilities. . . . We're investing in the next generation of missile defenses-because these systems do more than defend our citizens, they also strengthen deterrence.
.[W]ith missile defenses in place, the calculus of deterrence changes in our favor. If [a] terrorist regime does not have confidence their missile attack would be successful, it is less likely to engage in acts of aggression in the first place.
-President George W. Bush
Global War on Terror speech, 2007

Use your knowledge of American foreign policy and Documents 1-3 to answer Questions 1-3.
1. What is the main point of both Documents 2 and 3 ?
A. Deterrence is not enough to deter aggression.
B. The United States should reduce military spending.
C. New methods of deterrence are necessary.
D. Military strength will ensure national security.
2. How might President Truman's comments in Document 1 have helped deter other nations from attacking the United States?
3. Put It Together Do you think that nuclear weapons and weapon stockpiling have helped the United States achieve its foreign policy objectives? Why or why not?

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. D
2. If other nations believed that the United States would be able to use the new and immensely powerful atomic bombs against any nation that attacked it, they would not provoke the U.S. into retaliating against them.
3. Possible response: Arms stockpiling did help deter Soviet attack during the cold war and contributed to the collapse of the Soviet Union. Huge stores of nuclear and conventional weapons can still deter hostile nations. However, they will have little deterrent effect on terrorist organizations that are dispersed across many nations, not massed in one location where huge bombs can annihilate them and their war-making capabilities. Also, rogue states and terrorist groups might gain access to nuclear weapons and use them against us.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

New Zealand, and the U.S.), the Japanese Pact (Japan and the U.S.), the Philippines Pact (the Philippines and the U.S.), and the Korean Pact (South Korea and the U.S.). (b) The Middle East is a potentially explosive region. If the U.S. forms a pact with some nations there, resentment could lead to war.
9. (a) to maintain international peace and security, develop friendly relations, and promote justice and cooperation (b) General Assembly: representatives from all member nations discuss issues; Security Council: responsible for maintaining peace;

Economic and Social Council: helps solve international economic, cultural, educational, and health problems; Trusteeship Council: intended to assure just treatment of non-self-governing territories; International Court of Justice: tries cases involving international law; Secretariat: secretarygeneral alerts Security Council to threats to peace and helps settle international disputes (c) Possible response: Yes. As the UN's major funder and a permanent member of the Security Council, the U.S. can influence UN actions. For example, a UN mandate supported the extended presence of U.S. troops in Iraq. This helped advance U.S. policy to reshape Iraq into a democracy.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
10. Essays should define a problem and give a viable solution with supporting details.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
11. Charts should show causes leading to U.S. foreign aid and the results of that aid.
12. Students should state their opinion clearly and support it with well-reasoned details.

Before assigning these questions, distribute the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 4 All-inOne, p. 291). Use the criteria and the guidelines below to grade students' answers to the Essential Question Warmup questions. Then send students to the Essential Questions Journal to answer the unit Essential Question.
1. Students may point out that voters often judge candidates based on rather superficial characteristics such as speaking style and appearance. Voters should, however, judge candidates by such criteria as experience, vision, reaction to pressure, intelligence, leadership qualities, and how closely a candidate's views on the issues match those of the voter. Answers may differ on the relative importance students assign to these criteria.
2. The passage of time results in perspective. For example, what might have been seen as a crisis at one time may turn out to be a relatively minor event with little bearing on a President's entire term of office. In addition, decisions might result in unexpected consequences later on.
3. A President who is popular-has the will of the people behind him or her-will be more effective than an unpopular President. However, sometimes a President must make an unpopular decision if it is for the greater good of the country. Presidents who are overly concerned about their popularity will likely not make good long-term decisions.
4. Sample answer: Those Presidents who are considered "great," such as Washington or Lincoln, were tested by extraordinary events that allowed them to rise to the occasion and show heroism. Not every potentially "great" President governs under those circumstances, suggesting that one should look deeply into a presidency to see whether greatness in vision or decision making is evidenced under more ordinary circumstances.

 The Federal Court System
Chapter 19:
Civil Liberties: First Amendment Freedoms
Chapter 20: Civil Liberties: Protecting Individual Rights

Chapter 21: Civil Rights: Equal Justice Under Law

Essential Question What should be the role of the judicial branch?

\section*{Government Online Resources}

Government Online Teacher Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Online Teacher's Edition with lesson planner and lecture notes
- Teacher's Resource Library with All-in-One Resources, Color Transparencies, Adequate Yearly Progress Monitoring, and an alternative lesson plan for each chapter
- SuccessTracker Assessment

Government Online Student Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Interactive textbook with audio
- American Government Essential Questions Video
- Chapter-level WebQuests
- Guided Audio Tours and Interactivities
- Student Self-Tests

\section*{ESSENTIAL QUESTION PERSPECTIVES}

Essential questions frame each unit and chapter of study, asking students to consider big ideas about government. The question for this unit-What should be the role of the judicial branch?demands that students ask further questions. What is the role of the judicial branch? Is an independent judiciary essential to the success of our government? Should the Supreme Court have the final word in interpreting the Constitution? How should the courts make judgments when presented with two or more equally valid points of view?
To begin this unit, assign the Unit 5 Warmup Activity on page 148 of the Essential Questions Journal. This will help students start to consider their position on the Unit 5 Essential Question: What should be the role of the judicial branch?
Show the Unit 5 American Government Essential Questions Video to help students begin thinking about the unit Essential Question and designate a classroom bulletin board for students to post news articles related to the unit Essential Question. Use the Conversation Wall strategy (p. T27) to encourage students to post articles and comments on other students' postings.
Later, students will further explore the chapter-level essential questions:
Chapter 18: Does the structure of the federal court system allow it to effectively administer justice?
Chapter 19: How can the judiciary balance individual rights with the common good?
Chapter 20: To what extent has the judiciary protected the rights of privacy, security, and personal freedom?
Chapter 21: Why are there perpetual struggles for civil rights?
Use the Essential Questions Journal throughout the program to help students consider these and other big ideas about government.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 5}

What should be the role of the judicial branch?

\section*{CHAPTER 18}

Does the structure of the federal court system allow it to administer justice effectively?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and the quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the photo and quotation suggest about the federal court system? (that the judicial branch has the power to "saywhat the law is") In this chapter, students will learn about the structure of the federal court system. Then tell students to begin to explore the federal court system by completing the Chapter 18 Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}ELL Differentiate Chapter 18 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 9)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:
- Types of Jurisdiction: Which Court?
- Who Is on the Court Today?

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

You may wish to teach decision making as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 18 Skills Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 41) to help students learn the steps in making a decision. The worksheet asks students to read an excerpt from the Plessy v. Ferguson decision of 1896, and to answer questions about it. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 42).

\section*{WebQuest
online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the federal court system.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLock 1: Teach these parts of Section 1 lesson: Analyze the Framers' Intentions (Transparency 18A), Differentiate Types of Federal Courts, Chart Federal Court Jurisdiction, Core Worksheet 18.1 and Extend Worksheet 18.1. Discuss Transparency 18B. Have students complete first two Strategies for Remediation. bLock 2: Teach the Section 2 lesson, including Core Worksheet 18.2. Allow time for students to prepare courtroom skits. Skip to Section 4 and teach Chart Special Courts' Jurisdiction and Trace Appeals Through Special Courts.
BLOCK 3: Have students perform their courtroom skits. Allow one hour for Core Worksheet 18.3A discussion. Distribute Core Worksheet 18.3B for groups to comprise majority opinions. Conclude by assigning the second Remediation activity in Section 3 (writing a booklet), and the Assess activity in Section 4 (pyramid chart).

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Display Transparency 18 E to give students an overview of the federal courts and their appellate path. Have students briefly study it, especially the "Key to Courts." Then organize the students into four groups, with each group assigned to a section of the chapter. Groups must change each heading or subheading in their section into a question, and then answer the question. They should use these questions/answers to teach an overview of their section to the other groups. Fill in vital information that students overlook, or distribute copies of the Facts and Enduring Understandings. Finally, have each student re-create the transparency diagram, adding specific information to each level and type of courts.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- learn the Framers' intentions for the national judiciary by analyzing an excerpt from The Federalist No. 78.
- comprehend the structure and role of the federal courts by completing a jurisdiction T-chart and filling in a Venn diagram with examples of exclusive and concurrent cases.
- identify the skills, term, pay, and selection of federal judges by creating a classified advertisement for a judge.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- identify the structure of the inferior constitutional courts by completing a chart highlighting the various courts and their jurisdictions.
- understand how inferior constitutional courts function by constructing paths of appeals for various case scenarios.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- learn about the scope of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction by analyzing a political cartoon showing the power of judicial review, and by identifying the Court's original and appellate jurisdiction.
- identify how the Supreme Court operates by sequencing the appeals process, by reading a transcript of a real case, and by formulating opinions on controversial cases.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- identify the special courts by completing a chart highlighting the various courts' jurisdictions.
- understand how special courts function by constructing paths of appeals for case scenarios.
- analyze the constitutionality of military commissions by studying opinions for and against them.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient ReadersAll Students
L4
Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{What are the structure and function of the national judiciary?}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ The National Judiciary } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Structure } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Types of Jurisdiction } \\
\hline - Dual court system & - Exclusive jurisdiction \\
- Supreme Court & - Concurrent jurisdiction \\
- Constitutional courts & - Original jurisdiction \\
- Special courts & - Appellate jurisdiction \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- learn the Framers' intentions for the national judiciary by analyzing an excerpt from The Federalist No. 78.
- comprehend the structure and role of the federal courts by completing a jurisdiction T-chart and filling in a Venn diagram with examples of exclusive and concurrent cases.
- identify the skills, term, pay, and selection of federal judges by creating a classified advertisement for a judge.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 13) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 15)

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{The National Judiciary}

Guiding Question
What are the structure and function of the national judiciary? Use a table like the one below to take notes on the section.
\begin{tabular}{|l|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ The National Judiciary } \\
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Structure } \\
\hline - Dyal court system of Jurisdiction & - Exclusive jurisdiction \\
\hline & - \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- inferior courts - appellate
- jurisdiction jurisdiction
- concurrent - judicial restraint jurisdiction - precedent \(\begin{array}{ll}\text { - jurisdiction } & \text { - precedent } \\ \text { - plaintiff } & \text { - judicial activism }\end{array}\)
- defendant
- original

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain why the Constitution created a national judiciary, and describe its structure.
2. Identify the criteria that determine whether a case is within the jurisdiction of a federal court, and compare the types of jurisdiction.
3. Outline the process for appointing federal judges, and list their terms of office.
4. Understand the impact of judicial philosophy.
5. Examine the roles of court officers.

Image Above: Judge Maryanne Trump Barry, U.S. Court of Appeals, Third Circuit
oe steals a sports car in Chicago. Two days later, he is stopped for speeding in Atlanta. Where, now, will he be tried for car theft? In Illinois, where he stole the car? In Georgia, where he was caught? Joe may be on the verge of learning something about the federal court system-and about the Dyer Act of 1925, which makes it a federal crime to transport a stolen vehicle across a State line.

\section*{Creation of a National Judiciary}

During the years the Articles of Confederation were in force (1781-1789), there were no national courts and no national judiciary. The laws of the United States were interpreted and applied as each State saw fit, and sometimes not at all. Disputes between States and between persons who lived in different States were decided, if at all, by the courts in one of the States involved. \({ }^{1}\) Often, decisions by the courts in one State were ignored by courts in the other States.

Alexander Hamilton spoke to the point in The Federalist No. 22. He described "the want of a judiciary power" as a "circumstance which crowns the defects of the Confederation." Arguing the need for a national court system, he added, "Laws are a dead letter without courts to expound and define their true meaning and operation." The Framers created a national judiciary for the United States in a single sentence in the Constitution:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The judicial Power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.
-Article III, Section 1
Congress also is given the expressed power "to constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court" in Article I, Section 8, Clause 9.

1 The Articles of Confederation did provide (in Article IX) a very complicated procedure for the settlement of such disputes, but it was rarely used.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE GRAPHIC DATA}

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • The national judiciary consists of a Supreme Court and inferior courts. - Congress created two kinds of inferior courts. - Federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over some cases and concurrent jurisdiction in others. - The President appoints federal judges, who are subject to confirmation by the Senate. • Judges' philosophies influence their decisions.
CONCEPTS: checks and balances, federalism, role of government in public policy ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Constitution created the Supreme Court, its jurisdiction, and the manner and terms of federal judicial appointments. • The U.S. has dual national and State court systems. • Federal judges often shape public policy.

A Dual Court System Keep in mind this important point: There are two separate court systems in the United States. \({ }^{2}\) On one hand, the national judiciary spans the country with its more than 100 courts. On the other hand, each of the 50 States has its own system of courts. Their numbers run well into the thousands, and most of the cases that are heard in court today are heard in those State, not the federal, courts.

Two Kinds of Federal Courts The Constitution establishes the Supreme Court and leaves to Congress the creation of the inferior courts-the lower federal courts beneath the Supreme Court. Over the years, Congress has created two distinct types of federal courts: (1) the constitutional courts,

2 Federalism does not require two court systems. Article Ill provides that Congress "may" establish lower federal courts. At its first session in 1789, Congress decided to construct a complete set of federal courts to parallel hose of the States. In most of the worla's oner federal systems, he principal courts are hose of and (2) the special courts. See the diagram "Types of Federal Courts" below.

The constitutional courts are those federal courts that Congress has formed under Article III to exercise "the judicial Power of the United States." Together with the Supreme Court, they now include the courts of appeals, the district courts, and the U.S. Court of International Trade. The constitutional courts are also called the regular courts and, sometimes, Article III courts.

The special courts do not exercise the broad "judicial Power of the United States." Rather, they have been created by Congress to hear cases arising out of some of the expressed powers given to Congress in Article I. The special courts hear a much narrower range of cases than those that may come before the constitutional courts.

These special courts are also called the legislative courts and, sometimes, Article I courts. Today, they include the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, the U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, the U.S. Court of Federal Claims, the U.S. Tax

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 18, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 9)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 13)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 15)
L3 L2 Core Worksheets (pp. 17, 18)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 22)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 20)
L3 Quiz A (p. 23)
L2 Quiz B (p. 24)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following quote and questions on the board:
"The judiciary . . . has no influence over either the sword or the purse; . . . It may truly be said to have neither FORCE nor WILL, but merely judgment."
-Alexander Hamilton, The Federalist No. 78
What is Hamilton saying about the function of the judicial branch? What does he imply are NOT functions of the judicial branch?
Have students write answers to the questions in their notebooks.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students look up definitions of the terms sword and purse. Discuss how Hamilton is using non-literal meanings of these words.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Have volunteers share their answers to the Bellringer questions. Hamilton states that the function of the judicial branch is to judge. The judiciary has no power to make (the "will") or to enforce (the "force") laws.

\section*{L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students how Hamil-} ton refers to the executive and legislative branches. Why does he refer to them this way? (He refers to the executive branch as the "sword" and the "force" because it has the power to implement laws. The legislative branch is the "purse" and the "will" because it makes the laws, and the President and the judicial branch must receive authorization from Congress before either can spend money.)

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Diagrams Constitutional courts were created to exercise broad judicial powers; special courts were created to exercise narrowly defined powers.

\section*{ANALYZE THE FRAMERS' INTENTIONS}

Display Transparency 18A, which includes another excerpt from The Federalist No. 78. After a volunteer reads the excerpt aloud, ask: What does Hamilton say is the exclusive province of the judiciary? (the power to interpret laws) Does this function make the judicial branch more powerful than the legislative branch? (no) What protects the people from unconstitutional statutes of the legislature? (Judges must interpret the legislature's laws through the fundamental laws of the Constitution.)
L2 ELL Differentiate Point out that the word province in this context means "function" or "scope." In addition, the phrase power of the people can be interpreted as "rights of the people."

\(L 4\)
Differentiate Have students paraphrase the excerpt from The Federalist No. 78.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATE TYPES OF FEDERAL COURTS}

Display Transparency 18 B and have students study the How Government Works diagram "Types of Federal Courts. " Ask: Which is the only court mentioned in the Constitution? (the Supreme Court) What are the two levels of federal courts? (the Supreme Court and inferior courts) How are the inferior courts further delineated? (as constitutional courts and special courts) Which type of inferior courts were created by Congress? (both the constitutional courts and the special courts)
L2 LPR Differentiate Have students re-create the "Types of Federal Courts" diagram in their notebooks, labeling the two levels of federal courts, the two general types of inferior courts, the specific courts in each type, and the other names of the inferior courts (constitutional courts: regular or Article III; special courts: legislative or Article I).

Court, the various territorial courts, and the courts of the District of Columbia. You will look at the unique features of these tribunals later in this chapter.

\section*{Federal Court Jurisdiction}

The constitutional courts hear most of the cases tried in the federal courts. That is to say, those courts have jurisdiction over most federal cases. Jurisdiction is defined as the authority of a court to hear (to try and to decide) a case. The term means, literally, the power "to say the law."

The Constitution gives federal courts jurisdiction over only certain cases. Recall, most cases heard in court in the United States are heard in State, not federal, courts. Article III, Section 2 provides that federal courts may hear cases because of either the subject matter or the parties involved in those cases.

Subject Matter In terms of subject matter, the federal courts may hear a case if it involves a "federal question"-that is, the interpretation and application of a provision in the Constitution or in any federal statute or treaty-or a question of admiralty or maritime law. Admiralty law relates to matters that arise on the high seas or the navigable waters of the United States, such as a collision at sea or a crime committed aboard a ship. Maritime law relates to matters that arise on land but are directly related to the water, such as a contract to deliver ship supplies at dockside.

The Framers purposefully gave the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction in all admiralty and maritime cases in order to ensure national supremacy in the regulation of all waterborne commerce.

Parties A case falls within the jurisdiction of the federal courts if one of the parties involved in the case is (1) the United States or one of its officers or agencies; (2) an ambassador, consul, or other official representative of a foreign government; (3) one of the 50 States suing another State, a resident of another State, or a foreign government or one of its subjects; (4) a citizen of one State suing a citizen of another State; (5) an American citizen suing a foreign government or one of its subjects; or
(6) a citizen of a State suing another citizen of that same State where both claim title to land under grants from different States.

These criteria for determining which cases can be heard in the federal courts may seem quite complicated, and they are. But the matter is also a reflection of federalism and, so, of the dual system of courts in this country. To put the whole point of the jurisdiction of the federal courts the other way around: Those cases that are not heard by the federal courts fall within the jurisdiction of the State courts.

\section*{Types of Jurisdiction}

Still more must be said on this quite complex matter of federal court jurisdiction. The federal courts exercise both exclusive and concurrent jurisdiction and, also, original and appellate jurisdiction.

Exclusive and Concurrent Jurisdiction Most of the cases that can be heard in the federal courts fall within their exclusive jurisdiction. That is, they can be tried only in the federal courts. Thus, a case involving an ambassador or some other official of a foreign government cannot be heard in a State court; it must be tried in a federal court. The trial of a person charged with a federal crime, or a suit involving the infringement of a patent or a copyright, or one involving any other matter arising out of an act of Congress is also within the exclusive (sole) jurisdiction of the federal courts.

Some cases may be tried in either a federal or a State court. Then, the federal and State courts have concurrent jurisdiction, meaning they share the power to hear these cases. Disputes involving citizens of different States are fairly common examples of this type of case. Such cases are known in the law as cases in diverse citizenship. \({ }^{3}\)

Congress has provided that a federal district court may hear a case of diverse citizenship only when the amount of money

3 Congress first gave the federal courts concurrent jurisdiction in these cases in 1789, out of a perceived need for a neutral forum to settle disputes between residents of different States. Early on, it was feared that State courts (and their juries) might be prejudiced against "foreigners," people from other States. There seems litte likelihood of such bias today.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the United States or one of its officers or agencies; an ambassador, consul, or other foreign official; a State if it is suing another State, a citizen of another State, or a foreign government or subject; a citizen of one State suing a citizen of another State; a U.S. citizen suing a foreign government or subject; citizens of the same State if both claim land under grants from different States

\section*{Background}

FEDERAL CRIMES The federal courts hear cases concerning federal crimes. The Constitution gives the National Government the authority to punish certain crimes, such as counterfeiting, crimes committed on the high seas, and treason. "The Congress shall have Power . . . To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting; . . . To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas. . . ." (Article I, Section 8).
"The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason. . . ." (Article III, Section 3). The authority of the National Government to punish other crimes is implied from enumerated powers. For example, the Constitution grants Congress the power to establish post offices (Article I, Section 8). Implied in this power is the authority to prosecute mail fraud.

\section*{Types of Jurisdiction \\ Which Court?}

Two separate court systems, federal and State hear and decide cases in the United States. Their jurisdictions and examples of types of cases that would be heard at each are shown in this Venn diagram. How does the structure of this illustrated diagram explain the types of jurisdiction?

\section*{Scenario:}

Citizen M robs a bank in California.
Jurisdiction: Federal
Why? Bank robbery violates a federal law, regardless of he State in which the crime is committed.

Scenario:
Citizen X of Michigan sues Citizen Y of Massachusetts for \($ 80,000\) in damages caused as a result of a car accident.
Jurisdiction: Concurrent Why? When a citizen from one State sues a citizen of another State for damages greater than \($ 75,000\), the case can be heard in either a federal or State court.
involved in that case is at least \($ 75,000\). In such a case, the plaintiff-the person who files the suit-may bring the case in the proper State or federal court, as he or she chooses. If the plaintiff brings the case in a State court, the defendant-the person against whom the complaint is made-can have the trial moved, under certain circumstances, to the federal district court.

Original and Appellate Jurisdiction A court in which a case is first heard is said to have original jurisdiction over that case. That court, the trial court, is often described as "the court of first instance." A court that hears a case on appeal from a lower court exercises appellate jurisdiction over the case.

Appellate courts do not retry cases. Rather, they determine whether a trial court has acted in accord with applicable law. The higher court-the appellate court-may uphold, overrule, or in some way modify the decision appealed from the lower court. \({ }^{4}\)

In the federal judiciary, the district courts have only original jurisdiction, and the courts of appeals have only appellate jurisdiction. The Supreme Court exercises both original and (most often) appellate jurisdiction.

\section*{Federal Judges}

The manner in which federal judges are chosen, the terms for which they serve, and even the salaries they are paid are vital parts of the Constitution's design of an independent

4 Appellate comes from the Latin word appellare, meaning "to speak to, to call upon, to appeal to."

\section*{Constitutional Principles}
separation of powers In The Federalist No. 78, Alexander Hamilton discussed the importance of offering life tenure for judges. Besides enabling justices to remain independent of legislative and executive intrigue, life tenure was needed to attract qualified attorneys: " . . . [I]t will readily be conceived from the variety of controversies which grow out of the folly and wickedness of mankind, that the records of . precedents [and rules] must unavoidably swell to a very considerable bulk, and must demand long and laborious study to acquire a competent knowledge of them. Hence it is, that there can be but few men in the society who will have sufficient skill in the laws to qualify them for the stations of judges. . . . [A] temporary duration in office . would naturally discourage such characters from quitting a lucrative line of practice to accept a seat on the bench. . . ."

Tell students to go to the Interactivity for scenarios about types of jurisdiction.

\section*{DEFINE JURISDICTION}

Have a student find the meaning of jurisdiction in the textbook (the authority of a court to hear a case; literally, the power to "say the law"). Ask another student to look up the word in the dictionary for additional meanings. (the authority of a sovereign power to govern or legislate; the power or right to exercise authority or control; the limits or territory within which authority may be exercised)
L2 Differentiate Ask students to provide samples of various jurisdictions outside the realm of the courts. For example, what are the jurisdictions of the principal and assistant principal? (One may handle issues of truancy and failing grades; the other may handle issues of discipline.) How far does the jurisdiction of coastal countries extend into the ocean or sea? (Many countries claim the waters 200 nautical miles from their coasts as exclusive economic zones. )

\section*{CHART FEDERAL COURT JURISDICTION}

On the board, draw a T-chart like the one below. Have students copy the T-chart in their notebooks and work in pairs to fill in the information on both sides of the \(T\).
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Federal Court Jurisdiction } \\
\hline \multirow{2}{|}{\begin{tabular}{l}
Exclusive jurisdiction \\
(definition)
\end{tabular}} & Subject Matter \\
\cline { 2 - 2 } & Parties Involved \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Concurrent jurisdiction \\
(definition)
\end{tabular} & Types of cases \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Original jurisdiction \\
(definition)
\end{tabular} & Which federal courts have? \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Appellate jurisdiction \\
(definition)
\end{tabular} & Which federal courts have? \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

12 Differentiate Model note-taking skills by asking volunteers to write the information on the board.

\section*{Answers}

Which Court? In some areas, federal and State jurisdiction are distinct, whereas in other areas they overlap.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 18 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 17). Have students work in pairs to complete the Venn diagram by identifying federal, State, and concurrent jurisdiction, and then to answer the Reflection Questions. After the worksheets are finished, discuss why each dispute or case had its particular jurisdiction.
L2 L3 ELL Differentiate For these students, distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-inOne, p. 18).
L4 Differentiate Ask students to research current cases in the news and determine which court(s) would hear the cases, and why.

\section*{WRITE A CLASSIFIED AD FOR A JUSTICE}

Have students study samples of newspaper job ads, especially the wording of the skills required from applicants. Then ask students to write their own ads for the position of Supreme Court justice. Although the Constitution lists no formal requirements, students should list the skills and experience they believe justices should have. The ads should also list pay and other benefits. Students should provide "applicants" with information on the judicial selection process and why the presidential nominationSenate approval process is a form of checks and balances.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the Senate, especially influential senators from the nominee's home State and members of the Senate Judiciary Committee; the President's closest legal and political aides, especially the Attorney General; interest groups judicial branch. The Constitution declares that the President

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}
shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint . . . Judges of the supreme Court . . .
-Article II, Section II, Clause 2
First, in the Judiciary Act of 1789 , and ever since, Congress has provided the same procedure for the selection of all federal judges.

Selection of Judges The Senate has a major part in the selection of every federal judge. In effect, the Constitution says that the President can name to the federal bench anyone whom the Senate will confirm. Recall the practice of senatorial courtesy. It gives great weight to the wishes of the senators from a State in which a federal judge is to serve. In short, that unwritten rule means that the President almost always selects someone the senators from that State recommend.

As you know, the Constitution sets out formal qualifications for office for the President and for senators and representatives. It sets no age, residency, or citizenship requirements for federal judges, however. Nor does the Constitution require that a judge have legal training. Tradition alone dictates that federal judges have an educational or professional background in the law.

The President's closest legal and political aides, especially the Attorney General, take the lead in selecting federal judges. Influential senators-especially those from the nominee's home State and members of the Judiciary Committee, the President's allies and supporters in the legal profession, and various other important personalities in the President's political party also play a major role in selecting judges. Over recent years, a number of interest groups have become quite active in the process.

Today, an increasing number of those persons who are appointed to the federal bench have had prior judicial experience. Most federal judges are drawn from the ranks of leading attorneys, legal scholars and law school professors, former members of Congress, and State court judges. Elective office (in particular, a seat in the U.S. Senate) was once a well-traveled path to the Supreme Court; now, most justices reach the High Court from the courts of appeals.

In 1967, Thurgood Marshall became the first African American to be named to the High Court, followed by Clarence Thomas in 1991. Similarly, only two women have been appointed: Sandra Day O'Connor in 1981, and Ruth Bader Ginsburg in 1993.

From George Washington's day, Presidents have looked to their own political party to fill judgeships. Republican Presidents consistently choose Republicans; Democrats usually pick Democrats. Every President knows that judges may serve for decades. So chief executives regularly look for jurists who tend to agree with their own views.

The Impact of Judicial Philosophy Another major impact on the judicial selection process is judicial philosophy-in particular, the concepts of judicial restraint and judicial activism. All federal judges make decisions in which they must interpret and apply provisions in the Constitution and acts of Congress. That is, they often decide questions of public policy-and, in doing so, they inevitably shape public policy.

The proponents of judicial restraint believe that judges should decide cases on the basis of (1) the original intent of the Framers or those who enacted the statute(s) involved in a case, and (2) precedent-a judicial decision that serves as a guide for settling later cases of a similar nature. They say that the courts should defer to policy judgments made in the legislative and executive branches of the government and, in so doing, honor the basic premise of self-government: the right of the majority to determine public policy. In short, they argue that elected legislators, not appointed judges, should make law.

Those who support judicial activism take a much broader view of judicial power. They argue that provisions in the Constitution and in statute law should be interpreted and applied in the light of ongoing changes in conditions and values-especially in cases involving civil rights and social welfare issues. They,

524 The Federal Court System

\section*{Background}

SWING VOTE When Ronald Reagan, a conservative President, appointed Sandra Day O'Connor to the Supreme Court in 1981, most observers expected her to act according to judicial restraint, the more conservative philosophy. Instead, she emerged as a moderate voice on a sharply divided Court. Often during her 24 -year tenure, she served as the "swing vote"-casting the deciding vote in 5-4 decisions on many controversial issues. She used her strategic role as swing vote to moderate the extreme positions of other justices. For example, she helped to limit the right to abortion, yet she also blocked attempts by more conservative justices to overturn it. When Justice O'Connor announced her retirement in 2005, President George W. Bush nominated Samuel Alito, a conservative, to replace her.
too, insist on the fundamental importance of majority rule and the value of precedents, but they believe that the courts should not be overly deferential to existing legal principles or to the judgments of elected officials.

Terms and Pay of Judges Article III, Section 1 of the Constitution reads, in part: "The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour. . . " This means that the judges of the constitutional courts are appointed for life; they serve until they resign, retire, or die in office. The Framers provided for what amounts to life tenure for these judges quite purposefully, to ensure the independence of the federal judiciary.

The very next words of the Constitution are directed to that same purpose. Article III, Section 1 continues: "and [they] shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office."

Federal judges may be removed from office only through the impeachment process. In 180 years, only 13 have ever been impeached. Of that number, seven were convicted and removed by the Senate, including three in the recent past. \({ }^{5}\)

Those judges who sit in the special courts are not appointed for life. They are named, instead, to terms of 8 to 15 years-and may be, but seldom are, reappointed. In the District of Columbia, Superior Court judges are chosen for four-year terms; those who sit on the district's Court of Appeals are chosen for a period of eight years.

Congress sets the salaries of federal judges and has provided a generous retirement for 5 The judges removed from office were John Pickering of the district court in New Hampshire, for judicial misconduct and drunkenness (1804); West \(H\). Humphreys of the district court in Tennessee, for disloyalty (1862); Robert W. Archbald of th (1913): Halsted L Ritter of the district court in Florida several counts of judicial misconduct (1936); Harry E Claiborn severar counts of judicial misconduct (1936); Harry E. Claibor of the district court in Nevada, for filing false income tax returns (1986); Alcee Hastings of the district court in Florida, Nixon of the district court in Mississippi, for periury (1989). Four other federal judges were impeached by the House but acquitted by the Senate. Two district court judges, impeached by the House, resigned and so avoided a Senate trial.

Checkpoint how do the terms of office differ for judges of the constitutional courts and the special courts?

\section*{deferential} adj. respectful

\section*{How a Judge Decides}

Judges weigh several factors when making a decision on a case. They must not only consider the facts of the case, but also look at relevant precedent to see how the courts have ruled on the matter in the past. They must abide by the text of the Constitution and, in interpreting this document and the law, think about their own judicial philosophy. Over time, a judge may change his philosophy What impact might this have?

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Transparency 18C features a political cartoon about filling a vacancy on the Supreme Court. Display the transparency as you discuss the selection of judges with the class. Ask: What is the subject of this cartoon? (filling a vacancy on the Supreme Court) Whom does the person speaking represent? How do you know? (the President; because the President has the power to appoint someone to fill a vacancy on the Court) What is the cartoonist saying will happen? (The President will appoint a conservative judge from the "right" to fill the vacancy.) What is the impact of the President's power to appoint judges? (The power to appoint judges enables the President to influence the philosophical direction of the Court, and thereby steer public policy toward the President's views.)

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L1 L2 Differentiate Have students read the article "Chief Justice Urges Pay Raise for Judges" on the Chapter 18 Section 1 Extend Worksheet (Unit 5 All in-One, p. 20). After answering the questions, have students debate a pay raise for federal judges, with half the class supporting and half the class opposing an increase.

L1 L2 Differentiate Pair students who have written expression difficulties with study partners to complete the Chapter 18 Section 1 Extend Activity, "Your Role in the Legal System" (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 22).
L4 Differentiate Have students reread this section's Guiding Question and then the chapter's Essential Question. Point out that the structure of the national judiciary could not function effectively without the thousands of court officers who perform administrative duties, which allows federal judges to preside over cases. Have students select one of the court officers discussed later in this section, or distribute slips of paper with each identifying one officer. Tell students to research their chosen or assigned officer, including required education, the duties and terms of the job, which federal court they work for (if specific), and the pay. Then have students state their findings and have the rest of the class guess which court officer is being described.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Judges of the constitutional courts are appointed for life terms, serving until they resign, retire, or die in office. Judges of the special courts are appointed for 15 -year terms.
How a Judge Decides A judge who changes his or her philosophy may change or reshape the public policy of the current administration.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What functions do U.S. Attorneys perform?

L3 Have students draw a graphic organizer or other visual that shows the checks and balances the judicial branch has over the executive and legislative branches, and vice versa. Assess students' participation using the Rubric for Assessing a Graph, Chart, or Table (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 240).
L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 23)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 24)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}

\section*{If Your Students Have Trouble With}

The structure and function of the federal judiciary
(Questions 1, 6)

The jurisdiction of the federal courts
(Questions 2, 4)

\section*{Judicial philosophy}
(Questions 3, 5)

\section*{Strategies} For Remediation

Have students make a tree diagram showing the structure of the federal court system. Within their diagrams, students should include the specific wording of the Constitution that grants each type their powers.

Have each student create a quiz describing ten scenarios in which someone breaks a federal or State law. Have students complete each other's quizzes by naming each case's jurisdiction.
Organize students into groups and have them make a list of qualifications the President might consider in selecting a justice for the Supreme Court. Have the groups rank their list of items in order from most to least important, and then defend their rankings to the class.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint U.S. Attorneys are the government's prosecutors, bringing to trial persons charged with federal crimes. They also represent the United States in all civil actions brought by or against the Federal Government in their districts.
them. They may retire at age 70 , and if they have served for at least 10 years, receive full salary for the rest of their lives. Or, they may retire at full salary at age 65 , after at least 15 years of service. The Chief Justice may call any retired judge back to temporary duty in a lower federal court at any time.

\section*{Court 0fficers}

Today, federal judges have little involvement in the day-to-day administrative operations of the courts over which they preside. Their primary mission is to hear and decide cases. A clerk, several deputy clerks, bailiffs, court reporters and stenographers, probation officers, and others provide support services.

The judges of each of the 94 district courts appoint one or more United States magistrates, of which there are now more than 400 . They are appointed to eight-year terms and handle a number of legal matters once dealt with by the judges themselves. They issue warrants of arrest, and often hear evidence to decide whether or not a person who has been arrested on a federal charge should be held for action by a grand jury. They also set bail in federal criminal cases, and even have the power to try those who are charged with certain minor offenses.

Each federal judicial district also has at least one bankruptcy judge. These judges handle bankruptcy cases under the direction of the district court to which they are assigned. \({ }^{6}\) There are now some 300 bankruptcy judges, all of them appointed to 14 -year terms by the judges of each federal court of appeals.

The President and the Senate appoint a United States Attorney for each federal judicial district. The U.S. Attorneys and their many deputies are the government's prosecutors. They work closely with the FBI and other law enforcement agencies, and they bring to trial those persons charged with federal crimes. They also represent the United States in all civil actions brought by or against the Federal Government in their districts.

The President and Senate also select a United States marshal to serve each of the district courts. These marshals, and their several deputy U.S. marshals, perform duties much like those of a county sheriff. They make arrests in federal criminal cases, hold accused persons in custody, secure jurors, serve legal papers, keep order in courtrooms, and execute court orders and decisions. They also respond to such emergency situations as riots, mob violence, and other civil disturbances, as well as terrorist incidents. All United States Attorneys and marshals are appointed to four-year terms.

6 Recall that bankruptcy is a legal proceeding in which a debtor's assets are distributed among those to whom the bankrupt person, business, or other organization owes money. Atthough some bankruptcy cases are heard in State courts, nearly all of them fall within the jurisdiction of the federal district courts.

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT} Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: What are the structure and function of the national judiciary?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What is the difference between original jurisdiction and appellate jurisdiction? (b) What kind of jurisdiction does the Supreme Court have?
3. (a) What is a precedent? (b) Write a sentence using the word precedent o explain why it is important in the judicial system.
4. Under what circumstances do federal courts have jurisdiction in a case?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment What role should judicial philosophy What role should judicial philos?
6. Predict Consequences What do you think are the consequences of life tenure for federal judges?

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Essay: Choose a Topic Do preliminary research online or at the library to choose one of the following Supreme Court cases: Marbury v. Madison, Brandenburg v. Ohio, or City of Boerne v. Flores. Then write a paragraph to summarize the case you chose. Include details such as who, what, when, where, and why.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Structure: more than 100 courts nationwide; Supreme Court at top; inferior courts include constitutional courts and special courts. Function: Supreme Court and other constitutional courts exercise broad "judicial Power of the United States"; special courts hear cases arising out of expressed powers given to Congress in Article I.
2. (a) original jurisdiction: held by court in which a case is first heard; appellate jurisdiction: held by the court that hears a case on appeal from lower court (b) both
3. (a) judicial decision that serves as a guide for justices to follow in similar cases (b) Judges look at precedents to see how courts have ruled in the past.
4. if the case involves an interpretation of the Constitution or federal statute or treaty, or relates to admiralty or maritime law; if one of the parties is: the United States or one of its officers or agencies; a foreign government or official; a State if it is suing another State, a citizen of another State, or a foreign government or subject; a citizen of one State suing a citizen of another

State; a U.S. citizen suing a foreign government or subject; citizens of the same State if both claim land under grants from different States
5. Judicial activists can adjust rulings to match the President's values. Judicial restraint enforces separation of powers, however.
6. ensures judiciary independence and allows judges to make decisions without fear of political reprisals QUICK WRITE A strong assignment will show evidence of research and answers to the questions of who, what, when, where, and why.

\section*{Judicial Restraint vs. Activism}

Track the Issue
The Court's power of judicial review has long been an important part of the governing process in this country. But from Marbury on, this question has been the subject of intense debate: What is the appropriate role for the Supreme Court? Throughout its history, it has exercised both judicial restraint and judicial activism.
010
In McCulloch v. Maryland, the Court exercised judicial activism, expanding constitutional provisions without citing precedent.

The Court's decision in Luther v. Borden is one of the earliest cases of judicial restraint.

The decision in Brown v. Board of Education provides a major example of judicial activism

The Burger Court exercised a combination of judicial restraint and activism.

Newly appointed Chief Justice John Roberts promises judicial restraint.

\section*{Perspectives}

There are two camps in the debate over judicial decision making. One side supports judicial restraint; its proponents believe that judges should consistently follow the letter of the law and apply precedent. The other supports judicial activism; its proponents think that judges should indeed consider precedent, but that they should also be willing to go further and play an active, creative role in the shaping of public policies.
"In our democratic system, responsibility for policy making properly rests with those branches that are responsible . . . to the people. It was . because the Framers intended the judiciary to be insulated from popular political pressures that the Constitution accords judges tenure during good behavior. . . To the extent the term "judicial activism" is used to describe unjustified intrusions by the judiciary into the realm of policy making, the criticism is well-founded. . . It is not part of the judicial function to make the law . . . or to execute the law."
\[
\square \text { John Roberts at his }
\]

Senate confirmation hearing

\section*{Connect to Your World}
1. Understand (a) What reasons does Justice Roberts cite for supporting judicial restraint? (b) How does Justice Hughes support his argument for judicial activism?
2. Synthesize Information To which of these competing positionsjudicial restraint or judicial activism - do you think a judge should subscribe?
"We are under a Constitution, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is, and the judiciary is the safeguard of our liberty and of our property under the Constitution."
-Charles Evan Hughes, Chief Justice of the United States 1930-1941

\section*{Background}

LUTHER v. BORDEN In 1841, Rhode Island was still ruled by a charter government with limited suffrage. Opposing groups held a convention, which drafted a new constitution and elected a governor. The existing charter government opposed the new government, however, and declared martial law. One of the dissidents brought suit, claiming the old government was not "a republican form of government" and was therefore invalid. In Luther v. Borden, 1849, the Supreme Court held that federal courts had no jurisdiction over the establishment of state governments: "The Constitution of the United States has . . . placed the power of recognizing a State government in the hands of Congress. . . ."

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will contrast the "restraint" and "activism" roles of the Supreme Court.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{DEFINE TERMS}

Have students provide synonyms for restraint (limit, restrict, curb, self-control) and activism (to change, innovate, create, revise).

\section*{DISTINGUISH ACTIVISM AND RESTRAINT}

Ask: What types of Supreme Court decisions would show judicial restraint? (upholding a State law or a lower court's decision; following precedent; refusal to rule on a case, claiming it is the jurisdiction of the State or another branch of government) What decisions of the Court would show judicial activism? (changing a previous Supreme Court ruling; overturning a lower court's decision; halting or requiring legislative, executive, and/or State action)

\section*{CLASSIFY COURT CASES}

Have students classify the following cases as judicial restraint or judicial activism.
- The Court upholds laws requiring racially segregated facilities, Plessy v. Ferguson, 1896. [restraint]
- The Court declares that freedom of speech and press cannot be denied by either the National Government or State governments, Gitlow v. New York, 1925. [activism]

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students answer the Connect to Your World questions. For further clarification, discuss why the McCulloch and Brown cases are considered activism, and the Luther case (see background note) is considered restraint.

\section*{Answers}

\section*{CONNECT TO YOUR WORLD}
1. (a) Policy making rests with branches that are responsible to the people (legislative and executive). It is not part of the judicial function to make or execute the law. (b) Hughes states that judges say what the Constitution is.
2. A strong answer will provide supportive statements of an opinion either for or against restraint or activism.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{What are the structure and jurisdiction of the inferior courts?}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ The Inferior Courts } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Structure } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Jurisdiction } \\
\hline - District courts & • Original jurisdiction \\
- Courts of appeals & • Appellate jurisdiction within circuit \\
- Court of International Trade & • Original jurisdiction on trade issues \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will . .
- identify the structure of the inferior constitutional courts by completing a chart highlighting the various courts and their jurisdictions.
- understand how inferior constitutional courts function by constructing paths of appeals for various case scenarios.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 25) before class.Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 26)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following on the board, and have students answer the questions in their notebooks: The DA obtained an indictment from the grand jury today in Joe Smith v. United States. What type of court is hearing this case? How do you know? Is this a criminal case or a civil case?

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{GIVE A MULTIMEDIA PRESENTATION}

Before students turn their Core Worksheet cases into classroom skits, you may want to review tips on giving a multimedia presentation in the Skills Handbook, p. S21.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{The Inferior Courts}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What are the structure and jurisdiction of the inferior courts? Use a table like the one below to take notes on the structure and jurisdiction of the inferior courts.

Political Dictionary
- criminal case - docket
- civil case - record

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the structure and jurisdiction of the federal district courts.
2. Describe the structure and jurisdiction of the federal courts of appeals.
3. Describe the structure and jurisdiction of the two other constitutional courts.

Image Above: An attorney for Napster Inc., the online music firm, outside the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals

You know that the particular meaning of a word often depends on the con-text-the setting-in which it is used. Thus, pitch can be either a baseball term or a musical term; it can also refer to setting up a tent, or to a high-pressure sales talk.

The word in frior also has various meanings. Here, it describes the lower federal courts, those courts created by an act of Congress, to function beneath the Supreme Court. The inferior courts handle nearly all of the cases tried in the federal courts.

\section*{The District Courts}

The United States district courts are the federal trial courts. Their 667 judges handle more than 300,000 cases per year, about 80 percent of the federal caseload. The district courts were created by Congress in the Judiciary Act of 1789. There are now 94 of them.

Federal Judicial Districts The 50 States are divided into 89 federal judicial districts, and there are also federal district courts for Washington, D.C., Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands. Each State forms at least one judicial district. Some are divided into two or more districts, however-usually because of the larger amount of judicial business there. At least two judges are assigned to each district, but many districts have several. Thus, New York is divided into four judicial districts; one of them, the United States Judicial District for Southern New York, now has 44 judges.

Cases tried in the district courts are most often heard by a single judge. However, certain cases may be heard by a three- judge panel. Chiefly, these are cases that involve congressional districting or State legislative apportionment questions, those arising under the Civil Rights Act of 1964 or the Voting Rights Acts of \(1965,1970,1975\), and 1982, and certain antitrust actions.

Two little-known multi- judge panels play a key role in ongoing efforts to combat terrorism in this country and abroad. Both are shrouded in secrecy. One is the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, created by Congress in 1978. It is composed of 11 federal district court judges, who are appointed to seven-year terms by the Chief Justice of the United States. The court, which

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The 94 U.S. district courts have original jurisdiction over most federal criminal and civil cases. - The 12 federal courts of appeals hear cases on appeal within their circuit. - The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has nationwide appellate jurisdiction. • The Court of International Trade hears tariff and trade cases.
CONCEPTS: federalism, role of the judiciary
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Civil and criminal laws are put in place to provide order, protect society, and settle conflicts. - Law officers have the duty to enforce the laws, and courts have the duty to interpret the law and decide punishment for those found guilty of breaking the laws. - The inferior constitutional courts form the core of the federal judicial system, hearing nearly all of the cases tried in federal courts.
meets in secret, has the power to issue secret search warrants-court orders that allow the FBI, the National Security Agency, and other federal law enforcement agencies to conduct covert surveillance of persons suspected of being spies or members of terrorist organizations.

The other is the Alien Terrorist Removal Court, created by Congress in 1996. It is made up of five district court judges, appointed by the Chief Justice to five-year terms. This court has the power to decide whether those persons identified as "alien terrorists" by the Attorney General of the United States should be expelled from this country.

District Court Jurisdiction The district courts have original jurisdiction over more than 80 percent of the cases that are heard in the federal court system. The only federal cases that do not begin in the district courts are those few that fall within the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and those cases heard by the Court of International Trade or by one of the special courts. Thus, the district courts are the main trial courts, the "courts of first instance," in the federal judiciary.

District court judges hear a wide range of both criminal cases and civil cases. In the federal courts, a criminal case is one in which a defendant is tried for committing some action that Congress has declared by law to be a federal crime. A federal civil case involves some noncriminal matter-say, a dispute over the terms of a contract or a suit in which the plaintiff seeks damages (money) for some harm done by the defendant.

The United States is always a party to a federal criminal case as the prosecutor. Most civil cases are disputes between private parties, but here, too, the United States may be a litigant, as either the plaintiff or the defendant.
\(\sqrt{ }\) Checkpoint What is the principal role of the federal district courts?

\section*{\(\underline{\text { litigant }}\)} n. party to a case either plaintiff or defendant

\section*{Federal Court Circuits and Districts}
- Interpreting Maps Each State comprises at least one United States judicial district. The nation is divided into 13 judicial circuits, including the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, as shown on the map.
Which States are in the Fifth Circuit?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 18, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 25)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 26)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 27)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 28)
L3 Quiz A (p. 29)
L2 Quiz B (p. 30)

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{ReView bellringer answers}

Discuss students' answers to the Bellringer: What type of court is hearing this case? (a U.S. district court) Is this a criminal case or a civil case? (It is probably a criminal case, because the U.S. is always a party in federal criminal cases. However, the U.S. also may be a litigant in a civil case, so the case could be either.)

\section*{CHART INFERIOR CONSTITUTIONAL COURTS}

Refer students back to the Section 1 diagram "Types of Federal Courts" or display Transparency 18B. Ask a volunteer to identify the inferior constitutional courts shown in the diagram. (district courts, courts of appeals, Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, U.S. Court of International Trade) Draw a chart on the board like the one below. Have students work in pairs to complete the columns. Then discuss the chart.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Name of \\ Court (and \\ Number)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
No. of Judges \\
on Each
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Type of Jurisdiction } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} District \\ courts \\
(94)
\end{tabular} & \(2-28\) & \begin{tabular}{l} Federal trial courts; original jurisdic- \\ tion over more than 80 percent of \\ federal criminal and civil cases
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Courts of \\ Appeals \\
(12)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
6-28 (plus a \\ Supreme Court \\ justice as- \\ signed to each \\ circuit)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Appellate jurisdiction over the \\ district courts within their circuit; \\ also hear appeal/ from U.S. Tax \\ Court, territorial courts, and federal \\ regulatory agencies
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Court of \\ Appeals for \\ the Federal \\ Circuit
\end{tabular} & 12 & \begin{tabular}{l} Nationwide appellate jurisdiction \\ over Court of International Trade, \\ Court of Federal Claims, Court of \\ Appeals for Veterans Claims, and \\ patent or copyright appeals from \\ 94 district courts
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
U.S. Court of \\ International \\ Trade
\end{tabular} & 9 & \begin{tabular}{l} Trial court; original jurisdiction of \\ civil cases concerning customs and \\ trade-related laws
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{ANALYZE CIRCUITS AND DISTRICTS MAP}

Have students look at the map "Federal Court Circuits and Districts" in their text or on Transparency 18D. Ask them to use the Chapter 18 Section 2 Extend Activity "The Federal District Courts in Your State" (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 28) to identify their circuit and district.
L3 Differentiate Ask students to research the names of their circuit and district judges, and to describe the cases they have ruled on recently.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the Federal Court Circuits and Districts map.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint as federal trial courts
Interpreting Maps Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of the appellate path.

\section*{TRACE THE APPELLATE PATH}

Guide students through the appellate path. Display Transparency 18 E , The Appellate Path in Federal Courts. Explain that students should focus only on the constitutional courts. Then present the cases below. Students should answer the questions and show where on the transparency each case would move in the appellate path.
CASE A: A citizen is accused of counterfeiting. Where does the case begin? (district court) What type of case is this? (criminal case) What is the first step in the case? (indictment by a grand jury) What is the next step? (verdict by a petit jury) Assuming the case is appealed, where would the case go next? (court of appeals)
CASE B: An American importer of fish claims that the U.S. Department of Commerce placed an unusually high tariff on fillets from Vietnam. Where does this case begin? (U.S. Court of International Trade) What type of case is this? (civil case) The case is lost by the American importer and then appealed. Where does the case go next? (U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit)
CASE C: An Ohio company claims that a Florida company produced an identical product, and files for copyright infringement. Where does the case begin? (district court) What type of case is this? (civil case) The Ohio company loses the case and appeals. Where does the case go next? (U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 18 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 27). Students should work in groups to create a fictional federal case and its path of appeal to the Supreme Court. Then ask students to read the description of their cases aloud. Have the class identify the types of courts that should hear the case in its original and appellate forms.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students turn their fictional Core Worksheet cases into two courtroom skits. In the trial portion of the case, students should create roles for the plaintiffs, defendants, witnesses, attorneys, and judges. In the appeals portion of the case, speaking roles should be created only for attorneys and judges.
\begin{tabular}{l|l|l}
\hline L1 & L2 & Differentiate For these students, distribute \end{tabular} the Extend Activity entitled "The Federal District Courts in Your State" (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 28).

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Diagrams possible answer: district courts and courts of appeals

The district courts try criminal cases ranging from bank robbery, kidnapping, and mail fraud to counterfeiting, terrorism, and tax evasion. They hear civil cases arising under bankruptcy, postal, tax, public lands, civil rights, and other laws of the United States. These trial courts are the only federal courts that use grand juries to indict defendants, and petit juries to determine their guilt or innocence.

Most of the decisions made in the 94 federal district courts are final. That is, most federal cases not only begin in those courts, but they end there as well. Losing parties do not often appeal a decision to a higher court. However, a few cases are taken to the court of appeals in that judicial circuit or, in a few instances, directly to the Supreme Court.

7 These tribunals were originally called the circuit courts of appeals. Before 1891, each Supreme Court justice "rode circuit" "hearing appeals from the district courts within that geographic area. Congress renamed these courts in 1948 , but they still are often called the "circuit courts."

\section*{The Courts of Appeals}

The courts of appeals were created by Congress in 1891. They were established as "gatekeepers" to relieve the Supreme Court of much of the burden of hearing appeals from the decisions of the district courts. Those appeals had become so numerous that the High Court was more than three years behind its docket-its list of cases to be heard.

There are now 13 courts of appeals in the federal judiciary. \({ }^{7}\) As the map on page 529 indicates, the country is divided into 12 judicial circuits, including the District of Columbia. There is one court of appeals for each of those circuits, and they hear cases on appeal from the various district courts within their circuit. The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit is the thirteenth of these appellate tribunals. It sits in the District of Columbia, but its jurisdiction is nationwide and it is mostly concerned with appeals of decisions in patent, copyright, and international trade cases.

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Hollywood has long been fascinated with courtroom drama. Have students watch a film you have pre-screened, such as To Kill a Mockingbird, Runaway Jury, or Twelve Angry Men. Lead a discussion about whether students think the courtroom scenes they viewed appeared realistic. Did the movie seem true to what students have learned about the court system?

To see this lesson plan, go to Appellate Court Judges Each of these courts is composed of from 6 to 28 judges (179 in all). In addition, a justice of the Supreme Court is assigned to each. For example, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit covers Alabama, Florida, and Georgia. The court is composed of 12 circuit judges and Associate Justice Clarence Thomas of the Supreme Court. The judges hold their sessions in a number of major cities within the circuit.

Each court of appeals usually sits in three-judge panels. Occasionally, however, and especially for an important case, a court will sit en banc-that is, with all of the judges in that circuit participating.

Appellate Court Jurisdiction The 13 courts of appeals have only appellate jurisdiction. For the 12 circuit-based courts, most cases come to them from the district courts within their circuit, but some are appealed from the Tax Court and some from the territorial courts. Recall, they are also empowered to hear appeals from the decisions of several federal regulatory agencies-for example, the Federal Trade Commission and the National Labor Relations Board.

Unlike the 12 circuit-based courts, the jurisdiction of the thirteenth, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, is nationwide in scope. Congress created it in 1982, with the special purpose of centralizing and speeding up the handling of appeals in certain types of federal civil cases.

The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit hears appeals from the decisions rendered in several different courts. Many of its cases come from the other constitutional court, the Court of International Trade, and still others come from two of the special courts: the Court of Federal Claims and the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims. It also hears the appeals taken in any patent, copyright, or trademark case decided in any of the 94 federal district courts.

Again, these 13 tribunals are appellate courts. They do not conduct trials or accept new evidence in the cases they hear. Instead, they review the record, the transcript of proceedings made in the trial court, and they ponder the oral and written arguments (the briefs) submitted by attorneys representing parties to a case. The fact that less than one percent of their decisions are appealed to the Supreme Court underscores the importance of the place these tribunals occupy.

\section*{Court of International Trade}

Congress has established one other Article III court, the Court of International Trade. Often called the Trade Court, this body was originally created in 1890, and was restructured as a constitutional court in 1980.

The Trade Court now has nine judges, including its chief judge, appointed by the President and the Senate. Like the 94 district courts, it is a federal trial court, a court of first instance. It tries all civil (but not criminal) cases that arise out of the nation's customs and other trade-related laws. Its judges sit in panels of three and often hold jury trials in such major ports as New Orleans, San Francisco, Boston, and New York.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
Which inferior court hears appeals related to patents and copyrights?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L2 Have students re-create from memory the diagram "The Appellate Path in the Federal Courts," but with just the constitutional courts. Underneath each court, have students list examples of the types of cases heard in that court.
L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 241).
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 29)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 30)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble \\
With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The structure \\
and functions of \\ district courts \\
(Questions 1, 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students draw a web diagram with "District \\ Courts" in the center oval. In at least five outer \\ ovals, students should list important characteristics \\ about the structure and functions of district courts.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The structure \\
and jurisdiction \\ of appeals courts \\
(Questions 3, 4, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make an appellate flowchart from \\ the court of first instance to the Supreme Court \\ for these scenarios: (1) a patent dispute; (2) an \\ appeal from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission; \\
() a federal civil case in New Mexico; \\
(4) a federal criminal case tried in Guam; and \\
(5) a U.S. citizen sues the federal government \\ after her exporters' license is revoked.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. 94 district courts with original jurisdiction in criminal and civil cases; 12 judicial circuits have their own courts of appeals with appellate jurisdiction; Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has nationwide appellate jurisdiction; Court of International Trade has original jurisdiction on all civil cases arising from the nation's customs and other traderelated issues
2. criminal case: one in which a person is tried for committing an illegal action; civil case: one that involves a noncriminal matter, such as a dispute between parties
3. to relieve the overloaded Supreme Court docket of appeals from district courts
4. The U.S. judicial process includes many opportunities for decisions to be reviewed.
5. New appellate courts will ease the burden on existing appellate courts and speed up the judicial process. They can be specialized to handle specific kinds of cases, such as those involving just technology, immigration, or terrorism.

QUICK WRITE A strong assignment will show evidence of additional research and details, including the constitutional grounds on which each side based its arguments, specific arguments each side presented, and the verdict/ opinions of the courts.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{What is the Supreme Court's jurisdiction, and how does the Court operate?}

\section*{I. The Supreme Court \\ A. Judicial review}
1. Established in Marbury v. Madison, 1803
2. Supreme Court may declare laws unconstitutional
B. Jurisdiction
1. original on cases involving States or public ministers
2. appellate most common
C. How cases reach Court
1. writ of certiorari
2. certificate
D. How Court operates
1. reviews briefs
2. hears oral arguments
3. meets in conference
4. announces decision, with one or more written opinions

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will. .
- learn about the scope of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction by analyzing a political cartoon showing the power of judicial review, and by identifying the Court's original and appellate jurisdiction.
- identify how the Supreme Court operates by sequencing the appeals process, reading a transcript of a real case, and formulating opinions on controversial cases.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{The Supreme Court}

Guiding Question
What is the Supreme Court's jurisdiction, and how does the Court operate? Use an outline like the one below to take notes on the Supreme Court.

\section*{I. The Supreme Court}
A. Judicial review
1. Established in Marbury v. Madison, 1803 2.
B.
2.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- writ of certiorari - concurring
- certificate opinion
- brief - dissenting
- majority opinion opinion

\section*{Objectives}
1. Define the concept of judicial review.
2. Outline the scope of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction.
3. Examine how cases reach the Supreme Court.
4. Summarize the way the Court operates

Image Above: John Marshall, Chief Justice of the United States, 1801-1835

The eagle, the flag, Uncle Sam - you almost certainly recognize these symbols. They are used widely to represent the United States. You probably also know the symbol for justice: the blindfolded woman holding a balanced scale. She represents what is perhaps this nation's loftiest goal: equal justice under the law. Indeed, those words are chiseled in marble above the entrance to the Supreme Court building in Washington, D.C.

The Supreme Court of the United States is the only court specifically created by the Constitution, in Article III, Section 1. The Court is made up of the Chief Justice of the United States, whose office is also established by the Constitution, \({ }^{8}\) and eight associate justices. \({ }^{9}\)

The Framers quite purposely placed the Court on an equal plane with the President and Congress. As the highest court in the land, it stands as the court of last resort in all questions of federal law. That is, the Supreme Court of the United States is the final authority in any case involving any question arising under the Constitution, an act of Congress, or a treaty of the United States.

\section*{Judicial Review}

Remember, most courts in this country, both federal and State, may exercise the critically important power of judicial review. They have the extraordinary power to decide the constitutionality of an act of government, whether executive, legislative, or judicial. The ultimate exercise of that power rests with the Supreme Court of the United States. That single fact makes the Supreme Court the final authority on the meaning of the Constitution.

The Constitution does not, in so many words, provide for the power of judicial review. Nevertheless, there is little doubt that the Framers intended that the federal courts-and, in particular, the Supreme Court-should have this power. \({ }^{10}\)

\section*{Article I, Section 3, Clause 6.}

9 Congress sets the number of associate justices and thus the size of the Supreme Court. The Judiciary Act of 1789 created a Court of six justices, including the Chief Justice. The Court was reduced to five members in 1801 but increased to seven in 1807 , to nine in 1837 , and to 10 in 1863 . It was reduced to seven in 1866 and increased to its present size of nine in 1869 .
\(\mathbf{1 0}\) See Article III, Section 2, setting out the Court's jurisdiction, and Article VI, Section 2, the Supremacy Clause.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

To practice decision making in this section, use the Chapter 18 Skills Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 41). You may teach the skills explicitly either before or after students work on Core Worksheet B. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 42).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • The Court first asserted its power of judicial review-the power to decide the constitutionality of an act of government-in Marbury v. Madison. - The Supreme Court is the only court created by the Constitution. - The Supreme Court has both original and appellate jurisdiction, but usually hears cases on appeal. • The Supreme Court studies written briefs; hears oral arguments; meets in conference to discuss the cases; and renders majority, concurring, and dissenting opinions.
CONCEPTS: federalism, judicial review, checks and balances enduring understandings: - The Supreme Court is the final authority on questions arising under the Constitution, an act of Congress, or a treaty of the U.S. - The power of judicial review established in Marbury v. Madison laid the foundation for the judicial branch's key role in government.

Marbury v. Madison The Court first asserted its power of judicial review in Marbury v. Madison in 1803.1 (See the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court feature, Chapter 3.) Recall that the case arose in the aftermath of the stormy elections of 1800 . Thomas Jefferson had won the presidency and control of both houses of Congress. The outgoing Federalists, stung by their defeat, then tried to pack the judiciary with loyal party members. Congress created several new federal judgeships in the early weeks of 1801, and President John Adams quickly filled those posts with Federalists.

William Marbury had been appointed a justice of the peace for the District of Columbia. The Senate had promptly confirmed his appointment, and late on the night of March 3, 1801, President Adams signed the commissions of office for Marbury and a number of other new judges. The next day, Jefferson became President and discovered that 11 It is often mistakenly said that the Court first exercised the power in this case, but in fact the Court did so at least as early as Hytton v. United States in 1796. In that case it upheld the constitutionality of a tax Congress had laid on carriages. It found that the tax was not a direct tax and so was not one that had to be apportioned among the States in accord with Article I, Section 2, Clause 3 of the Constitution.

Marbury's commission and several others had not been delivered.

Angered by the Federalists' attempted court-packing scheme, President Jefferson instructed James Madison, the new secretary of state, not to deliver those commissions. William Marbury then went to the Supreme Court, seeking a writ of mandamus to force delivery. \({ }^{12}\) Marbury based his suit on the Judiciary Act of 1789 , in which Congress had created the federal court system. That law gave the Supreme Court the right to hear such suits in its original jurisdiction (not on appeal from a lower court).

In a unanimous opinion written by Chief Justice John Marshall, the Court refused Marbury's request. It did so because it found the section of the Judiciary Act on which Marbury had based his case to be in conflict with Article III in the Constitution and, therefore, void.

The Effects of Marbury With the Court's decision, Chief Justice Marshall claimed for the Supreme Court the right to declare acts

12 A writ of mandamus is a court order compelling an officer of government to perform an act that the officer has a clear legal duty to perform.

Checkpoint What is the significance of the case Marbury v. Madison?

\section*{aftermath} consequence

\section*{Packing the Court}

The Judiciary Act of 1789 created a Supreme Court of six justices, including the Chief Justice. The Court's size has fluctuated over time, reaching its present size of nine in 1869. In 1937, President Franklin D. Roosevelt asked Congress to increase the size of the Court, proposing that one additional justice be added for each sitting justice over age 70, to a maximum of 15 members. FDR claimed that his plan would make the Court a more efficient body. In reality, however, the proposal - which became known as "the Court-packing scheme"-was born out of the fact that the then-current Court had found several key pieces of New Deal legislation to be unconstitutional. Despite FDR's popularity, his plan was widely opposed, and it was roundly defeated in Congress, thereby protecting the separation of powers. Why must a President be closely interested in the composition of the Supreme Court?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 18, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 31)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 33)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 35)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 40)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 41)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 42)
L3 Quiz A (p. 43)
L2 Quiz B (p. 44)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 31) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 33)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Check students' prior knowledge of the Supreme Court by writing these questions on the board: (1) How many justices are on the Supreme Court? (2) How is the number of justices determined? (3) Does the Court have original or appellate jurisdiction or both? (4) Must the Court decide cases by a unanimous vote? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Discuss students' Bellringer answers. (1. nine 2. The Constitution established the position of Chief Justice; Congress sets the number of associate justices. 3. both 4. no, just a majprityvote)

\section*{ANALYZE MARBURY v. MADISON}

Have students reread the Chapter 3 discussion of judicial review. Review Marbury v. Madison. Have students create a storyboard of major events leading to the Court's exercise of this power.

\section*{analyze Judicial review in a cartoon}

Display Transparency 18F. Ask: What symbols in the cartoon can you identify, and what are their meanings? (Symbols: The miner is the Supreme Court; the material in the pan is New Deal legislation; the pan is the Court's power of judicial review.) What is the cartoonist saying about the power of judicial review? (The Supreme Court is using judicial review to "sift out" the unconstitutional "impurities" in New Deal legislation, retaining only the constitutional parts-the "gold. ") Discuss with students the historical background of President Roosevelt's attempts to fix the problems of the Great Depression with his New Deal legislation. Many of his programs were later found by the Supreme Court to overstep his legal authority as chief executive. Refer students to the "Packing the Court" feature on this page.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The Court is thought to have first asserted its power of judicial review.
Packing the Court By appointing more like-minded justices, the President could steer the Court to support the administration's programs.

Differentiate Have students draw and analyze political cartoons illustrating the power of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress or the President unconstitutional through judicial review. Have the class analyze the cartoons.

\section*{IDENTIFY SUPREME COURT JURISDICTION}

Have students draw a pyramid. In the bottom part, they should list the inferior constitutional courts and write the subject matter and parties involved in cases that fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of these courts. Refer students to Section 1 for this information. (Subject matter: if the case involves an interpretation of the Constitution or federal statute or treaty, or relates to admiralty or maritime law; Parties: the U.S. or one of its officers or agencies; a foreign government or official; a State if it is suing another State, a citizen of another State, or a foreign government or subject; a citizen of one State suing a citizen of another State; a U.S. citizen suing a foreign government or subject; citizens of the same State if both claim land under grants from different States)
In the top part of the pyramid, have students write the two classes of cases heard by the Supreme Court in its original and exclusive jurisdiction. (all controversies involving two or more States, and all cases brought against ambassadors or other public ministers) Ask: What type of jurisdiction does the Supreme Court utilize the most, by far? (appe/late) About how many cases does the Court hear each year? (a few hundred)

Differentiate State the Essential Question of this chapter. Ask students to write a paragraph answering this question after viewing the pyramid.

Government
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com. cases does the Supreme Court have origina jurisdiction?
implement
v. to carry out, put into of Congress unconstitutional, and so laid the foundation for the judicial branch's key role in the development of the American system of government.

The dramatic and often far-reaching effects of the Supreme Court's exercise of the power of judicial review tends to overshadow much of its other work. Each year, it hears dozens of cases in which questions of constitutionality are not raised, but in which federal law is interpreted and applied. Thus, many of the more important statutes that Congress has passed have been brought to the Supreme Court time and again for decisions. So, too, have many of the lesser ones. In interpreting those laws and applying them to specific situations, the Court has had a real impact on both their meaning and their effect.

\section*{Supreme Court Jurisdiction}

The Supreme Court has both original and appellate jurisdiction. Most of its cases, however, come on appeal-from the lower federal courts and from the highest State courts. Article III, Section 2 of the Constitution spells out two classes of cases that may be heard by the High Court in its original jurisdiction: (1) those to which a State is a party, and (2) those affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls.

Congress cannot enlarge on this constitutional grant of original jurisdiction. Recall, that is precisely what the Supreme Court held in Marbury. If Congress could do so, it would in effect be amending the Constitution. Congress can implement the constitutional provision, however, and it has done so. It has provided that the Supreme Court shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over (1) all controversies involving two or more States, and (2) all cases brought against ambassadors or other public ministers, but not consuls.

The Court may choose to take original jurisdiction over any other case covered by the broad wording in Article III, Section 2 of the Constitution. Almost without exception, however, those cases are tried in the lower courts. The Supreme Court hears only a very small number of cases in its original jurisdiction-in fact, no more than a case or two each term.

\section*{How Cases Reach the Court}

More than 8,000 cases are now appealed to the Supreme Court each term. Of these, the Court accepts only a few hundred for decision. In most cases, petitions for review are denied, usually because most of the justices agree with the decision of the lower court or believe that the case involves no significant point of law.

In short, the High Court is in the somewhat enviable position of being able to set its own agenda. It decides what it wants to decide. The Court selects those cases that it does hear according to "the rule of four": At least four of its nine justices must agree that a case should be put on the Court's docket.

More than half the cases decided by the Court are disposed of in brief orders. For example, an order may remand (return) a case to a lower court for reconsideration in light of some other recent and related case decided by the High Court. All told, the Court decides, after hearing arguments and with full opinions, fewer than 100 cases per term.

Most cases reach the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari (from the Latin, meaning "to be made more certain"). This writ is an order by the Court directing a lower court to send up the record in a given case for its review. Either party to a case can petition the Court to issue a writ. But, again, "cert" is granted in only a very limited number of instances-typically, only when a petition raises some important constitutional question or a serious problem in the interpretation of a statute.

When certiorari is denied, the decision of the lower court stands in that particular case. Note, however, that the denial of cert is not a decision on the merits of a case. All a denial means is that, for whatever reason, four or more justices could not agree that the Supreme Court should accept that particular case for review.

A few cases do reach the Court in yet another way: by certificate. This process is used when a lower court is not clear about the procedure or the rule of law that should apply in a case. The lower court asks the Supreme Court to certify the answer to a specific question in the matter.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint cases in which a State is a party; and those affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls

\section*{Myths and Misperceptions}

JUDICIAL REVIEW Contrary to popular belief, judicial review involves more than simply determining whether a law "matches" the Constitution. Supreme Court justices are often unsure of what is and is not constitutional. According to Justice Charles Evans Hughes, "The history of scholarship is a record of disagreements. And when we deal with questions relating to the principles of law and their applications, we do not suddenly rise into the stratosphere of icy certainty." Justices must interpret the Constitution as it applies to each case. Sometimes interpretations change, and the Court overturns a ruling of an earlier Court. For example, in Plessy v. Ferguson, 1896, the Court upheld racial segregation. A later Court reversed this decision in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, 1954.

Most cases that reach the Court do so from the highest State courts and the federal courts of appeals. A very few do come from the federal district courts and an even smaller number from the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.

\section*{How the Court Operates}

The Supreme Court sits from the first Monday in October to sometime the following June or July. Each term is identified by the year in which it began. Thus, the 2009 term runs from October 5, 2009, into the early summer of 2010.

Oral Arguments Once the Supreme Court accepts a case, it sets a date on which that matter will be heard. As a rule, the justices consider cases in two-week cycles from October to early May. They hear oral arguments in several cases for two weeks; then recess for two weeks to consider those cases and handle other Court business.

On those days on which the Court hears arguments, it convenes at 10:00 A.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and sometimes Thursdays. At those public sessions, the lawyers, representing the parties of those cases the Court has accepted, make their oral arguments. Their presentations are almost always limited to 30 minutes.

The justices usually listen to an attorney's arguments and sometimes interrupt them with pointed questions. After 25 minutes, a white light flashes at the lectern from which an attorney addresses the Court. Five minutes later, a red light signals the end of the presentation and it must stop, even if the lawyer is in mid-sentence.

Briefs Each party files detailed written state-ments-briefs-with the Court before they present their oral arguments. These detailed statements spell out the party's legal position and are built largely on relevant facts and the citation of precedents. Briefs often run to hundreds of pages.

The Court may also receive amicus curiae (friend of the court) briefs. These are briefs filed by persons or groups who are not actual parties to a case but who nonetheless have a substantial interest in its outcome. Thus, for

- Interpreting Diagrams

This diagram shows the typical route (though not the only one) a case might take to the Supreme Court. Why do you think this process involves so many steps, often at great expense and time to the parties involved?

\section*{How Government Works}

DIAGRAM THE APPEALS PROCESS Have students analyze the How Government Works diagram, "How a Case Reaches the Supreme Court," on this page or on Transparency 18G. Working in groups, have students create a flowchart showing the path taken by a specific case from a federal district court to the Supreme Court. They should include the date and place where the case originated, the decision made by each court, how the case reached the Supreme Court, and the final decision made by the Court in the case. Suggest these cases to diagram (they are discussed in Chapter 19): Engel v. Vitale, Tinker v. Des Moines School District, Gregory v. Chicago, Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier, and Wisconsin v. Yoder.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of an appeal reaching the Supreme Court.

\section*{STUDY THE COURT IN ACTION}

Ask students to read the Chapter 18 Section 3 Core Worksheet A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 35). Students will read excerpts of the oral arguments in the case Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 1989. The case deals with the issue of time, place, and manner of protected speech. (Does New York City have the power to control the mix and volume of a rock concert?) Have students read the excerpts aloud, taking turns playing the parts of the justices and attorneys.
Note that there is audio on the Internet of the actual case being argued in the Supreme Court. You may locate the Web site, which has the audible and complete written transcript of the case. Students can hear the attorneys argue their cases and the justices interrupt them with questions and comments. You can also direct students to another Web site for the full text of the opinion of the Court, including concurring and dissenting opinions.
L2 Differentiate If students listen to the audio only, ask them if the Court proceedings surprised them in any way. Which questions by the justices do students think were the most important in defining the heart of the issue? How would students have ruled on the case if they had been on the Court?

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Diagrams Because the Supreme Court has time to hear only a limited number of cases, those cases must be significant. Inferior courts and the Supreme Court discourage frivolous cases from reaching the Court through this lengthy and expensive process.

Tell students to go to the Online Update for additional information on the Court.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET B}

Ask students to work in odd-numbered groups to complete the Chapter 18 Section 3 Core Worksheet B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 40). They will formulate opinions on controversial issues before the Supreme Court. Each group must come to a majority opinion. Tabulate the statements and opinions.
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students work individually and select one issue on Core Worksheet B that interests them. Students should analyze and make notes about their opinions. Then discuss the issues as a class.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have student pairs take opposing sides on one issue on Core Worksheet B Students should research the issue, and debate it in class. Then have the class discuss how the evidence influenced their opinion.
Differentiate Have interested students identify the actual case described by each statement.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Discuss the role of gender in the Supreme Court. Ask students to write an editorial describing how an increase in the appointment of women might or might not change the Court.
L4 Differentiate Display and discuss Transparencies 18 H and 181. Ask students to research the justices' nomination process and write a newspaper article on the confirmation of John Roberts or Samuel Alito.

\section*{Answers}

Who Is on the Court Today? Laws and public policy may need to be changed. State budgets may need to be altered because of changes in law.

Who Is On the Court Today?

example, cases involving such highly charged matters as abortion or affirmative action regularly attract a large number of amicus briefs. Notice, however, that these briefs can be filed only with the Court's permission or at its request.

The solicitor general, a principal officer in the Department of Justice, is often called the Federal Government's chief trial lawyer. He -and, certainly, one day she-represents the United States in all cases to which it is a party in the Supreme Court and may appear and argue for the government in any federal or State court. \({ }^{13}\)

The solicitor general also has another extraordinary responsibility. He decides which cases the government should ask the Supreme Court to review and what position the United States should take in those cases it brings before the High Court.

13 The Attorney General may argue the government's position before the Supreme Court but rarely does so.

The Court in Conference On most Fridays through a term, the justices meet in conference. There, in closest secrecy, they consider the cases in which they have heard oral arguments; and there, too, they decide which new cases they will accept for decision.

Only the Chief Justice, who presides, and the eight other members of the Court are present at the conference. The Chief Justice leads the discussion of each case to be considered-stating the facts, summarizing the questions of law involved, and usually indicating how he thinks the Court should dispose of that case. Then each of the associate justices, in order of seniority, present their views and conclusions. A majority must decide which party wins or loses a case and whether a lower court's decision in that matter is to be affirmed or reversed.

About a third of the Court's decisions are unanimous, but most find the Court divided. The High Court is sometimes criticized for its split decisions. However, most of the cases

\section*{Myths and Misperceptions}

RISING TO THE TOP In the federal inferior courts, a judge rises to the position of chief judge based on seniority. For example, when the chief judge of a federal circuit court steps down, the position goes to the judge who has served on the court for the longest time, is 64 years old or younger, and has not previously served as chief judge. Contrary to popular belief, the top judge on the highest court in the land-the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court-does not necessarily rise to the position through long years of service. The President may elevate any associate justice to Chief Justice, or appoint someone directly to the position from outside the Court. Chief Justice John Roberts had no experience on the U.S. Supreme Court before President George W. Bush appointed him to the top position. it hears pose difficult and complicated questions, and many present questions on which lower courts have disagreed. In short, most of the Court's cases excite controversy; the easy cases seldom get that far.

The Court's Opinions Once a case has been considered and decided in conference, the Court announces its decision in the matter and, with it, issues one or more written opinions. The decision indicates which party has won the dispute and by what margin among the justices. Where the decision is unanimous, the Chief Justice most often writes the Court's opinion. If there has been a split decision, the Chief Justice may write the majority opinion, or he may assign that task to another justice in the majority. When the Chief Justice is in the minority, the senior justice in the majority makes that assignment.

The majority opinion, officially called "the Opinion of the Court," sets out the facts in a case, identifies the issues it presents, and details the reasons that underpin the majority's decision. \({ }^{14}\)

The Court's opinions are exceedingly valuable. Its majority opinions stand as precedents. The lower courts, both federal and State, are expected to follow precedent-that is, decide cases of like nature in a manner consistent with previous rulings. \({ }^{15}\)

One or more of the justices on the majority side may write a concurring opinion, usually to make some point not made or not emphasized in the majority opinion. In effect, a justice who writes a concurring opinion agrees with (concurs in) the majority decision as to the winner of a case but offers dif ferent reasons for reaching that conclusion.

One or more dissenting opinions may be written by those justices who do not agree with the Court's majority decision. Those dissents do not become precedent. They are, instead, expressions of opposition to the majority's views in a case. Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes once described dissenting opinions as "an appeal to the brooding spirit of the law, to the intelligence of a future day." On rare occasions, the High Court does reverse itself. The minority opinion of today could become the Court's majority position on some distant tomorrow.

\footnotetext{
14 Most majority opinions, and many concurring and dissenting opinions, run to dozens of pages. Some Supreme Court decisions are issued with very brief, unsigned opinions. These per curiam (for the court) opinions seldom run more than a paragraph or two and usually dispose of relatively uncomplicated cases. Al of the High Court's opinions in every case are published online and in the United States Reports, the official printed record of its decisions.
15 The doctrine of precedent is often identified as stare decisisLatin for "let the decision stand," or adhere to decided cases.
}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What happens once a case has been decided?

\section*{underpin} \(v\). to support or strengthen

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L
Ask students to sketch the Supreme Court building. On at least eight "pillars" of the building, have them write facts about the Court. For example, students could write out Article III, Section 1 of the Constitution, which created the Court; the Court's jurisdiction as spelled out in Article III, Section 2; the number of justices and their names; and so on.
L3 Collect Core Worksheet B and assess students' participation using the Rubric for Assessing Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 241).
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 43)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 44)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble \\
With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The scope of the \\ Supreme Court's \\ jurisdiction \\
(Questions 1, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students turn each heading and subhead \\ in this section into a question, and then answer \\ the questions. For example, the heading "Judicial \\ Review" in this section could be rewriten as the \\ question "What is judicial review?" or "How did \\ the Court obtain the power of judicial review?"
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
How the Supreme \\ Court operates \\
(Questions 1, 2, \\
\(3,4)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write and illustrate books for \\ elementary school children that explain how a \\ case works its way to the Supreme Court. The \\ books should include definitions; the purpose of \\ briefs and oral arguments; what justices do in \\ conference; and the purpose of majority, concur- \\ ring, and dissenting opinions.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The Court announces its decision and issues one or more written opinions.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. It has both original and appellate jurisdiction, but most of its cases come on appeal. It has original and exclusive jurisdiction over cases involving two or more States and all cases involving ambassadors or other public ministers. The Court studies briefs and hears oral arguments before meeting in conference to consider decisions.
2. (a) Both are ways for a case from a lower court to reach the Supreme Court. (b) writ of certiorari: requested by either party in the case;
certificate: requested by the lower court
3. A majority opinion sets out the facts in a case, identifies the issues, details the reasons that underpin the majority's decision, and becomes a precedent that lower courts are expected to follow.
4. A case is tried in a district court or highest State court and appealed to a court of appeals. It is then appealed to the Supreme Court. At least four justices must agree before a case is put on the docket. Most cases reach the Court by a writ of certiorari; a few reach the Court by certificate.
5. It established the Court's right to exercise the power of judicial review and ensured the independence and equal footing of the judicial branch with the legislative and executive branches.
6. It gives the judicial branch the authority to declare acts of Congress and executive actions unconstitutional.

QUICK WRITE A strong flowchart should include the trial court of original jurisdiction, the appellate court, and the path of the appeal to the Supreme Court.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What are the special courts, and what are the jurisdictions of each?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- identify the special courts by completing a chart highlighting the various courts' jurisdictions.
- understand how special courts function by constructing paths of appeals for case scenarios.
- analyze the constitutionality of military commissions by studying opinions for and against them.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 45) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 46)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 18J. Have students write answers to the questions in their notebooks.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{The Special Courts}

Guiding Question
What are the special courts, and what are the jurisdictions of each? Use a concept web to take notes on the special courts.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- court-martial
- civilian tribunal
- redress

\section*{Objectives}
1. Contrast the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces and the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims.
2. Explain how a citizen may sue the United States government in the Court of Federal Claims.
3. Examine the roles of the territorial courts and those of the District of Columbia courts.
4. Explain what types of cases are brought to the Tax Court.

Image Above: U.S. Army attorney before a court-martial

Recall, the national court system is made up of two quite distinct types of federal courts. They are (1) the constitutional courts, sometimes called the regular or Article III courts, discussed over the last several pages, and (2) the special courts, also known as the legislative or Article I courts.

Each of the special courts was established by Congress acting under the authority delegated to it in Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution-not under the power given to it in Article III to create courts to exercise the broad "judicial Power of the United States." That is to say, each of these courts has a very narrow jurisdiction; each hears only those cases that fall into a very limited class. And the special courts differ from the constitutional courts in one other important regard. Although their judges are all appointed by the President and Senate, they serve for a fixed term-not for life "during good Behaviour."

\section*{Military and Veterans Claims Courts}

Beginning in 1789, Congress has created a system of military courts for each branch of the nation's armed forces, as an exercise of its expressed power to "make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces." \({ }^{16}\) These military courts-courts-martial-serve the special disciplinary needs of the armed forces and are not a part of the federal court system. Their judges, prosecutors, defense attorneys, court reporters, and other personnel are all members of the military; most of them are officers. They conduct trials of those members of the military who are accused of violating military law. Today, the proceedings in a court-martial are similar to the trials held in civilian courts across the country, although there are differences. For example, in a court-martial, only two thirds of the panel, or jury, has to agree on a verdict versus the unanimous verdict required in a civilian court.

16 Aricle I, Section 8, Clause 14. This provision allows Congress to provide for the regulation of the conduct of members of the armed forces under a separate, noncivil legal code. The present-day system of military justice has developed over more than 230 years. Today, the Uniform Code of Military Justice, enacted by Congress in 1950, and the Military Justice Acts of 1968 and 1983 are the principal statutes that set out the nation's military law.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces is a civilian tribunal that hears appeals of courts-martial. - The Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims hears claims regarding veterans' benefits. - The Court of Federal Claims hears claims for damages against the Federal Government. - Congress created federal courts for U.S. territories and the District of Columbia. - The Tax Court hears civil cases concerning tax law.
CONCEPTS: federalism, role of the judiciary
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Congress has created many special courts to handle specific types of cases. - The National Government can be taken to court only in cases in which Congress declares the U.S. to be open to suit.

The Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces In 1950, Congress created the Court of Military Appeals, now titled the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, to review the more serious court-martial convictions of military personnel. This appellate court is a civilian tribunal, a part of the judicial branch, entirely separate from the military establishment. Appeals from the court's decisions can be taken to the Supreme Court. It is, then, the court of last resort in most cases that involve offenses against military law.

The Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims Acting under its power (Article I, Section 8, Clause 9) to "constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court," Congress created the Court of Veterans Appeals in 1988 and changed its name in 1999 to the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims.

This court has the power to hear appeals from the decisions of an administrative agency, the Board of Veterans' Appeals in the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA). Thus, this court hears cases in which individuals claim that the VA has denied or otherwise mishandled valid claims for veterans' benefits. Appeals from the decisions of the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims can be taken to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Military Commissions In 2001, President George W. Bush ordered the creation of a number of military commissions, which are court-like bodies composed of commissioned officers. Those tribunals were not to be a part of the courts-martial system. They were, instead, separate bodies set up to try "unlawful enemy combatants," mostly suspected terrorists captured by American forces in Afghanistan and Iraq. Many of those captives are presently held in a military prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

The President, acting as commander in chief, created these commissions by executive order. However, in 2006, the Supreme Court held that he had overstepped the bounds of his authority when he did so, Hamdan v. Rums fild. It found that the Chief Executive could establish the military commissions and provide for their procedures only if empowered to do so by an act of Congress. In effect, the Court directed the President to work with Congress to develop new procedures for the prosecution of Guantanamo Bay detainees. Those new procedures are now set out in the Military Commissions Act of 2006.

Until 2003, President Franklin Roosevelt had created the most recent military tribunal, in 1942. It tried eight Nazis, who were landed on the East Coast by German submarines. They had planned various acts of sabotage aimed at the disruption of this nation's war effort.

\section*{Other Special Courts}

The other special courts also have very narrow jurisdictions. They include the Court of Federal Claims, the territorial courts, the District of Columbia courts, and the U.S. Tax Court.

The Court of Federal Claims The United States government cannot be sued by anyone, in any court, for any reason, without its consent. \({ }^{17}\) The government may be taken to court

17 The government is shielded from suit by the doctine of sovereign immunity. The doctrine comes from an ancient principle of English public law: "The King can do no wrong." The rule is not intended to protect public officials from charges of wrongdoing; it is intended to prevent government from being hamstrung in its own courts. Congress has long since agreed to a long list of legitimate court actions against the government
1) Analyzing Political Cartoons Military tribunals have been estab lished at various times in America's past-during the Mexican-American War, the Civil War, and World War II. How do the bystanders in this cartoon view the military commissions at Guantanamo Bay?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 18, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 45)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 46)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 47)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 49)
L3 Quiz A (p. 51)
L2 Quiz B (p. 52)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 53)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 56)

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Discuss the political cartoon that students analyzed for the Bellringer. (Answers: 1. Internal Revenue Service, collect taxes; 2. Students may scan the text to find the answer: United States Tax Court.)

\section*{CHART SPECIAL COURTS' JURISDICTION}

Display Transparency 18 E , The Appellate Path in Federal Courts. Ask a volunteer to identify the special courts on the transparency. Draw a chart on the board like the one below. Have students work in pairs to complete the information. Then discuss the chart.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Name of Court } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Jurisdiction } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Court of Appeals for \\
the Armed Forces
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Appellate jurisdiction over court-martial \\ convictions
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Court of Appeals for \\
Veterans Claims
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Appellate jurisdiction over denied or mis- \\ handled veterans'claims arising from the \\ Department of Veterans Affairs
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Court of Federal \\ Claims
\end{tabular} & Hears claims against the Federal Government \\ \hline Territorial Courts & \begin{tabular}{l} Hear cases in the Virgin Islands, Guam, and \\ Northern Mariana Islands
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
District of Columbia \\
Courts
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Trial and appellate courts for residents of \\
Washington, D.C.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline U.S. Tax Court & Hears civil cases involving disputes of tax laws \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{TRACE APPEALS THROUGH SPECIAL COURTS}

As students answer the questions in the cases below, have them point out where on Transparency 18E each case would move in the appellate path
CASE A: A citizen in Guam is accused of kidnapping. Where does the case begin? (territorial court) The defendant is found guilty and appeals. Where does the case go? (Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit)
CASE B: A citizen claims that the U.S. Forest Service harmed his crops, and sues for redress. Where does this case begin? (Court of Federal Claims) The case is lost by the citizen and then appealed. Where does the case go next? (U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Have students work in groups to complete the Chapter 18 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 47). Students will form opinions on the constitutionality of military tribunals.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons as a "black hole," or something that swallows up detainees' rights in a mysterious, comprehensive way

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Ask students to write a radio program discussing the procedures set out in the Military Commissions Act of 2006. They should write a script that might be used to interview a politician or member of the military.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Have students create a pyramid chart (or expand upon the pyramid they created in Section 3) to illustrate the different levels of the federal court system. They should label the top of the pyramid "Supreme Court," and complete the rest of the chart with the appropriate inferior court titles and jurisdictions at each level.

L3Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 51)

L2Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 52)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The jurisdiction \\ of special courts \\
(Questions 1, 3,
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students to briefly identify the function of \\ each special court (and the other inferior courts) \\ 4o a slip of paper. Collect and read aloud the \\ slips for a "Which Court Am I?" quiz.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The functions of \\ military courts \\
and commissions \\
(Questions 2, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students describe characteristics of courts- \\ martial and the Court of Appeals for the Armed \\ Forces. Ask them to write their descriptions as \\ part to a political cartoon or other visual that \\ shows how appeals of courts-martial go to a \\ civilian court
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint claims for damages against the Federal Government \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What type of cases does the Court of Federal Claims hear?
only in cases in which Congress has declared the United States to be open to suit. Originally, any person with a money claim against the United States could secure redress-satisfaction of a claim, payment-only by an act of Congress. In 1855, however, Congress set up the Court of Claims to hear such pleas. \({ }^{18}\) That body was renamed the United States Court of Federal Claims in 1992.

The Court of Federal Claims holds trials throughout the country, hearing claims for damages against the Federal Government. Those claims it upholds cannot in fact be paid until Congress appropriates the money, which it does almost as a matter of standard procedure. Appeals from the court's decisions may be carried to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Occasionally, those who lose in the Claims Court still manage to win some compensation. Some years ago, a Puget Sound mink rancher lost a case in which he claimed that low-flying Navy planes had frightened his animals and caused several of the females to become sterile. He asked \($ 100\) per mink. He lost, but then his congressman introduced a private bill that eventually paid him \($ 10\) for each animal.

The Territorial Courts Acting under its power (Article IV, Section 3, Clause 2) to "make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory \(\ldots\) belonging to the United States," Congress has created courts for the nation's territories. These courts sit in the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands. They function much like the local courts in the 50 States.

18 Congress acted under its expressed power to pay the debts of the United States, Article I, Section 8, Clause 1.

The District of Columbia Courts Acting under its power to "exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District . . . as may . . . become the Seat of the Government of the United States" (Article I, Section 8, Clause 17), Congress has set up a judicial system for the nation's capital. Both the federal district court and the federal Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia hear cases as constitutional courts. Congress has also established two local courts, much like the courts in the States: a superior court, which is the general trial court, and a court of appeals.

The United States Tax Court Acting under its power to \(\operatorname{tax}\) (Article I, Section 8, Clause 1), Congress created the United States Tax Court in 1969 as "an independent judicial body" in the legislative branch. It is not, in fact, a part of the federal court system. The Tax Court hears civil but not criminal cases involving disputes over the application of the tax laws. Most of its cases, then, are generated by the Internal Revenue Service and other Treasury Department agencies. Its decisions may be appealed to the federal courts of appeals.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|c|}
\hline & \multicolumn{4}{|l|}{\multirow[t]{3}{*}{}} \\
\hline & & & & \\
\hline SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT & & & & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: What are the special courts and what are the jurisdictions of each?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the difference between civilian tribunals and courts-martial?
3. What does it mean to seek redress in a court?
4. How do the special courts differ from the constitutional courts?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Synthesize Information When, if ever, do you think the establishment of a military commission is justified?
6. Determine Relevance Why do you think Congress has created the several special courts, rather than simply providing that all federal cases are to be tried in the regular courts?

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Essay: Write a Thesis Statement A thesis states specifically what you will cover in your essay. Write a thesis statement for an explanatory essay on your chosen case's path to the Supreme Court. You will use your thesis as a guide to develop an organizational plan for your essay.

540 The Federal Court System

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The special courts (and their jurisdictions): courts-martial (trial courts for the military), Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces (reviews court-martial convictions), Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (hears appeals regarding VA benefits), military commissions (try "unlawful enemy combatants"), Court of Federal Claims (hears claims against the Federal Government), territorial courts (courts in U.S. territories), District of Columbia courts (trial and appellate courts in Washington, D.C.), U.S. Tax Court (civil cases involving disputes over tax laws).
2. civilian tribunals: appellate courts, separate from the military, which review serious court-martial convictions; courts-martial: courts composed of military personnel that try cases concerning military law
3. satisfaction or payment of a claim
4. Special courts have a narrower jurisdiction, and judges serve a fixed term, not for life.
5. Some students might support military commissions for terrorists; others might say terrorists should be tried in federal district courts.
6. Special courts relieve caseload in constitutional courts. Congress wanted courts with special expertise.
QUICK WRITE Thesis statements may include the general constitutional grounds on which the cases worked their way to the Supreme Court.

\section*{Political Dictionary}

CHAPTER 18 Essential Question Does the structure of the federal court system allow it to administer justice effectively?

Guiding Question Section 4 What are the special courts, and tions of each? inferior courts p. 521 jurisdiction p. 522 concurrent jurisdiction p. 522 plaintiff p. 523 defendant \(p .523\)
original jurisdiction \(p .523\) appellate jurisdiction \(p\). 523 judicial restraint p. 524 precedent \(p .524\) judicial activism p. 524 criminal case p. 529

The Federal Courts
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|r|}{U.S. Supreme Court} \\
\hline Inferio & Courts \\
\hline Constitutional Courts & Special Courts \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
District Courts \\
U.S. Courts of Appeals \\
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit \\
U.S. Court of International Trade
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims \\
U.S. Court of Federal Claims \\
Territorial Courts \\
Courts of the District of Columbia \\
U.S. Tax Court
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular} civil case p. 529
docket p. 530
record p. 531
writ of certiorari p. 534 certificate p. 534 brief \(p .535\)
majority opinion p. 537 concurring opinion p. 537 dissenting opinion p. 537 court-martial p. 538 civilian tribunal p. 539 redress p. 540

Chapter 18 Assessment 541

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Set Goals for Study Sessions Setting goals can help students achieve both long- and short-term goals. Setting goals for study sessions makes it more likely that students will stay on task and accomplish the necessary work. Ask students to write down a study goal for each subject for the week. Then ask them to write down a study goal for today's study session. Goals should keep in mind upcoming tests and assignments that are due. Explain that it is important to prioritize tasks for each study session, in order to meet the goal for that session. It can be helpful to assign a length of time to each task, both to organize study time effectively and to help with concentration. Remind students to make goals realistic. For example, a study goal for one session might be to read the chapter, or to review the class notes for the day. Have students create a "goal chart" that lists today's study goals and the priority of each, as well as the length of time to complete the task. Suggest that students reward themselves for meeting each day's goals with something they enjoy doing.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 5 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 5 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Extend the Lesson, p. 530
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about the federal court system, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 McElroy, Lisa. Sandra Day O 'Connor: Supreme Court Justice. Millbrook Press, 2003.

L2 January, Brendan. The Supreme Court. Franklin Watts, 2005.
L3 Jacobs, Thomas A. Teens Take It to Court: Young People Who Challenged the Law-and Changed Your Life. Free Spirit Publishing, 2006.
L4 Trachtman, Michael G. The Supremes' Greatest Hits: The 34 Supreme Court Cases that Most Directly Affect Your Life. Sterling, 2006.

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

18

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) to define and apply laws in a uniform way for all States (b) Possible answer: An independent judiciary keeps the separation and balance of power in government, thus assuring fair trials as well as judicial decisions not dependent on political pressure.
2. (a) subject matter a "federal question" and parties involved (b) Some students may note that the Constitution kept the principles purposefully broad to allow for interpretation. Other students may note that the principles are too broad and should be narrowed to reduce the federal caseload. Still others may find the principles not broad enough, citing cases heard in State courts that would be better tried by a nonelected judge in the federal judiciary.
3. (a) The President nominates, and the Senate confirms. The President usually nominates judges recommended by that State's senators. (b) Possible answer: If either the executive or legislative branch had the sole power to appoint a judge, the other branch would always suspect a lack of impartiality and would not support the work of the judge.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) The room is in disorder, and the justices are frazzled and overwhelmed. (b) The court is beset with cases it cannot hear.
5. (a) both civil and criminal cases (b) More than 80 percent of federal cases are tried in district courts.
6. (a) They hear appeals from the decisions of the district courts. (b) They were created to relieve the Supreme Court of its overloaded docket.

\section*{SECTION 3}
7. (a) the power to decide the constitutionality of an act of government (b) yes, because judicial review serves as a check on actions of all three branches of government
8. (a) both original and appellate jurisdiction (b) "Easy" cases involve simple points of law, or their decisions are not appealed. The Supreme Court hears only those cases that it feels involve significant points of law or that were not decided properly in the lower court.

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

Section 1
1. (a) Why did the Framers see a need for a national court system? (b) Why did the Framers believe that an independent judiciary was so important?
2. (a) What are the two general principles that determine whether the federal courts have jurisdiction over a case? (b) Do you think these principles are broad enough? Why or why not?
3. (a) Outline the process by which most federal judges are nominated and approved. (b) Why did the Framers create a system of judicial selection that requires the cooperation of the President and the Senate?

Section 2
4. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) What is happening in this scene? (b) What point is the cartoonist making?

5. (a) What kinds of cases do the district courts hear? (b) Why can it be said that the federal district courts are the principal trial courts in the national judiciary?
6. (a) What is the principal role of the courts of appeals? (b) Why were they a necessary creation?

\section*{Section 3}
7. (a) What is judicial review? (b) Is the power of judicial review consistent with the basic principles of democracy? Why or why not?
8. (a) What is the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court? (b) For what reasons do you think the "easy" cases do not reach the Supreme Court?
9. (a) What is a concurring opinion? What is a dissenting opinion? (b) Why do Supreme Court justices often write concurring and/or dissenting opinions in a case?

\section*{Section 4}
10. (a) What are the special courts? Cite two examples and the jurisdiction of each. (b) What does it mean to say these courts have a very narrow jurisdiction?
11. (a) What is the function of a civilian tribunal? (b) Why do you think Congress established a civilian tribunal to hear the appeals of serious courts-martial convictions?

\section*{Writing About Government}
12. Use your Quick Write exercises from this chapter to write an explanatory essay about the path your chosen case took to reach the Supreme Court. Be sure to write an introduction that has a strong and clear purpose, a body that identifies the steps in the process and shows how each step relates to the overall process, and a conclusion each step relates to the overall process, and a conclusion Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
13. Essential Question Activity Interview a federal judge or lawyer who has experience with federal cases. Ask:
(a) What do you think is the purpose of the law? (b) What is the role of the courts in our system of government?
(c) What do you think are the advantages of trying a case in federal court, as compared to a State or local court? The disadvantages?
14. Essential Question Assessment Based on the interview you conducted and the content you have earned in this chapter, write an op-ed that helps to answer the Essential Question: Does the structure of the federal court system allow it to administer justice effectively? An op-ed is an opinion piece that you could submit to your local newspaper for publication. Op eds present an informed view and should be engaging Include facts and statistics to support your opinion.

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ & \text { Question, go to your Essential }\end{aligned}\) Journal Question, go to your}
9. (a) concurring: written by a judge who agrees with the majority decision but offers different reasons for reaching that conclusion; dissenting: explanation written by a justice who does not agree with the Court's majority decision (b) Possible answer: Concurring and dissenting opinions enable justices to express different points of view; in future cases, they may form the basis for majority opinions.

\section*{SECTION 4}
10. (a) The special courts (and their jurisdictions) include courts-martial (trial courts for the military); Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces (reviews courts-martial convictions); Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (hears appeals regarding VA benefits); military commissions (try "unlawful enemy combatants"); Court of Federal Claims (hears claims for damages against the Federal Government); territorial courts (courts in U.S. territories); District of Columbia courts (trial and appellate courts in Washington, D.C.); and U.S. Tax Court (hears civil cases involving disputes over tax laws). (b) Each of these courts hears only those cases that fall into a very limited class.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Term Limits for Federal Judges}

Over recent years, many have questioned the wisdom of the provision of life tenure for federal judges, as illustrated in Document 1 below. The debate has often focused on the Supreme Court. Article III, Section 1 of the Constitution gives Supreme Court justices lifetime appointments. A Framer's viewpoint is set out in Document 2 . Any change in the tenure of Supreme Court justices would require a constitutional amendment. Although both supporters and opponents of such action agree that such a change is unlikely any time soon, the issue has led to lively debate

\section*{Document 1}
[L]]ifetime tenure should be abolished. . . .[A]s the judiciary has become almost as polarized [divided] along partisan lines as the elective branches, Presidents have been seeking out younger and younger judgeship appointees at every level of the judiciary, hoping to influence the courts long after they leave the White House.
The insularity produced by lifetime tenure, combined with youthful appointment and long service, often means that senior judges represent the views and outlooks of past generations better than the current day.
Therefore, a nonrenewable term of fifteen years is an attractive innovation. . . . This is a long time to servenearly four current presidential terms. . . . At the same time, it is short enough to prevent justices from becoming too detached and generationally removed from the American mainstream.
-Larry J. Sabato, A More Perfect Constitution

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. C
2. Lifetime tenure is a barrier to the encroachments and oppressions of the representative body; and it secures a steady, upright, and impartial administration of the laws.
3. A strong essay will include a thesis statement and a summary of the writer's opinion in the first paragraph. The second paragraph should include relevant support information and points that address counterarguments.

The standard of good behavior for the continuance in office of the judicial magistracy [judges], is certainly one of the most valuable of the modern improvements in the practice of government. In a monarchy it is an excellent barrier to the despotism of the prince; in a republic it is a no less excellent barrier to the encroachments and oppressions of the representative body. And it is the best expedient which can be devised in any government, to secure a steady, upright, and impartial administration of the laws.
-Alexander Hamilton, The Federalist No. 78

L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccessNet. com, and do additional research to support their views.
11. (a) to hear appeals of serious courts-martial convictions (b) Possible answer: to introduce impartiality by having nonmilitary personnel review the appeal

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
12. Have students refine their explanatory essays before submitting them. They should be sure each paragraph has a topic sentence and supporting sentences, and that all related points are grouped together into one paragraph. They should also review sentence patterns, adding variety by inserting a short sentence between two long ones or by combining two short sentences into one longer, compound sentence. Finally, have them look for vague words and replace them with more concise, active (not passive) terms.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
13. Students should write a list of openended, neutral questions before the interview. Researching the subject's background will direct students to a thoughtful line of questioning. During the interview, students should listen closely for central ideas and what seems important to the interviewee. Have students clarify any misunderstanding by restating in their own words the subject's responses.
14. Students' op-eds should answer the Essential Question using facts and statistics for support. Ask for volunteers to read their pieces to the class, followed by discussion, or to stage a debate using pro and con arguments.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 5}

What should be the role of the judicial branch?

\section*{CHAPTER 19}

How can the judiciary balance individual rights with the common good?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the photo and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the photo and quotation suggest about civil liberties? (that Americans have had to fight for civil liberties) In this chapter, students will learn about First Amendment freedoms. Then tell students to begin to further explore civil liberties by completing the Chapter 19 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}ELL Differentiate Chapter 19 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 68)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:

\section*{- The Lemon Test}
- Freedoms of Speech and Press

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

You may wish to teach analyzing sources as a distinct skill within Section 1 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 19 Skills Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 77) to help students learn the steps in analyzing sources. The worksheet asks students to read and identify two sources as primary or secondary, to find the main idea, and to evaluate the sources for point of view and bias. For L 2 and L 1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 78).

\section*{WebQuest}
online The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about civil liberties.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach Section 1 lesson, including Transparency 19A, Core Worksheet 19.1, and the Strategies for Remediation. Begin Section 2 Lesson, including Bellringer and Draw a Wall of Separation. Assign Core Worksheet 19.2; have students discuss it.
bLock 2: Review Transparency 19C. Begin Section 3; discuss Bellringer and Chart Restrictions on Speech. Allow time for groups to complete Core Worksheet 19.3. Discuss the rulings. Go over Recognize Limits and Protections of the Media; organize groups for dramatizations.
BLOCK 3: Have groups dramatize their media cases. Display and discuss Transparency 19F. Introduce Section 4 with Transparency 19G and Identify Time-Place-Manner Rules. Distribute Core Worksheet 19.4; have students prepare their scenarios. Present cases before "judges." Complete Strategies for Remediation.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Have students read the Bill of Rights, and then write a matching quiz listing the first ten amendments in Column 1 and their corresponding rights (out of order) in Column 2. Ask students to exchange and complete the quizzes. Reproduce and distribute the Facts and Enduring Understandings from each section opener of the Teacher Edition. Using the information from their quizzes and the Facts and Enduring Understandings, have students create an illustrated "Know Your Rights" Guide to the Bill of Rights that briefly explains what each right includes as well as what limitations it puts on government.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will.
- identify liberties guaranteed by the Bill of Rights by analyzing photographs and political cartoons.
- understand that rights are not absolute by debating issues in which rights and interests must be balanced.
- describe how the Constitution protects the rights of individuals by creating a diagram.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will...
- clarify the meaning of the Establishment Clause and its "wall of separation" by completing a diagram and chart concerning cases on freedom of religion.
- learn how the Supreme Court has interpreted the Establishment Clause and Free Exercise Clause by evaluating scenarios about freedom of religion conflicts.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will...
- identify the limits and protections of freedom of speech by charting restrictions on different forms of expression, analyzing prior restraint, summarizing court rulings on student speech, and interpreting political cartoons.
- identify the limits and protections of freedom of the press by researching media cases.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will.
- distinguish the conflicting but essential nature of the right to assemble by participating in scenarios about freedom of assembly and petition conflicts.
- understand the restrictions on assembly and petition by identifying and applying time-placemanner regulations and content neutrality to assembly situations.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
1 Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{How does the Constitution protect the rights of individuals against government?}

Answers may include any three of the following:

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will . .
- identify liberties guaranteed by the Bill of Rights by analyzing photographs and political cartoons.
- understand that rights are not absolute by debating issues in which rights and interests must be balanced.
- describe how the Constitution protects the rights of individuals by creating a diagram.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 72) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 73)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

To practice analyzing sources in this section, use the Chapter 19 Skills Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 77). You may wish to teach the skill explicitly before you discuss the Bill of Rights. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 78).

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{The Unalienable Rights}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How does the Constitution protect the rights of individuals against government? Use a concept web to identify three parts of the Constitution that protect individual rights.

Political Dictionary
- Bill of Rights - Due Process
- civil liberties Clause
- civil rights - process of civil rights - process of

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how Americans' commitment to freedom led to the creation of the Bill of Rights.
2. Understand that the rights guaranteed by limited government are not absolute.
3. Show how federalism affects individual rights.
4. Describe how the 9th Amendment helps protect individual rights.

Image Above: James Madison, author of the Bill of Rights

Have you ever heard of Walter Barnette? How about Toyosaburo Korematsu? Dollree Mapp? Clarence Earl Gideon? Walter Barnette was a Jehovah's Witness in West Virginia who told his children not to salute the American flag or to recite the Pledge of Allegiance in school. Toyosaburo Korematsu was an American citizen interned by the Federal Government during World War II. Dollree Mapp was jailed for keeping "lewd and lascivious books" in her boarding house in Ohio. Clarence Earl Gideon went to prison for breaking into a poolroom in Florida. You will encounter these names again as you read this chapter and the next one. Each of these people played an important part in building and protecting the rights of all Americans.

\section*{A Commitment to Freedom}

A commitment to personal freedom is deeply rooted in America's colonial past. For centuries, the people of England waged a continuing struggle for individual rights, and the early colonists brought a dedication to that cause with them to America.

Their commitment to freedom took root here, and it flourished. The Revolutionary War was fought to preserve and expand those very rights: the rights of the individual against government. In proclaiming the independence of the new United States, the founders of this country declared:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men. . . .
-Declaration of Independence
The Framers of the Constitution repeated the justification for the existence of government in the Preamble to the Constitution. That document, they said, was written to "secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity."

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The first ten amendments to the Constitution are known as the Bill of Rights. - Individual rights are not absolute. - The 14 th Amendment's Due Process Clause prevents the States from abridging rights guaranteed by the Bill of Rights.
- The 9th Amendment declares that people may have rights in addition to those listed in the Constitution.
CONCEPTS: limited government, individual rights, federalism, due process of law ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The guarantees in the Bill of Rights reflect the nation's commitment to personal freedom and to the principle of limited government.
- The Due Process Clause of the 14 th Amendment ensures that State governments do not limit or take away rights given to citizens by the National Government.

The Constitution, as it was written in Philadelphia, contained a number of important guarantees. The most notable of these can be found in Article I, Sections 9 and 10, and in Article III. Unlike many of the first State constitutions, however, the new National Constitution did not include a general listing of the rights of the people.

That omission raised an outcry. The objections were so strong that several States ratified the Constitution only with the understanding that a listing of rights would soon be added. The first session of the new Congress proposed a series of amendments. Ten of them, known as the Bill of Rights, were ratified by the States and became a part of the Constitution on December 15, 1791. Later amendments, especially the 13 th and the 14th, have added to the Constitution's guarantees of personal freedom.

The Constitution guarantees both rights and liberties to the American people. The distinction between civil rights and civil liberties is murky at best. Legal scholars often disagree on the matter, and the two terms often are used interchangeably.

Think of the distinction this way: In general, civil liberties are protections against government. They are guarantees of the safety of persons, opinions, and property from arbitrary acts of government. Thus, freedom of religion, freedom of speech and press, and the guarantees of fair trial are prime examples of civil liberties.

In contrast, civil rights are often associated with positive acts ofgovernment that seek to make constitutional guarantees a reality for all people. Viewed from this perspective, laws against discrimination on the basis of race, sex, religious belief, or national origin set out in the Civil Rights Act of 1964 are leading examples of civil rights.
prohibition or a restriction on the power of government to do something.

All governments have and use authority over individuals. The all-important difference between a democratic government and a dictatorial one lies in the extent of that authority. In a dictatorial regime, the government's powers are practically unlimited. The government regularly suppresses dissent, often harshly. In the United States, however, governmental authority is strictly limited. As Justice Robert H. Jackson once put the point:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or any other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein.
-West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 1943

Rights Are Relative, Not Absolute The Constitution guarantees many rights to everyone in the United States. Still, no one has the right to do anything he or she pleases. Rather, all persons have the right to do as they please as long as they do not infringe on the rights of others. That is, each person's rights are relative to the rights of every other person.

To illustrate the point: Everyone in the United States has a right of free speech, but no one enjoys absolute freedom of speech. A person can be punished for \section*{orthodox}

adj. standard,
recognized, accepted

\section*{regime}
\(\frac{\text { regime }}{n \text {. a system of }}\) government or rule

\section*{arbitrary \\ adj. random}

Blaring music late at night is not a right because it infringes on the rights of others. \(\nabla\)

\section*{Limited Government}

Remember, government in th United States is limited. The Constitution is filled with examples of this fact. Chief among them are its many guarantees of personal freedom. Each of those guarantees is either an outright

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 19, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 68)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 72)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 73)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 75)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 77)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 78)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 79)
L3 Quiz A (p. 80) L2 Quiz B (p. 81)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 19A. Have students answer the questions in their notebooks.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Write these terms on the board and ask students to define them in their notebooks: civil liberties (guarantees of the safety of persons, opinions, and property from the arbitrary acts of government); Bill of Rights (the first ten amendments to the Constitution); unalienable rights (rights that cannot be taken away; life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness). Work with the class to agree on definitions and write them on the board. Next, have students name the 1 st Amendment rights and freedoms. (freedom of religion, speech, and press; the right to assemble and to petition the government for redress of grievances)
L3 Differentiate Ask students why they think this section is titled "The Unalienable Rights." (It covers the most basic of rights-the 1 st Amendment freedoms.) Can students think of additional rights they consider unalienable?
L1 L2 Differentiate Have students create an acrostic poem or mnemonic device to help them remember the 1 st Amendment freedoms.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Discuss the Bellringer questions. (Answers: 1 .The photo shows the right to free speech and the right to assemble. 2. Yes. The right to protest acts as a safeguard against government power, helps inform lawmakers of citizens' concerns, and allows the minority opinion to be heard. ) Ask students to consider what might happen if people were not allowed to protest (only the majority voice would be heard), or if protesters demonstrated in a country that had unlimited government. (In dictatorships, protests against the government are usually put down forcibly.)
L3 L4 Differentiate Ask students to identify demonstrations that have had an impact on the United States or other countries. (protests against the Vietnam War or war in Iraq, Tiananmen Square, Myanmar) Ask: What prevents police from dispersing the protesters shown in the Bellringer photograph? (The 1 st Amendment gives U.S. citizens the right to peaceably protest.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint by either prohibiting or restricting the actions of government

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute Chapter 19 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 75). Explain that students will analyze a political cartoon related to the Bill of Rights.
L2 L1 Differentiate Have students work together to identify the rights portrayed and opinions expressed.
L4 Differentiate Have students select one right in the Bill of Rights and create political cartoons that show the interests the Supreme Court must balance when ruling on cases related to this right. Have students explain their cartoons to the class. Evaluate students' work with the Rubric for Assessing Political Cartoons (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 244).

\section*{DISCUSS AND DEBATE BALANCING RIGHTS}

Write on the board: Rights are relative, not absolute. Ask students to explain. (Individuals can exercise their rights only as long as their actions do not infringe on the rights of others. ) Organize student groups to debate Issue 1 or Issue 2 below. Each debate should include a For and an Against position and a discussion of the conflicting rights.
Issue 1 The government should pass a law limiting the use of cell phones in public places.
Issue \(\mathbf{2}\) Before entering a mall, people must show an identification card and pass through a metal detector.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Possible response: The right to free speech does not allow one person to slander another.

Checkpoint Cite an example that illustrates the point that rights are relative. stringent
adj. strict, rigid, narrow using obscene language, or for using words in a way that causes someone to commit a crime-to riot or to desert from the military, for example. The Supreme Court dealt with this point in a recent case, Morse v. Frederick, 2007. A 5-4 majority held that school officials in Alaska acted properly when they disciplined a student for displaying a banner that could be read as promoting drug use.

In this oft-quoted line, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes put the relative nature of each person's rights in this way:

PRIMARY SOURCE
The most stringent protection of free speech would not protect a man in falsely shouting fire in a theatre and causing a panic.
—Schenck v. United States, 1919

When Rights Conflict On occasion, different guarantees of rights come into conflict with one another. For example, cases involving freedom of the press versus the right to a fair trial are not at all uncommon.

In one famous case, Dr. Samuel Sheppard of Cleveland, Ohio, had been convicted of murdering his wife. His lengthy trial was widely covered in the national media. On appeal, Sheppard claimed that the highly sensational coverage had denied him a fair trial. The Supreme Court agreed. In Sheppard v. Maxwell, 1966, the Court rejected the free press argument, overturned Sheppard's conviction, and ordered a new trial.

To Whom Are Rights Guaranteed? Most constitutional rights are extended to all persons. The Supreme Court has often held that "persons" includes aliens, people who are not citizens of the country in which they live. Not all rights are given to aliens, however. The right to travel freely throughout the country is guaranteed to all citizens, for example, but the travel of aliens can be restricted. \({ }^{1}\)

See the two Privileges and Immunities clauses, in Article IV, Section 2, and the 14th Amendment. The guarantee does not extend to citizens under some form of legal restraint-for example, in jail or out on bail awaiting trial.

After the bombing of Pearl Harbor by Japan, all persons of Japanese descent living on the Pacific Coast were evacuated-forcibly moved-inland. Many suffered economic and other hardships. In 1944, the Supreme Court reluctantly upheld the forced evacuation as a reasonable wartime emergency measure. \({ }^{2}\) Still, the relocation was strongly criticized over the years. In 1988, the Federal Government admitted that the wartime relocation had been both unnecessary and unjust. Congress voted to pay \($ 20,000\) to each living internee. It also declared, "the Congress apologizes on behalf of the nation."

The current war on terrorism has created a political climate similar to that of the early days of World War II. Did the mistreatment of Japanese Americans then provide a lesson for today? Will the rights of Muslims and others of Middle Eastern descent be respected by government as it fights terrorism here and abroad?

\section*{Federalism and Individual Rights}

Federalism is a complicated governmental arrangement. It produces any number of problems-including a very complex pattern of guarantees of individual rights in the United States.

The Bill of Rights Remember, the first ten amendments were originally intended as restrictions on the new National Government, not on the already existing States. And that remains the fact of the matter today. \({ }^{3}\)

To illustrate this important point: The 5th Amendment says that no person can be charged with "a capital, or otherwise infamous crime" except by a grand jury. As a part of the Bill of Rights, this provision applies

2 Korematsu v. United States, 1944. However, on the same day citizen internee had been established, no restriction could be placed on that person's freedom to travel that was not legally imposed on all other citizens.
3 The Supreme Court first held that the provisions of the Bill of Rights restrict only the National Government in Barron v.
Baltimore, 1833. This was the first case in which the point was raised. The Supreme Court has followed that holding (precedent) ever since.

548 Civil Liberties: First Amendment Freedoms

\section*{Background}
dUE PROCESS CLAUSE Congress rejected much of the original draft of the Bill of Rights, which contained restrictions on both National and State governments. In the late 1700 s, many Americans trusted their State governments far more than the Na tional Government. For many decades, however, some State governments ignored the First Amendment right to freedom of religion and continued to have Statesupported churches. Decades after the Civil War ended, many southern States ignored the 14 th Amendment, which was intended to protect the rights of former slaves. According to political science professor Richard Cortner, through the incorporation process the Court turned the Due Process Clause of the 14 th Amendment into a "second bill of rights" more applicable "to the liberty of the average American than the one . . . ratified by the states in 1791."
- Provisions of the Bill of Rights INCORPORATED into the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause

- Provisions of the Bill of Rights NOT INCORPORATED into the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause

D Interpreting Charts This chart shows which rights the Supreme Court has "nationalized" by incorporating them into the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment. Why do you think that some, but not all, rights are incorporated under the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause?
only to the National Government. The States may use the grand jury to bring accusations of serious crime-or, if they prefer, they can use some other process to do so. The grand jury is a part of the criminal justice system in all but two States and the District of Columbia, however. For additional information, see the coverage of the grand jury in the next chapter and also in Chapter 24.

The Modifying Effect of the 14th Amendment Again, the provisions of the Bill of Rights apply against the National Government, not against the States. This does not mean, however, that the States can deny basic rights to the people.

In part, the States cannot do so because each of their own constitutions contains a bill of rights. In addition, they cannot deny these basic rights because of the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause. It says:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

No State shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. . ..
-14th Amendment, Section 1
The Supreme Court has often said that the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause means that no State can deny to any person any right that is "basic or essential to the American concept of ordered liberty."

But what specific rights are "basic or essential"? The Supreme Court has answered this question in a long series of cases in which it has held that most (but not all) of the protections in the Bill of Rights are also covered by the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause, and so apply against the States. In deciding those cases, the Court has engaged in what has come to be called the process of incorporation. It has incorporated-merged,

\section*{Constitutional Principles}

JUDICIAL REVIEW In Gitlow v. New York, 1925, the Supreme Court established that the Due Process Clause prevented States from impairing personal freedoms. However, the decision upheld Gitlow's conviction. Justice Holmes, in dissent, went one step further in arguing that the conviction be overturned. His dissent addressed the New York attorneys' claim that Gitlow's actions were an incitement. "It is said that this manifesto was more than a theory, that it was an incitement. Every idea is an incitement. . . . The only difference between the expression of an opinion and incitement in the narrower sense is the speaker's enthusiasm for the result. "

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a listing of rights incorporated in the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause.

\section*{CREATE A DIAGRAM}

Have a volunteer read aloud the 14 th Amendment's Due Process Clause from the textbook. Ask: From what or whom does the 14th Amendment protect citizens' rights? (State governments) Why does the Bill of Rights not protect citizens against the States? (The Bill of Rights applies only to the National Government. ) What are some other rights that U.S. citizens have that are not specifically listed in the Constitution? (Provide students with prompts, such as the right to move from one State to another or the right to change jobs without government permission.) How are these unspecified rights protected? (9th Amendment) Have students use this information to create a diagram or other visual that illustrates how individuals' rights are protected in "layers" by various parts of the Constitution L3 Differentiate Display Transparency 19B, and have students select one of the Court cases to research. They should explain in a paragraph how the case incorporated a Bill of Rights guarantee into the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

\section*{L3} Differentiate Have students create an illustrated "Know Your Rights" Guide to the Bill of Rights that briefly explains what each right includes and the limits it puts on government. Students can use print or online resources to find examples of citizens exercising these rights.

\section*{L2}

Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity entitled "The Bill of Rights" (Unit 5 All-in-One,
p. 79).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L2 L3 Ask students to list ten things they have the right to do without government interference. Then ask them to note whether each right listed is protected by the 1 st Amendment, the 9 th Amendment, the 14 th Amendment, or some other part of the Constitution.

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Charts Sample answer: Quartering of troops is obsolete. States should be allowed to decide on the jury process that works best for them. The right to bear arms is too controversial to be nationalized. work.Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 88)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 89)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Rights protected by the \\ Bill of Rights \\
(Questions 1, 2, 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write a matching quiz listing \\ the first ten amendments in column 1 and \\ their corresponding rights (out of order) in \\ column 2. Then have students exchange \\ and complete the quizzes.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
14th Amendment \\ protections \\
(Questions 4, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students draw a large outine of \\ their State. Within the State "boundaries," \\ have them write out the text of the 14th \\ Amendment's Due Process Clause. Under \\ these words, ask students to write how \\ the 14th Amendment protects them within \\ their State.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Balancing individuals' \\ rights (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have groups identify how rights conflict \\ in the following scenarios: (a) a public \\ demonstration blocks traffic for hours, (b) \\ a neighbor blares her stereo in the middle \\ of the night, and (c) the government talts \\ publication of war-related information.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
\(\sqrt{ }\) Checkpoint Why is the case Gitlow v. New York important?
combined-most of the guarantees in the Bill of Rights into the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause.

The Court began that historic incorporation in Gitlow v. New York, 1925. The landmark case involved Benjamin Gitlow, a Communist, who had been convicted of criminal anarchy in the State courts. He had made several speeches and published a pamphlet calling for the violent overthrow of government in this country.

On appeal, the Court upheld Gitlow's conviction and the State law under which he had been tried. In deciding the case, however, the Court made this crucial point: Freedom of speech and press, which the 1st Amendment says cannot be denied by the National Government, are also "among the fundamental personal rights and liberties protected by the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment from impairment by the States."

Soon after Gitlow, the Court held each of the 1st Amendment's guarantees to be covered by the 14th Amendment. It struck down State laws involving speech (Fiske v. Kansas, 1927; Stromberg v. Cali frnia, 1931), the press (Near v. Minnesota, 1931), assembly and petition (DeJonge v. Oregon, 1937), and religion (Cantwell v. Connecticut, 1940). In each of those cases, the Court declared a State law unconstitutional as a violation of the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause.

In the 1960s, the Court extended the scope of the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause even further. The key guarantees are listed in the chart on the previous page. You will look at each of the guarantees involvedthe 1st Amendment rights in this chapter and the others in Chapter 20.

\section*{The 9th Amendment}

Nowhere in the Constitution will you find a complete catalog of all of the rights held by the American people. The little-noted 9th Amendment explicitly declares that rights exist beyond those listed in the Constitution:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.
-9th Amendment
Over the years, the Supreme Court has found a number of other rights "retained by the people." They include, most notably, the guarantee that an accused person will not be tried on the basis of evidence unlawfully gained, and the right of a woman to choose to have an abortion without undue interference by government.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: How does the Constitution protect the rights of individuals against government?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What is the Bill of Rights, and why did its omission from the original Constitution raise such an outcry?
3. Compare and contrast civil liberties and civil rights.
4. (a) What is the process of incorporation? (b) What guarantees in the Bill of Rights are covered by the 14 th Amendment's Due Process Clause?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Inferences (a) Why are individual rights not absolute? (b) Cite two examples to illustrate how rights may come into conflict with one other
6. Predict Consequences How do you think this country might be different today if the Supreme Court had not applied the process of incorporation to the 14 th Amendment?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Essay: Choose a Topic To write a persuasive essay that convinces others to accept your views, you should select a topic that you feel strongly about. Read through you feel strongly about. Read through the section and identify an issue, such the section and identify a as limits on free speech.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Guarantees are written into Article I, Sections 9 and 10; Article III; the Bill of Rights, and most notably Amendments 9, 13, and 14. These guarantees either prohibit or limit the power of government to do something.
2. The Bill of Rights is the first ten amendments to the Constitution. People wanted specific, written protection against abuses of government.
3. Civil liberties are protections against arbitrary acts of government; civil rights are positive acts of government that seek to make constitutional guarantees for all people.
4. (a) The process of incorporation is the judicial process that has combined most of the Bill of Rights guarantees into the 14 th Amendment's Due Process Clause. Incorporating these guarantees nationalizes them-making them apply to the States as well as to the National Government. (b) everything in the 1 st, 4 th, 5th, 6th, and 8th amendments
5. (a) Individual rights cannot be absolute because they must not infringe upon the rights of others. (b) Sample answers: Freedom of the press may conflict with the right to a fair trial; freedom of speech may conflict with the right to privacy.
6. Possible answer: Without the process of incorporation, the rights of citizens might vary from State to State.
QUICK WRITE Students must select an issue with at least two sides. At this stage of the writing process, have students think about the various strategies they may use to persuade their audience-for example, emotion, logic or reason, and statistics for and against.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Freedom of Religion}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How does the 1st Amendment protect the freedom of religion? Use a chart like the one below to take notes on five Supreme Court cases that protect the freedom of religion.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Freedom of Religion } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Case } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Ruling } \\
\hline - Pierce v. Society of & • \\ Sisters, 1925 & \\
- & - \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary \\ - Establishment Clause}
- Free Exercise Clause
- parochial

\section*{Objectives}
1. Examine why religious liberty is protected in the Bill of Rights.
2. Describe the limits imposed by the Establishment Clause of the 1st Amendment.
3. Summarize the Supreme Court rulings on religion and education as well as other Establishment Clause cases
4. Explain how the Supreme Court has interpreted and limited the Free Exercise Clause.

Image Above: Americans are free to practice religion as they please.
n the early 1830s, a Frenchman, Alexis de Tocqueville, came to America to observe life in the young country. He later wrote in his classic, Democracyin America, that he had searched for the greatness of America in many places: in its large harbors and deep rivers, in its fertile fields and boundless forests, in its rich mines and vast world commerce, in its public schools and institutions of higher learning, and in its democratic legislature and matchless Constitution. Yet it was not until he went into the churches that Tocqueville said he came to understand the genius and the power of this country.

\section*{Religious Liberty}

The 1st Amendment sets out two guarantees of religious freedom. It prohibits (1) "an establishment of religion" (in the Establishment Clause), and (2) any arbitrary interference by government with "the free exercise thereof" (in the Free Exercise Clause). And, recall, both protections are extended against the States by the Due Process Clause in the 14th Amendment. \({ }^{4}\)

These constitutional guarantees were born out of decades of colonial opposition to established churches-to official government-sponsored churches in the colonies. The Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom, adopted in 1786, was the immediate basis for the 1 st Amendment. Drafted by Thomas Jefferson, that law provided for absolute religious freedom in Virginia. It declared that that State could not require that any person profess any set of religious beliefs nor support any religious institution.

\section*{Separation of Church and State}

The Establishment Clause sets up, in Thomas Jefferson's words, "a wall of separation between church and state." That wall is not infinitely high, however, and it is not impenetrable. Church and government are constitutionally separated in this country, but they are neither enemies nor even strangers to one another.

\footnotetext{
4 Also, Article V , Section 3 provides that "no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States "In Torcaso v Watkins, 1961, the Supreme Courtheld that the 14th Amen ment puts the same restriction on the States.
}

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How does the 1 st Amendment protect the freedom of religion?
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Freedom of Religion (Sample Answers) } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Case } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Ruling } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Pierce v. Society of \\
Sisters, 1925
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} struck down law requiring children to attend \\ public (not parochial) schools
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Everson v. Board of \\ Education, 1947
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} upheld tax-supported busing of parochial \\ school students
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Westside Community \\
Schools v. Mergens, \\
1990
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} upheld law requiring schools to allow stu- \\ dent religious groups to meet on same terms \\ as other student groups
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Epperson v. Arkansas, \\
1968
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} struck down law banning teaching of \\ evolution
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Lemon v. Kurtzman, \\
1971
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} bans government sponsorship, financing, \\ and active involvement in religious activity \end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- clarify the meaning of the Establishment Clause and its "wall of separation" by completing a diagram and chart concerning cases on freedom of religion
- learn how the Supreme Court has interpreted the Establishment Clause and Free Exercise Clause by evaluating scenarios about freedom of religion conflicts.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 82) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 84)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

Before students begin analyzing the various scenarios presented in this lesson, you may want to review tips on decision making in the Skills Handbook, p. S18.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • The 1 st Amendment's Establishment Clause prohibits government from establishing or aiding religion. - Most Establishment Clause cases involve religion and education. - The 1 st Amendment's Free Exercise Clause guarantees individuals the right to believe as they choose in matters of religion. - The 14 th Amendment's Due Process Clause extends 1 st Amendment protections against the States.
CONCEPTS: individual rights and responsibilities, limited government, judicial review ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Establishment Clause sets up "a wall of separation between church and state." • The Free Exercise Clause protects religious beliefs but does not protect religious actions that violate laws or threaten safety.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: In what ways is freedom of religion limited in public schools? Answer in your notebook.
L2 Differentiate Provide prompts, such as focus on prayer, the Bible, group meetings, religious artifacts, and religious clothing.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Ask students to share their answers to the Bellringer question. Possible responses:
- School-sponsored prayer or "moments of silence" are prohibited.
- Observances of religious holidays are prohibited.
- Religious groups cannot use public school facilities during school hours.
- Bible study is prohibited in classrooms.
- The Ten Commandments and religious icons cannot be posted in classrooms.
L2 Differentiate Have students define the term icons (visual representations of gods, saints, and other religious entities).
L3 Differentiate Ask: Why do you think government prohibits these forms of religious expression in public schools? (Guide students to conclude that limiting government support for and opposition to all religions protects minority religions and free expression for all people.)
L2 L3 Differentiate Demonstrate the sensitive nature of personal belief. First, ask students to raise their hands if they have brown eyes; do the same with blue-eyed and green-eyed students. Explain to students in the minority that they will have to purchase and wear [brown] contact lenses to "fit in." Now loosely apply this reasoning to religion. Ask students how comfortable they would be if they were asked which religion, if any, they and their family follow. Point out that anyone who follows a minority religion would be "different. " In many countries, they would be harassed. In the United States, however, their beliefs are protected.
L3 Differentiate Ask: What aspects of religion do you think are allowed in public schools? (Examples: Individuals can praywhen and as they choose in any place. The Bible can be studied as a literary or historical piece. Religious groups may use public school facilities after school.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The 1 st Amendment requires the government to maintain strict neutrality, neither aiding nor opposing religion.

Government has done much to encourage churches and religion in the United States. Nearly all property of and contributions to religious sects are free from federal, State, and local taxation. Chaplains serve with each branch of the armed forces. Most public officials take an oath of office in the name of God. Sessions of Congress, most State legislatures, and many city councils open with prayer. The nation's anthem and its coins and currency make reference to God.

The limits imposed by the Establishment Clause remain a matter of continuing and often heated controversy. The Supreme Court did not hear its first Establishment Clause case until 1947. A few earlier cases did involve government and religion, but none of them involved a direct consideration of the "wall of separation."

The most important of those earlier cases was Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 1925. There, the Court held an Oregon compulsory school attendance law unconstitutional. That law required parents to send their children to public schools. It was purposely intended to eliminate private and especially parochial (church-related) schools.

In striking down the law, the Court did not address the Establishment Clause question. Instead, it found the law to be an unreasonable interference with the liberty of parents to direct the upbringing of their children-and so in conflict with the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment.

\section*{Religion and Education}

The Court's first direct ruling on the Establishment Clause came in Everson v. Board of Education, a 1947 case often called the New Jersey School Bus Case. The Court upheld a State law that provided for the public, taxsupported busing of students attending any school in the State, including parochial ones.

Critics had attacked the law as a support of religion. They maintained that it relieved parochial schools of the need to pay for busing and so freed their money for other, including religious, purposes. The Court disagreed; it found the law to be a safety measure intended to benefit children, no matter what schools they might attend. Since that decision, the largest number of the Court's Establishment Clause cases have involved, in one way or another, religion and education.

Released Time "Released time" programs allow public schools to release students during school hours to attend religious classes. In McCollum v. Board ofEducation, 1948, the Court struck down the released time program then in place in Champaign, Illinois, because the program used public facilities for religious purposes.

Yet in Zorach v. Clauson, 1952, the Court upheld New York City's released time program. It did so because that program required religious classes to be held in private places off school grounds.

Prayers and the Bible The Court has now decided seven major cases involving prayer and the reading of the Bible in public schools. In Engel v. Vitale, 1962, the Court outlawed the use, even on a voluntary basis, of a prayer written by the New York State Board of Regents. The prayer read: "Almighty God, we acknowledge our dependence upon Thee, and we beg Thy blessings upon us, our parents, our teachers, and our country."

In striking down the prayer, the Supreme Court held that:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}
[T]he constitutional prohibition against laws respecting an establishment of religion must at least mean that, in this country, it is no part of the business of government to compose official prayers for any group of the American people to recite as part of a religious program carried on by government.
—Justice Hugo L. Black
The High Court extended that holding in two 1963 cases. In Abington School District v. Schempp, it struck down a Pennsylvania law requiring that each school day begin with readings from the Bible and a recitation of the Lord's Prayer. In Murray v. Curlett, the Court erased a similar rule in Baltimore. In both cases, the Court found violations of

552 Civil Liberties: First Amendment Freedoms

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 19, Section 2 :
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 82)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 84)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 86)
L3 Quiz A (p. 88)
L2 Quiz B (p. 89)

\section*{1 st Amendment}

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Ruling on Religion The Court has held that public schools cannot sponsor religious exercises. It has not ruled, however, that individuals cannot pray when and as they choose in schools or in any other place. Nor has it held that students cannot study the Bible in a literary or historical context in school. The Court's rulings have nevertheless been widely criticized. Many critics have proposed that the Constitution be amended to allow voluntary group prayer in public schools. Despite the Court's decisions, both organized prayer and Bible readings are found in many public school classrooms today.

Constitutional Principles How does the separation of church and state reflect the principle of limited government?
"the command of the 1st Amendment that the government maintain strict neutrality, neither aiding nor opposing religion."

Since then, the Supreme Court has found the following to be unconstitutional:
- a Kentucky law that ordered the posting of the Ten Commandments in all public school classrooms, Stone v. Graham, 1980;
- Alabama's "moment of silence" law, Wallace v. Jaffree, 1985, which provided for a oneminute period for "meditation or voluntary prayer" at the start of each school day;
- the offering of prayer as part of a public school graduation ceremony, in a Rhode Island case, Lee v. Weisman, 1992;
- a Texas school district's policy that permitted student-led prayer at high school football games, Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe, 2000.

Student Religious Groups The Equal Access Act of 1984 declares that any public high school that receives federal funds (nearly all do) must allow student religious groups to meet in the school on the same terms that it sets for other student organizations. The Supreme Court found that the law does not violate the Establishment Clause in a Nebraska case, Westside Community Schools v. Mergens, 1990. There, several students had tried to form a Christian club at the high school. The students had to fight the school board in the federal courts in order to win their point.

The High Court has since gone much further than it did in Mergens-in a case from New York, Good News Club v. Milford Central School, 2001. There, a school board had refused to allow a group of grade-school students to meet after school to sing, pray, memorize scriptures, and hear Bible lessons. The school board based its action on the Establishment Clause. The Court, however, held that the board had violated Good News Club members' 1 st and 14 th amendment rights to free speech.

\section*{Background}

BUILDING THE "WALL" In 1787, the Constitution's only mention of religion was a statement that there could be no religious requirements for holding federal office. Thomas Jefferson, unlike many leaders of his day, was committed to a "wall of separation between church and state." He resisted declaring a national day of prayer and thanksgiving. With this unpopular action, he broke a tradition begun by George Washington. Despite the 1 st Amendment ban on the establishment of religion, some States continued to ignore the Bill of Rights on this issue. In the early 1800 s, some States taxed their citizens to support their State's Christian churches. Several State constitutions prohibited non-Christians from holding public office or refused to allow them to vote. The "wall of separation" grew more quickly after the incorporation process of the 14 th Amendment began in the twentieth century.

CLARIFY "ESTABLISHMENT" AND "FREE EXERCISE"
Have a volunteer read aloud the 1 st Amendment in the textbook feature. Ask: Which part of the 1st Amendment addresses freedom of religion? Be sure students understand that the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom has two parts: the Establishment Clause (creates a "wall of separation between church and state" by prohibiting government from passing any law that establishes a State or national religion or favors one religion over another) and the Free Exercise Clause (guarantees all people the right to believe whatever they choose in matters of religion).
L2 ELL Differentiate Explain that the term church refers to all religions and state refers to local, State, and National Government.
L2 Differentiate Point out that another way to think of the Establishment Clause is as an "antiEstablishment Clause"-the government cannot establish or favor a religion.

\section*{DRAW A "WALL OF SEPARATION"}

The "height" of the wall of separation-the limits imposed by the Establishment Clause-varies. Have students draw, in pencil, a five-paneled wall and the labels "church" in the foreground and "state" in the background. On the board, list these Establishment Clause cases (but not the height of the panels):
- Engel v. Vitale, 1962 (high panel)
- Wallace v. Jaffree, 1985 (high panel)
- Committee for Public Education and Religious Liberty v. Regan, 1980 (medium panel)
- County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 1989 (high panel)
- March v. Chambers, 1983 (low panel)

Have students label their panels with the cases and their rulings. Students should read about each case, decide whether the Court placed a high or low wall of separation, adjust the panel height accordingly, and explain their reasoning.
L2 Differentiate Instead of actual cases, write the following issues on the board, and have students apply them to their walls. These issues correspond to the cases above.
- School-sponsored prayer (high panel)
- State-sponsored "moment of silence" (high panel)
- State support for standardized testing in parochial schools (medium panel)
- Seasonal displays of a single religious doctrine at government buildings (high panel)
- Group prayer in State legislatures (low panel)

\section*{Answers}

Constitutional Principles It limits government interference and prevents the government from favoring one religion over another.

\section*{SUMMARIZE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE CASES}

Display the first column and row of Transparency 19C, which focuses on five Supreme Court cases that examine issues related to religion in schools. Working in groups of five, have students copy the chart into their notebooks, with each student completing Columns 2-4 for a single case. After students have completed their own rows, they should share their information with other group members.
When all groups are finished, uncover one row on the transparency at a time, and discuss each case. Ask: Which cases limit free expression of religion? (Abington, Lee, and Epperson) Which cases support the view that the wall of separation between church and state is "not impenetrable"? (Students may cite Everson and Good News Club. In both cases, the Supreme Court declared the actions of lower courts unconstitutional. ) In which cases do you agree with the ruling? Explain.
L2 LPR Differentiate Instead of displaying Transparency 19C, draw the chart on the board. Work as a class to find the specific information in the text. Review unfamiliar words. Model note-taking skills by filling in the correct answers on the board.

\section*{ANALYZE CONFLICTS OF RELIGIOUS FREEDOM}

Distribute the Chapter 19 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 86), which presents four conflicts about religious freedom. Have students work in groups to analyze the scenarios L2 ELL Differentiate Assign only Scenario D.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to determine whether or not a State law or State aid to parochial schools amounts to an establishment of religion \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is the purpose of the Lemon test?

Evolution In Epperson v. Arkansas, 1968, the Supreme Court struck down a State law forbidding the teaching of the scientific theory of evolution. The Supreme Court held that the Constitution

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE} forbids alike the preference of a religious doctrine or the prohibition of theory which is deemed antagonistic to a particular dogma. . . . 'The State has no legitimate interest in protecting any or all religions from views distasteful to them.'
-Justice Abe Fortas
The Court found a similar law to be unconstitutional in 1987. In Edwards v. Aguillard, it voided a 1981 Louisiana law that provided that whenever teachers taught the theory of evolution, they also had to offer instruction in "creation science."

Aid to Parochial Schools Most recent Establishment Clause cases have centered on this highly controversial question: What forms of State aid to parochial schools are constitutional? Several States give help to private schools, including schools run by church organizations, for transpor-organ tation, textbooks, standardized testing, and much else.

Those who support this aid argue that parochial schools enroll many students who would otherwise have to be educated at public expense. They also point out that parents have a legal right to send their children to those

Several States give aid to parochial schools for such things as transportation secular
adj. nonreligious sectarian adj. religious schools (Pierce v. Society ofSisters).

To give that right real meaning, they say, the State must give some aid to parochial schools in order to relieve parents of some of the double burden they carry because they must pay taxes to support the public schools their children do not attend. Advocates also insist that schools run by religious organizations pose no real church-state problems because they devote most of their time to secular subjects rather than to sectarian ones.

Opponents of aid to parochial schools argue that parents who send their children to parochial schools should accept the financial consequences of that choice. Many of these critics also insist that it is impossible to draw clear lines between secular and sectarian courses in parochial schools. They say that religious beliefs are bound to have an effect on the teaching of nonreligious subjects.

The Lemon Test The Court applies a threepronged standard, the Lemon test, to decide whether a State law amounts to an "establishment" of religion. That standard states: (1) a law must have a secular, not religious, purpose; (2) it must neither advance nor inhibit religion; and (3) it must not foster an "excessive entanglement" of government and religion.

The test stems from Lemon v. Kurtzman, 1971. There, the Supreme Court held that the Establishment Clause is designed to prevent three main evils: "sponsorship, financial support, and active involvement of the sovereign in religious activity." It struck down a Pennsylvania law that provided for reimbursements (money payments) to private schools to cover their costs for teachers' salaries, textbooks, and other teaching materials in nonreligious courses.

The Court held that the State's program was of direct benefit to parochial schools, and so to the churches sponsoring them. It also found that the Pennsylvania program required such close State supervision that it produced an excessive entanglement of government with religion.

More often than not, the Court has ruled unconstitutional those laws that provide some form of public aid to church-related schools. Thus, it ruled in an Ohio case that public funds can not be used to pay for such things as field trips for parochial school students, Wolman v. Walter, 1977. Nor can tax monies be used to pay any part of the salaries of parochial school teachers, even those who teach only secular courses, Grand Rapids School District v. Ball, 1985. In this Michigan case, the Supreme Court noted that while the contents of, say, a textbook used in a course might be checked easily, the way a teacher handles that course cannot. And the Court invalidated a New York law that created a small school

554 Civil Liberties: First Amendment Freedoms

\section*{Debate}

Use the statement below to initiate a debate in your class. Use the debate rules on page T25 to structure the class.
Allowing a moment of silent prayer in the public school classroom does/ does not violate the Establishment Clause.

\section*{The Lemon Test}

The courts determine whether State aid to parochial schools is constitutional by applying the Lemon test. How does the Lemon test support the Court's rulings in Wolman v. Walter and Mueller v. Allen?

district to benefit handicapped school children in a tight-knit community of Hasidic Jews, Board of Education of Kir yas Joel v. Grumet, 1994.

Some State laws have passed the Lemon test, however. The Court has held that New York can pay church-related schools what it costs them to administer the State's standardized tests, Committee for Public Education and Religious Liberty v. Regan, 1980. In a 1993 case from Arizona, Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School District, it said that the use of public money to provide an interpreter for a deaf student in a Catholic high school does not violate the Establishment Clause. The Constitution, said the Court, does not place an absolute barrier to the placing of a public employee in a religious school.

In 1973, the Court struck down a New York law that reimbursed parents for the tuition they paid to religious schools, Committee for Public Education and Religious Liberty v. Nyquist. But in Mueller v. Allen, 1983, it upheld a Minnesota tax law that really accomplishes the same end.

The Minnesota law gives parents a State income tax deduction for the costs of tuition, textbooks, and transportation. Most public school parents pay little or nothing for those items, so the law is of particular benefit to parents with children in private, mostly parochial, schools. The Court found that the law meets the Lemon test, and it relied on this point: The tax deduction is available to all parents with children in school.

The High Court went much further in Zelman v. Simmons-Harris in 2002. There, it upheld Ohio's experimental "school choice" plan. Under that plan, parents in Cleveland can receive vouchers (grants for tuition payments) from the State and use them to send their children to private schools. Nearly all families who take the vouchers send their children to parochial schools. The Court found, 5-4, that the Ohio program is not intended to promote religion but, rather, to help children from low-income families.

\section*{Other Establishment Cases}

Most church-state controversies have involved public education. Some Establishment Clause cases have arisen in other policy areas, however.

Seasonal Displays Many public organizations sponsor celebrations of the holiday season with street decorations, programs in public schools, and the like. Can these publicly sponsored observances properly include expressions of religious belief?

In Lynch v. Donnelly, 1984, the Court held that the city of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, could include the Christian nativity scene in its holiday display, which also featured nonreligious objects such as Santa's sleigh and reindeer. That ruling, however, left open this question: What about a public display made up only of a religious symbol?

The Court faced that question in 1989. In County of Allegheny v . \(A C L U\), it held that the \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Why did the Supreme Court rule in favor of a law that gave an income tax deduction for parochial tuition?

\section*{Background}

HISTORY OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY At the beginning of the Revolution in 1775, there were official, State-supported churches in at least eight former colonies. Because of growing opposition, most established churches did not survive the revolutionary period. Jefferson, with Patrick Henry and George Mason, led the effort to disestablish the Church of England in Virginia (1779). Jefferson also wrote the Virginia Statute of Religious Liberty (1786), which provided for absolute religious freedom and equality and was a precursor of the 1 st Amendment. It declared that the State could not require that any person profess any set of religious beliefs nor could it support any religious institution. An insistence upon religious freedom was also written into the Northwest Ordinance (1787). Article VI of the Constitution, written that same year, prohibited any religious test as a qualification for public office in the United States.

Tell students to go to the Interactivity for examples of the application of the Lemon test.

REVEAL THE CORE WORKSHEET SCENARIO RULINGS
Ask: How do you think the Supreme Court or lower courts might rule in these cases? Explain your reasoning. As you share the actual rulings, ask for a show of hands of those who agree or disagree with the ruling, and why.
- Scenario A is based on Engel v. Vitale, 1962. The Supreme Court ruled that the school board could not sponsor prayers and similar religious activities because they violated the Establishment Clause of the 1 st Amendment.
- Scenario B is based on Hobbie v. Unemploy ment Appeals Commission of Florida, 1987. The Court ruled in favor of the worker: "To condition the availability of benefits upon this appellant's unvillingness to violate a cardinal principle of her religious faith effectively penalizes the free exercise of her constitutional liberties."
- Scenario C is based on Doe v. Porter, 2004, argued in the 6th District Court of Appeals. The judge ruled that the school board violated the Establishment Clause by allowing the college students to conduct Bible classes during school time, and the program failed the Lemon test.
- Scenario D is based on the Eastern District of Oklahoma case Hearn, et al. v. Muskogee Public School District, 2004. The U.S. government intervened on behalf of the student, identifying the issue as a civil rights issue of equal protection. The school district agreed to revise its dress code to allow exceptions for religious reasons.

\section*{Answers}

The Lemon Test Wolman: public funding of parochial field trips violates neutrality; Mueller: no violation-tax deduction available to all parents Checkpoint The deduction is available to all parents with children in school.

\section*{CATEGORIZING FREE EXERCISE ACTIONS}

Ask students to define the Free Exercise Clause. (guarantees to each person the right to believe whatever he or she chooses in matters of religion) What does the Free Exercise Clause not protect? (religious actions that violate criminal laws, offend public morals, or threaten community safety)
Write the following scenarios on the board. Have students categorize each scenario as "Limiting Free Exercise" or "Upholding Free Exercise."
- The use of poisonous snakes is forbidden in religious rituals. (limiting) Bunn v. North Carolina, 1949
- Religious groups do not have to salute the flag. (upholding) West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 1943
- Animals may be sacrificed in church services. (upholding) Lukumi Babalu Aye v. City of Hialeah, 1993
- A permit is required to hold a religious parade on public property. (limiting) Cox v. New Hampshire, 1941
- Amish children cannot be forced to attend school beyond the 8th grade. (upholding) Wisconsin v. Yoder, 1972
- The Federal Government can draft those who have religious objections to military service. (limiting) Welsh v. United States, 1970Differentiate Have students identify the case associated with each scenario.
L2 Differentiate Ask students to select one of these scenarios and write a paragraph explaining why they agree or disagree with the Court's ruling.

\section*{Government}

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
\(\checkmark\) Checkpoint How do each of the situations described here and in the photos above exemplify the Establishment Clause?

A Christmas tree sparkles in front of the California State Capitol. The Court has ruled that "government may celebrate Christmas in some manner and form, but not in a way that endorses Christian doctrine."

Establishment Clause Gases
How Did the Court Rule?

Chaplains
A chaplain offers the opening prayer in both houses of Congress and most State legislatures (shown here). The Court has ruled that this practice, unlike organized prayers in public schools, is constitutionally permissible.
endorsement
n. approval or backing of county's seasonal display "endorsed Christian doctrine," and so violated the 1st and 14th amendments. The county courthouse had a large display celebrating the birth of Jesus and a banner proclaiming "Glory to God in the Highest."

At the same time, the Court upheld another holiday display in Pittsburgh v. ACLU. The city's display consisted of a Christmas tree, an 18 -foot menorah, and a sign declaring the city's dedication to freedom.

Chaplains Daily sessions of both houses of Congress and most of the State legislatures begin with prayer. In Congress, and in many States, chaplains paid with public funds offer the opening prayer.

The Supreme Court has ruled that this practice, unlike prayers in the public schools, is constitutionally permissible. The ruling was made in a case involving Nebraska's onehouse legislature, Marsh v. Chambers, 1983.

The Court rested its distinction between school prayers and legislative prayers on two points. First, prayers have been offered in the nation's legislative bodies "from colonial times through the founding of the Republic and ever since." Second, legislators, unlike schoolchildren, are not "susceptible to 'religious indoctrination,' or peer pressure."

The Ten Commandments Public displays of the Ten Commandments have ignited controversy in several places in recent years. The High Court decided its first case on the matter, Stone v. Graham, in 1980. It ruled on two other similar cases in 2005

In Van Orden v. Perry, the Court held that the Ten Commandments monument located on the grounds of the Texas State Capitol in Austin does not violate the 1 st and 14th amendments. The Court found that the monument (1) was erected in 1961 as part of a private group's campaign against juvenile delinquency, (2) is set among 37 other historical and cultural markers, and (3) had gone unchallenged for some 40 years. In short, the Court found the monument's overall message to be secular rather than religious and therefore acceptable.

In McCreary Countyv. ACLU ofKentucky, a differently divided 5-4 majority ruled that the display of the Ten Commandments in Kentucky county courthouses was unacceptable. They were, said the Court, an impermissible endorsement of religion by government.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Seasonal displays: Christmas trees and other secular decorations do not violate the Establishment Clause. Chaplains: Legislative sessions opening with prayer are constitutional, because legislators are not "susceptible to religious indoctrination or peer pressure. " The Ten Commandments: Rulings vary on whether the original display was set among other historical and cultural markers.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

LIMITS ON FREE EXERCISE In Oregon v. Smith, 1990, the Court upheld Oregon's denial of unemployment benefits to a man who had been fired by a private drug counseling group because he had smoked peyote in violation of the State's drug laws-even though the man had done so as part of a ceremony conducted by his Native American Church. However, Congress reacted to that decision by passing the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993. In effect, that law permits the use of peyote, and other controlled substances, when that use occurs as part of a legitimate religious ceremony. More recently, the High Court has limited free exercise at the college level. It said that a State that provides financial aid to students who attend its public colleges and universities does not have to make that help available to students who are studying to become ministers (Locke v. Davey, 2004).

A tablet of the Ten Commandments is removed from a public building. The Court has ruled differently depending on whether the display is designed to promote religion.

Framed copies of the Commandments were first posted in county courthouses in 1999. Nonreligious documents, including the Bill of Rights, were added to the displays some years later, but only after the original displays' content had been challenged. The Supreme Court found that the original displays had a clear religious purpose. The later additions were merely "a sham," an attempt to mask that unconstitutional religious purpose.

\section*{The Free Exercise Clause}

The second part of the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom is set out in the 1st Amendment's Free Exercise Clause, which guarantees to each person the right to believe whatever he or she chooses to believe in matters of religion. No law and no other action by any government can violate that absolute constitutional right. It is protected by both the 1st and the 14th amendments.

No person has an absolute right to act as he or she chooses, however. The Free Exercise Clause does not give anyone the right to violate criminal laws, offend public morals, or threaten community safety.

The Supreme Court laid down the basic shape of the Free Exercise Clause in the first case it heard on the issue, Reynolds v. United States, 1879. Reynolds, a Mormon, had two wives. That practice, polygamy, was allowed by his church but prohibited by federal law in any territory.

Reynolds was convicted under the law. On appeal, he argued that the law violated his right to the free exercise of his religious beliefs. The Supreme Court disagreed. It held that the 1st Amendment does not forbid Congress the power to punish those actions that are "violations of social duties or subversive of good order."

Limits on Free Exercise Over the years, the Court has approved many regulations of human conduct in the face of free exercise challenges. For example, it has upheld laws that require the vaccination of schoolchildren, Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 1905; laws that forbid the use of poisonous snakes in religious rites, Bunn v. North Carolina, 1949; and laws that require certain businesses to be closed on Sundays ("blue laws"), McGowan v. Maryland, 1961.

A State can require religious groups to have a permit to hold a parade on public streets, Cox v. New Hampshire, 1941; and organizations that enlist children to sell religious literature must obey child labor laws, Prince v. Massachusetts, 1944. The Federal Government can draft those who have religious objections to military service, Welsh v. United States, 1970.

The Court has also held that the Air Force can deny an Orthodox Jew the right to wear his yarmulke (skull cap) while on active duty, Goldman v. Weinberger, 1986. The U.S. Forest Service can allow private companies to build roads and cut timber in national forests that Native Americans have traditionally used for religious purposes, Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association, 1988.

Free Exercise Upheld Over time, however, the Court has found many actions by governments to be incompatible with the free exercise guarantee. The Court did so for the first time in one of the landmark Due Process cases cited earlier in this chapter, Checkpoint What acts are not protected by the Free Exercise Clause?

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

FREE EXERCISE UPHELD A State cannot forbid ministers to hold elected public offices (McDaniel v. Paty, 1978). Nor can a State deny unemployment compensation benefits to a worker who quit a job because it involved a conflict with his or her religious beliefs (Sherbert v. Verner, 1963; Thomas v. Indiana, 1981; Hobbie v. Florida, 1987; Frazee v. Illinois, 1989).

\section*{REVISITING THE ESSENTIAL QUESTION}

Write the chapter's Essential Question on the board: How can the judiciary balance individual rights with the common good? Ask students to write a paragraph applying this question to religious rights. (To protect people's right to practice their religion, the judiciary must uphold laws that ensure each individual is free to follow his or her own religious beliefs or to have no religious beliefs at all. To protect the common good, the judiciary must uphold laws that ensure that individuals practice their religions in ways that do not violate the rights of others in the community.)
2 ELL Differentiate Discuss the meaning of the term common good.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Display Transparency 19D, and discuss the three standards of the Lemon test. Then have students work in pairs to write a brief that applies the threepart Lemon test to one of the cases discussed in the text. Tell students to use the Internet and other resources to learn more about the case they have chosen. Explain that student papers should include these parts of a typical brief for appealing a case to a higher court:
1. Statement of Facts: a short summary of the facts in the case;
2. Statement of Issues: the main issues or questions in the case;
3. Arguments: a list of reasons why the actions in this case do or do not pass the Lemon test, and a list of three related cases that provide precedents for arguments;
4. Conclusion: one or two sentences that ask the Court to affirm or overturn a lower court ruling or to issue a ruling prohibiting an existing program from continuing.
L2 Differentiate Have students make a T-chart listing arguments for and against providing public aid to parochial schools.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Have students work in groups to rewrite each head and subhead in this section of the textbook as a newspaper headline-for example, "Religious Liberty Protected by 1 st Amendment. "

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint acts that violate criminal laws, offend public morals, or threaten community safety

L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 241 ).
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 88)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 89)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ Establishment Clause \\
and the "wall of \\ separation" \\
(Questions 1, 2, 3, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write ten Establishment \\ Clause cases on ten index cards. On another \\ ten cards, have them write what these cases \\ uphold or prohibit. Students should turn the \\ cards facedown and mix them up in four \\ rows of five cards each. Then have them play \\ the Memory game, matching the cases with \\ their rulings.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Understanding the \\ Free Exercise Clause \\
(Questions 1, 4, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have groups of five students write a news- \\ cast summarizing five Free Exercise Clause \\ cases. Then, in character as reporters or \\ anchors, students should answer the ques- \\ tions Who? What? When? and Where? for \\ each chase in a 2- to 3-minute news story. As \\ a conclusion, students should explain why \\ these cases are considered Free Exercise \\ cases.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Checkpoint How did the decision in Barnette differ from the decision in Gobitis?

Cantwell v. Connecticut, 1940. There, the Court struck down a law requiring a person to obtain a license before soliciting money for a religious cause. The Court reaffirmed that holding in an Ohio case, Watchtower Bible and Tract Society v. Village ofStratton, 2002.

The Supreme Court has decided a number of other cases in a similar way. Thus, Amish children cannot be forced to attend school beyond the 8th grade, because that sect's centuries-old "self-sufficient agrarian lifestyle is essential to their religious faith and is threatened by the exposure of their children to modern educational influences," Wisconsin v. Yoder, 1972. On the other hand, the Amish, who provide support for their own people, must pay Social Security taxes, as all other employers do, United States v. Lee, 1982.

The Court has often held that "only those beliefs rooted in religion are protected by the Free Exercise Clause," Sherbert v. Verner, 1963. So what beliefs are "rooted in religion"? Clearly, religions that seem strange to most Americans are as entitled to constitutional protection as are the more traditional ones. For example, in Lukumi Babalu Aye v. City of Hialeah, 1993, the High Court struck down a Florida city's ordinance that outlawed animal sacrifices as part of any church services.

The Jehovah's Witnesses have carried several important religious freedom cases to the High Court. Perhaps the stormiest controversy resulting from these cases arose out of the Witnesses' refusal to salute the flag because they see such conduct as a violation of the Bible's commandment against idolatry. In Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 1940, the Court upheld a Pennsylvania school board regulation requiring students to salute the flag each morning. Walter Gobitis instructed his children not to do so, and the school expelled them. He went to court, basing his case on the constitutional guarantee.

Gobitis finally lost in the Supreme Court, which declared that the board's rule was not an infringement of religious liberty. Rather, it found the rule a lawful attempt to promote patriotism and national unity.

Three years later, in the midst of World War II, the Court reversed that decision. In West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 1943, it held a compulsory flag-salute law unconstitutional. Justice Robert H. Jackson's words below, as well as in Section 1, are from the Court's powerful opinion in that case.

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

To believe that patriotism will not flourish if patriotic ceremonies are voluntary and spontaneous, instead of a compulsory [forced] routine, is to make an unflattering estimate of the appeal of our institutions to free minds.
—Justice Robert H. Jackson

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The Gobitis decision upheld a compulsory flag-salute law; the Barnette decision struck down a similar law.
4. What does the Free Exercise Clause guarantee?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Inferences Why do you think the doctrine of separation between church and state is a continuing issue?
6. Identify Central Issues Some critics feel that Supreme Court decisions such as Engel v. Vitale and Murray v. Curlett limit people's free exercise of religion. Do you agree or disagree?

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT} Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: How does the 1 st Amendment protect the freedom of religion?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. (a) What is the Establishment Clause? (b) How does it provide for a separation of church and state?
3. (a) What does the Lemon test evaluate? (b) How did the test originate?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Essay: Gather
Evidence Based on the topic you chose in Section 1, gather evidence chose in Section 1, gather evidence to support your position. In addition, gather information on the other sid of the issue. Make a Pro and Con chart to list arguments on both sides.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The 1 st Amendment prohibits government from establishing or aiding religion, and guarantees to each person the free exercise of religion.
2. (a) a statement in the 1 st Amendment forbidding Congress from making any law that establishes a religion (b) It protects religion from interference by government.
3. (a) The Lemon test evaluates laws that provide aid to parochial schools. (b) Lemon v. Kurtzman, 1971
4. that each person has the right to believe whatever he or she wants to in matters of religion without interference from government 5. Possible answer: The exact nature of separation cannot be pinned down, which leads to reinterpretation. In addition, religion is a sensitive topic for many Americans.
6. Students should recognize that in these two cases, the Supreme Court struck down laws requiring prayer in schools. Students should provide reasons for their opinions.

QUICK WRITE Students must gather information about both sides of the issue. Have them ask questions as they research to determine the most relevant facts and data and to anticipate opposing arguments.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{Freedom of Speech and Press}

Guiding Question
What are the limits on the guarantees of free speech and free press? Use a table like the one below to take notes on how freedom of expression is limited in the various types of speech and media.
\begin{tabular}{|l|c|}
\hline Type of Expression & Limitation \\ \hline Seditious speech & \\
\hline & \\
\hline & \\
\hline & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- libel • injunction
- slander - shield law
- sedition - symbolic
- seditious
speech speech
- picketing

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the importance of the two basic purposes served by the guarantees of free expression.
2. Summarize how the Supreme Court has limited seditious speech and obscenity.
3. Examine the issues of prior restraint and press confidentiality, and describe the limits the Court has placed on the media.
4. Define symbolic and commercial speech; describe the limits of their exercise.
Image Above: Network television news anchor Katie Couric

Think about this children's verse: "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but names will never hurt me." This rhyme says, in effect, that acts and words are separate things, and that acts can harm but words cannot.

Is that really true? Certainly not. You know that words can and do have consequences, sometimes powerful consequences. Words, spoken or written, can make you happy, sad, bored, informed, or entertained. They can also expose you to danger, deny you a job, or lead to other serious events.

\section*{Free Expression}

The guarantees of free speech and press in the 1st and 14th amendments serve two fundamentally important purposes: (1) to guarantee to each person a right of free expression, in the spoken and the written word, and by all other means of communication; and (2) to guarantee to all persons a wide-ranging discussion of public affairs. That is, the 1 st and 14th amendments give people the right to have their say and the right to hear what others have to say.

The American system of government depends on the ability of the people to make sound, reasoned judgments on matters of public concern. People can best make such judgments when they know all the facts and can hear all the available interpretations of those facts.

Keep two other points in mind: First, the guarantees of free speech and press are intended to protect the expression of unpopular views. The opinions of the majority need little or no constitutional protection. These guarantees ensure, as Justice Holmes put it, "freedom for the thought that we hate," (dissenting opinion, Schwimmer v. United States, 1929). Second, some forms of expression are not protected by the Constitution. No person has an unbridled right of free speech or free press. Reasonable restrictions can be placed on those rights. Think about Justice Holmes's comment about restricting the right to falsely shout "Fire!" in a crowded theater. Or consider this restriction: No person has the right to libel or slander another. Libel is the false and malicious use of printed words; slander is the false and malicious use of spoken words. \({ }^{5}\)

5 Both libel and slander involve the use of words maliciously-with vicious purpose; to injure a person's character or reputation; or to expose that person to public contempt, ridicule, or hatred

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • The 1 st and 1 4th Amendment guarantees of free speech and press protect a person's right to speak freely and to hear what others have to say. - The Supreme Court has limited seditious speech and obscenity but seldom allows prior restraint.
- Radio and television are subject to more regulation because they use public airwaves. - Symbolic speech and commercial speech are protected by the Constitution but can be limited under certain circumstances.

CONCEPTS: individual rights and responsibilities, limited government ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The guarantees of free speech and press are intended to protect the expression of unpopular views. - The government cannot place prior restraint on spoken or written words.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What are the limits on the guarantees of free speech and free press?
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Type of \\ Expression
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Limitation } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Seditious \\
speech
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} crime if words trigger clear and present danger of \\ criminal acts or advocate government overthrow
\end{tabular} \\ \hline Obscenity & \begin{tabular}{l} may not disseminate materials average person \\ would judge as appealing to prurient interest, depicts \\ sexual conduct dealt with in anti-boscenity law; and \\ lacks literary, artistic, political, scientific value
\end{tabular} \\ \hline Media & \begin{tabular}{l} prior restraint only in war, obscenity, or incitement \\ to violence; reporters must testify unless protected \\ by shield law
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Movies & rating system \\
\hline Radio, TV & licensing; no indecent language \\
\hline Internet & public libraries must filter access to pornographic sites \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Symbolic \\
speech
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} illegal or violent picketing; dissent that government \\ has constitutional power to restrict, restriction is \\ reasonable, and intent is not to squelch dissent
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Commercial \\
speech
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} advertising may not be false or misleading or adver- \\ tise illegal goods
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- identify the limits and protections of freedom of speech by charting restrictions on different forms of expression, analyzing prior restraint, summarizing court rulings on student speech, and interpreting political cartoons.
- identify the limits and protections of freedom of the press by researching media cases.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{GIVE A MULTIMEDIA PRESENTATION}

Before students dramatize freedom of press cases in this lesson, you may want to review tips on giving a multimedia presentation in the Skills Handbook, p. S21.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 90) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 91)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following on the board, and have students answer in their notebooks:

\section*{"One man's vulgarity is another's lyric." -Supreme Court Justice John M. Harlan}
1. What did Harlan mean by this remark?
2. How does his comment capture the fundamental issue of freedom of speech?

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER QUESTIONS}

Students should infer from the quote that defining vulgarity (obscenity) varies according to opinion. The fundamental issue is protecting the minority voice.

This World War II poster warned of the dangers of careless talk and espionage. What was the Espionage Act?

\section*{run afoul of}
adv. to come into conflict with, become entangled with insubordination
n. rebellion or disobedience

\section*{scurrilous}
adj. insulting or scandalous

Similarly, the law prohibits the use of obscene words, the printing and distributing of obscene materials, and false advertising. It also condemns the use of words to prompt others to commit a crime-for example, to riot or to attempt to overthrow the government by force.

\section*{Seditious Speech}

Sedition is the crime of attempting to overthrow the government by force or to disrupt its lawful activities by violent acts. \({ }^{6}\) Seditious speech is the advocating, or urging, of such conduct. It is not protected by the 1 st Amendment.

The Alien and Sedition Acts Congress first acted to curb opposition to government in the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798 . Those acts gave the President the power to deport

6 Espionage, sabotage, and treason are tion. Espionage is spying for a foreign power. Sabotage involves an act of destruction intended to hinder a nation's war or defense effort Treason can be committed only in times of war and can consist only of levying war against the United States or giving aid and comfort to its enemies.
undesirable aliens and made "any false, scandalous, and malicious" criticism of the government a crime. The laws were meant to stifle the opponents of President John Adams.

The Alien and Sedition Acts were undoubtedly unconstitutional, but that point was never tested in the courts. Some 25 persons were arrested for violating them; of those, 10 were convicted. The Alien and Sedition Acts expired before Thomas Jefferson became President in 1801, and he soon pardoned those who had run afoul of them.

Seditious Acts in Wartime Congress passed another sedition law during World War I, as part of the Espionage Act of 1917. That law made it a crime to encourage disloyalty, interfere with the draft, obstruct recruiting, incite insubordination in the armed forces, or hinder the sale of government bonds. The act also made it a crime to "willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States."

More than 1,000 persons were convicted for violating the Espionage Act. The constitutionality of the law was upheld several times, most importantly in Schenck v. United States, 1919. Charles Schenck, an officer of the Socialist Party, had been found guilty of obstructing the war effort. He had sent fiery leaflets to some 15,000 draftees, urging them to resist the call to military service.

The Supreme Court upheld Schenck's conviction. The case is particularly noteworthy because the Court's opinion, written by Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, established the "clear and present danger" rule:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

The question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent.
—Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes
In short, the rule says that words can be outlawed. Those who utter them can be

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 19, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 90)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 91)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 92)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 95)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 96)
L3 Quiz A (p. 97)
L2 Quiz B (p. 98)

punished if there is an immediate danger that criminal acts will follow.

The Smith Act of 1940 Congress passed the Smith Act in 1940, just over a year before the United States entered World War II. That law is still on the books. It makes it a crime for anyone to advocate the violent overthrow of the government of the United States, to distribute any material that teaches or advises violent overthrow, or to knowingly belong to any group with such an aim.

The Court upheld the Smith Act in Dennis v. United States, 1951. There, 11 Communist Party leaders had been convicted of advocating the overthrow of the Federal Government. On appeal, the Communist leaders argued that the Smith Act violated the 1 st Amendment's guarantees of freedom of speech and press. They also claimed that no actions of theirs constituted a clear and present danger to this country. The Court disagreed:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

Certainly an attempt to overthrow the government by force, even though doomed from the outset because of inadequate numbers or power of the revolutionists, is a sufficient evil for Congress to prevent. . . .
—Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson
Later, however, the Supreme Court modified the Dennis ruling in several cases. In Yates v. United States, 1957, for example, the Court overturned the Smith Act convictions of several Communist Party leaders. It held that merely to urge someone to believe something, in contrast to urging that person to do something, cannot be made illegal. In Yates and other Smith Act cases, the Court upheld the constitutionality of the law, but interpreted its provisions so that enforcing the Smith Act became practically impossible.

\section*{Obscenity}

Both federal and State laws have made the dissemination of obscene material-material that is objectionable or offensive-illegal, and the courts have generally agreed that obscenity is not protected by the 1 st and 14 th amendments. But what is the standard for obscenity? Lawmakers and judges have wrestled with that question for decades. Justice Potter Stewart once famously said that, although he could not define the term, "I know it when I see it," Jacobellis v. Ohio, 1964.

A large part of the problem in defining obscenity is that moral standards vary from time to time, place to place, and person to person. Much of what appears on television today would, in fact, have been banned as obscenity only a few decades ago.

In 1872, Congress passed the first in a series of laws that prevent the mailing of obscene matter. The current postal law, upheld in Roth v. United States, 1957, excludes "obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy" material from the mail. The Court found the law a proper exercise of the postal power (Article I, Section 8, Clause 7) and so not prohibited by the 1 st Amendment. Roth marked the Court's first attempt to define obscenity.

Today, the leading case is Miller v. Cali fornia, 1973. There the Court laid down a three-part test to determine what material is obscene and what is not. A book, film, recording, or other piece of material is legally obscene if (1) "the average person applying contemporary [local] community standards" finds that the work, taken as a whole, "appeals to the prurient interest"-that is, tends to excite lust; (2) "the work depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way," a form of sexual conduct specifically dealt with in an antiobscenity law; and (3) "the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value."

In recent years, the Court has heard only a handful of cases involving questions of obscenity. As you will see shortly, those cases have all involved the Internet.

\section*{Prior Restraint}

The Constitution allows government to punish some utterances after they are made-for example, in cases involving libel or slander, or obscenity. With almost no exceptions, however, government cannot curb ideas before they are expressed. That is, except in the most extreme situations, government cannot place

\section*{Background}

SEDItious Speech The Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798, the Sedition Act of 1918, and the Smith Act all led to heated debate on the constitutional limits of political dissent. Congress passed the Alien and Sedition Acts in 1798 at a time when Americans feared that war was about to break out between France and the United States. Most Federalists supported the act, arguing that criticism of government would endanger the nation's safety. Jeffersonians, who largely opposed the acts, believed they exceeded the powers given by the Constitution to the National Government. The Sedition Act of 1918 was passed during World War I, when there was small but vocal opposition to U.S. participation in the war. The Smith Act was passed soon after World War II began in Europe. Federal prosecutors first applied this law to members of the Socialist Workers Party and then to Communist Party members.

\section*{CHART RESTRICTIONS ON SPEECH}

Ask: What forms of speech are not protected by the 1 st Amendment? (libel, slander, seditious speech, obscene words, and some symbolic and commercial speech) On the board, draw a chart like the one below. Have students complete it by defining the types of speech and their restrictions.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Type of Speech \\
(definition)
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Restrictions } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} seditious speech \\ (advocating the \\ overthrow of gov- \\ ernment by force \\
or the disruption of \\ its lawful activities \\
by violent acts)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Schenck v. United States: seditious words can \\ be outlawed if they present a "clear and present \\ danger" of criminal acts; Smith Act made it \\ a crime to advocate the overthrow of the U.S. \\ government to distribute material that teaches \\ or advises violent overthrow, or to knowingly \\ belong to any group with this aim \end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} obscenity \\ (objectionable or \\ offensive words or \\ materials)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Mailing of obscene materials prohibited; Miller v. \\ California: laid down three-part test to determine \\ what is and is not obscenity; public libraries \\ that receive federal aid must block computer \\ access to pornographic sites; FCC bans indecent \\ language on radio and network TV
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} symbolic speech \\ (expression by \\ conduct)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Picketing "set in background of violence" is \\ prohibited; U.S. v. O Brien: cannot burn draft \\ cards; Virginia v. Black: cannot burn a cross as \\ an act of intimidation
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
commercial speech \\ (business purposes, \\
advertising)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
False and misleading advertising is prohibited, \\ as is advertising for illegal goods and services; \\ tobacco ads on radio and TV are prohibited
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint illegal to advocate violent overthrow of government, distribute materials teaching or advising violent overthrow, or knowingly belong to a group with such an aim

\section*{ANALYZE PRIOR RESTRAINT}

Read aloud this quote from Thomas Jefferson:
"We have nothing to fear from the demoralizing reasonings of some, if others are left free to demonstrate their errors and especially when the law stands ready to punish the first criminal act produced by the false reasonings; these are safer corrections than the conscience of the judge. " (This quote also appears in the Document-Based Assessment at the end of Chapter 19.)
Then ask students to infer answers to the following questions: Does Jefferson believe in prior restraint of unpopular views or words that incite violence? (No; he says there is nothing to fear from "demoralizing reasonings. ") What two actions does Jefferson believe will counteract unpopular opinions? (others who are also free to voice their opinions, and laws that will punish criminal acts that arise from the speech) Do you agree with Jefferson's quote? Why or why not? What if the "demoralizing reasoning" incites people to commit acts of terrorism? Should we wait for the first criminal act to occur, or should the speaker be censored? Explain.
L2 ELL Differentiate Before reading the passage, review the meaning of prior restraint by asking students to predict what it means based on the meaning of each word.
L2 LPR Differentiate Have students review the text material under "Prior Restraint" and point out the exceptions to prior restraint on publications. (such extreme situations as wartime or when a publication is obscene or incites its readers to acts of violence)

\section*{What prior restraints has the Court approved?} (cases regarding political literature on military bases, publications about the CIA, certain publications in prisons, and student speech) Do you think Jefferson would agree with these examples of prior restraint? Why or why not?
L4 Differentiate To have students realize the importance of no prior restraint in a democracy, ask them to research control of the press in Nazi Germany or the Soviet Union. Have them compare government censorship and propaganda with the ability of Americans to speak openly about government actions. Ask students to use this information to write a poem or rap comparing speech in a totalitarian versus democratic society.

\section*{Answers}

Supreme Court at a Glance The ruling in the case made it illegal for public officials to stop the publication of outrageous or insulting information.

any prior restraint on written or spoken expression.

The concept of prior restraint is basic to the meaning of the 1 st and 14 th amendment protections of freedom of expression. Near v. Minnesota, 1931, is a leading case in point. There, the Supreme Court struck down a State law that allowed local public officials to prevent the publication of any "malicious, scandalous, and defamatory" periodical. Acting under that law, a local court had issued an order forbidding the publication of the Saturday Press. That Minneapolis newspaper had published a series of articles charging public corruption and attacking local officials as "grafters" and "Jewish gangsters."

The Court held that the guarantee of a free press does not allow a prior restraint on publication-except in such extreme situations as wartime, or when a publication is obscene or incites its readers to acts of violence. Even "miscreant purveyors of scandal" and anti-Semitism are entitled to constitutional protection, said the Court.

The Constitution does not forbid any and all forms of prior censorship, but "any prior restraint on expression comes to this Court with a 'heavy presumption' against its constitutional validity," Nebraska Press Association v. Stuart, 1976. \({ }^{7}\) The Court has used that general rule several times-for example, in the famous Pentagon Papers Case, New York Times v. United States, 1971.

In that case, several newspapers had obtained copies of a set of classified documents, widelyknownasthePentagon Papers. Officially titled History of U.S. DecisionMaking Process on Viet Nam Policy, those documents had been stolen from the Defense Department and then leaked to the press.

The Nixon administration sought an injunction (a court order) to bar their publication, arguing that national security was at stake and the documents (government property) had been stolen. The newspaper argued the "public right to know," and it insisted that the 1 st Amendment protected its right to publish the papers. The Court found that the government had not shown that printing the documents would endanger the nation's security. The government, in effect, had not overcome the "heavy presumption" against prior censorship.

The few prior restraints the Supreme Court has approved include:
- regulations prohibiting the distribution of political literature on military bases without the approval of military authorities, Greer v. Spock, 1976;
- a Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) rule that agents must never publish anything about the agency without the CIA's express permission, Snepp v. United States, 1980;
- a federal prison rule that allows officials to prevent an inmate from receiving publications considered "detrimental to the security, good order, or discipline" of the prison, Thornburgh v. Abbott, 1989.

7 There, a State judge had ordered the media not to report certain details of a murder trial. The Court found the judge's gas order to be unconstitutional.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

FIGHTING WORDS "Fighting words" are not protected by the 1 st Amendment. In Chaplinksky v. New Hampshire, 1942, the Supreme Court held: "There are certain well defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem. These include the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or 'fighting' words-those which, by their very utterance, inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. . . . Resort to epithets or personal abuse is not in any proper sense communication of information or opinion safeguarded by the Constitution, and its punishment as a criminal act would raise no question under that instrument."

The Court has also said that public school officials have a broad power to censor school newspapers, plays, and other "school-sponsored expressive activities." It did so in a case from Missouri, Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier, 1988. There, the principal of a St. Louis high school had prohibited the publication of a series of articles written by student reporters for their school's paper. Those articles explored the impact that various events, among them pregnancy and parents' divorces, can have on teenagers. Three students sued, but they finally lost their case when the High Court held that school administrators can exercise "editorial control over the style and content of student speech in school-sponsored expressive activities so long as their actions are reasonably related to legitimate pedagogical concerns."

\section*{The Media}

The 1st Amendment stands as a monument to the central importance of the media in a free society. That raises this question: To what extent can the media-whether print, radio, television, or the Internet-be regulated by government?

Confidentiality Can news reporters be forced to testify before a grand jury in court or before a legislative committee? Can those government bodies require journalists to name their sources and reveal other confidential information? Many reporters and news organizations insist that they must have the right to refuse to testify in order to protect their sources. They argue that without this right they cannot assure confidentiality, and therefore many sources will not reveal important, sensitive information.

Both State and federal courts have generally rejected the news media argument. In recent years, several reporters have refused to obey court orders directing them to give information, and they have gone to jail, thus testifying to the importance of these issues.

In the leading case, Branzburg v. Hayes, 1972, the Supreme Court held that reporters, "like other citizens, [must] respond to relevant questions put to them in the course of a valid grand jury investigation or criminal trial." If the media are to receive any special exemptions, said the Court, they must come from Congress and the State legislatures.

To date, Congress has not acted on the Court's suggestion, but some 30 States have passed so-called shield laws. These laws give reporters some protection against having to disclose their sources or reveal other confidential information in legal proceedings in those States.

Motion Pictures The Supreme Court took its first look at motion pictures early in the history of the movie industry. In 1915, in Mutual Film Corporation v. Ohio, the Court upheld a State law that barred the showing of any film that was not of a "moral, educational, or amusing and harmless character." The Court declared that "the exhibition of moving pictures is a business, pure and simple," and "not . . part of the press of the country." With that decision, nearly every State and thousands of communities set up movie review (really movie censorship) programs.

The Court reversed itself in 1952, however. In Burstyn v. Wilson, a New York censorship case, it found that "liberty of expression by means of motion pictures is guaranteed by the 1 st and 14 th amendments." Still, the Court has never held that the Constitution grants the film industry the same level of protection against prior restraint that it gives to newspapers. In fact, it has upheld a requirement that films be submitted to official censors so long as those censors are required to act reasonably and their decisions are subject to speedy court review, Freedman v. Maryland, 1965.

Very few of the once-common movie review boards still exist. Most people now rely on the film industry's own rating system and on the comments of movie critics to guide their viewing choices.

Radio and Television Both radio and television broadcasting are subject to extensive federal regulation. Most of this regulation is based on the often-amended Federal Communications Act of 1934, which is administered by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). As the Supreme Court noted in

\section*{EXPLAIN RESTRICTIONS ON SCHOOL SPEECH}

The Supreme Court and lower courts have ruled that student rights are limited by the "special characteristics of the school environment." Ask: What might these "special characteristics" be? (atmosphere in the school; impact of students' actions on normal school routine; effects of student speech on classroom instruction and other activities in the school building; impact of students' actions on the rights of others) Explain that school officials must be able to show that student conduct or opinions have disrupted class work, led to disorder in the school, or restricted the rights of other students. Ask: Do these special characteristics support the chapter Essential Question: How can the judiciary balance individual rights with the common good?

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 19 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 92), which analyzes cases related to freedom of speech in schools. Organize students into six groups, and assign each group a different case. Groups can use the Jigsaw strategy (p. T27) to analyze their cases and share their information and opinions with the class.

1 L2 Differentiate Choose one of the Core Worksheet cases to read aloud. State the facts in the case, but do not indicate how the courts ruled. Ask the class if they think the ruling will favor the school district or the student, and why.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint School officials may exercise editorial control over style and content of student speech in school-sponsored expressive activities reasonably related to pedagogical concerns.

\section*{RECOGNIZE LIMITS AND PROTECTIONS OF THE MEDIA}

Ask students to raise their hands if they think the following statements are TRUE:
- Public officials are allowed to prevent the publication of malicious and defamatory periodicals. (false; Near v. Minnesota)
- Reporters are protected against having to reveal their sources during testimony. (false; Branzburg v. Hayes)
- Any radio station that allows a personal attack on a public figure must alert that person about the attack and allow him or her to respond to the attack at no charge. (true; Red Lion Broadcasting Co., Inc. v. FCC)
- No Internet site may knowingly transmit obscene or indecent speech or images to any person under age 18. (false; Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union)
- The government has the right to prevent publication of material that it asserts to be harmful to national security. (false; New York Times v. United States)
- Newspapers may advertise abortion services. (true; Bigelow v. Virginia)
- Newspapers may not print State liquor prices. (false; 44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island)
Ask: Were you surprised by any of these rulings? With which rulings did you agree? Disagree? Why?

\section*{DRAMATIZE FREEDOM OF PRESS CASES}

Organize students into five groups: three newspaper groups, one radio and television group, and one Internet group. Assign each group one of the first five Supreme Court cases listed above that pertains to its particular medium. Each group should research details of its case and the majority, concurring, and dissenting opinions of the Court. Then have each group present its information to the rest of the class in the form of its medium; for example, the three groups researching newspaper issues should present their cases in newspaper form. The radio group could present its information in an "on-air" newscast. The Internet group could construct a bulletin board display of its home page and "link" pages that describe the aspects of its case.

\section*{Answers}

Freedoms of Speech and Press because they both use public airwaves

How Government Works
Freedoms of Speech and Press
Rules of the Road The 1 st Amendment stands as a monument to the central importance of free speech and the media in a free society. Various forms of speech are regulated by government, however. Why are radio stations and network television subjected to wide-ranging federal regulation?

The Supreme Court has ruled that school administrators can exercise "editorial control over the style and content of student speech in school-sponsored expressive activities.

The Federal Communications Act, administered by the FCC, bans the use of indecent language on the radio and on network television, and may deny violators a renewal of their operating licenses.

The Children's Internet Protection Act (CIPA) requires public libraries that receive federal money to use filters to block their computers' access to pornographic sites on the Internet.

FCC v. Pacifca Foundation, 1978: "Of all forms of communication, broadcasting has the most limited 1st Amendment protection."

The Court has several times upheld this wide-ranging federal regulation as a proper exercise of the commerce power. Unlike newspapers and other print media, radio and television use the public's property-the public airwaves-to distribute their materials. They have no right to use the limited broadcast frequencies without the public's permission in the form of a proper license, said the Court in National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 1943.

The Court has regularly rejected the argument that the 1 st Amendment prohibits such regulations. Instead, it has said that regulation of this industry implements the constitutional guarantee. In Red Lion Broadcasting Co. v. FCC, 1969, the Court held that there is no "unabridgeable 1st Amendment right to broadcast comparable to the right of every individual to speak, write, or publish." However, "this is not to say that the 1 st Amendment is irrelevant to public broadcasting. ... It is the right of the viewers and the listeners, not the right of the broadcasters . . ."

The Federal Communications Act forbids prior censorship-and so the FCC cannot censor the content of programs before they are broadcast. However, the law does permit the FCC to ban the use of indecent language, and the Court has held that it can take violations of that ban into account when a station applies for the renewal of its operating license, FCC v. Paci fca Foundation, 1978.

In several recent decisions, the Supreme Court has given cable television somewhat broader 1st Amendment freedoms than those enjoyed by traditional network television. United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group, 2000, is fairly typical. There, the Court struck down an attempt by Congress to force many cable systems to limit sexually explicit

564 Civil Liberties: First Amendment Freedoms

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Have students read the Alien and Sedition Acts, as well as the Smith Act of 1940. Have students debate whether laws like these should be strengthened in times of war and what effects such laws would have on society.

To see this lesson plan, go to channels to late night hours. The Court agreed that shielding children from such programming is a worthy goal; nevertheless, it found the 1996 law to be a violation of the 1 st Amendment.

The Internet The Internet has generated only a handful of Supreme Court casesand each of them has involved attempts by Congress to regulate access to pornographic matter on the World Wide Web. Congress first attempted to protect minors from that material in the Communications Decency Act of 1996. That law made it a crime to "knowingly" transmit any "obscene or indecent" speech or image that is "patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards" to any person under the age of 18 .

The Court promptly declared that law unconstitutional in Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union, 1997. A majority of the justices found that the words "indecent" and "patently offensive" were too vague and that the overall effect of that law was to deny to adults materials that are protected by the 1 st Amendment. "Regardless of the strength of the government's interest in protecting children," said the Court, "the level of discourse reaching a mailbox cannot be limited to that which would be suitable for a sandbox."

The Supreme Court did uphold an act of Congress dealing with pornography, the Internet, and public libraries in United States v. American Library Association, 2003. There, a majority could find no constitutional fault in the Children's Internet Protection Act (CIPA) of 2002. That law provides that those public libraries that receive federal money-nearly all of them do-must use filters to block their computers' access to pornographic sites on the Internet.

\section*{Symbolic Speech}

Most people tend to also communicate ideas by their conduct, by the way they do a particular thing. Thus, a person can "say" something with a facial expression or a shrug of the shoulders, or by carrying a sign or wearing an armband. This expression by conduct is known as symbolic speech.

Clearly, not all conduct amounts to symbolic speech. If it did, murder or robbery or any other crime could be excused on grounds that the person who committed the act meant to say something by doing so.

Just as clearly, however, some conduct does express opinion. Take picketing in a labor dispute as an example. Picketing involves the patrolling of a business site by workers who are on strike. By their conduct, picketers attempt to inform the public of the controversy and to persuade others not to deal with the firm involved. Picketing is, then, a form of expression. If peaceful, it is protected by the 1 st and 14 th amendments.

The leading case on the point is Thornhill v. Alabama, 1940. There, the Court struck down a State law that made it a crime to loiter about or to picket a place of business in order to influence others not to trade or work there. Picketing that is "set in a background of violence," however, can be prevented. Even peaceful picketing can be restricted if it is
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)

What is symbolic speech?

\section*{ANALYZE LIMITATIONS ON MEDIA}

Display Transparency 19E. Ask: Which type of speech is most limited? (student speech) What regulatory agency functions as a watchdog over radio and network television? (Federal Communications Commission) What is the purpose of the Children's Internet Protection Act of 2002?
(to block children's access to Internet pornographic sites at public libraries) Which types of media have little or no prior restraint? (newspapers and other print media; the Internet)

\section*{INTERPRET SYMBOLIC SPEECH}

Ask students for examples of symbolic speech, and write them on the board. (textbook examples include picketing, burning draft cards, burning a cross, wearing armbands to protest war, flag burning) Which of these forms of symbolic speech are not protected by the 1st Amendment? (picketing if it is violent, burning draft cards, and burning a cross if it is used to intimidate a person) Lead to a discussion of whether students think burning the U.S. flag should be protected by the 1 st Amendment. Display Transparency 19 . What opinion does Cartoon 1 convey? (Cartoon 1 supports flag burning as protected free speech. The cartoonist uses satire to point out that by calling for a ban on flag burning, the Congressman is actually attacking the 1 st Amendment.) What opinion does Cartoon 2 display? (Cartoon 2 is similar to Cartoon 1 in its satire. It, too, calls for a ban on burning the American flag and shows the man is ready to attack the First Amendment.)
L3 Differentiate Create a classroom Blogger Bulletin Board related to this issue. Post the following statement on the bulletin board: "The United States needs a constitutional amendment making the burning of a U.S. flag a crime. " Choose two students with opposing points of view to post opinions about this statement on the bulletin board. Encourage other students to write their own reactions or responses to the original question or student responses on note cards and post them on the board.
Tell students to go to the Interactivity for more examples of the freedoms of speech and press.

\section*{Background}

CAMPAIGN FINANCE AS "SPEECH" In Buckley v. Valeo, 1976, the Court found that campaign contributions are "a symbolic expression of support" for candidates, and therefore the making of those contributions is entitled to constitutional protection. Both federal and State laws regulate campaign contributions, but the fact that in politics "money is speech" greatly complicates the whole matter of campaign finance regulation.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint expression by conduct, such as carrying a sign, wearing an armband, or using facial expressions

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students debate the following statement: "Violence on television and in movies is a threat to society and should be censored. " Both sides should research statistics and information supporting or opposing the statement. (If pressed for time, have each student write a paragraph as homework, agreeing or disagreeing with the statement, and explaining why.)
L2 Differentiate Have students work in groups to make a list of rules for speech on the Internet. The class might be divided into such topics as regulation of libel, seditious speech, and obscenity. Others might prepare rules about prior restraint and whether some Web sites should be completely censored. Then have students decide how these rules might be enforced.
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students complete the Chapter 19 Extend Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 96). They will use library resources or the Internet to research the school freedom of speech and press case Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier, 1988. In this case, the Supreme Court ruled that school officials may censor school-sponsored newspapers because they are part of the school curriculum rather than a forum for public expression. The case is often cited as precedent in other cases involving the 1 st Amendment rights of students.
L2 Differentiate Have students complete the Chapter 19 Extend Activity entitled "Freedom of the Press" (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 96).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Have students identify what they believe are the three most important cases that have guaranteed freedom of speech to Americans. Ask them to work in pairs to identify the constitutional issue of each case and then summarize the Court's rulings. When finished, students should explain why they gave these cases most-important status.
L4 Restate the chapter Essential Question: How can the judiciary balance individual rights with the common good? Do students believe that the Supreme Court rulings discussed in this section have done a fair job of balancing rights with the common good? Have students draw a sketch of "blind justice," with one of her scales labeled "individual rights" and the other labeled "common good." Students should list guarantees of speech and press in the appropriate scale.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint if the object of the protest is within the constitutional powers of government, the restriction is no greater than necessary in the circumstances, and the government's interest in the matter is not to squelch dissent \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) When are acts of dissent by conduct punished?
squelch
v. to silence or smother

The Supreme Court ruled in favor of John and Mary Beth Tinker (shown here), empha(shown here), empha, sizing that students 1 st Amendment rights jusuld not be abridged just because students are on school property. \({ }^{\text {V }}\) conducted for an illegal purpose-for example, forcing someone to do something that is itself illegal.

Other Symbolic Speech Cases The Court has been sympathetic to the symbolic speech argument, but it has not given blanket 1st Amendment protection to that means of expression. Note these cases:

United States v. O'Brien, 1968, involved four young men who had burned their draft cards to protest the war in Vietnam. A court convicted them of violating a federal law that makes that act a crime. O'Brien appealed, arguing that the 1 st Amendment protects "all modes of communication of ideas by conduct." The Supreme Court disagreed, saying: "We cannot accept the view that an apparently limitless variety of conduct can be labeled 'speech' whenever the person engaging in the conduct intends thereby to express an idea."

The Court also held that acts of dissent by conduct can be punished if. (1) the object of the protest is within the constitutional powers of the government; (2) whatever restriction is placed on expression is no greater than necessary in the circumstances; and (3) the government's real interest in the matter is not to squelch dissent.

Using that three-part test, the Court has sometimes denied claims of symbolic speech. Thus, in Virginia v. Black, 2003, it upheld a State law that prohibits the burning of a cross as an act of intimidation, a threat that can make a person fear for his safety. The Court also made this point: Those who burn crosses at rallies or parades as acts of political expression (acts not aimed at a particular person) cannot be prosecuted under the law.

Tinker v. Des Moines School District, 1969, on the other hand, is one of several cases in which the Court has come down on the side of symbolic speech. In Tinker, several students who had worn black armbands to school to dramatize their opposition to the war in Vietnam had been suspended by the district.

The Court found that school officials had overstepped their authority and violated the students' right to free expression. Said the Court: "It can hardly be argued that either students or teachers shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate."8

The Court recognized campaign donations as protected speech in Buckley v. Valeo, 1976. See Chapter 7 to learn more.

Flag Burning A sharply divided Court has twice held that burning the American flag as an act of political protest is expressive conduct protected by the 1st and 14th amendments. In Texas v. Johnson, 1989, a 5-4 majority ruled that State authorities had violated a protester's rights by prosecuting him under a law that forbids the "desecration of a venerated object." Johnson had set fire to an American flag during an anti-Reagan demonstration at the Republican National Convention in Dallas in 1984. Said the Court:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

If there is a bedrock principle underlying the 1 st Amendment, it is that the government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the 8 Do not read too much into this, for the Court noted thatit "has repeatedly emphasized the need for affirming the comprehenrepeatedly emplatized he need for afiriming neic comprenensive authority of the States and of school officials, consistent with tundamental constitutional safeguards, to prescribe and Win tundamentar conssiutional sateguards, to torescribe and control conduct in the schools." The fact that in Tinker the students' conduct did not cause a substantial dissuption of normal school activites was an important factor in the Court's decision.

\section*{Background}
commercial speech One of the Court's first commercial speech cases had an interesting twist. In Wooleyv. Maynard, 1977, the Court held that a State cannot force its citizens to act as "mobile billboards." At least, a State cannot do so when the words used conflict with its citizens' religious or moral beliefs. The Maynards, who were Jehovah's Witnesses, objected to the New Hampshire State motto on their automobile license plates. The words Live Free or Die clashed with their belief in everlasting life, and so they covered those words with tape. For this, Maynard was arrested three times. On appeal, the Supreme Court sided with Maynard.
idea itself offensive. . . . We do not consecrate the flag by punishing its desecration, for in doing so we dilute the freedom that this cherished emblem represents.

The Supreme Court's decision in Jha son set off a firestorm of criticism around the country and prompted Congress to pass the Flag Protection Act of 1989. It, too, was struck down by the Court, 5-4, in United States v. Eichman, 1990. The Court based its decision on the same grounds as those set out a year earlier in Johnson. Since Johnson and Eichman, Congress has rejected several attempts to propose a constitutional amendment to outlaw flag burning.

\section*{Commercial Speech}

Commercial speech is speech for business purposes; the term refers most often to advertising. Until the mid-1970s, it was thought that the 1 st and 14th amendments did not protect such speech. In Bigelow v. Virginia, 1975, however, the Court held unconstitutional a State law that prohibited the newspaper advertising of abortion services. The following year, in Virginia State Board of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, it struck down another Virginia law forbidding the advertisement of prescription drug prices.

Not all commercial speech is protected, however. Government can and does prohibit false and misleading advertisements, and the advertising of illegal goods or services.

In fact, government can even forbid advertising that is neither false nor misleading. In 1970, Congress banned cigarette ads on radio and television. In 1986, it extended the ban to include chewing tobacco and snuff. In most of its commercial speech cases, the Court has struck down arbitrary restrictions on advertising. In 44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 1996, the Court voided a State law that prohibited ads in which liquor prices were listed. In Greater New Orleans Broadcasting Association v. United States, 1999, it struck down a federal law that prohibited casino advertising on radio or television.

More recently, the Court dealt with limits on smokeless tobacco and cigar advertising. Massachusetts had barred outdoor ads for these commodities within 1,000 feet of any school or playground. The Court held that the limit was a violation of the 1 st and 14th amendments' guarantee of free speech, P. Lorillard Co. v. Reilly, 2001.

Essential Questions
To continue to build a Journal
esponse to the chapter
Essential Question, go to your
Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: What are the limits on the guarantees of free speech and free press?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What is libel? (b) What is slander? How do the two differ?
3. Why does the government restrict seditious speech?
4. (a) What are shield laws? (b) Why have some States passed these laws?

Critical Thinking
5. Draw Inferences What do you think are the advantages and disadvantages of a free press?
6. Identify Central Issues The Constitution makes a particular effort to protect the expression of unpopular views. (a) Why is this important? (b) Do you think even racist or sexist expressions should be protected? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Essay: Develop a
Thesis Based on the topic you chose in Section 1 and the evidence you gathered in Section 2, identify your argument in a thesis statement, which expresses the main idea of your persuasive essay. All information that follows should support or elaborate on this statement.

L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 241 ).

Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 97)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 98)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Freedom of speech \\ limits and protections \\
(Questions 1, 2, 3, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make a poster titled "Free \\ Speech." Underneath this titte, ask them to \\ write two subtitles: "Know Your Rights" and \\ "Know Your Limits." Then ask them to list or \\ illustrate the erights and limits on freedom of \\ speech. Students should also include limits \\ that are particular to student speech.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Freedom of press \\
limits and protections \\
(Questions 1, 4, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students draw a web diagram with \\ "Freedom of the Press" in the center oval. \\
In the outer ovals, ask students to identify \\ at least five facts (cases, issues, examples) \\ that protect freedom of the press and at \\ least three facts (exceptions) that allow prior \\ restraint on publications.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint An important principle that flag burning represents is freedom of speech, even if offensive. If flag burning is punished, then the principle of free speech for which it stands is undercut.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Libel, slander, seditious speech, words prompting others to commit a crime, disseminating obscene materials, illegal or violent picketing, some forms of dissent, false and misleading advertising, and advertising illegal goods are not protected by the 1 st Amendment. The FCC regulates radio and television.
2. (a) false and malicious use of printed words
(b) false and malicious use of spoken words; libel is printed, whereas slander is spoken
3. The Supreme Court determined that seditious speech could provide a "clear and present danger" that criminal acts will follow.
4. (a) laws that give reporters some protection against having to disclose their sources or reveal other confidential information in legal proceedings (b) to assure confidentiality so that sources will reveal vital information
5. Possible answers: advantages: citizens have the right to free expression and to read what others have to say; minority opinions can be heard; a free press can act as a watchdog on conduct in government and business; people can be more fully informed; disadvantages: some printed material might be offensive or reveal potentially damaging information
6. (a) Protecting unpopular views means that every citizen has a voice and can participate in public affairs. (b) Some students might argue that even offensive speech is protected. Others might say that sexist and racist speech is intimidating and should be limited.
QUICK WRITE Have students review the effectiveness of their thesis statements with these questions: What detail does the statement provide? What does it prompt readers to ask?

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will research an issue and participate in a classroom debate.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{READ AND BRAINSTORM}

Have students read the feature. Brainstorm possible responses to the issue of extending the school year.

\section*{WRITE SPEECH FOR PUBLIC DEBATE}

Pose this issue to students for debate: Song lyrics promoting violence or defaming women should NOT be protected by the 1st Amendment. Have students research the issue and write a speech. Explain that speeches should begin with a position statement for or against followed by evidence. Students must also address objections to their arguments. Tell them to bring up points that seem to be against their views, and then explain why those points are wrong. Students should conclude their speeches by forcefully restating their position.

\section*{DELIVER PUBLIC DEB ATE SPEECHES}

Have students deliver one-minute speeches. Provide these tips for effective public speaking: (1) Raise and lower your voice to stress key points. (2) Make eye contact with the audience. (3) Use gestures to emphasize main points. (4) Avoid distracting gestures, looking down, or saying "um," "like," and "you know."

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Peer-assess speeches using this checklist:
__ Had strong opening position statement
Included supporting arguments
_ Provided arguments against other positionsUsed facts from research in argumentsSummarized position in a logical conclusion
__ Modulated tone, pitch, and volume __ Engaged audience with eye contact

\section*{Answers}
1. State Department of Education, local school board, superintendent, principal, teachers
2. short-term goals: persuading others to join the cause, or a promise by a public official to investigate the matter; possible long-term goals: progress on a public issue, identifying problems and solutions, learning to speak well in public
3. Students should include a position statement, arguments for and against, and a conclusion.

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Participate in Public Debate. It includes a lesson plan for you and eleven tent cards and two posters for students. Each tent card describes characteristics of a participant in a town meeting about an issue illustrated in the posters. While eleven students play roles in the town meeting debate, the remaining students serve as interested observers. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on How to Participate in Public Debate at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{section 4}

\section*{Freedom of Assembly and Petition}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How has the Supreme Court ruled on assembly and petition cases? Use a table like the one below to take notes on important Supreme Court cases involving freedom of assembly.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline Case & Issue & Ruling \\
\hline & & \\
\hline & & \\
\hline & & \\
\hline & & \\
\hline & & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- assemble - content neutr - civil - right of disobedience association

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the Constitution's guarantees of assembly and petition
2. Summarize how government can limit the time, place, and manner of assembly.
3. Compare and contrast the freedom-of-assembly issues that arise on public versus private property.
4. Explore how the Supreme Court has interpreted freedom of association.

Image Above: The 1st Amendment protects the people's right to protest peaceably.

Anoisy street demonstration by gay rights activists or neo-Nazis; a candlelight vigil by opponents of the death penalty; pro-life supporters picketing an abortion clinic; pro-choice supporters on the steps of the State capitol. these are all everyday examples of freedom of assembly and petition.

\section*{The Constitution's Guarantees}

The 1st Amendment guarantees "the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." The 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause also protects those rights of assembly and petition against actions by the States or their local governments, DeJonge v. Oregon, 1937.

The Constitution protects the right of the people to assemble-to gather with one another-to express their views. It protects their right to organize to influence public policy, whether in political parties, interest groups, or other organizations. It also protects the people's right to bring their views to the attention of public officials by such varied means as written petitions, letters, or advertisements; lobbying; and parades or marches.

Notice, however, that the 1st and 14th amendments protect the rights of peaceable assembly and petition. The Constitution does not give to anyone the right to incite others to violence, block a public street, close a school, or otherwise endanger life, property, or public safety.

Note this important point as well: A significant part of the history of this country can be told in terms of civil disobedience. That is to say that much of our history has been built out of incidents in which people have purposely violated the law-nonviolently, but nonetheless deliberately, as a means of expressing their opposition to some particular law or public policy.

Do the 1 st and 14 th amendment guarantees of freedom of assembly and petition include a right of civil disobedience? That thorny question cannot be answered absolutely or without qualification because of the very nature of civil disobedience: those acts are expressions of opinion on some public matter.

Still, courts have consistently held that, as a general rule, civil disobedience is not a constitutionally protected right. Those who choose to take part

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How has the Supreme Court ruled on assembly and petition cases?
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Case } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Issue } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Ruling } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Delonge v. \\
Oregon
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Do assembly and petition \\ apply to State govern- \\ ments?
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} yes, by Due Process \\
Clause
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Gregory v. \\
Chicago
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} demonstrators arrested; \\ bystanders caused dis- \\ order
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} convictions over- \\ turned; demonstrators \\ acted peacefully
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Coxv. \\
Louisiana
\end{tabular} & parade near courthouse & \begin{tabular}{l} banned if intended to \\ influence court
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Coates v. \\
Cincinnati
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} groups gathering on street \\ were annoying
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} struck down law due \\ to vague wording
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Forsyth County \\
venationalist \\
Movement
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Can assembly be regulated \\ based on what might be \\ said there?
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} no-not content \\ neutral
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- distinguish the conflicting but essential nature of the right to assemble by participating in scenarios about freedom of assembly and petition conflicts.
- understand the restrictions on assembly and petition by identifying and applying time-place-manner regulations and content neutrality to assembly situations.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

To teach the skill of drawing inferences and conclusions, have students read Draw Inferences and Conclusions in the Skills Handbook, p. S19. Then have them do the Bellringer activity.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 99) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 100)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 19G. Have students read the quote and answer the questions in their notebooks.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER RESPONSES}

Discuss students' answers to the Bellringer questions. (1. Demonstrations may disrupt daily routines and individual freedoms. 2. It may cause inconveniences, but limiting the right to assemble would be harmful to democracy.)

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Display Transparency 19H. Have students complete these statements:
- Freedom of assembly gives me the right to...
- Freedom of assembly does not give me the right to...
Responses should indicate that freedom of assembly gives people the right to come together in public places to express their opinions on issues and encourage others to join them. This right is limited by time-place-manner regulations, public safety concerns, and public versus private property restrictions. Ask: What are some examples of assembly? (demonstration or march, picketing, prayer vigil) What are the advantages of joining a group to protest a policy or express an opinion? (A group has more clout than an individual protester. A large group is also more likely to get media coverage. )
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
How has the Supreme Court limited the time, place, and manner of assembly?
inherent
adj. natural to or basic in such activities are often aware of that fact, and they are usually willing to accept the consequences of their conduct.

\section*{Time-Place-Manner Rules}

Government can make and enforce reasonable rules covering the time, place, and manner of assemblies. Thus, in Grayned v. City of Rock ford, 1972, the Court upheld a city ordinance that prohibits making a noise or any other diversion near a school if that action has a disruptive effect on school activities. It has also upheld a State law that forbids parades near a courthouse when they are intended to influence court proceedings, Cox v. Louisiana, 1965.

Rules for keeping the public peace must be more than just reasonable, however. They must also be precisely drawn and fairly administered. In Coates v. Cincinnati, 1971, the Court struck down a city ordinance that made it a crime for "three or more persons to assemble" on a sidewalk or street corner "and there conduct themselves in a manner annoying to persons passing by, or occupants of adjacent buildings." The Court found the wording of the ordinance much too vague and therefore unconstitutional.

Government's rules must be content neutral. That is, although government can regulate assemblies on the basis of time, place, and manner, it cannot regulate gatherings on the basis of what might be said there. Thus, in Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 1992, the Court threw out a Georgia county's ordinance that levied a fee of up to \($ 1,000\) for public demonstrations.

The law was contested by a white supremacist group seeking to protest the creation of a holiday to honor Martin Luther King, Jr. The Court found the ordinance not to be content neutral, particularly because county officials had unlimited power to set the exact fee to be paid by any group.

\section*{Public Property}

Over the past several years, most of the Court's freedom of assembly cases have involved organized demonstrations. Demonstrations are, of course, assemblies.

Most demonstrations take place in public places-on streets and sidewalks, in parks or public buildings, and so on. This is the case because it is the public the demonstrators want to reach.

Demonstrations almost always involve some degree of conflict. Most often, they are held to protest something, and so there is an inherent clash of ideas. Many times there is also a conflict with the normal use of streets or other public facilities. It is hardly surprising, then, that the tension can sometimes rise to a serious level.

Given all this, the Supreme Court has often upheld laws that require advance notice and permits for demonstrations in public places. In an early leading case, Cox v. New Hampshire, 1941, it unanimously approved a State law that required a license to hold a parade or procession on a public street.

Right-to-demonstrate cases raise many difficult questions. How and to what extent can government regulate demonstrators? Does the Constitution require that police officers allow an unpopular group to continue to demonstrate even when its activities have excited others to violence? When, in the name of public peace and safety, can police order demonstrators to disband?

Gregory v. Chicago A leading and illustrative case is Gregory v. Chicago, 1969. While under police protection, comedian Dick Gregory and others marched while singing, chanting, and carrying placards, from city hall to the mayor's home some five miles away. Marching in the streets around the mayor's house, they demanded the firing of the city's school superintendent and an end to de facto segregation in the city's schools.

A crowd of several hundred people, including many residents of the all-white neighborhood, quickly gathered. Soon, the bystanders began throwing insults and threats, as well as rocks, eggs, and other objects. The police tried to keep order, but after about an hour, they decided that serious violence was about to break out. At that point, they ordered the demonstrators to leave the area. When Gregory and others failed to do so, the police arrested them and charged them with disorderly conduct.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 19, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 99)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 100)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 101)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 105)
L3 Quiz A (p. 109)
L2 Quiz B (p. 110)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 111)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 114)

The convictions of the demonstrators were unanimously overturned by the Court. It noted that the marchers had exercised their constitutional rights of assembly and petition. The bystanders, not the demonstrators, had caused the disorder. As long as the demonstrators acted peacefully, they could not be punished for disorderly conduct.

Recent Cases Over recent years, many of the most controversial demonstrations have been those held by anti-abortion groups. For the most part, their efforts have been aimed at discouraging women from seeking the services of abortion clinics, and those efforts have generated many lawsuits.

There have been two particularly notable cases to date. In the first one, Madsen v. Women's Health Services, Inc., 1994, the Supreme Court upheld a Florida judge's order directing protesters not to block access to an abortion clinic. The judge's order had drawn a 36 -foot buffer zone around the clinic. The High Court found that to be a reasonable limit on the demonstrators' activities.

The other major case is Hill v. Colorado, 2000. There, the Court upheld, 5-4, a State law that limits "sidewalk counseling" at clinics where abortions are performed. That statute creates an eight-foot buffer zone around anyone who wants to enter. No one may make an "unwanted approach" to talk, hand out a leaflet, or wave a sign.

The Court found that the Colorado law does not deal with the content of abortion protestors' speech. It is aimed, instead, at where, when, and how their message is delivered.

\section*{Private Property}

What about demonstrations on private prop-erty-at shopping centers, for example? The Court has said that the rights of assembly and petition do not give people a right to trespass on private property, even to express political views.

\section*{Background}

RIGHT OF ASSOCIATION CASES In 1995, the Court ruled that a Boston veterans' group did not have to include gay marchers in its St. Patrick's Day parade. The justices ruled that being forced to do so would interfere with the group's social and religious purposes. Other Supreme Court decisions have made associations more inclusive. Court decisions in the 1980s opened many formerly all-male civic organizations, such as the Rotary Club and Jaycees, to women. In these cases, the Court ruled that admitting women would not prevent these groups from carrying out their educational, charitable, and community service goals. There is no absolute right of association, however. For example, Congress can forbid federal employees to do such things as engage in partisan election campaigns or hold a leadership position in a political party organization, Harris v. United States, 1954.

\section*{IDENTIFY TIME-PLACE-MANNER RULES}

Ask a volunteer to define what is meant by "time, place, and manner. " (reasonable government limits on when, where, and how an assembly may be conducted) Read aloud the situations below, and have students identify whether they follow a time-placemanner restriction or are unconstitutional.
- The mayor rejected a rally permit for the local chapter of the Ku Klux Klan. (unconstitutional)
- The State's highest court ruled that shopping malls are not public places where citizens can distribute political pamphlets as they please. (time-placemanner restriction)
- Various injunctions have barred youths identified by the authorities as gang members from sitting in parks. (unconstitutional)
- A permit to march against police brutality was denied by New York City, citing rush hour congestion. (time-place-manner restriction) Yet the entire area was closed to traffic to celebrate the World Series victory. (This knowledge makes the denial of the permit unconstitutional.)

\section*{COMPLETE CORE WORKSHEET}

Organize students into these six groups:
- Group 1: Peace Up, plaintiff
- Group 2: Town, defendant
- Group 3: Parents Against Violent Video Games (PAVVG), plaintiff
- Group 4: Mall Owner, defendant
- Group 5: Three judges, Peace Up v. Town
- Group 6: Three judges, PAVVG v. Mall Owner

Distribute the Chapter 19 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 101). Each group will analyze a scenario in which the rights of assembly and petition must be weighed against the government's responsibility to protect the rights of the community or private property. Have Groups 1-4 study their scenarios and answer the questions. These will be used as briefs explaining the facts in the case, the constitutional issue, precedents that support their position, and counterarguments. Groups 5 and 6 should also study their scenarios and identify precedents for the judgments they will make after hearing the cases. Have Groups 1-4 choose "attorneys" to present their briefs to the Group 5 or Group 6 judges. Each attorney has five minutes to present arguments. The judges can interrupt to ask questions. After hearing the cases, Groups 5 and 6 will write opinions on their cases, explaining their reasons.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Assembly and petition guarantees for public demonstrations do not give people a right to trespass on private property.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students go online or to the office of their mayor or city manager to find the local regulations for obtaining a demonstration permit. Ask students to analyze the regulations for constitutionality.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 241).

Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.

L3Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 109)
 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 110) Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Protections on the \\ rights to assemble \\ and petition \\
(Questions 2, 3, 4, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students list the cases identified in this \\ section. Next to each case, students should \\ write the effect of the ruling on the rights to \\ assemble and petition.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Limits to the free- \\ doms of assembly \\
and petition \\
(Questions 1, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students use the textbook to find and \\ list time-place-manner rules applied to \\ organized demonstrations to keep the public \\
peace.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint right to join with others to promote political, economic, and social causes association?

Privately owned shopping centers are not "places of public assembly." Thus, no one has a constitutional right to do such things as hand out political leaflets or ask people to sign petitions in those places.

These comments are based on the leading case here, Lloyd Corporation v. Tanner, 1972. However, since that case the Court has held this: A State supreme court may interpret the provisions of that State's constitution in such a way as to require the owners of shopping centers to allow the reasonable exercise of the right of petition on their private property.

\section*{Freedom of Association}

The guarantees of freedom of assembly and petition include a right of association-to join with others to promote political, economic, and social causes. That right is not set out in so many words in the Constitution. However, in National Association for the Advancement of Colored People v. Alabama, 1958, the Supreme Court said, "it is beyond debate that freedom to engage in association for the advancement of beliefs and ideas is an inseparable aspect" of the Constitution's guarantees of free expression.

The case just cited is one of the early right-to-associate cases. There, a State law required the Alabama branch of the NAACP to disclose the names of all its members in that State. When the organization refused a court's order to do so, it was found in contempt of court and fined \($ 100,000\).

The Supreme Court overturned the contempt conviction. It said that it could find no legitimate reason why the State should have the NAACP's membership list.

A person cannot be fired from a job because of political associations-for example, membership in a political party, Brown v. Socialist Workers 74 Campaign Committee, 1982. And a person cannot be required to disclose his or her political associations to be licensed to practice law, Gibson v. Florida, 1966.

There is no absolute right of association, however. In Boy Scouts of America v. Dale, 2000, the Supreme Court held that the Boy Scouts have a constitutional right to exclude gays from their organization. The Court noted that opposition to homosexuality is a part of the Boy Scout organization's "expressive associa-tion"-that is, what they stand for.

The decision overturned a ruling by the New Jersey Supreme Court. That court had applied the State's anti-discrimination law against the Scouts. It ordered a New Jersey troop to readmit James Dale, an Eagle Scout, whom the troop had dismissed when it learned he was gay. The Court ruled that a State cannot force an organization to accept members when that action would contradict what the organization professes to believe.
\begin{tabular}{cl} Essential Questions & \begin{tabular}{l}
To continue to build a \\
response to the chapter \\
Essential Question, go to your \\ Journal
\end{tabular}
\end{tabular}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: How has the Supreme Court ruled on assembly and petition cases?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What do the guarantees of freedom of assembly and petition intend to protect?
3. (a) What is civil disobedience? (b) Is it constitutionally protected? Why or why not?
4. How does the right of association extend the right of assembly?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Conclusions (a) Why are the freedom to assemble peacefully and the freedom of association important to a democratic society? (b) What might happen if people were denied these rights?
6. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Why do you think the government can regulate assemblies based on time, place, and manner, but not on the basis of what might be said there?

\section*{Quick Write}

Persuasive Essay: Provide Elaboration In a persuasive essay, you can build a strong case for your position by stating facts, providing statistics, and including details. Conduct research to find this information on the topic you chose in Section 1. Take notes on index cards to help you organize your essay.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The Court applies time-place-manner restrictions to assembly and petition cases. It has upheld laws that require advance notice and permits for demonstrations. Government's rules must be content neutral. Demonstrators cannot be punished for disorder if they act peacefully. Protesters may not block access to abortion clinics or approach people entering. Demonstrators do not have the right to trespass on private property. Guarantees of freedom of assembly and petition include the right of association.
2. the right of people to organize to influence public policy and to bring their views to the attention of public officials
3. (a) the act of purposefully but nonviolently disobeying the law as a means of expressing an opinion on some particular law or public policy (b) No; it is not considered part of the right of assembly or petition.
4. It stipulates the right to associate with others to promote political, economic, and social causes.
5. (a) Assembling to promote causes is a primary means for people to express their opinions and influence policy, which is vital to any democracy. (b) Only the majority voice would be heard.
6. Regulating assemblies based on what is said there would be limiting freedom of speech.
QUICK WRITE Remind students to support their persuasive arguments with relevant statistics and details. If a clear connection cannot be made between the main idea and the statistics, students should continue researching to find other supportive facts.

\section*{Political Dictionary}

Bill of Rights \(\rho .547\) civil iberties \(p .547\) civil rights \(\rho .547\) alien \(p\). 548 Due Process Clause p. 549 process of incorporation p. 549 Establishment Clause p. 551 Free Exercise Clause p. 551 parochial \(p .552\) Hibel \(p .559\) slander p. 559 sedition \(p .560\) seditious speech p. 560 prior restraint \(p\). 562 injunction \(p .562\) shield law \(p .563\) symbolic speech \(p .565\) picketing \(p .565\) assemble p. 569 civil disobedience \(\rho .569\) content neutral \(p .570\) right of association \(p .572\)

First Amendment Freedoms
1st Amendment: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about civil liberties, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Smith, Rich. First Amendment: The Right of Expression. ABDO & Daughters, 2007.

L2 Dudley, William, ed. The Bill of Rights-Freedom of Speech. Greenhaven Press, 2005.

L3 Gottfried, Ted. Homeland Securityvs. Constitutional Rights. Lerner Publishing Group, 2003.
L4 Lewis, Anthony. Freedom for the Thought That We Hate: A Biography of the First Amendment. Basic Books, 2007.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Cornell Notes The Cornell note-taking strategy involves several distinct and easy steps. First, students should divide their paper into 3 sections, with horizontal lines near the top and bottom of the page, and a vertical line running from the top horizontal line to the bottom horizontal line that divides the main body of the paper into a narrow and a wide column. Write "First Amendment Freedoms" and the date at the top of the paper. Next, use the " 5 Rs": record, reduce, recite, reflect, and review. Record: Have students use the wide column for taking notes as they read the chapter, using abbreviations and shorthand whenever possible. Reduce: Have students identify main ideas, key points, dates, people, and vocabulary in their notes and write them in the narrow column. They will use these to write a summary of the main points in the bottom section of the paper. Recite: Direct students to study their notes. Cover up the wide column and respond to the key points listed in the narrow column and the summary. Reflect: Are there any parts of their notes that students don't understand? Review: Suggest that students spend 10 minutes per week reviewing their notes.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 5 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 5 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 548, 554
Dramatize Freedom of Press Cases, p. 563
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

19 Chapter Assessment

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) For what unalienable rights was the American Revolution fought? (b) How did the Framers of the Constitution guarantee these rights?
2. (a) What general limitation is placed on individual rights? (b) What example does Schenck v. United States cite to explain this limitation? (c) To which conflicting rights did Sheppard v. Maxwell apply?
3. (a) How does federalism complicate guarantees of individual rights? (b) How does the 14th Amendment address this complication? (c) On what basis did the Supreme Court strike down many State laws after the Gitlow case?
4. (a) What does the 9th Amendment provide? (b) Why do you think it was included in the Bill of Rights?

\section*{Section 2}
5. List five examples of the ways in which government encourages religion in the United States.
6. (a) Cite two arguments for allowing State aid to parochial schools. (b) Cite two arguments against this practice.
7. (a) Why has the Court allowed legislative prayers but not organized school prayers? (b) Do you agree with the Court's rationale? Why or why not?
8. Identify three ways in which government may properly restrict the exercise of religious belief.

\section*{Section 3}
9. What two basic purposes do the guarantees of free expression serve?
10. (a) What does the "clear and present danger" rule say? (b) What case established the rule? (c) How is the Smith Act of 1940 consistent with that rule?
11. (a) What is prior restraint? (b) In what situations does the Supreme Court allow prior restraint?

Section 4
12. What are the time, place, and manner limits that government can put on freedom of assembly?
13. What limits on public demonstrations has the Court upheld?
14. Analyze Political Cartoons How do you think the Supreme Court might rule in a case like the one shown in the cartoon below: for the boys (freedom of association) or for the girl (anti-discrimination)? Explain your answer.

\section*{Writing About Government}
15. Use your Quick Write exercises to write a persuasive essay supporting a civil liberties issue. Write an introducion with at least two sides, a body that provides evidence to support your position and refutes the opposing position, and a conclusion that strengthens your argument. See pp. S9-S10 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{SECTION 2}
5. Nearly all property of and contributions to religious sects are free from federal, State, and local taxation. Chaplains serve with each branch of the armed forces. Most public officials take an oath of office in the name of God. Sessions of Congress, most State legislatures, and many city councils open with prayer. The nation's anthem and its coins and currency make reference to God.
6. (a) parochial schools enroll large numbers of students who would otherwise have to be educated at public expense; to relieve parents who pay taxes to support the public schools their children do not attend (b) parents who send their children to parochial schools should accept the financial consequences of that choice; it is impossible to draw clear lines between secular and sectarian courses in parochial schools
7. (a) Prayers have been offered in the nation's legislative bodies "from colonial times through the founding of the Republic and ever since. " Legislators, unlike schoolchildren, are not "susceptible to religious indoctrination or peer pressure." (b) Answers will vary.
8. Religious practices must not violate criminal laws, offend public morals, or threaten community safety.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
16. Essential Question Activity Not all assembly is protected by the 1st Amendment. Suppose you are helping to organize a demonstration for a political cause. Write three to five questions you should ask to determine if the Supreme Court would consider your demonstration to be constitutionally protected.
17. Essential Question Assessment Based on the questions you wrote and the content you have learned in the chapter, create a brochure for participants that helps to answer the Essential Question: How can the judiciary balance individual rights with the common good? Consider the freedoms of speech, press, and assembly. Include examples from the chapter of how individual rights are balanced by the courts to ensure relative guarantees for the public (the common good).

574 Chapter 19 Assessment

\section*{SECTION 3}
9. to guarantee each person a right of free expression and to ensure all persons a full discussion of public affairs
10. (a) that words can be outlawed if they trigger an immediate danger of criminal acts (b) Schenck v. United States (c) The Smith Act makes it a crime to advocate violent overthrow of the government. Such advocacy would create clear and present danger.
11. (a) restricting spoken or written words before they are expressed (b) in such extreme situations as wartime, or when a publication is obscene or incites its readers to acts of violence

\section*{SECTION 4}
12. Government can set limits on when, where, and how assemblies take place. However, government rules must be precisely drawn, fairly administered, and content neutral.
13. Laws can require advance notice and permits for demonstrations in public places.
14. for the boys, because their clubhouse is a private organization

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Freedom of Speech and Assembly}
U.S. citizens burn the American flag in protest, and the Ku Klux Klan parades along Main Street. Both these controversial actions are protected by the 1st Amendment. Some Americans believe such actions should not be protected. Since America's earliest days as a nation, public and judicial opinion has been divided over the extent of free speech and assembly, as shown in the documents below.

\section*{Document 1}

We have nothing to fear from the demoralizing reasonings of some, if others are left free to demonstrate their errors and especially when the law stands ready to punish the first criminal act produced by the false reasonings; these are safer corrections than the conscience of the judge.
-Thomas Jefferson, July 3, 1801

Document 2

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. \(C\)
2. The cartoonist believes that the Court has trampled on 1 st Amendment freedoms, or has allowed others to do so.
3. when someone abuses this freedom by "tending to incite to crime, disturb the public peace, or endanger the foundations of organized government"
4. only when the use of force or of law violation is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action
5. Documents 2 and 3. Students should provide valid reasons for their responses.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their opinion.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

\section*{Document 3}
[F]reedom of speech which is secured by the Constitution does not confer an absolute right to speak, without responsibility, whatever one may choose, . a State in the exercise of its police power may punish those who abuse this freedom by . . . tending to incite to crime, disturb the public peace, or endanger the foundations of organized government. .
-Whitney v. California, 1927

\section*{Document 4}
[T] he constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press do not permit a State to forbid or proscribe advocacy of the use of force or of law violation except where such advocacy is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action. . . [T]he mere abstract teaching . . . of the moral propriety or even moral necessity for a resort to force and violence is not the same as preparing a group for violent action and steeling it to such action. .
-Brandenburg v. Ohio, 1969

Use your knowledge of 1st Amendment freedoms and Documents 1-4 to answer these questions.
1. According to Document 1 , which of these should be punished?
A. violent ideas
B. "demoralizing reasonings"
C. criminal acts produced by violent ideas
D. speech whose purpose is to incite fear
2. How does the cartoonist in Document 2 view the Court's rulings on 1 st Amendment freedoms?
3. According to Document 3 , when may a State exercise its police power to limit freedom of speech and assembly?
4. According to Document 4 (a case that overturned Whitney), when may speech and assembly be limited?
5. Pull It Together Which documents support tightening limits on speech and assembly? With which documents do you agree? Why?

\section*{7) GOVERNMENT ONLINE} Documents
To find additional primary sources on 1st Amendment freedoms, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
the conflict that creates a fair balance.
15. Have students proofread and refine their persuasive essays before submitting them.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
16. Possible questions: Does our action violate any laws? Would our demonstration endanger public safety? Can we ensure that our demonstrators will remain peaceful? Did we get the proper permit? Will we be trespassing on private property?
17. Each part of the brochure should include a conflict between individual rights and the common good, and present a solution to

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 5}

What should be the role of the judicial branch?

\section*{CHAPTER 20}

To what extent has the judiciary protected the rights of privacy, security, and personal freedom?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the photo and quotation on these pages. Ask: What does the image represent? ( \(\mu s t i c e)\) What is the significance of the scale? (fair treatment for all under the law) According to Ronald Reagan, what is the government's responsibility toward constitutional rights? (to restore rights un justly denied) In this chapter, students will learn about constitutional liberties related to legal proceedings. Have students begin to further explore civil liberties by completing the Chapter 20 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 20 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 126)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:
- Rights of the Accused: Steps of Justice

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

You may wish to teach decision making as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 20 Skills Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 142) to help students learn about decision making. The worksheet asks students to decide whether to vote for or against the USA Patriot Act. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 143 ).

\section*{WebQuest
online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the judiciary.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 lesson, including the Bellringer and Due Process activities. Discuss Core Worksheet 20.1. Teach the Section 2 lesson, including the Bellringer (Transparency 20B), Cover Search-and-Seizure Basics, Core Worksheet 20.2, and the Exclusionary Rule activities. Choose one of the Extend options to conclude the lesson.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 lesson, including the Bellringer (Transparency 20E), Clarify Rights of the Accused, Diagram Rights of the Accused (Transparency 20F), and Evaluate the Miranda Rule (Core Worksheet 20.3B). Teach the Section 4 lesson, including the Bellringer (Transparency 20G), Analyze Court Decisions, and Core Worksheets 20.4A and 20.4B. Conclude with the Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson (Transparency 20H).

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Explain that due process of law requires that government act fairly and in accordance with established rules. Have students create a timeline that charts the development and expansion of due process in the United States. Timelines should begin with the Civil War period and continue to the present. Tell students to scan the chapter to find key Supreme Court cases that addressed due process guarantees regarding security of the person and rights of the accused, and which limited both the Federal Government and State governments. Have students note the cases on their timelines, including explanations of their significance.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- understand the importance of due process by analyzing examples of when due process was and was not followed and by considering how government might function without due process.
- evaluate how government balances its police power with individual freedoms by summarizing scenarios in which society's well-being conflicts with a person's rights.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- understand 4th Amendment guarantees against unreasonable search and seizure by discussing proper procedures of police officers and by completing a chart on Court decisions in related cases.
- identify how Supreme Court rulings have narrowed the meaning of the exclusionary rule by defining the rule and analyzing Court opinions related to it.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- identify the rights of people accused of crimes by note-taking, completing a tree diagram, and discussing a case related to habeas corpus
- evaluate the guarantee against self-incrimination by participating in simulations and analyzing a case related to the Miranda rule.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- examine how the Court's interpretation of "cruel and unusual punishment" has changed over time by analyzing court cases on the death penalty.
- analyze and evaluate arguments on the constitutionality of juvenile capital punishment by analyzing Supreme Court opinions and editorials on this issue.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1
Special Needs
L2
Basic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4
Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

Why is the concept of due process important to a free society?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will. .
- understand the importance of due process by analyzing examples of when due process was and was not followed and by considering how government might function without due process.
- evaluate how government balances its police power with individual freedoms by summarizing scenarios in which society's well-being conflicts with a person's rights.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 130) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 131)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

Before students begin the Core Worksheets in this lesson, you may want to review tips on drawing inferences and conclusions in the Skills Handbook, p. S19.

\section*{Guiding Question}

Why is the concept of due process important to a free society? Use a chart like the one below to take notes on due process.
\begin{tabular}{l}
Due Process of Law \\
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|l}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Restrictions on \\ Government \\
-
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Benefits to \\ Individuals
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- due process - police power - procedural due - search warrant process substantive due process

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the meaning of due process of law as set out in the 5th and 14th amendments.
2. Define police power and understand its relationship to civil rights.
3. Describe the right of privacy and its origins in constitutional law.

Image Above: Due process includes the forensic testing of evidence.

Did you know that DNA evidence has led to the reversal of more than 200 wrongful convictions in recent years? That the use of evidence drawn from the scientific study of body tissues has proved that all those persons were convicted, and served time in prison, for crimes they did not commit? Did you know that there is a strong likelihood that an untold number of innocent persons remain in prison today? As you will soon see, this point alone illustrates the importance of due process of law.

\section*{What Due Process Means}

The Constitution contains two due process clauses. The 5th Amendment declares that the Federal Government cannot deprive any person of "life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." The 14th Amendment places that same restriction on every one of the States-and, very importantly, on their local governments, as well. A thorough grasp of the meaning of these provisions is absolutely essential to an understanding of the American concept of civil liberties.

Fundamentally, the Constitution's guarantee of due process means this: In whatever it does, government must act fairly and in accord with established rules. It may not act unfairly, arbitrarily, capriciously, or unreasonably.

The concept of due process began and developed in English and then in American law as a procedural concept. That is, it first developed as a requirement that government act fairly, or use fair procedures to enforce law.

Fair procedures are of little value, however, if they are used to administer unfair laws. The Supreme Court recognized this fact toward the end of the nineteenth century. It began to hold that due process requires that both the ways in which government acts and the laws under which it acts must be fair. Thus, the Court added the idea of substantive due process to the original notion of procedural due process.

In short, procedural due process has to do with the how (the procedures, the methods) of governmental action. Substantive due process involves the what (the substance, the policies) of governmental action.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The 5 th and 14 th amendments guarantee that the National, State, and local governments cannot deprive a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. - Substantive due process guarantees that laws will be fair. - Procedural due process guarantees that laws will be enforced in a fair and equal manner. - The States' reserved powers include the police power. - The Court has held that constitutional guarantees of due process create a right of privacy.
CONCEPTS: limited government, due process of law, individual rights and responsibilities ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Due process requires government to act fairly and according to established rules. - When the use of police power conflicts with civil liberties, courts must balance society's needs with individual freedoms.

It is impossible to define the two due process guarantees in exact and complete terms. The Court has consistently and purposely refused to give them an exact definition. Instead, it has relied on finding the meaning of due process on a case-by-case basis. The Court first described that approach in Davidson v. New Orleans, 1878, as the "gradual process of inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require."

Examples of Due Process Any number of cases may be used to illustrate these two elements of due process. Take a classic case, Rochin v. California, 1952, to exemplify procedural due process.

Rochin was a suspected narcotics dealer. Acting on a tip, three Los Angeles County deputy sheriffs went to his rooming house. They forced their way into Rochin's room, found him sitting on a bed, and spotted two capsules on a nightstand. When one of the deputies asked, "Whose stuff is this?" Rochin popped the capsules into his mouth. Although all three officers jumped him, Rochin managed to swallow the pills.

The deputies took Rochin to a hospital, where his stomach was pumped. The capsules were recovered and found to contain morphine. The State then prosecuted and convicted Rochin for violating the State's narcotics laws.

The Supreme Court unanimously held that the deputies had violated the 14th Amendment's guarantee of procedural due process. Said the Court:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

This is conduct that shocks the conscience. Illegally breaking into the privacy of the petitioner, the struggle to open his mouth and remove what was there, the forcible extraction of his stomach's contents - this course of proceeding by agents of government to obtain evidence is bound to offend even hardened sensibilities. They are methods too close to the rack and the screw. ..
-Justice Felix Frankfurter

The case Pierce v. Society ofSisters, 1925, illustrates substantive due process. In 1922, Oregon's voters had adopted a new compulsory school-attendance law that required all persons between the ages of 8 and 16 to attend public schools. The law was purposely written to destroy private, especially parochial, schools in the State.

A Roman Catholic order challenged the law's constitutionality, and the Supreme Court held that its provisions violated the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause. The Court did not find that the State had enforced the law unfairly. Rather, the Court held that the law itself, in its contents, "unreasonably interferes with the liberty of parents to direct

\section*{Due Process}

The following limit is placed on the Federal Government in the 5th Amendment, and on State and local governments in the 14th Amendment:

Government cannot deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without following due process of law.

Both the procedures and the laws of government must be in accord with due process. Why are procedural and substantive due process both necessary?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 20, Section 1:
L3 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 126)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 130)
\(\boxed{L 2}\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 131)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 132)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 134)
L3 Quiz A (p. 135)
L2 Quiz B (p. 136)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write these examples of arbitrary laws and the following question on the board: (1) Only students who drive red or blue cars can park in the school parking lot. (2) On Mondays and Wednesdays, brown-eyed students cannot eat in the cafeteria. (3) Police officers can search your home whenever they feel like it. What is wrong with these laws? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Ask students to share their answers to the Bellringer question. Students should infer that the laws are unfair and arbitrary. Then ask: Why is it important that laws not only be fair but also consistent, regular, or uniform across all situations and classes of people? (Consistent, predictable laws and law enforcement procedures promote order and stability.) What prevents governments from passing unfair laws or applying laws in an arbitrary manner? (due process of law) L2 L3 Differentiate Have groups list characteristics of a fair law. (applied equally regardless of race, gender, religious beliefs, or income; easy to understand; enforceable; not vague; clearly states what is and is not legal) Then ask groups to write a law concerning curfew for teenagers, drug testing for athletes, or mandatory sentencing for criminals. When finished, have groups use their lists of fair characteristics to critique one another's laws.

\section*{INTRODUCE DUE PROCESS}

Explain that due process originated as early as 1215 in the Magna Carta. Display Transparency 20A, Protecting Individual Rights, and have a volunteer read aloud the quote. Then ask: According to the document, what factors will determine a person's imprisonment? ( judgment by one's peers or by the law of the land) How did government by "law of the land" differ from previous government? (Absolute monarchs ruled according to their whims, not by laws.)
Have a student read aloud the 5th Amendment and Section 1 of the 14 th Amendment. Ask: What limits do the amendments place on government?
(National and State governments cannot deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without following fair laws and procedures.)

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Visuals to ensure not only that procedures are fair, but also that the laws they administer are fair

L2 Differentiate Students who have difficulty grasping the concept of due process may find it easier to think of limits on government as the "law of the land."

L2 ELL Differentiate Explain these words in the 5 th and 14 th amendments: jeopardy (danger or risk), deprive (remove or take away), compensation (payment or reimbursement), abridge (reduce or cut), arbitrary (random).
L3 Differentiate Have students consider what might result from the following actions without fair laws or due process of law: someone criticizes the government (banishment, execution); shoplifting (hand cut off, other torture punishment exceeding the crime); a suspect without an attorney is tried only by a judge, not by a jury (sham trial with rigged witnesses).

\section*{IDENTIFY DUE PROCESS PROCEDURES}

Distribute the Chapter 20 Section 1 Core Worksheet A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 132). Students will identify due process procedures that were or were not followed in a trial.

L2 Differentiate Have students complete the worksheet using the Think-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22).

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the authority of each State to protect and promote the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare of its people
Interpreting Political Cartoons Possible answer:
No. Due process guarantees a fair trial, not acquittal.

Checkpoin

The 14th Amendment and the Bill of Rights Recall these crucial points from Chapter 19: The provisions of the Bill of Rights apply against the National Government only. However, the Supreme Court has held that the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause includes within its meaning most of the protections set out in the Bill of Rights.

In a long series of decisions dating from 1925, the Court extended the protections of the Bill of Rights against the States through the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause. The chart on page 549 lists those amendments that have been incorporated-and with them the four provisions in the Bill of Rights that have not been incorporated.

The key 1st Amendment cases were discussed in Chapter 19. Those involving the 4th through the 8th amendments are treated in Sections 2, 3, and 4 of this chapter.
adj. forced, obligatory
the upbringing and education of children

"WSsi'$ so grest ahnof dar prewsu? Dar peves gsi ac fice xome."
- Interpreting Political Cartoons Is it possible that the prisoner's complaint is justified? Explain your answer.

\section*{The Police Power}

In the federal system, the reserved powers of the States include the broad and important police power. The police power is the authority of each State to act to protect and promote the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare. In other words, it is the power of each State to safeguard the wellbeing of its people.

The Police Power and Civil Liberties The use of the police power often produces conflicts with civil liberty protections. When it does, courts must strike a balance between the needs of society, on the one hand, and of individual freedoms on the other. Any number of cases can be used to illustrate the conflict between police power and individual rights. Take as an example a matter often involved in drunk-driving cases.

Every State's laws allow the use of one or more tests to determine whether a person arrested and charged with drunk driving was in fact drunk at the time of the incident. Some of those tests are simple: walking a straight line or touching the tip of one's nose, for example. Some are more sophisticated, however, notably the breathalyzer test and the drawing of a blood sample.

Does the requirement that a person submit to such a test violate his or her rights under the 14th Amendment? Does the test involve an unconstitutional search for and seizure of evidence? Does it amount to forcing a person to testify against himself or herself (unconstitutional compulsory self-incrimination)? Or is that requirement a proper exercise of the police power?

Time after time, State and federal courts have come down on the side of the police power. They have supported the right of society to protect itself against drunk drivers and rejected the individual rights argument.

The leading case is Schmerber v. California, 1966. There, the Court found no objection to a situation in which a police officer had directed a doctor to draw blood from a drunk-driving suspect. The Court emphasized these points: The blood sample was drawn in accord with accepted medical practice. The officer had reasonable grounds

580 Civil Liberties: Protecting Individual Rights

\section*{Background}
magna carta When rebellious barons forced King John to sign the Magna Carta in 1215, they intended to secure rights for the powerful families in feudal England-not for everyone. However, in negotiating the wording, they changed "any baron" to "any freeman." This change, minor at the time, would later be used to apply the charter to broader society. In the 17 th century, Edward Coke, an English lawyer, reinterpreted the Magna Carta, arguing that it established universal rights that kings and acts of Parliament could not void. American colonists wrote these views into the legal codes of the colonies. They cited the Magna Carta to condemn the Stamp Act as against "the natural rights of Englishmen." In the Constitution, "all freemen" would become "we the people." Just as the Magna Carta could not be canceled by later English laws, the U.S. Constitution would become "the Supreme Law of the Land."
to believe that the suspect was drunk. Further, had the officer taken time to secure a search warrant-a court order authorizing a search-whatever evidence was present could have disappeared from the suspect's system.

Protecting the Public Legislators and judges have often found the public's health, safety, morals, and/or welfare to be of overriding importance. For example:
1. To promote health, States can limit the sale of alcoholic beverages and tobacco, make laws to combat pollution, and require the vaccination of schoolchildren.
2. To promote safety, States can regulate the carrying of concealed weapons, require the use of seat belts, and punish drunk drivers.
3. To promote morals, States can regulate gambling and outlaw the sale of obscene materials and the practice of prostitution.
4. To promote the general welfare, States can enact compulsory education laws, provide help to the medically needy, and limit the profits of public utilities.

Clearly, governments cannot use the police power in an unreasonable or unfair way, however. In short, they cannot violate the 14 th Amendment's Due Process Clause.

\section*{The Right of Privacy}

The constitutional guarantees of due process create a right of privacy-"the right to be free, except in very limited circumstances, from unwanted governmental intrusions into one’s privacy," Stanley v. Georgia, 1969. \({ }^{1}\) It is, in short, "the right to be let alone."

The Constitution makes no specific mention of the right of privacy, but the Supreme Court declared its existence in Griswold v. Connecticut, 1965. That case centered on a State law that outlawed birth-control counseling and prohibited the use of all birth1 Stanley involved the possession of obscene materials in one's own home. In the most recent right to privacy case, the Court struck down a texas law that made sexual reations betwe control devices. The Court held the law to be a violation of the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause-and noted that the State had no business policing the marital bedroom.
2 Justice Louis D. Brandeis, dissenting in Olmstead v. United States, 1928.

Roe v. Wade The most controversial applications of the right of privacy have come in cases that raise this question: To what extent can a State limit a woman's right to an abortion? The leading case is Roe v. Wade, 1973. There, the Supreme Court struck down a Texas law that made abortion a crime except when necessary to save the life of the mother.

In Roe, the Court held that the 14 th Amendment's right of privacy "encompass[es] a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." More specifically, the Court ruled that:
1. In the first trimester of pregnancy (about three months), a State must recognize a woman's right to an abortion; it cannot interfere with medical judgments in that matter during that period.
2. In the second trimester, a State, acting in the interest of women who undergo abortions, can make reasonable regulations about how, when, and where abortions can be performed but cannot prohibit the procedure.
3. In the final trimester, a State, acting to protect the unborn child, can choose to prohibit all abortions except those necessary to preserve the life or health of the mother.

Challenges to Roe In several later cases, the Court rejected a number of challenges to its basic holding in Roe. As the composition of the Court has changed, however, so has the Court's position on abortion. That shift can be seen in the Court's decisions in recent cases on the matter

In Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 1989, the Court upheld two key parts of a Missouri law. Those provisions prohibit abortions, except those that preserve the Promoting safety is one of the States' police powers. In what ways do States promote morality?

\section*{Background}

DNA AND DUE PROCESS After his conviction for rape, James Harvey maintained his innocence for more than ten years. In 2001, a federal judge ruled for the first time that Harvey, and other convicted felons, have a constitutional right to have their DNA tested to try to prove their innocence. An appeals court later overturned this ruling. Still, this case helped pave the way for The Innocence Protection Act (2001). This law was designed to reduce the risk that innocent people might be executed. Among other protections, it guarantees convicted offenders the right to DNA testing. But DNA can help convict as well as exonerate. Since passage of the act, law enforcement in some States has expanded the collection of DNA samples from not only convicted felons but also from arrestees. Critics argue that this practice erodes due process by denying citizens the right to keep their genetic information private.

\section*{ANALYZE STATES' POLICE POWER}

Organize students into pairs. Distribute the Chapter 20 Section 1 Core Worksheet B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 134), which asks students to analyze scenarios that pit individual rights against the public good. Discuss Situation 1 before pairs work independently to complete the worksheet.

12 ELL Differentiate Clarify for students that police power refers to the reserved power of the States, not to the actions of police officers.
L3 Differentiate Ask students to role play a conversation between an offender and a representative of the government's interest. Each should explain his or her side, and individuals should ask for explanations of their due process rights.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students research a case in this section. Ask them to draw a flowchart showing the due process procedures followed. Questions that could be answered in the flowchart include: What are the facts in the case? What due process rule, law, or policy was followed or violated? How was it violated? How was evidence or information gathered?
L4 Differentiate Have students research one of these cases and write a newspaper editorial explaining whether they agree or disagree with the Court's ruling: In Chicago v. Morales, 1999, the Court struck down an anti-gang loitering ordinance. In Lee v. Kemna, 2002, the Court ruled that the defendant had been denied his due process rights.

\section*{Answers}

Caption States regulate gambling and outlaw the sale of obscene materials and the practice of prostitution.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3Have students write a journal entry explaining whether they agree or disagree with this statement: The right to due process has been called the greatest protection in the Constitution from the abuse of power by government.
L3 CAssign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 135)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 136)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Due Process of law \\
(Questions 1, 2, 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students answer this question in a \\ short essay: Why does a democracy need due \\ process laws and procedures that define how \\ government can use its power? (If democratic \\ societies did not have such rules, political \\ leaders could act arbitrarily, leading to unlim- \\ ited government.)
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Police power of \\
government \\
(Questions 4, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Ask students to make a two-column chart. In \\ column one, have them list ten problems in the \\ United States: social, environmental, economic, \\ urban, rural, etc. In column two, next to each \\ problem, have students list the police power \\ that attempts to address that problem.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A State may place reasonable limits on a woman's right to have an abortion, but restrictions cannot impose an "undue burden" on this right.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
How has the Court modified its Roe v. Wade ruling in later decisions?
mother's life or health, (1) in any publicly operated hospital or clinic in that State, and (2) when the mother is 20 or more weeks pregnant and tests show that the fetus is viable (capable of sustaining life outside the mother's body)

Two cases in 1990 addressed the issue of minors and abortion. In those cases, the Court said that a State may require a minor (1) to inform at least one parent before she can obtain an abortion, Ohio v. Akron Center fr Reproductive Health, and (2) to tell both parents of her plans, except in cases where a judge gives permission for an abortion without parental knowledge, Hodgson v. Minnesota.

The Court's most important decision on the issue since Roe v. Wade came in Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey in 1992. There, the Court announced this rule: A State may place reasonable limits on a woman's right to have an abortion, but these restrictions cannot impose an "undue burden" on her choice of that procedure.

In Casey, the Court applied that new standard to Pennsylvania's Abortion Control Act. It upheld several sections of the law, finding that they did not place "a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abortion of a non-viable fetus." Those provisions, it said, do not impose an "undue burden" on a woman's choice.

The Supreme Court did strike down another key part of the Pennsylvania law in Case \(y\), however. That provision required that a married woman tell her husband of her plan to have an abortion. That requirement, said the Court, did indeed amount to an "undue burden."

Recent Cases The High Court has decided only two abortion cases since 1992. Its 5-4 vote in the most recent one effectively overturned its 5-4 decision in the earlier case. Together, the two cases underscore the impact that changes in the composition of the Court can have on the outcome of cases that come before it.

In Gonzales v. Carhart, 2007, the justices applied Case y's "undue burden" rule to an act of Congress, the Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act of 2003, and found it constitutional. That statute prohibits a particular method of abortion, a medical procedure that opponents of abortion call "partial birth abortion." In fact, that operation had been performed in very few instances.

In the earlier case, Stenberg v. Carhart, 2000, the Court had applied Casey to strike down a Nebraska law that also banned partial birth abortions, and in language very nearly identical to that used by Congress when it passed the federal law in 2003.
\begin{tabular}{|cl|}
\hline Essential Questions & \begin{tabular}{l}
To continue to build a \\ response to the chapter
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Journal & \begin{tabular}{l} Essential Question, go to your \\
Essential Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT} To continue to build a response to the chapter Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: Why is the concept of due process important to a free society?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What does the phrase due process of law mean? (b) Why has the Supreme Court purposefully not defined due process exactly?
3. How do procedural due process and substantive due process differ?
4. (a) What is the police power reserved to the States? (b) What is the relationship between the police power and due process of law?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Draw Conclusions Considering the constitutional right of privacy, is it proper for a State to use its police power to protect and promote morals among its citizens? Explain your answer.
6. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment The right of privacy is not found in the Constitution. (a) How did Justice Brandeis define the right of privacy? (b) Do you think a constitutional amendment is needed to guarantee an individual's right to privacy? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Essay: Choose a Topic Scan the chapter for two or three Supreme Court cases. Research the cases online, and write a summary paragraph of each case that includes the facts and issues. Select the case that most interests you.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Procedural due process and substantive due process act as safeguards on the rights of citizens and as restraints on the power of government officials. Life, liberty, and property cannot be taken away by unfair laws or unfair administration of laws.
2. (a) Government must act fairly and in accord with established rules and laws. (b) Justices do not see due process as absolute and unyielding; rather, they feel it is relative and should be decided on a case-by-case basis.
3. (a) procedural: refers to the how (the procedures, methods) of government action; substantive: refers to the what (the substance, policies) of government action (b) In Rochin v. California, the Court held that the police procedures to obtain evidence were illegal. In Pierce v. Society of Sisters, the law itself was declared unfair.
4. (a) the authority to protect and promote public health, safety, morals, and general welfare (b) When using police power to protect society, States cannot violate the due process rights of individuals.
5. Possible answers: Yes, protection of morals falls within a State's police power. No, right of privacy limits the right of government to deem actions immoral.
6. (a) "the right to be let alone"
(b) Answers will vary.

QUICK WRITE Refer students to the Web site "Oyez: U.S. Supreme Court Media" to help them write their case summaries.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Freedom and Security of the Person}

Guiding Question
How does the Constitution protect the freedom and security of the person? Use a concept web to take notes on the section.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- involuntary - probable cause servitude
- discrimination
- exclusionary rule
writs of assistance

\section*{Objectives}
1. Outline Supreme Court decisions regarding slavery and involuntary servitude.
2. Explain the intent and application of the 2nd Amendment's protection of the right to keep and bear arms.
3. Summarize the constitutional provisions designed to guarantee security of home and person.

Image Above: Police must have probable cause when they stop a vehicle.

The Constitution of the United States is, in very large part, a statement of limited government. Many of the restrictions it puts on governmental power are intended to protect the right of every American to be free. That is, those restrictions guard the right of individuals to be free from physical restraints, to be secure in their persons, and to be secure in their homes.

\section*{Slavery and Involuntary Servitude}

The 13th Amendment was added to the Constitution in 1865, ending over 200 years of slavery in America. Section 1 of the amendment declares: "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, . . . shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction." Importantly, Section 2 of this amendment gives Congress the expressed power "to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Until 1865, each State could decide for itself whether to allow slavery. With the 13th Amendment, that power was denied to them, and to the National Government, as well.

The 13th Amendment: Section 1 As a widespread practice, slavery disappeared in the United States more than 140 years ago. There are still occasional cases of it, however. Most often, those cases have involved involuntary servitude-that is, forced labor. An 1867 federal law, the Anti-Peonage Act, makes it a crime to force someone to work for another in order to fulfill a contract or satisfy a debt. Several times, the Supreme Court has struck down State laws making it a crime for any person to fail to work after having received money or other benefits by promising to do so.

The 13th Amendment does not forbid all forms of involuntary servitude, however. Thus, in 1918, the Supreme Court drew a distinction between "involuntary servitude" and "duty" in upholding the constitutionality of the selective service system (the draft). \({ }^{3}\) Nor does imprisonment for crime violate the amendment; and those who are convicted of crime can be forced to work. Finally, note this important point: Unlike any other provision in the Constitution,

3 Selective Draft Law Cases, 1918.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How does the Constitution protect the freedom and security of the person?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- understand 4th Amendment guarantees against unreasonable search and seizure by discussing proper procedures of police officers and by completing a chart on Court decisions in related cases.
- identify how Supreme Court rulings have narrowed the meaning of the exclusionary rule by defining the rule and analyzing Court opinions related to it.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 137) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 139)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

To practice decision making in this section, use the Chapter 20 Skills Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 142 ). You may teach the skill explicitly before students do the Core Worksheet. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 143).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The 13th Amendment prohibits slavery and involuntary servitude. - The 2nd Amendment preserves the right of States to keep militias. - The 4th Amendment prohibits unreasonable searches and seizures. - The Supreme Court adopted the controversial exclusionary rule, which says that evidence gained as the result of an illegal act by police cannot be used in court.
CONCEPTS: due process of law, individual rights and responsibilities, limited government ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The 4th Amendment protects one from arbitrary searches and seizures. It requires police officers, except in special circumstances, to have a search warrant that was obtained with probable cause.

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 20B, Search-and-Seizure Scenario, which describes a search-and-seizure situation. Have students answer the question in their notebooks.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Discuss students' answers to the Bellringer question. Explain that the scenario is based on Illinois v. Wardlow, 2000. The State supreme court ruled that the stop and arrest had violated Wardlow's 4th Amendment rights. Upon appeal, however, the Supreme Court ruled that flight can be an important factor in deciding whether police have "reasonable suspicion" to stop a suspect. The Court also noted that flight from the police will not always justify a stop or that it will never do so. Ask students whether they agree or disagree with the Court's decision, and why.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE 4TH AMENDMENT}

Ask a student to read the 4th Amendment aloud. Tell students that in this lesson, they will look at the rules and standards that the Supreme Court uses to examine the 4th Amendment rights of citizens and the responsibility of police to use proper procedures in search and seizure cases.
L2 ELL Differentiate As students read the 4th Amendment, point out that the prefix un-means "not." Write the word unreasonable on the board and ask students to explain what it means. (You also may want to explain that seizure in this case means "to arrest or detain. ") Ask: What is an unreasonable search and seizure? (one in which the police search a suspect or take the suspect's belongings without a warrant or without adequate reason for believing that a crime is about to be committed)

\section*{Government}
online
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Caption The selective service system may draft people into military service; convicts can be forced to work.
the prohibitions in the 13th Amendment cover the conduct of private individuals as well as the behavior of government.

The 13th Amendment: Section 2 Shortly after the Civil War, Congress passed several civil rights laws based on the 13th Amendment. The Supreme Court, however, sharply narrowed the scope of federal authority in several cases, especially the Civil Rights Cases, 1883. In effect, the Court held that racial discrimination (prejudice, unfairness) against African Americans by private individuals was allowed. Discrimination, ruled the Court, did not place the "badge of slavery" on African Americans nor keep them in servitude.

As a result, Congress soon repealed most of the civil rights laws based on the 13th Amendment. The enforcement of the few laws that remained was at best unimpressive. For years, it was generally thought that Congress did not have the power, under either the 13th or 14th Amendment, to act against those who practiced race-based discrimination.

Nearly a century later, however, in Jones v. Mayer, 1968, the Supreme Court breathed new life into the 13th Amendment. The case centered on one of the postCivil War acts Congress had not repealed. Passed in 1866, that almost-forgotten law provided in part that:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}
[AII] citizens of the United States; . . of every race and color, . . . shall have the same right, in every State and Territory of the United States, . . . to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, . . . as is enjoyed by white citizens, ...
—Civil Rights Act of 1866

Jones, an African American, had sued because Mayer had refused to sell him a home, solely because of his race. Mayer contended that the 1866 law was unconstitutional, since it sought to prohibit private racial discrimination.

The Supreme Court upheld the 1866 law, declaring that the 13th Amendment abolished slavery and also gave Congress the power to abolish "the badges and incidents of slavery." Said the Court:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

At the very least, the freedom that Congress is empowered to secure under the 13th Amendment includes the freedom to buy whatever a white man can buy, the right to live wherever a white man can live.
-Justice Potter Stewart
The Court affirmed that decision in several later cases. Thus, in Run yon v. McCrary, 1976, two private schools had refused to admit two African American students. By doing so, the schools had refused to enter into a contract of admission-a contract they had advertised to the general public. The Court found that the schools had violated another provision of the 1866 law, providing that: " [ All] citizens of the United States, . . . of every race and color, . . . shall have the same right, . . . to make and enforce contracts . as is enjoyed by white citizens. . . ."

The Court has also ruled that the Civil Rights Act of 1866 protects all "identifiable classes of persons who are subjected to intentional discrimination solely because of their ancestry or ethnic characteristics"-for example Jews, Shaare Te fla Congregation v. Cobb, 1987, and Arabs, St. Francis College v. AlKhazraj, 1987.

More recently, the Court has backed off a bit. In Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, 1989, it declared that although the 1866 law does prohibit racial discrimination in a contract of employment, any on-the-job discrimination should be handled in accord with the Civil Rights Act of 1964. (See Chapter 21.) Nevertheless, the Court has several times held that the 13th Amendment gives Congress

584 Civil Liberties: Protecting Individual Rights

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 20, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 137)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 139)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 141)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 142)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 143)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 144)
\(L 3\) Quiz A (p. 146)
L2 Quiz B (p. 147)

significant power to attack "the badges and incidents of slavery," from whatever source they may come.

\section*{Right to Keep and Bear Arms}

The 2nd Amendment was added to the Constitution to protect the right of each State to keep a militia. The amendment's aim was to preserve the concept of the citizen-soldier. The 2nd Amendment reads

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

What, exactly, do these words mean? Do they protect only the right of each State to keep a militia, especially against encroachments by the Federal Government? Or, does the 2nd Amendment do that and also give to individuals a right to keep and bear arms - just as, say, the 1st Amendment protects free speech?

For decades, the Court refused to accept the latter interpretation. In its one 2nd Amendment ruling, in United States v. Miller, 1939, the Court rejected the individual right argument. It upheld a section of the National Firearms Act of 1934 that made it a crime to ship sawed-off shotguns or submachine guns across State lines unless the shipper had a federal license to do so. The Court said that it could find no valid link between the shotgun involved in the case and "the preservation . . . of a well-regulated militia."

In 2008, however, the holding in Miller was effectively overturned, 5-4, in District of Columbia v. Heller. There, the Court found the District's very strict gun control ordinance unconstitutional. It ruled, for the first time, that the 2nd Amendment forbids "the absolute prohibition of handguns held and used for self-defense in the home."

The Court did say, however, that Heller does not overrule "long-standing prohibitions on the possession of firearms by felons or the mentally ill, or laws forbidding the carrying of firearms in sensitive places such as schools and government buildings, or laws imposing conditions and qualifications on the commercial sale of arms."

Clearly, over the next several years both federal and State courts will handle any number of cases challenging the many State and federal laws that now limit the right to keep and bear arms. Remember, the Supreme Court has never found that the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause covers the 2nd Amendment-a fact that will surely affect those cases.

\section*{Security of Home and Person}

The 3rd and 4th amendments say that government cannot violate the home or person of anyone in this country without just cause.

The 3rd Amendment This amendment forbids the quartering (housing) of soldiers in private homes in peacetime without the owner's consent and not in wartime except "in a manner to be prescribed by law." The guarantee was added to prevent what had been British practice in colonial days. \({ }^{4}\) The 3rd Amendment has had little importance since 1791 and has never been the subject of a Supreme Court case.

The 4th Amendment The 4th Amendment also grew out of colonial practice. It was designed to prevent the use of writs of assistance-blanket search warrants with which British customs officials had invaded private homes to search for smuggled goods.

Each State constitution contains a similar provision. The guarantee also applies to the States through the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause. Unlike the 3rd Amendment,

4 Recall that among the king's many "repeated injuries and usurpations [seizures]" set out in the Declaration of Independence was that of "quartering large bodies of troops among us." Se page 45.

This statue, called The Minuteman, honors the colonial militia. Why was the \(2 n d\) Amendment added to the Constitution?
encroachment
\(n\). intrusion, invasion

\section*{COVER SEARCH-AND-SEIZURE BASICS}

Point out that 4th Amendment search and seizure restrictions apply to law enforcement officials. Ask:
- How do warrants protect the rights of citizens against unreasonable search and seizure? (They reduce the chance that law enforcement will act arbitrarily or make a mistake in the person, place, or thing to be searched or seized.)
- Why do you think the Supreme Court uses the principle of probable cause to analyze search and seizure cases? (Probable cause provides standards for police conduct and admissible evidence, which support fair courts, trials, and procedures.)
- How does the requirement to show probable cause limit police in search and seizure actions? (Probable cause states that a warrant can be obtained only when there are reasonable grounds to believe that a crime has been or is about to be committed, and the person, place, or thing to be searched or seized is related to that crime.)
Explain that courts usually decide if a search was "reasonable" by looking at the evidence that was available to police at the time of the incident and by asking these questions:
1. Did the police have enough evidence to justify stopping the suspect?
2. Was the scope of the police search reasonably related to the suspected crime? For example, police looking for a stolen car would not need to look inside the suspect's home or conduct a "pat-down" or body search.
L2 Differentiate Ask students to consider types of behavior that would lead police to have a reasonable suspicion that a crime has occurred or is about to occur. Refer students to the "From the Constitution-4th Amendment" feature in this section of the text. After students read the feature, have them complete this prompt: "I was surprised to learn that . . .

\section*{Background}

WRITS OF ASSISTANCE By the early 1700s, the New England colonies had a thriving rum trade. To make the rum, they imported molasses from the British, French, and Spanish islands in the West Indies. To raise money and force the colonies to buy only from British growers, Parliament passed the Molasses Act in 1733, placing a heavy tax on foreign molasses. The colonists avoided the tax by smuggling the less-costly French and Spanish molasses. At first, the British made little effort to enforce the act. In 1764, realizing the extent of lost revenue, Parliament passed the Sugar Act, with strong enforcement measures. Britain issued writs of assistance, allowing customs agents unlimited power to search homes, ships, and warehouses for smuggled goods. The colonists challenged these writs in court in all 13 colonies. This strong opposition led the Framers to ban general warrants in the 4th Amendment.

\section*{Answers}

Caption to protect the right of each State to maintain a militia

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Organize students into five groups. Distribute the Chapter 20 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 141), which asks students to summarize Supreme Court rulings in search and seizure cases, to evaluate each ruling's impact on 4th Amendment rights, and to decide whether they agree with the decisions.

LPR Differentiate Have each group complete one case on the chart and explain it to the class.

\section*{DEFINE EXCLUSIONARY RULE}

Ask students to define the exclusionary rule. (Evidence gained by police as the result of an unreasonable or illegal act cannot be used at the trial of the person from whom it was seized. ) Ask: Is the exclusionary rule found in the Constitution? (It is not. The Supreme Court developed this rule through its decisions over the years in a wide variety of cases.) What is the purpose of the exclusionary rule? (to prevent law enforcement officers from obtaining evidence illegally)
L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students for synonyms of exclude. (keep out, reject, prevent) Then ask students why this rule is called the exclusionary rule. (It rejects unlawfully obtained or tainted evidence.) Ask: What does the word tainted mean? (damaged or rotten) What does "tainted evidence" refer to? (evidence that has been illegally gathered without a warrant or probable cause)

\section*{Answers}

Constitutional Principles Judicial review has helped define what constitutes probable cause and reasonable suspicion, including fleeing from police, casing a store, and an officer's belief that a person is armed and dangerous.

\section*{4th Amendment}

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

the 4th Amendment has proved a highly important guarantee. See the text of the 4th Amendment above.

Probable Cause The basic rule laid down by the 4th Amendment is this: Police officers have no general right to search for evidence or to seize either evidence or persons. Except in special circumstances, they must have a proper warrant (a court order). That warrant must be obtained with probable causethat is, a reasonable suspicion of crime.

Florida v. J.L., 2000, illustrates the rule. There, Miami police received a tip that a teenager was carrying a concealed weapon. Two officers went to the bus stop where the tipster said the young man could be found. The police located him, searched him, pulled a gun from his pocket, and arrested him.

The Court held that the police acted illegally because they did not have a proper warrant. All they had was an anonymous tip, unsupported by any other evidence. Their conduct amounted to just the sort of thing the 4th Amendment was intended to prevent.

Police do not always need a warrant, however-for example, when evidence is "in plain view." Thus, the Court upheld a search and seizure involving two men who were bagging cocaine. A policeman spotted them through an open window, entered the apartment, seized the cocaine, and arrested them. The Court upheld their conviction, rejecting a claim to 4th Amendment protection, Minnesota v. Carter, 1999.

Many 4th Amendment cases are complicated. In Lidster v. Illinois, 2004, for example, the Court upheld the use of so-called "informational roadblocks." In 1997, police had set up barriers on a busy highway near Chicago, hoping to find witnesses to a recent hit-and-run accident. When Robert Lidster was stopped, an officer smelled alcohol on him. Lidster failed several sobriety tests and

586 Civil Liberties: Protecting Individual Rights

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

NIX V. WIILIAMS A young girl disappeared from a YMCA. After finding items of her clothing several miles away, police organized 200 volunteers to search the area. Meanwhile, Robert Williams surrendered to local police. In conversing with the officer on the drive back to the city, without an attorney present, Williams gave information leading officers to the girl's body. Williams was convicted. On appeal, Williams' lawyer argued to exclude the body as evidence because Williams' statement was illegally obtained. The Supreme Court ruled the evidence was admissible, because the volunteers would have found the body without the statement. "If the prosecution can establish that the information ultimately or inevitably would have been discovered by lawful means-here, the volunteers' search-then . . . the evidence should be received. " This ruling established the inevitable discovery exception. was arrested on a drunk-driving charge. Lidster's attorney filed a motion to quash (set aside) that arrest. The lawyer argued that Lidster was forced to stop by officers who, before they stopped him, had no valid reason (no probable cause) to believe that he had committed any crime.

Lidster lost that argument. The Court upheld both his conviction and the use of informational roadblocks. Lidster had simply run afoul of the long arm of coincidence.

Arrests An arrest is the seizure of a person. When officers make a lawful arrest, they do not need a warrant to search "the area from within which [the suspect] might gain possession of a weapon or destructible evidence." \({ }^{5}\) In fact, most arrests take place without a warrant. Police can arrest a person in a public place without one, provided they have probable cause to believe that person has committed or is about to commit a crime. \({ }^{6}\)

Illinois v. Wardlow, 2000, illustrates this point. There, four police cars were patrolling a high-crime area in Chicago. When Wardlow spotted them, he ran. An officer chased him down an alley, caught him, and found that Wardlow was carrying a loaded pistol. The Court held, 5-4, that Wardlow's behav-ior-his flight-gave the police "common sense" grounds on which to believe that he was involved in some criminal activity. (Note, however, that the Court did not hold that police have a blanket power to stop anyone who flees at the sight of a police officer.)

When, exactly, does the 4th Amendment protection come into play? The Court has several times held that this point is reached "only when the officer, by means of physical force or show of authority, has in some way restrained the liberty of a citizen," Terry v. Ohio, 1968.

Automobiles The Court has long had difficulty applying the 4 th Amendment to 5 This rule was first laid down in Chimel v. California, 1969, Chimel was arrested, in his home, on a burglary charge and police searched for evidence of his stealing.

6 A person arrested without a warrant must be brought promptly before a judge for a probable cause hearing. In County of Riverside v. McLaughin, 1991, the Court held that "prompty" means within 48 hours.
automobiles. It has several times held that an officer needs no warrant to search an automobile, a boat, an airplane, or some other vehicle, when there is probable cause to believe that it is involved in illegal activities-because such a "movable scene of crime" could disappear while a warrant was being sought.

Carroll v. United States, 1925, is an early leading case on the point. There, the Court emphasized that "where the securing of a warrant is reasonably practicable, it must be used, . . . In cases where seizure is impossible except without a warrant, the seizing officer acts unlawfully and at his peril unless he can show the court probable cause."

The Court overturned a long string of automobile search cases in 1991. Before then, it had several times held that a warrant was usually needed to search a glove compartment, a paper bag, luggage, or other "closed containers" in an automobile. But, in California v. Acevedo, 1991, the Court set out what it called "one clear-cut rule to govern automobile searches." Whenever police lawfully stop a car, they do not need a warrant to search anything in that vehicle that they have reason to believe holds evidence of a crime. "Anything" includes a passenger's belongings, Wyoming v. Houghton, 1999.

Police, upon making a routine traffic stop, do not need to secure a warrant in order to use a trained dog to sniff around (search) the outside of a car for narcotics, Illinois v . Caballes, 2005. Most recently, however, the Court has held that when officers make a traffic stop, the Constitution protects passengers as well as drivers against an illegal search or seizure, Brendlin v. Cali frnia, 2007. When a car is stopped, said the Court, both driver and passenger are in police control and neither of them can be searched without probable cause.

\section*{The Exclusionary Rule}

The heart of the guarantee against unreasonable searches and seizures lies in this question: If an unlawful search or seizure does occur, can that "tainted evidence" be used in court? If so, the 4th Amendment offers no real protection to a person accused of crime.

\section*{DENTIFY EXCLUSIONARY RULE LIMITS}

Read aloud the following situations regarding the exclusionary rule. Have students raise their hands if they think the statements are true. You may want to have students skim the text and identify the specific cases as you read the statements.
- Police may introduce evidence gathered by illegal means, if they can prove that they eventually would have found this evidence legally. (True-Nix v. Williams)
- Evidence can be admissible if it was obtained by police officers who thought they had a valid search warrant but which was later found to be faulty. (True-United States v. Leon)
- A warrantless search for a specific item turns up other, different illegal materials, which can be used at a trial. (False-Mapp v. Ohio)
- Tainted evidence found through an honest mistake is admissible in court. (True-Maryland \(v\). Garrison)
- Evidence obtained by police who did not knock before forcing their way into a residence can still be used in a trial. (True-Hudson v. Michigan) See the political cartoon mini-lesson.
L2 LPR Differentiate Display Transparency 20C, Exceptions to the Exclusionary Rule, and discuss each limit on the exclusionary rule as the statements above are read. Less-proficient readers may be prompted to contribute by guiding them to complete a diagram or flowchart for each case.

\section*{tainted}
adj. spoiled, tarnished, flawed

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 20D, 4th Amendment Rights, about the knock-and-announce rule. Ask: Who are the two men, and what are they preparing to do? (police officers; break down the door of someone's home) Which case is depicted in this cartoon? (Hudson v. Michigan, 2006)How did the Court rule on the case? (Evidence seized without giving prior notice is still admissible in a trial.) What was the Court's reasoning behind its decision? (The knock-announce-wait rule is not intended to give people time to hide evidence. ) The cartoonist does not show a search warrant. Does that affect the way you interpret the Court's ruling? Explain. (Leaving out the search warrant makes the actions of the police officers illegal and might make the viewer more likely to disagree with the Court's decision. The police in this case did have a search warrant, however.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Whenever police lawfully stop a car, they do not need a warrant to search anything in that vehicle that they have reason to believe holds evidence of a crime.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 20 Extend Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 144), which describes a search and seizure case that took place in a public high school in 1980. Begin by asking students to identify the constitutional issue in the case. After studying the case, students can discuss how they think the Court should rule and then prepare their own summary with the reasons for their opinion. Use Think-Pair-Share (p. T22) to give students a chance to verbalize their thoughts before they write their summaries.
After students have completed their worksheets and shared their summaries with the class, tell them that in T.L.O. v. New Jersey, the Supreme Court ruled that the vice principal's decision to search the students' belongings was "reasonable." He did not need to show probable cause or get a warrant. Students' privacy and 4th Amendment rights must be weighed against the school's interest in preventing the use of illegal drugs. The Supreme Court stated that the New Jersey supreme court had been wrong to suppress the evidence found by the vice principal. Administrators and teachers have the authority, in order to maintain discipline and order, to take immediate action in certain situations.
L4 Differentiate Have students research two cases related to school drug-testing programs: Vernonia School District v. Acton and Board of Education of Independent School District No. 92 of Pottawatomie County v. Earls. After completing their research, have students give a short speech that:
- identifies the issues each case raises about students' 4th Amendment rights;
- compares and contrasts the facts and the rulings in the two cases;
- explains whether the student agrees or disagrees with the Supreme Court's decision in each case.
L2 Differentiate Have students conduct a citizens' rights poll. Questions may include: (1) What does the 4th Amendment guarantee? (2) May an officer arrest a suspect without a warrant? (3) May an officer search a driver and passenger if their vehicle is pulled over? Have students summarize the findings of the poll on a poster.

To meet that problem, the Supreme Court has adopted, and is still refining, the exclusionary rule. Essentially, the rule is this: Evidence gained as the result of an illegal act by police cannot be used at the trial of the person from whom it was seized.

The rule was first laid down in Weeks v . United States, 1914. In that narcotics case, the Court held that evidence obtained illegally by federal officers could not be used in the federal courts. For decades, however, the Court left questions of the use of such evidence in State courts for each State to decide for itself.

- Case: Mapp v. Ohio, 1961 - Issue: States' use of illegally obtained evidence Decision: After a warrantless search for a fugitive in Dollree Mapp's house, police officers instead turned up "lewd and lascivious material" and used it as evidence to convict Mapp. The Supreme Court struck down Mapp's conviction, holding that evidence seized illegally could not be used in either federal or State courts.

Mapp v. Ohio The exclusionary rule was finally extended to the States in Mapp v. Ohio, 1961. There, the Court held that the 14th Amendment forbids unreasonable searches and seizures by State and local officers just as the 4th Amendment bars such actions by federal officers. It also held that the fruits of an unlawful search or seizure cannot be used in the State courts, just as they cannot be used in the federal courts.

In Mapp, Cleveland police had gone to Dollree Mapp's home to search for a fugitive who was connected to a bombing. They entered her home forcibly, and without a warrant. Their very extensive search failed to turn up any evidence of the fugitive, but they did find some obscene books. Mapp was then convicted of possession of obscene materials and sentenced to jail. The Court overturned her conviction, holding that the evidence against her had been found and seized without a warrant.

Cases Narrowing the Rule The exclusionary rule has always been controversial. It was intended to put teeth into the 4th Amendment, and it has. It says to police: As you enforce the law, obey the law. The rule seeks to prevent, or at least deter, police misconduct.

Critics of the rule say that it means that some persons who are clearly guilty nonetheless go free. Why, they ask, should criminals be able to "beat the rap" on "a technicality"?

The Court has narrowed the scope of the rule most notably in the four cases in the feature on the next page.

Drug Testing Programs Federal drugtesting programs involve searches of persons, so are covered by the 4th Amendment. To date, however, the Court has held that those programs can be conducted without warrants or even any indication of drug use by those who must take the tests. It did so in two 1989 cases. One involved the mandatory testing of those drug enforcement officers of the U.S. Customs Service (now Immigration and Customs Enforcement) who carry firearms, National Treasury Employees Union v. Von Raab. The other had to do with the testing of railroad workers after a train accident, Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Association. In effect, the Court said in both cases that the violations of privacy involved were outweighed by a legitimate governmental inter-est-for example, in Skinner, discovering the cause of a train accident.

The Court has also upheld two local school districts' drug-testing programs, both covered by the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause. It sustained an Oregon school district's program that requires all students who take part in school sports to agree to be tested for drug use, Vernonia School District v. Acton, 1995. That ruling was extended in a case from Oklahoma, Board of Education of Independent School District No. 92 of Pottawatomie County v. Earls, 2002. There, the Court upheld the random testing of students who want to participate in any competitive extracurricular activity. In both of these cases, the Court said that "a warrant and finding of probable cause are unnecessary in the public school context because [they] would unduly interfere with ... swift and informal disciplinary procedures."

The Patriot Act The USA Patriot Act, commonly called the Patriot Act, is officially the Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism Act of 2001. It was passed by Congress and signed by President George W. Bush just six weeks after the terrorist attacks of 9/11. That 342 -page statute

\section*{Debate}

Since Pottawatomie, drug testing of students participating in extracurricular activities has expanded, leading to court challenges. A Pennsylvania school tested Kimberly and Jennifer Theodore. School officials did not suspect the girls of drug use or have any evidence of use. The girls were student leaders, and the school tested them to set an example. Their parents felt the test was an invasion of privacy, and sued. In Theodore v. Delaware Valley School District, 2003, the Pennsylvania supreme court ruled for the parents. In the opinion, Justice Ronald D. Castille wrote: "The [school's] theory apparently is that, even in the absence of any suspicion of drug or alcohol abuse, it is appropriate to single these students out and say, in effect: 'Choose one: your Pennsylvania constitutional right to privacy or the chess club. '" To begin a class debate, ask:
Should schools be allowed to conduct "suspicionless" drug tests?

\section*{Exceptions to the Exclusionary Rule}

In recent decades, the Supreme Court has narrowed the scope of the exclusionary rule by allowing evidence to be admissible in situations that it previously had not. What is the purpose of that rule?

\section*{Inevitable Discovery}

Tainted evidence can be used in court if it "inevitably would have been discovered by lawful means." In Nix v. Williams, 1984, the defendant claimed the evidence against him had been found only after his confession was illegally obtained. The Court ruled that the evidence ultimately would have been found without the defendant's

\section*{Knock-andAnnounce Violation}

The centuries-old "knock-and-announce" rule requires that police announce their presence before serving a warrant. The rule is intended to give residents a chance to open the door, not hide evidence. The Court found that the rule is meant to protect persons and property from violence when police arrive, Hudson police arrive, Huds
v. Michigan, 2006.

\section*{Good Faith}

In United States v. Leon, 1984, agents thought they were using a proper warrant. Their warrant was later shown to be faulty, but the Court upheld their actions nonetheless: "When an officer acting with objective good faith has obtained a search warrant . . . and acted within its scope .. there is nothing to deter."

\section*{Honest Mistakes}

The Court allowed the use of evidence seized in the mistaken search of an apartment, Maryland v. Garrison, 1987. Officers had a warrant to search for drugs in an apartment on the third floor of a building. Not realizing that there were two apartments, they entered and found drugs in the wrong apartment-the one for which they did not have a warrant.
was renewed, after some contentious debate and with some modifications, in 2006.

The law provides for greatly increased governmental powers to combat domestic and international terrorist activities. Its major provisions focus on three broad areas: surveillance and investigation, immigration, and the financing of terrorist groups. Several provisions raise significant civil liberties issues that, over time, will be tested in the courts.

Of particular 4th Amendment concern are the act's provisions that allow so-called "sneak-and-peek searches." Under the statute, federal agents, acting with a warrant, may enter a person's home or office when no one is present and conduct a search-making notes, taking photos, and so on. The agents need not notify the person who is the subject of the search for weeks or even months-and so they are able to continue their investigation without that person's knowledge.

Wiretapping Electronic eavesdropping, such as wiretapping, videotaping, and other more sophisticated means of "bugging," is now quite widely used in the United States. These various techniques of discovery present difficult search and seizure questions that the authors of the 4th Amendment could not possibly have foreseen.

\section*{Background}

4TH AMENDMENT PROTECTIONS The Court has decided only a handful of eavesdropping cases since Katz. In 1999 it held that "a reasonable expectation of privacy" had been violated when police officers invited reporters and photographers to go with them into a man's home to witness their search and his arrest, Wilson v. Layne. And it has ruled that federal agents must secure a warrant before they can use heat-sensing devices to look inside a person's home to find evidence of drug law violations, Kyllo v. United States, 2001

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for a guided audio tour of several Supreme Court cases.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L 3 Tell students that a foreign exchange student needs to know her 4th Amendment rights against unreasonable searches and seizures. Have students develop a brochure or draw an illustrated guide showing law enforcement actions that are limited by the 4th Amendment and the exclusionary rule. Law enforcement actions that are upheld by Court rulings should also be included.
L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess student work using the Rubric for Assessing a Graph, Chart, or Table (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 240).
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 146)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 147)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Exceptions to the Exclusionary Rule The exclusionary rule was intended to make 4th Amendment protections meaningful by preventing the use of illegally obtained evidence in court.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
13th Amendment protections \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make a timeline showing \\ the changes in application of the \\ 13th Amendment as discussed in this \\
section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
2nd Amendment protections \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students to write two editorials \\ on gun control, one from the point \\ of view of gun-control addocates \\ (such as the Fraternal Order of Police) \\ and one from the point of view of \\ gun-control opponents (such as the \\ National Rifle Association).
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
4th Amendment protections \\
(Questions 1, 4, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students draw a two-column \\ chart. In the first column, they should \\ list at least ten Court cases discussed \\ in the text regarding the 4th Amend- \\ ment. In the second column, next to \\ each case, students should write the \\ constitutional guarantees that resulted \\ from or were narrowed by the case in \\ column one.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Checkpoint
How did the Court's ruling in Katz v. United States differ from its ruling in Olmstead v. United States?

The 4th Amendment has always applied to "searches" that involve a physical intru-sion-for example, a police officer entering a building or reaching inside a car. The amendment has also always applied to "seizures" that produce some tangible object-for example, a gun or a packet of methamphetamines found inside a car. Listening in on a conversation electronically, from afar, is a quite different matter.

In fact, in its first eavesdropping case, Olmstead v. United States, 1928, the Court held that the wiretapping there did not constitute a "search." The case arose when federal agents tapped a Seattle bootlegger's telephone calls. Their bugs produced evidence that led to Olmstead's conviction under the National Prohibition Act. The Court upheld that conviction. It found that, although the agents had not secured a warrant, there had been no "actual physical invasion" of Olmstead's home or office, and so no violation of the 4th Amendment because the phone lines had been tapped outside those places.

Olmstead stood for nearly forty years. It was finally overruled in what remains the leading case today, Katz v. United States, 1967. Katz had been convicted of transmitting gambling information across State lines. He had used a public phone booth in Los Angeles to call his contacts in Boston and Miami. Much of the evidence against him had come from an electronic tap placed on the roof-outside-of the phone booth.

The Court ruled that the bugging evidence could not be used against Katz. Despite the fact that he was in a public, glass-enclosed phone booth, he was entitled to make a private call, from a place where he had "a reasonable expectation of privacy." Said the Court: The 4th Amendment protects "persons, not just places." It noted, however, that the requirements of the amendment can be satisfied in such situations if police obtain a proper warrant before they install a listening device.

Congress responded to the Court's decision in Katz in a provision in the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Street Act of 1968. There, Congress prohibited any wiretapping for domestic purposes except that authorized by a warrant issued by a federal judge.

Soon after September 11, President George W. Bush directed the National Security Agency (NSA), acting in secret and without court-approved warrants, to monitor the international telephone calls and e-mails of Americans with suspected ties to terrorists. The public did not become aware of that monitoring program until late 2005, and its disclosure brought a storm of protest. Many insist that this NSA activity is illegal. However, the Bush administration defended it as an appropriate exercise of the President's power as commander in chief.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\) Journal Essential Question, go to your

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint In Olmstead, the Court ruled that wiretapping did not involve a search and, therefore, needed no warrant. Katz overruled Olmstead, stating that wiretapping a phone booth violated a person's 4th Amendment right to privacy.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: How does the Constitution protect the freedom and security of the person?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Express Problems Clearly (a) What does the exclusionary rule exclude? (b) Does the exclusionary rule serve the interests of justice? Answer this question first as the defendant in a criminal trial, and then as an arresting police officer.

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}

2 (a) What does the 13th Amendment guarantee? (b) How did the Civil Rights Cases, 1883, undermine those guarantees?
3. (a) How does the 4th Amendment limit government? (b) When does the 4th Amendment come into play during an arrest?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Essay: Organize Your Notes Research to find additiona information on the case you selected in Section 1, taking notes as you read. Then organize your notes under main Th organize you notes un headings. Scan the material for sub topics. Subtopics may include What is this case about? How did it change an existing law? Why it is important to individual rights today? Under your subtopics, write related details.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. through the 2 nd, 3 rd, 4 th, 13 th, and 14 th amendments
2. (a) the end to slavery and involuntary servitude (b) by allowing racial discrimination against African Americans by private individuals
3. (a) by requiring officers to show probable cause to obtain a warrant to search for or seize evidence or a suspect (b) when an officer has in some way restrained the liberty of a citizen
4. (a) evidence gained as a result of an illegal act by police (b) Possible answers: Defendant's view: Yes. The rule protects the accused and prevents police misconduct. Police view: No The rule unreasonably restricts the ability of police officers to gather evidence to convict a guilty person.
5. (a) The police illegally tapped a phone booth in which Katz had a "reasonable expectation of privacy." (b) Possible answer: Yes. Tapping phones is an invasion of privacy that should be illegal unless supported by a warrant.
QUICK WRITE Students should organize ideas from their notes by the main headings and subtopics they identify.

\section*{Balancing Security and Liberty}

\section*{Track the Issue}

As international relations expanded in the 20th century, so too did government surveillance.

The Bureau of Investigation (BOI) is formed and becomes the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) in 1935.

The National Security Act establishes the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) to coordinate intelligence affecting national security

The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) is passed. The FISA Court must issue warrants to authorize secret surveillance of suspected terrorists in the U.S.

The Patriot Act is passed. The Nationa Security Agency (NSA) secretly monitors international calls and e-mails of Americans with suspected ties to terrorists without court-approved warrants.

The Protect America Act revises FISA warrant requirements, granting immunity to telecommunications companies that eavesdropped on Americans without warrants.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor

\section*{Perspectives}

The 4th Amendment protection against unreasonable search and seizure without probable cause is always tested during times of war. The government contends that with new technologies, traditional methods of obtaining search warrants give terrorists an advantage. How far into the realm of individual liberties can or should the government go to protect national security?
"It is during our most challenging . moments that our Nation's commitment to due process is most severely tested. We have . . . made clear that a state of war is not a blank check for the President when it comes to the rights of the Nation's citizens. Whatever power the Constitution envisions for the Executive in its exchanges with other nations or with enemy organizations in times of conflict, it most assuredly envisions a role for all three branches when individual liberties are at stake ."
-Justice Sandra Day 0 'Connor, 2004
"FISA requires the intelligence community to make a finding of probable cause... [which] was never intended to be expanded to protect the rights of foreign terrorists overseas. Showing probable cause often takes time, is sometimes impossible, and makes intelligence officers spend valuable time convincing lawyers that this standard is met, rather than doing their most important task-hunting down terrorists and other foreign threats."
-Dana Perino,
Press Secretary, 2008

\section*{Connect to Your World}
1. Understand (a) What rights does Justice O'Connor concede to the executive branch during wartime? (b) How does the executive branch justify surveillance without a warrant?
2. Draw Conclusions Which argument do you find to be the most convincing? Why?

\section*{Background}

ATtACKING TERRORIST COMMUNICATIONS A fundamental goal of U.S. intelligence agencies is to infiltrate communications networks of terrorists. According to the National Strategy for Combating Terrorism: "The methods by which terrorists communicate are numerous and varied. Our enemies rely on couriers and face-to-face contacts with associates and tend to use what is accessible in their local areas as well as what they can afford. They also use today's technologies with increasing acumen and sophistication. This is especially true with the Internet, which they exploit to create and disseminate propaganda, recruit new members, raise funds and other material resources, provide instruction on weapons and tactics, and plan operations. Without a communications ability, terrorist groups cannot effectively organize operations, execute attacks, or spread their ideology."

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will analyze points of view on the issue of protecting national security while guarding individual liberties.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{STUDY THE TIMELINE}

Draw a horizontal line on the board. As volunteers read aloud the entries under "Track the Issue," write the years and general events in the appropriate place on the timeline. Then, between the 1947 and 1978 entries, write "1967 The Supreme Court rules that bugging is illegal without a search warrant, Katz v. United States." Ask: How does knowledge of this event affect your perception of the 2001 and 2008 events?

\section*{ANALYZE HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE}

Write these quotes by James Madison on the board:
- It is a universal truth that the loss of liberty at home is to be charged to the provisions against danger, real or pretended, from abroad.
- The means of defense against foreign danger historically have become the instruments of tyranny at home.
Discuss how Madison's statements support the comment by Justice O'Connor in the feature. Ask whether Madison's statements are applicable to today's war on terrorism. Why or why not?
L2 ELL Differentiate Define universal (commonly agreed upon), provisions (steps taken to meet a need), and tyranny (oppression).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Refer students to the Document-Based Assessment at the end of this chapter. Discuss reasons why the Patriot Act is so controversial. Then have students draw a political cartoon reflecting their own opinions about the Patriot Act.

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) the right to have exchanges with other nations or with enemy organizations (b) Probable cause was never intended to protect the rights of foreign terrorists overseas; showing probable cause takes time, is sometimes impossible, and takes intelligence officers away from hunting down terrorists and other foreign threats.
2. Students should support their responses.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{Rights of the Accused} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
5th Amendment \\
- grand jury in federal criminal cases \\
- no double jeopardy \\
- no self-incrimination
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
6th Amendment \\
- speedy and public trial \\
- impartial jury \\
- adequate defense \\
- informed of nature and cause of accusation \\
- confront witnesses \\
- subpoena favorable witnesses \\
- assistance of counsel
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- identify the rights of people accused of crimes by note-taking, completing a tree diagram, and discussing a case related to habeas corpus.
- evaluate the guarantee against self-incrimination by participating in simulations and analyzing a case related to the Miranda rule.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 148) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 149)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{GIVE A MULTIMEDIA PRESENTATION}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What protections does the Constitution set out for persons accused of crimes? Use a table to take notes on the section.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Rights of the Accused } \\
\hline 5th Amendment & 6th Amendment \\ \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- writ of habeas - presentment corpus • information
- bill of attainder - double
- ex post facto
- double jeopardy law
- grand jury
- Miranda rule
- indictment

\section*{Objectives}
1. Define writ of habeas corpus, bills of attainder, and ex post facto laws.
2. Outline how the right to a grand jury and the guarantee against double jeopardy help safeguard the rights of the accused.
3. Describe issues that arise from guarantees of speedy and public trials.
4. Determine what constitutes a fair trial by jury.
5. Examine the right to an adequate defense and the guarantee against self-incrimination.

Image Above: A suspect must be brought before the court and informed of the charges against him.

T
 that one innocent person be punished." That maxim expresses one of the bedrock principles of the American legal system.

Of course, society must punish criminals in order to preserve itself. However, the law intends that any person who is suspected or accused of a crime must be presumed innocent until proven guilty by fair and lawful means.

\section*{Habeas Corpus}

The writ of habeas corpus, sometimes called the writ of liberty, is intended to prevent unjust arrests and imprisonments. \({ }^{7}\) It is a court order directed to an officer holding a prisoner. It commands that the prisoner be brought before the court and that the officer show cause-explain, with good reason-why the prisoner should not be released.

The right to seek a writ of habeas corpus is protected against the National Government in Article I, Section 9 of the Constitution. That right is guaranteed against the States in each of their own constitutions.

The Constitution says that the right to the writ cannot be suspended, "unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it." President Abraham Lincoln suspended the writ in 1861 during the Civil War. His order covered various parts of the country, including several areas in which war was not then being waged. Chief Justice Roger B. Taney, sitting as a circuit judge, held Lincoln's action unconstitutional, Ex parte Merryman, 1861.

Taney ruled that the Constitution gives the power to suspend the writ to Congress alone. Congress then passed the Habeas Corpus Act of 1863. It gave the President the power to suspend the writ when and where, in his judgment, that action was necessary. In Ex parte Milligan, 1866, the Supreme Court ruled that neither Congress nor the President can suspend the writ in those locales where there is no actual fighting nor the likelihood of combat.

The right to the writ has been suspended only once since the Civil War and the Reconstruction Period that followed it. The territorial governor of Hawaii

\footnotetext{
7 The phrase habeas cor
}

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Rights of the accused include the writ of habeas corpus and a constitutional ban on bills of attainder and ex post facto laws. - Persons accused of serious federal crimes have the right to a grand jury proceeding. - Accused persons are guaranteed a speedy and public trial by jury, the right to an adequate defense, and a guarantee against self-incrimination and double jeopardy. - Suspects must be told of their constitutional rights before police questioning.
CONCEPTS: individual rights and responsibilities, due process of law, limited government ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • In the American judicial system, any person accused of a crime is presumed innocent until proven guilty. - The 5th and 6th amendments contain provisions guaranteeing rights to people accused of crimes.
did so following the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in December 1941. The Supreme Court later ruled that the governor did not have the power to take that action, Duncan v. Kahanamoku, 1946.

In 2008, the Supreme Court held, for the first time, that foreign prisoners being held as enemy combatants at the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, have a constitutional right to challenge their detention-that is, a right to seek writs of habeas corpus-in the federal courts, Boumediene v. Bush and Al Odah v. United States. The Bush administration had vigorously opposed that 5-4 ruling.

\section*{Bills of Attainder}

A bill of attainder is a legislative act that provides for the punishment of a person without a court trial. The Constitution prohibits Congress from passing any such measure in Article I, Section 9, and it places the same prohibition on the States in Section 10.

The Framers wrote the ban on bills of attainder into the Constitution because Parliament and several of the colonial legislatures had passed many such bills. They have been quite rare in our national history, however.

The denial of the power to pass bills of attainder is both a protection of individual freedom and one of the Constitution's several provisions for separation of powers. In effect, the ban says to members of Congress and to the States' lawmakers: Be legislators, not judges. A legislative body can pass laws that define crime and set the penalties for violations of them. But it cannot pass a law that declares a person or identifiable group of persons guilty of a crime and provides for his or their punishment.

The Supreme Court has heard a handful of attainder cases in the last 140 years. One was decided in the early stages of the Cold War. It involved a provision in the law appropriating funds for the army that declared that none of the monies provided could be used to pay the salaries of three named persons. Several members of the House thought that those three were "subversive," and they had urged the President to fire them. The Court found that provision to be a bill of attainder, United States v. Lovett, 1946.

In another similar case, United States v. Brown, 1965, the Court overturned a provision in the Landrum-Griffin Act of 1959. That provision made it a federal crime for a member of the Communist Party to serve as an officer of a labor union.

\section*{Ex Post Facto Laws}

The Constitution, in Article I, Sections 9 and 10 , prohibits Congress and the State legislatures from enacting ex post facto laws. An ex post facto law is a law applied to an act committed before its passage. The phrase ex post facto is from the Latin, meaning "after the fact." An ex post facto law (1) is a criminal law-one defining a crime and/or providing for its punishment; (2) applies to an act committed before its passage; and (3) works to the disadvantage of the accused

For example, a law making it a crime to sell marijuana cannot be applied to a sale that occurred before that law was passed. Or, a law that changes the penalty for murder from life in prison to death cannot be used to sentence a person who committed a murder before the punishment was made more severe.

Retroactive civil laws are not forbidden.

Thus, a law raising income tax rates could be passed in November and applied to income

After the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor,

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 20, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 148)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 149)
L3 L2 Core Worksheet A (pp. 151, 155)
L3 L2 Core Worksheet B (pp. 153, 158)
L3 Quiz A (p. 161)
L2 Quiz B (p. 162)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 20E, 5th Amendment Rights, which tests students' prior knowledge about the Miranda rights and "taking the Fifth." Have students answer the questions in their notebooks.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Discuss the Bellringer questions. (1) What "rights" is the man in Cartoon A requesting? (From movies and television, students may know the Miranda rights: right to remain silent; anything you say can and will be used against you in a court of law; right to an attorney; if you cannot afford one, an attorney will be appointed for you. ) (2) In Cartoon B, what does "take the Fifth" mean? (Students may know that "taking the Fifth" means remaining silent or not answering any questions that may lead to selfincrimination. ) (3) How are these cartoons related? (Both deal with rights of the accused.) Ask: When are the Miranda rights usually read to someone? (Students should infer from the cartoon that the rights are read to someone who has "done something wrong"; legally, after arrest and before interrogation.)

\section*{CLARIFY RIGHTS OF THE ACCUSED}

Introduce this activity by asking students: What is the underlying principle toward the accused in the U.S. justice system? (that people are innocent until proven guilty) Who has the burden of proving guilt? (the prosecution or government) Then organize students into seven groups. Assign each group one of these topics: (a) habeas corpus; (b) grand jury; (c) double jeopardy; (d) speedy and public trial; (e) trial by jury; (f) right to an adequate defense; (g) guarantee against self-incrimination. Each group should use the text to record the following: (1) the exact wording of the amendment or part of the Constitution where this right is found; (2) definition of the right in their own words; (3) how this right protects a person accused of a crime; (4) what responsibilities this right puts on the judicial system; (5) Supreme Court precedents related to this right and how the decision in each case limited or expanded this guarantee; and (6) how the criminal justice system would be different if people accused of crimes did not have this right.

\section*{\(\square\)}

ELL Differentiate Before beginning the group work, have volunteers find and read the definitions of these words in the dictionary: habeas corpus, jeopardy, self-incrimination.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Congress

\section*{SHARE NOTES USING JIGSAW STRATEGY}

After groups have completed the discussion and notes of their assigned topic (see Clarify Rights of the Accused on the previous page), use the Jigsaw strategy ( \(\mathrm{p} . \mathrm{T} 27\) ), which allows students to teach the other groups what they have learned. Conclude by asking students in their second groups to pick the three rights of the accused they think are most important. Ask each group to share its choices and reasons with the class.

\section*{DIAGRAM RIGHTS OF THE ACCUSED}

Display Transparency 20F, Rights of the Accused, which shows the How Government Works diagram "Steps of Justice." Then draw a tree diagram on the board to help students categorize and review the rights of the accused. Label the four squares "At Arrest," "Before Trial," "During Trial," and "After Trial. " Students should put each of the rights listed on the transparency into the appropriate part of the diagram. Explain that "After Trial" rights will be discussed in Section 4. "No excessive fines or cruel and unusual punishment" and "right to appeal" should be written in that part of the diagram.

\section*{Answers}

Steps of Justice officers must have warrant or act on probable cause; no unreasonable search or seizure; accused may request writ of habeas corpus; accused must be informed of right to counsel and to remain silent; no third degree methods or coerced confession; accused may be charged by indictment or presentation; no excessive bail; public trial by impartial jury; accused may request change of venue; assistance of counsel guaranteed; no self-incrimination; favorable witnesses may be subpoenaed, opposing witnesses confronted; jury verdict to convict must be unanimous; no double jeopardy

\section*{Rights of the Accused}

\section*{Steps of Justice}

Any person accused of a crime is presumed to be innocent until proven guilty. What protections does the Constitution extend to those accused of a crime?

\section*{Arrest}
- Officers must have a warrant or act on probable cause.
- No unreasonable search or seizure.
- Accused may request writ of habeas corpus to challenge detention.

\section*{Interrogation}
- Accused must be informed of rights to counsel and to remain silent. silent
- No third degree methods or coerced confession.

Grand Jury Proceeding
- Grand jury weighs evidence provided by prosecutor.
- Accused may be charged by indictment - Accused may be
- Bail, if required, cannot be excessive.

\section*{Grand Jury}

The 5th Amendment to the Constitution states that:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury. . . .
The grand jury is the formal device by which a person can be accused of a serious crime-that is, any offense for which the punishment is death or imprisonment. \({ }^{8}\) In federal cases, it is a body of from 16 to 23 persons drawn from the area of the district

8 The 5th Amendment declares that the guarantee of grand jury 8 The 5th Amendment declares that the guarantee of grand jury does not extend to "cases arising in the land or naval forces
The conduct of members of the armed forces is regulated The conduct of members of the armed forces is regulated Uniform Code of Military Justice.
court that it serves. The votes of at least 12 of the grand jurors are needed to return an indictment or to make a presentment.

An indictment is a formal complaint that the prosecutor lays before a grand jury. It charges the accused with one or more crimes. If the grand jury finds that there is enough evidence for a trial, it returns a "true bill of indictment." The accused person is then held for prosecution. If the grand jury does not make such a finding, the charge is dropped and the accused is set free.

A presentment is a formal accusation brought by the grand jury on its own motion, rather than that of the prosecutor. It is rarely used in federal courts.

A grand jury's proceedings are not a trial. Since unfair harm could come if they were public, its sessions are secret. They are also on one side only-known as an ex parte judicial proceeding. That is, only the prosecution, not the defense, is present.

\section*{Background}

EX POST FACTO LAWS Ex post facto cases do not come along very often. The Court decided its most recent one, Carmel/ v. Texas, in 2000. There, the Court overturned a man's sexual abuse conviction because of a change in State law. That change had made it easier for the prosecution to prove its charge than was the case when the abuse was committed.

\section*{Trial}
- Public trial by an impartial jury within 100 days of arrest.

- Accused may request a change of venue
- Assistance of counsel guaranteed.
- No self-incrimination.
- Favorable witnesses may be subpoenaed, opposing witnesses confronted.
- Jury's verdict to convict

The right to grand jury is intended as a protection against overzealous prosecutors. Critics say that it is too time-consuming, too expensive, and too likely to follow the dictates of the prosecutor.

The 5th Amendment's grand jury provision is the only part of the Bill of Rights relating to criminal prosecution that the Supreme Court has not brought within the coverage of the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause. In the majority of States today, most criminal charges are not brought by grand jury indictment. They are brought, instead, by an information, an affidavit in which the prosecutor swears that there is enough evidence to justify a trial. (For more information, see Chapter 24.)

\section*{Double Jeopardy}

The 5th Amendment's guarantee against double jeopardy is the first of several protections in the Bill of Rights especially intended to \section*{Punishment}

(if found guilty)
- No excessive fine.
- No cruel and unusual punishment.

\section*{Appeals}

Either side may appeal a verdict against it.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to learn more about the rights of the accused.

\section*{ANALYZE HABEAS CORPUS ISSUES}

Distribute the Chapter 20 Section 3 Core Worksheet A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 151). Explain that students will look at the challenges the courts face in balancing due process rights of the accused with national security during wartime. They will analyze the Supreme Court case Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 2004. Before students begin the worksheet, review the definition of habeas corpus in Article 1 of the Constitution. Remind students that the right to a writ of habeas corpus can be suspended "when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it. "

L2 Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 20 Section 3 Core Worksheet A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 155).

L4 Differentiate Have students write an essay based on this quote from the Roman statesman and philosopher Cicero: "In time of war, the laws are silent. " Students should explain what they think Cicero means and how it relates to the habeas corpus cases discussed in the text and on Core Worksheet A.

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}
alternate lesson plan "If you haven't done anything wrong, why not answer the police officer's questions? " To help students answer this question, provide them with a brief historical overview of the 5th Amendment. Then discuss the importance of the 5 th Amendment protection against self-incrimination. Have students write an essay or give an oral presentation about the trade-off between the need for law enforcement and protection of individual rights, such as the right to privacy.

To see this lesson plan, go to ensure fair trials in the federal courts. \({ }^{9}\) Fair trials are guaranteed in State courts by the provisions in each State's constitution and also, recall, by the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause, Benton v. Maryland, 1969.

The 5th Amendment says in part that no person can be "twice put in jeopardy of life or limb." Today, this prohibition against double jeopardy means that once a person has been tried for a crime, he or she cannot be tried again for that same crime.

A person can violate both a federal and a State law in a single act, however-for example, by selling narcotics. That person can then be tried for the federal crime in a federal court and for the State crime in a State court. A single act can also result in several criminal charges. A person who breaks into a 9 See the 5 th, 6 th, 7 th, and 8 th amendments and Article ill, Section 2, Clause 3. The exclusionary rule (practice of excluding evidence obtained in violation of the 4 th Amendment) is also intended to guarantee a fair trial.

\section*{SIMULATE SUPREME COURT CASES}

Ask students to define self-incrimination (acting as a witness against oneself in a criminal case). Then organize students into three groups. Have each group research and simulate one of the cases below, showing how it has affected the guarantee against self-incrimination. Simulations may take the form of a police drama, a documentary, or a radio or TV broadcast about the case.
- Escobedo v. Illinois, 1964: A confession cannot be used against a defendant if the confession was obtained by police who refused to allow the defendant to see an attorney or if the accused was not told that he or she had a right to refuse to answer questions. The Court's ruling extended the exclusionary rule to confessions obtained by unconstitutional means.
- Miranda v. Arizona, 1966: Because the police did not tell Miranda that he had a constitutional right to remain silent and to have an attorney present during interrogation, his rights were violated and his conviction overturned. Convictions will not be upheld in cases in which suspects have not been told of their constitutional rights before questioning.
- Missouri v. Seibert, 2006: The case outlawed two-step interrogations or "rehearsed confessions" if the accused was intentionally not given Miranda warnings until after the police had questioned the accused for the first time.

ASSESSMENT RUBRIC Explain to students that an excellent simulation will meet these standards:
1. Research: All members of the group conducted thorough research. Research was detailed and showed a deep understanding of the guarantee against self-incrimination.
2. Planning: The group made excellent use of planning time, sharing the writing and incorporating peer feedback. The selection of information used was well thought out and insightful.
3. Presentation: The simulation was creative, interesting, organized, focused on topic, and an appropriate length. Group members worked together harmoniously and dynamically. Actors were well rehearsed. The dialog was presented clearly and flowed logically.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Excessive media coverage can jeopardize the right to a fair trial.
store, steals liquor, and sells it can be tried for illegal entry, theft, and selling liquor without a license.

In a trial in which a jury cannot agree on a verdict (a hung jury), there is no jeopardy. It is as though no trial had been held. Nor is double jeopardy involved when a case is appealed to a higher court. \({ }^{10}\)

Several States allow the continued confinement of violent sex predators after they have completed a prison term. The Court has twice held that that confinement is not punishment-and so does not involve double jeopardy. Rather, the practice is intended to protect the public from harm, Kansas v. Hendrick, 1987, and Seling v. Young 2001.

Speedy and Public Trial
The 6th Amendment commands that:

FROM THE CONSTITUTION
In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, . . .

Speedy Trial The guarantee of a speedy trial is meant to ensure that the government will try a person accused of crime within a reasonable time and without undue delay. But how long a delay is too long? The Supreme Court has recognized that each case must be judged on its own merits.

In a leading case, Barker v. Wingo, 1972, the Court listed four criteria for determining if a delay has violated the constitutional protection. They are (1) the length of the delay, (2) the reasons for it, (3) whether the delay has in fact harmed the defendant, and (4) whether the defendant had asked for a prompt trial.

The Speedy Trial Act of 1974 says that the time between a person's arrest and the beginning of his or her federal criminal trial cannot be more than 100 days. The law does allow for some exceptions, however-for 10 The Organized Crime Control Act of 1970 allows federal prosecu 10 The Organized Crime Control Act of 1970 allows federal pro tors to appeal sentences they believe to be too lenient The Supreme Courthas held that such appeals do not violate the double jeopardy guarantee, United States v. Di Francesco, 1980 example, when the defendant must undergo extensive mental tests, or when the defendant or a key witness is ill.

The 6th Amendment guarantees a prompt trial in \(£\) ederal cases. The Supreme Court first applied this right against the States as part of the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause in Klopfer v. North Carolina, 1967.

Public Trial The 6th Amendment says that a trial must also be public. The right to be tried in public is also part of the 14th Amendment's guarantee of procedural due process, In re Oliver, 1948.

A trial must not be too speedy or too public, however. The Supreme Court threw out an Arkansas murder conviction in 1923 on just those grounds. The trial had taken only 45 minutes, and it had been held in a courtroom packed by a threatening mob.

Within reason, a judge can limit both the number and the kinds of spectators who may be present at a trial. Those who seek to disrupt a courtroom can be barred from it. A judge can order a courtroom cleared when the expected testimony may be embarrassing to a witness or to someone else who is not a party to the case.

Many questions about how public a trial should be involve the media-especially newspapers and television. The guarantees of fair trial and free press often collide in the courts. On the one hand, a courtroom is a public place where the media have a right to be present. On the other hand, media coverage can jeopardize a defendant's right to a fair trial. The Supreme Court has often held that the right to a public trial belongs to the defendant, not to the media.

What about televised trials? Television cameras are barred from all federal courtrooms. Yet most States do allow some form of in-court television reporting. Can televising a criminal trial violate a defendant's rights?

In an early major case, Estes v. Texas, 1965, the Supreme Court reversed the conviction of an oil man charged with swindling investors and others out of millions of dollars. The Court found that the media coverage of his trial had been so "circus-like" and disruptive that Estes had been denied his right to a fair trial.

\section*{Debate}

Organize students into two groups to debate this topic: The Court has gone too far in expanding the rights of the accused. Both sides should research the following points to prepare arguments for and against the topic:
- Explain the effects criminal acts have on their intended victims.
- Explain the different types of defenses used by perpetrators of crime.
- Cite the number of people wrongfully accused and incarcerated.

Sixteen years later, the Court held in Chandler v. Florida, 1981, that nothing in the Constitution prevents a State from allowing the televising of a criminal trial. At least, televising is not prohibited as long as steps are taken to avoid too much publicity and to protect the defendant's rights.

\section*{Trial by Jury}

The 6th Amendment also says that a person accused of a federal crime must be tried "by an impartial jury." This guarantee reinforces an earlier one set out in the Constitution, Article III, Section 2. The right to trial by jury is also binding on the States, but only in cases involving "serious" crimes, Duncan v. Louisiana (1968). \({ }^{11}\) The trial jury is often called the petit jury. Petit is the French word for "small."

The 6th Amendment adds that the members of a federal court jury must be drawn from "the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law." This stipulation gives the defendant any benefit there might be in having a jury familiar with the people and problems of the area.

A defendant may ask to be tried in another place-seek a "change of venue"-on grounds that the people of the locality are so prejudiced in the case that an impartial jury cannot be drawn. The judge must decide whether a change of venue is justified.

A defendant may also waive the right to a jury trial. However, he or she can do so only if the judge is satisfied that the defendant fully understands what that action means. In fact, a judge can order a jury trial even when a defendant does not want one. If a defendant waives the right, a bench trial is held, which means that a judge alone hears the case. (Of course, a defendant can plead guilty and so avoid any trial.)

11 In Baldwin v. New York, 1970, the Court defined serious crimes as those for which imprisontent for more than six month is possible.
12 The 14th Amendment does not say that there cannot be juries of fewer than 12 persons, Williams v. Florida, 1970, but it does not allow juries of fewer than six members, Ballew v Georgia, not allow juries of fewer than six members, Ballew v. Georgia, 1978. Nor does it prevent a State from providing for a conviction on a less than unanimous jury vote, Apodaca v. Oregon, 1972. But if a jury has only six members, it may convict only by a unanimous vote, Burch v. Louisiana, 1979.

In federal practice, the jury that hears a criminal case must have 12 members. However, some federal civil cases are tried before juries of as few as six members. Several States now provide for smaller juries, often of six members, in both criminal and civil cases.

In the federal courts, the jury that hears a criminal case can convict the accused only by a unanimous vote. Most States follow the same rule. \({ }^{12}\)

In a long series of cases, dating from Strauder v. West Virginia, 1880, the Supreme Court has held that a jury must be "drawn from a fair cross section of the community." A person is denied the right to an impartial jury if he or she is tried by a jury from which members of any groups "playing major roles in the community" have been excluded, Taylor v. Louisiana, 1975. In short, no person can be kept off a jury on such grounds as race, color, religion, national origin, or gender.

\section*{Adequate Defense}

Every person accused of a crime has the right to the best possible defense that circumstances will allow. In Gideon v. Wainwright, 1963, the Court held that an attorney must be furnished to a defendant who cannot afford one. In many places, a judge assigns a lawyer from the local community, 1963 to counsel

\section*{SUPREME COURT at a glance}
- Case: Gideon v. Wainwright,
, Issue: 6th Amendment right
Decision: Clarence Earl Gideon (below) defended himself at his trial and was found guilty. He wrote to the Supreme Court, say ing that he had been unconstitutionally denied counsel. The Court agreed and ordered a new trial, holding that an attorney must be provided to those who cannot afford one.

Checkpoint What are the advantages of having a local jury? Of having a change in venue?

\section*{waive}
v. to give up or forgo
\(\square\)

\section*{EVALUATE THE MIRANDA RULE}

Distribute the Chapter 20 Section 3 Core Worksheet B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 153), which examines the case of Dickerson v. United States, 2000. The case focuses on police use of Miranda warnings, as well as the separation of power between the legislative and judicial branches. After students complete their analysis of the case, discuss the Reflection Questions as a class.

Differentiate Distribute the adapted Chapter 20 Section 3 Core Worksheet B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 158).

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A local jury may be advantageous because the jurors are familiar with the people and problems of the area. A change of venue may be advantageous when the local people are so prejudiced that an impartial jury cannot be drawn.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3Differentiate The 6th Amendment commands that the accused shall have the right to a public trial. Have students hold a debate on this question: Should television cameras be allowed in courtrooms holding criminal trials? Although more than 35 States allow State criminal trials to be televised, the broadcasting of federal criminal trials has been prohibited since 1946. To prepare for the debate, have students answer the following questions: (1) Does the televising of a trial harm the defendant? (2) What effect might the televising of a trial have on the jury? On judges and witnesses? (3) Does televising a trial in any way help the public? (4) How might televising a trial affect the outcome?
L3 Differentiate Have students research a 20thcentury trial, such as the Scopes trial, the Lindbergh kidnapping trial, the Scottsboro trials, the Sacco and Vanzetti trial, or the O.J. Simpson trial. Have them explain whether the 6th Amendment right to a public trial helped or harmed the defendants or proceedings.

Differentiate Have students use a Venn diagram to compare petit jury trials with grand jury proceedings.

Differentiate Ask students to create a political cartoon that addresses this topic: The Court has gone too far/not far enough in protecting the accused.
L3 D
Differentiate Ask students with artistic skills to draw a graphic novel depicting the major events in the case Gideon v. Wainwright.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}
\(L 3\) Have students suppose that a friend has just been arrested. Ask them to diagram in a flowchart the due process rights the accused is entitled to at arrest, before trial, and during the trial. Encourage students to provide a step-by-step analysis of legal proceedings and the accused friend's rights that are associated with each step.
L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' participation using the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 242).
L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 161)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 162)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Caption refusing to speak or incriminate oneself

\(\triangle\) The guarantee against self-incrimination does not prevent the fingerprinting of a suspect. What does "taking the Fifth" mean?
subpoena
v. to legally summon, order to appear or a private legal aid association provides counsel.

The 6th Amendment says that a defendant has the right (1) "to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation," (2) "to be confronted with the witnesses against him" and question them in open court, (3) "to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor" (that is, favorable witnesses can be subpoenaed, and (4) "to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defense."

These key safeguards apply in the federal courts. Still, if a State fails to honor any of them, the accused can appeal a conviction arguing that the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause has been violated. The Supreme Court protected the right to counsel in Gideon v. Wainwright, 1963; the right of confrontation in Pointer v. Texas, 1965; and the right to call witnesses in Washington v. Texas, 1967.

These guarantees are intended to prevent the cards from being stacked in favor of the prosecution. One of the leading right-to-counsel cases, Escobedo v. Illinois, 1964, illustrates this point.

Chicago police picked up Danny Escobedo for questioning in the death of his brother-in-law. On the way to the police station, and then while he was being questioned there, he asked several times to see his lawyer. The police denied those requests.

They did so even though his lawyer was in the police station and was trying to see him, and the police knew the lawyer was there. Through a long night of questioning, Escobedo made several damaging statements. Prosecutors later used those statements in court as a major part of the evidence that led to his murder conviction.

The Supreme Court ordered Escobedo freed from prison four years later. It held that he had been improperly denied his 14th Amendment right to counsel.

\section*{Self-Incrimination}

The guarantee against self-incrimination is among the several protections set out in the 5th Amendment. That provision declares that no person can be "compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." This protection must be honored in both the federal and State courts, Malloy v. Hogan, 1964.

In a criminal case, the burden of proof is always on the prosecution. The defendant does not have to prove his or her innocence. The ban on self-incrimination prevents the prosecution from shifting the burden of proof to the defendant.

Applying the Guarantee The language of the 5th Amendment suggests that the guarantee against self-incrimination applies only to criminal cases. In fact, it covers any governmental proceeding in which a person is legally compelled to answer any question that could lead to a criminal charge. Thus, a person may claim the right ("take the Fifth") in a variety of situations: in a divorce proceeding (which is a civil matter), before a legislative committee, at a school board's disciplinary hearing, and so on.

The courts, not the individuals who claim it, decide when the right can be properly invoked. If the plea of self-incrimination is pushed too far, a person can be held in contempt of court.

The guarantee against self-incrimination is a personal right. \({ }^{13}\) One can claim it only

\footnotetext{
13 With this major exception: A husband cannot be forced to testify against his wife, or a wife against her husband, Trammel v.

United States, 1980. One can testify against the other voluntarily, however.
}

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

MIRANDA V. ARIZONA Chief Justice Earl Warren provided historical context in his opinion: "From extensive factual studies undertaken in the early 1930 's . . . it is clear that police violence and the 'third degree' flourished at that time. In a series of cases decided by this Court long after these studies, the police resorted to physical brutality-beating, hanging, whipping-and to sustained and protracted questioning incommunicado in order to extort confessions. . . . The examples given above are undoubtedly the exception now, but they are sufficiently widespread to be the object of concern. Unless a proper limitation upon custodial interrogation is achieved such as these decisions will advance there can be no assurance that practices of this nature will be eradicated in the foreseeable future."
for oneself. It cannot be invoked in someone else's behalf; a person can be forced to "rat" on another.

The privilege does not protect a person from being fingerprinted or photographed, submitting a handwriting sample, or appearing in a police lineup. And, recall, it does not mean that a person does not have to submit to a blood test in a drunk-driving situation, Schmerber v. California, 1966.

A person cannot, however, be forced to confess to a crime under duress-that is, as a result of torture or other physical or psychological pressure. In Ashcraftv. Tennessee, 1944, for example, the Supreme Court threw out the conviction of a man accused of hiring another person to murder his wife. The confession on which his conviction rested had been secured only after some 36 hours of continuous, threatening interrogation. The questioning was conducted by officers who worked in shifts because, they said, they became so tired that they had to rest.

Miranda v. Arizona In a truly historic decision, the Court refined the Escobedo holding in Miranda v. Arizona, 1966. (See the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court feature on the next two pages.) In this case, a mentally challenged man, Ernesto Miranda, had been convicted of kidnapping and rape. Ten days after the crime, the victim picked Miranda out of a police lineup. After two hours of questioning, during which the police did not tell him of his rights, Miranda confessed.

The Supreme Court struck down Miranda's conviction. More importantly, the Supreme Court said that it would no longer uphold convictions in any cases in which suspects had not been told of their constitutional rights before police questioning. It thus laid down the Miranda rule, or the constitutional rights that police must read to a suspect before questioning.

The Supreme Court is still refining the rule on a case-by-case basis. Most often the rule is closely followed. But there are exceptions. Thus, the Court has held that an undercover police officer posing as a prisoner does not have to tell a cell mate of his Miranda rights before prompting him to talk about a murder, Illinois v. Perkins, 1990.

The Miranda rule has always been controversial. Critics say that it "puts criminals back on the streets." Others applaud the rule, arguing that criminal law enforcement is most effective when it relies on independently secured evidence, rather than on confessions gained by questionable tactics from defendants who do not have the help of a lawyer.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What does the Miranda rule require of police officers?

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions To continue to build a Journal
esponse to the chapter ssential Question, go to your ssential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: What protections does the Constitution set out for persons accused of crimes?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What does a writ of habeas corpus require? (b) When has the writ been suspended?
3. What are the three characteristics of an ex post facto law?
4. (a) Who bears the burden of proof in criminal cases? (b) What constitutional guarantee enforces this?
5. What rights to fair trial are guaranteed by the 6th Amendment?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Express Problems Clearly (a) What rights may come into conflict when a trial is televised? (b) Should television cameras be allowed in the courtroom? Why or why not?
7. Identify Arguments Why has the Miranda rule been both criticized and applauded?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Essay: Paraphrasing As you take notes on the case you selected in Section 1, paraphrase selected in Section 1, paraphrase it in your own words. If you use the author's words, use quotation marks. You should cite your source even if you do not include a direct quote.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Rights of the accused \\
(Questions 1-6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write all the headings from \\ the section on a sheet of paper, leaving \\ room under each for notes. (The text under \\ each heading in this section explains a \\ right) Have students fill in information un- \\ der each heading that explains why that \\ right is vital to people accused of crime.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Protection against self- \\ incrimination (Question 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students to write 10 quiz ques- \\ tions related to the guarantee against \\ self-incrimination. For example, What \\ does it mean to "take the Fifth"? Who \\ can decide when an individual may claim \\ the Fifth? Does the 5th Amendment \\ prohibit being fingerprinted or appearing \\ in a plice lineup? Then have students \\ exchange and complete one another's \\ quizzes.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to read a suspect his or her constitutional rights before questioning

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. 5th Amendment: grand jury in federal criminal cases, no double jeopardy, no selfincrimination; 6th Amendment: right to speedy and public trial, impartial jury, adequate defense, be informed of nature and cause of accusation, confront witnesses, subpoena favorable witnesses, have access to a lawyer
2. (a) that a prisoner be brought before the court and that the holding officer show cause for not releasing the prisoner (b) during the Civil War and after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor
3. criminal law, applies to an act committed before its passage, works to the disadvantage of the accused
4. (a) the prosecution (b) 5 th Amendment (no person can be "compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself")
5. right to prompt trial, right to public trial by an impartial jury, right to know charges, right to face witnesses, right to legally summon favorable witnesses, right to legal counsel
6. (a) fair trial versus freedom of the press
(b) Students should provide reasons for their responses.
7. Critics say it puts criminals back on the streets. Supporters applaud reliance on independently secured evidence rather than on a coerced confession.
QUICK WRITE Remind students to limit direct quotes. Wording like "According to Jane Smith . . ." makes it clear that students are paraphrasing someone else's idea, but then they need to rewrite the idea in their own words.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will analyze the initial reaction to the Miranda rule, when it must be used, and why.

\section*{Teach}

Have students read the feature as homework or at the beginning of class.

\section*{IDENTIFY MIRANDA RIGHTS}

Have students draw a web diagram in their notebooks, with "Miranda Rights" in the center oval. Ask students to write, from memory, four Miranda rights in surrounding ovals. Point out that a fifth right is often added: "You may bring police questioning to an end at any time. " (See the Supreme Court Notes below.)

\section*{DISCUSS INITIAL REACTION}

The Miranda rule is commonplace now. When the Supreme Court ruled on the case in 1966, however, the police community and citizens were outraged. Justice White, in a dissenting opinion, even stated:

\section*{What Are the Rights of the Accused?}
- You have the right to remain silent.
- Anything you say can and will be used against you in a court of law.
- You have the right to an attorney.
- If you cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for you.

These words have been made famous by countless television dramas over the past forty years. They stem from the 5th and 6th amendments: "nor shall [any person] be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself", and "t the accused] shall have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence." Often called the Miranda rights, they must be spoken to suspects before police interrogation.

In 1963, Ernesto Miranda was arrested at his home in Phoenix, Arizona. Accused of kidnapping and rape, he was questioned at the police station by two police officers. After two hours of interrogation, he signed a written confession. That confession was used at his trial, where Miranda was found guilty and sentenced to 20 to 30 years in prison. Miranda's attorney appealed to the Supreme Court of Arizona, claiming that Miranda had not been informed of his right to remain silent or to have an attorney present during the interrogation. The Arizona Court upheld the conviction, however, noting that Miranda had not requested an attorney. The case was then appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

In a 5-4 decision, the Supreme Court overturned Miranda's conviction. Chief Justice Earl Warren wrote the majority opinion, which centered on what happens when a suspect is taken into custody: "Today, then, there can be no doubt that the 5th Amendment privilege is available outside of criminal court proceedings and

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

The Supreme Court overturned the conviction of Miranda (right). He was retried without his confession but with witnesses and other evidence. Found guilty, he served 11 years.

Justice Harlan, dissenting, wrote: "The social costs of crime are too great to call the new rules anything but a hazardous experimentation.

Before students begin the brainstorming activity in this lesson, you may want to review the tips on problem solving in the Skills Handbook p. S17.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}
halting the interrogation If individuals waive their right to be silent or to have counsel, they may change their mind later. "Once warnings have been given, the subsequent procedure is clear. If the individual indicates in any manner, at any time prior to or during questioning, that he wishes to remain silent, the interrogation must cease. At this point he has shown that he intends to exercise his Fifth Amendment privilege; any statement taken after the person invokes his privilege cannot be other than the product of compulsion, subtle or otherwise. Without the right to cut off questioning, the setting of in-custody interrogation operates on the individual to overcome free choice in producing a statement after the privilege has been once invoked. If the individual states that he wants an attorney, the interrogation must cease until an attorney is present. " (Chief Justice Earl Warren, Miranda v. Arizona) serves to protect persons in all settings in which their freedom of action is curtailed in any significant way from being compelled to incriminate themselves. We have concluded that without proper safeguards the process of in-custody interrogation of persons suspected or accused of crime contains inherently compelling pressures which work to undermine the individual's will to resist and to compel him to speak where he would not otherwise do so freely. In order to combat these pressures and to permit a full opportunity to exercise the privilege against self-incrimination, the accused must be adequately and effectively apprised of his rights and the exercise of those rights must be fully honored."

\section*{Arguments for Miranda}
- Miranda was poor and uneducated. He did not know of his 5th Amendment right to remain silent nor his 6th Amendment right to counsel.
- Arizona ignored both the Escobedo rule (evidence obtained from an illegally obtained confession is inadmissible in court) and the Gideon rule (all felony defendants have the right to an attorney)
- Miranda's confession was illegally obtained and should be thrown out.
- Miranda's conviction was faulty, and he deserved a new trial.

\section*{Arguments for Arizona}
- Miranda was no stranger to police procedures. He negotiated with police officers with intelligence and understanding.
- Miranda signed the confession willingly.
- The prosecution was proper, his conviction was based on Arizona law, and his imprisonment was just.
- The Arizona Supreme Court upheld his conviction and its rejection should not cripple the work of police.

Thinking Critically
1. Is it essential that a person be given the right to counsel during

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}
refining the miranda rule Missouri v. Seibert, 2004, centered on what lately had become fairly common police practice: two-step interrogations, also known as "rehearsed confessions." Police officers had questioned Patrice Seibert, drawing out details of the fire she had set to cover up the murder of her son. Then she was told of her Miranda rights-and questioned again. That second round was taped, and she was asked questions based on the incriminating statements she had made in the first-untaped, unwarned-round. She confessed again. The Supreme Court found that her confession had been coerced and so was invalid. It struck down the two-step practice, saying that it threatened the very purpose of Miranda.

\section*{SPECIFY IN-CUSTODY INTERROGATION}

Ask: When must the Miranda rights be read to a suspect? (before in-custody interrogation) Must the Miranda rights be stated before questioning witnesses to a crime? (no) Why not? (because witnesses are not under restraint or in police custody) Why do you think in-custody interrogation requires extra rights? Read aloud Chief Justice Warren's statement: "An individual swept from familiar surroundings into police custody, surrounded by antagonistic forces . . . cannot be otherwise than under compulsion to speak. "

\section*{BRAINSTORM ALTERNATIVE METHODS}

Have students brainstorm possible alternative rules that would allow police to better obtain confessions constitutionally. Before students brainstorm, write this statement on the board:

The quality of a nation's civilization can be largely measured by the methods it uses in the enforcement of its criminal law. (W.V. Schaefer, Harvard Law Review, 1956) \(\qquad\) Differentiate Have students raise their hands when they have a point they wish to make. Call on lower-level students first to ensure that they participate in the discussion.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Differentiate Assign the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 5 All-inOne, p. 173).
L2 Differentiate Assign the adapted Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 175).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students write several paragraphs describing (1) what the Miranda rights are; (2) when they must be stated and why; and (3) whether they think the Miranda rule does more good in protecting criminals or more harm in neglecting crime victims.

\section*{IN THE NEWS}

Students can learn more about Miranda v. Arizona by visiting PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}
1. Yes. The presence of a lawyer during interrogation will reduce the possibility of police coercion.
2. by requiring government (law enforcement) to use proper procedures to solve crime

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\title{
How does the Constitution set limits on punishments for crime?
}
\begin{tabular}{|c|}
\hline Punishment \\ \hline 8th Amendment Limits \\
- "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive \\ fines imposed. ..." \\
- forbids "cruel and unusual punishment" \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{Punishment}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- examine how the Court's interpretation of "cruel and unusual punishment" has changed over time by analyzing court cases on the death penalty.
- analyze and evaluate arguments on the constitutionality of juvenile capital punishment by analyzing Supreme Court opinions and editorials on this issue.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 163) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 164)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 20G, Death Penalty in the United States. Have students answer the questions in their notebooks.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How does the Constitution set limits on punishments for crime? Use a table like the one below to take notes on the section.

Political Dictionary
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- bail & - capital \\
- preventive & punishment \\
detention & - treason
\end{tabular}

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the purpose of bail and preventive detention.
2. Describe the Court's interpretation of cruel and unusual punishment.
3. Outline the history of the Court's decisions on capital punishment.
4. Define the crime of treason.

Image Above: A bar advocate reviews her client's paperwork before his or her bail hearing.

Again, think about this proposition: "It is better that ten guilty persons go free than that one innocent person be punished." How do you react to that comment now, after reading about the rights of persons accused of crime? Consider those persons who are found guilty, those who do not go free but are instead punished. How should they be treated? The Constitution gives its most specific answers to that question in the 8th Amendment.

\section*{Bail and Preventive Detention}

The 8th Amendment says, in part:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, ...
Each State constitution sets out similar restrictions. The general rule is that the bail or fine in a case must bear a reasonable relationship to the seriousness of the crime involved.

Bail The sum of money that the accused may be required to post (deposit with the court) as a guarantee that he or she will appear in court at the proper time is called bail. The use of bail is justified on two bases: First, that a person should not be jailed until his or her guilt has been established; and second, that a defendant is better able to prepare for trial outside of a jail.

Note that the Constitution does not say that all persons accused of a crime are automatically entitled to bail. Rather, it guarantees that, where bail is set, the amount will not be excessive.

The leading case on bail in the federal courts is Stack v. Bo ple, 1951. There, the Court ruled that "bail set at a figure higher than an amount reasonably calculated" to assure a defendant's appearance at a trial "is 'excessive' under the 8th Amendment." In Stack, 12 persons had been accused of violating the Smith Act of 1940, which, recall, made it a federal crime for any person to advocate the violent overthrow of government in the United States. (See Chapter 19, Section 3.)

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The 8th Amendment addresses the issue of punishment for crime. - The Supreme Court has consistently held that the death penalty is constitutional if it is applied fairly. •The crime of treason is specifically defined in Article III of the Constitution to prevent its use for political purposes.
CONCEPTS: individual rights, due process of law, judicial review
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The 8th Amendment bans excessive bail and fines and cruel and unusual punishment. - Although the Supreme Court has ruled that the death penalty does not constitute cruel and unusual punishment, the question of capital punishment continues to be debated.

A defendant can appeal the denial of release on bail or the amount of bail. Bail is usually set in accordance with the severity of the crime charged and with the reputation and financial resources of the accused. People with little or no income often have trouble raising bail. Therefore, the federal and most State courts release many defendants "on their own recognizance"-that is, on their honor. Failure to appear for trial, "jumping bail," is itself a punishable crime.

Preventive Detention In 1984, Congress provided for the preventive detention of some people accused of federal crimes. A federal judge can order that the accused be held, without bail, when there is good reason to believe that he or she will commit another serious crime before trial.

Critics of the law claim that preventive detention amounts to punishment before trial. They say it undercuts the presumption of innocence to which all defendants are entitled.

The Supreme Court upheld the 1984 law, 6-3, in United States v. Salerno, 1987. The majority rejected the argument that preventive detention is punishment. Rather, it found the practice a legitimate response to a "pressing societal problem." The Court held that, "There is no doubt that preventing danger to the community is a legitimate regulatory goal." All of the States have adopted preventive detention laws.

\section*{Cruel and Unusual \\ Punishment}

The 8th Amendment also forbids "cruel and unusual punishment." The 14th Amendment extends that prohibition against the States, Robinson v. Cali fornia, 1962.

The Supreme Court decided its first cruel and unusual case in 1879 in Wilkerson v. Utah. There, a territorial court had sentenced a convicted murderer to death by a firing squad. The Court held that this punishment was not forbidden by the Constitution. The kinds of penalties the Constitution intended to prevent, said the Court, were such barbaric tortures as burning at the stake, crucifixion, drawing and quartering, "and all others in the same line of unnecessary cruelty." The Court took the same position a few years later when, for the first time, it upheld the electrocution of a convicted murderer in a case from New York, In re Kemmler, 1890.

Since then, the Court has heard only a handful of cruel and unusual cases, except for those relating to capital punishment. More often than not, it has rejected the cruel and unusual punishment argument. \({ }^{14}\) Louisiana v. Resweber, 1947, is fairly typical. There, the Court found that it was not unconstitutional to subject a convicted murderer to a second electrocution after the chair had failed to work properly on the first occasion. And in Rhodes v. Chapman, 1980, it held that putting two inmates in a cell that had been designed to hold only one did not violate the constitutional command.

The Court also denied the cruel and unusual claim in its most recent 8th Amendment case not involving the death penalty,

14 The prohibition of cruel and unusual punishments is limited to criminal matters. It does not forbid paddling or similar punishments in the public schools, Ingraham v. Wright, 1977.
legitimate
adj. valid, sound, lawful

- Analyzing Political Cartoons The 8th Amendment forbids crue and unusual punishment. What point is the cartoonist making here?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 20, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 163)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 164)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 165)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 167)
L3 Quiz A (p. 171)
L2 Quiz B (p. 172)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 177)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 180)

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Have students discuss the Bellringer questions. Ask:
What can you infer about American attitudes toward the death penalty? (Almost three-fourths of the States have the death penalty for people convicted of murder. Students may infer that almost 75 percent of Americans favor the death penalty. However, a recent Gallup poll showed these results: 47 percent prefer the death penalty; 48 percent prefer life without parole; and 5 percent had no opinion.) Does your state have the death penalty? Have students discuss their thoughts about this situation.

\section*{DEFINE "CRUEL AND UNUSUAL"}

Have students define what they consider cruel and unusual punishment regarding sentencing for persons convicted of crime. Use a Think-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to give students a chance to express their thoughts. After students have discussed the issue with a partner, have each pair share its opinions with the class. Then ask students to arrive at a consensus definition of cruel and unusual punishment.

\section*{DISCUSS CHANGES IN PUNISHMENT}

Point out that the Supreme Court's interpretation of what constitutes "cruel and unusual punishment" has changed over time. List on the board these forms of punishment commonly used in the American colonies: whipping, branding a hand with a \(T\) for thief or \(M\) for manslaughter, cutting off ears, standing in stocks, public hangings. Ask: Which of these would have been considered "cruel and unusual punishment" in early colonial America? (none of them) Which of these punishments would be considered cruel and unusual today? (all of them) Why do you think attitudes about what constitutes cruel and unusual punishment have changed over time? (possible answers: reformers publicized the ineffectiveness of various punishments as a deterrent to crime; the perception that electrocution or lethal in jection is a more clinical and humane form of capital punishment)

\section*{Answers}

Caption that being incarcerated in an overcrowded prison would not qualify as "cruel and unusual punishment"

\section*{ANALYZE COURT DECISIONS}

Ask these questions to help students understand how judicial decisions have helped define what is and is not cruel and unusual punishment.
- Wilkerson v. Utah, 1879: How did the Court define cruel and unusual punishment in this case? (burning at the stake, crucifixion, drawing and quartering, other forms of "unnecessary cruelty")
- In re Kemmler, 1890, and Louisiana v. Resweber, 1947: How were the rulings in these cases similar? (In both cases, the justices ruled that electrocution was not cruel and unusual punishment.)
- Weems v. United States, 1910, and Robinson v. California, 1962: In what ways were the rulings in these cases similar? (The Court ruled that the actions taken by the government were cruel and unusual punishment. Weems was given 15 years hard labor chained at ankle and wrist. Robinson was imprisoned for narcotics addiction.)
- Coker v. Georgia, 1977, Atkins v. Virginia, 2002, Roper v. Simmons, 2005: Did the Supreme Court's rulings in these cases expand or limit capital punishment? (limit; ruled that the death penalty can be imposed only in murder cases and cannot be imposed on people who are mentally challenged or were under age 18 when they committed crimes)
Then ask: What conclusion can you draw about the makeup of the Court and the definition of cruel and unusual punishment? (Students should conclude that judicial philosophy affects Court decisions on this controversial issue.)

\section*{DISCUSS JUVENILE CAPITAL PUNISHMENT}

Use an Opinion Line (p. T26) as a starting point for a discussion of capital punishment for juveniles. Put up signs at the beginning, middle, and end of the line that say: Limited Sentence with Parole, Life Sentence without Parole, and Death Penalty. Ask students to stand closest to the sign that expresses their opinion about sentencing for convicted murderers age 18 and younger. Ask volunteers to explain why they have chosen their positions.

Lockyer v. Andrade, 2003. That case centered on California's "three strikes" law. That statute provides that any person convicted of a third crime must be sentenced to at least 25 years in prison. Leandro Andrade had received 50 years for stealing \($ 153.54\) worth of children's videos from two K-Mart stores. The K-Mart thefts were treated as separate offenses and he had an earlier burglary conviction on his record, as well.

The Court has held some punishments to be cruel and unusual, but only a very few. It did so for the first time in Weems v. United States in 1910. There, the Court overturned the conviction of a Coast Guard official who had been found guilty of falsifying government pay records. He had been sentenced to 15 years at hard labor, constantly chained at wrist and ankle. In Robinson v. Cali fornia, 1962, the Court ruled that a State law that defined narcotics addiction as a crime to be punished, rather than an illness to be treated, violated the 8 th and 14 th amendments. \({ }^{15}\)

\section*{Capital Punishment}

Laws providing for capital punishmentthe death penalty-date back to at least the 18th century в.с. and the Code of Hammurabi, which set death as the penalty for more than 25 different offenses. \({ }^{16}\) The punishment has been a part of American law since the colonial period, and both the Federal Government and 36 States provide for it today.

Over time, the Supreme Court was reluctant to face this highly charged question: Is capital punishment cruel and unusual and therefore prohibited by the 8th Amendment?

State Laws Struck Down The Court did meet the issue, finally, and more or less directly, in Furman v. Georgia, 1972. There, it struck down all of the then-existing State laws providing for the death penalty-but not because that punishment is cruel and unusual.

15 But, notice, that does not mean that buying, selling, or possessing narcotics cannot be made a crime. Laws that criminalize such conduct are designed to punish persons for their behavior, not for being ill.
16 The phrase "capital punishment" comes from the Latin caput, meaning "head"; in many cultures, the historically preferred method for execution was beheading (decapitation).

Rather, the Court voided those laws because they gave too much discretion to judges or juries in deciding whether to impose the ultimate penalty. The Court found that of all the people convicted of capital crimes, only "a random few," most of them African American or poor, or both, were "capriciously selected" for execution.

Immediately, most States and Congress began to write new capital punishment laws. Those new statutes took one of two forms. Several States made a death sentence mandatory for certain crimes-for example, the killing of a police officer or a murder committed during a rape, kidnapping, or arson. Others provided, instead, for a two-stage process in capital cases: first, a trial to settle the question of guilt or innocence; then, for those convicted, a second proceeding to decide if the circumstances involved in the crime justify a sentence of death

In considering scores of challenges to these new laws, the Supreme Court found mandatory death penalty statutes unconstitutional. In Woodson v. North Carolina, 1976, it ruled that those statutes were "unduly harsh and rigidly unworkable." They were, said the Court, simply attempts to "paper over" the decision in Furman.

Two-Stage Approach Upheld The twostage approach was found to be constitutional in Gregg v. Georgia, 1976. There, the Court held for the first time that the "punishment of death does not invariably violate the Constitution." It declared that well-drawn two-stage laws could practically eliminate "the risk that it [the death penalty] would be inflicted in an arbitrary or capricious manner."

Later Cases Opponents of the death penalty continue to appeal capital cases to the Supreme Court, but to no real avail. Most of their cases have centered on the application, not the constitutionality, of the punishment. The more important of those several cases have resulted in these rulings: The death penalty can be imposed only for "crimes resulting in the death of the victim," Coker v. Georgia, 1977. That penalty cannot be imposed on those who are mentally challenged, Atkins v. Virginia, 2002, or on those who were

604 Civil Liberties: Protecting Individual Rights

\section*{ANALYZE A JUVENILE CAPITAL CASE}

Distribute the Chapter 20 Section 4 Core Worksheet A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 165), which presents the majority and dissenting opinions in Roper v. Simmons. Have students answer the questions on the worksheet and discuss the opinions as a class.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It struck down all of the then-existing State laws providing for the death penalty because they gave too much discretion to judges or juries in deciding whether to impose the death penalty.

\section*{Background}

ELECTROCUTION Before 1888, hanging was the most common way in which those on death row were executed. Some considered it a form of "cruel and unusual punishment." The electric chair was developed in 1887 as a result of a rivalry between Thomas Edison and Westinghouse. In trying to promote his DC electricity, Edison proved that AC electricity, used by Westinghouse, could easily kill people and animals exposed to it. While doing this, he proposed the idea for an "electric chair" for capital punishment using AC, thinking that people would not want the same type of electricity in their homes. Electrocution was adopted by many States, yet contrary to Edison's plans, AC still became the main type of current used across the country.

\section*{Capital Punishment Debate}

Capital punishment has a lengthy history, and so does the controversy surrounding it. The punishment has been a part of American law since the colonial period, and 36 States provide for it today. Nearly 1,100 persons have been executed in the United States since the Supreme Court reinstated capital punishment in 1976. Fewer than three in every 100 death sentences imposed are ever carried out, however. Forty-two persons were executed in ten States in 2007. More than 3,200 persons sit on death row in American prisons today. Do you think the maximum penalty for murder should be death or, instead, life without the possibility of parole? Explain.

\author{

}
\(\qquad\)
\(\qquad\)

Differentiate Have volunteers poll others about whether they are for or against the death penalty for juveniles convicted of murder. Pollsters should include the age and gender of each respondent. Have students present their findings in a bar graph, noting whether age or gender made a difference in responses.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3Ask students to summarize the 8th Amendment and Article III, Section 3, in their own words. Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' work.

Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 171)Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 172)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Punishments set by the \\ Constitution \\
(Questions 1, 2, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students research to find answers \\ to these questions: Who sets the amount \\ of bail? In what situations is bail denied? \\ Who determines preventive detention \\ and treason?
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The debate over capital \\ punishment \\
(Questions 3, 4, 7)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students to write a true-or-false quiz \\ with ten questions concerning Supreme \\ Courr tulings on capital punishment \\
Have students exchange and complete \\ one another's quizzes.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint all U.S. citizens at home or abroad and all permanent resident aliens; the death penalty \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Who may be convicted of treason? What is the maximum penalty for this crime?

As retired Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor has observed: "If statistics are any indication, the system may well be allowing some innocent defendants to be executed."

That fact has also prompted many who support capital punishment to insist that the remedies for whatever problems there may be in the administration of the penalty should not be found in its abolition. They should be found, instead, in the continuing improvement of the processes by which the ultimate penalty is imposed.

\section*{Treason}

Treason against the United States is the only crime defined in the Constitution. The Framers provided a specific definition because they knew that the charge of treason is a favorite weapon in the hands of tyrants.

Treason, says Article III, Section 3, can consist of only two things: either (1) levying war against the United States or (2) "adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort." And the Constitution adds that no person can be convicted of the crime "unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court."

The law of treason covers all citizens of the United States, at home or abroad, and all permanent resident aliens. Congress has set death as the maximum sentence for someone convicted of the federal crime but no person has ever, in fact, been executed for that offense. Indeed, the death penalty was not imposed in a federal treason case until as recently as 1942. Then, four Germanborn American citizens were sentenced to be hanged for aiding a group of Nazi saboteurs who had been landed on the East Coast by a German submarine. But those sentences were never carried out. \({ }^{17}\)

Treason can only be committed in wartime. But Congress has made it a crime, during times of either peace or war, to commit either espionage or sabotage, to attempt to overthrow the government by force, or to conspire to do any of these things.

Most State constitutions also condemn treason. John Brown was hanged as a traitor by Virginia after his raid on Harpers Ferry in 1859 . He is believed to be the only person ever executed for treason against a State.

17 The sentence of one of the traitors was commuted to life in prison; he was later denaturalized and then deported. The other three appealed their convictions and won new trials. One of them was again convicted of treason but this time sentenced to life in prison; the other two pleaded guilty to lesser charges and received five-year prison terms.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapt }\end{aligned}\) \(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Journal } & \text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal. }\end{array}\)
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer this question: How does the Constitution set limits on punishments for crime?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. (a) Define bail. (b) What is its purpose? (c) When is the use of bail justified?
3. What penalties has the Court considered cruel and unusual?
4. (a) When did the court first hear a capital punishment case? What was the ruling in this case? (b) What is the two-stage process?
5. (a) Define treason. (b) Why does the Constitution contain a specific definition of treason?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Identify Point of View Why do some oppose preventive detention? (b) Why has the Supreme Court upheld it? (c) With which point of view do you agree? Why?
7. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment (a) In capital cases, who cannot be sentenced to death? (b) Do you agree with the Court's ruling that mandatory death sentences are unconstitutional? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Research Essay: Opening Statement Write an opening statement, or hook, for an essay on the case you selected in Section 1. A hook should grab readers' interest. Various types of hooks motivate further reading. These include (1) a statement that hints at what is to come; (2) a fascinating description of an exciting event or action; or (3) a question that will be answered later in the essay. Your hook should connect smoothly to the introduction and the body of your essay.

606 Civil Liberties: Protecting Individual Rights

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The 8th Amendment prohibits excessive bail and fines and forbids cruel and unusual punishment.
2. (a) sum of money the accused is required to deposit with the court (b) to guarantee that the person will appear in court at the proper time (c) when it is not excessive
3. barbaric tortures such as burning at the stake, crucifixion, drawing and quartering
4. (a) 1972, in Furman v. Georgia; the Court struck down all of the then-existing State laws providing for the death penalty (b) a trial to settle guilt or innocence; after conviction, a proceeding to decide if the crime justifies death sentence
5. (a) levying war against the U.S. or giving aid and comfort to enemy (b) The Framers knew that a charge of treason was a favorite weapon in the hands of tyrants.
6. (a) They claim it is punishment before trial.
(b) as a legitimate response to a pressing societal problem (c) Answers will vary.
7. (a) those who are mentally challenged, under age 18, or delusional (b) Possible answer: A mandatory death sentence for a particular crime does not allow the court to consider the circumstances involved in individual cases, such as self-defense.

QUICK WRITE After writing their opening statement, students should review its effectiveness by asking themselves these questions: What question does the hook prompt readers to ask? How does it connect to the rest of the story?

\section*{Protections of Freedom and Security}
```

13th Amendment:

```
    "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, . . . shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction."
```

2nd Amendment:
"A well regulated Militia,being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

```
4th Amendment:
"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."
```

14th Am Clause:
liberty, or property, without due process of law

```

\section*{Political Dictionary} due process \(\rho\). 578 procedural due process p. 578 substantive due process p. 578 police power p. 580 search warrant \(p .581\) involuntary servitude \(p\). 583 discrimination \(p .584\) writs of assistance p. 585 probable cause \(p .586\) exclusionary rule \(p .588\) writ of habeas corpus p. 592 bill of attainder \(p .593\) ex post facto law \(\rho .593\) grand jury p. 594 indictment \(p .594\) presentment \(p .594\) information \(p .595\) double jeopardy p. 595 bench trial \(\rho\). 597 Miranda Rule p. 599 bail p. 602
preventive detention \(p .608\) capital punishment \(p .604\) treason p. 606

\section*{Limits on Punishment}

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about civil liberties, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Smith, Rich. Fifth Amendment: The Right to Fairness. ABDO & Daughters, 2007.
L2 Winters, Robert, ed. The Bill of Rights-Freedom from Unfair Searches and Seizures. Gale Group, 2005.
L3 Orth, John V. Due Process of Law: A Brief History. University Press of Kansas, 2003.
L4 Zimring, Franklin E. The Contradictions of American Capital Punishment. Oxford University Press, 2004.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Taking Multiple Choice Tests When taking multiple choice tests, students should scan the entire document before they begin, noting the number of questions and their point values. They can then use this information to pace themselves. For each question, caution students to read all the choices before selecting an answer, eliminating those choices they know to be wrong. Suggest the following strategy: Cover up the answers and try to anticipate the correct answer. If your answer is among the choices, circle it but then read the others to make sure none is better. When "all of the above" is a choice, it is probably the correct answer if at least two choices are correct. Recommend that students not skip questions they are unsure about, however-this increases the chances of forgetting to go back and answer some questions. Instead, have them answer as best they can and then mark the question to return to if time permits.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 5 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 5 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 588, 596
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) to protect due process rights from both the federal and State governments (b) police officers acting on a tip instead of probable cause; violating privacy without a warrant; attempting to obtain evidence by attacking the suspect and by forcing the suspect to submit to stomach pumping
2. (a) States (b) Students should provide examples of the use of the police power to promote their own health, safety, morals, and general welfare.
3. (a) issues of abortion (b) Answers will vary.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) 4th Amendment (b) Officers must obtain a search warrant based on probable cause before a search and seizure.
5. (a) Court ruled that the 13 th Amendment did not prohibit discrimination by individuals. (b) Court strengthened the 13th Amendment by holding that discrimination was a badge of slavery and, so, illegal.
6. (a) yes, if they have probable cause (b) no (c) California v. Acevedo; Brendlin v. California
7. arguments for: requires police to obey the law and deters police misconduct; arguments against: allows criminals to "beat the rap" on a technicality

\section*{SECTION 3}
8. (a) legislative act that provides for the punishment of a person without a court trial (b) requires that an accused person be punished after breaking a law but not be punished by a law itself; also enforces that the accused receive a fair trial
9. (a) grand jury: 16 to 23 jurors in a federal case; jurors must be drawn from the district court area that it serves; at least 12 jurors needed to return an indictment; sessions are secret; only the prosecution presents before the grand jury; petit jury: jurors must be drawn from the district where crime was committed; must have 12 members in a federal criminal case; must convict by a unanimous vote; members must be drawn from a fair cross section of the community (b) Answers will vary.
10. (a) Police must read a suspect his or her constitutional rights before questioning. (b) 5th and 6th amendments

121 Chapter Assessment

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) Why are there two due process clauses in the Constitution? (b) In Rochin v. California, what particular actions by the deputies constituted violations of due process?
2. (a) Which level of government has the police power in the federal system? (b) Provide at least four examples of the ways in which the exercise of the police power affects you.
3. (a) In what area has the right to privacy been most controversial? (b) Should the right to privacy be applied to the Census Bureau, credit card companies, and Internet sites as they collect personal information? Why or why not?

\section*{Section 2}
4. Analyze Political Cartoons (a) Which amendment is involved in the events described in this cartoon? (b) What is the basic rule laid down by that amendment?

5. (a) How did the Court apply the 13th Amendment in the late 1800s? (b) How did its ruling in Jones v. Mayer, 1968 revise the meaning of the 13th Amendment?
6. (a) Can police search a vehicle during a routine traffic stop? (b) Can they search both the driver and passengers? (c) Cite two cases to support your answers.
7. What are the arguments for and against the exclusionary rule?

\section*{Section 3}
8. (a) What is a bill of attainder? (b) How does the ban on bills of attainder protect individual freedoms?
9. (a) Describe five characteristics of a grand jury and four characteristics of a petit jury. (b) On which type of jury would you prefer to serve? Why?
10. (a) What is the Miranda rule? (b) From which two amendments is the rule drawn?
Section 4
11. (a) What are the constitutional guarantees regarding bail? (b) How is the amount of bail set? (c) What happens if a defendant cannot raise bail?
12. (a) What was the significance of Furman v. Georgia? (b) How does the Supreme Court view capital punishment?

Writing About Government
13. Use your Quick Write exercises from each Section Assessment to write a research essay about the case you selected in Section 1. Use an informative writing style that describes what happened, when and where it happened, why it happened, and who was involved. Present the facts in an objective way without displaying emotion or injecting your opinion. See pp. S6-S8 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
14. Essential Question Activity Scan the newspaper for articles concerning any guarantees of the rights of the accused shown in the illustration in Section 3 of this chapter. Prepare a brief report describing the article and the right(s) in question. Indicate how you think the issue or case should be resolved and why.
15. Essential Question Assessment Based on the brief report you wrote and the content you have learned in the chapter, create a poster that helps to answer the Essential Question: To what extent has the judiciary protected the rights of privacy, security, and personal freedom? Your poster should list the rights of privacy, security, and/or personal freedom related to your everyday life, i.e., in your home, automobile, on your computer and/or phone. On a separate piece of paper, write a paragraph that outlines the extent to which each freedom is protected \begin{tabular}{|cl|}
\hline Essential Questions \\
Journal & \begin{tabular}{l}
To respond to the chapter Essential \\
Question, go to your Essential \\
Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

608 Chapter 20 Assessment

\section*{SECTION 4}
11. (a) Where bail is set, the amount shall not be excessive. (b) in accordance with the severity of the crime charged and with the reputation and financial resources of the accused (c) The defendant either remains in jail or the courts may release a defendant on his or her own recognizance, or honor.
12. (a) It struck down all the then-existing State laws providing for the death penalty. (b) The death penalty, if applied fairly, is constitutional.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
13. Remind students that an informative writing style includes answers to these questions: What happened? Who was involved? Where did this occur? When did it occur? Why did it happen? Students should also include answers to this question: How did it affect the rights of the accused?

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
14. Students' reports should focus on the rights of the accused. Summaries should be accurate and include all relevant points; opinions should be backed with precedents.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{The Patriot Act}

The Patriot Act was enacted "to deter and punish terrorist acts in the United States and around the world, to enhance law enforcement investigatory tools, and for other purposes." Debate centers around whether it provides a balance between national security and the Constitution's guarantees of individual freedom, as shown in the documents below.

\section*{Document 1}

The law allows our intelligence and law enforcement officials to continue to share information. It allows them to continue to use tools against terrorists that they . . use against drug dealers and other criminals. It will improve our nation's security while we safeguard the civil liberties of our people. The legislation strengthens the Justice Department so it can better detect and disrupt terrorist threats.
-President George W. Bush, March 2006

\section*{Document 2}

Just 45 days after the September 11 attacks, with virtually no debate, Congress passed the USA PATRIOT Act. There are significant flaws in the Patriot Act, flaws that threaten your fundamental freedoms by giving the government the power to access your medical records, tax records, information about the books you buy or borrow without probable cause, and the power to break into your home and conduct secret searches without telling you for weeks, months, or indefinitely.
-American Civil Liberties Union

\section*{Document 3}

Delayed notification search warrants are a long existing, crime-fighting tool upheld by courts nationwide for decades in organized crime, drug cases and child pornography. The Patriot Act simply codified the authority law enforcement had already had for decades. This tool is a vital aspect of our strategy of prevention-detecting and incapacitating terrorists before they are able to strike.
-U.S. Department of Justice
Document 4

\section*{Use your knowledge of the Patriot Act and Documents 1-4 to answer} the following questions.
1. Document 1 implies that the overriding goal of the Patriot Act is to A. strengthen the Justice Department.
B. allow law enforcement and intelligence officials to share information.
C. safeguard civil liberties.
D. improve the nation's security.
2. According to Document 2 , what does the Patriot Act give government the power to do?
3. How does Document 3 justify the use of delayed notification search warrants?
4. What is the cartoonist saying about the Patriot Act in Document 4?
5. Pull It Together How do these documents illustrate the difficulty of striking a proper balance between national security and individual rights?
© GOVERNMENT ONLINE
Documents
To find additional primary sources on the Patriot Act, visit
PearsonSuccessNet.com
1. \(D\)
2. access your medical records, tax records, information about the books you buy or borrow without probable cause, and the power to break into your home and conduct secret searches without telling you for weeks, months, or indefinitely
3. It says that delayed notification search warrants have long existed and been upheld by courts in other criminal cases.
4. The Patriot Act has broken civil liberties (the home furnishings) in its attempt to strike at terrorists (the wasp).
5. Students should summarize excerpts from the documents in their responses.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.
15. Students should scan the chapter for Court cases that guaranteed the rights of privacy, security, and/or personal freedom related to a home, a vehicle, a computer and/or phone, and their person. For example, officers need a warrant before searching a home. A phone cannot be tapped or bugged without a warrant as well. Vehicles may be stopped and searched without a warrant but with probable cause. A suspect must be told of the charges against him or her, and is guaranteed the right against self-incrimination.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 5}

What should be the role of the judicial branch?
CHAPTER 21
Why are there ongoing struggles for civil rights?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Point out that Amendments 13, 14, and 15 ended slavery and extended the rights of citizenship to African Americans. Ask: Why was the civil rights movement necessary? (because discriminatory laws and practices still existed in society, which worked to deny equal rights; for example, poll taxes and intimidation limited the ability of African Americans to vote, and segregation in schools denied them equal access to education) Then tell students to begin to further explore civil rights by completing the Chapter 21 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}ELL Differentiate Chapter 21 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 192)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go. "

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE IMAGES}

You may wish to teach analyzing images as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 21 Skills Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 217) to help students learn how to analyze images. The worksheet asks students to study two photographs and analyze them in terms of content, emotions, context, and purpose. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 218).

\section*{WebQuest
online}

The Chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about civil rights.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach Section 1 lesson, including Transparencies 21 A and 21B, Core Worksheet 21.1, and the Assess activity. Begin Section 2, including Bellringer and Compare/Apply Rational Basis/Strict Scrutiny activities. Discuss Transparency 21C and assign Create a Timeline of Civil Rights.
BLOCK 2: Have students complete Core Worksheet 21.2 and Extend Worksheet. Begin Section 3; discuss Bellringer and Relate Actions to Legislation. Allow time for groups to complete Core Worksheet 21.3. Organize groups for Debate Affirmative Action.
BLock 3: Have groups debate. Introduce Section 4 with Transparency 21F and Analyze Line Graph. Distribute Core Worksheet 21.4A; have students take the citizenship test. Assign Understand Immigration Arguments and Core Worksheet 21.4B. End the lesson with Strategies for Remediation.

\section*{Essential Question} Why are there ongoing struggles for civil rights?

Section 1:
Diversity and Discrimination
Section 2:
Equality Before the Law
Section 3:
Federal Civil Rights Laws
Section 4:
American Citizenship

Our Constitution is color-blind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens. In respect of civil rights, all citizens are equal before the law. The humblest is the peer of the most powerful.
-Justice John Marshall Harlan, dissenting in Plessy v. Ferguson, 1896
Photo: March on Washington, August 28, 1963

\section*{Pressed for Time}

Have students prepare a handbook that recent immigrants could use to help them prepare for American citizenship. Students should include a historical perspective of civil rights legislation that applies to new citizens. Encourage students to illustrate their handbooks and provide the names and phone numbers of important local government resources. Handbooks should also include a citizenship study guide and test.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- identify ways that increasing diversity is changing American society by analyzing data on the ethnic composition of the United States.
- summarize the history of race- and gender-based discrimination in the United States by completing a chart on events and laws or policies that affected minority groups and women.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- understand how the Supreme Court interprets "equal protection of the laws" by analyzing and applying the tests it uses to decide cases.
- trace the history of segregation in public schools by creating a timeline of cases related to school integration.
- examine changing attitudes about school integration by evaluating a political cartoon on this topic.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- trace the development of civil rights legislation by relating it to historical actions of States designed to nullify African Americans' rights.
- analyze the policy of affirmative action and why it is controversial by studying political cartoons and by exploring the issues surrounding it.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- summarize ways that individuals become citizens in the United States.
- analyze the controversy over immigration in the United States by preparing arguments for and against opinions on the topic.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
All StudentsAdvanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How have various minority groups in American society been discriminated against?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|}
\hline African Americans & Native Americans & Hispanic Americans & Asian Americans \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- Slavery \\
- Civil rights gains \\
- Discrimination ongoing
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Disease decimated population \\
- Driven from lands \\
- Forced relocation to reservations \\
- Poverty, joblessness, alcoholism
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Largest minority in U.S. \\
- Mexican Americans in Southwest \\
- Puerto Ricans in Northeast \\
- Cuban Americans in South Florida
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Resentment of Chinese workers led to violence \\
- Chinese Exclusion Act \\
- Japanese relocation camps during World War II
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will. .
- identify ways that increasing diversity is changing American society by analyzing data on the ethnic composition of the United States.
- summarize the history of race- and gender-based discrimination in the United States by completing a chart on events and laws or policies that affected minority groups and women.

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{Diversity and Discrimination}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How have various minority groups in American society been discriminated against? Use a table like the one below to take notes on the section.

Political Dictionary
- heterogeneous • refugee
- immigrant - assimilation
- reservation

\section*{Objectives}
1. Understand what it means to live in a heterogeneous society.
2. Summarize the history of racebased discrimination in the United States.
3. Examine discrimination against women in the past and present.

\section*{ANALYZE GRAPHIC DATA}

Since there are several instances of graph use in this section, have students read about analyzing graphic data in the Skills Handbook, p. S26.

Have you read George Orwell's classic, Animal Farm? Even if you have not, you may have heard its most oft-quoted line: "All animals are created equal, but some animals are more equal than others." You might keep Orwell's comment in mind as you read this chapter.

\section*{A Heterogeneous Society}

The term heterogeneous is a compound of two Greek words: hetero, meaning "other or different," and genos, meaning "race, family, or kind." Something that is heterogeneous is composed of dissimilar parts, made up of elements that are unrelated to or unlike one another-in short, something composed of a mix of ingredients. "We the People of the United States" are a heterogeneous lot, and we are becoming more so, year to year.

The population of the United States is predominantly white. It is today and, as you can see in the circle graph on page 614, it has been historically. The first census in 1790 reported that there were \(3,929,214\) people living in this country. More than four out of five were white. African Americans made up the remaining 19 percent of the population counted in that census. As the nation's population grew over the decades, so, too, did the proportion of the American people who were white-until recently.

Today, the ethnic composition of the population is strikingly different from what it was only a generation ago. Immigrants-those aliens legally admitted as permanent residents-have arrived in near-record numbers every year since the mid-1960s. Over that period, the nation's African American, Hispanic American, and Asian American populations have grown at rates several times that of the white population. Indeed, the minority population now exceeds the white population in four States: California, Hawaii, New Mexico, and Texas.

A look at gender balance in the population reveals that females are more numerous than males. This has been the case for more than half a century.

As a result of these changes in the American population, the United States is more heterogeneous today than ever before. That fact is certain to have a profound effect on the American social, political, and economic landscape on through the twenty-first century.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The United States is a diverse nation made up of people from many different backgrounds. - African Americans, Native Americans, Hispanic Americans, Asian Americans, and other minority groups have suffered from discrimination. - Women of all backgrounds have experienced gender discrimination, especially in wages.
CONCEPTS: equal protection
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Declaration of Independence declares that "all men are created equal, " but our nation still struggles to meet the ideal of equality for all. • Race-based and gender-based discrimination has declined but not disappeared in this country.

\section*{Race-Based Discrimination}

White Americans have been historically reluctant to yield to nonwhite Americans a full and equal place in the social, economic, and political life of this nation. Over time, the principal targets of that ethnic prejudice have been African Americans, Native Americans, Asian Americans, and Hispanic Americans. The white-male-dominated power structure has also been slow to recognize the claims of women to an equal place in American society.

African Americans Much of what you will read in these pages focuses on discrimination against African Americans. There are three principal reasons for this focus. First, African Americans have been the victims of consistent and deliberate unjust treatment for a longer time than any other minority group of Americans. \({ }^{1}\) The ancestors of most African Americans came to this country in chains. Over a period of some two hundred years, tens of thousands of Africans were kidnapped, crammed aboard sailing ships, brought to America, and then sold in slave markets. As slaves, they were the legal property of other human beings. They could be bought and sold and forced to do their owners' bidding, however harsh the circumstances.

It took a civil war to end more than two centuries of slavery in this country. The 13th Amendment finally abolished slavery in 1865. Still, the Civil War and the ratification of that amendment did not end widespread racial discrimination in the United States.

Second, African Americans constitute a huge minority group in the United States. They number well over 40 million today, over 13 percent of all of the American people.

Finally, most of the gains the nation has made in translating the Constitution's guarantees of equality into a reality for all persons have come out of efforts made by and on behalf of African Americans. Recall that, for example, the struggles of Martin Luther King, Jr., and others resulted in the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and then the Voting Rights Act of 1965. See Chapter 6, Section 3.

1 Slavery first came to what was to become the United States in 1619; in August of that year, 20 Africans were sold to white setters at Jamestown in colonial Virginia.

America is now an inescapably multiracial society. Still, unlike whites, African Americans live with the consequences of America's history of racial discrimination every day of their lives. Of course, this is not to say that other groups of Americans have not also suffered the effects of discrimination. Clearly, many have.

Native Americans White settlers first began to arrive in America in relatively large numbers in the mid-1600s. At the time, some one million Native Americans were living in territory that was to become the United States. \({ }^{2}\) By 1900 , however, their number had fallen to less than 250,000 .

Diseases brought by white settlers decimated those first Americans. So, too, did the succession of military campaigns that accompanied the westward expansion of the United States. To quote one leading commentator:
"The only good Indian is a dead Indian' is not simply a hackneyed expression from cowboy movies. It was part of the strategy of westward expansion, as settlers and U.S. troops mercilessly drove the eastern Indians from their ancestral lands to the Great Plains and then took those lands too."
-Thomas E. Patterson, The American Democracy
Today, about 3 million Native Americans live in this country. More than a third of them live on or near reservations, which are public lands set aside by government for use by Native American tribes.

Native Americans
Native Americans
comprise a large number of ethnic number of ethnic groups and distinct a diversity of nations and lifestyles. \(\nabla\)

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 21, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 192)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 196)
\(\boxed{L 2}\) Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 197)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 198)
L3 Quiz A (p. 199)
L2 Quiz B (p. 200)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 196) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 197)
beLLRINGER
Write on the board: How has cultural diversity in the United States affected the foods you eat? Sports you play or watch? Holidays you celebrate? List examples in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER RESPONSES}

Have students share their answers to the Bellringer questions. Point out that the United States is among the most heterogeneous societies in the world. Ask students to guess other heterogeneous countries. (Canada, for example, has more than 200 ethnic groups. Nigeria is made up of more than 250 ethnic groups.) Have students name countries with homogeneous societies. (Han Chinese make up 92 percent of China's population. Egypt is 98 percent Egyptian.)

\section*{L2 ELL Differentiate Have students look up the} meaning of the words hetero- (other, different), homo- (same, like), and -genos (race, family, kind) in the dictionary. Ask non-native students to discuss how heterogeneous their home country is compared to the United States.

\section*{DISCUSS DIVERSITY}

Display Transparency 21 A, Cultural Diversity, which shows the ethnic composition of the United States Ask: What two ethnic groups were counted in the 1790 census? (White and African American) What is the fastest growing minority group? (Hispanic Americans) Ask volunteers among your minority students to discuss diversity within their group. For example, what countries of origins are represented among your Asian students? Do individuals consider themselves "Chicano," "Latino," or some other designation? Is the diversity within these groups reflected in different forms of dress, foods, or customs? Be mindful of students' privacy by respecting their decision not to participate. If your class contains no minority students, lead a general class discussion on diversity within minority groups.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It had no effect on racial discrimination.

\section*{IDENTIFY BENEFITS/CHALLENGES OF DIVERSITY}

Ask: In what ways might diversity change U.S. politics? (may lead to varied voting blocs and more diverse groups of candidates and elected officials) What challenges might growing diversity create? (possible answers: increased misunderstanding or conflict among people whose social, cultural, and religious beliefs differ; resentment from whites who feel their dominant position threatened) Is increasing diversity likely to make Americans more or less tolerant? Explain. (Some may say that having more frequent contact with diverse peoples will increase tolerance; others might argue that greater diversity will cause intolerance or bigotry by introducing people to beliefs or practices that they disagree with or find threatening.)

\section*{PREDICT ASSIMILATION PATTERNS}

Review the definitions of discrimination (prejudice against) and assimilation (merge into). Point out that in the early 1900s, Americans often referred to the nation as a "melting pot," in which immigrants worked hard to assimilate. Today the United States with its many distinctive racial and ethnic groups is instead compared to a "salad bowl" or "marble cake," in which each of the ingredients retains its separate color, texture, and flavor within the "whole." Have students write a paragraph answering this question and giving reasons for their opinion: What will American culture resemble by 2050 ?

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC OF DISCRIMINATION}

Display Transparency 21B, Preventing Discrimination. Then ask: What are some situations in which withholding information about a person's age, gender, and race is appropriate? (applications for jobs, school, or housing) What are some situations in which providing this information may be appropriate? Why? (applying for certain vocational or educational scholarships or medical benefits set aside for particular races or ages; or for certain athletic competitions in which men and women compete separately or in age categories)
Explain that diversity is reflected not only in age, gender, ethnicity, and race, but also in religious beliefs and practices, languages spoken, country of origin, income, marital status, and education. Have students describe situations in which a group might face discrimination based on any of these characteristics. As each is described, have students suggest laws, rules, or procedures that act as protections against discrimination.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Graphs Native Americans, Asians, and any other races that were not White or African American; 15.5 percent

Like African Americans, Native Americans have been the victims of overwhelming discrimination. The consequences of that bias have been appalling, and they remain evident today. Poverty, joblessness, and alcoholism plague many reservations. The Indian Education Act of 1972 attempted to remedy the cycle of continual poverty by providing financial assistance to local educational agencies for Native American children and adult programs. Still, the life expectancy of Native Americans living on reservations today is ten years less than the national average, and the Native American infant mortality rate is one and a half times that of white Americans.

Hispanic Americans Hispanic Americans are those in this country who have a Spanishspeaking background; many prefer to be called Latinos. Hispanics may be of any race. According to the Bilateral Commission on the Future of United States-Mexican Relations, Hispanic Americans "are among the world's most complex groupings of human beings. [The largest number] are white, millions . . . are mestizo, nearly half a million in the United States are black or mulatto."3

Today, Hispanic Americans number some 45 million and they constitute the largest minority group in the United States, having surpassed African Americans around the year 2000. They are also the nation's fastestgrowing population group. Hispanic Americans can generally be divided into four main subgroups:
1. Mexican Americans More than half of all Hispanics in the U.S., at least 29 million persons, were either born in Mexico or trace their ancestry there. Those born in this country of Mexican parents are often called Chicanos.

Most of the Mexican American population lives in the States of California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas, but that population is spreading throughout much of the country. A majority of the residents of such large cities as El Paso and San Antonio in Texas are 3 A mestizo is a person with both Spanish or Portuguese and Native American ancestry. A mulatto is a person of African and white ancestry.

614 Civil Rights: Equal Justice Under Law

\section*{Background}

INDIAN EDUCATION ACT The Department of Education recognized that Native Americans had unique educational, linguistic, and cultural academic needs. Thus, the Indian Education Act of 1972 "provides federal assistance in education . . . to help close the gap which now exists between Indian education and the general educational level of the United States. The Act further creates a new Office of Indian Education within the Office of Education. . . . The new Act created the National Advisory Council for Indian Education to provide policy direction and guidance to the Congress and those responsible for implementing the Act. The Council is comprised of 15 Indian or Alaskan Natives appointed by the President from a select list recommended by Indian tribes and organizations throughout the Country." (Journal of American Indian Education: Volume 14, Number 2)

Although the population of the United States remains predominantly white, minority populations are growing at a faster rate than the majority population. What is the rate of growth for Asian Americans? What are the benefits of diversity in a community?

Population Increase, 2000-2010*

Hispanic today, and such smaller border cities as Laredo and Brownsville in Texas are now over 90 percent Latino.
2. Puerto Ricans Another large group of Hispanics has come to the mainland from the island of Puerto Rico. The population of the United States now includes about four million Puerto Ricans. Most of them have settled in New York and New Jersey, and in other parts of the Northeast.
3. Cuban Americans The Hispanic population also includes some 1.5 million Cuban Americans. They are mostly people who fled the Castro dictatorship in Cuba, and their descendants. A majority of them have settled in Miami and elsewhere in South Florida.
4. Central and South Americans The fourth major subgroup of Hispanic Americans came here from Central and South America, many as refugees. A refugee is one who seeks protection (refuge) from war, persecution, or some other danger. More than three million persons have emigrated to the United States from Central and South American countries over the past 30 years or so; they have arrived in the largest numbers from Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala, Colombia, and Chile. Many have also come from the Dominican Republic, an island nation in the Caribbean.

Asian Americans The story of white America's mistreatment of Asians is a lengthy one, too. Asians have faced discrimination from the first day they arrived. As with all immigrant groups, assimilation into the white-dominated population has been difficult. Assimilation is the process by which people of one culture merge into and become part of another.

Chinese laborers were the first Asians to come to the United States in large numbers. They were brought here in the 1850s to 1860 s as contract laborers to work in the mines and to build railroads in the West. Many white Americans, both native-born and immigrants, resented the competition of what they called "coolie labor." Their resentments were frequently expressed in acts of violence toward Asians.

Congress brought Chinese immigration to a near halt with the Chinese Exclusion

\section*{Background}

Chinese exclusion ACt The Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882 barred Chinese immigrants because "in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers the good order of certain localities...." Events leading to this discriminatory law began in the mid-1800s when the California Gold Rush drew waves of Chinese immigrants hoping to work in the mines. Many new arrivals found jobs building railroads. In 1870, Chinese laborers agreed to work on the Union Pacific in Wyoming for \($ 32.50\) per month. White workers earned \($ 52\) per month for the same job. White workers resented the competition for jobs and blamed the Chinese for depressing wages. Many Americans also believed that the physical and cultural differences of Asians made assimilation impossible. After the act passed, violence against Chinese people in the United States increased.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour for data on the ethnic composition of the U.S. population and the rate of growth of ethnic populations.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Organize students into small groups and distribute the Chapter 21 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 198), which asks students to identify historical events and laws that perpetuated or removed discrimination against minority groups in the United States. Ask students to complete the chart based on information in the text and then to answer the Reflection Questions. Point out that the impact of discrimination on each of these groups has varied over time, increasing or decreasing based in part upon historical events as well as government policies. Discuss students' responses to the Reflection Questions, particularly number 3, which focuses on what should be the judiciary's role in battling discrimination.
L2 Differentiate Fill in the first row of the chart for students, ask a volunteer to fill in the second row, and then have students work independently or in pairs to complete the remainder of the chart.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Graphs 33.3 percent; possible benefits of diversity: more opportunity for social and cultural exchange and expression; multiple perspectives and skill sets to contribute to business and society; greater variety in music, dance, theater, architectural styles, cuisine, fashion
Checkpoint a person who seeks protection in a new country from war, persecution, or some other danger in the home country

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students research the immigration of refugees from a particular country or countries. Ask them to prepare a report that identifies the country or countries the immigrants came from, why they left their home country, the obstacles they faced in getting out of the country of origin or into the United States, how they obtained refugee status in the United States, and, if known, where large numbers of this group have settled in the United States.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L2 Have students create a timeline showing the history of discrimination against minority groups and women in the United States.Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 199)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 200)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Government}
online
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Gender Discrimination}

Disparity in Pay
Studies show that women earn less than 80 cents for every dollar earned by men. What do the cartoon and graph say about equality in the workplace?

\section*{Median Weekly Earnings of Men and Women*} virulent adj bitterly antagonistic, spiteful

Act of 1882. Because of this and other government actions, only a very small number of Chinese, Japanese, and other Asians were permitted to enter the United States for more than 80 years.

Early in World War II, the Federal Government ordered the evacuation of all persons of Japanese descent from the Pacific Coast. Some 120,000 people, two thirds of them native-born American citizens, were forcibly removed to inland "war relocation camps." Years later, the government conceded that this action had been both unnecessary and unjust.

Congress made dramatic changes in American immigration policies in 1965. Since then, some ten million Asian immigrants have come to this country, mostly from the Philippines, China, Korea, Vietnam, and India. The term "Asian American" encompasses an ever more diverse population. Asian Americans represent a tremendous variety of languages, religions, and cultures, and many recent immigrants from Asia have little in common with one another.

Today, the Asian American population exceeds 15 million. Asian Americans now live in every part of the United States. They constitute some 40 percent of the population in Hawaii and more than 10 percent of the population in California. New York City boasts the largest Chinese community outside Asia.

\section*{Discrimination Against Women}

Unlike the several ethnic groups described thus far, women are not a minority in the United States. They are, in fact, a majority group. Still, traditionally in American law and public policy, women have not enjoyed the same rights as men. Their status was even lower, in many instances, than men who were themselves the target of virulent discrimination. Women have been treated as less than equal in a great many matters-including, for example, property rights, education, and employment opportunities.

Organized efforts to improve the place of women in American society date from July 19,1848 . On that day, a convention on women's rights met in Seneca Falls, New York, and adopted a set of resolutions that deliberately echoed the words of the Declaration of Independence. It began:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one portion of the family of man to assume among the people of the earth a position different from that which they have hitherto occupied, ... We hold these truths to be selfevident: that all men and women are created equal ...
-Declaration of Sentiments, 1848

\section*{Background}

ANTISLAVERY AND WOMEN'S RIGHTS The antislavery movement spurred the women's rights movement, as many abolitionists were women. At the second women's rights convention, which was held in 1850 at Salem, Ohio, speaker J. Elizabeth Jones noted: "It is not Woman's Rights of which I design to speak, but of Woman's Wrongs. I shall claim nothing for ourselves because of our sex-l shall demand the recognition of no rights on the ground of our womanhood. In the contest which is now being waged in behalf of the enslaved colored man in this land, I have yet to hear the first word in favor of his rights as a colored man; the great point which is sought to be established is this, that the colored man is a human being, and as such, entitled to the free exercise of all the rights which belong to humanity. And we should demand our recognition as equal members of the human family.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Graphs Sample answer: Women have not yet achieved equality in the workforce based on pay.

Those who fought and finally won the long struggle for women's suffrage believed that, with the vote, women would soon achieve other basic rights. That assumption proved to be false. Although more than 51 percent of the population is now female, women have held only a minor fraction of the nation's top public offices since 1789 .

Even today, women hold little more than 15 percent of the 535 seats in Congress and a little less than 25 percent of the 7,382 seats in the 50 State legislatures. Less than one sixth of the 50 State governors today are female. Women are also hugely underrepresented at the upper levels of corporate management and other power groups in the private sector. Fewer than 20 percent of the nation's doctors, lawyers, and college professors are women.

It is illegal to pay women less than men for the same work. The Equal Pay Act of 1963 requires employers to pay men and women the same wages if they perform the same jobs in the same establishment under the same working conditions. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 also prohibits job discrimination based on sex. Yet, more than 45 years after Congress passed those laws, working women earn, on the average, less than 80 cents for every dollar earned by working men. See the cartoon and graph on page 616.

Women earn less than men for a number of reasons-including the fact that the male workforce is, overall, better educated and has more job experience than the female workforce. (Note that these factors themselves can often be traced to discrimination.) In addition, some blame the so-called "Mommy track," in which women put their careers on hold to have children or work reduced hours to juggle child-care responsibilities. Others claim that a "glass ceiling" of discrimination in the corporate world and elsewhere, invisible but impenetrable, prevents women from rising to their full potential.

Certainly it is true that until quite recently women were limited to a fairly narrow range of jobs. In many cases, women were encouraged not to work outside the home once they were married. Even now, many jobs held by women are in low-paying clerical and service occupations. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that 97 percent of all secretaries today are women; so too are 95 percent of all childcare workers, 92 percent of all registered nurses, 92 percent of all bookkeepers and auditing clerks, 92 percent of all hairdressers and cosmetologists, and 89 percent of all dieticians and nutrutionists.

Efforts on behalf of equal rights for women have gained significant ground in recent years. But, recall, that ground has not included an Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What was the signifiof Sentiments?

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Diversity and the ethnic \\ composition of the \\ United States (Ques- \\ tions 1, 2, 4, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students describe in a journal entry \\ how they think the increasing hetero- \\ geneous snature of American society will \\ affect the social, political, or economic life \\ of the United States.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
History of discrimina- \\ tion against minority \\ groups (Questions 1, \\ \(3,5,7)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students to write a true or false quiz \\ with ten questions concerning discrimina- \\ tion of minority groups and women. Have \\ students exchange and complete one \\ another's quizzes.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It was a set of resolutions at the first organized effort to improve the place of women in American society.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed graphic organizer to answer pleted graphic organizer to answ minority groups in American society been discriminated against?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. Who are immigrants?
3. What event and which amendment ended slavery in the United States?
4. How are refugees similar to and different from other immigrants?
5. (a) Identify and describe two laws intended to improve women's wages. (b) Summarize three reasons why women still earn less than men.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Predict Consequences (a) What is assimilation? (b) What could be the consequences of assimilation on a minority group?
7. Express Problems Clearly (a) What problems have Native Americans faced? (b) Does the Federal Government have a responsibility to remedy this situation? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Problem-Solution Essay: Identify a Problem Scan the chapter for a challenge that immigrants, minority Americans, or women face. Write a summary paragraph or two that includes a statement of the problem or challenge and an explanation of why and for whom it is a problom. why consider the matter.
because of war, persecution, or other danger; immigrants: leave home country, but do so voluntarily without seeking refuge
5. (a) Equal Pay Act of 1963: employers must pay men and women the same wages if they perform the same jobs in the same establishment under the same working conditions; Civil Rights Act of 1964: prohibits job discrimination based on sex (b) Male work force is, overall, better educated with more experience; women put careers on hold to raise children; "glass ceiling" prevents women from rising to full potential.
6. (a) process by which people of one culture merge into and become part of another culture
(b) may lose cultural history, identity, and values
7. (a) poverty, joblessness, alcoholism, lower life expectancy, higher infant mortality
(b) Answers will vary.

QUICK WRITE Remind students to consider the cascading effects on society, such as intolerance or fear, associated with the problem or challenge they identify.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How has the interpretation of the guarantee of equal rights changed over time?
\(\begin{array}{|l|l|l|}\hline \begin{array}{l}\text { Equal Protection } \\
\text { Clause: }\end{array} \\ \begin{array}{l}\text { 14th Amend- } \\ \text { ment, no State } \\ \text { shall deny to any } \\ \text { person the equal } \\ \text { protection of the } \\ \text { laws }\end{array} &\)\begin{tabular}{l}
\multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\(\begin{array}{l}\text { Reasonable } \\
\text { Classification: } \\ \text { government may } \\ \text { classify, but not } \\ \text { unreasonably }\end{array}\)} \\ \end{tabular} & \(\left.\begin{array}{l}\text { Rational Basis } \\ \text { Test: }\end{array} \\ \text { classification } \\
\text { must be reason- } \\ \text { ably related to } \\ \text { achieving proper } \\ \text { government } \\ \text { purpose }\end{array}\right]\)
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
\multicolumn{1}{c}{\(\quad\)\begin{tabular}{l} Strict \\
\multicolumn{1}{c}{ Scrutiny } \\ Test:
\end{tabular}} \\ in equal \\ protection \\ cases involving \\ fundamental \\ rights or suspect \\ classifications, \\
a "compelling \\
government \\
interest" must \\ justify class \\ distinctions \end{tabular} &  & De Jure, De Facto Segregation: de jure: segregation authorized by law; de facto: segregation that exists in fact, even if no law requires it \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will . .
- understand how the Supreme Court interprets "equal protection of the laws" by analyzing and applying the tests it uses to decide cases.
- trace the history of segregation in public schools by creating a timeline of cases related to school integration.
- examine changing attitudes about school integration by evaluating a political cartoon on this topic.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE TIMELINES}

Before students create a timeline of civil rights in this section, you may want to review information on analyzing timelines in the Skills Handbook, p. S29.

\section*{Guiding Question}

How has the interpretation of the guarantee of equal rights changed over time? Use a flowchart like the one below to take notes on the section.

Political Dictionary
- rational basis - separate-buttest separate-but
- strict scrutiny - integration
test
- de jure
- segregation - de facto
- Jim Crow

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the importance of the Equal Protection Clause.
2. Describe the history of segregation in America.
3. Examine how classification by gender relates to discrimination. atop the nation's Capitol

The huge bronze statue of Freedom has stood atop the nation's Capitol in Washington, D.C., for about 150 years now. That bold figure is meant to symbolize the basic ideas upon which the United States exists-the concepts of individual liberty, of self-government, and of equal rights for all.

The irony is that records recently unearthed by the Architect of the Capitol show that at least 400 slaves worked on the construction of the Capitol from 1792 to its opening in 1800. And that those slaves cast the huge sculpture of Freedom, and even hoisted it atop the new building. Those old documents also record payments to several local slave owners-for example, "To Joseph Forest, for the hire of the Negro Charles." The owners were paid \($ 5\) a month for each slave who worked on the project.

\section*{Equal Protection Clause}

The equality of all persons, proclaimed so boldly in the Declaration of Independence, is not set out in so many words in the Constitution. Still, that concept pervades the document.

The closest approach to a literal statement of equality is found in the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. It declares that "No State shall . . . deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Those words, added to the Constitution in 1868, were originally meant to benefit newly freed slaves. Over time, they have come to mean that the States (and their local governments) cannot draw unreasonable distinctions between any classes of persons. The Supreme Court has often held that the 5th Amendment's Due Process Clause puts the same restriction on the Federal Government.

Reasonable Classification Government must have the power to classify, to draw distinctions between persons and groups. Otherwise, it could not possibly regulate human behavior. That is to say, government must be able to discriminate -and it does. For example, those who rob banks fall into a special class, and they receive special treatment by government. Clearly, that sort of discrimination is reasonable.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • The 14 th Amendment guaranteed "equal protection of the laws" to all Americans in 1868, yet many States adopted laws allowing race- and gender-based discrimination. - The Supreme Court established the separate-but-equal doctrine in Plessy v. Ferguson, but then reversed it in Brown v. Board of Education. • Since 1971 most laws that treat women differently from men have been successfully challenged in the courts.
CONCEPTS: individual rights and responsibilities, equal protection
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The Constitution describes the equality of all persons in general terms, but the concept pervades the document. - The nation has not yet achieved complete integration of educational systems, but legally enforced racial segregation in public life has been eliminated.

Government may not discriminate unreasonably, however. Every State taxes the sale of cigarettes, and so taxes smokers but not nonsmokers. No State can tax only blonde smokers, however, or only male smokers.

Over time, the Supreme Court has rejected many equal protection challenges to a wide variety of actions by government. More often than not, however, the Supreme Court has found that what those governments have done is, in fact, constitutional.

The Rational Basis Test The Supreme Court most often decides equal protection cases by applying a standard known as the rational basis test. This test asks: Does the classification in question bear a reasonable relationship to the achievement of some proper governmental purpose?

A California case, Michael M. v. Su perior Court, 1981, illustrates that test. California law says that a man who has sexual relations with a girl under 18 to whom he is not married can be prosecuted for statutory rape. However, the girl cannot be charged with that crime, even if she is a willing partner. The Court found the law to bear a reasonable relationship to a proper public policy goal: preventing teenage pregnancies.

The Strict Scrutiny Test The Court imposes a higher standard in some equal protection cases, however. This is especially true when a case deals with (1) such "fundamental rights" as the right to vote, the right to travel between the States, or 1 st Amendment rights; or (2) such "suspect classifications" as those based on race, sex, or national origin.

In these instances, the Court has said that a law must meet a higher standard than the rational basis test: the strict scrutiny test. A State must be able to show that some "compelling governmental interest" justifies the distinctions it has drawn between classes of people. Thus, in an alimony case, Orr v. Orr, 1979, an Alabama law that made women but not men eligible for alimony was held unconstitutional, as a denial of equal protec-tion-because the law's distinction between men and women did not serve any compelling governmental interest.

\section*{Segregation by Race}

Beginning in the late 1800s, nearly half the States-including some outside the Southpassed racial segregation laws. Used in this context, segregation refers to the separation of one group from another on the basis of race. Most of those statutes were Jim Crow laws-laws aimed at African Americans in particular. Some were also drawn to affect Mexican Americans, Asian Americans, and Native Americans. They regularly required segregation by race in the use of both public and private facilities: schools, parks and playgrounds, hotels and restaurants, streetcars and railroads, public drinking fountains, restrooms, and cemeteries. Many also prohibited interracial marriages.

The Separate-but-Equal Doctrine The Supreme Court provided a constitutional basis for Jim Crow laws by creating the separate-but-equal doctrine in 1896. In Plessy v. Ferguson, the Court upheld a Louisiana law that required segregation in railroad coaches. It ruled that the law did not violate the Equal Protection Clause because the separate seating provided for African Americans was equal to the seating provided for whites.

\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What were Jim Crow laws?

Chapter 21 • Section 2619

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 21, Section 2:
L 3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 201)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 203)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 205)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 207)
L3 Quiz A (p. 209)
L2 Quiz B (p. 211)

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 201) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 203)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: "Our Constitution is colorblind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens. . . . The humblest is the peer of the most powerful." -Justice John Marshall Harlan, dissenting in Plessy v. Ferguson, 1896

ELL Differentiate Explain that one meaning of the word peer is "equal."

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS THE BELLRINGER}

Ask: Why is the Constitution "color-blind"?
(Its laws are to be applied equally, regardless of a person's race or ethnicity.) Have students paraphrase the second sentence. (Poor people have the same rights as rich people.)

\section*{COMPARE RATIONAL BASIS TO STRICT SCRUTINY}

On the board, draw a T-chart like the one below. Have students compare and contrast the two tests the Supreme Court uses to decide whether a law is discriminatory toward one classification (group) or provides equal protection.
\begin{tabular}{l|l}
\multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Rational Basis Test } & \multicolumn{1}{c}{ Strict Scrutiny Test } \\
\hline - least strict or lowest level & • most strict or highest level of scrutiny \\ of scrutiny & • Questions considered: Does the law \\
- Questions considered: Is & infringe on a fundamental or basic \\ there a good reason for & constitutional right? Does the law or \\ this law? Doos applying & policy include a "sspect"" or suspi- \\ this law meet a legiti- & cious classification based on race, \\ mate or reasonable social & gender, or national origin? If so, the \\ or economic purpose that & law is invalid unless the government \\ is a goal of government? & can show it serves a compelling gov- \\
- The Court rarely over- & ernmental interest, such as national \\ turns legislataion using the & security. \\ rational basis test. & - The Court often overturns laws using \\ & the strict scrutiny test
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint laws that required segregation by race in public and private facilities

\section*{APPLY RATIONAL BASIS AND STRICT SCRUTINY}

Read aloud the following laws or cases and ask students to determine which test the Court would use to analyze them under the Equal Protection Clause. Have students explain their answers.
1. Seatbelts are mandatory. (rational basis; social goal of safety)
2. Japanese Americans must relocate to internment camps. (strict scrutiny; suspect classification discriminates against national origin and denies freedom of movement; ruling upheld based on national security)

\section*{3. Virginia law makes interracial marriages} illegal. (strict scrutiny; suspect classification discriminates against race; law overturned)
4. The legal drinking age is changed to 21 years old. (rational basis; social goals of health and safety)
5. A State law excludes women from jury duty. (strict scrutiny; suspect classification discriminates against gender; law overturned because it served no compelling governmental interest) NOTE: Explain to students that cases involving women's rights were analyzed under the rational basis test from 1789 to the 1970 s. The Court followed social norms, which assumed it was rational to protect women and keep them in their "proper sphere. "
6. A white male fights affirmative action policies of law school registration. (strict scrutiny; suspect classification discriminates against race)
7. Law requires States to use social security numbers when administering welfare benefits. (rational basis; economic regulation)
8. U.S. Forest Service harvests timber in the National Forest, which disturbs Native American burial grounds. (rational basis; economic goal of utilizing federal lands; Court decided that the case did not interfere with fundamental religious rights of Native Americans and so did not warrant strict scrutiny.)

L4
Differentiate Have students research Korematsu v. United States (case 2 above), one of the few cases in which the Court allowed a suspect classification to stand. Have students answer these questions: What justification did the majority give for its decision to allow race-based classification? What was the suspect classification in this case? Do you think the action would pass the strict scrutiny test today? Why or why not?

\footnotetext{
Answers
Checkpoint Schools had to desegregate.
}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What was the result of the Brown v. Board of Education ruling?

The doctrine was soon extended to other fields. And it stood, largely unchallenged, for nearly 60 years.

Early Challenges The Supreme Court first began to chip away at the separate-but-equal doctrine in Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada in 1938. Lloyd Gaines, an African American, was denied admission to the law school at the all-white University of Missouri. Gaines was fully qualified for admission-except for his race. The State did not have a separate law school for African Americans. However, it did offer to pay his tuition at a public law school in any of the four neighboring States, which did not discriminate by race. Gaines, however, insisted on a legal education in his home State.

The Court held that the separate-butequal doctrine left Missouri with two choices: admit Gaines to the State's one law school or establish a separate-but-equal school for him. The State gave in. Gaines was admitted to the university's law school

Over the next several years, the Court began to insist on equality of separate facilities. Thus, in 1950 the Court decided two major cases in line with its holding in Gaines: Sweatt v. Painter and McLaurin v. Oklahoma. Both cases involved African American university students for whom a State had provided separate educational facilities. The Court found that, in both instances, those separate facilities were, in fact, far from equal. Still, in neither of these cases did the Court reexamine the validity of the separate-but-equal doctrine.

Brown v. Board of Education Finally, in 1954, the Court reversed Plessy v. Ferguson. In Brown v. Board of Education ofTo peka, it struck down the laws of four States requiring or allowing separate public schools for white and African American students. \({ }^{4}\)

Unanimously, the Court held segregation by race in public education to be invalid:

\footnotetext{
4 Kansas, Delaware, South Carolina, and Virginia. On the same day, the High Court also struck down racially segregated public schools in the District of Columbia as a violation of the 5 th Amendment, Bolling v. Sharpe, 1954.
}

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other 'tangible' factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does.
. To separate them from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone. . . Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal.
—Chief Justice Earl Warren
In 1955 the Court directed the States to make "a prompt and reasonable start" to end segregation and to accomplish that goal "with all deliberate speed."

A "reasonable start" was made in Baltimore, Louisville, St. Louis, and elsewhere. In most of the Deep South, however, "massive resistance" soon developed. State legislatures passed laws, and school boards worked to block integration-the process of desegregation, of bringing a previously segregated group into the mainstream of society. Most of those efforts were clearly unconstitutional, but challenging them in court proved both costly and slow.

The pace of desegregation quickened after Congress passed the Civil Rights Act of 1964. That act forbids the use of federal funds to aid any State or local activity in which racial segregation is practiced. It also directs the Justice Department to file suits to prompt desegregation actions.

The Supreme Court hastened the process in 1969. In a case from Mississippi, Alexander v. Holmes County Board ofEducation, it ruled that, after 15 years, the time for "all deliberate speed" had ended. Said a unanimous Court: "Continued operation of segregated schools under a standard allowing for 'all deliberate speed’. . . is no longer constitutionally permissible."

\section*{Background}

JIM CROW LAWS From the 1880s into the 1960s, many States enacted Jim Crow laws to promote racial segregation. Here are some samples. "No person . . . shall require any white female nurse to nurse in wards . . . in which negro men are placed. " (Alabama) "[I]t shall be unlawful for any amateur colored baseball team to play baseball in any vacant lot or baseball diamond within two blocks of any playground devoted to the white race." (Georgia) "Books shall not be interchangeable between white and colored schools . . . ." (North Carolina) "Any instructor who shall teach in any school . . . where members of the white and colored race are . . . enrolled . . . shall be guilty of a misdemeanor . . . ." (Oklahoma) "Any person . . . who shall be guilty of printing, publishing or circulating . . . matter urging or presenting . . . arguments or suggestions in favor of social equality . . . shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. " (Mississippi)

\section*{De Jure Segregation}

When the Supreme Court held separate-but-equal facilities to be constitutional in Plessy in 1896, the States had the law on their side. Jim Crow laws, named for a character in minstrel shows, limited voting rights and required separate facilities for African Americans. Similar laws legalized Mexican American segregation in Texas and throughout the Southwest. What federal law

De Jure, De Facto Segregation By the fall of 1970, school systems characterized by de jure segregation-segregation authorized by law-had been abolished. That is not to say that desegregation had been fully accomplished, however-far from it. \({ }^{5}\)

Many recent integration controversies have arisen in places where the schools have never been segregated by law. They have occurred, instead, in communities in which de facto segregation has long been present, and continues. De facto segregation is segregation that exists in fact, even if no law requires it. Housing patterns have most often been its major cause. The concentration of African Americans in certain sections of cities inevitably led to local school systems in

5 Some States, several school districts, and many parents and private groups sought to avoid integrated schools through established or, often, newly created private schools. On this point see the Court's holding in Runyon v. McCrary, 1976, page 584.
which the student bodies of some schools are largely African American. That condition is quite apparent in many northern as well as southern communities today.

Efforts to desegregate those school systems have taken several forms over recent decades. Thus, for example, school district lines have been redrawn and the busing of students out of racially segregated neighborhoods has been tried. Those efforts have brought strong protests in many places and violence in some of them.

The Court first sanctioned busing in a North Carolina case, Swann v. CharlotteMecklenburg Board of Education, 1971. There it held that: "Desegregation plans cannot be limited to the walk-in school." Busing has been used since then to increase the racial mix in many school districts across the countryin some by court order, in others voluntarily.

In recent years, a growing number of school systems have turned to socioeconomic status-

\section*{Background}

Integrating Central high Ernest Green, the first black student to graduate from Central High School in Little Rock, Arkansas, recalled his experience: "The Brown decision made me feel that the U.S. Constitution was finally working for me. . . . I could believe I was a full citizen, not a second class citizen as segregation had made me feel. . . . Initially, a number of students signed up to enroll, but . . . only nine . . . survived the pressure to quit. . . . [W]hen we tried to attend school, we were met by an angry white mob and armed soldiers. . . . Finally, President Dwight Eisenhower called out the [army] to protect us. . . . Once we got inside, it was like being in a war zone. We were harassed, our books were destroyed. . . . [At graduation] I knew that not only had I achieved something for myself, but I had broken a barrier as well. " (Ernest Green, Perspectives: Readings on Contemporary American Government)

\section*{ANALYZE A MAP OF SEGREGATION LAWS}

Display Transparency 21C, Segregation in 1954. Then ask:
- How did historical events influence the pattern of segregation? (Prior to and during the Civil War, antislavery sentiment was strong in the North. Slavery was critical to the economy of the South, and race-based discrimination was a social norm. After slavery was abolished, State laws mandating segregation continued.)
- Where would you expect de jure segregation to be strongest? (in the South)
- Why do you think the States had many different policies on segregation? (Policies reflected local conditions and attitudes toward segregation.)
- How did the Court's decision in the Brown case change the pattern of regional variations in laws on segregation? (made all forms of de jure segregation illegal)
- Do you think voluntary desegregation would have occurred over time? Why or why not?

\section*{CREATE A TIMELINE OF CIVIL RIGHTS}

Organize students into six groups to create an illustrated timeline of civil rights. Assign each group one of the cases below. Groups should research, illustrate, and write an extended caption that describes the issues of the case and how it changed the interpretation of "equal protection."
- Plessy v. Ferguson, 1896 (ruled that 1 4th Amendment guarantee of equal protection required equal public facilities for the two races, not equal access to the same facilities)
- Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 1938 (acknowledged that separate schools were not equal; required Missouri to admit Gaines to the State's one law school or establish a separate but equal school for Gaines)
- Sweatt v. Painter, McLaurin v. Oklahoma, 1950 (determined that separate educational facilities were not equal)
- Brown v. Board of Education, 1954 (overruled Plessy v. Ferguson; ruled that racial segregation was inherently unequal)
- Alexander v. Holmes County Board of Education, 1969 (required States to stop delaying and act more aggressively to end segregation; time for "all deliberate speed" was over)
- Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education, 1971 (allowed use of busing to increase racial diversity in public schools)

\section*{Answers}

Caption Civil Rights Act of 1964

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 21 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 205). The worksheet shows a cartoon about school integration. Explain that students will analyze a political cartoon that focuses on the impact of the Supreme Court's desegregation order in Brown v. Board of Education.

L2 Differentiate Ask: What does the title mean? (Desegregation is occurring little by little.) What does the doorway lead to? (a desegregated classroom) What race of students is trying to open the door? (African American students)Differentiate Ask students to point out all the symbolism used in the cartoon.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Have students complete the Chapter 21 Extend Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 207), which compares the dissenting opinion of Justice Harlan in Plessy v. Ferguson with the majority opinion of Chief Justice Earl Warren in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka.

Checkpoint Where does the Constitution specifically reference gender?
in particular, to income rather than race-in assigning students to schools within the district. That is, they have tried to promote schools with economically diverse student bodies. The results appear to be promising, both in terms of maintaining integrated schools and in improving the performance of disadvantaged students.

Segregation in Other Fields Public schools have not been fully integrated. But legally enforced racial segregation in all other areas of life has been eliminated. In the process, many State and local laws have either been repealed or they have been struck down by the courts.

The Supreme Court took a leading role in that process-holding in a number of cases that segregation by race is unconstitutional in other areas as well. Thus, it has held that the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause forbids segregation in public swimming pools and all other public recreational facilities, Baltimore v. Dawson, 1955; local transportation, Gayle v. Browder, 1956; and State prisons and local jails, Lee v. Washington, 1968. \({ }^{6}\) The High Court struck down all State miscegenation laws (statutes forbidding interracial marriages) in Loving v. Virginia, 1967.

\section*{Classification by Gender}

The Constitution speaks of the civil rights of "the people," "persons," and "citizens." Nowhere does it make its guarantees only to "men" or separately to "women." Its only reference to gender is in the 19th Amendment, which forbids denial of the right to vote "on account of sex." Gender has long been used as a basis of classification in the law, however. That practice reflected society's long-held view of the "proper" role of women. Most often, laws that treated men and women differently were intended to protect "the weaker sex." Over the years, the Court read that view into the 14th Amendment.

6 Gayle v. Browder stemmed from the lengthy bus boycott in Montgomery, Alabama - -the event that first brought Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., to national attention

- In response to United States v. Virginia, 1996, women now attend the Virginia Military Institute.

First Tests In the first case to challenge sex discrimination, Bradwell v. Illinois, 1873, the Court upheld a State law barring women from the practice of law. In that case, Justice Joseph P. Bradley wrote that:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

The civil law, as well as nature herself, has always recognized a wide difference in the respective spheres and destinies of man and woman. Man is, or should be, woman's protector and defender. The natural and proper timidity and delicacy which belongs to the female sex evidently unfits it for many of the occupations of civil life.

\section*{-Concurring Opinion}

Even as late as 1961, in Hoyt v. Florida, the Court could find no constitutional fault with a law that required men to serve on juries, but gave women the choice of serving or not.

Circumstances Today Matters are far different today. The Court now takes a very close look at cases involving claims of sex discrimination. It first did so in Reed v. Reed, 1971; there, it struck down an Idaho law that

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Have your students read Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. 's "I Have a Dream" speech and his "Letter From Birmingham Jail." Students can work in groups to identify reasons why mainstream society wanted to take segregation slowly, and reasons why King wanted to speed up the process.

To see this lesson plan, go to gave fathers preference over mothers in the administration of their children's estates.

Since then, the Supreme Court has found a number of sex-based distinctions to be unconstitutional. In Taylor v. Louisiana, 1975, it held that the Equal Protection Clause forbids the States to exclude women from jury service. Among other examples of that line of cases, it struck down an Oklahoma law that prohibited the sale of beer to males under 21 and to females under 18, Craig v. Boren, 1976. It also found the practice of refusing to admit women to the rigorous citizen-soldier program offered by a public institution, the Virginia Military Institute, to be constitutionally unacceptable, United States v. Virginia, 1996.

The Court's changed attitude in cases involving sex-based discrimination was put this way in the majority opinion in Frontiero v. Richardson in 1973:7

7 In this case, the Court for the first time struck down a federal 7 In this case, the Court for the first time struck down a federal 5 th Amendment's Due Process Clause. That law gave various housing, medical, and other allowances to a serviceman for his wife and other dependents, but it made those same allowances available to a servicewoman only if her husband was dependent on her for more than half of his support

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

There can be no doubt that our Nation has had a long and unfortunate history of sex discrimination. Traditionally, such discrimination was rationalized by an attitude of 'romantic paternalism' which, in practical effect, put women, not on a pedestal, but in a cage.
-Justice William J. Brennan, Jr.
Not all sex-based distinctions are unconstitutional, however. The Court has upheld a Florida law that gives an extra property tax exemption to widows, but not to widowers, Kahn v. Shevin, 1974; an Alabama law forbidding women to serve as prison guards in all-male penitentiaries, Dothard v. Rawlinson, 1977; and the federal selective service law that requires only men to register for the draft and excludes women from any future draft, Rostker v. Goldberg 1981.

In effect, these cases say this: Classification by gender is not in and of itself unconstitutional. However, laws that treat men and women differently will be overturned by the courts unless (1) they are intended to serve an "important governmental objective" and (2) they are "substantially related" to achieving that goal.

\section*{Essential Questions To continue to build a \\ Journal Essential Question, go to your}

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}
(b) What actions have school systems taken, voluntarily or otherwise, to end de facto segregation?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
6. Draw Conclusions (a) Why do you think the Supreme Court was vague about the time frame in which to end segregation ("with all deliberate speed")? (b) How did the Civil Rights Act of 1964 speed up the process of integration?
7. Recognize Bias (a) What do you suppose Justice Bradley meant by separate "spheres and destinies of man and woman"? (b) Which genderbased distinctions are considered constitutional today? (c) Do you agre or disagree with those distinctions?

\section*{Quick Write}

Problem-Solution Essay: Consider Solutions Use the problem you identified in Section 1 and research possible solutions to that problem What solutions have been tried suc cessfully? Unsuccessfully? In a chart evaluate the pros and cons of each solution.

\section*{Assess and Remediate} work.

L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
L3 Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 209)
L2 Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 211)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding equal pro- \\ tection issues (Questions \\
\(1,2,3)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students select five cases in the \\ Supreme Court Glossary and determine \\ which test the Court would use to \\ analyze them under the Equal Protec- \\ tion Clause. Remind students that \\ economic or social regulations gener- \\ ally fall under the rational basis test \\ constitutional or racial issues receive \\ strict scrutiny.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
History and types of segre- \\ gation (Questions 4, 5, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students illustrate a "path" of \\ desegregation, beginning with Plessy v.
\end{tabular} \\
Ferguson and citing the cases and acts \\
in this section.
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It must serve an "important governmental objective" and be "substantially related" to achieving that goal.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Historically, equal rights applied only to white males. Today the phrase applies to minorities and women as well.
2. (a) "No State shall . . . deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. " (b) newly freed slaves
3. (a) rational basis and strict scrutiny (b) rational basis applied to cases that achieve a governmental purpose or public policy goal; strict scrutiny applied to cases about fundamental rights or suspect classifications (c) Michael \(M\). v. Superior Court, 1981, based on goal of preventing teenage pregnancies; Orr v. Orr, 1979, alimony only for women held unconstitutional, does not serve compelling governmental interest
4. (a) process of desegregation (b) Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, 1954
5. (a) de jure: segregation by law; de facto: segregation in fact, even if no law requires it (b) school district lines redrawn, students bused out of segregated neighborhoods, assigning students to schools based on socioeconomic status to achieve economic diversity
6. (a) possible answer: to allow local communities time to develop orderly plans to implement desegregation smoothly (b) forbade the use of federal funds to any State or local activity in which racial segregation was practiced
7. (a) possible answer: each gender group has its own place in society (b) extra property tax exemption to widows, women forbidden to serve as prison guards in all-male penitentiaries, women excluded from the draft (c) Answers will vary.
Quick write Remind students to list both strengths and weaknesses of possible solutions.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will examine the Supreme Court case Brown v. Board of Education by analyzing the arguments from both sides and considering initial reactions to the Court's ruling.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Have students read the feature as homework or at the beginning of class.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{STUDY AND BRAINSTORM ARGUMENTS}

Have volunteers read aloud the arguments in the text for Brown and then for the Board of Education. Ask: Which single argument would most compel you to support one side or the other? Why? Then ask students to brainstorm additional arguments for Brown, and list these on the board. Do the same for Board of Education. The 14 th Amendment states that people should be treated equally; it does not state that people should be treated the same. Ask: How would you refute each argument from the opposing side?

\section*{Is Segregation in Schools Constitutional?}

The Supreme Court ruled unanimously that it was not. Thirdgrader Linda Brown who lived in Topeka, Kansas, had to walk a mile through a dangerous railroad yard and then take a bus to get to school. There was another school much closer to her home, but school officials would not allow her to attend that school because it was reserved for white students only. Separate elementary schools for whites and nonwhites were maintained by Topeka's Board of Education.

Oliver Brown, Lindas father, turned to the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) for help. The Topeka chapter of the NAACP believed it had the "right plaintiff at the right time," and used Brown's complaint, along with those of 13 other African American parents in Topeka, to take the case for school desegregation to the United States District Court for the District of Kansas. In the early 1950s, segregation of the races was legal, and in some States, required. Kansas gave local school districts a choice of integrating their schools. Like many States at the time, however, it chose segregation with the condition that the minority schools were to be equal to the white schools. The District Court felt "compelled" to rule in favor of the Board of Education, citing Plessy v. Ferguson, which allowed separate but equal facilities. The NAACP appealed the case to the Supreme Court, where it was combined with three other cases calling for school desegregation in Delaware, South Carolina, and Virginia.

In a unanimous 9-0 decision, the Supreme Court overturned the "separate but equal" doctrine. Chief Justice Earl Warren delivered the opinion of the Court: "we

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

Before students discuss reactions to the Brown ruling, you may want to review information on comparing viewpoints in the Skills Handbook p. S15.

\section*{Supreme Court Notes}

CONNECTION TO PLESSY Although many editorials at the time hailed the Supreme Court decision in Brown as a healing democratic action, others were bitter that the Court dared to legislate social norms. This attitude had been introduced in Justice Henry Brown's majority opinion in Plessy v. Ferguson 60 years earlier. He stated that Plessy's argument "assumes that social prejudices may be overcome by legislation, and that equal rights cannot be secured to the Negro except by an enforced commingling of the two races. We cannot accept this proposition. If the two races are to meet upon terms of social equality, it must be the result of natural affinities, a mutual appreciation of each other's merits, and a voluntary consent of individuals."
cannot turn the clock back to 1868 when the [14th] Amendment was adopted, or even to 1896 when Plessy v. Ferguson was written. We must consider public education in the light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation. Only in this way can it be determined if segregation in public schools deprives these plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws.

We come then to the question presented: Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other 'tangible' factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does. . . . To separate them from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone. . . . We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal."

\section*{Arguments for Brown}
- Segregating African American students from white students makes them feel inferior.
- A sense of inferiority affects a child's motivation to learn.
- Segregation results in the fundamentally unequal education of minority students.

\section*{Arguments for Board of Education of Topeka}
- Minority schools in Topeka are equal in every way to, and sometimes have better programs than, schools for whites.
- There is no conclusive evidence that segregation by race affects the education of children.
- Segregated schools prepare black children for the segregated society they will face in adulthood.

\section*{Thinking Critically}
1. On what basis did the District Court reach its decision? On what

\section*{Background}

THE DOLL TEST In its argument before the Court, the NAACP introduced many sociological tests to prove that school segregation was psychologically harmful to African American children. In Footnote 11 of the Brown opinion, Dr. Kenneth Clark is listed. In the early 1950s, he and his wife Mamie performed a series of tests involving black and white dolls. African American children were asked to point to the "good" doll, and the majority pointed to the white doll. The tests had an impact on the Court's decision. The sociological tests are controversial today, however, with historians citing their use as nonscientific.

\section*{DISCUSS INITIAL REACTION}

Ask students what they think initial white reactions were to the Brown ruling. (Many in the South were shocked and angered. ) Have students consider reaction to the ruling from an African American student who would face prejudice at a desegregated school, and from an African American teacher who likely faced unemployment.

Differentiate Have students suppose that they are parents of a minority high school student who enters a formerly segregated school. Ask them to answer the following question: How would you prepare your child to face a racially charged environment?

\section*{RESEARCH ACCOMPANYING CASES}

Organize students into three groups, and have each group research the following cases that were ultimately combined with Brown: in Delaware, Gebhart v. Belton; in South Carolina, Briggs v. Elliott; and in Virginia, Davis v. County School Board of Prince Edward County. Groups should provide information regarding the plaintiffs, their actions, and the case's path to the Supreme Court.
L3 Differentiate Have groups present their cases as interviews or oral histories. The Web site of the University of Michigan Digital Archive: Brown v. Board of Education has sample oral histories.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Assign the Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 5 All-inOne, p. 229).
L2 Differentiate Assign the adapted Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 231).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students summarize the majority opinion of the Court. Ask them to explain the significance of the unanimous ruling of the justices.
Correct students' answers to the Thinking Critically questions.

\section*{IN THE NEWS}

Students can learn more about Brown v. Board of Education at PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Answers}
1. the Plessy v. Ferguson precedent that allowed separate but equal facilities; on intangible factors such as segregation generating feelings of inferiority
2. By desegregating schools, all students are provided with equal access to education.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{What is the history of civil rights legislation from Reconstruction to today? \\ Sample answers for timeline:}

1964 Civil Rights Act
1968 Civil Rights Act (Open Housing Act)
1972 Title IX of Education Amendments
1978 Regents of the University of California v. Bakke

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will.
- trace the development of civil rights legislation by relating it to historical actions of States designed to nullify African Americans' rights.
- analyze the policy of affirmative action and why it is controversial by studying political cartoons and by exploring the issues surrounding it.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 212) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 213)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Check students' prior knowledge by displaying Transparency 21D, which is a quote from President Lyndon Johnson. Have students answer the questions in their notebooks.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE IMAGES}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What is the history of civil rights legislation from Reconstruction to today? Use a timeline like the one below to take notes on the section.
\begin{tabular}{llll}
1964 & 1968 & 1972 & 1978
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- affirmative action
- quota
- reverse discrimination

\section*{Objectives}
1. Outline the history of civil rights legislation from Reconstruction to today.
2. Explore the issues surrounding affirmative action.

To practice analyzing images in this section, use the Chapter 21 Skills Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 217). You may want to teach the skill explicitly before discussing civil rights and voter rights legislation. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 218).

Those who, for one reason or another, oppose the enactment of civil rights legislation often rely on this observation: "You can't legislate morality". That is, racism, sexism, and other forms of discrimination will not be eliminated by simply passing a law.

The Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr, responded to that contention this way: "Judicial decrees," he said, "may not change the heart, but they can restrain the heartless." Clearly, Congress has agreed with Dr. King-as it has enacted a number of civil rights laws over the past 40 years or so.

\section*{Civil Rights: Reconstruction to Today}

From the 1870 s to the late 1950 s, Congress did not pass a single piece of meaningful civil rights legislation. Several factors contributed to that fact. Among the major ones: Through that period, the nation's predominantly white population was generally unaware of or little concerned with the plight of African Americans, Native Americans, or other nonwhites in this country. And southern white Democrats, bolstered by such devices as the seniority system and the filibuster, held many of the most strategic posts in Congress.

That historic logjam was finally broken in 1957, largely as a result of the pressures brought to bear by the civil rights movement led by Dr. King (see Chapter 6, Section 3). Beginning in that year, Congress passed a number of civil rights laws - notably, the Civil Rights Acts of 1957, 1960, 1964, and 1968; the Voting Rights Acts of \(1965,1970,1975,1982\), and 2006; and Title IX in the Education Amendments of \(1972 .{ }^{8}\)

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 The 1964 law is the most far-reaching of those statutes. It was passed after the longest debate in Senate history ( 83 days), and only after the Senate invoked cloture (end of debate) to kill a filibuster.

8 The 1957 and 1960 laws set up modest safeguards for the right to vote. You considered the voting rights provision in those statutes in Chapter 6, Section 3. The 1957 law created the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. The commission is an independent eight-member executive branch agency that is supposed to monitor the enforcement of the various civil rights laws, investigate cases of alleged discrimination, and report its findings to the President, Congress, and the public.

Image Above: Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. acknowledges the crowd at his "I Have \section*{Federal Civil Rights Laws}

626 Civil Rights: Equal Justice Under Law

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Beginning in 1957, Congress passed several acts to guarantee the civil rights of African Americans, other minorities, and women. - The policy of affirmative action requires most employers to take positive steps to remedy the effects of past discrimination. - Supporters and critics of affirmative action have taken their debate to the Supreme Court, Congress, State legislatures, and the voting booth.
CONCEPTS: individual rights and responsibilities, equal protection
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - Congress passed civil rights laws to carry out the Constitution's insistence on the equality of all before the law. - The controversy surrounding affirmative action continues today.

Beyond its voting rights provisions, the 1964 law outlaws discrimination in a number of areas. With its several later amendments, the law's major sections now:
- provide that no person may be denied access to or refused service in various "public accommodations"-hotels, motels, restaurants, theaters, and the like-because of race, color, religion, national origin, or physical disability (Title II). \({ }^{9}\)
- prohibit discrimination against any person on grounds of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, or physical disability in any program that receives any federal funding (Title VI).
- forbid both employers and labor unions to discriminate against any person on grounds of race, color, religion, sex, physical disability, or age in job-related matters (Title VII). \({ }^{10}\)

The Civil Rights Act of 1968 The Civil Rights Act of 1968 is often called the Open Housing Act. With minor exceptions, it forbids anyone to refuse to sell or rent a dwelling to any person on grounds of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, or disability. It also forbids refusal to sell or rent to a family with children.

At first, the burden of enforcing the law fell on those persons who claimed to be victims of housing discrimination; they could seek damages from alleged offenders. Congress finally strengthened the law in 1988, to allow the Justice Department to bring criminal charges against those who violate its terms. Still, housing remains among the most segregated areas of American life today.

Title IX In Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, Congress added a key genderbased guarantee to the provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Title IX forbids discrimination on the basis of gender "in any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance." The statute intends to 9 Congress based this section of the law on its commerce power. See Chapter 11, Section 2. Titte II covers those places in which See Chapter 11, Section 2. Tittell covers those places in whic significant portion of the items sold have moved in interstate significant portion of the items sold have moved in interstate commerce. The Supreme Court upheld Titte II and the use of the Commerce Clause as a basis for civil rights legislation in Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 1964.

10 The five-member Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), an independent executive branch agency, enforces Titte VII.
ensure that women receive equal treatment in all aspects of education. Its provisions apply to all schools, public and private, that receive federal funds, and nearly all of them do.

Since its passage, Title IX has had its most telling effect on school athletics programs, especially at the college level, by requiring roughly equal funding and opportunities for women and men. The law has been in effect for nearly four decades now; still, it continues to generate controversy.

\section*{Affirmative Action}

These civil rights statutes all come down to this: Discriminatory practices based on such factors as race, color, national origin, sex, or disability are illegal. But what about the effects of past discrimination? Consider an African American who, for no reason of his or her own making, did not get a decent education and so today cannot get a decent job. Of what real help to that person are all of those laws that make illegal today what was done years ago?

So far, the Federal Government's chief answer to this troubling question has been a policy of affirmative action. That approach requires that most employers take positive steps (affirmative action) to remedy the effects of past discriminations. The policy applies to all agencies of the Federal Government, States and their local governments, and private employers who sell goods or services to any agency of the Federal \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is the Civil Rights Act of 1968 ?

These words would have been added to the Constitution if three additional States had ratified the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA). Why do you think the ERA was not ratified?

Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 21, Section 3:
L 3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 212)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 213)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 215)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 217)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 218)
L3 Quiz A (p. 219)
L2 Quiz B (p. 220)

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS BELLRINGER RESPONSES}

Have students share their answers to the Bellringer. (1. civil rights demonstrations; 2. African Americans were not "trained" for the "race" and so should be given an advantage now. 3. affirmative action)

\section*{RELATE ACTIONS TO LEGISLATION}

Ask: Why were so many civil rights and voting rights laws needed? Discuss the actions that States took to nullify African American voting and other rights: poll taxes; literacy tests; vouchers of "good character" needed; the white primary; voter registration grandfather clauses; gerrymandered or annexed election districts to reduce African American voting strength and to minimize the number of black elected officials. Then have students cite federal legislation and Court cases from the section that tried to remedy this discrimination. On the board, list students' citations as well as the legislation below. Point out how federal responses to these actions began slowly on a case-by-case basis before being expanded to nationwide jurisdiction.
Civil Rights Act of 1957: Attorney General given authority to begin lawsuits against local violations of the 15th Amendment
Civil Rights Act of 1960: federal courts could appoint referees to conduct voter registration, but only after a judicial finding of voting discrimination
Voting Rights Act of 1965: strengthened enforcement of the 15 th Amendment nationwide; prohibited all literacy requirements for voting; federal examiners ensured registration; federal observers oversaw elections; in certain jurisdictions, any changes in voting procedures had to be approved by the Federal Government

1975: amendments to 1965 law added voting protections for Hispanic, Asian, and Native American citizens

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint called Open Housing Act; forbids anyone to refuse to sell or rent a dwelling to any person on grounds of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, disability, or families with children
Caption because women's rights were already protected as "citizens' rights"

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 21 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 5, All-in-One, p. 215), which asks students to analyze affirmative action through political cartoons. Discuss students' responses to the questions.

12ELL Differentiate Have L2 students complete the worksheet with an L3 or L4 partner.

\section*{DEBATE AFFIRMATIVE ACTION}

Organize students into four groups, and have them prepare to debate the issue of affirmative action from one of these points of view:
- Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.
- Allan Bakke
- White high school senior who wants to enter college
- Minority high school senior who wants to enter college
Have students use the Debate strategy (p. T25) to formulate their arguments. Groups should summarize the validity of affirmative action from their point of view. Students should make strong arguments with supporting information from the Constitution and Court precedents. After the debate, debrief the activity, allowing students to state which perspectives used the best evidence to prove their point.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Timelines By holding that race could be a narrowly tailored factor in affirmative action decisions, the Court left the door open to future interpretations.

\section*{Equal Rights and Affirmative Action}

- Analyzing Timelines Affirmative action programs arose in the 1960s to help rectify the harm suffered by minorities as a result of discrimination. How did the two Michigan cases in 2003 leave the legal status of affirmative action unsettled?

Government. The Federal Government began to demand the adoption of affirmative action programs in 1965.

To illustrate the policy, take the case of a company that does business with the Federal Government. It must adopt an affirmative action plan designed to make its workforce reflect the general makeup of the population in its locale. The plan must include steps to correct or prevent inequalities in such matters as pay, promotions, and fringe benefits.

For many employers this has meant that they must hire and/or promote more workers with minority backgrounds and more females. The share of a group necessary to satisfy a particular affirmative action require-ment-say, the number of females in a company's workforce or the number of African Americans in a school's student body-is often called a quota.

Reverse Discrimination? Affirmative action policies remain highly controversial today. This is principally because those policies necessarily involve race-based and/or gender-based classifications.

Critics argue that affirmative action programs amount to reverse discrimination, or discrimination against the majority group. Affirmative action demands that preference be given to females and/or nonwhites solely on the basis of sex or race. Critics say that the Constitution requires that all public policies be "color blind."

The opponents of affirmative action have attacked the policy at the State and local levels in several places in recent years. Most often, they have relied primarily on the reverse discrimination argument as they have done so.

In 1996, California's voters gave overwhelming approval to a measure that eliminated nearly all affirmative action programs conducted by public agencies in that State. Since then, the voters in Washington (in 1998) and in Michigan (in 2004) have adopted measures nearly identical to California's.

The Bakke Case The Supreme Court decided its first major affirmative action case, Regents of the University of Cali brnia v. Bakke, in 1978. Allan Bakke, a white male, had been denied admission to the university's medical school at Davis. The school had set aside 16 of the 100 seats in each year's entering class for nonwhite students. He sued the university, charging it with reverse discrimination and, the equal rights amendment Congress passed the ERA in 1972 with a seven-year deadline for ratification. A three-year extension was added in 1979. Only 35 of the required 38 States approved it, however, so the ERA failed. Display Transparency 21E, Equal Rights Amendment. Ask: Why do you think some women opposed the ERA? (They believed the ERA would take away traditional women's rights, such as alimony and all-female colleges. They also believed women might get drafted into the armed forces.) According to the cartoon, what is ironic about the ERA's failure to pass from the point of view of one woman's employment? (She must go to her low-paying, menial job cleaning the floors. ) Have students debate this topic: Does the United States still need an Equal Rights Amendment to guarantee the rights of women?

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

so, a violation of the Equal Protection Clause. By a 5-4 majority, the Court held that Bakke had been denied equal protection and should be admitted to the medical school.

A differently composed 5-4 majority made the more far-reaching ruling in the case, however. Although the Constitution does not allow race to be used as the only factor in the making of affirmative action decisions, that majority of the justices held that both the Constitution and the 1964 Civil Rights Act do allow its use as one among several factors in such situations.

Later Cases The Court has decided several affirmative action cases since Bakke. In some of them it has upheld quotas, especially in such industries as construction, where longstanding discrimination was involved.

Note, however, that the High Court has also held that quotas can be used in only the most extreme situations. Thus, the Court held in Richmond v. Croson, 1989, that the city of Richmond, Virginia, had not shown that its minority set-aside policy was justified by past discrimination.

Johnson v. Transportation Agency of Santa Clara County, 1987, marked the first time the Court decided a case of preferential treatment on the basis of sex. The justices held that neither the Equal Protection Clause nor Title VII forbids the promotion of a woman rather than a man, even when he scored higher on a qualifying interview.

The current Supreme Court's conservative bent can be seen in its most recent affirmative action decisions. Thus, the Court's decision in Adarand Constructors v. Pena, 1995, marked a major departure from its previous rulings in such cases. Until Adarand, the Court had regularly upheld affirmative action laws, regulations, and programs as "benign" instances of "raceconscious policymaking." By this, the Court meant that it considered them to be mild but necessary restraints on behavior.

Adarand arose when a white-owned Colorado company, Adarand Constructors, Inc., challenged an affirmative action policy of the Federal Highway Administration (FHWA). Under that policy, the FHWA gave bonuses to highway contractors if 10 percent or more of their construction work was subcontracted to "socially and economically disadvantaged" businesses, including those owned by racial minorities.

The Court held that henceforth all affirmative action cases will be reviewed under strict scrutiny-that is, affirmative action programs will be upheld only if they can be shown to serve some "compelling governmental interest." (See page 619.)
benign
adi. not harmful

\section*{Background}

AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES Inspired by the civil rights movement, people with disabilities pushed for equal treatment. Their efforts led to passage of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) in 1975 (revised substantially in 1997 and 2004). IDEA guarantees free appropriate public education to children with disabilities. The law guides schools in crafting an individualized education program (IEP) for each child with a disability. In 1990, Congress passed the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), banning discrimination against people with disabilities in employment, public services, public accommodations, and telecommunications. The law requires employers to make "reasonable accommodation," which may include making existing facilities accessible (such as by installing a wheelchair ramp), modifying the job or work schedule, acquiring devices, or modifying equipment and training.

Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive version of the timeline regarding equal rights and affirmative action.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students work in pairs to research the annual increase in African American voter registration after 1965, following the passage of the Civil Rights Acts and Voting Rights Acts. Students should put the information they find into a bar graph on poster board with an appropriate title.
L2 LPR ELL Differentiate Provide students with the statistics below showing changes in voter registration from 1965 to 1988 . Have them calculate the "gap" columns. Ask: Which State had the largest gap in 1965? (Mississippi) in 1988? (North Carolina)
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{7}{|c|}{Voter Registration Rates (1965 vs. 1988)} \\
\hline & \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{March 1965} & \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{November 1988} \\
\hline & Black & White & Gap & Black & White & Gap \\
\hline AL & 19.3 & 69.2 & 49.9 & 68.4 & 75.0 & 6.6 \\
\hline GA & 27.4 & 62.6 & 35.2 & 56.8 & 63.9 & 7.1 \\
\hline LA & 31.6 & 80.5 & 48.9 & 77.1 & 75.1 & -2.0 \\
\hline MS & 6.7 & 69.9 & 63.2 & 74.2 & 80.5 & 6.3 \\
\hline NC & 46.8 & 96.8 & 50.0 & 58.2 & 65.6 & 7.4 \\
\hline SC & 37.3 & 75.7 & 38.4 & 56.7 & 61.8 & 5.1 \\
\hline VA & 38.3 & 61.1 & 22.8 & 63.8 & 68.5 & 4.7 \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Adapted from Minority Representation and the Quest for Voting Equality by Bernard Grofman, Lisa Handley and Richard G. Niemi (New York: Cambridge Press, 1992).

\section*{Assess and Remediate}
. 3 Ask students to write a paragraph answering the Chapter Essential Question: Why are there ongoing struggles for civil rights? Have students consider such factors as political, economic, or security concerns; the emergence of minority leaders with the determination, skills, and resources to work for change; and the role of the media in making the public aware of discrimination or the effects of discrimination.

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' responses to the questions.Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
\(\llcorner 3\)
Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 219)
\(L 2\) Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 220)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Civil rights legislation \\
(Questions 1, 2, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create annotated timelines of \\ civil rights legislation from Reconstruction to \\ today. Timelines should include brief descrip- \\ tions of each law or act, how it was decided, \\ and how it relates to other laws or acts on \\ the timeline.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Affirmative action \\ policies (Questions \\
\(3,4,6)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students add the section's affirmative \\ action cases and rulings to their civil rights \\ timelines (see above).
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Government
online All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

Have students create annotated timelines of civil rights legislation from Reconstruction to today. Timelines should include brief descrip and how it relates to other laws or acts on the timeline action cases and rulings to their civil rights melines (see above).
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What was the significance of the Court's ruling in Adarand?

The Michigan Cases Two cases, Gratz v. Bollinger and Grutter v. Bollinger, both involving the admissions policies of the University of Michigan, were combined for decision by the Supreme Court in 2003. The resolution of those two cases marked the High Court's most important statement on affirmative action since its decision in Bakke in 1978 .

Jennifer Gratz applied for admission to the University as a freshman in 1997, and Barbara Grutter sought to enter the University's law school that same year. Both women are white, and both were rejected in favor of minority applicants with lower grade point averages and lower entry test scores. Both women sued the university and its chief admissions officer, Lee Bollinger, seeking to prevent the University from using race as a factor in admissions.

The Supreme Court held, 6-3, that Gratz's rejection was the result of a race-based quota policy prohibited by the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. Grutter's rejection was upheld \(5-4\), however, because the law school employed a much more flexible process in making its admissions decisions.

A majority of the Court found-definitely and unambiguously-that the State of Michigan (and all States) has a compelling interest in the diversity of the student bodies of its public educational institutions. That compelling interest justifies the narrowly tailored use of race as one factor in the student admissions policies of those institutions. However, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the majority, predicted that affirmative action would not be necessary in the future. She wrote, "We expect that 25 years from now, the use of racial preferences will no longer be necessary to further the interest approved today."

The Seattle and Louisville Cases The High Court's most recent affirmative action decision came in two cases that were combined for decision in 2007. One of those cases arose in Seattle, Washington (Parents Involved v. Seattle School District), and the other in Louisville, Kentucky (Meredith v. Jef frson County Board ofEducation).

Both cases centered on this question: In light of the Supreme Court's decision in Grutter, to what extent can public school officials now use race as a factor in assigning students to particular schools in a district as they seek to maintain racially integrated student bodies in that district?

The Court split 5-4 in the two cases. The majority found that the student assignment policies in both Seattle and Louisville relied too heavily on race and so ran afoul of the 14th Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. Indeed, four of the five justices in the majority favored the total elimination of race as a factor in school admission decisions.

Essential Questions
To continue to build a response to the chapter Essential Questions Journal
1. Guiding Question Use your completed timeline to answer this question: What is the history of civil rights legislation from Reconstruction to today?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Cite the three major provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964
3. (a) What does the policy of affirmative action require? (b) Who must abide by the policy?
4. Under what circumstances has the Supreme Court upheld the use of quotas?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment (a) What does Title IX provide? (b) In what situation has it been most controversial? (c) Do you agree with the law? Why or why not?
6. Synthesize Information Some nations, such as France, require gender parity in government; that is, a certain number of candidates or elected lead ers must be women. (a) How is this ers must be women. (a) How (b) Do you similar to a quota system? (b) Do you think the United States should adopt that system? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Problem-Solution Essay: Select the Best Solution Decide which one of the solutions you researched in Section 2 would solve the problem you identified in Section 1. Using supporting facts and details, make a list that evaluates the solution's effectiveness in achieving both short-term gains and long-term goals.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. No meaningful legislation passed from the 1870s to the 1950s. First far-reaching law was the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which bans discrimination in public accommodations, in federally funded programs, and in jobs. Title IX (1972) bans gender-based discrimination in education. In 1965, the Federal Government began demanding affirmative action programs to reduce the effects of past discrimination. In the Bakke case (1978), the court ruled that affirmative action is acceptable, but strict quotas are not. In Adarand (1995), the Court ruled that future affirmative action cases would be judged under the higher standard of strict scrutiny.
2. Discrimination based on race, color, religion, national origin, or physical disability is banned in public accommodations, in any program that receives any federal funding, and by employers and labor unions in job-related matters.
3. (a) employers to take positive steps to remedy effects of past discrimination (b) all agencies of the Federal Government, all States and local governments, all private employers who sell goods or services to any federal agency
4. in extreme situations where longstanding, flagrant discrimination was involved
5. (a) equal treatment for women in all aspects of education (b) school athletics programs, especially in colleges (c) Answers will vary.
6. (a) It requires that a share of a group be a certain gender. (b) Answers will vary.
QUICK WRITE Have students incorporate their lists into a flowchart showing how the solution moves from a short-term gain to a long-term goal.
Editor:
Regarding the article on additional budget cuts to public education ("Governor Proposes Slashing School Funding," May 9), I believe that every penny spent is a necessary investment in the future of this community. As a junior at Westfield High School, I know that these cuts would place students' futures in greater jeopardy. Last year, 15 percent of the teaching staff and 10 percent of all elective courses were eliminated due to severe reductions in funding.
These cuts ultimately impacted the quality of our education, and that is a sacrifice this town should not be willing to make again.
- Thomas Grey, St. Clairsville

The Constitution guarantees all people the right to express their views. Writing a letter to the editor of your local newspaper is your chance to share your opinion about important issues that affect you and your community. Follow these steps to write an effective letter:
1. Briefly summarize the issue. A good letter to the editor should be brief and to the point. Begin your letter by clearly identifying the issue. If you are responding to an article published in the paper, mention the article by title and publication date in the first sentence. State your opinion up-front.
2. Explain your position. You should explain why you feel the way you do about the issue. Support your explanation with at least one or two specific examples. If you feel particularly passionate about the issue, let your emotions come through in your letter but remember to be civil. Never resort to name-calling or vulgar language. If you do, few people will take your letter seriously.
3. Make a suggestion. The main point of your letter might be to express your opinion, but you could also include suggestions for future actions. If you are writing about a problem in your community, explain what you think can be done to fix it.
4. Identify yourself. Sign your letter with your real name, and provide contact information. Most editors will not print anonymous letters, and they must be able to verify your identity. You can also mention any experiences you have had that are relevant to the issue.

\section*{D What do you think?}
1. When writing a letter to the editor why do you think you should be brief and to the point?
2. Why would adding suggestions for action make your letter more effective?
3. You TryIt Choose an issue that interests you and write a letter to the editor of your local newspaper.
(2) GOVERNMENT ONLINE Citizenship Activity Pack For activities on writing a letter to the editor, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Write a Letter to the Editor. It includes a lesson plan, four sample editorials as handouts, and a model for analyzing the elements of an editorial. Students will work in groups to analyze one of the editorials, write a one-sentence response, and present their work orally to the class. At the end of the lesson, students will have an opportunity to write their own letter to the editor. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on writing letters to the editor at PersonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{LESSON GOALS}
- Students will analyze successful editorials before writing their own letters to the editor.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{READ AND IDENTIFY PARTS OF A LETTER}

Have students read the Citizenship 101 feature. As a class, identify the various parts of the letter and their purpose.

\section*{ANALYZE LETTERS IN NEWSPAPERS}

Bring to class enough newspaper editorial sections for each student to have one. Have students analyze the editorials and highlight the main point the writer is trying to make. Then have them place a checkmark next to each criticism the writer makes, and circle each suggestion for action. Finally, have students rate the editorials from best to worst, explaining what made the best one successful in their opinion.

\section*{WRITE A LETTER TO THE EDITOR}

Have students write their own letters to the editor in response to a news story or letter in the newspaper sections they analyzed in the activity above.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students read aloud their letters. Peer-assess the letters using this checklist:
__ Had quickly identifiable issue
__ Included up-front opinion
__Provided several explanations for opinion
__ Included suggestions for future action _ Tone was forceful but civil

\section*{Answers}
1. possible answers: to hold readers' attention; to fit the newspaper's limited space for letters
2. Adding suggestions for action shows readers that you have carefully and extensively thought this issue through.
3. Letters will vary but should include an opinion, arguments or explanations supporting the opinion, and a suggestion for action.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How can American citizenship be attained and how has immigration policy changed over the years?

\section*{I. Citizenship}
A. By Birth
1. jus soli-place of birth
2. jus sanguinis-parentage
B. By Naturalization
1. individual
2. collective
II. Immigration
A. Regulation
1. by Congress only
2. encouraged when workers needed
3. exclusion based on personal traits
B. Quotas
1. number limits based on country of origin
2. favored northern and western Europe
3. Immigration Act of 1965 -limit not based on country
C. Present Policies
1. Immigration Act of 1990 increased quota
2. preference to family members
3. preference to aliens with needed skills
D. Undocumented Aliens
1. enter illegally (or legally and overstay)
2. often hired at substandard pay
3. strain public services
4. Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986—amnesty; crime to hire illegals
5. Illegal Immigration Restrictions Act of 1996-deportation easier; public services restricted

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{American} Citizenship

\section*{Guiding Question}

How can American citizenship be attained and how has immigration policy changed over the years? Use an outline like the one below to take notes on the section.

\section*{I. Citizenship \\ A. By Birth}
A.
1.
2.
B.
B.
C.
II. Immigration

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- citizen - alien
- jus soli • expatriation
- jus sanguinis - denaturalization
- naturalization - deportation

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe how people become American citizens by birth and by naturalization.
2. Explain how an American can lose his or her citizenship.
3. Illustrate how the United States is a nation of immigrants.
4. Compare and contrast the status of undocumented aliens and legal immigrants.

Citizenship is the badge of membership in a political society.11 Today, every state in the world has rules by which citizenship is determined. And much can be learned about the basic nature of a government by examining those rules. Who are and who may become citizens? Who are excluded from citizenship, and why?

\section*{The Constitution and Citizenship}

An American citizen is one who owes allegiance to the United States and is entitled to both its protection and the privileges of its laws. As it was originally written, the Constitution referred to both "citizens of the United States" and "citizens of the States." Neither of those phrases was defined, however. Throughout much of our earlier history, it was generally agreed that national citizenship followed that of the States. That is, a person who was a citizen of, say, Maryland, was also thought to be a citizen of the United States.

Actually, the question was of little importance before the 1860s. Much of the population was the product of recent immigration, and little distinction was made between citizens and those who were not. The Civil War and the adoption of the 13th Amendment in 1865 raised the need for a constitutional definition, however. \({ }^{12}\) The 14th Amendment met that need in 1868:

\section*{FROM THE CONSTITUTION}

All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.
-14th Amendment, Section 1

11 The concept of citizenship—of the free inhabitants of a city—was developed by the ancient Greeks and Romans. It replaced the earlier concept of kinship-of the blood relationships of the family and the tribe-as the basis for community.
\(\mathbf{1 2}\) In the Dred Scott case (Scott v. Sandford) in 1857, the Supreme Court had ruled that neither the States nor the National Government had the power to confer citizenship on African Americans-slave or free. The dispute over that matter was one of the several causes of the Civil War.

Image Above: New citizens take the oath during a naturalization ceremony in Miami, Florida

632 Civil Rights: Equal Justice Under Law

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - A person can become an American citizen either at birth or through the process of naturalization. - Several million Americans have become citizens through naturalization. - Congress has the exclusive power to regulate immigration. • Most immigrants to the United States have come through official channels, but many arrive illegally. • Aliens may be subject to deportation.
CONCEPTS: citizenship
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The United States is a nation of immigrants. - As immigration to the United States has surged over the past few decades, record numbers of immigrants have become American citizens. - Current immigration policy is controversial. son may become an American citizen in either of two ways: by birth or by naturalization. The feature on page 634 summarizes the means by which American citizenship can be acquired.

\section*{Citizenship by Birth}

More than 260 million Americans-nearly 90 percent-are citizens simply because they were born in this country. Another several million are also citizens by birth, although they were born outside the United States.

Two basic rules determine citizenship at birth: jus soli and jus sanguinis. According to jus soli-the law of the soil-citizenship is determined by place of birth, by where one is born.

Notice that the 14th Amendment awards American citizenship according to the location of one's birth: "All persons born ... in the United States . . ." Congress has defined the United States to include, for purposes of citizenship, the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands-and all American embassies and all public vessels of the United States, wherever they might be. \({ }^{13}\)

Just how broad the 14th Amendment's statement of jus soli is can be seen from a leading case on citizenship, United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 1898. Wong Kim Ark was born in San Francisco in 1873 to parents who were citizens of China. He made a brief trip to China in 1895.

Upon Wong Kim Ark's return, he was refused entry to the United States by immigration officials at San Francisco. They insisted that the 14th Amendment should not be read so literally as to mean that he had become an American citizen at birth. They declared that he was an alien and so was denied entry by the Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882. The Supreme Court held, however, that under the clear wording of the 14th Amendment, he was indeed a nativeborn citizen of this country and so not subject to the terms of the Chinese Exclusion Act.

13 Until 1924, Native Americans born to tribal members on res13 Until 1924, Native Americans born to tribal members on reservaions did not become citizens at birth. They were, instead, wards (persons under legal guardianship) of the government
In that year, Congress finally did grant citizenship to all Native Americans who did not already possess it.
14 Article I, Section 8, Clause 4.

A very small number of persons who are born physically in the United States do not in fact become citizens at birth. They are those few who are born not "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States"-for example, children born to foreign diplomatic officials.

According to jus sanguinis, the law of the blood, citizenship at birth may also be determined by parentage, to whom one is born. Thus, it is altogether possible for one to become a citizen at birth even when that birth occurs outside the United States. A child born abroad can become a citizen at birth under circumstances set out in the feature on page 634 . The 14th Amendment does not provide for jus sanguinis. However, Congress first recognized the doctrine in 1790 and its constitutionality has never been challenged.

Citizenship by Naturalization Naturalization is the legal process by which a person can become a citizen of another country at some time after birth. Congress has the exclusive power to provide for naturalization. \({ }^{14}\) No State may do so Individual Naturalization Naturalization is most often an individual process, conducted by a court. Generally, any person eligible to |" Analyzing Graphs In what year were the greatest number of persons naturalized? The fewest?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- summarize ways that individuals become citizens in the United States.
- analyze the controversy over immigration in the United States by preparing arguments for and against opinions on the topic.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 221) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 222)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 21F, Naturalization, and write on the board: 1. Which requirement do you think is most difficult to evaluate? 2. What requirements should be added or removed? 3. How did the original Texans become U.S. citizens? 4. Who are the most recent "collective" citizens? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{ANALYZE LINE GRAPH}

Have students study the graph "Persons Naturalized, 1908-2006" in their textbook. Ask students to use their knowledge of history to explain the spikes, dips, and other trends in the graph. (For example, a spike occurs after World War I ends in 191 8; immigration dips during the Great Depression of the 1930 s; and it spikes again after World War II ends in 1945. ) Have students note the spike in the 1990s, which resulted from the naturalization of some 1 million undocumented aliens who became legalized under the Immigration and Reform Control Act of 1986.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 5, Chapter 21, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 221)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 222)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 223)
L3 L2 Core Worksheets B (pp. 225, 226)
L3 Quiz A (p. 227)
L2 Quiz B (p. 228)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 233)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 236)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint that any person born in the U.S. or naturalized becomes a U.S. citizen Analyzing Graphs 1996; 1908

\section*{SHARE BELLRINGER ANSWERS}

Have students share their Bellringer answers. (1. possible answer: evaluating whether someone is "of good moral character"; 2. Answers will vary. Direct students to consider adding education or skills requirements. 3. by a joint resolution of Congress in 1845 ; 4. citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands)

L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students to provide synonyms for the word renounce (give up, reject, relinquish, disown).
L2 Differentiate Have students list characteristics of a person "of good moral character. " Write these on the board. Then ask students to rate the characteristics from "most important" to "least important" and explain their ratings.

\section*{DISCUSS ACQUIRING CITIZENSHIP}

Review the ways to gain citizenship. Ask: What are two ways to acquire citizenship? (by birth and by naturalization) In what two ways can a person become a citizen by birth? (jus soli: citizenship is determined by where one is born; jus sanquinis: citizenship is determined by to whom one is born) Now display Transparency 21F (Bellringer) again and ask: What are the various ways groups have become collectively naturalized in the United States? (through treaties, a joint resolution of Congress, acts of Congress, and a constitutional amendment)

\section*{Answers}

Acquiring Citizenship through naturalization, either individually or collectively enter the United States as an immigrant may become a naturalized citizen. Hundreds of thousands of aliens are now naturalized each year. An alien is a citizen of a foreign state who lives in this country.

The U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services in the Department of Homeland Security investigates each applicant, and then reports its findings to the judge with whom a petition for naturalization has been filed. If the judge is satisfied, an oath or affirmation of citizenship is administered in open court.

Collective Naturalization At various times, entire groups have been naturalized en masse. This has most often happened when the United States has acquired new territory. Those living in the areas involved were naturalized by a treaty or by an act or a joint resolution passed by Congress.

The largest single instance of collective naturalization came with the ratification of the 14th Amendment, however. The most recent instance occurred in 1977, when Congress gave citizenship to the more than 16,000 native-born residents of the Northern Mariana Islands.

\section*{Loss of Citizenship}

Although it rarely happens, every American citizen, whether native-born or naturalized, has the right to renounce-voluntarily abandon - his or her citizenship. Expatriation is the legal process by which a loss of citizenship occurs.

The Supreme Court has several times held that the Constitution prohibits automatic expatriation. That is, Congress cannot take away a person's citizenship for something he or she has done. Thus, actions such EXPATRIATION Any party claiming that a person has abandoned his U.S. citizenship must establish three elements. First, the person must have taken one of the acts of expatriation stated by law, such as "obtaining naturalization in" or "taking an oath or making an affirmation or other formal declaration of allegiance to a foreign state" after reaching the age of 18 , "entering, or serving in, the armed forces of a foreign state . . . engaged in hostilities against the United States," or formal renunciation before an appropriate United States official. Second, he must have acted "voluntarily." Third, he must have acted "with the intention of relinquishing United States nationality." An individual who voluntarily "enter[s], or serve[s] in, the armed forces of a foreign state" may be expatriated, "if (A) such armed forces are engaged in hostilities against the United States, or (B) such persons serve as a commissioned or non-commissioned officer." as committing a crime, voting in a foreign election, or serving in the armed forces of another country are not grounds for automatic expatriation. \({ }^{15}\)

\section*{Background}

Naturalized citizens can lose their citizenship involuntarily. However, this pro-cess-denaturalization-can occur only by court order and only after it has been shown that the person became an American citizen by fraud or deception.

A person can neither gain nor lose American citizenship by marriage. The only significant effect that marriage has is to shorten the time required for the naturalization of an alien who marries an American citizen

\section*{A Nation of Immigrants}

We are a nation of immigrants. Except for Native Americans-and even they may be the descendants of earlier immigrants-all of us have come here from abroad or are descended from those who did.

Regulation of Immigration Congress has the exclusive power to regulate the crossing of this nation's borders, both inward (immigration) and outward (emigration). It alone has the power to decide who may be admitted to the country and under what conditions. In an early leading case on the point, the Court ruled that the power of the United States to "exclude aliens from its territory is . . . not open to controversy," Chae Chan Ping v. United States, 1889. The States have no power in the field, The Passenger Cases, 1849.

There were only some 2.5 million people in the United States when independence was declared in 1776. Since then, the population has grown more than a hundredfold, to well over 300 million today. That extraordinary population growth has come from two sources: births and immigration. Some 70 million immigrants have come here since 1820, the year when such figures were first recorded.

Congress made no serious attempt to regulate immigration for more than a century after 15 A person convicted of a federal or a State crime may lose some of the privileges of citizenship, however, either temporarily or permanenty-for example, the right to travel freely or to vote or hold public office.

independence. As long as land was plentiful and expanding industry demanded more and still more workers, immigration was actively encouraged.

By 1890, however, the open frontier was a thing of the past, and labor was no longer in short supply. Then, too, the major source of immigration had shifted. Until the 1880s, most immigrants had come from the countries of northern and western Europe. The "new immigration" from the 1880s onward came mostly from southern and eastern Europe. All these factors combined to bring major changes in the traditional policy of encouraging immigration. Ultimately, the policy was reversed.

Congress placed the first major restrictions on immigration with the passage of the Chinese Exclusion Act in 1882. At the same time, it barred the entry of convicts, "lunatics," paupers, and others likely to become public charges. Over the next several years, a long list of "undesirables" was added to the law. Thus, contract laborers were excluded in 1885 , immoral persons and anarchists in 1903, and illiterates in 1917. By 1920, more than 30 groups were denied admission on the basis of personal traits.

The tide of newcomers continued to mount, however. In the 10 years from 1905 through 1914, an average of more than a million persons, most of them from southern and eastern Europe, came to this country each year.

Quotas Congress responded to pressure for tighter regulation by adding quantitative limits (numerical ceilings) to the qualitative restrictions (personal characteristics) already in place. The Immigration Acts of 1921 and 1924 and the National Origins Act of 1929 assigned each country in Europe a quota-a limit on the number of immigrants who could enter the United States from that country each year. Altogether, only 150,000 quota immigrants could be admitted in any one year.

The quotas were purposely drawn to favor northern and western Europe. The quota system was not applied to the Western Hemisphere, but immigration from Asia, Africa, and elsewhere was generally prohibited.
\(\checkmark\) cheekpoint When and why did Congress attempt to regulate immigration?

\section*{Debate}

Have students debate the following statement: Loss of U.S. citizenship should be a penalty in the American system of justice.
Have students provide reasons for and against using the threat of losing one's citizenship as a punishment for criminal acts. In addition, students should note which acts would warrant loss of citizenship.

\section*{TAKE A CITIZENSHIP TEST}

Distribute the Chapter 21 Section 4 Core Worksheet A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 223), which includes questions from the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) test that individuals take as part of the process of becoming an American citizen. Have students answer as many questions as they can in ten minutes. Quickly review the answers. Then ask:
Do you think any of the questions are unusual or difficult? Which ones? What is the general focus of most of the questions the USCIS thinks every new citizen should know? (citizenship, civic rights and responsibilities) What questions would you add to the test?

3 Differentiate Ask: Why is it important that new citizens know about and understand U.S. history and government?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint By 1890, the open frontier was gone and labor was no longer in short supply. New immigrants were coming mostly from southern and eastern Europe. The Chinese Exclusion Act was passed in 1882 to restrict Chinese immigrants. Other "undesirables" were added to the law based on personal traits. In the 1920s, immigration was restricted to favor people from northern and western Europe.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to hear where immigrants settle in the United States.

\section*{UNDERSTAND IMMIGRATION ARGUMENTS}

In this activity, students will gain an understanding of why immigration is so controversial. Have students work in pairs to research the opinions about immigration listed below. Pairs should write at least three arguments supporting the opinion and three refuting it. Have pairs share their arguments with the class. Point out that the opinions and arguments are similar to discussions that take place in Congress.
- America should more effectively militarize its borders to keep undocumented immigrants out.
- Quotas limiting the number of people that may enter the United States should be lifted.
- Undocumented immigrants are necessary to do the jobs that Americans do not want to do.
- Amnesty should be given to immigrants who have been in the country illegally for five years.
- Granting permanent legal status to undocumented immigrants who attend two years of college or military service is wasting American money.
- Harsher immigration policies are needed in the United States to fight terrorism.
- Refugees and others seeking asylum should have to provide evidence of the situation in the foreign countries they are fleeing.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Maps California, Nevada, Arizona, Texas, Florida, New York, New Jersey
Checkpoint Congress eliminated it in the Immigration Act of 1965.

\section*{Immigrants in the U.S.}
- Analyzing Maps The Immigration Act of 1990 allows 675,000 immigrants to enter the U.S. each year. The percentage of foreign-born people living in each State in 2006 ranged from less than 2 percent to more
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What happened to the country-based quota country-- system?

In 1952, Congress passed yet another basic law, the Immigration and Nationality Act. That statute modified the quota system, extending it to include every country outside the Western Hemisphere.

Congress finally eliminated the countrybased quota system in the Immigration Act of 1965 . That law allowed as many as 270,000 immigrants to enter the United States each year, without regard to race, nationality, or country of origin. The 1965 law gave special preference to immediate relatives of American citizens or of aliens legally residing in this country.
Present Immigration Policies Today, the Immigration Act of 1990 governs the admission of aliens to the United States. Like its predecessors, it was adopted only after years of intense debate, and many of its provisions are the subject of continuing controversy.

The 1990 law provided for a substantial increase in the number of immigrants who may enter the United States each year. The annual ceiling is now set at 675,000 . It also continues the family-preference policy first put in place in 1965; at least one third of those persons admitted under its terms must be the close relatives of either American citizens or resident aliens. Those immigrants who have occupational talents in short supply in the United States (notably, highly skilled researchers, engineers, and scientists) also receive special preference.

Only those aliens who can qualify for citizenship can be admitted as immigrants. The law's list of "excludable aliens"-those barred because of some personal characteris-tic-is extensive. Among those excluded are: criminals (including suspected terrorists), persons with communicable diseases, drug abusers and addicts, illiterates, and mentally disturbed persons who might pose a threat to the safety of others.

636 Civil Rights: Equal Justice Under Law
1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Audio Tour
Listen to an audio guided tour of the map at
PearsonSuccessNet.com than 25 percent. Which States have the largest immigrant populations?

\section*{magosse_Ch21_s4.indd 636}

\section*{Background}

DUAL CITIZENSHIP Dual citizenship has become much more common in recent years. Although the U.S. State Department does not officially recognize dual citizenship, it does not specifically prohibit it under some circumstances. There are certain rules for becoming a legal citizen of the United States and another country. The most basic rule is that a person who has United States citizenship by birth may later apply for citizenship in another country, without losing his or her American citizenship. A naturalized citizen, however, is required to renounce his or her foreign citizenship when granted American citizenship.
some 20 million persons-nonimmi-grants-come here each year for temporary stays. They are mostly tourists, students, and people traveling for business reasons.

Deportation Most of the civil rights set out in the Constitution are guaranteed to "persons," which covers aliens as well as citizens. In one important respect, however, the status of aliens is altogether unlike that of citizens: Aliens may be subject to deportation, a legal process by which aliens are legally required to leave the country.

The Supreme Court has long held that the United States has the same almost-unlimited power to deport aliens as it has to exclude them. In an early major case, the Court ruled that deportation is an inherent power, arising out of the sovereignty of the United States, and that deportation is not criminal punishment, and so does not require a criminal trial, Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 1893.

An alien may be deported on any one of several grounds. The most common is illegal entry. Thousands of aliens who enter with false papers, sneak in by ship or plane, or slip across the border at night are caught each year and deported. Many of them are repeat offenders who will soon make yet another attempt to cross the border.

Conviction of any serious crime, federal or State, usually leads to a deportation order. In recent years, several thousand aliens have been expelled on the basis of their criminal records, especially narcotics violators. The war on terrorism has also quickened the pace of deportations. Because deportation is a civil, not a criminal, matter, several constitutional safeguards do not apply-for example, bail and ex post facto laws.

\section*{Undocumented Aliens}

No one knows just how many undocumented aliens reside in the United States today. Best estimates put their total at about 12 million.

The number of undocumented aliens is increasing by at least half a million per year. Most of them enter the country by slipping across the Mexican or Canadian borders, usually at night. Some come with forged papers. Many others are aliens who entered legally, as nonimmigrants, but then overstayed their legal welcomes.

Well over half of all aliens who are here illegally have come from Mexico; most of the others come from other Latin American countries and from Asia. A majority of the Mexicans stay here only some four to six months a year, working on farms or in other seasonal jobs, and then return home. Most others hope to remain here permanently.

A Troublesome Situation Once here, many of these aliens find it easy to become "invisible," especially in larger cities, and lawenforcement agencies find it very difficult to locate them. Even so, immigration officials have apprehended more than a million undocumented aliens in each of the last several years. Nearly all are sent home. Most go voluntarily, but some leave only as the result of formal deportation proceedings.

The presence of so many undocumented persons has caused a number of nagging problems. Those problems have grown worse over the past several years and, until recently, not much had been done to solve them.

Consider this: Ever since 1987, it has been illegal for an employer to hire an undocumented alien to perform work anywhere in the United States. Even so, some four million persons who now hold jobs in this country came here illegally. Some employers still hire aliens who are often willing to work for substandard wages and in substandard conditions.

No one knows just how many undocumented aliens have taken jobs on farms or become day laborers. Or how many have become janitors or dishwashers, or seamstresses in sweatshops, or have found other menial work. However many they are, their presence has multiplied the burdens of already strained public school systems and welfare services of an increasing number of States, most notably California, Arizona, Texas, and Florida.

Current Law The problems posed by undocumented aliens trouble and divide many different interests in American politics-chief among them labor, farm, business, religious, ethnic, and civil rights organizations. After wrestling with the matter for years, Checkpoint For what reasons may person be deported?

menial
adj. unskilled, humble, lowly

\section*{Background}

BEHIND THE SCENES Three bureaus in the Department of Homeland Security regulate immigration. United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) adjudicates applications for benefits and services; United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) is the law enforcement arm of the old INS; and United States Customs and Border Protection (CBP) is responsible for inspecting immigrants at entry and for border patrol. These bureaus are working to secure the nation's borders against both terrorists and undocumented immigrants. Their planned tactics include building fences and other barriers along the borders. Virtual fencing, or radiation detection equipment, sensors, cameras, and other high-tech tools, are being implemented.

\section*{TRACE ATTITUDES TOWARD IMMIGRATION}

Distribute the Chapter 21 Section 4 Core Worksheet B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 225), which shows a political cartoon about attitudes toward immigration in the 1890s. Students will learn that immigration policies were controversial even then. Have students answer the questions and discuss them in class.

L1 L2 Differentiate For these students, distribute the adapted Chapter 21 Section 4 Core Worksheet B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 226).

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students interview a relative or a family friend who moved to the United States from another country. Provide students with the following questions to initiate the interviews:
- Do you have any personal stories that capture a sense of your experience?
- Do you believe your experiences were typical?
- How do you feel about television and film portrayals of immigrants' lives?
- What lesson would you like to convey to members of my generation?
Then have students use their notes from the interview to write a short public-interest piece for a magazine or a newspaper.
L2 Differentiate If students are comfortable discussing their ancestors, chart how many students are first-generation through tenth-generation (or more) Americans.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint illegal entry, conviction of a serious federal or State crime

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Have students prepare a citizenship and naturalization handbook that recent immigrants could use to help them prepare for American citizenship. Encourage students to illustrate their handbooks and provide the names and phone numbers of important local government resources. Handbooks should also include a citizenship study guide and test.
L3 Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.Quiz A (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 227)Quiz B (Unit 5 All-in-One, p. 228)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Citizenship require- \\ ments (Questions 1, \\
\(2,3,5)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students write ten fill-in- the-blank \\ quiz questions regarding citizenship by birth, \\ citizenship by naturalization, and the loss of \\ citizenship. Then have them exchange and \\ complete one another's quizzes.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Immigration laws and \\ policies (Questions \\
\(1,4,6)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create an annotated timeline \\ noting immigration policies and laws begin- \\ ning with the Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons Congress should address the issue because it is not going away.

Congress was finally able to pass the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. Then, it enacted the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996.

The 1986 law did two major things. First, it established a one-year amnesty program under which many undocumented aliens could become legal residents. More than two million aliens used the process to legalize their status. Second, that law made it a crime to hire any person who is in this country illegally. Any employer who knowingly hires an undocumented alien can be fined from \($ 250\) to as much as \($ 10,000\). Repeat offenders can be jailed for up to six months.

| Analyzing Political Cartoons What is the cartoonist's point of view about the immigration issue?

The 1996 law made it easier to deport illegal aliens by streamlining the deportation process. It also toughened the penalties for smuggling aliens into this country, prevented undocumented aliens from claiming Social Security or public housing benefits, and allowed State welfare agencies to check the legal status of any alien who applies for any welfare benefit. The statute also doubled the size of the Border Patrol-which is, today, the largest of the several federal law enforcement agencies.

Congress has not been able to enact any meaningful immigration reform legislation for more than a decade now, however. The principal reason for the impasse is a continuing dispute over how best to approach the matter.

Many in and out of Congress insist that securing the nation's borders-stemming the flow of illegal entries-should be the nation's first concern. That thorny matter should be addressed, they say, before anything is done to meet the problems posed by the undocumented aliens already in this country. Many others argue that the need to confront these problems should be put off to another day. In particular, many of them want to make it possible for large numbers of undocumented aliens to become legal residents and, eventually, citizens of the United States.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
\(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Journal } & \begin{array}{l}\text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal. }\end{array} \text {. } n \text { ( }\end{array}\)
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: How can American citizenship be attained and how has immigration policy changed over the years?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. (a) In what two ways may a person become a U.S. citizen? (b) What is the difference between jus soli and jus sanguinis?
3. (a) What is naturalization? (b) About how many aliens are naturalized each year?

638 Civil Rights: Equal Justice Under Law

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment (a) Should U.S. citizenship be considered a right or a privilege? (b) Do you think citizens by birth should meet the same requirements as those set for naturalized citizens? Why or why not? (c) What actions, if any, do you think should result in an individual's involuntary expatriation?
5. Identify Alternatives (a) What did the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 provide? (b) Do you think these provisions have been successful? Why or why not? (c) What changes, if any, do you think should be made to the law?

\section*{Quick Write}

Problem-Solution Essay: Implement the Solution Write a specific proposal or action plan to implement the solution you selected in Section 3. Identify the steps needed to solve the problem, and then write an outline of your solution.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. by birth if born to a U.S. citizen or if born in the U.S.; by naturalization through the courts or if both parents are naturalized; first major restriction was Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882; by 1920 more than 30 groups denied on basis of personal traits; each European country assigned a quota in the 1920s; quota system eliminated in 1965; annual ceiling now 675,000
2. (a) by birth or naturalization (b) jus soli: citizenship determined by where one is born; jus sanquinis: citizenship determined by parentage
3. (a) legal process by which a person can become a citizen of another country (b) hundreds of thousands
4. (a) and (b) Answers will vary. (c) possible answers: terrorist activities, helping a country at war with the U.S.
5. (a) made it easier to deport undocumented aliens, toughened penalties for smuggling aliens into this country, prevented undocumented aliens from claiming Social Security benefits or public housing, allowed State welfare agencies to check the legal status of any alien who applies for any welfare benefit, doubled the size of the Border Patrol (b) and (c) Answers will vary.

QUICK WRITE Students should include specific details about implementing the solution funds needed, time allotment, and so on.

\section*{Political Dictionary} heterogeneous p. 612 immigrant \(p\). 612 reservation \(p .613\) refugee \(p .615\) assimilation \(\rho .615\) rational basis test \(p\). 619 strict scrutiny test \(p\). 619 segregation \(p .619\) Jim Crow p. 619 separate-but-equal doctrine integration p. 620 integrauion \(p\). 6 de facto \(\rho\). 621 affirmative action \(p .627\) quota p. 628 reverse discrimination \(\rho .628\) citizen \(p .632\) jus soli p . 63
jus sanguinis \(p\). 633 naturalization \(p\). бзз alien \(p .634\) expatriation \(p .684\) denaturalization \(p .635\) deportation p. 637

Affirmative Action
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline Causes & & Effects \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Discriminatory practices based on such factors as race, color, national origin, or gender \\
Difficult for the underprivileged to obtain a quality education \\
Difficult for minorities to find fair opportunities in the workforce \end{tabular} & Affirmative Action Policies and Legislation & \begin{tabular}{l} More companies hire women and minorities \\
Reverse discrimination \\
Controversy and many court cases over the constitutionality and/or proper administration of affirmative action
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about civil rights, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Johnson, Troy R. Red Power: The Native American Civil Rights Movement.
Chelsea House Publications, 2007.
L2 Friedman, Lauri S., ed. Discrimination (Issues That Concern You). Greenhaven Press, 2007.
L3 McNeese, Tim. The Civil Rights Movement: Striving for Justice. Chelsea House Publications, 2007.
L4 Kellough, J. Edward. Understanding Affirmative Action: Politics, Discrimination, and the Search for Justice. Georgetown University Press, 2006.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Predict Test Questions Predicting with accuracy what will be on a test can lead to more focused studying and better grades. Suggest the following prediction strategies to students: Above all, pay attention to those things the teacher emphasizes in class. If a particular point is repeated; written on the board, on an overhead, or in a Power Point presentation; or appears in a study guide, chances are it will resurface on the test. In addition, suggest that students take note of questions asked by the teacher during class. A review of old tests and quizzes will reveal the types of questions and content the teacher stresses. Advise students to predict both lower(factual recall) and higher-order (critical thinking) questions. Students can create their own study guide by writing a few possible questions after every class.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 5 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 5 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Debate, p. 635
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) It is made up of a mix of races and nationalities. (b) In colonial times, 80 percent of the population was white; 20 percent African American. Today the ethnic composition includes many nationalities, with whites making up about 65 percent of the population. (c) Hispanic Americans and Asian Americans
2. (a) by providing financial assistance to educational programs for Native American children and adults (b) Answers will vary.
3. (a) 1850 s to 1860 s; to work as contract laborers in mines and on railroads (b) Chinese immigration came to a halt with the Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882 . When immigration policies were changed in 1965, Chinese immigration increased dramatically.
4. (a) an invisible but impenetrable barrier that prevents women from rising in the corporate world (b) reverse discrimination (c) The character laments that a male bee cannot obtain the highest position; usually, gender-based discrimination complaints are made by women.

\section*{SECTION 2}
5. Answers will vary. Possible response: Government may tax smokers. Burglars fall into a criminal classification.
6. (a) to keep African Americans segregated from whites (b) Plessy v. Ferguson; that separate facilities for African Americans were equal (c) Answers will vary. Possible response: No. Separate facilities are inherently unequal because separation implies inferiority of those set apart.
7. (a) Possible answers: Reed v. Reed struck down a law that gave fathers preference in the administration of children's estates; Taylor v. Louisiana forbids States to exclude women from jury duty (b) Students should respond to the Court's gender classifications that gender-based laws must be (1) intended to serve an "important governmental objective" and (2) are "substantially related" to achieving that goal.

\section*{SECTION 3}
8. (a) 1964: outlaws discrimination in a number of areas, including various "public accommodations," in any program that receives any federal funding, or in jobrelated matters; 1968: forbids anyone to refuse to sell or rent a dwelling to people

\title{
121 Chapter Assessment
}

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) What does it mean to say that the population of the United States is heterogeneous? (b) How does the ethnic balance in the United States today differ from that of colonial times? (c) Which ethnic groups are experiencing the most rapid population growth?
2. (a) How did the Indian Education Act of 1972 attempt to reduce poverty on and near reservations? (b) Do you think that laws can fix the damage done to Native Americans? Why or why not?
3. (a) When and why did Asians first come to the United States? (b) How did Asian immigration change after 1882? After 1965 ?
4. Analyze Political Cartoons Study the cartoon below. (a) What does "glass ceiling" mean? (b) What form of discrimination is targeted by this cartoon? (c) How does the cartoon reverse the usual situation?

Section 2
5. Cite an example of what you consider to be reasonable government discrimination.
6. (a) What was the intent of Jim Crow laws? (b) What landmark Supreme Court case upheld Jim Crow laws, and on what basis? (c) Do you think facilities can be "separate but equal"? Why or why not?
7. (a) Cite two cases in which the Supreme Court found sexbased distinctions to be unconstitutional. (b) Do you think the parameters that the Supreme Court uses when ruling on laws regarding the treatment of men and women are fair? Explain.

\section*{Section 3}
8. (a) What do the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1968 prohibit? (b) How was enforcement of the 1968 act given added strength?
9. (a) What was the first major affirmative action case ruled on by the Supreme Court? (b) How did the Supreme Court rule in the case? (c) What arguments do critics use when they claim that affirmative action is unconstitutional?

Section 4
10. (a) How does the 14 th Amendment define citizenship? (b) In what circumstances may a child born abroad become an American citizen at birth?
11. (a) Why was immigration restricted in the 1880s and again in the 1920s? (b) Outline present immigration policy. (c) Who is excluded from entering the United States today?

\section*{Writing About Government}
12. Use your Quick Write exercises from each Section Assessment to write a problem-solution essay about the topic you selected in Section 1. Begin with an interesting detail that grabs readers' attention, then explain the problem. Describe the pros and cons of two solutions, using supporting facts and details to outline the steps of what you consider to be the best proposal. Proofread and revise your rough draft into final manuscript. See pp. S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
13. Essential Question Activity Research major civil rights leaders in the United States, looking particularly for information on their ideals, struggles, and successes. Jot down notes as you work.
14. Essential Question Assessment Based on your research and the content you have learned in this chapter, create a timeline that helps to answer the Essential Question: Why are there ongoing struggles for civil rights? Your timeline should include civil rights legislation and court cases, as well as quotes from famous civil rights leaders.

\begin{tabular}{|c} Essential Questions \\
Journal
\end{tabular} \begin{tabular}{l}
To respond to the chapter Essential \\
Question, go to your Essential \\
Questions Journal.
\end{tabular} Journal Questions Journal.
on grounds of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, disability, or whether they have children (b) The Justice Department was given authority to bring criminal charges against those who violate its terms.
9. (a) Regents of the University of California v. Bakke (b) It held that Bakke had been denied equal protection and should be admitted to the medical school. (c) Critics say that the Constitution requires all public policies to be "color blind."

\section*{SECTION 4}
10. (a) as "all persons born or naturalized
in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof" (b) if both parents are American citizens, and at least one has lived in the United States or an American territory at some time; or if one parent is an American citizen who has lived in the United States for at least 5 years, 2 of them after age 14, and the child has lived in the United States continuously for at least 5 years between the ages of 14 and 28
11. (a) In the 1880 s, the open frontier was gone and labor was no longer in short supply, and new immigrants were coming mostly from southern and eastern Europe.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Liberty, Equality, and Justice}
"All men are created equal" were empty words for African Americans who faced de jure segregation in the South and de facto segregation in the North. These documents show that Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who emerged as the leader of the civil rights movement, inspired Americans to revive the civil rights struggle.

\section*{Document 1}

Section 1 That all men are by nature equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights, of which, when they enter into a state of society, they cannot, by any compact, deprive or divest their posterity; namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety.
- Virginia Declaration of Rights, 1776

\section*{Document 2}

I say to you today, my friends, so even though we face the difficulties of today and tomorrow, I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream.

I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal.' I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood.
I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character.
-Martin Luther King, Jr., "I Have a Dream," August 28, 1963
1. \(B\)
2. life, liberty, property, happiness, and safety
3. the Declaration of Independence
4. nonviolent or peaceful picketing
5. All Americans are inherently equal, and all should receive equal justice and liberty.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere. We are caught in an inescapable network of mutuality, tied in a single garment of destiny. Whatever affects one directly, affects all indirectly. Never again can we afford to live with the narrow, provincial 'outside agitator' idea. Anyone who lives inside the United States can never be considered an outsider anywhere within its bounds.

-Martin Luther King, Jr., "Letter From Birmingham Jail," April 16, 1963
Document 3

\section*{Document 4}

```

Use your knowledge of civil rights and Documents 1-4 to answer the following questions.

```
1. Which statement best summarizes Document 4 ?
A. Never stop fighting for your rights.
B. We are all afflicted by injustice.
C. Search your heart for the truth.
D. All Americans should enjoy happiness and safety.
2. According to Document 1, what are the inherent rights of the American people?
3. From which founding document does King quote in Document 2?
4. What method of protest is illustrated in Document 3?
5. Pull It Together What is the common thread that is woven through these documents? Explain. views.

In the 1920s, immigration was restricted to favor people from northern and western Europe. (b) The annual ceiling is set at 675,000 immigrants. Relatives of American citizens or resident aliens and immigrants with needed occupational talents are given priority. (c) criminals, suspected terrorists, persons with communicable diseases, drug abusers and addicts, illiterates, and mentally disturbed persons who might pose a threat to the safety of others

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
12. Students' essays should show evidence that they have researched pros and cons to plan and organize their steps toward solutions. A solid essay will utilize this research, with paragraphs organized by main ideas and supporting details. If students need help, guide them during the planning stage, using questions to draw out details for their solutions.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
13. Students' notecards should include civil rights leaders of various races, ethnicities, and gender. Encourage students to locate and read the complete text of "Letter From Birmingham Jail" by Martin Luther King, Jr.

14. Students should scan the chapter for important civil rights legislation. Timelines should include brief descriptions of each law, how it was decided, and how it relates to other laws on the timeline.

\section*{ANSWERS TO ESSENTIAL QUESTION WARMUP}

Before assigning these questions, distribute the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 5 All-inOne, p. 242). Use the criteria and the guidelines below to grade students' answers to the Essential Question Warmup questions. Then send students to the Essential Questions Journal to answer the unit Essential Question.
1. According to this quote from The Federalist No. 78, Hamilton believed that the role of the judicial branch was to define and interpret the laws.
2. To answer this question successfully, students must demonstrate that they understand the premise of constitutionality. They will also make a clear statement of position and defend it with evidence.
3. A good answer will articulate an opinion about the role of the judicial branch in settling disputes related to new technology and situations that the Framers could not have foreseen when the Constitution was written. It will offer concrete examples to support the thesis.
4. To answer this question successfully, students must state a position on whether judges should be guided by personal views and support that position with evidence and examples.

\section*{Assessment Resources}

Unit 5 AYP Monitoring Assessment
ExamView Test Bank CD-ROM
SuccessTracker Assessment
Online Student Self-Tests
Chapter Tests
Section Quizzes
Chapter-level Document-Based Assessment

Essential Question How should a government meet the needs of its people?

\section*{Government Online Resources}

Government Online Teacher Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Online Teacher's Edition with lesson planner and lecture notes
- Teacher's Resource Library with All-in-One Resources, Color Transparencies, Adequate Yearly Progress Monitoring, and an alternative lesson plan for each chapter
- SuccessTracker Assessment

Government Online Student Center at PearsonSuccessNet.com includes
- Interactive textbook with audio
- American Government Essential Questions Video
- Chapter-level WebQuests
- Guided Audio Tours and Interactivities
- Student Self-Tests

\section*{ESSENTIAL QUESTION PERSPECTIVES}

Essential questions frame each unit and chapter of study, asking students to consider big ideas about government. The question for this unit-How should a government meet the needs of its people?-demands that students ask further questions. How should a government identify and define the people's needs? Is there a difference between political needs and economic needs? What should be the balance between meeting needs and allowing the market to work? How do governments measure their success in meeting its people's needs?
To begin this unit, assign the Unit 6 Warmup Activity on page 185 of the Essential Questions Journal. This will help students start to consider their position on the Unit 6 Essential Question: How should a government meet the needs of its people?
Show the Unit 6 American Government Essential Questions Video to help students begin thinking about the unit Essential Question and designate a classroom bulletin board for students to post news articles related to the unit Essential Question. Use the Conversation Wall strategy ( p . T27) to encourage students to post articles and comments on other students' postings.
Later, students will further explore the chapter-level essential questions:
Chapter 22: How should you measure different governments?
Chapter 23: To what extent should governments participate in the economy?
Use the Essential Questions Journal throughout the program to help students consider these and other big ideas about government.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 6}

How should a government meet the needs of its people?

\section*{CHAPTER 22}

How should you measure different governments?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: What form of government does China have? (Communist) Based on the quotation, do you think Winston Churchill would consider China's government effective? Explain. (No. The quote suggests that Churchill considers democracy more effective than communism.) In this chapter, students will learn about democracy: its roots, its different forms, and the difficulties of achieving it. Tell students to begin to explore democracy by completing the Chapter 22 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 22 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 9)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE TIMELINES}

You may wish to teach analyzing timelines as a distinct skill within Section 1 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 22 Skills Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 21 ) to help students learn how to analyze timelines. The worksheet asks students to use information about African independence to create a vertical timeline. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 23).

\section*{WebQuest
online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about different forms of government.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 lesson, and omit the Core Worksheet activity and Extend options. Teach the Section 2 and 3 lessons, omitting the Core Worksheet activity in Section 2 and the Extend options in both sections.
BLOCK 2: Have students create a Venn diagram to compare and contrast the governments of the UK and Mexico.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

To cover the chapter quickly, read aloud the primary source in the Section 1 Core Worksheet, and discuss the questions. If time permits, discuss Transparency 22A, Legitimacy. For Section 2, have students complete the concept web on Enlightenment ideas in the Bellringer activity. Follow the discussion in the lesson to compare paths to popular sovereignty taken by Britain, France, and Latin America. In Section 3, discuss and list the factors that lead to democracy and the factors that cause failed states. Use the feature "What Makes Democracy Succeed" in the text to discuss democratic consolidation. In Section 4, display and discuss Transparency 22G, Two Modern Democracies, and Transparency 22H, Election Process in the United Kingdom.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- compare the governments of ancient Athens and Rome by completing a pro-con chart.
- use a primary source to analyze the government of the Roman Republic and identify elements of it in the U.S. Government.
- discuss legitimacy using a transparency and apply the concept to the Declaration of Independence.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- complete a concept web to review Enlightenment ideas.
- use the Think-Write-Pair-Share strategy to write a summarizing sentence connecting Enlightenment ideas with the spread of popular sovereignty.
- discuss the reasons for different paths toward popular sovereignty.
- create a political cartoon to illustrate the relationship of fascism or communism to the concept of popular sovereignty.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- discuss the challenges to democratic transitions.
- complete a chart to list the factors contributing to greater democracy and to failed democracy.
- analyze how Haiti and Iraq could succeed or fail in their transitions to democracy.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- recognize variations in democracies by comparing features of the governments of the UK and Mexico in a transparency.
- understand the UK's general election processes by examining a flowchart.
- compare and contrast the governments of the UK, Mexico, and the United States by playing a fact game.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
\(L 1\) Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

On what early political ideas and traditions was modern government founded?

\section*{I. Ancient Foundations}
A. Athens: The First Democracy
B. Roman Republic
C. Feudalism
II. Rise of Sovereign State
A. Commercial revolution
B. Towns
C. Rise of Monarchies
III. Legitimacy
A. People believe government has right to make public policy
B. Established by tradition, power of personality, or rule of law
C. Divine right of kings-traditional belief that God granted monarchs authority to rule

\section*{IV. Colonialism}
A. Spread laws and religious beliefs
B. Mercantilism emphasized accumulation of precious metals to increase state's wealth and power
C. Mercantilist policies involved monarch and state in economy
D. Monarchs set up companies to monopolize trade with and tap wealth of colonies
E. British colonial efforts led to creation of constitutional government of United States

\section*{SECTION 1}

\section*{Origins of the Modern State}

\section*{Guiding Question}

On what early political ideas and traditions was modern government founded? Use an outline to take notes on the roots of modern American democracy.
I. Ancient Foundations
A. Athens: The First Democracy
A. Athens: The First Democrac
B. \({ }^{\text {2. }}\)
1.
\(\qquad\)

Political Dictionary
- patricians
- plebeians divine right o
feudalism kings
- sovereignty - mercantilism
- legitimacy

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify the ancient foundations of the state in Athens, in Rome, and in the feudal system.
2. Analyze the rise of sovereign states.
3. Explain how governments can achieve legitimacy.
4. Understand why European nations turned to colonialism.

Image Above: The agora, a large public space, was the ancient home of Athenian democracy.

As you know, government is among the oldest of all human inventions. It emerged long before the dawn of recorded history, when human beings first realized that they could not survive without it-that is, without some means by which they could regulate their own and their neighbors' behavior. The earliest evidences of government date back some 3,000 years, but clearly the institution is much older than that.

An uncountable number of governments of various forms have appeared, and disappeared, through the centuries in Europe, Asia, Africa, and the Americas. Those that survived for any length of time were those that could adapt to major changes in their environments.

The roots of democratic government in todays world-including government in the United State--lie deep in human history. They reach back most particularly to ancient Greece and Rome and also to later beliefs and practices that emerged elsewhere in Europe.

\section*{Ancient Foundations}

Those who built a governmental system for the newly independent United States in the late 1700s were, on the whole, well educated. They were quite familiar with the political institutions of their day and, importantly, those of ancient Greece and Rome, as well.

Athens: The First Democracy Greek civilization began to develop some 700 to 800 years before the birth of Christ, and it reached its peak in the fourth century в.c. The Greece of that time was a loose collection of many small, independent, and somewhat isolated city-states \({ }^{1}\)-a pattern dictated by the geography of the region, where every island, valley, and plain is cut off from its neighbors by the sea or by mountain ranges.

The concept of democracy was born in those city-states, most notably in Athens. Like the other city-states, Athens began as a monarchy. By the sixth century b.c., however, the Athenians had overthrown monarchical rule, and 1 Originally, the city-state (polis) was a defensible location to which those who lived in a particular locale could retreat when attacked. Over time, towns grew up around those defensible places.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE TIMELINES}

To practice analyzing timelines in this section, use the Chapter 22 Skills Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 21). You may want to teach the skill before discussing the historical aspects of early governments. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 23).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Democracy was born in ancient Athens. - Representative government developed in the ancient Roman Republic. - Feudalism was a system of loose alliances between lords and vassals in medieval Europe. •In the late 1400 s and the 1500s, European nations began colonizing other lands. • Colonial powers adopted mercantilism to control and profit from their colonies.
CONCEPTS: forms of government, role of government ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The roots of modern democracies, including the United States, reach back to ancient Greece and Rome. - Sovereignty is the utmost authority to make decisions and maintain order. - All governments seek legitimacy through tradition, a charismatic leader, or the rule of law.
they soon replaced it with what they called demokratia - literally, "rule by the people."

Athenian democracy was, at base, direct democracy. Its central feature was an Assembly (the Ecclesia) composed of male citizens at least 18 years of age. \({ }^{2}\) The Assembly met 40 times a year to debate public matters and make law. Decisions in the Assembly were made by majority vote.

The Assembly's agenda was set by a Council of Five Hundred (the boule). That body was composed of 500 citizens who were chosen randomly. Judges served onemonth terms and did the routine day-to-day work of government. Courts were staffed by judges who were at least 30 years of age. They, too, were chosen randomly, and then served one-year terms and settled both public and private disputes.

Athens reached the peak of its glory in art, literature, and philosophy in the fifth century b.c., but it had been severely weakened by the long Peloponnesian War (431-404 b.c.) and later conquest by the Macedonians. What remained of Athenian democracy was extinguished by the Romans who overran Greece in 146 в.c.

The Roman Republic At about the time that glimmers of democracy first appeared in Greece, they began to emerge as well in Rome on the Italian peninsula. Rome was founded in 753 b.c. and, like Athens, was originally a city-state ruled by a monarchy. Monarchical rule was overthrown in 509 b.c. and was soon replaced by a rude form of popular government. The Romans referred to their new system as res publica, a republic. \({ }^{3}\) The Roman Republic was to last for some 400 years, until it became the Roman Empire at the end of the first century в.с. Over that period, Rome, involved in almost continuous military conflict, expanded its domain to include most of the lands surrounding the Mediterranean Sea and nearly all of Western Europe.

2 Neither political rights nor citizenship were granted to women, Neither political rights nor citizenship were granted to women, slaves, or males born to noncitizens In all , only some 30,000 slaves, or males born to noncitizens. In all, only some 30,000 of Athens estimate fourth century в.c.
3 fourth century b.c. or publica meaning "the public"- thus, "the public's thing," thing belonging to the public

In Latin, SPQR stands for "the Senate and the people of Rome," the source of all government authority in the Roman Republic. How well did the Senate represent the people of Rome?

The republic was far from democratic in the modern sense. It did introduce the concept of representation, however. Much of the political history of the republican period revolved around an often violent struggle between two social classes: the patricians, mostly rich upper-class, landowning aristocrats; and the plebeians, the common folk. The Romans did hold elections to choose some public officials, but women, slaves, and the foreign-born could not participate.

Government was centered in the Senate, composed of some 300 members, and two consuls chosen by the Senate. Senators were elected by the citizenry. The patricians dominated that body, but, over time, an increasing number of plebeians were elected to the Senate and to a number of lesser assemblies. The consuls were, effectively, the heads of state. They commanded the army and conducted foreign affairs. The consuls also presided over the Senate and enforced its decrees. Interestingly, each consul had the power to veto the other's decisions. In times of crisis, the Senate could appoint a

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 6, Chapter 22, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 9)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 13)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 15)
L3 L2 Core Worksheets (pp. 17, 19)
L3 L2 Skills Worksheets (pp. 21, 23)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 24)
L3 Quiz A (p. 26)
L2 Quiz B (p. 27)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- compare the governments of ancient Athens and Rome by completing a pro-con chart.
- use a primary source to analyze the government of the Roman Republic and identify elements of it in the U.S. Government.
- discuss legitimacy using a transparency and apply the concept to the Declaration of Independence.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 13) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 15)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: Would you prefer to have lived under the government of ancient Athens or the Roman Republic? In your notebook, briefly explain why.
L2 Differentiate Students may list a few reasons why they would prefer one system over the other.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible response: For the time, the Senate was relatively representative; but from a modern perspective, it was not. It represented only the views of the male patricians, not the lower classes or women.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that the topic of this lesson is early types of government-particularly those that form the roots of modern democracies. Several basic concepts on which the United States government is based developed in ancient Athens and the Roman Republic. (Clarify that democracy was specific to Athens; for example, Sparta was a monarchy.)

\section*{CREATE PRO-CON CHARTS}

Write direct democracy and republic on the board. Ask volunteers to define each term. (Direct democracy is a system, developed in ancient Athens, in which citizens participate directly in the government. A republic is a representative government, developed in ancient Rome, in which citizens elect officials to make laws and run the government.) Ask students which type of government they chose in the Bellringer, and why. Discuss what life would have been like under each-for example, would they have had any say in the government, or any rights at all? Were there benefits in either system for females? Count to see how many students chose each system. Ask:
What are some positive and negative aspects of each system? (Students may note that neither government was very responsive to most of the residents. Citizenship was very limited in Athens and to some extent in Rome. In Athens, people had a direct say in the government. In Rome, the patricians dominated the senate, although some plebeians were eventually elected to the senate and to lesser assemblies. Direct democracy is not very efficient and could not work in a large country. A republic is more efficient, but the people give up some of their power to those who rule for them.) Record students' responses in pro-con charts on the board.
L2 ELL Differentiate Encourage students to share the words in their native languages for democracy and republic.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Athens pioneered democratic government; Rome introduced representative government and the rule of law.

Checkpoint What did Athens and Rome contribute to modern government?
epochal event \(n\). beginning of an era marked by notable happenings catalyst \(\frac{\text { catalyst }}{n \text {. something that }}\) prompts, brings about,
change
dictator to serve in place of the consuls and exercise absolute power, but for no longer than six months. \({ }^{4}\)

Feudalism The decline and fall of the Roman Empire in the fifth century a.D. marked the beginning of the Middle Agesthe period from that epochal event on to the 16th century. It also marked the collapse of centralized authority and organized government over vast stretches of the western world. For more than a thousand years, that world would know little or nothing of government in the modern sense of the term.

The feudal system was born in response to that chaos and disorder. It developed in fits and starts and came to hold sway over much of Europe from the ninth through the twelfth centuries. Feudalism was a loosely organized system in which powerful lords divided their lands among other, lesser lords. Those with land and power agreed to protect others in exchange for their loyalty, their military service, and a share of the crops they produced. The basic economic units in the feudal system were the lords' manors. Each manor contained all of a lord's land holdings, which often included a town or village, as well.

The primary relationship in the feudal chain was that between a lord and his vassals, lesser lords who pledged their loyalty to the ranking lord-who was, in some places, a monarch. The lord ruled and the vassals served him, watching over the lands in their section of the manor.

The lord did perform some functions of the state in the modern world. He provided protection for his vassals and administered a rough form of justice. In return, the vassals supported the lord's decisions and served under his military command when necessary. The lord-vassal relationship was but one part of a large complex of relationships. Often, a vassal was himself a lord to other, less powerful vassals, and a lord was sometimes a vassal under an even more powerful lord.

Serfs, the bulk of the population, lived at the bottom of the chain of feudal relationships. They were peasants, bound to the land

\footnotetext{
4 The word dictator comes from the Latin dictare, meaning "to say or pronounce."
}
they farmed. The serfs gave a share of what they grew to their vassals in return for protection in times of war. They led harsh lives. None could leave the land without the lord's permission, and their children inherited their ties and responsibilities to the lord. Most died young, never having journeyed more than a few miles from the lord's manor.

The Roman Catholic Church As the Roman Empire had spread across Western Europe, so had Roman Catholicism. The Church survived the collapse of imperial rule and now, in concert with feudalism, it provided some measure of government-like order to life in the Europe of the Middle Ages.

The Roman Catholic Church, now nearly 2,000 years old, traces its origins to the birth of Christianity and to the death of Jesus in Jerusalem, in the Roman province of Judea, in A.D. 33. Catholicism managed to overcome three centuries of often violent persecution by a succession of hostile emperors. In A.D. 380, the Roman Catholic Church became the official church of the Roman Empire.

As most of Europe was converted to Chris-tianity-that is, as most Europeans became Catholics-the Roman Catholic Church became incre asingly powerful. By the late Middle Ages, the pope and his bishops ruled vast land holdings, and they frequently vied with monarchs and lords for political as well as religious influence over people's lives

\section*{Rise of the Sovereign State}

Feudalism was, at best, a loose, makeshift basis for government. As cracks emerged in the system-between Catholics and Protestants and the feudal manor and the mar-ketplace-the need for a more structured arrangement became apparent. The outlines of the modern, sovereign nation-state began to emerge.

The Commercial Revolution By the end of the Middle Ages, a commercial revolution began to change the ways in which people lived and did business. A horrific plague, the Black Plague of the 1340 s, was a major catalyst of that revolution. In all, it killed a third of Western Europe's population. The american cincinnatus Around 458 B.C., Lucius Quinctius Cincinnatus was plowing his field when a messenger arrived. The Roman consul and his legions were surrounded by the Aequi tribe and faced annihilation. The senate had appointed Cincinnatus dictator, and he was charged with rescuing the army. Cincinnatus departed his farm immediately and soon defeated the enemy. The crisis over, he resigned his powerful position and returned to his home. Legend honors Cincinnatus as a model of patriotism. Inspired by this story, many people have called George Washington the "American Cincinnatus. " Washington accepted his country's call to lead the Continental Army in a time of crisis. When the Revolution ended, Washington rejected suggestions that he become king of the new nation. Like Cincinnatus, he resigned his commission and returned to his farm, instead of taking power.

\section*{Background}

The defining elements of sovereign states developed over time and in different lands. What characteristics define the United States as a sovereign state?

\section*{Ancient Athens \\ The Athenians introduced direct democracy. Citizens debated public questions and decided questions and decided them by majority vote.}

Feudalism In the Feudal Era, Europe's first parliaments emerged and began to limit the powers of kings. England provided for trial by a jury of one's peers.

17th century Sovereignty emerged in the 17 th century, with states with fixed borders, a national identity, and a centralized government with fixed authority.

Plague itself did not destroy the feudal system. Rather its far-reaching effects undercut that system.

After the plague, the manors still depended on the same amount of work, but from the smaller number of serfs who had survived. Serfs and free peasants found strength in the high value of their labor and began to demand higher wages and better conditions.

Because of the vast decrease in population caused by the plague, the prices of food crops fell, and so the lords made less money from their manorial lands. Merchants and artisans became increasingly wealthy and more powerful. The economy became increasingly based on money and trade, rather than land.

The Influence of Towns As you have read, feudalism relied on personal relationships and agreements in which people exchanged work and food for security and justice. Over time, lords had to find new ways to gather money. Some lords accepted money from their vassals in place of military service. Others allowed free people to set up towns on their land for a fee under a charter. In this way, towns began to spring up across Europe. Those towns were centers of trade and freedom that tested the limits of feudalism.

The most important of these towns were found in northern Italy, northern Germany, and the Netherlands. Their income came from trade with Central Europe and Asia. The merchants in these towns had uneasy relationships with the lords. Although the merchants were free, they had to pay money to lords for protection, duties on their trade goods, and the right to use roads, rivers, and bridges. Many lords tried to extend their system of justice to the towns. They often failed, because they depended on the merchants and bankers of the towns for loans. Trade guilds also developed

\section*{guild}
n. association of craftsmen or merchants

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 22 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 17), which contains an excerpt about the government of the Roman Republic. Point out that the Framers of the U.S. Constitution were familiar with Roman political institutions and used some of these ideas in creating the U.S. Government. Have students read the excerpt, and then answer the questions.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 19). Have students work in small groups to answer the questions.

\section*{L4 Differentiate Have students do research on the} government of ancient Athens. Ask them to work together to prepare a presentation explaining the basic elements of the Athenian government and the concepts the U.S. Framers may have drawn from it.

\section*{COMPARE AND CONTRAST SYSTEMS}

Have students share their answers to the Core Worksheet with the class. Draw a Venn diagram on the board, with the following labels: "Roman Republic," "United States," and "Both." Students should work with you to fill in the diagram with details to compare and contrast the governmental systems. Then have students identify specific features in the U.S. Government that were drawn from the Roman Republic.
Tell students to go to the Interactivity for an interactive exploration of the timeline.

\section*{Answers}

Roots of the Sovereign State fixed borders, a national identity, centralized government with complete authority Checkpoint Feudalism provided stability and security.

\section*{DISCUSS LEGITIMACY}

Ask: What is legitimacy? Explain that the root of legitimacy is from the Latin word lex, which means "law." Ask students how this might relate to the meaning of legitimacy. (Legitimacy is literally "legal rule. ") Clarify that legitimacy is the right to rule, granted by the ruled to the rulers. Tell students that even a government that rules by force seeks legitimacy. Ask: Why is legitimacy important to a government? (The government will be more stable and likely to last if the people believe it has the right to rule them.)
Display Transparency 22A, Legitimacy. Ask: Which types of legitimacy did the Athenian democracy have? (traditional, rule of law) the Roman Republic? (traditional, rule of law) feudalism? (traditional, power of personality) absolute monarchy? (traditional/divine right, power of personality) the United States government? (rule of law)
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Pronounce legitimacy for students. Clarify that legitimacy is a noun and legitimate is the related adjective, meaning that it describes a government that has legitimacy, as in "a legitimate government. " Ask students if they know the verb that means "to make legitimate." (legitimize) Be sure that students see the common root in these words.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Distribute the Chapter 22 Section 1 Extend Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 24). Tell students that the worksheet provides parts of the Declaration of Independence. As they read it, they should identify key phrases that relate to legitimacy and then use these phrases to help them answer the question that follows.

L4 DDifferentiate Have students read the full version of the Declaration of Independence reproduced in their textbook and answer the worksheet question based on the entire document.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Read through the worksheet excerpts as a class. Pause after reading each paragraph to have students identify phrases concerning the right to rule and restate the phrases in their own words.
in the cities and towns, and their members demanded a say in government.

The Rise of Monarchies All of these factors began to break down the feudal system, weakening the power of the lords. At the same time, the leaders of the towns began to appreciate the benefits of supporting a central authority and they allied themselves with monarchs. The monarchs, in turn, saw the towns as a source of wealth that could free them from dependence on their vassals.

Therefore, by the late 1400 s the powers of the monarchs were expanding, and feudalism was fast disappearing. In nations such as England, Spain, and France, rulers centralized power, establishing national governments with national legal systems, national identities, and, most important for the monarchs, national taxes. Warfare now was between national armies, not between powerful nobles. Monarchs, whose power was absolute or nearly so, no longer needed the lords to support them and could also ignore popular representative assemblies, if they wished, for long periods of time.

To help manage the national government, monarchs hired loyal civil servants typically born in the towns and educated at local universities. Their perspectives were national, not regional. The state, in the person of the monarch, now had sovereignty, or the utmost authority in decision making and in maintaining order. Ever yone, including the nobles, was subordinate to that authority.

Because monarchs already existed within the feudal system, they enjoyed the benefits and respect of tradition. A monarch was now recognized as the strongest individual who could best govern a state and protect the people from harm. With sovereignty, the monarch now had the right to make laws for the entire nation and all its people.

\section*{Legitimacy}

The development of the sovereign state was useful in creating political organization, but claiming sovereignty alone does not establish government. All governments must have legitimacy to rule.

Rulers have strong reasons to seek consent for their rule. This consent is known as legitimacy, the belief of the people that a government has the right to make public policy. A legitimate government is one that is accepted by its people and other governments as the sovereign authority of a nation. Leaders may use force to keep power. However, force is difficult to maintain over time.

Governments may gain legitimacy in several ways. One is by tradition. In this case, people accept a certain form of government because their society has long been governed in that way, and people expect their institutions and traditions to be carried on into the future. One type of traditional legitimacy is known as the divine right of kings. For hundreds of years, European monarchs based their right to rule on this belief that God had granted them authority. To disobey a monarch was to fight the natural order of society and to commit a sin against God. In theory, monarchs who ruled by divine right did not have to answer to parliaments or to the people, only to God. The divine right of kings drew legitimacy from Europe's deep-rooted Christian values.

Another way for a government, and in particular one leader, to win legitimacy is through the power of personality. A charismatic person with strong leadership skills can often win \(\Delta\) In the 1400 s, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella united their lands in marriage into what became the Kingdom of Spain. The unification of power in Spain, France, and England led to the establishment of colonies overseas.

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Have students work in groups to create an informational display about one of these forms of government: Athenian democracy, the Roman Republic, feudalism, or a seventeenth-century absolute monarchy. Each display should point out concepts and practices that form the roots of democratic government today. Students should enhance their display with images of political leaders and other appropriate visuals.

To see this lesson plan, go to popular support. The people agree to allow this person to rule them.

The final and most durable form of legitimacy is created when a government binds itself to the rule of law. The law must be seen as fair and effective for people to trust their government. Constitutional government in the United States is an excellent example of this form of legitimacy.

\section*{Colonialism}

Beginning in the late 1400 s and early 1500 s, several European monarchies embarked on a policy of colonialism - the control of one nation over lands abroad. European settlers, laws, and religious beliefs spread around the world as rival nations competed for colonial possessions.

Colonial trade and its wealth brought newfound power to merchants, and monarchs adopted mercantilism to control and profit from that situation. Mercantilism is an economic and political theory emphasizing money as the chief source of wealth to increase the absolute power of the monarchy and the nation. The policy stressed the accumulation of precious metals, like gold and silver. It also called for the establishment of colonies and a merchant marine and the development of industry and mining to attain a favorable balance of trade with other countries. Mercantilist policies brought the monarchy and the state deep into the economy. Monarchs taxed imports heavily to protect locally produced goods. Foreigners were required to buy licenses from the state in order to trade with local merchants. Monarchs sought to fill their treasuries and enhance their own and their nations' power.

Mercantilism expanded when European explorers reached the Western Hemisphere. Their explorations there opened new opportunities for trade and farming, but only monarchs had the wealth and power to establish and control new colonies.

The high cost of exploration allowed monarchs to control overseas commerce by setting up companies to monopolize trade with the new regions. The company system allowed monarchs to tap new sources of wealth from distant gold and silver mines and from far-flung trade.

European colonization brought about new developments in modern government. Britain's colonial efforts led to the American Revolution and the creation of the United States and its constitutional government. The experiences of other countries originally colonized by Spain, France, Portugal, and even Great Britain, however, differed in several ways from the American experience.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Why is legitimacy important?

\section*{monopolize} \(v\) v. prevent others from sharing; control, dominate

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' work.

Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 26)
Section Quiz B (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 27)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Elements of ancient \\ Athenian and Roman \\ governments (Ques- \\ tions 1, 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Have students write a summary of the \\ main parts of the government in ancient \\ Athens and Rome under the Republic.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Aspects of the feudal \\ system (Questions 3, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students to make a pyramid showing \\ the hierarchical relationships under feudal- \\ ism, with the monarch at the top and the \\ serfs at the bottom.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Changes in the power \\ of European monarchs \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students make a flowchart that \\ describes changes in monarchies from the \\ feudal period to the seventeenth century.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The concept of legiti- \\ macy (Question 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
With students, create a class concept web \\ that records ideas about legitimacy-its \\ forms and purpose.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Legitimacy allows governments to rule without violence and with the respect of the people.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The U.S. was founded on principles of democracy, legitimacy, and representative government that have their roots in ancient Athens and the Roman Republic. Ancient Greeks practiced direct democracy and majority rule. The Roman Republic introduced representative government and the veto to check power. Monarchs at the end of the Middle Ages centralized power and established a national government, national legal system, and national identity, leading to the state as the sovereign entity.
2. Both were the central lawmaking body. However, the ecclesia was based on direct democracy. The Roman senate was a representative government.
3. Lords protected and gave land to vassals in exchange for loyalty, labor, military service, and part of the crop. The lords' manors were the basic economic units. Serfs farmed the land and received protection from their vassals in exchange for a share of their crop.
4. Under feudalism, monarchs were usually the most powerful lords. As the Black Plague, commercial revolution, and rise of towns eroded feudalism, monarchs centralized power, creating sovereign states.
5. Towns and the commercial revolution weakened feudalism by offering people a way to live freely outside the feudal structure. It also increased the power of landless townspeople through wealth that they lent to the monarchs. 6. If citizens do not view their government as legitimate, they may disobey or overthrow it.
QUICKWRITE Students should create Venn diagrams to compare and contrast two systems of government discussed in the chapter.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will do an Internet search for trustworthy information about a news topic.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{BRAINSTORM}

Have students brainstorm a list of specific newsoriented sites, such as local or network television sites, e-zines, government sites, and online newspapers. Discuss sites such as blogs and wikis. Explain that these must be carefully evaluated because they rely on individuals' contributions, with little or no oversight.

\section*{DEVELOP AN EVALUATION CHECKLIST}

List the criteria below on the board. Tell students that they can evaluate the reliability of a Internet source by asking the following questions.
- Authorship-Who wrote the site content?
- Credentials-Where does the site content originate?
- Currency-How up to date is the content?
- Purpose-Why has the content been created?
- Accuracy-Are there grammar, spelling, or factual errors?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect students' research results and grade them. You may also wish to have them answer the What Do You Think questions.

\section*{Answers}
1. Sample response: Focusing your search saves time. Search terms that are too broad can return thousands of possible sites. Terms that are too narrow might return none.
2. You can compare the information to the same information at a trustworthy Web site. Also, you can trust government sites and reputable news sources, such as Newsweek and the BBC.
3. A strong result will include a focused search topic and trustworthy Web sources.

When researching current events, such as the visit of a foreign leader to the United States, Internet news sources are extremely helpful-provided you are careful about evaluating the sources which you use. Major television networks, newspapers, and magazines all have Web sites, and they are usually trustworthy. Examples include CNN, the BBC, National Public Radio, The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, and so on. Government Web sites are also excellent sources.

To use the Internet as a news source, follow these steps:
1. Determine your search term(s). To search most effectively on the Internet, you need to determine a specific term or topic. Searching for a broad subject can yield too many responses that do notaddress your questions. For example, "Japan prime minister" will yield thousands of results in a search engine which would take a lot of time to sift through. In this case, you might use the prime minister's name and "U.S. visit."
2. Use a search engine to find information on your topic or to locate specific news sources. Type in the search term for your topic or the name of a specific news organization, such as Newsweek, if you already have one in mind. You can also simply type "news" into a search engine, but it will take you much longer to locate specific information on your topic. News sources that are local to the event may provide unique information and coverage.
3. Be sure that your sources have a reputation for accurate news coverage. Some news organizations have better reputations for accuracy and objective reporting than others, but findings from all sources should be confirmed with at least a second source. If you are unsure of a source's reliability, compare its information with similar information from a source you know to be trustworthy.

\section*{What do you think?}
1. Why is it important to determine your topic or search terms before you begin an Internet search?
2. How can you determine the reliability of a news source?
3. You Try It Choose a topic in the news related to the government or politics of one of the nations covered in this chapter. Determine your search terms, and then type them into a search engine. Follow the results that you think are good news sources. Take notes about the types of information you find on your topic at each of at least three Web sites you think are trustwor-thy-reports, editorials, photographs, video, and so on.
1. GOVERNMENT ONLINE Citizenship Activity Pack For an activity to help you use the Internet for research, go to Internet for research, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Use the Internet as a News Source. It includes a lesson plan for you, worksheets that help students analyze Web sites, assessment rubrics, and posters that represent Web sites covering one story in different ways. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on How to Use the Internet as a News Source at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Ideas and Revolutions}

Guiding Question
How have some nations expanded popular sovereignty? Use a flowchart similar to the one below to record information about how different nations have expanded popular sovereignty.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- encomienda • fascism - guerrilla warfare - communism

\section*{Objectives}
1. Understand how Enlightenment ideas helped influence the expansion of popular sovereignty.
2. Analyze the role of popular sovereignty in England, France, and around the world.
3. Describe events in Latin America, Asia, and Africa that expanded popular sovereignty.
4. Examine how fascism and communism distort the concept of popular sovereignty.

Image Above: Simón Bolivar led many South American nations to independence from Spain.

,n the previous section, you traced the development of governments in Europe from ancient Greece and Rome to the rise of the sovereign state and absolute monarchy. In addition, you discovered how sovereign states gain legitimacy. In this section, you will see how legitimacy leads to stable government. You will also discover how governments without legitimacy can fall to revolutions and tyranny.

\section*{The Enlightenment}

By the beginning of the eighteenth century, scientific discoveries and new thinking had led to an intellectual movement based on reason and known as the Enlightenment. Some of the most important ideas about modern government, economics, and society were developed at the time, when people began to discuss the rights of individuals to control their own fates and to have a say in their governments.

Early in the movement, English political theorist John Locke (1632-1704) put forth the notion of the natural rights of all human beings, including the rights to life, liberty, and property-ideas that later formed the basis for the Declaration of Independence. He built on the view of fellow Englishman Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679): that the people and their rulers are parties to a social contract that defines the rights and powers of each. Economists, including Adam Smith (1723-1790) and David Ricardo (1772-1823), criticized economic policies that helped monarchs grow wealthier while most of their subjects became steadily poorer and less free.

In France, the philosopher François-Marie Arouet (1694-1778), known as Voltaire, advocated reason, freedom of religion, the importance of scientific observation, and the idea of human progress. The ideas of the Baron de Montesquieu (1689-1755) were crucial to political theory during the Enlightenment. His theories about the separation of powers in government, so that different branches may check and balance each other, were integral to what was to become the Constitution of the United States.

As reason and secular thinking began to supersede religious belief, monarchs lost some of their divine legitimacy, and their God-given sovereignty

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How have some nations expanded popular sovereignty?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Expanded Popular Sovereignty} \\
\hline \[
\downarrow
\] & \(\nabla\) & \(\dagger\) \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
United Kingdom \\
- Gradual transfer of power \\
- Magna Carta \\
- Charles I overthrown \\
- Petition of Right \\
- Bill of Rights \\
- Parliament used power of purse to gain power over monarch \\
- Laws gradually expanded suffrage \\
- Historic institutions preserved
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} France \\
- French Revolution \\
- The Terror \\
- Rise of Napoleon \\
- War with rest of Europe \\
- Historic institutions destroyed and replaced by new ones \\
- Several revolutions and changes in government
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Mexico \\
- Free institutions are recent \\
- Agustin de Iturbide engineered independence and became emperor; later overthrown \\
- Periods of civil war through nineteenth century \\
- Stability under President Porfirio Diaz's harsh rule \\
- Revolt and civil war \\
- New constitution 1910 \\
- Reform under Institutional RevoIutionary Party \end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- complete a concept web to review Enlightenment ideas.
- use the Think-Write-Pair-Share strategy to write a summarizing sentence connecting Enlightenment ideas with the spread of popular sovereignty.
- discuss the reasons for different paths toward popular sovereignty.
- create a political cartoon to illustrate the relationship of fascism or communism to popular sovereignty.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

Before students use this section's Core Worksheet to create political cartoons about fascism or communism, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S22, to learn more about political cartoons.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: • Enlightenment thinkers developed new ideas about the relationship between government and the governed. - Popular sovereignty in Britain was based on the Magna Carta, Petition of Right, and Bill of Rights. - Fascist governments glorify the state over the individual. - Communist governments control the economy to serve the workers without regard for individual liberty.
CONCEPTS: types of government systems, popular sovereignty enduring understandings: - The Enlightenment emphasized reason and scientific inquiry. •Britain achieved popular sovereignty gradually, while France underwent a bloody revolution. - Nations in Latin America, Asia, and Africa struggled to maintain democracy after independence. - Communist and fascist governments emphasize popular sovereignty but distort the concept.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 28) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 30)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 22C, Enlightenment Web, which is a blank concept web with the center oval labeled "Enlightenment Ideas." Instruct students to fill in the concept web based on their reading.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Direct students to begin the concept web by recording the names of thinkers mentioned on the first page of the section. Point out that the text discusses the ideas of Smith and Ricardo together, so students should combine them in the concept web.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What is popular sovereignty and why is it important?
came into question. More and more people began to feel that even monarchs governed only because the people granted them the power to do so. If a monarch abused his or her power, he or she broke the social contract with the people and no longer deserved to rule. In this way, popular sovereignty became increasingly important, even in a monarchy. Recall that popular sovereignty is the idea that governments can exist only with the consent of the governed.

Popular sovereignty would eventually form the basis for the many republics and democracies in the world today. Since the eighteenth century, almost every government has had to address issues of popular sovereignty in one way or another.

\section*{Two Roads to Popular Sovereignty}

Two leading monarchies in Western Europe, Britain and France, took very different paths to popular sovereignty. In Britain, popular sovereignty was achieved gradually. As one of the first modern countries where the people began to have a say in their government, Britain blended popular sovereignty with deep-seated cultural traditions. Meanwhile, France took a revolutionary route to popular sovereignty and rejected many longstanding traditions.

Democracy in Britain Great Britain, now the United Kingdom, is today a constitutional monarchy. Yet that nation functions as a democracy much like the United States. Britons elect a government that is responsible to them and which draws its legitimacy from their votes and support. Great Britain was not always democratic, however. How did a country once ruled by powerful monarchs become a vibrant democracy?

The UK's history is marked by the gradual transfer of sovereignty from the monarchy to the people. The Magna Carta in 1215 was the first move toward a constitutional monarchy. In the 1640s, the English people went to war against their monarch, King Charles I. He was tried, found guilty, and executed as a tyrant and traitor in 1649. The Petition of Right of 1628 and the Bill of Rights of 1689 took more authority from the monarch and gave it to Parliament, which represented the people. Parliament controlled "the power of \section*{Two Revolutions}

Monarchies in Britain and France adapted to popular sovereignty one nation peacefully, the other violently. Each country's transition began with a revolutionary moment that determined the shape of future events. What were the effects of each form of revolution?

The French Revolution
1789-1794 The French revolutionary government violently overthrew King Louis XVI, the nobility, and the Church, creating a new republic with new institutions that did not last very long.

Britain's Glorious Revolution
1688 Parliament invited William and Mary (above) to peacefully replace King James II on condition that they recognize the authority of Parliament and the rights of individuals.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 6, Chapter 22, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 28)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 30)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 32)
L3 Quiz A (p. 34)
L2 Quiz B (p. 35)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Popular sovereignty means that all power comes from the people. Democracy is based on the principle of popular sovereignty.
Two Revolutions The French transition resulted in significant bloodshed and the destruction of its historic institutions. Britain's transition preserved many of its institutions and minimized bloodshed.
the purse," the right to tax people to fund the government. Through this lever, this representative body gained more and more power over the monarchy.

The conception of exactly who "the people" are has also evolved in the UK as it has in the United States. Well into the nineteenth century, only male property owners could vote, and only those who belonged to officially recognized Protestant churches could hold public office. At times, some of the largest cities in Great Britain had no representation in Parliament at all.

Far-sighted members of Parliament recognized the need for change. In the 1800 s , Parliament passed several laws to expand the right to vote. A law passed in 1829 allowed Roman Catholics to hold public office. Landmark parliamentary acts in 1832, 1867, and 1885 reduced and then removed property restrictions. Women gained the right to vote in 1918. By adapting its government to embrace popular sovereignty, Great Britain protected many of its institutions, including the monarchy, Parliament, the legal system, and the Church of England. These institutions have changed to meet the needs of a modern economy and diverse society, but they preserve a link to Britain's past.

Revolution in France France took a very different route toward popular sovereignty. While the British monarchy compromised with nobles and Parliament gained power, the French monarchy expanded and centralized its authority. Royal power reached its peak under Louis XIV (1643-1715), who famously and accurately proclaimed, "L'état, c'est moi." ("I am the state.") He was the epitome of the absolute monarch. The continuing concentration of power in the monarchy set the stage for a violent reaction led by those who adopted the concept of popular sovereignty based on reason and the natural rights of the governed.

The French Revolution of 1789 would see the end, temporarily, of the French monarchy, followed by a period of confusion and fear known as the Terror. This period was soon followed by the rise of the empire of Napoleon and war with the rest of Europe. Historic institutions like the monarchy, nobility, church, and law were destroyed and replaced by new ones. France has undergone a number of revolutions and changes in government since the Revolution of 1789. Today, it is a representative, constitutional democracy, much like the United States, with no monarch.

Does the experience of Britain or France serve as a better model for those countries currently seeking to increase popular sovereignty? The British example was accomplished more slowly and with less bloodshed, but it took hundreds of years before all adult Britons had the right to vote. On the other hand, the instability of a revolution, as in the French model, can lead to chaos and abuse of power. In 1959, for example, many cheered when Fidel Castro overthrew the corrupt dictatorship of Fulgencio Batista in Cuba. However, the destruction of Cuba's old political system created a vacuum that Castro then filled with his own absolute authority, and Cuba is today as far from a democracy as it has ever been.

Political events in Europe significantly influenced the course of political development in Latin America, Asia, and Africa. However, the colonies in those regions would have very different experiences from those of the European states or of the 13 British colonies that became the United States.

\section*{Latin America}

Spain, which controlled large portions of North and South America and the Caribbean into the 1800 s, established a different system of government in its colonies than did other nations. To control the Indian population and force its subjects to labor in mining and agriculture, the Spanish crown instituted a system called the encomienda. Under this system, the monarch granted control of Indians living in a specific area to a settler. The grant did not include ownership of any land, but the settler could demand tribute and work from the Indians he controlled. In return, the settler was supposed to protect the Indians and see that they were instructed in the Catholic faith.

The encomienda system basically failed. Settlers took over Indian lands and worked the people to death in virtual slavery. The \(\sqrt{ }\) checkpoint How did democracy in the UK differ from democracy in France?

\section*{Background}

COALITION FOR REFORM England had a revolution and beheaded a king, but it was in the 1600 s. It led to the English Bill of Rights, which gave Parliament superiority over the king, but gave no rights to the common people. In 1800, fewer than five percent of the British people could vote. The coalition that pressed for reform in Parliament in the 1800s included Enlightenment thinkers who favored a more rational system, middle-class leaders who wanted more representation for the new industrial middle class, and radical leaders supported by workers. Revolts in Europe also emphasized the urgency of reform. Although it took a century to achieve universal suffrage, Britain was one of the few countries in Europe to avoid revolution in the 19th century. Democratic reforms in many countries have been made by similar coalitions of interests.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{discuss the enlightenment}

Display Transparency 22D, Enlightenment Web, which is a completed version of the Bellringer concept web. Use this transparency to discuss Enlightenment ideas. Ask: Who were some major figures of the Enlightenment? (Thomas Hobbes, John Locke, Voltaire, Montesquieu, Adam Smith, David Ricardo) What were some of the main ideas of Enlightenment thinkers? (Locke: the natural rights of all people; Hobbes: the social contract between the ruler and the ruled; Voltaire: an emphasis on reason, freedom of religion, scientific observation, and human progress; Montesquieu: separation of powers and checks and balances; Smith and Ricardo: economic freedom) Why might absolute rulers have viewed Enlightenment ideas as a threat? (Sample response: Enlightenment ideas emphasized reason, which eroded public acceptance of divine right. The ideas of natural rights, social contract, and separation of powers would place limits on a monarch's power and would ultimately make the monarch answerable to the people. Reforming economic policies would remove a source of wealth for the monarch.) Why was the Enlightenment important to United States history? (These ideas influenced the Framers of the U.S. Constitution and became the foundation of our democracy.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Democracy evolved gradually in the UK, while in France, it came through revolution.

\section*{ENLIGHTENMENT AND POPULAR SOVEREIGNTY}

Write popular sovereignty on the board. Remind students that they learned about this concept earlier in the textbook. Underline popular and explain that it means "of the people," and then underline the term sovereignty and explain that it is the authority to rule. Therefore, popular sovereigntymeans "rule by the consent of the people. " Have students work in pairs to use the Think-Write-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to write a summarizing statement explaining how the Enlightenment relates to the spread of popular sovereignty in Britain and France.
L2 ELL Differentiate Explain that popular has a different meaning in popular sovereignty from the one with which students might be more familiar—"being liked by many people." Have students write a sentence using each meaning. Alternatively, write two sentences on the board and have students explain the meaning used in each. For example: "The candidate won the popular vote, but did not win the electoral vote." "The new candidate is more popular than the current President. " Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the map of Latin American independence.

\section*{Government}

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Latin American Independence}
- Interpreting Maps Most countries in the Western Hemisphere won their independence from Spain or Portugal, which practiced a different form of colonial rule than had Britain in North America. How did Spanish colonial rule continue to influence governments in Latin America after independence?

encomienda system was eventually replaced by haciendas, large estates to which workers were tied, like serfs. These extensive landholdings would emerge as nearly self-sufficient centers of political and economic power throughout much of Latin America

When Spain was conquered by Emperor Napoleon of France in the early 1800 s, Latin America began to move toward independence. Many colonial elites rejected Napoleon's choice for the Spanish throne, his brother Joseph I, and remained loyal to the deposed Ferdinand VII. Other colonials, most notably Simón Bolivar, were inspired by the same Enlightenment ideas that gave rise to the American and French revolutions. They sought to create a new political order in Latin America, based on popular sovereignty.

Independence When Ferdinand VII regained the Spanish crown in 1814, he agreed to grant greater power to parliament and place some restrictions on the Church. His conservative supporters in the colonies felt betrayed. Thus, in Mexico, Agustín de Iturbide engineered that country's independence in 1821 and had himself crowned its emperor. Iturbide soon would be forced to give up his throne, and Mexico, like many of the new states of Latin America, would fall into periods of civil war throughout the nineteenth century. Most of Latin America similarly won independence from Spain (and Brazil from Portugal) in the decades after Napoleon conquered Spain and left the country too weak to control its colonies.

Obstacles to Stability It was difficult for democracy to take root in the region, however. As in Mexico, political stability was rare in most of what was postcolonial Spanish America.
Why were the new states of Latin America less able to maintain popular sovereignty than the colonies that became the United States? A main reason lay in that those 13 colonies were British, and Great Britain had

656 Comparative Political Systems

\section*{Background}

SIMÓN BOLíVAR Born into wealth and educated in Europe, Simón Bolívar personally led the liberation of Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia. Before achieving any of these successes, he wrote a letter in which he anticipated the difficulties Latin America would face after independence. He noted that colonialism, in which Latin Americans held "a position in society no better than that of serfs," had kept them "in a sort of permanent infancy with regard to public affairs." He wondered how people who had never even voted would be able to fill "the eminent roles of legislator, magistrate, minister of the treasury, diplomat, general, and every position of authority, supreme or subordinate, that comprises the hierarchy of a fully organized state. " Near the end of his life, discouraged by the failure of democracy in Latin America, Bolivar wrote, "We have achieved our independence at the expense of everything else."
a tradition of limited representative government, an expanding sense of popular sovereignty, and a population greatly influenced by the Enlightenment. The British colonists, therefore, had existing ideas that formed a basis for wanting and for justifying independence. Although the British monarch was very powerful, there was a belief among British subjects that they had certain rights in the face of tyranny. Also, there were no all-powerful elites in the British colonies, as there were in Latin America, to struggle against independence.

In Latin America, social, political, and cultural traditions originated in Spain and Portugal—nations that at that time had not embraced ideas of popular sovereignty. Those nations were ruled by absolute monarchs, with little popular representation. The Catholic Church also had enormous influence and supported the status quo. There was little in the history or traditions of these colonials, for the most part, to help them foster or maintain democratic institutions.

Hacienda landowners were a powerful barrier to popular sovereignty. They did not want to give up their authority, property, and privileges, and they fought among themselves for control of the central government. Once in government, they faced new rebellions because they did little to solve the economic and social problems. This cycle of political disorder was common throughout Latin America into the twentieth century.

Latin America's political troubles slowed its economic development, while relative political stability allowed countries such as Britain, France, Germany, and the United States to embrace the Industrial Revolution and the economic growth that followed.

The Mexican Revolution Throughout the 1800 s, Mexico's leaders grappled, often violently, with a number of questions. Should there be a centralized or, instead, a federal government? How much power should a single political leader have? How could Mexico remain independent from its powerful neighbor to the north and other major world powers?

President Porfirio Díaz brought the Republic of Mexico its first long period of stability and economic growth, from 1876 to 1910. His economic plan was based on using cheap labor to work the mineral wealth and large farms of Mexico, and inviting large foreign firms to invest in the exploitation of natural resources. These policies benefited few Mexicans. In time, people revolted against Díaz’s harsh rule, beginning a long period of civil war.

In 1917, the revolutionaries won and wrote a new constitution in which the government played a more active role in promoting the quality of Mexican social, economic, and cultural life. Though revolutionaries Emilio Zapata and Pancho Villa were assassinated, the new government absorbed their call for extensive reform in a state-supported political party. The National Revolutionary Party was formed in 1929, but later changed its name to the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI). The PRI controlled the government and politics of Mexico until 2000.

Latin America in the Modern Era While Mexico remained stable under the control of the PRI, the period of the 1960 s to 1980 s proved to be violent elsewhere in Latin America. Throughout the nineteenth century and the first half of the twentieth century, most countries experienced cycles of dictatorship and military control, with wealth and land concentrated in the hands of a few. Democracy sprouted in the region during the 1950 s, but continued economic decline and growing inequality fueled demands for real reforms. Many were inspired by the Cuban Revolution in 1959, which, using communist ideology, promised to attend to the basic needs of the people. They often resorted to guerrilla warfare in an attempt to topple their governments. Guerrilla warfare is fighting carried out by small groups in hit-and-run raids.

The threat that communist guerrillas and others posed in the 1960s and 1970s led the national armed forces to take more active roles in several countries. Military leaders believed that Latin America's continued economic problems stemmed from the endless debate and corruption of politicians. In its view, the political class had to be curbed and the armed forces had to seize power to strengthen the economy and restore political \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How did Spanish colonialism shape government in Latin America?
status quo n. condition that currently exists grapple \(v\). struggle, wrestle with

COMPARE PATHS TO POPULAR SOVEREIGNTY
Discuss the different paths nations took toward popular sovereignty. Ask: How did Britain advance toward popular sovereignty? (through a gradual transfer of power from the monarchy to the people)
How did France make this transition? (violently, through revolution) Why did these nations follow different paths? (The British monarchy compromised with the nobles through the Magna Carta, Petition of Right, and Bill of Rights. Parliament took further power from the monarchy through the power of the purse and passed laws to expand suffrage. In contrast, the French monarchy expanded and centralized its authority. This concentration of power set the stage for a violent reaction from supporters of the Enlightenment ideas of popular sovereignty and natural rights.) How did Latin America's colonial history influence its path to popular sovereignty? (These colonists came from Spain and Portugal-countries ruled by absolute monarchs who did not embrace popular sovereignty. Therefore, these colonists had no history or tradition to support a move toward democracy. Also, the encomienda and hacienda systems created an elite ruling class that formed a powerful barrier to popular sovereignty.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Spanish colonial policy left new countries with few common institutions, leading to unstable governments and a cycle of violence.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Distribute the Chapter 22 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 32) and the Rubric for Assessing a Political Cartoon (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 101). Tell students that in this activity, they will create a political cartoon about fascism or communism and its relationship to popular sovereignty. Students may work individually or with a partner.
Before students begin, brainstorm some ideas about the relationship between these two ideologies and popular sovereignty. Ask students to consider how fascist or Communist governments have made it appear that they ruled by the will of the people. Encourage students to suggest, or give them time to research, slogans or episodes from history demonstrating that fascist or Communist dictators acknowledged the idea of popular sovereignty. When cartoons are complete, have students explain them to the class. Have the class vote on the best one and explain the reasons for their choices.

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Political Cartoons Possible response:
The European powers wanted Africa for its resources. The cake represents the resources that the Europeans intended to divide up among themselves and consume.
peace. Only then would Latin America prosper. Democracy could come later.

Despite these struggles, the idea of popular sovereignty-government in the name of the people-remained important. Every military leader who intervened in a crisis claimed to be working toward democracy. Nonetheless, military rule soon led to tyranny. Innocent civilians were caught up in heavy-handed efforts to defeat the guerrilla groups.

The events that unfolded in Latin America over this period received little official criticism from abroad. During the Cold War, the United States was concerned chiefly with the spread of the Soviet Union's communist influence in the Americas. The end of the Cold War brought new opportunities for democracy in Latin America.

\section*{Asia and Africa}

Unlike Latin America, where most countries had won independence by 1830 , some of Asia and most of Africa remained under colonial control through the mid-twentieth century. In theory, by this time, the ruling nations of Europe were preparing colonies in these regions for democracy. In practice, they governed with little respect for native cultures and did not provide the structures the colonies would need to thrive after independence.

D Interpreting Political Cartoons The borders of many modern African nations still follow the lines drawn by European colonizing powers at the Conference of Berlin in 1884-1885. Why is Africa (Afrique in French) represented by a cake in this cartoon?

The main goal of colonialism was always the control of distant lands to extract resources that would enrich the parent country. At the Conference of Berlin (1884-1885), major European powers carved nearly the entire continent of Africa into colonial holdings, with artificial boundaries that often divided tribal lands or forced diverse groups into a single colony. Not infrequently, a colonial power would favor one segment of the population over another to advance its own interests. These "divide and rule" techniques would leave lasting legacies in many places. In Rwanda, efforts by the Belgians to pit Hutus against Tutsis created tensions that exploded in the mass killings of the 1990s, more than 30 years after independence.

Economically, each colony was directed to export a few specific resources to Europe. After independence, countries often found that reliance on one or a few cash crops or raw materials could drive their economies through cycles of prosperity and depression from year to year. Thus, a fall in the world price for coffee or oil could bring tremendous hardship to an entire country.

Another major problem facing the former colonies in Africa and Asia was that most won their independence in the 1950s and 1960s, at the height of the Cold War. Many countries, such as the former French colony Vietnam, were drawn into the Cold War when the Soviet Union and United States provided arms and money to different sides fighting for control of the newly independent countries.

Under these conditions, it is not surprising that democracy failed to take hold in many newly independent nations. Countries that combined many ethnic groups had few common traditions to build upon. Conflict and mistrust made it difficult to adopt a legal system on which everyone could agree. The only way for a government to gain legitimacy was to improve the lives of the people and bring peace quickly. Unfortunately, this left

\section*{Debate}

After students have studied various ways in which nations have tried to achieve popular sovereignty, use the following quotation to start a debate.
"Those who make peaceful revolution impossible will make violent revolution inevitable." —President John F. Kennedy Ask: Do you agree or disagree with President Kennedy? As an alternative to an oral debate, you could ask students to write their response in their journals.
governments vulnerable to economic crises and appealing figures who easily became dictators. Because most former colonies had underdeveloped economies, there was no large middle class to balance the interests of the vast numbers of poor and of the few elite. The military often stood as the only recognizable national institution, so it could intervene in a crisis with much popular support. However, in almost every case, the military then refused to give up power after the crisis and repressed its critics.

\section*{Fascism and Communism}

The experience of dictatorship has been common throughout the world. Two of the political philosophies that created the most powerful and destructive dictatorships, particularly in Europe and Asia, are fascism and Communism. Fascism describes a centralized, authoritarian government with policies that glorify the state over the individual. Communism is principally an economic theory, and you will read more about the economics of Communist states in the next chapter. In the context of government, communism describes a state based on the idea of complete government control of the economy to serve the welfare of workers, without regard for individual liberty. Although the two political movements are quite distinct, they share some traits.

Both Communist and fascist governments go to great lengths to address the idea of popular sovereignty, though in doing \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What factors affected government in newly independent countries in Asia and Africa?

\section*{Background}

BENITO MUSSOLINI World War I had left Italy's economy in ruins. Backed by many unemployed war veterans, Benito Mussolini organized the Fascist Party. He formed armed groups called Black Shirts, who terrorized political opponents. In 1922, the Black Shirts marched on Rome, bringing Mussolini to power. He set about removing all institutions of democratic government. Mussolini was wildly popular at first. He promised to restore Italy to the glory of Rome. He built roads, restored Roman statues, and made the trains run on time. He had his photo hung in every classroom with the caption "Mussolini is always right." Mussolini held power through intimidation and carefully crafted propaganda. During World War II, Mussolini joined Adolf Hitler in the Pact of Steel. However, as the Allies advanced into Italy, Mussolini was overthrown by members of his own Fascist party and later shot by his fellow Italians.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have each student sign up to research a country in Latin America, Africa, or Asia that experienced dictatorship in the twentieth century. Have students make a chart identifying the forms of illegitimate power that dictators used to gain and hold office. For each illegitimate form of power, have students (a) describe it, (b) identify conditions and interests that supported it, and (c) describe its effects on the people. Then have students who researched each continent meet together and create a three-column chart on all the countries with the information they collected. Have them present their chart to the class and discuss any patterns that emerge.
L2 ELL Differentiate Have students create a circular flowchart of the cycle of disorder, military control, and dictatorship in Latin America in the nineteenth century. Then have them create a second flowchart showing how the cycle changed in the twentieth century with the addition of communism and guerilla warfare.
L4 Differentiate This section poses the question of whether revolutionary political change opens the door to abuse of power. Have students research at least five revolutions on different continents, including the American and French revolutions. Have them use the evidence from those revolutions to write an essay answering the question. Essays should suggest the best ways to avoid abuse of power in the transition to democracy.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the "Fascism and Communism" diagram.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Colonialism introduced and worsened ethnic conflicts within states, oriented national economies to serve the colonizing power's market, and left countries unprepared for self-government. Cold War conflicts created additional problems.
Fascism and Communism Possible response: This tactic rallied the people to support the government in fighting the common enemy while diverting attention away from the nation's problems and government abuses.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

43Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' work using the Rubric for Assessing a Political Cartoon (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 101). Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions. Section Quiz A (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 34)

L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 35)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The concept of \\ popular sovereignty \\
(Questions 1, 6)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Work with students to create a continuum \\ that shows the development of popular \\ sovereignty from a dictatorship to a modern \\ democracy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Enlightenment ideas \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Tell students to review their concept webs \\ from the lesson and review the text to add \\ any additional details.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Causes of instability \\ in post-colonial Latin \\ American nations \\
(Questions 3, 4, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
With students, create a cause-and-effect chart \\ that lists causes and effects of instability in \\ post-colonial Latin American nations, such \\ as Mexico.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Checkpoint How are fascism and communism different and alike?
so they distort that concept significantly. As radical movements, they raise some concerns also found in the French Revolution, most notably: Does revolution open the door to the abuse of power?

Fascist Governments Historic examples of fascism include Adolf Hitler's Germany, (1933-1945), Benito Mussolini's Italy (1922-1943), and Francisco Franco's Spain (1936-1975). These regimes embraced a right-wing, militaristic, ultranationalist ideology that, especially in Germany, included intense racist elements. Typically, a charismatic leader heads an all-powerful political party that incites violence against all who disagree with the party or with the ruling clique. The leader also heads a state that assumes control over social and economic policy in the supposed interests of the nation. "The people" is narrowly defined to exclude cultures and ethnic groups outside the national majority, most infamously in Nazi Germany. Democratic processes are viewed with suspicion, as they lead to debate and perceived delays that prevent the government from working to help "the people." Needless to say, fascist governments rarely helped the people as much as they promised.

It is not a coincidence that these governments emerged out of the economic depressions of the 1920s and the 1930s. In such difficult times, people often look for scapegoats, and, as in Latin America in later decades, they hope for a strong military hand to restore order and prosperity. Hence, in Nazi Germany, Hitler pointed to the Jews as the source of German woes, and, in Italy, many supported Mussolini because they were pleased by the fact that he "made the trains run on time."

Communist Governments Communiststates promote a left-wing ideology based on the theories of Karl Marx. Marx believed that the workers of the world would overthrow the capitalist freemarket system and replace it with their own rule. Unlike fascist governments, Communist regimes downplay the importance of the nation in lieu of "the people," representing farmers and workers. However, they too promote a powerful single party and a strong military.

Like fascism as it was practiced in Italy and Germany, the tremendous decision-making power given to government "in the name of the people" in a Communist state regularly leads to repression and suspension of civil rights. All sovereignty lies with the government and none with the people. You will read more about communism's economic goals in Chapter 23.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Both are authoritarian systems of government built around an all-powerful state. Fascism is a nationalist, racist ideology, while communism is an economic ideology built on Marx's ideas of the class struggle.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed flowchart to answer this question: How have some nations expanded popular sovereignty?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What major ideas relating to government developed during the Enlightenment?
3. What role do counter-revolutionaries play in a revolution?
4. How does guerrilla warfare often lead to the strengthening of militaristic governments?
5. Express Problems Clearly Why did Mexico face difficulties in creating a successful democracy following independence in 1821?
6. Draw Inferences Why do fascist and Communist governments claim to govern by the consent of their people?

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Research for Examples and Details When writing a compare-and-contrast essay, you should include details that support theold mparisons and contrasts you discuss. Use your textbrasts discuss. Use your textbook, the library, and reliable Internet sources to add details and examples to the notes you made in your Venn diagram in Section 1. Review the notes to delete details that are unimportant or do not relate to both systems.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Some nations, such as Britain, underwent gradual changes that transferred power from monarchs to the people with minimal bloodshed or destruction of institutions. Other nations, such as France and former colonies in Latin America, experienced violent change that did away with the monarchy and most traditional institutions. They experienced civil wars and political and economic instability on their path toward popular sovereignty.
2. that all human beings have natural rights, including the rights to life, liberty, and property; that the people and their ruler are parties to a social contract that defines the rights and powers of each; the importance of a separation of powers in government; that monarchs governed only because the people granted them that power
3. oppose the revolutionaries
4. The military used the chaos and threat of guerilla warfare to justify repression and violent military campaigns, strengthening their power.
5. Mexico's social, political, and cultural traditions originated in Spain, a nation that had not embraced ideas of popular sovereignty. The colonists had little history or tradition to help them create a successful democracy. Also, Mexico had a powerful elite-the hacienda landowners-who worked against popular sovereignty. The elite fought among themselves to control government and did little to solve social and economic problems, resulting in cycles of political disorder.
6. to help them claim legitimacy

Quick write Students should include details about the two selected systems of government.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Transitions to Democracy

\section*{Guiding Question}

How successfully have some nations achieved democratic government? Use a table similar to the one below to record information about modern transitions to democracy.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Russia } & Iraq & Yugoslavia \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- 1985-soft-liner \\
Gorbachev becomes \\ general secretary
\end{tabular} & \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\
\(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) & \(\bullet\) \\ \(\bullet\) & & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- hard-liners • genocide - soft-liners - failed states
- democratization
- democratic consolidation

\section*{Objectives}
1. Understand how regimes can change from dictatorship to democracy.
2. Describe the fall of the Soviet Union
3. Explain the factors necessary for democratic consolidation to take place.
4. Analyze why some countries experience setbacks or failed transitions to democracy.

Image Above: Germans celebrate the fall of the Berlin Wall in November 1989.

When the political scientist Samuel Huntington studied the rise of democracy through history, he noticed an interesting pattern: Democratization tends to happen in waves across the world. The good news from Huntington's study is that the number of democracies rises gradually over time. However, this news is tempered by his other major conclusion-that not all those countries swept up by a democratic wave achieve a stable democracy. Some do fall back into authoritarianism.

\section*{Openings for Democracy}

Democracy takes root when competing groups cede the power to control a society and agree to compromise and cooperate to make government work. In the modern era, new democracies have often been born out of toppled dictatorships.

Dictatorships often find themselves on the defensive. The principle of popular sovereignty forces dictators to explain why they put limits on basic freedoms. Some dictators argue that the state must be strong to create a better society in the long run. Others point to foreign enemies or domestic unrest to justify their repression, and some blame economic underdevelopment.

Both internal and external pressures can create splits and discord within a dictatorial regime. Hard-liners, who fight to maintain the status quo, may do battle with soft-liners, who want to reform governmental policies or procedures but keep the current government in place.

Interestingly, soft-liners do not always prefer democratic government. Many support reforms meant to strengthen their hold on power. Nevertheless, the splits they provoke can create opportunities for change. Influential individuals can then lead social movements to bring about real reform.

Individuals from all walks of life influence democratization. Lech Walesa, a labor organizer whose struggles led to the peaceful end of communism in Poland, worked in a shipyard. Vaclav Havel, an intellectual, poet, and playwright, led a march to democracy and became president of his country, Czechoslovakia, and, later, the Czech Republic.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Democratization is a change from dictatorship to democracy. - Democratic consolidation occurs when a country firmly establishes a free press, a multi-party system, civilian control of the military, interest groups, economic opportunity, and a professional civil service. - Russia has made the transition to democracy, but is showing signs of a return to centralized power. •Iraq and Haiti have not achieved democratic consolidation. • Sudan, Afghanistan, and Somalia are examples of failed states.
CONCEPTS: democracy, role of government
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • For democracy to succeed, democratic consolidation must follow democratization. - Democracy takes root when competing groups cooperate to make government work. - All democracies are based on popular sovereignty. • Failed states can become a refuge for terrorists.

GUIDING QUESTION
How successfully have some nations achieved democratic government?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Electoral College} \\
\hline Russia & Iraq & Yugoslavia \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- 1985 Gorbachev becomes general secretary \\
- reforms based on perestroika and glasnost \\
- Yeltsin declares Russian Republic sovereign \\
- 1991 coup against Gorbachev fails \\
- Soviet Union breaks into independent republics \\
- 1991 Gorbachev resigns \\
- new Russian constitution proclaims a democratic republic, with individual rights and freedoms \\
- Putin concentrates power and restricts civil liberties
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- 2003 U.S. topples Hussein \\
- 2005 Iraqis elect parliament \\
- Iraqis approve new constitution \\
- success depends on three competing groups working together to build democratic institutions
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Communist rule weakens \\
- Regional leaders inflame ethnic differences for personal gain \\
- Provinces declare independence and fight with each other for land \\
- Bosnian genocide \\
- NATO intervenes to end fighting \\
- Yugoslavia ceases to exist
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- discuss the challenges to democratic transitions.
- complete a chart to list the factors contributing to greater democracy and to failed democracy.
- analyze how Haiti and Iraq could succeed or fail in their transitions to democracy.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

This section's Core Worksheet asks students to list factors affecting democratic transitions in Haiti and Iraq, and to predict whether those transitions will be successful. To assist students, you can refer them to the Skills Handbook, p. S19, to learn more about drawing inferences and conclusions.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 36) before class.

Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 37)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: High school graduation is a major transition. What changes will you need to make and what new responsibilities will you have to accept to make that transition successful? How can having more freedom be a challenge? Respond in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS DEMOCRATIC TRANSITIONS}

Explain that this lesson is about transition from one type of government to another-to more democratic government-and the challenges nations face when they attempt this change. Clarify that a transition is a major change. Discuss students' answers to the Bellringer. Especially focus on how more freedom can be challenging. Ask: How can a transition from dictatorship or colonial rule to democracy be difficult, even though it is a positive development? (More freedom means more responsibility. Instead of being told what to do, citizens in a democracy must participate in the government, take responsibility for voting and overseeing the acts of their government, and think for themselves. ) Draw a chart like the one below on the board, and have students answer these questions: What factors lead to more democracy? What factors lead to the failure of democracy?
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Transition to Democracy } \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Factors Leading to \\
More Democracy
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} push for popular sovereignty, hardliner-softliner \\ clashes, strong leaders, free press, multiple \\ parties, civilian control over the militiary, \\ interest troups, \\ and oconomic opporitunities, fair \\ service, commomic system, professional trust among citizens
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Factors Leading to \\ Failure of Democracy
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} civil war, distrust, competition among groups \\ for power, ethnic violence, independent and \\ powerful military, no history of free institutions, \\ weak economy
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Soft-liners work to reform dictatorships from within, while hard-liners try to hold power against change.
Caption Putin was able to revive Russia's flagging economy.

Checkpoint What do hard-liners and soft-liners do? flagging
adj lagging, losing energy

Prime Minister Vladimir Putin (right) of Russia reversed many democratic reforms of the 1990s and effectively chose his own replacement as President, Dmitry Medvedev. Why was Putin able to assert strong control over Russia?

Other individuals avoid politics but still influence public opinion. Russian author Alexander Solzhenitsyn wrote The Gulag Archipelago to expose the network of prison camps in his country and spurred the cause of human rights in the Soviet Union.

Then, too, some individuals are able to encourage democracy from beyond the borders of their own country. Pope John Paul II, a native of Poland, inspired the people of his homeland and maintained pressure on Eastern European countries to move them toward democracy.

\section*{Fall of the Soviet Union}

The collapse of the Communist regimes in Eastern Europe contributed to the fall of the world's first Communist superpower, the Soviet Union, which was the successor to the Russian empire. From the Revolution of 1917 until 1990, the Communist Party was the only political party allowed to operate in the Soviet Union.

A new stage of Soviet government began in 1985 when Mikhail Gorbachev became general secretary of the party. As a soft-liner, Gorbachev undertook a reform program that rested on the principles of perestroika and glasnost. Perestroika called for a wide-ranging restructuring of political and economic life. Glasnost was the policy of openness, under which the government increased its tolerance of dissent and of freedom of expression.

Transition to Democracy Changes occurred rapidly after Boris Yeltsin was elected president of Russia in 1991. Russia was then still a republic within the Soviet Union. Although it was not independent, Yeltsin used his position to confront Gorbachev, resigning from the Communist Party and declaring the laws of the Russian Republic sovereign over Russia's population and its territory.

In August 1991, Gorbachev and his wife were vacationing when a group of hardline Communist Party leaders placed him under house arrest. They wanted a return to the policies of the old Soviet government.

When the Russian public heard of this attempted coup, thousands of protesters took to the streets of Moscow, led by Yeltsin. After several tense days, the conspirators surrendered. The coup had failed. Extraordinary events followed. The three Baltic Soviet republics of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania were the first to depart from the Soviet Union. Soon, the remaining 12 left the Union as well.

As the elected leader of the dominant Soviet republic of Russia, Boris Yeltsin's power overshadowed that of Gorbachev. Recognizing reality, Gorbachev resigned on December 25, 1991. By the end of the year, the Soviet Union had ceased to exist.

Independent Russia A new constitution was approved in a national referendum in late 1993. It proclaims the Russian Federation to be "a democratic, federal legally based state with a republican form of government." It also set out a new government structure and contains an extensive list of individual rights and freedoms.

Boris Yeltsin kept his presidential role under the new constitution, and he was reelected in 1996. Soon thereafter, the economy began to spiral downward. Yeltsin suffered serious health problems and was accused of corruption in his inner circle.

In a surprise move, Yeltsin resigned at the end of December 1999, yielding the presidency to his prime minister, Vladimir Putin. Putin won election on his own in 2000 and again in 2004. Though Putin's reputation as a political strongman allowed him to revive the flagging economy, that same reputation drew criticism as he increasingly concentrated

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 6, Chapter 22, Section 3:

L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 36)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 37)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 38)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 39)
L3 Quiz A (p. 40)
L2 Quiz B (p. 41)

power in the presidency and restricted civil liberties. In 2007, Putin's United Russia Party took control of the legislature in a questionable election. Putin announced he would serve as prime minister and engineered the election of an ally, Dmitry Medvedev, to the presidency, leading some observers to wonder if dictatorship had not returned to Russia

\section*{Democratic Consolidation}

So far, you have read about the process of democratization, studying the example of the Soviet Union. Democratization refers to the change from dictatorship to democracy and is marked by the holding of free and fair elections. What must happen, once change occurs, to ensure that democracy takes root?

Essentials of Democracy As opposed to democratization, democratic consolidation is a much longer process that takes place as a country firmly establishes all those factors considered necessary for a democracy to survive. These factors include a free press, a true multiparty system, civilian control over the military, a vibrant collection of interest groups, an economic system that offers clear opportunities for advancement, and a professional civil service. Some of these elements may not be present in the early stages of transition. Many take time to become firmly established.

Most of all, democratic consolidation occurs when a society establishes a sense of common trust among its citizens. Because many transitions take place following a civil war or a dictatorship that pitted one group against another, mutual trust can be difficult to establish. However, when it is achieved, democracy stands on a solid footing.

Haiti The political history of the Caribbean nation of Haiti has been more troubled. It is the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere, and the process of democratization has been extremely difficult.

The Duvalier family, which ruled the country brutally for 29 years, fled in 1986. After four years of provisional governments, a presidential election was held, and JeanBertrand Aristide took office. Members of the armed forces still loyal to the Duvaliers promptly overthrew Aristice. The international community cut off aid to Haiti and called for Aristide's return, and the military rulers finally withdrew in 1994. In 1996, Aristide handed over power to his political ally, René Préval. However, Aristide and Préval each led large blocs of supporters in Haiti's parliament and refused to work together. Both sides were accused of corruption.

When Aristide recaptured the presidency in 2000 in a rigged election, the United States and other countries threatened new sanctions if democratic procedures were not followed. Instead, Aristide, once a champion of democracy, became more of a dictator. In 2004, an

\section*{Democratic Consolidation}

\section*{What Makes Democracy Succeed?}

Several factors must be in place in order for a democratic system of government to take root and flourish. Which of these factors do you think is most important? Explain.

\section*{Factors}

A free press

Multiple parties

Civilian control of the military Economic opportunity for all

Professional civil service

Why they matter
The media reports on the government's actions and communicates ideas for change.
Competition forces the government to listen to voters.
Clear control prevents the military from taking power.
Education and hard work reward people for working within the law.

Bureaucrats are less likely to be corrupt and keep government functioning when changes in leadership occur.
Everyone shares a wish for the government to thrive and settle disputes peacefully.

\section*{Background}

Democratization Political scientist Samuel Huntington identified three waves of democratization: 1828 to 1926, 1943 to 1962, and the 1970s and 1980s. Huntington saw five reasons for the latest wave: the lack of legitimacy of dictatorships facing military defeat and economic woes, better standards of living that led to better education and rising expectations, pressure from religious institutions, pressure from the world community, and the snowballing effect of democratization in other countries. Conditions he viewed as favoring democratic consolidation include previous efforts to democratize, strong economic development, support from the international community, internal sources of the drive to democratize, and a peaceful transition.

L2ELL Differentiate Clarify the difference between democratization and democratic consolidation. Tell students that democratization is the initial move toward democracy. For example, a nation might hold free and fair elections for the first time. Democratic consolidation is a later and longer process of firmly establishing the democratic factors, so that democracy will last. For example, it takes time to build mutual trust among rival groups following a civil war.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 22 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. X). Students will complete the chart on the worksheet to list factors that could lead to the success of democratization and factors that could lead to failure in Haiti and Iraq.
L3 L4 Differentiation Students can research the current situation in these countries relating to factors necessary to democratic consolidation.

\section*{WRAP UP}

As a class, review students' work on the Core Worksheet. Which factors might help Haiti and Iraq be successful in their transitions to democracy and which factors could cause them to fail? Ultimately, do students think that Haiti and Iraq will succeed?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Democratic consolidation is the strengthening of democracy within a country.
What Makes Democracy Succeed? Possible response: Common trust is most important, because everyone must believe in democracy and work together to preserve it for democratic consolidation to occur.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3Differentiate Divide students into four groups assigned to Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, and the Soviet Union. Have students in each group research and create a large flowchart showing how the country became Communist, how the Communist government maintained control, and how the Communist government ended. Have them illustrate the flowchart with art or clippings from magazines.
L1 Differentiate Have students research and prepare a short illustrated booklet for younger students on a person who influenced a change from communism to democracy, such as Lech Walesa, Vaclav Havel, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, or Pope John Paul II.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity entitled "Foreign Governments" (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 39), which asks students to select a foreign government and research to find out information about it.
L4 Differentiate Divide students into an even number of small teams. Assign equal numbers of teams to debate for and against the idea that one country can export democracy to another. Have pairs of teams take turns debating. Then poll the class on which were the best arguments and if the debate changed anyone's mind. You may wish to have students use the Debate strategy (p. T25).
Tell students to go to the Online Update for current information about Iraq.

\section*{Answers}

Interpreting Maps Possible response: Diverse languages and religious backgrounds make it difficult to bring the people together into a tolerant and peaceful whole. Different factions may compete for dominance rather than work together to build democratic institutions acceptable to all.
- Interpreting Maps A large majority of Iraq's inhabitants are Muslim, but they adhere to different forms of Islam and belong to many different ethnic groups speak ing different languages. How can religious and linguistic divides pose challenges for a new democracy? for a new democracy?

armed revolt ousted Aristide. Haiti is now ruled by a provisional government and a UN peacekeeping force. René Préval was returned to the presidency in a disputed election in 2006. Poverty and lawlessness still plague Haiti, and there are doubts that a functioning democracy can be established there any time soon.

Iraq In 2003, the United States led an invasion that toppled Saddam Hussein's brutal dictatorship in Iraq. The United States, established under the democratic principles of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, is committed to building a democracy amid the strife and sectarian violence there.

The few instances in which one or more countries have attempted to establish democratic institutions in another country have been filled with difficulties. There have been spectacular successes, notably in Japan and Germany in the years following World War II, but what does the future hold for Iraq?

As the country has no history of free institutions upon which a democracy might be built, the effort to bring democracy to Iraq faces enormous challenges. The people of Iraq comprise many ethnic groups and religious traditions, and there are few significant unifying traditions to bring the nation's diverse Kurdish, Shia Arab, and Sunni Arab populations together as a tolerant and peaceful whole.

However, the people of Iraq have a common interest in reducing violence and restoring order in the country. Iraq has large oil reserves that could help the country to recover economically if peace returns. In 2005, Iraqis elected an interim parliament that drafted a new constitution. Iraqi voters approved the constitution, creating the basis for a new democratic government. The success of Iraqi democracy depends on the ability of the three competing groups to work together and build democratic institutions acceptable to all.

\section*{Setbacks and Failed Transitions}

While some countries have successfully established democratic governments, and many others have begun the democratization process, a third group of countries has failed.

The costs of failure are great. Many countries today find that they must confront new problems, previously hidden by dictatorial rule, when they attempt to move toward democracy. Countries that fail to transition to democracy can pose a threat to other

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 22F, Democracy in Bloom, when you discuss the struggle toward democracy in Iraq. Ask: What does the flower represent? (democracy) Where is it growing? (in Iraq) What is the significance of the objects surrounding the pot? (Efforts are being made to cultivate democracy in Iraq.) What is the significance of the plant's tattered leaves? (Growing democracy in Iraq has not been easy. Opposing forces have harmed it.) Does the cartoonist hold an optimistic or pessimistic view toward democracy in Iraq? How do you know? (Sample response: optimistic. The cartoonist shows the flower of democracy blooming, despite its tattered leaves.) countries if they open safe havens for international terrorist groups.

Ethnic Violence The country of Yugoslavia no longer exists. Founded in 1918, Yugoslavia included people from three major religions and many ethnic groups.

When Communist rule began to weaken in the late 1980s, regional political leaders inflamed ethnic differences for their own personal gain. By playing up old battles, they hoped to position themselves as the leaders who could correct past wrongs. The country split apart. Several provinces of Yugoslavia declared independence and went to war with one another for control of land that multiple ethnic groups believed was theirs by right or by history. The province of BosniaHerzegovina, peopled with a mix of Muslims, Serbians, and Croatians, was targeted by forces supported by neighboring Serbia and Croatia. This province saw the most intense fighting, and Bosnians suffered genocide, or the attempted extermination of a cultural, racial, or national group. About 200,000 civilians were killed, and many more were forced out of the country as refugees. The conflict ended only when NATO intervened to stop the fighting. Instead ofleading to democracy, the end of dictatorship in Yugoslavia triggered the bloody breakup of the country into at least five independent states.

Failed States Other countries remain similarly troubled. Their inability to find stability has even raised security concerns for other states. Countries such as Sudan and Afghanistan include large regions that remain outside the control of their own governments. Somalia, in East Africa, does not have a functioning government, and most of the country is ruled by warlords. These countries are known as failed states. In most of these areas, security is nonexistent, the economy has collapsed, the healthcare and school systems are in shambles, and corruption flourishes.

International terrorist groups have found refuge in these lawless lands, and have used them as bases to plan and train for acts of violence. The Soviet Union occupied Afghanistan in the 1980s. Withdrawing in 1989, it left the country too devastated by war to recover. Afghans who had fought against the Soviets now turned their arms against each other for control of provinces, and Afghanistan became a failed state. Other nations did not get involved in Afghanistan, and few believed anything could be done to end the fighting between warlords. The anarchy provided a haven for Osama bin Laden and his al Qaeda terrorist network to plan their attacks on the United States on September 11, 2001. In response to those attacks, U.S. troops moved into Afghanistan and helped establish a democratic government. However, large portions of the country remain outside central authority despite the election of a government with a president.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What can happen when democracies fail?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{L3 C \\ Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students} work.

L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 40)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 41)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Democratization \\
(Questions \(1,2,3\), \\
\(4,5)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students work with a partner to outine \\ the section; tell them to include definitions of \\ key terms in their outines. Then review the \end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Failed democracies can lead to dictatorships or failed states and an increase in violence.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Although it is a very difficult process, a few nations, such as Poland and the Czech Republic, have been very successful at achieving democratic government. For other nations, such as Iraq, where the struggle continues, and in failed states, such as Afghanistan, the effort has been very challenging or has failed entirely.
2. Soft-liners support reforms, but not always democratic reforms. They can, however, create openings for the opposition to push for democracy.
3. Unless democratic consolidation occurs, democracy will not endure.
4. Possible answer: After the fall of the U.S.S.R., Russians quickly wrote a constitution for the new nation and the first President, Boris Yeltsin, stayed true to its principles. Also, there is a stronger tradition of popular sovereigntyat least the idea if not the practice-in Russia. In Iraq, which has no such history or tradition, with its infrastructure destroyed and fighting in the streets, much work remains in securing just basic necessities, which must occur before true democracy can be established.
5. Answers may include offering economic or technical support, supplying peacekeeping forces, or using economic or political pressures to discourage dictatorship.
QUICKwRITE Students' thesis statements should express their essays' main concept in one clear sentence.

What form does democratic government take in the UK and in Mexico?

\section*{Case Studies in Democracy}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What form does democratic government take in the UK and in Mexico? Use a Venn diagram to record information about the modern governments of the UK and Mexico.

Political Dictionary
- coalition • shadow cabinet
- ministers - devolution

\section*{Objectives}
1. Examine elements of the United Kingdom's parliamentary democ racy.
2. Describe regional and local government in the United Kingdom.
3. Analyze the federal government of Mexico.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE GRAPHIC DATA}

Before displaying Transparency 22G, Two Modern Democracies, and discussing the election process in the United Kingdom, you may want to review with students the information in the Skills Handbook, p. S26, on analyzing graphic data.

Amajority of the states in the world today are representative and democratic. Each of them has developed its own set of distinctive institutions, however. The United Kingdom and Mexico present two different approaches to democratic government in today's world.

\section*{The United Kingdom: A Constitutional Monarchy}

Like the United States, the United Kingdom, the UK, is a democracy. Indeed, the roots of American government are buried deep in British political and social history. Yet there are important differences between the two systems of government. Unlike government in the United States, where it is federal and presidential, government in the UK is unitary and parliamentary and rests upon an unwritten constitution.

The British constitution is not entirely unwritten. However, there is no single constitutional document, as there is in the United States. Many historic documents figure in the written portions of the UK's constitution. Especially important are the Magna Carta of 1215 and the Bill of Rights of 1689. Certain acts of Parliament also form a basic part of the British constitution.

Additionally, centuries of court decisions have created a body of law covering nearly every aspect of human conduct. Such decisions make up the common law. The truly unwritten part of the British constitution consists of the customs and practices of British politics. The written parts are called "the law of the constitution" and the unwritten parts are called "the conventions of the constitution."

In formal terms, all acts of the British government are performed in the name of the monarch. Queen Elizabeth II has been the UK's monarch since 1952. However, the prime minister and other high officials exercise the real power to govern. The monarch appoints the prime minister (traditionally the leader of the majority party in the House of Commons), but her choice is subject to the approval of that house. She has no power to dismiss the prime minister or any other government official. She has no veto power over acts of Parliament. In short, today's monarch reigns but does not rule.

Image Above: President Felipe Calderón of Mexico

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - The UK has a unitary, constitutional monarchy, with a bicameral Parliament, led by the prime minister - Mexico has a federal government, with three independent branches, a bicameral legislature, and a powerful President. - Mexico became a true democracy when free and fair elections were held in 2000.
CONCEPTS: forms of government, democracy
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Democracies take different forms. - The UK and Mexico are both democracies, despite many differences in their governments. - The UK has devolved, or delegated, authority from the central government to regional governments in Scotland, Northern Ireland, and Wales.

\section*{British Government}

Parliament, the representative body, is the central institution of British government. It is bicameral, comprised of the House of Lords (the upper house) and the House of Commons (the lower house). Of the two, the House of Commons is by far the more powerful body.

House of Lords Until recently, a majority of the members of the House of Lords were hereditary peers-persons who inherited noble titles. However, the upper house underwent a dramatic change under the 1999 House of Lords Act. This act removed most of the hereditary peers and filled their seats with peers appointed by a special commission.

The House of Lords holds limited legislative power. If they reject a bill passed by the House of Commons, the Commons only has to approve the bill a second time to make it a law. Some argue that this need to reapprove a bill rejected by the Lords gives the Commons time to weigh political fallout from controversial actions.

In addition to its legislative role, the House of Lords performs an important judicial function. Like the Supreme Court in the United States, the Law Lords serve as the final court of appeal in both civil and criminal cases in the UK's court system.

The House of Commons The House of Commons has 646 members, known as MPs-members of Parliament. They are elected from single-member districts, or constituencies, of roughly equal population.

The majority party largely controls the work of the Commons. It chooses the prime minister and the cabinet, who together form "the government," and introduces most measures. Its several committees are generalists; that is, a bill can be referred to any of its committees. All bills sent to committee must be reported to the floor, where a party-line vote generally follows the will of the government.

The Prime Minister The prime minister, although formally appointed by the monarch, is in fact responsible to the House of Commons. When a single party holds a majority in the House of Commons, as is usually the case, that party's leader becomes prime minister. If no single party holds a majority, a coalition must be formed. A coalition is a temporary alliance of parties for the purpose of forming a government. Two or more parties must agree on a common choice for prime minister and on a joint slate of cabinet members.

There are no term limits on the post of prime minister. William Gladstone held the position four times from 1868 to 1894 . Once a member of the Conservative Party, he broke ranks to create the Liberal Party and presided over voting reforms that expanded the electorate. Winston Churchill may be the most famous prime minister, remembered for his inspiring leadership during World War II. Margaret Thatcher, Britain's first female prime minister, led the government from 1979 to 1990 and oversaw the denationalization of many of Britain's coal, steel, and other basic industries. Tony Blair served as prime minister from 1997 until 2007, when he stepped down and was replaced by the current prime minister, Gordon Brown.

The Cabinet The prime minister selects the members of the cabinet, or ministers, from the House of Commons, although a few may sit in the House of Lords. Collectively, the prime minister and the cabinet provide

At the annual opening of Parliament, the British monarch reads a Speech from the Throne outlining her government's goals. The speech is written by the prime minister and cabinet. How does the Throne Speech symbolize the roles of the prime minister and the monarch in British government?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 6, Chapter 22, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 42)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 43)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 44)
L3 Quiz A (p. 46)
L2 Quiz B (p. 47)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 48)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 51)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- recognize variations in democracies by comparing features of the governments of the UK and Mexico in a transparency.
- understand the UK's general election processes by examining a flowchart.
- compare and contrast the governments of the UK, Mexico, and the United States by playing a fact game.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 42) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 43)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Have students write a response to these questions:
What are some advantages of a written constitution? What are some disadvantages? Answer in your notebook.

L2 ELL Differentiate Students may make a pro-con list instead of writing out an answer.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The UK has a constitutional monarchy.
Caption In giving the Throne Speech, the monarch is serving as the ceremonial leader. The prime minister, who holds the real power, writes the goals in the speech.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW BELLRINGER ACtIVITY}

The United Kingdom and Mexico are democracies, yet their governments differ a great deal. Ask: How do the constitutions of these two nations differ? (Mexico's constitution is written. The UK's is mostly unwritten. Its government is based on historic documents, acts of Parliament, common law, customs, and traditional practices.) Have students share their answers to the Bellringer activity. Ask: What are some advantages of a written constitution? (can serve as clear statement of the supreme law of the land; can be used as a concise standard for \(\mu \mathrm{dg}\) ing the validity of government's laws and actions; lengthy amendment process protects against ill-considered changes) What are some disadvantages? (less flexible because amendment process is more lengthy and difficult than change through court precedent or legislative acts; can contain provisions that no longer apply to the modern world)

\section*{EXAMINE VARIATIONS IN DEMOCRACIES}

Ask students to offer some main facts about the systems of government in the UK and Mexico. Then display Transparency 22G, Two Modern Democracies. Explain that a constitutional monarchy has a hereditary ruler whose power is restricted by the constitution and laws of the land. Ask: How is the role of chief of state different from head of government? (Chief of state is a largely ceremonial or figurehead role; the head of government holds the real power.) How do these roles differ between the UK and Mexico? (The UK has a ceremonial monarch and a powerful prime minister. In Mexico, the President serves in both roles. ) Is the government of the UK or Mexico most like the government of the United States? (Mexico) Name some simiIarities. (federalism, written constitution, powerful President, popularly elected President, bicameral legislature, state and federal courts, Supreme Court) Tell students to go to the Online Update for current information about government in the UK.

\section*{Answers}

United Kingdom All acts of British government are performed in the name of the monarch, but the monarch holds no real political power. The monarch formally appoints the prime minister, but the choice is made by the House of Commons, to whom the prime minister is responsible. The monarch has no power to dismiss the prime minister or any other government official, nor any power to veto acts of Parliament.

United Kingdom

political leadership, both in making and carrying out public policy. Individually, cabinet ministers head the various executive departments, such as Defense, the Exchequer (the treasury), or Health.

The opposition parties appoint their own teams of potential cabinet members. Each opposition MP watches, or shadows, one particular member of the cabinet. If an opposition party should succeed in gaining a majority, its so-called shadow cabinet would then be ready to run the government.

The Courts The UK has three separate court systems-one for England and Wales, one in Northern Ireland, and one in Scotland. In England and Wales, most civil cases are tried in county courts. Serious (indictable) criminal cases are tried in the Crown Court and less serious criminal cases in the magistrates' courts.

Judges and juries try the more serious criminal cases in the Crown Court, while judges or magistrates alone hear the majority of civil disputes and less serious criminal cases. As was mentioned, the House of Lords serves as the final court of appeal in a hierarchy of appellate courts. The court system in Northern Ireland is similar to the system in England and Wales, but the Scottish system is simpler, with fewer hierarchical layers.

Courts in the UK decide cases based primarily on parliamentary legislation and common law or on the standards established by judicial precedent. They are not bound to uphold a constitution or bill of rights that stands higher than parliamentary law. Unlike the United States, the courts and judges in the UK, including the Law Lords, do not possess the power of judicial review. They can never overrule Parliament.

\section*{666 mag09se Ch22 s4indd 668}

\section*{Background}

CONVENTIONS OF THE CONSTITUTION Unwritten rules, or conventions, govern many of the practices of British politics. For example, no written account says that Parliament must meet in yearly sessions. It just does. Also, no written rule gives the House of Commons the power to force the government to resign. These central features of British government developed over centuries and are today a matter of custom. With its open-ended constitution, the UK has a flexible, always-evolving set of rules. A majority vote in Parliament can alter any provision of the constitution. This flexibility can be very useful. Without the delays and safeguards of a system like that in the United States, however, the danger of ill-considered and hasty action that might fundamentally alter the people's rights is ever present.

\section*{The Election Process}

In marked contrast to the practice in the United States, the UK does not have a fixed date for the holding of elections. Instead, the law requires only that a general election-an election in which all the seats in the Commons are at stake-be held at least once every five years. If an MP dies or resigns, a special election, called a by-election, is held in that constituency to choose a replacement.

Calling Elections Customarily, the prime minister calls an election when the political climate favors the majority party. Occasionally, an election is triggered by quite different circumstances-when the government falls because it has lost the confidence, or the support, of the House of Commons. This can occur if the current government is defeated on a critical vote; it loses the confidence of the Commons and falls. The prime minister must then ask the monarch to dissolve Parliament (end its sessions) and call a new general election. The ability to change governments in this way means that a prime minister who becomes either ineffective or unpopular can be removed before his or her actions cause serious damage to the political system. It also means that an effective prime minister may stay on the job until goals are met.

Political Parties Two parties have dominated British politics in recent decades: the Conservative Party (historically known as the Tory Party or the Tories) and the Labour Party. The Conservatives have long drawn support from middle- and upper-class Britons. They tend to favor private economic initiatives over government involvement in the nation's economic life. The Labour Party has regularly found most of its support among working-class voters. Labour tends to favor government involvement in the economic system and a more socially equal society. Historically, the party preached doctrinaire socialism, but it moderated its views under the leadership of Prime Minister Tony Blair. Most recently, the Liberal Democratic Party has emerged as an alternative that blends leftwing and moderate views without the Labour Party's ties to unions.

British parties are more highly organized and centrally directed than the major parties in American politics. High levels of party loyalty and party discipline characterize the British party system. Voters regularly select candidates for the House of Commons on the basis of the candidates' party membership, not their individual qualifications.

\section*{Regional and Local Government}

Recall, the United Kingdom has a unitary government. This means that there is no constitutional division of powers between the national government and regional or local governments, as in the American federal system. All power belongs to the central government. To whatever extent local governments deliver services or do anything else, they can do so only because the central government has created them, given them powers, and financed them.

Regional Government The United Kingdom is composed of four separate nations with different histories, cultures, and traditions. To provide for the distinctive governmental needs of the people of Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland, the United Kingdom has recently undergone a process of devolutionthe delegation of authority from the central government back to regional governments.

\(\Delta\) Scotland's Parliament flies the flags of the UK, Scotland, and the European Union

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 22I, Trouble for the British Labour Party, when you discuss the British election process. Point out that the man in the cartoon represents British Prime Minister Gordon Brown. Ask: Based on your reading of the text, what is a byelection? (a special election to replace a member of Parliament who resigns or dies) What is the woman in the cartoon doing? (reading a greeting card to Gordon Brown) What sentiment does the card express? (joy that Brown might resign and be replaced in a "bye-bye election") What is the message in the woman's comment that "It could have come from anyone"? (This comment suggests that Brown is very unpopular, because many people could have been the source of the card's message.) What is Brown's political party? How do you know? (Labour Party. The newspaper headline suggests that the Labour Party is in trouble.)

\section*{DISCUSS ELECTIONS IN THE UK}

Display Transparency 22H, Election Process in the United Kingdom. Ask: What is a general election in the UK? (an election in which all seats in the House of Commons are at stake) Why do you think the majority party often remains in power for a long time? (There is no fixed date for elections. The prime minister can choose to call a general election at a time when his or her party is popular and therefore likely to win the most seats. ) Under what circumstances does the opposition party become the majority party in the UK? (When the ruling party loses the confidence of the House of Commons, the government is dissolved, and the opposition party usually wins the most seats in the general election that follows. ) How does the election process in the UK differ from that of the U.S.? (Possible response: The U.S. has fixed dates for elections and term limits for the President. The UK does not.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Voters elect members of Parliament who then choose a government from among themselves.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 22 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 44). Tell students that in this activity they will make up question cards and play a fact game. Each question will cover a fact about the government of the UK, Mexico, or the United States. Point out that some facts may describe the government of more than one of these nations. In these cases, the answer should include all nations to which the fact applies.
Depending on the size of your class, divide the class into an even number of teams of four to five students each. Provide 22 index cards to each team. This will give each team two cards to label categories and four or five cards per student to write questions. Have each team follow the steps on the worksheet. After the teams create and arrange their game cards, pair the teams to play the game.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Allow students to write fewer questions.
L4 Differentiate Have students work individually to prepare their cards. Then pair individual students to play the game.

Tell stüdents to go to the Online Update for current information about government in Mexico.

\section*{Answers}

Mexico A single party, the PRI, had dominated power in Mexico for decades, squelching opposition through patronage and repression. Victories by PAN candidates Fox and Calderón mark the emergence of a multi-party system in Mexico.

Although the British Parliament has assigned many responsibilities to the devolved bodies, such as the Scottish Parliament that was reestablished in 1998, it has reserved for itself the exclusive power to legislate on several matters that affect the whole of the United Kingdom. These include defense, foreign policy, and macroeconomic policy. The British Parliament also continues to legislate more broadly for England, which does not have a devolved assembly.

Local Government Local government bodies have been a feature of the British political landscape for much longer than the recently established regional assemblies. Today, there are some 470 local authorities of varying types in the UK. Much as in the United States, local governments in the United Kingdom perform a broad range of functions, from running local schools and libraries to collecting trash and maintaining roads.

\section*{Mexico: A Federal System}

Mexico has a political system similar in form to the United States. In operation, however, it is the product of a unique combination of Mexico's history and the cultural makeup of its people.

Three Branches of Government Mexico's Constitution of 1917 established a national government with three independent branches. The executive branch is headed by the president, the legislature is bicameral, and the judiciary is an independent entity While this sounds much like the American political system, one major distinction is in the greater power of the executive branch in Mexico compared to the other branches of government.

666_mag09se_Ch22_s4.indd 670

\section*{Myths and Misconceptions}
two heads Many Americans may believe that it is old-fashioned to have both a head of state, such as a monarch, with mainly ceremonial duties, and a head of government, such as a prime minister. In fact, most democracies worldwide have both a President and a prime minister. Often the President is elected, while the prime minister is the leader of the majority party in the parliament. In most countries, including Germany, Ireland, India, Israel, and Singapore, the President is mainly a ceremonial position. However, in Israel and Indonesia, the President can dissolve the parliament. In other countries, such as France and Russia, the President has as much or more power than the prime minister.

The President The president of Mexico is popularly elected and serves one six-year term. The one-term limit is intended to prevent a popular leader from becoming a dictator by winning several reelections.

The president selects the members of the council of ministers (the cabinet) and other top civilian officers of government. He also appoints the senior officers of the armed forces and all federal judges.

In addition to the power usually held by a nation's chief executive, Mexico's president has the power to propose amendments to the constitution. Those amendments must be ratified at both the national and state levels, by a two-thirds vote in each house of Congress, and by a majority (at least 16) of the state legislatures. The president also has the power to enact laws through executive decree on certain economic issues.

The Legislature The bicameral national legislature, called the General Congress, is composed of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. There are 64 senators-two from each of the 31 Mexican states and two from the Federal District, which includes Mexico City. Senators are elected to six-year terms. Half are elected at the time of the presidential election and half at a midterm election three years later.

The Chamber's 500 members are elected to three-year terms and cannot be reelected. Of those, 300 are directly elected from districts of more than 300,000 people. The other seats are filled from the ranks of the various political parties, based on their shares of the total vote in the national election. Thus, the Chamber is elected in a mixed system of direct and proportional representation.

The Congress meets from September 1 to December 31 each year. The combination of term limits and a short session gives the General Congress a far less significant role than that played by the Congress in the United States. Moreover, a lack of resources limits the ability of the Mexican Congress to exercise its powers. Its committees are poorly funded and understaffed, which also contributes to the dominant position of the presidency in the governmental system.

The Judicial System Mexico's independent judicial system is very similar to that of the United States. However, one difference of note is that trial is by judge in most criminal cases, rather than by jury. Two systems of courts-state and federal-operate within the Mexican federal system.

The federal judiciary consists of district and circuit courts that function under the Supreme Court. These tribunals hear all cases that arise under federal law, including those that raise constitutional issues. The 31 separate state court systems are composed of trial and appellate courts. They hear civil and criminal cases in a structure headed by a state Supreme Court of Justice.

Regional and Local Governments As you know, Mexico is divided into 31 states and one Federal District. The Federal District includes the capital, Mexico City, and is administered by a governor appointed by the president. Each of the 31 state constitutions provides for a governor, unicameral legislature, and state courts. Each governor is elected to a six-year term. Legislators are elected to three-year terms. The governors appoint judges. The states have the power to legislate on local matters and to levy taxes, but most of their funding comes from the national government.

\section*{National Politics in Mexico}

Mexico has a multiparty system. However, as you have read, it was dominated for decades by the PRI, which won every presidential election from 1929 until 2000. In fact,

In Mexico City, voters protested alleged election fraud after their party's candidate narrowly lost the 2006 presidential election. Why is election fraud a concern in Mexico?

\section*{tribunal \\ \(\frac{\text { tribunal }}{n . \text { court }}\)}
\(\qquad\)

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students write a paragraph explaining whether they think it is best for the legislative branch to have more power, for the executive branch to have more power, or for all three branches to have equal power, and why, using the UK and Mexico as examples.
L2 ELL Differentiate Have students create a political cartoon about the 2006 election in Mexico, using the criteria in the Rubric for Assessing a Political Cartoon (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 101). Have students show and explain their political cartoons to the class. Have students vote on the most creative.
L4 Differentiate Mexico, and the UK as well, have recently made changes that have increased the level of democracy in each nation: the advent of free and fair elections in Mexico and Britain's enactment of the House of Lords Act, the Human Rights Act, and devolution. Have students research and write an essay on the conditions and pressures that led to these changes in each country. Encourage them to draw conclusions about lessons other democracies might learn from these examples.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Fraudulent elections in Mexico had allowed the PRI to retain its control over the nation for decades.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{\(L 3\)}

Collect the game questions and assess students' work.
L3 Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 46)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 47)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Government system \\ of the United King- \\ dom (Questions 1, \\
\(2,5)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Work with students to complete a concept \\ web in which you record what they have \\ learned about the government of the United \\ Kingdom.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Government system \\ of Mexico (Questions \\ \(1,3,6)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students complete a Venn diagram \\ comparing Mexico's government to the U.S. \\
Government.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline NAFTA (Question 4) & \begin{tabular}{l} Have students write a summary of the infor- \\ mation about NAFTA in this section.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\title{
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
}

What are Mexico's main political parties?
because the PRI retained its position through patronage, and opposition movements were often repressed, Mexico was not generally considered to be democratic until 2000 .

The PRI The PRI's dominant position began to erode in the 1980s. The government borrowed heavily during the 1970s, expecting that oil prices would remain high. When oil prices declined sharply worldwide, the country plunged into economic chaos. Debt problems led to severe cutbacks in government programs and undermined the PRI's patronage system. Prices soared and investment capital fled the country.

As a result, the PRI made its worst showing ever in the elections of 1988. The party barely maintained control of the government, when presidential candidate Carlos Salinas de Gortari won. Allegations of fraud were widespread.

President Salinas pursued broad-based economic, social, and electoral reforms. He also backed the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). This agreement, about which you will learn more in the next chapter, removed trade and investment restrictions among the United States, Canada, and Mexico. In the 1994 national elections, the PRI's presidential candidate, Ernesto Zedillo, won 48.8 percent of the total vote, and the PRI retained control of the legislature.

Multiparty Democracy In the 1990s, candidates from the conservative National Action Party (PAN) and leftist Democratic Revolutionary Party (PRD) had won increasing numbers of federal, state, and local offices. Both parties took aim at the nation's highest office in 2000. Public opinion and world attention forced the PRI to guarantee a fraud-free presidential contest. When all the votes had been counted, the PAN candidate, Vicente Fox, had won with 45 percent of the vote.

Fox initially held approval ratings of over 70 percent, but those ratings later dipped below 50 percent. President Fox may have been a victim of unmet, or even unrealistic, expectations. His political rise marked a dramatic event in Mexican politics, but for many Mexicans socioeconomic conditions did not improve under his tenure. As a sign of the growing discontent, the PRI seemed to be experiencing a resurgence. Midterm elections allowed it to shore up its majority in the Senate and to almost gain a majority in the Chamber of Deputies. However, PAN candidate Felipe Calderón narrowly won the presidency in the contentious 2006 election over Andrés Manuel López Obrador of the PRD. The PRI's candidate, Roberto Madrazo, came in third. PAN also gained control of both houses of Congress.

\section*{SECTION 4 ASSESSMENT}

To continue to build a
Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed Venn diagram to answer this question: What form does democratic government take in the United Kingdom and in Mexico?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Under what circumstances would a coalition government be formed in the United Kingdom?
3. In what major ways are the three branches of Mexican government similar to those in the United States?
4. What is the significance to Mexico of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA)?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Making Comparisons What are the major differences between (a) the British Parliament and the U.S. Congress? (b) the British prime minister gress? (b) the British prime mid
6. Drawing Inferences Which type of presidency do you think is preferable the Mexican model, with one six-year term, or the American model, with a four-year term and the possibility of second term? Explain your reasoning.

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Create an Outline To help structure your com pare-and-contrast essay, create an outline in which you identify each area of comparison and contrast in a single phrase. When you are ready to write your essay, you can use the outline as a guide. Alternatively, you may create a flowchart to help you organize and order your ideas

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. United Kingdom: unitary, parliamentary, constitutional monarchy; Mexico: federal republic
2. A coalition government would be formed if no single party held a majority in the House of Commons.
3. Like the United States, Mexico has three independent branches consisting of an executive branch headed by a president, a bicameral legislative branch, and a judicial branch composed of federal and state systems and a Supreme Court.
4. NAFTA removed trade and investment restrictions among the United States, Mexico, and Canada, thus increasing trade across the borders of those countries.
5. (a) Congress holds legislative power; Parliament also holds executive (House of Commons) and judiciary (House of Lords) power, and members of the House of Lords are not elected. (b) The prime minister is not elected but is appointed by the monarch, is head of the majority party of the House of Commons, and has both executive and legislative powers.
6. Possible answer: I think the Mexican model is more effective because it gives the President time to achieve his or her goals. However, if the President is not effective, the people must wait two more years than in the United States to vote him or her out of office.
QUICK WRITE A good assignment will show a series of points, in correct outline format, that compare and contrast two forms of government.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
patricians \(p .647\) plebeians p. 647 feudalism \(p .648\) sovereignty \(p .650\) legitimacy \(p\). 650 divine right of kings p. 650 colonialism p. 651 mercantilism p. 651 encomienda p. 655 guerrilla warfare \(p .657\) fascism \(p\). 659 communism \(p\). 659 hard-liners \(p .661\) soft-liners \(p\). 661 democratization \(p\). 663 democratic consolidation \(\rho\). 663 genocide \(\rho\). 665 failed states p. 665 coalition \(p .667\) ministers \(p .667\) shadow cabinet \(p\). 668

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about different governments, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Padrino, Mercedes. Feudalism and Village Life in the Middle Ages. World Almanac Library, 2006.
L2 Mellor, Ronald and Marni McGee. The Ancient Roman World. Oxford University Press, USA, 2004.
L3 Arnold, James R. The Aftermath of the French Revolution. Twenty-First Century Books, 2008.
L4 Paxton, Robert O. The Anatomy of Fascism. Vintage, 2005.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Rewrite and Color-Code Notes While rewriting notes is time-consuming, it is also an excellent way to review. By rewriting their notes, students can make them neater and better organized. As they rewrite, they may see relationships among ideas that they missed in class, and they can refer to their reading assignments to help fill in gaps in their notes or clarify a troublesome point. Suggest that students rewrite their notes as soon as possible after class, while the lecture is still fresh in their minds. Color-coding can make rewriting more fun and can also help to organize material. Students might consider using different colors for different types of information (i.e., terms or dates), to highlight important information, or to show relationships among ideas.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 6 All-in-One Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 6 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debate, p. 658
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) direct democracy, legislative assembly, majority vote, separate judiciary (b) legislative assembly, top executives, written laws, representative government, elections, the veto, checks on power
2. (a) It developed after the fall of the Roman Empire to provide a governmental system for Western Europe. (b) Power was not held by central, national governments. Feudalism was a loosely organized system of powerful lords who developed relationships of mutual dependence with vassals and serfs. (c) Feudalism filled the need for some kind of government after the fall of the Roman Empire. The feudal system provided economic and social stability, protection for the people, and a rough form of justice.
3. (a) Government became more centralized and nation-based. Monarchies held absolute power and did not need to recognize popular sovereignty, in some nations, to any degree at all. (b) through tradition (such as divine right), through the power of personality (such as strong charisma of the leader), and through binding government to the rule of law

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. Britain: benefits: gradual change, not as violent or destructive of traditional institutions; drawbacks: slow, true democracy did not appear until fairly late. France: benefits: achieved popular sovereignty very rapidly; drawbacks: was extremely violent, destroyed all traditional institutions, did not last long initially.
5. (a) The colonists in Latin America came from Spain and Portugal-countries ruled by absolute dictators who did not embrace popular sovereignty. Therefore, these colonists had no history or tradition to support a move toward democracy. Also, the encomienda and hacienda systems created an elite ruling class that formed a powerful barrier to popular sovereignty. (b) Colonialism left bitter tensions by creating artificial boundaries that broke up tribal lands and forcibly combined diverse groups into a single state. The colonial power often favored one segment of the population over another, creating tensions among groups that would explode later into conflict. The colonial powers directed each colony to export a few raw resources, which

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

Section 1
1. (a) What aspects of ancient Athenian democratic government exist in modern democracies? (b) What aspects of ancient Roman government exist in modern democracies?
2. (a) Why did the feudal system develop? (b) In what way was it a decentralized system of government? (c) How did feudalism meet the needs of its time?
3. (a) How did the rise of the sovereign state change the role of government? (b) How did these governments achieve legitimacy?

\section*{Section 2}
4. What were the benefits and drawbacks of each method used by Britain and France to adopt popular sovereignty?
5. (a) Why were many Latin American countries unable to establish stable democracies after independence? (b) What obstacles to stability were caused by the former colonial system in Africa?
6. (a) What are the goals of fascist governments? (b) Must governments have goals to be successful? If so, what should those goals be?

\section*{Section 3}
7. (a) Describe the difference between democratization and democratic consolidation. (b) How is each one important to the success of a government?
8. Analyzing Cartoons Study the cartoon at right. (a) What form of government does the hammer represent? (b) What is this cartoonist saying about that form of government? (c) From your reading and understanding of history, is this cartoon fair? Explain.

Section 4
9. (a) How is the United Kingdom's government similar to and different from government in the United States? (b) How is the United Kingdom's government similar to and different from that of Mexico?
10. (a) What was the role of the PRI in Mexican political life up through the 1990s? (b) What was the significance of the 2000 election?

\section*{Writing About Government}
11. Use your Quick Write exercises from the section assessments in this chapter to write an essay that compares and contrasts the two topics you selected. Make sure that the information is accurate and that comparisons are reasoned and relevant. End your essay with a summarizing conclusion. See pp. S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity Speak with an immigrant to the United States or someone who has known an immigrant well and can answer as that person might answer. Ask:
(a) Why did you come to the United States? (b) How do you view the government of your native country? What do you think worked well? How well did it meet citizens' needs? How democratic do you think it is? (c) How do you view the government of the United States in comparison to that of your native country?
13. Essential Question Assessment Based on the interview you conducted and what you have learned about democracy and American government, write a guide to the government of this country designed to help immigrants learn about its basic structure and functions in comparison with other countries. Your guide should help you answer the Essential Question: How should you measure different governments?

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ & \text { Question, go to your Essential }\end{aligned}\) Journal Questions Journal.

674 Chapter 22 Assessment
after independence led to weak economies dependent on one or a few cash crops or raw materials.
6. (a) Fascist governments win power with ultranationalist, racist ideology; a charismatic dictator; violent suppression of dissent; totalitarian; policies glorify the state over the individual; unite people against common enemy-foreign powers or minorities; and promises to promote the people's welfare. (b) Possible answer: I think governments must have goals-general, such as maintaining order, civil rights, and justice—and specific, such as passing laws and other activities that protect and serve its citizens.

\section*{SECTION 3}
7. (a) Democratization is the change from dictatorship to democracy, marked by the holding of free and fair elections. Democratic consolidation is the much longer process of firmly establishing the factors necessary for democracy to succeed. (b) Democratization is the first step in shifting from a dictatorship to a democracy, but democratic consolidation must follow to ensure that democracy will last into the future.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Fascism and Communism}

Communist and fascist leaders claimed to meet the needs of the people and rule based on popular sovereignty. However, Communist governments, such as in the Soviet Union and China, and fascist governments, such as in Italy, became dictatorships. How did these governments use propaganda to legitimize their rule?

\section*{Document 1}

Fascism conceives of the State as an absolute, in comparison with which all individuals or groups are relative, only to be conceived of in their relation to the State. . . . The Fascist State organizes the nation, but leaves a sufficient margin of liberty to the individual; the latter is deprived of all useless and possibly harmful freedom, but retains what is essential; the deciding power in this question cannot be the individual, but the State alone. . . Fascism is the doctrine best adapted to represent the tendencies and the aspirations of a people, like the people of Italy, who are rising again after many centuries of abasement and foreign servitude. But empire demands discipline, the coordination of all forces and a deeply felt sense of duty and sacrifice.
-Benito Mussolini, from "What Is Fascism?" 1932

\section*{Document 2}

We hold these Truths to be self-evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Cre ator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness.
-Declaration of Independence

\section*{Document 3}

This Chinese Communist Party poster of 1974 calls on "workers, peasants, and soldiers" to criticize the philosopher Confucius and a discredited former leader, Lin Biao.

\section*{Use your knowledge of fascism and communism and Documents 1-3 to} answer Questions 1-3.
1. In his description of fascism, Mussolini says that A. the people have liberty only in relation to the state.
B. the people have absolute power over the state
C. the state receives its authority directly from the people.
D. the state is democratic and has little power over the people.
2. How does Mussolini's description of freedom differ from that set out in the Declaration of Independence?
3. Pull It Together Italy under Mussolini and China under Mao were both authoritarian dictatorships. However, both Documents 1 and 3 make appeals to popular sovereignty. How are these appeals the same and different in each document?

1. A
2. Possible response: The Declaration of Independence holds that all people have rights that no one, including the state, can take away. This philosophy places the people about the state. Mussolini holds the opposite-that the state is supreme and the people receive whatever liberties the state chooses to give them.
3. Both documents refer to the importance of "the people." Fascism, however, holds that the state grants liberty to the people, while communism downplays the importance of the state compared with the people.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.
8. (a) Communist government in the Soviet Union (b) that it brutally suppresses human rights (c) Possible response: Yes. Although Communist governments claim to rule in the people's name, they have regularly led to repression. Rule by a single party, supported by a strong military, places all deci-sion-making power with the government.

\section*{SECTION 4}
9. (a) The UK's government is like the U.S. Government in that it is a representative democracy with a constitution. It is different in that it is a unitary system under a constitutional monarch, and the constitution is mostly unwritten. It is led by a prime minister, who is the party head, not by a popularly elected President. (b) The UK's government has the same similarities and differences with Mexico as with the U.S., since Mexico and the U.S. have a federal government under a popularly elected President and a written constitution.
10. (a) Although the PRI still dominated Mexican politics in the 1990s, its hold was slipping. (b) Public opinion and world attention forced the PRI to guarantee a fraud-free election in 2000. PAN candidate Vicente Fox won, marking the end of the PRI's 70-year political domination.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Essays should compare and contrast the topics selected and end with a summarizing conclusion.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Responses should summarize the interviewee's answers.
13. Students' guides should accurately describe the U.S. federal system of government and the three branches.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 6}

How should a government meet the needs of its people?

\section*{CHAPTER 23}

To what extent should governments participate in the economy?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the image and quotation on these pages. Ask: How do you think political freedom relates to economic freedom? (Possible answer: In a free democracy, people are allowed to make their own economic choices. This increases opportunities and quality of life.) In this chapter, students will learn about three economic systemscapitalism, socialism, and communism—and how the U.S. government is involved in the modern global economy. Tell students to begin to further explore economic systems by completing the Chapter 23 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 23 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 61)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE GRAPHIC DATA}

You may wish to teach analyzing graphic data as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 23 Skills Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 88) to help students learn how to analyze graphic data. The worksheet asks students to interpret two graphs and then draw conclusions about them. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 90).

\section*{WebQuest
online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about governments and economies.

\section*{Block Scheduling}

BLOCK 1: Teach the Section 1 lesson, and omit the Extend options.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 2 and 3 lessons, omitting the Core Worksheet activity in Section 3 and the Extend options in both sections.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- examine the factors of production and the fundamental factors of free enterprise by completing concept webs.
- discuss and vote on what they feel is the proper level of government control in the economy.
- work in groups to create and present arguments advocating the free enterprise system.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- use a transparency to discuss the theories of Karl Marx.
- complete a chart that compares and contrasts economic systems.
- role play and write a dialog to compare and contrast life under capitalism and communism.
- write a journal entry evaluating economic systems.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- list ways in which government regulation of the economy affects their own lives.
- complete a concept web about the role of the Federal Government in the economy at home and abroad.
- summarize economic news reports to present to the class in a mock television program.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

To cover the chapter quickly, have students complete the Reading Comprehension Worksheet for Section 1. Then ask them to complete the Bellringer Worksheet from Section 2. Review the answers to the worksheet as a class. Then have students complete the concept web activity from the Section 3 lesson on government involvement in the economy. Finally, have students make a pro-con chart on the issue of free trade.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1
Special NeedsBasic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Features of Capitalism} \\
\hline & & \\
\hline Free Enterprise & Laissez-Faire Theory & Mixed Economy \\
\hline & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- Free market \\
- Most likely to exist in democratic nations \\
- Free choice by consumers, entrepreneurs, and workers \\
- Private ownership of factors of production \\
- Individual initiative to start, run, and dissolve businesses, and to innovate \\
- Profit drives economy \\
- Competition helps hold down prices and keeps quality high \\
- Supply and demand determine price \end{tabular} & - Laissez-fairegovernment plays limited role in economy & - Mixed economyincludes some government regulation \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE CAUSE AND EFFECT}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What is the role of government in the American economy? Create a chart similar to the one below to record information from the section on features of capitalism.
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Features of Capitalism} \\
\hline 1 & & 1 \\
\hline Free & Laissez-Faire & Mixed \\
\hline Enterprise & Theory & Economy \\
\hline | & 1 & । \\
\hline - Private & - Government & \\
\hline ownership & plays a & - \\ \hline - Individual & limited role & \\ \hline initiative & in economy & \\
\hline - & & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Political Dictionary
- capitalism - free market
- factors of - laws of supply production and demand
- capital
- entrepreneur - laissez-faire
- free enterprise theory system

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify the factors of production.
2. Describe the free enterprise system and laissez-faire theory
3. Analyze the role of government in a mixed economy
4. Compare and contrast three types of business organizations.
5. Explain the role of profit and loss in a free enterprise system.
Image Above: Small businesses are an essential part of a free enterprise system.

Y
 the functions a government ought to undertake? What should it have the power to do? What should it not be allowed to do? Certainly these questions can be asked of just about all areas of human activity, but they are raised very significantly in the realm of economic affairs.

Questions of politics and economics are inseparable. The most important economic questions faced by a nation are also political questions. For example: Who should decide what goods will be produced? How should goods and services be distributed and exchanged within a nation? What types of income or property ought to be taxed? What social services should a government provide to its citizens?

Capitalism provides one response to all of these questions. Capitalism is an economic system in which individuals are free to own the means of production and maximize profits. Many aspects of capitalism will be familiar to you because the United States and most other nations in the world today have adopted this economic system.

\section*{Factors of Production}

Certain resources are necessary to any nation's economy, no matter what economic system is in place. Economists call these basic resources, which are used to make all goods and services, the factors of production.

Land Land, which in economic terms includes all natural resources, is an important factor of production. Land has a variety of economic uses, such as agriculture, mining, and forestry. Along with farms and other property, economists categorize the water in rivers and lakes and the coal, iron, and petroleum found beneath the ground as part of the land itself.

Capital A second factor of production is capital-all the human-made resources that are used to produce goods and services. Physical capital (also called "capital goods") includes the buildings, machines, computers, and other materials workers need to turn land and another factor, labor, into goods and Before students do the Bellringer in this section, you may want to review information on analyzing cause and effect in the Skills Handbook, p. S16.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Entrepreneurs bring together the factors of production to create goods and services. - The laws of supply and demand determine the market prices. - Laissez-faire theory holds that the government should play a very limited role in society. - Three types of businesses exist in the U.S.: sole proprietorships, partnerships, and corporations.
CONCEPTS: economic systems, laissez-faire theory, role of government enduring understandings: - The United States has a mixed economy in which private enterprise and governmental participation coexist. - In a free enterprise system, consumers, entrepreneurs, and workers enjoy freedom of choice. • Capitalist economies are driven by the desire to make a profit.
and services. Note that capital is a product of the economy that is then put back into the economy.

Labor Yet another factor of production is a human resource-labor. Men and women who work in mines, factories, offices, hospitals, and other places all provide labor that is an essential part of a nation's economy. In a capitalist, or free market, economy, individuals "own" their labor and can sell it to any employer. Human capital includes the knowledge and skills that workers gain from their work expe-riences-an investment in themselves.

One who owns capital and puts it to productive use is called a capitalist. That term is applied to people who own large businesses or factories as well as investors and the owners of small businesses. The American economy is called capitalistic because its growth depends very largely on the energy and drive of thousands of individual capitalists, not the government

The Role of the Entrepreneur To actually produce goods and services, someone must bring together and organize the factors of production. An entrepreneur-literally, an "enterpriser"-is an individual with the drive and ambition to combine land, labor, and capital resources to produce goods or offer services, and is willing to risk losses and failure. Entrepreneurs start businesses and make them grow, creating jobs and goods and services that contribute to a high standard of living.

\section*{Free Enterprise System}

Capitalism is frequently referred to as a free enterprise system, which is an economic system characterized by private ownership of capital and by investments that are determined by private decision, not by public authorities. This system needs a free market, a market in which buyers and sellers are free to buy and sell as they wish. A free market is most likely to exist in a democratic nation, such as the United

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 6, Chapter 23, Section 1 :
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 61)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 64)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 66)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 68)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 70)
L3 Quiz A (p. 71)
L2 Quiz B (p. 72)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- examine the factors of production and the fundamental factors of free enterprise by completing concept webs.
- discuss and vote on what they feel is the proper level of government control in the economy.
- work in groups to create and present arguments advocating the free enterprise system.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 64) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 66)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display the blank Concept Web Graphic Organizer transparency and write on the board: Look at the "Factors of Production" diagram in your textbook. Then create and complete a concept web about the factors.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint because they are the basic resources that are used to make all goods and services Factors of Production Economists include all natural resources, including water, in "land," not just the part of the earth's surface not covered by water. The dictionary defines "capital" as wealth in money or property. Economists consider "capital" to be all hu-man-made resources put to productive use and then reinvested in the economy, including physical goods, such as machines and materials.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Explain that this lesson is about capitalism, or the free enterprise system, and how that system works in the United States. Begin by reviewing the Bellringer activity. Point out that the factors of production (land, labor, and capital) are the basic resources (rivers, workers, and tools) required to make goods and services in all economic systems, including capitalism. In a free enterprise system, entrepreneurs bring these resources together to make goods and services. Ask: If you were an American entrepreneur starting a new restaurant, what factors of production would you need? (land: a space for the restaurant and parking; labor: chef, wait persons, cashier, bus persons, hosts or hostesses, dishwashers; capital: money, computers, a building, meal preparation appliances, ingredients for food preparation, skills/ knowledge)
Next, draw or display a blank transparency of a concept web. Label the web "The Free Enterprise System. " Work with students to complete the concept web through discussion of the features of capitalism. Ask: What are the four fundamental factors in a free enterprise system? (private ownership, individual initiative, profit, and competition) Add ovals for each of these factors. Ask: How would these factors of the free enterprise system encourage entrepreneurs, like the restaurant owner, to start new businesses? (The free enterprise system allows private ownership of the factors of production and the freedom to choose how to use them to produce goods and services. Entrepreneurs who have drive, talent, and a willingness to accept the risk of loss can use their factors of production to start a business and keep the profits they earn. Competition encourages business owners to improve goods and services and hold prices down, which benefit consumers.) \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is the free enterprise system? compensation
n. payment making up for loss

States, where security and the rule of law are protected by the government.

A free enterprise system lets consumers, entrepreneurs, and workers enjoy freedom of choice. Consumers can choose from a variety of products and services. Entrepreneurs can switch from one business to another. Workers can quit their jobs and seek new ones, and they can choose to organize labor unions as a way to bargain for better working conditions or benefits.

A capitalistic system-a free enterprise system-is based on four fundamental factors: private ownership, individual initiative, profit, and competition.

Private Ownership In a capitalistic system, private individuals and companies own most of the factors of production-the basic resources used to produce goods and services. They decide how this productive property will be used-for example, to build a business or invest in technology. What the property produces is theirs, as well. The owners of productive property are sometimes individuals, but more often they are groups of people who share ownership of a company.

In a free enterprise system, individuals own the right to their own labor. They sell that labor by taking a job, and the pay they receive represents the price paid for their work. In other economic systems, workers may have little choice as to the kinds of work they will do and little opportunity to change jobs or pay.

The protection of the rights of private ownership is also important, particularly in the United States. The 5th and 14th amendments declare that no person may be deprived "of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." The 5th Amendment also says that "just compensation" must be paid to owners when private property is taken for public use.

Individual Initiative In our economy, entrepreneurs are an essential factor in the production of goods and services. Under a free enterprise system, all individuals are free to start and run their own businesses (their own enterprises). They are also free to dissolve those businesses. Importantly, the atmosphere of a free market, as well as a free society that encourages the exchange of ideas, can and often does lead to innovation and scientific and technological discoveries.

\section*{Elements of Free Enterprise \\ Free markets cannot succeed without these four basic elements: private} ownership, individual initiative, profit, and competition. Supported by the rule of law and by the people, these factors allow for the many market transactions that define a free enterprise economy. What is the role of the government in preserving the elements of free enterprise?

Individual inititative

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint an economic system characterized by private ownership of capital and by investments that are determined by private decision, not by public authorities
Elements of Free Enterprise possible response: preserve competition by preventing monopolies and trusts that interfere with the free market; supply justice system to protect private property

\section*{Constitutional Principles}

LIMITED GOVERNMENT Adam Smith's book The Wealth of Nations introduced not only laissez-faire capitalism, but also the idea of economics as a separate discipline. Smith advocated severe limits on government intervention in the economy. He was specifically responding to the English government's practice at that time of forming monopolies and granting exclusive trading rights to certain companies. However, Smith's ideas also stemmed from his belief that people's capacity for reason regulated their actions, and could influence the economy more than government could.

These promote growth in the economy and often improve the quality of everyday life

That is not necessarily true in other economic systems. In some countries, government planners decide what will be produced and how it will be made. There, centralized decision making, not individual initiative, controls the production and distribution of goods and services.

Profit Just as individuals are free to choose how they will spend or invest their capital in a free enterprise system, they are also entitled to benefit from whatever their investment or enterprise earns or gains in value. The "profit motive" is the desire to gain from business dealings. It drives entrepreneurs to create goods and services people will want to buy, and is a major reason why entrepreneurs are willing to take risks.

Competition The freedom to enter or start a new business at any time leads to competition. Competition is a situation in which a number of companies offer similar products or services. They must compete against one another for customers. In a free enterprise system, competition often helps to hold down prices and keep quality high. This is usually the case because customers are likely to buy from the company with the best product at the lowest price. Competition promotes efficiency; the producer has the incentive (more sales) to keep costs low.

Under these competitive conditions, the laws of supply and demand determine the market price for goods or services. Supply is the quantity of goods or services available for sale at a range of prices. As the price increases, more of a product will be offered for sale. Demand is the desire and ability to purchase a good or service. As the price falls, more of a product will be demanded by buyers. If supply increases and demand stays the same, prices will fall. If demand decreases and supply stays the same, prices will also fall. On the other hand, if demand increases and supply stays the same, prices will rise.

Competition does not always work smoothly. Sometimes a single business becomes so successful that all its rivals go out of business. A firm that is the only source of a product or service is called a monopoly. Monopolies can be very powerful in the marketplace. Practically speaking, they can charge as much as they want for a product. Since there is no other supplier of that good or service, the consumer must pay the monopoly's price or do without.

In the late nineteenth century, political leaders in the United States gradually became convinced that certain monopolies were stifling competition and interfering with the free market. They were especially concerned about a type of monopoly called a trust. A trust exists when several corporations in the same line of business work together to eliminate competition from the market and regulate prices. By the latter part of the nineteenth century, trusts had gained tight-fisted control over the markets for petroleum, steel, coal, beef, sugar, and other commodities.

In response, Congress passed the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of 1890 , which remains the basic law to curb monopolies today. It prohibits "every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations."

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 23A, Government and the Free Market, when you discuss laissezfaire theory. This cartoon suggests a possible consequence of government interference in the economy. Ask: Whom do the people represent? (average consumers) What must the free market do to deliver its product to the consumers? (lt must navigate a maze created by government meddling in the economy.) What does the cartoonist suggest is the result of government intervention in the economy? (higher prices) What do you think this cartoonist believes is the proper role of government in the economy? (laissez-faire, or as limited a role as possible)

ELL Differentiate Write enterprise and entrepreneur on the board. Clarify that an enterprise is a new business or project. Pronounce the word entrepreneur. Explain that it is a French word with the same root as enterprise, and underline enter-/entre- in the two words. Tell students that both words are from an Old French verb meaning "to begin or undertake." Remind students that entrepreneur means "an enterpriser, or a person who starts a new business. "

\section*{DISCUSS THE LAISSEZ-FAIRE THEORY}

Write laissez-faire theory on the board, and pronounce it for students. Ask a volunteer to define the term. Tell students that, although the trend over the last 100 years has been toward more government control, and that United States has a mixed economy, some people believe that the government should have little or no role in the economy-that the "invisible hand" of the market should be left to work on its own.
Discuss with students how freely they think the economy should be allowed to operate. Use the Think-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to generate a class list of ways in which the government currently controls or manages the economy. For example, government controls interest rates to stabilize the economy and minimize inflation; regulates business practices to promote fair competition, ensure product safety and truthful labeling, and protect the environment; provides Social Security and MedicareMedicaid; oversees the stock market; taxes some goods, such as gasoline; and taxes income. List each example students offer and then for each, ask: How would life for Americans be different if the government did not carry out this activity?
When you have finished the discussion, take a vote on what level of control the government should have. Tell students to raise both hands if they think that the government should be more laissez-faire, raise one hand if they think government involvement is about right, and raise no hands if they think there should be more government control. Take a count and then ask students from each group to explain their viewpoint.
L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students from different countries to compare and contrast an aspect of government control of the economy in the United States to government control of the economy in their countries of origin.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Competition often helps to hold down prices and keep quality high.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Tell students to suppose that a nation has just won independence and its leaders are trying to determine what type of economic system to establish. Students will act as economic advisers and pitch to that nation's leaders the concept of a mixed economy, with an emphasis on free enterprise.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Divide the class into small groups. Distribute the Chapter 23 Section 1 Core Worksheet and enough copies of the accompanying Presentation Evaluation Worksheet to allow students to evaluate the work of all other groups (Unit 6 All-in-One, pp. 68-69). Assign each group one aspect of the free enterprise system—private ownership, individual initiative, profit, and competition; assign two other groups to present facts about the benefits of mixed economies and types of business organizations. Students will make their presentations to the whole class. Tell students they will use the worksheet to organize their presentations. To engage them in active listening, tell students that they will use the evaluation worksheets to judge the effectiveness of each group's presentation.
L2 D Differentiate Review the outline format. Then walk through the worksheet as a class, rather than letting students work on their own, outlining the main points for each assignment on the board. Be sure to give students a few minutes to think about it on their own before you begin.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Monopolies can threaten competition in a market, leaving consumers to either pay or do without.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is a disadvantage of monopolies?

Former Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan speaks on economics at a lecture honoring Adam Smith.

The Anti-Trust Division in the Department of Justice watches business activities to determine whether competition within an industry is threatened. It can, for example, stop the sale or merger of a company if that move threatens competition in a particular market. On rare occasions, the Justice Department has acted to break up a monopoly to restore competition.

\section*{Laissez-Faire Theory}

Early capitalist philosophers believed that, if only government did not interfere, the free enterprise system would work automatically. Adam Smith presented the classic expression of that view in his book, The Wealth of Nations, in 1776 . Smith wrote that when all individuals are free to pursue their own private interests, an "invisible hand" works to promote the general welfare. In short, Smith introduced laissez-faire capitalism. \({ }^{1}\)

Laissez-faire theory holds that government should play only a very limited, handsoff role in society. Governmental activity should be confined to: (1) foreign relations and national defense, (2) the maintenance of police and courts to protect private property and the health, safety, and morals of the people, and (3) those few other functions that cannot be performed by private enterprise at a profit. The proper role of government in economic affairs should be restricted to functions intended to promote and protect the free play of competition and the operation of the laws of supply and demand.

Laissez-faire capitalism has never in fact operated in this country. The concept has had, nevertheless, and still has, a profound effect on the structure of the economic system in the United States.

\section*{A Mixed Economy}

Although the American economic system is essentially private in character, government has always played a large part in it. Economists usually describe an economy in which private enterprise and governmental participation coexist as a mixed economy.

Government at every level regulates the various features of American economic life. Among its many other functions, government prohibits trusts, protects the environment, and ensures the quality of the food we eat.

Government also promotes many aspects of American economic life. It constructs roads and highways, provides such services as public health programs, the census, and weather reports, and operates Social Security and other insurance programs. It also offers many kinds of subsidies and loan programs to help entrepreneurs and businesses prosper.

Federal, State, and local governments conduct some enterprises that might well be operated privately-for example, public education, the postal system, and municipal water and power systems. It has also assumed some functions that have proved unprofitable to private enterprise-for example, many local transit systems and waste disposal and recycling projects. These sorts of public efforts are sometimes called "ash-can socialism."

Mixed economies are common in Europe and in most former communist countries. In Britain, the government provides free medical care to all. The government of the People's Republic of China owns steel mills and factories. Germany's federal government requires large companies to give workers representation on managing boards, and France once banned most companies from asking

682 Comparative Economic Systems

\section*{Background}

CONTROLLING MONOPOLIES Even when the Department of Justice fails to win an antitrust case, it can change an industry. Thirty years ago, computers were big, expensive, and nearly always manufactured by IBM. Federal lawyers pursued IBM for 13 years, forcing the company to deal very carefully with companies that wrote software for its machines. The United States abruptly dropped its lawsuit in 1982; but by that time, technology and IBM's weaknesses had reshaped the computer market. Today, IBM is one of many computer manufacturers. Microsoft, the software company that used IBM's troubles to set the standard in operating systems, was itself tried on the grounds that it violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.
Supply and Demand:
Audio Tour
Listen to a guided aud
Supply and Demand
PearsonSuccessNet.com
How are prices set in a free market?
In general, suppliers will produce more goods when prices are high and fewer goods when prices fall. Consumers usually seek to purchase (demand) more of a commodity at low prices and less at high prices. Where people enjoy the freedom to trade, they will find the market price that suits both sides. What is a market signal that a price is too high?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|}
\hline Price & \begin{tabular}{c} Suppliers \\ produce
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{c} Consumers \\ want \end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{c} What \\
happens?
\end{tabular} \\
\hline\($ 5.00\) & 5,000 & 20,000 & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Not enough for sale \\
\(\bullet\) Empty shelves
\end{tabular} \\
\hline\($ 15.00\) & 10,000 & 10,000 & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Market price \\
\(\bullet\) Both sides happy
\end{tabular} \\
\hline\($ 30.00\) & 20,000 & 5,000 & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Too many t-shirts \\
\(\bullet\) Too few buyers
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
employees to work more than 35 hours per week. In each of these mixed economies, government intervention coexists with independent companies and market forces.

\section*{Types of Business}

\section*{Organizations}

The American economy contains a number of gigantic companies with thousands of employees and factories or offices all over the world. Still, most businesses in the United States are relatively small. Over 95 percent of all businesses in this country employ fewer than 20 people. Three basic types of business organizations exist: sole proprietorships, partnerships, and corporations. Each has advantages and disadvantages.

Sole Proprietorships Businesses owned by a single individual are called sole proprietorships. Typical businesses in this category include such categories as hair salons, auto repair shops, and dentists' offices. About three quarters of all businesses in this country are sole proprietorships. However, because most sole proprietorships are small, they produce only a minor fraction of annual sales in the United States.

Sole proprietorships are the most flexible form of business organization. Their major advantage is that the single owner can make decisions quickly. He or she has full control of the company and can draw a salary or close the business without consulting others. A major disadvantage is that the owner is personally liable for the debts the business might acquire. Sole proprietorships are also limited by the owner's ability to contribute resources and manage the business.

Partnerships Businesses owned by two or more individuals, called partners, are known as partnerships. Lawyers and architects are among those professionals who often work together in partnerships.

One advantage of a partnership is that it can draw on the resources of more than one person for the capital necessary to start or expand a business. Different people bring different strengths and perspectives to a business, and a partnership can provide a \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the tirree types of business organizations? liable adj. responsible

\section*{Background}

SUPPLY AND DEMAND Use Transparency 23B to show how supply and demand work together to set prices in a free market. This transparency shows in graph form the hypothetical data in the text feature "Supply and Demand." Ask: At $5, how many T-shirts will shirt makers supply? ( 5,000 ) How many will consumers want to buy? \((20,000)\) Faced with such great demand for their shirts, how do you think shirt makers will adjust their price? (raise it) Suppose they raise the price to \($ 30\). How many T-shirts will makers supply and consumers buy? \((20,000\); 5,000) How will makers adjust price based on sagging demand? (lower it) At \($ 15\), how many T-shirts will makers supply and consumers demand? ( 10,000 ) The price at which the supply and demand lines intersect is the market price-the price at which the quantity supplied equals the quantity demanded.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided tour of Supply and Demand.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4Differentiate Assign the Extend Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 70), which is an excerpt from Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations. After students have answered the questions on the worksheet, have them summarize the selection in a paragraph, using their own words. Then ask them to find specific examples in the passage that refer to the idea of limited government involvement in the economy.
L2 ELL Differentiate Have students work in small groups to create a collage about the free enterprise system that includes images describing or depicting the concepts of private ownership, individual initiative, profit, and competition. Students should draw or collect images from the Internet, magazines, or newspapers that express these ideas. Have a volunteer from each group present the collage to the class.
L2 Differentiate Ask students to use a local phone book or the Internet and list two businesses from your community under each of the following categories, and identify what good or service it produces: sole proprietorship, partnership, and corporation. Tell students to decide, based on their research, which type of business seems to be the most common in your community.

\section*{L4} Differentiate Have students locate, read, and write a report on a nonfiction book about the American free enterprise system, an American entrepreneur, or how an American business operates. Reports should include an analysis of the author's main points, conclusions, and biases. Students should state whether they agree or disagree with the author, and assess the book's reliability and interest value to a general reader.

\section*{Answers}

Supply and Demand Demand for the product falls, so that supply exceeds demand.
Checkpoint sole proprietorships, partnerships, and corporations

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\(L 3\)Collect the Core Worksheet and assess the students' work, using the criteria on the Presentation Evaluation Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 69). Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 71)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 72)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The role of the U.S. government \\ in the economy (Questions 1, \\ \(4,6)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Ask students to write a few sen- \\ tences or words that summarize \\ the role of the government in the \\ U.S. economy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Factors of production \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Review the information from \\ concept webs students created \\ in the lesson. Have students add \\ additional specific examples of the \\
factors of production.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The role of entrepreneurs \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Ask students to re-read the \\ information under "The Role of \\ the Entrepreneur," and write a job \\ description for an entrepreneur.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Types of business organizations \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students re-read "Types of \\ Business organizations" and make \\ a bulleted list of the features of \\ each type.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Partnerships can draw on the resources of more than one person for capital, and different people bring different strengths to the business. However, these differences can lead to conflict.
useful framework for entrepreneurs to use their skills to create a small business. These differences can also lead to conflict among partners, however; and partnerships may dissolve if one of the partners leaves or dies.

Corporations Corporations include both very small companies and large multinational firms. Unlike partnerships, corporations almost always have many owners, called shareholders. A share is a fraction of ownership in the corporation, and a shareholder is any person or group owning one or more shares. A corporation can continue indefinitely because a shareholder's death does not affect the legal status of the corporation. In other words, the corporation exists as its own legal entity, independent from the existence of any shareholders. The Supreme Court has often held that, under the 14th Amendment, a corporation occupies the same legal position as a person.

Corporations can draw their capital from hundreds and even thousands of investors. This characteristic enables them to finance such costly projects as artificial satellites or oil pipelines. Shareholders are responsible only for the amount of money they have invested. If the business fails, they can lose that amount, but no more. Shareholders have limited liability and are not held responsible for any debts the corporation might have.

Corporations suffer this disadvantage: The income they produce is taxed twice. First, the corporation pays a tax on its profits. Then, individual shareholders pay a tax on the dividends they receive.

\section*{Profit and Loss}

What drives the capitalist economy? The best answer, most often, is profit.

To understand what profit is, you must first understand the idea of investment. An investment is a sum of money-capital-that is put into a business enterprise. For example, if you buy a van to start an express delivery business, what you pay for the van is an investment in the business.

Your profit will be the amount of money you earn from the business, after you have subtracted the costs involved in making that money-in this case, the purchase of the van and the costs of operating it, plus whatever you pay yourself. If earnings are less than the costs, the business has not made a profit; it has, instead, suffered a loss.

Taking risks and making investments are, therefore, an essential part of the capitalist system. Every year, many businesses fail because they do not produce a profit. The businesses that survive tend to be those whose owners have learned to make the most efficient use of the factors of production.
```

Essential Questions response to the chapter
Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal

```
1. Guiding Question Use your com pleted chart to answer this question: What is the role of government in the American economy?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What is physical capital? (b) What is human capital? (c) How do economists define land as a factor of production?
3. Why are entrepreneurs important?
4. What is the role of government in a mixed economy?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Make Comparisons Which type of business organization would be most appropriate for: (a) a large bus company? (b) a nonchain coffee shop? Explain.
6. Draw Conclusions Identify two arguments that can be made for and two against government participation in a free enterprise economy

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Select a Topic and Record Details The goal of a compare-and-contrast essay is to analyze similarities and differences between two topics. In this chapter, you will learn about different economic systems: capitalism, socialism, and communism. As you read the chapter, use a Venn diagram to record similarities and differences between two of these systems.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. The U.S. government regulates parts of the economy to, for example, prohibit trusts, protect the environment, and ensure food quality. Government participates in the economy by providing roads, public health programs, loans, and public education.
2. (a) human-made goods, such as buildings, machines, and materials, that workers use to turn labor and land into goods and services (b) knowledge and skills that workers gain from their work experience (c) all natural resources
3. because they start businesses and make them grow, creating jobs, goods, and services that contribute to a high standard of living 4. The government regulates and participates in parts of the economy. For example, government prohibits trusts, protects the environment, ensures food quality, operates social insurance programs, provides loans, and conducts postal service and public education.
5. (a) a corporation (b) a sole proprietorship or partnership. The first company is very large with many employees, so would benefit from a corporate structure for management and from money from shareholders for growth. The coffee shop is a very small company with few employees and could be financed and managed by one or a few people.
6. for: to ensure market fairness and to protect consumers; against: the free market operates best with few controls and people should make their own economic choices QUICK write Students' Venn diagrams should compare and contrast two economic systems.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Socialism and Communism}

Guiding Question
What is the role of government under socialism and communism? Create a table similar to the table below to record information about the role of government under socialism and communism.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- The Communist • five-year plan Manifesto - collectivization
- socialism - privatization
- welfare state Forward
- command Forward economy

\section*{Objectives}
1. Summarize the theories of Karl Marx and their roots.
2. Identify important characteristics of socialist economies.
3. Outline the characteristics of communist economies.
4. Describe socialism and communism in action today.
5. Evaluate the effects of socialism and communism

Image Above: Communist artwork often celebrated workers in industry and agriculture.

You know that in the United States everyone is entitled to the equal protection of the law. Political equality, of course, is not the same as economic equality. The capitalist system of the United States allows some to achieve greater financial rewards than others are able to. However, other economic sys-tems-socialism and communism-do seek to distribute wealth more evenly across the society.

\section*{Karl Marx's Theory}

Karl Marx (1818-1883), the father of modern socialism and communism, was the most significant critic of capitalism as it developed during the early stages of the Industrial Revolution. Numerous observers of working conditions in nineteenth-century factories were appalled by what they found. Those conditions led many of them to seek social and economic reforms. Marx and his colleague Friedrich Engels (1820-1895) argued for much more radical change than did most of their contemporaries.

Writings Marx and Engels first published their basic concepts in The Communist Manifesto in 1848. That political document condemned the miseries of the Industrial Revolution and called upon oppressed workers throughout Europe to free themselves from "capitalist enslavement." The Manifesto ended with this rallying cry:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}

The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win. Workingmen of all countries, unite.

\author{
The Communist Manifesto
}

The Communist Manifesto and Marx's later multivolume work, Das Kapital, published in 1867, 1885, and 1894, were based on four closely related concepts: Marx's theory of history, the labor theory of value, the role of institutions, and the dictatorship of the proletariat.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Socialism and communism are based on theories of Karl Marx. - Socialist economies involve some nationalization, broad public welfare, high taxes, and some central planning. - Communist governments control most aspects of economic, social, intellectual, and religious life.
CONCEPTS: economic systems, role of government ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Under socialism and communism, the government has much more active and direct control over the economy than under capitalism.
- Communism failed in Russia; the few remaining Communist nations are loosening economic controls.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What is the role of government under socialism and communism?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{2}{|c|}{ Role of Government } \\
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Socialism } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Communism } \\
\hline - State owns largest industries & • Communist Party holds deci- \\
- State provides pensions, & sion-making power in govern- \\ universal health care, free & ment and economy \\ university education, housing & - State controls social, intel- \\
- State collects high taxes & lectual, and religious life \\
- State makes many economic & - State makes all economic deci- \\ decisions & sions-plans and supervises \\ & production in factories, farms, \\
& and stores \\
& - Five-year plans set goals \\
& for growth in industry and \\ & agriculture, what individual \\ & businesses should produce, \\ & prices, and distribution \\ & - State ownership of means of \\ & production \\
& - State-owned, collective farms \\ & - State-owned industry and \\ & transportation \\
& - In some Communist states, lo- \\ & cal governments own housing, \\
& banks, hospitals, and stores \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- use a transparency to discuss the theories of Karl Marx.
- complete a chart that compares and contrasts economic systems.
- role play and write a dialogue to compare and contrast life under capitalism and communism.
- write a journal entry evaluating economic systems.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DECISION MAKING}

To help students learn decision making, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S18, and use the information there to help them when discussing the four Marxist concepts in this section.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 73) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 75)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Distribute the Bellringer Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 77). Have students complete the chart, based on their reading.
L2 ELL Differentiate To help them complete the worksheet, allow students to choose one column or row to fill in.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) important? commodity authoritarian
adj. demanding total
1. Marx's View of History. To Marx, all of history was a story of class struggle-of social classes competing for the control of labor and productive property. One class was the oppressor; the other, the oppressed. In the modern world, the bourgeoisie-the capital-ists-oppressed the proletariat-the workers. According to Marx, the class struggle in the modern era would become so intense that, inevitably, the masses would revolt and bring down the bourgeoisie.
2. The Labor Theory of Value. Marx rejected the free enterprise ideas of profit and competition. In his view, the value of a commodity was set by the amount of labor put into it. A pair of shoes or a rebuilt bicycle is worth a certain amount because it takes that much labor to produce it. Marx argued that the laborer should receive that value in full.
3. The Role of finstitutions. Marx saw the state and its government as tools by which capitalists maintained their power and privileges. Other social institutions also played a role in enforcing capitalist control over the masses. Marx described religion as "the opiate of the people"-a drug that persuades workers to tolerate their harsh lot in this life in the hope that someday they will gain what Marx called a "fictional afterlife."
4. The Dictatorship of the Proletariat. Marx did not believe that revolution would automatically bring about the final goal of com-munism-the classless society. First, he predicted a transitional phase during which an authoritarian state would represent and enforce the interests of the masses. This he called the "dictatorship of the proletariat." Once the goal of classlessness was realized, the state, he said, would "wither away."

Based on these four concepts, Marx envisioned a "free, classless society." Social classes would vanish and the people would own all property in common. Exploitation of labor and unemployment would disappear. Abundant goods would be available to all according to their needs, not necessarily how much work they contributed. Marx also expected that workers in different countries-for example, France and Germany-would share a bond far stronger than national loyalties.

Thus, he theorized that communism would also bring an end to nationalism, a major cause of European wars.

Socialists and Communists Many European workers and thinkers of the middle and late nineteenth century accepted Marx's criticisms of capitalism. His followers were deeply divided, however, by the question of how best to achieve a more equitable economy. Some argued that economic equality could be attained by peaceful, democratic means. Today, the terms socialism and socialist are usually used to identify those evolutionary ideals and the people who support them. Others argued that a fair society could come only out of a violent revolution, born out of class struggle. Over time, those who took that more strictly Marxist view came to be called communists, the advocates of communism.

\section*{Characteristics of Socialist Economies}

Countries with a socialist government typically enact one or more of a set of public policies to achieve the basic aims of socialism. These policies include nationalization, broadening of public services, high taxation, and a command economy.
Nationalization Placing enterprises under governmental control, often by taking over privately owned industries, is called nationalization. In a socialist society, nationalization rarely includes all businesses within the country. Socialist governments usually want to control only certain segments of the economy-those having many workers, a few dominant firms, and great importance to other businesses - particularly, utilities, transportation, and steel. Many smaller companies remain in private hands. The government may also want industries that are based on new technologies to remain in private hands. It often does because individual initiative and entrepreneurship are so vital in the early phases of the development of a business.

Many socialist governments want to give each company's workers a say in deciding how a company is to be managed. Elected

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 6, Chapter 23, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p.73)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 75)
L3 Bellringer Worksheet (p. 77)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 78)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 79)
L3 Section Quiz A (p. 80)
L2 Section Quiz B (p. 81)

worker representatives now sit on the boards of directors of many major companies in both Sweden and Germany.

Public Welfare Socialists aim to guarantee the public welfare by providing for the equal distribution of such necessities and services as retirement pensions, universal healthcare, free university education, and housing. Any country that provides extensive social services at little or no cost to consumers is a welfare state.

In a welfare state, medical and dental services often are provided free or at a small charge. People who lose their jobs or who are physically unable to work receive government payments that are nearly as high as their former wages. All those who reach retirement age receive government pensions. Parents are often paid a benefit for each child until that child reaches the age of 18 . Workers in several European nations receive paid maternity leave, often for both parents, and several weeks of paid vacation each year, considerably more than most American workers receive.

Taxation All governments in both capitalist and socialist states are funded by taxation. Because social welfare services are quite expensive, taxes in socialist countries tend to be relatively high. Taxes regularly take as much as 50 or 60 percent of an individual's yearly income. Socialists tend to place most of the tax burden on the upper and middle classes, in line with their aim to achieve a more equal distribution of wealth. However, gasoline and consumer goods are also subject to high taxes.

A Command Economy Economies can be divided into several categories, depending on how basic economic decisions are made. Under capitalism, key decisions are made by thousands of private individuals and companies through the give-and-take of the marketplace. Under socialism, and even more so under communism, economic decision making is more centralized. In a command economy, government bureaucrats plan for the development of the economy over a period of years. They set targets for production and direct investments to specific industries.

\section*{National Healthcare}

\section*{What is the Cost of Free Healthcare?}

The United Kingdom's National Health Service provides free healthcare to all, funded by the national government. While the ideal of national healthcare is widely popular in the U.K. (top), many people complain about long waits for treatmen (bottom). What might the law of supply and demand predict for a free healthcare system?

\section*{Socialism Today}

Although most socialist parties in Europe have given up such traditional goals as nationalizing important industries, these parties promote socialism as it exists today. At various times in recent history, socialist parties have controlled governments and instituted socialist programs through democratic means. However, socialist parties in Britain, France, and Germany have \section*{Checkpoint} What defines a socialist economy?

\section*{Debate}
socialist in the senate In 2006 Bernie Sanders became the first self-described socialist to win a seat in the U.S. Senate. When interviewer Amy Goodman asked him the meaning of socialist, Sanders replied: "Well, I think it means the government has got to play a very important role in making sure that as a right of citizenship, all of our people have heal thcare; that as a right, all of our kids, regardless of income, have quality childcare, are able to go to college without going deeply into debt; that it means we do not allow large corporations and moneyed interests to destroy our environment; that we create a government in which it is not dominated by big money interest." ("Vermont's Bernie Sanders Becomes First Socialist Elected to U.S. Senate," from Democracy Now) Read this quotation to the class. Then have students debate this question: How would you contrast Sanders's views with those of Adam Smith?

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Explain that this lesson is about two main economic systems with common roots: socialism and communism. Both systems grew out of the ideas of economist and philosopher Karl Marx (1818-1883) and his writing partner, Friedrich Engels (1820-1895). Display Transparency 23C, Four Major Marxist Concepts. Divide the class into four discussion groups and assign each group one of the four concepts. Then come together again as a class. Ask: Do you agree that history is a series of class struggles and that all conflicts are based on economics? Why or why not? (Sample response: I think that many conflicts are about economic issues and class struggle, but often people are in conflict over power or jealousy or something other than material goods or gain.) Do you think that laborers should receive the full value of the goods they produce? What about the role of the entrepreneur and the profit motive in this system? (Sample response: I do not think that a worker can get the full value of the goods he or she produces unless the person works alone and owns the business. If a person is an entrepreneur and creates a business and hires workers, then that person needs some of the profits to pay employees and him- or herself, and to purchase more materials and grow the business. ) Do you think that the U.S. government is controlled by capitalists? (Sample response: I think that to some extent, the U.S. government is controlled by rich and powerful people, but because we have the power to vote, other groups of Americans can change that if they want to.) What might be the drawback of the proletarian dictatorship, even if it is a transitional phase? (Sample response. Any dictatorship is unfair, because it is undemocratic and does not represent the interests of all people. Just because a group was oppressed, it should not then become the oppressor.)
Remind students that these concepts grew out of Marx's analysis of existing conditions at the birth of the Industrial Revolution, when working conditions were generally terrible. Workers were moving from "cottage industries," where they owned the factors of production and their labor, to factories in which their labor was "human capital" for someone else.

\section*{Answers}

National Healthcare The more people who use the free healthcare system, the more it will cost the government to meet that demand.
Checkpoint nationalization, public welfare, high taxation, and a command economy

ELL Differentiate Clarify that a class struggle is a tension among groups of people based on their economic status. Also, explain that Marxism and communism are sometimes used to mean the same thing, although more correctly Marxism is a body of thought, while communism is the political and economic system based on that thought. Define and pronounce proletariat (working-class people) and bourgeoisie (middle class or capitalists).
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of Marxist Economies.

\section*{COMPARE ECONOMIC SYSTEMS}

Review the Bellringer Worksheet by completing a class version. Ask students what they think is the strongest aspect and the biggest drawback of each system. Ask: Why do you think communism has been so unsuccessful? Why has capitalism or socialism been more successful? (Sample response: Under communism, a nation often ends up being run by a totalitarian government that is extremely oppressive. The system is also not very efficient, and transitions have led to losses in productivity, instead of gains. Also, people are not encouraged to work hard or pushed to compete because there is little or no reward for individual initiative. Although capitalism does not meet all the basic needs of citizens, it does hold out at least the promise that if an individual works hard, he or she will succeed and will reap the rewards of his or her own efforts.)

\section*{Answers}

Marxist Economies Possible response: Socialism limits private ownership; communism, theoretically, forbids it. Under communism, people do not own the factors of production, including their own labor, and they lack freedom in their social, intellectual, and religious, as well as economic, lives. High taxes in both systems limit workers' freedom to choose how to use their income.
lost power or have abandoned some of their socialist objectives that have become too expensive and unpopular to maintain.

Socialism has won a large following in developing countries in Africa and more recently in Latin America. One reason for its appeal in those nations is that large existing industries have often been owned by foreign companies. By nationalizing a foreign-owned industry and placing local people in charge, a political leader can win broad public support. He or she can also gain power by promising to provide socialist-style, "cradle-to-grave" services and to redistribute land from large land owners to the poor.

For example, after he came to power in 1999, Venezuela's President Hugo Chávez and his nationalist-socialist party, Movement for the Fifth Republic (MVR) nationalized the oil industry and used the profits to fund free education, healthcare, and low-cost housing. Chávez has also nationalized the telecommunications and electricity industries. These moves have brought support for Chávez, especially among the urban poor, and have helped him retain power, despite broad resistance to many of his socialist, or even communist, goals. Meanwhile, Venezuela's economy has experienced inflation and shortages as a result of Chávez's actions.

\section*{Marxist Economies}

The writings of Karl Marx (below) inspired two competing Listen to a guided audio tour of Marxist Economies at PearsonSuccessNet.com movements to improve the lives of workers. Socialists hoped to change capitalism, while communists strove to destroy it. How well do socialism and communism respect the rights of people as defined in a free market economy?

\section*{SOCIALISM}

Socialists came to power by promising social services and jobs for everyone while observing the rules of democracy. Many workers enjoy better pay and job protections, but young people often have trouble finding good jobs.

\section*{COMMUNISM}

Revolutionaries in Russia and China overthrew governments in the name of the people and created communist dictatorships. They spread communism through war and support for foreign revolutions.
- Centrally planned economy
- State owns all land and housing
- Some central planning
- Most property is privately owned
- No privately owned
- Only large industries are No privately businesses
- High taxes fund healthcare, • State provides healthcare, child child care, education care, education
- Free elections - Controlled elections
- Strong unions and worker protections

\section*{Background}

GENERAL STRIKE OF 1926 Decades of industrial disputes in Great Britain reached a climax in 1926. Miners joined with the Trade Union Congress to reject wage cuts instituted by mine owners and supported by the prime minister, Stanley Baldwin. The owners locked out the miners, who were supported by an estimated 1.75 million other workers, in what became known as the General Strike of 1926. The strike came to a halt when the Trade Union Congress ended it after nine days, saying that the government was too well-prepared to concede. Though the miners tried to continue the strike alone, it failed. The strike divided the nation sharply along class lines and ushered in a period of government intolerance of union activities and the struggle for workers' rights.

\section*{Characteristics of Communist Economies}

Socialism represents one path from Karl Marys theories to a modern economy. Communism describes a more dramatic and frequently violent approach, one that dominated large parts of the world in the twentieth century. In practice, communism has been less successful than socialism, and has generally led to the formation of totalitarian regimes. Marx's theories did not provide a blueprint for the formation of a communist society, and communism has taken different forms in different places. However, certain common characteristics can be seen.
1. Role of the Communist Party. In any communist-run nation, the Communist Party holds the decision-making power in both the government and the economy. Party leaders also hold the top government positions. From top to bottom, the two institutions run parallel to one another. Inevitably, such centralized political and economic control has meant control over social, intellectual, and religious life, as well.
2. Central Planning. Because government makes all economic decisions, bureaucrats in a command economy must plan and supervise the production of all factories, farms, and stores in the country. Typically, a five-year plan plays a key role, outlining how the government wants the economy to develop. The plan sets economic goals that dictate where to emphasize growth in industry or agriculture and what and how much each individual factory and farm must produce. It also sets prices and decides how goods and services will be distributed.
3. Collectivization. Collective ownershipstate ownership-of the means of production is a fundamental pillar of communist doctrine. The merger of small private farms into large government-owned agricultural enterprises is a major step in the creation of a communist economy. The process of collectivization may be voluntary in theory, but in many countries, peasant farmers were forced to give up their land. Millions died resisting collectivization in the Soviet Union.
4. State Ownership. Industrial enterprises, transportation, and other segments of the economy are state-owned. This aspect of the system varies greatly from country to country. In China, for example, provincial and municipal governments, not a central government ministry, own enterprises such as housing, banks, hospitals, and stores.

\section*{The Soviet Union}

Marx believed that the revolution would come first in industrialized countries with large working-class populations-in particular, France, Germany, Great Britain, and then the United States. Ironically, the revolution occurred first in Russia, then an undeveloped, mainly agricultural nation, in 1917. V.I. Lenin and his followers began immediately to build a communist state in the new Soviet Union. By the time of Lenin's death in 1924, the Soviet Union had become a oneparty state in control of the country's social, political, and economic institutions. Lenin's successor, Josef Stalin, tightened that control and built a totalitarian dictatorship.

The Soviet Union Under Stalin Stalin introduced centralized planning. The First Five-Year Plan (1928-1933) demanded collectivization of agriculture and a heightened production of chemicals, petroleum, and steel. Later five-year plans also emphasized heavy industry, and the Soviet Union achieved rapid, if uneven, industrialization. Unfortunately, those advances came at great cost in the form of scarce consumer goods, housing, and urban services.

The Soviet Union did provide its citizens with free education, medical care, and even summer youth camps. It was far from a classless society, however. An elite class owed its privileged status to the Communist Party. In addition, many free government services were either unavailable or of poor quality.

Transition to a Free Market By the late 1980s, under Mikhail Gorbachev's policies of glasnost (openness) and perestroika (restructuring), the Soviet Union began to dismantle the political and economic structures of communism. In 1991, the Soviet

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Tell students that they will now consider what living under communism might be like and how it might compare to daily life under capitalism. Divide the class into pairs and distribute the Chapter 23 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 78). Tell students that they will role play a specific individual with a partner to develop ideas of what life might be like under each economic system. Then they will write a dialogue about daily life under communism or capitalism. Explain that partners must play the same role, but will select to write about capitalism or communism.

L2 Differentiate For these students, distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 79). If students have trouble with writing the dialogue, have them create a list of key points that they can use to tell their stories to partners. They may also tell their story in illustrated panels, if time allows.

\section*{Background}
influence of karl marx Most Americans view communism, and its father, Karl Marx, as colossal failures. With its troubles and eventual widespread collapse, communism as implemented in the 20th century was, indeed, largely a disaster. However, Karl Marx himself (whose conception of communism bears little resemblance to the way it was practiced) is arguably one of the most influential thinkers of all time. At its apex, the number of people who considered themselves followers of Marx approached 1.5 billion. This is a greater number of followers and a greater percentage of the world's population than any other ideology has had in the history of the world.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint centralized economic control by the Communist Party, central planning, collectivization, and state ownership

\section*{FOLLOW UP}

When students have completed their dialogues, group three sets of partners in different roles to act out their dialogues. Then re-form as a class and draw a graphic organizer on the board in which students list features of life under each system. Next, have students write a journal entry about their overall impression of life under communism compared to capitalism Have them state which system they would prefer to live under as themselves today. What would they like and dislike about it? Remind students to support their choice with logical reasoning.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students do research to create a timeline of the history of socialism or communism as it developed in one of the nations mentioned in this section. Timelines should begin with the revolution that brought about the institution of a Communist regime or the birth of a socialist or Communist party and end with the present day. Alternatively, you may wish to have students work in groups and create a large classroom timeline of the history of communism to display on the walls around the room.
L2 ELL Differentiate Provide students with a blank world map and a world atlas or current country map to share. Have students skim textbook Section 2 to find the names of the five remaining communist countries. (China, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos, North Korea) Have them identify these countries in an atlas or on a world map. Then they should locate these countries on the blank map and label them. Ask students to create a color key for "Communist States" and "Capitalist States" and color the map according to the key.
L4 Differentiate Have students do research to create an in-depth report comparing and contrasting economic facts about the United States with one socialist country, such as Sweden, and one Communist country, such as China or North Korea. Facts might include GDP, literacy rate, mortality, average work week, vacation time, income, and national tax rates. Encourage students to arrange some of the data in graphs or tables. Tell students to complete the assignment with a written summary that draws conclusions about the relative socio-economic status of citizens of the three nations they analyzed.

Although China still identifies itself as a communist state, private enterprise and investment have achieved remarkable growth in recent years.

Union dissolved into 15 independent countries. The largest and most populous of them was Russia.

Many state-owned companies in Russia were privatized. Privatization is the process of returning nationalized enterprises to private ownership. Today, Russia is a country with some features of free enterprise but also extensive state intervention in the economy.

\section*{China}

Mao Zedong, the founder of the People's Republic of China, was a Marxist. However, he believed the peasantry, not industrial workers, were the key to a successful communist revolution in agricultural China.

After Mao took control of the country in 1949, China developed its own version of a command economy. Despite its huge population, the country lacked skilled workers. The government improved technical and scientific educational opportunities and then assigned workers to jobs in the state sector. The government regulated the labor market, giving people little choice about where or for whom they worked.

The Great Leap Forward The five-year plan for 1958, the Great Leap Forward, was a drastic attempt to modernize China quickly. All elements of free enterprise were eliminated. Collective farms were brought together into larger units, communes. Communes grew into self-sufficient bodies run by Communist Party officials. These officials oversaw farms, industries, and government in a region, and they also managed social policy. Workers received the same rewards no matter how much they produced, so there were few incentives to work hard. The Great Leap Forward was a disastrous failure and was followed by a severe famine.

Deng Xiaoping's Reforms A new leader, Deng Xiaoping, came to power in 1977 and made great changes in the economy. Deng's program of the "Four Modernizations" was aimed at improving agriculture, industry, science and technology, and defense. He began to move China from a command economy to a market economy and opened the country to foreign investment.

Today, China's economic system is a maze of different levels of governmental bodies and economic units. Although the Communist Party remains in power and directs economic growth, the state-owned sector has shrunk. The government encourages private enterprise and investment and China has enjoyed many years of strong economic growth.

\section*{Other Communist Nations}

Very few communist economies exist today. Most communist nations, like China, have incorporated elements of free enterprise into their economic systems.

Cuba, led by Fidel Castro from 1959 to 2008, developed a communist economy heavily dependent on Soviet economic aid during the Cold War. As a result, the fall of the Soviet Union caused an economic crisis in Cuba. Despite modest reforms, most Cubans still live and work within the state-controlled economy.

In Southeast Asia, Vietnam and Laos are also ruled by communist parties and have centrally planned economies. However, since the late 1980s, both nations have instituted

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}

ALTERNATIVE LESSON PLAN Some of your classes may already have a basic knowledge of capitalism, socialism, and communism. Help these students increase their understanding by having them compare the three economic systems. Divide students into three groups and assign each group one of the economic systems. Ask each group to create a poster-sized table describing their assigned system in terms of such factors as government control, price systems, and distribution of goods and services. Display the tables and lead a class discussion about the differences between the three systems.

To see this lesson plan, go to free-market reforms to open their domestic markets and promote growth and investment. Communist North Korea has achieved little growth. Its economy, army, and all civil institutions are under the total control of dictator Kim Jong-Il, and severe food shortages plague the country.

\section*{Evaluating Command Economies}

Both free market and command economies have their strengths and their weaknesses. For the supporters of capitalism, it is easy to see the weaknesses in the theory and practice of socialism and communism. To the supporters of those two systems, capitalism seems filled with faults.

Critics argue that the many layers of bureaucracy in socialist countries complicate decision making and have a depressing effect on individual initiative. As a result, command economies are slow to take advantage of new technologies. In addition, many say, the smooth running of an economy is too complex to be directed by central planners. Too many unpredictable events are involved, and too many clashing interests are at stake. For all its faults, they argue, the invisible hand of the free-market economy works more efficiently than the ever-present hand of central planning.

Command economies are also criticized because they deprive people of the freedom to decide for themselves how to use their income. Since workers get to keep only a part of their earnings after taxes, they have little incentive to work harder and earn more, and no incentives to innovate or create new products. Why work hard when your basic needs will be taken care of anyway?

In response, socialists and communists say that it is fairer to supply everyone with such basic needs as medical care, housing, and education. They point to the inequalities of wealth and power that exist under capitalism. In their view, socialism makes political democracy work more smoothly by meshing it with economic democracy.

Defenders of socialism and communism also argue that these systems give workers and ordinary citizens more control over their daily lives. Under capitalism, they say, a company's management can abruptly decide to close an unprofitable factory, even though such a decision can put thousands out of work and disrupt an entire community. This could not happen in a socialist or communist state, the argument goes. Workers and community leaders on the company's board would help decide what is best for the entire workforce and community-not just for the company's investors and shareholders.

Checkpoint How successful have communist economies been?

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheet and assess the students' work, using the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 102).

Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 80)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 81)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The role of government \\ under socialism and \\ communism (Questions 1, \\
\(3,4,5,6)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Draw a Venn diagram on the board. \\
Have students offer details from the \\ text, their notes, and their dialogues to \\ compare and contrast government's role \\ under the two systems.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The theories of Karl Marx \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students review the four main \\ Marxist concepts and write or give an \\ oral summary in their own words of \\ each concept
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions To continue to build a Journal \(\begin{array}{ll}\text { Essential Question, go to your } \\ \text { Essential Questions Journal. }\end{array}\) Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: What is the role of government under socialism and communism?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. How did Karl Marx's theories lead to socialism and communism?
3. What role does the government play in a command economy?
4. In your own words, describe how communism is intended to work.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
5. Make Comparisons How might a capitalist, socialist, and communist government each interact with small businesses?
6. Make Decisions Do you think the government should have the responsibility of ensuring that every citizen has a job? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Research for Examples and Details When writing a compare-and-contrast essay, you should include details that support the comparisons and contrasts you discuss. Use your textbook, the library, and reliable Internet sources to add details and examples to the notes you have made in your Venn diagram Review the notes to delete details that are unimportant or do not relate to both systems.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Very few communist economies exist today. Most communist nations have incorporated elements of free enterprise into their economic systems.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. under socialism: to ensure that all citizens are decently housed and fed and have medical care and to plan the growth of many parts of the economy; under communism: to manage all means of production and distribution of goods and services, to make all economic decisions, and to ensure the health and welfare of all citizens
2. Marx predicted that the workers would overthrow the capitalist bourgeoisie and take over the government, ensuring economic equality for all. This led leaders and thinkers to try to reform or revolutionize the government to redistribute wealth and provide more services to the workers.
3. One ruling party plans all aspects of the economy, oversees collectivization of agriculture, and runs major industries.
4. Communism is supposed to be a fair, open system under which all people are supplied with the goods and services they need to live well, including housing, jobs, heal th care, and retirement pensions. It is supposed to ensure that wealth and power is shared equally among all citizens.
5. capitalist: some oversight to maintain fairness in the marketplace and to ensure fair and safe treatment of workers; socialist: run some major industries and ensure workers' health and fair wages; communist: run all major industries and ensure that all workers are employed and paid fairly
6. Accept all logical responses.

QUICK WRITE A strong assignment will include details related to the two economic systems and go beyond the information in the Venn diagram.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will create a pro-con chart to examine the effects of globalization.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Explain that many people feel that the United States must be competitive in the global economy. Others think globalization hurts Americans. Ask volunteers to summarize the arguments in the feature.

\section*{COMPLETE A PRO-CON CHART}

Ask: How can free trade help Americans? How can it hurt them? Have students answer these questions by completing a pro-con chart as a class. Encourage students to use information from the quotations on this page and their prior knowledge of the effects of free trade or global competition, such as factory closings or new job creation. (sample responses: pro-stronger U.S. economy leading to more American jbbs, more access to foreign goods at lower prices; higher standard of living in developing nations can increase security; con-jbs outsourced to countries with lower wages; more families have to work; loss of economic stability)

\section*{DRAW A CONCLUSION}

Ask students to use the pro-con chart to draw a written conclusion about whether free trade is good or harmful overall.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students decide which quotation they think made the strongest argument and explain why.

\section*{Answers}
1. Answers will vary.
2. (a) It says that free trade is causing Americans to lose high-quality jobs to other nations. (b) He believes that free trade will make the U.S. economy stronger and Americans more prosperous. (c) Students' answers should demonstrate an understanding of the issue and should clearly illustrate their point of view.

\section*{Globalization and Free Trade}

Track the Issue
Until the 1940s, the United States favored protectionist policies over free trade.

Congress passes the first Tariff Act, providing the new Federal Government with its main source of revenue.

South Carolina, a rural State, threatens the unity of the country over federal tariffs protecting northern manufacturers.
(1) 11

Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act raises tariffs on imports to historically high levels.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) is signed, opening a new era of lower tariffs.

\section*{(1) 1}

The North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) takes effect, removing trade barriers among the United States, Canada, and Mexico by 2009.

The World Trade Organization is established to expand global trade and resolve disputes.

\section*{President} President
Bill Clinton promoted farm exports through NAFTA.

\section*{Perspectives}

The growth of free trade has brought both benefits and challenges to Americans. While trade has expanded in some areas and the United States remains the world's largest exporter, there have also been painful job losses. What economic and social issues do government leaders need to consider in drafting free trade agreements?

Today, the global economy is enriching corporate profiteers, wealthy families and dictators, but it isn't working for working families. In the United States, we're losing high-paying, full-benefit manufacturing jobs and more and more family members are having to join the workforce to maintain living standards. Our trade deficit is eating away at economic stability and our basic industries are being hammered by . . . unfair trade practices. Around the world . . . inequality is rising, both among and within nations.
-AFL-CIO, Campaign for Global Fairness

With our strong institutions, deep capital markets, flexible labor markets, technological leadership, and penchant [like] for entrepreneurship and innovation, no country is better placed than the United States to benefit from increased participation in the global economy. If we resist protectionism and isolationism while working to increase the skills and adaptability of our labor force, the forces of globalization and trade will continue to make our economy stronger and our citizens more prosperous.
-Federal Reserve Chairman Ben S. Bernanke

\section*{Connect to Your World}
1. Understand (a) Identify five items you use each day. Where were these goods made? (b) How does trade affect your community in terms of jobs and the goods people buy?
2. Compare and Contrast (a) What does the AFL-CIO say are the negative effects of free trade? (b) Why does Bernanke think that globalization and free trade are good for the U.S. economy? (c) With whom do you agree? Why?
4. GOVERNMENT ONLINE

In the News
To find out about how free trade affects you, visit
PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Background}

SECURITY AND PROSPERITY PARTNERSHIP OF NORTH AMERICA In 2005, leaders of Mexico, Canada, and United States launched the Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America (SPP). The SPP is an initiative to increase security and prosperity among the three nations through greater cooperation and information sharing. Its working groups discuss shared issues such as terrorism, smuggling, and trade. The SPP is not a signed agreement or treaty, and therefore contains no legally binding obligations. However, this also means that the organization operates outside of congressional oversight. Critics fear that the SPP's ultimate goal is political and economic integration, creating a North American Union (NAU) with blurred borders and a shared currency. Official sources call such fears conspiracy theory. The fact that the NAU myth persists may reflect the public's apprehension about globalization.

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{The U.S. in a Global Economy}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How does the Federal Government support economic growth at home and abroad? Use an outline to take notes on the ways in which the government takes part in both the domestic and global economies.
I. The Domestic Economy
A. Supports free enterprise
1.
2.
B.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- globalization - NAFTA
- protectionism - World Trade
- tariff Organization
- import quota (WTO)
- trade embargo

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the role of government in the domestic economy.
2. Understand the reasons why nations participate in trade.
3. Describe the role of the Federal Government in the global economy
4. Explain the causes of globalization and its effects on the American economy.

Image Above: Traders signal an offer on an exchange floor.

Since 1789, the government of the United States has become increasingly involved in protecting, managing, and regulating economic life. With the rise of worldwide markets, free trade agreements, multinational corporations, and the use of off-shore labor-known as outsourcing-the Federal Government's participation in the economy is more crucial than ever before. Today, it has a great deal to say about how the economy operates at home and abroad. It also works to protect the economic interests of its citizens.

\section*{The Domestic Economy}

For the first 120 years or so of its existence, the Federal Government played only a very limited role in the economy and in the economic well-being of the American people. However, by the early twentieth century, due to repeated economic "panics" and recessions, culminating in the Great Depression of the 1930s, the amount of governmental oversight began to change.

A vital free enterprise system fosters competition and entrepreneurship. The Federal Government tries to support this system by attempting to ensure fairness in the market place, and, with it, the health and well-being of both consumers and workers.

Recall, there are a number of independent agencies within the executive branch of the government. Many of them have an important role in the regulation of economic activities within the United States. Among the most important of them are the Federal Reserve System, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), and such organizations as the Occupational Safety & Health Administration (OSHA) in the Department of Labor.

The Federal Reserve System Known as "the Fed," the Federal Reserve System is one of the most powerful tools the Federal Government uses to regulate the nation's economy. The Fed was established by Congress in 1913 to become the central banking system for the United States. It consists of a Board of Governors appointed by the President (one of whom is appointed to act as the chairperson), 12 regional banks, and many other member banks. The main purpose of the Fed is to use the tools of monetary policy to promote price stability, full employment, economic growth, and other national economic goals.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

FACTS: - Through various agencies, the Federal Government regulates the economy to ensure fairness, economic stability, and growth. - The United States is the world's largest importer and exporter. - The main U.S. trade partners are Canada, China, Mexico, Japan, and Germany. - Tariffs, import quotas, and embargoes create trade barriers, often to protect domestic industry. - The United States, Canada, and Mexico formed NAFTA to eliminate trade barriers among themselves.
CONCEPTS: role of government in economic policy, globalization ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Advances in communication and transportation technologies have enabled economic interdependence. - Globalization has been good for the U.S. economy in some areas, but has cost American jobs.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{How does the Federal Government support economic growth at home and abroad?}

\section*{I. The Domestic Economy}

A Supports free enterprise
B. Federal Reserve System
1. uses monetary policy to promote price stability, full employment, and economic growth
2. adjusts federal funds rate to expand or contract the economy
C. Security and Exchange Commission
1. oversees the stock markets
2. prevents insider trading, fraudulent accounting, and false information to investors
D. Department of Labor
1. protects rights of workers and oversees workplace fairness and safety
2. Occupational Safety and Health Administration oversees workplace safety
3. Employment Standards Administration promotes fairness in contracts, benefits, and wages
4. Bureau of Labor Statistics tracks employment statistics used to evaluate economy
II. The Global Economy

A Protects American producers and consumers
1. tariff increases price of imported good to protect domestic industry
2. quota limits amount of commodity that can be imported
3. embargo bans trade with a nation as diplomatic pressure
B. Supports trade
1. North American Free Trade Agreement eliminated trade barriers among U.S., Mexico, and Canada
2. trade agreements with countries of Latin America and Asia III. International Organizations

A World Trade Organization works to increase trade
B. World Bank makes loans to poor countries to build infrastructure
C. International Monetary Fund helps countries whose financial systems are in trouble
D. Group of 8 discuss world affairs and crises

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE GRAPHIC DATA}

To practice analyzing graphic data in this section, use the Chapter 23 Skills Worksheet (Unit 6 All-inOne, p. 88). You may want to teach the skill before discussing issues of global trade. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 90).

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will .
- list ways in which government regulation of the economy affects their own lives.
- complete a concept web about the role of the Federal Government in the economy at home and abroad.
- summarize economic news reports to present to the class in a mock television program.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 82) before class.

Tell students to look through print or online sources for brief news items about the U.S. government and some aspect of the domestic or global economy and bring them to class for this lesson. Each student should bring in at least two items.

L2
Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 84)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: In your notebook, describe three ways in which you participate in the economy and three ways in which the U.S. government affects that participation.
L2 Differentiate Have students list only the three ways in which they take part in the U.S. economy or the three government effects.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the Federal Reserve System.

\section*{Answers}

The Federal Reserve System The 12 bank directors based in different regions of the country participate in decision making.
Checkpoint a powerful tool used by the Federal Government to regulate the nation's economy

\section*{The Federal Reserve System}

Twelve regional banks make up the Federal Reserve System, known as the Fed. The banks' directors and an appointed Board of Governors make important decisions that affect the national and global economy. Why does including the regional directors improve the Fed's decisions?

The Fed's Responsibility: Set interest rates to encourage steady economic growth
If the Fed sets interest rates too High
- businesses will not borrow and invest
- the economy slows - people lose jobs

If the Fed sets interest rates too Low
- too much money is borrowed - businesses make risky investments - prices rise quickly
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What is the Federal Reserve System? fraudulent
adj. false, dishonest

Mainly, this means adjusting the federal funds rate-an interest rate at which banks lend money to other banks on a daily basis. The Fed does this to either contract or expand the amount of money in the economy in response to changes in inflation or unemployment. Raising interest rates makes money more expensive to borrow, and so, in theory, contracts the economy. Lowering interest rates makes money less expensive to borrow, and so tends to expand the economy. The rate adjustments that the Fed makes can affect other lending rates, foreign exchange rates, and the levels of money and credit available in the economy, as well as employment and prices. In 2008, the Fed took quick action to avert a panic in the financial markets. You can read more about the importance of the Fed in Chapter 16

The Securities and Exchange Commission The Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), is a federal regulatory agency consisting of five commissioners appointed by the President, who also selects the SEC's chairperson from among those five commissioners. Congress created the SEC in 1934 in the aftermath of the stock market crash that contributed to the Great Depression.

The commission's central task is to oversee the nation's stock markets and ensure that corporations do not engage in such abuses as insider trading, the practice of buying or selling stock based on company information not known to other investors. The SEC also ensures that publicly traded companies truthfully disclose their finances. It brings court actions against those who violate securities laws-for example, through insider trading, fraudulent accounting practices, or providing false information to investors.

The Department of Labor The Federal Government provides protections for the basic rights of workers and oversees issues of fairness and safety in the workplace. Much of this is accomplished by the Department of Labor.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 6, Chapter 23, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 82)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 84)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 86)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 88)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 90)
L3 Quiz A (p. 92)
L2 Quiz B (p. 93)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 94)
Chapter Test B (p. 97)

To meet these aims, the Department works through its various agencies. For example, since the Occupational Safety & Health Administration (OSHA) was established in 1971, its inspectors have worked with employers and employees to decrease deaths in the workplace by 60 percent. The Employment Standards Administration (ESA) monitors fairness in contracts, benefits, and wages. The Bureau of Labor Statistics plays the important role of tracking major economic statistics, such as the unemployment rate and the consumer price index. These data are used to evaluate the health of the nation's economy.

\section*{A Global Economy}

There is a growing economic interdependence among nations of the world. This interdependence, known as globalization, has been both driven and enabled by many remarkable advancements in communication and transportation technologies. Everything from the enormous increase in computing power, the Internet, communications satellites, and even the building of larger ships has increased the flow of goods, and, as well, the flow of information that connects world markets. Globalization has also developed out of the drive for increased international trade promoted by the United States in the years since the Great Depression.

The Purpose of Trade All nations engage in trade. Trade is one of the hallmarks of civilization, and it has been for thousands of years. However, improvements in transportation and communication technologies and the pressure to find new markets have spurred the growth of worldwide markets.

The United States produces a great many different goods, but it does not produce everything this country needs. No country does because of the unequal distribution of natural resources and other factors of production, such as skilled workers, among countries. The unequal distribution of factors of production means that one nation can more effectively specialize in producing certain goods-for example, petroleum or computer chips. That nation will then export petroleum or computer chips and use the profits to purchase, or import, goods from other nations who have an advantage in the production of, for example, food stuffs or automobiles.

Trade allows Americans to acquire the goods they want, but which this nation cannot produce as cost-effectively or efficiently as it does other goods. It is the role of the Federal Government to support trade and other economic opportunities around the world, while at the same time, protecting American producers and consumers.

American Trade Partners Today, as it has been for several decades, Canada is the United States' chief trade partner. After the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) became effective in 1994, Mexico moved up in rank to second among the United States' main trade partners. However, by the end of 2004, China had surpassed Mexico to become the United States' second leading trading partner. This remains true today.

The United States is the largest exporter of goods and services in the world. Major American exports include such goods as telecommunications, aerospace, medical, and military equipment. This country also exports soybeans, corn, fruit, automobiles, and a great many other products. Service exports are a large and quickly growing sector of world trade. The United States leads there, as well, in exporting education, information, data processing, financial services, and medical care.

The United States is also the world's number one importer of goods. About \($ 2\) trillion in imported goods and services enter the United States each year. That is nearly 20 percent of all the world's imports, and includes such consumer goods as clothing, toys, and electronics, as well as capital goods, which include computers, electronic parts, and industrial machinery. Another import category is food and beverages, including animal feed. Automobiles and auto parts constitute a fourth import category.

However, the largest category of imported goods is industrial supplies and materials, including crude oil. The United States is the largest importer of crude oil in the world, \(\checkmark\) checkpoint What is the goal of globalization? interdependence \(n\). dependence upon one another hallmark n.distinguishing feature

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{GOVERNMENT'S ROLE IN THE ECONOMY}

Explain that this lesson is about the ways in which the Federal Government acts to regulate or support economic life in the United States. Review the students' responses to the Bellringer activity. (Students might note that when the Federal Reserve adjusts interest rates, students make less interest on savings. Other examples include income and other taxes they pay, OSHA and worker safety, the minimum wage, unemployment benefits, and Social Security.)
Remind students that the U.S. has a mixed economy, in which the free market operates with government oversight. The government takes actions that affect the economy at home, but it also takes actions that influence the global economy. In turn, the global economy affects the U.S. economy.
Begin a concept web like the one below. Have students offer examples for each part of the web. (At Home examples include: activities of the Federal Reserve, Securities and Exchange Commission, and Department of Labor-OSHA, ESA, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics. International examples include: trade barriers-tariffs, quotas, and embargoes; freetrade agreements-NAFTA and APEC; and international organizations-World Trade Organization and the World Bank.)

Challenge students to think about the U.S. government's activities in the global sphere and how they may affect Americans. Examples include: free-trade agreements, such as NAFTA, might mean job losses or lower prices for goods imported from Canada and Mexico; tariffs and other protectionist tools mean higher prices for imported goods but protections for American jobs; conflicts, such as the war in Iraq, increase government debt, which can lead to higher taxes. Conflicts also often lead to shortages or higher prices for goods, such as oil.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to achieve economic interdependence among the world's nations

\section*{ANALYZE ISSUES OF GLOBAL TRADE}

Write the term globalization and its definition (worldwide economic interdependence) on the board, and display Transparency 23D, Top U. S. Trade Partners. Tell students to work with a partner to write three questions and answers about the United States position and activities in the global economy, based on information in the text or on the transparency. Example: Why do you think that Canada and Mexico are major trade partners? (They are our nearest neighbors and also are now members of NAFTA.) Have pairs exchange questions, and then check each other 's work.

L2
Differentiate Verify that students understand the graph by asking: What does "total trade" mean in this graph? (all transfers of goods or services between the United States and the rest of the world) Which country does the most trade with the United States? (Canada) How do you know? (It has the largest piece of the pie representing all U.S. trade with other nations.)

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Charts Oil is the largest import for the U.S. and the second-largest export.

Checkpoint consumer goods, capital goods, food and beverages, automobiles and auto parts, industrial supplies and materials

1) Analyzing Charts The United States imports more goods and services than it exports, although film and television programs (left) are an exception to this pattern. According to the charts, how does oil influence the trade balance of imports and exports?

Checkpoint
What are the main What are the main imports of the United States?
jeopardize
v. to risk, put in danger accounting for some 12 percent of all oil imports. Most of that oil comes from the countries of Canada, Saudi Arabia, Mexico, Venezuela, and Iraq.

\section*{U.S. Trade Policies}

One goal of the Federal Government has often been to protect American producers and workers by keeping prices, and therefore profits, high, while minimizing competition from imports. The government must do this through such agencies as the Department of Commerce and the International Trade Commission without jeopardizing relationships with its trade partners. It has employed several tools for this tricky task.

Economic Policy Tools Most national governments try to control imports to protect native industries from foreign competition. The goals of this practice, known as protectionism, include safeguarding of jobs, protecting emerging or weakened industries, and enhancing national security. Governments often pursue these goals with trade barriers that hinder free trade and raise the prices consumers must pay for imported goods. These trade barriers are generally of three types: tariffs, import quotas, and trade embargoes.

A tariff is a tax on imported goods. A tariff increases the cost of an imported item, and makes American-made products more attractive to the domestic customer. The government regularly places high tariffs on goods that are produced by important American industries. For example, the tariff on steel is relatively high because Americans produce a great deal of it and the steel industry is considered vital to national security, so the government does not wish cheaper imports to put domestic steel mills out of business.

An import quota is a limit put on the amount of a commodity that can be imported into a country. While recently limited by international agreements, import quotas are still in place in the United States on such items as cotton, sugar, and milk. Many European nations have put a quota on American films and television shows to encourage the production of their own features and to protect national cultures.

\section*{Background}

WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION Most of the world's trading nations negotiated and signed agreements that form the foundation of the World Trade Organization (WTO). The members established trade rules that all agreed to follow. Members also set up a systematic process for resolving trade disputes. When a member believes a nation has broken a rule, it can take its case to the WTO. The process begins with the two sides trying to settle their problem by talking. If talking fails, the WTO appoints a panel of experts to make a ruling. If the panel concludes that a nation has violated a rule, that nation must correct its policy, or the WTO will allow the complaining nation to impose trade penalties, such as tariffs on imports from the offending nation. In 2007, the U.S. charged that China's weak copyright laws have led to unlawful copying of U.S. movies and music. A WTO panel is now considering the case.

A more significant trade barrier-and one that is more often used to apply diplomatic pressure or as a punishment rather than as an economic tool-is the trade embargo. A trade embargo is a ban on trade with a particular country or countries. An embargo might be placed on all goods or only specific items. It can be placed on exports or, separately, on imports. The United States has used trade embargoes largely to promote its foreign policy positions. For example, the United States has maintained a complete economic embargo on Communist Cuba since the early 1960s. Embargoes can be effective, but notice that they may also hurt the domestic economy of the nation imposing them.

NAFTA The North American Free Trade Agreement, known as NAFTA, became effective in 1994. NAFTA established free trade among the United States, Canada, and Mexico, and intended to eliminate, in steps, all tariffs and other barriers to trade by 2009. It created what amounts to the world's largest free trade zone.

NAFTA was approved only after a great deal of controversy and resistance, especially in the United States. Opponents of the agreement were concerned that American manufacturing operations would be moved to Mexico, where wages are lower and regulations are fewer, and lead to huge job losses. Others worried that imports without tariffs would put American businesses at a huge disadvantage. Supporters insisted that the expected increase in exports to Canada and Mexico would mean an increase in American jobs. They also argued that an improved economy would create greater prosperity and stability in Mexico, and so reduce illegal immigration from that country.

Today, nearly all facets of NAFTA are in place; the results seem to indicate that the agreement was good for U.S. trade and investment, but not positive for all U.S. workers. Although the long-term results of NAFTA are hard to distinguish from other trends, it appears that NAFTA accelerated the loss of high-paying manufacturing jobs. For example, jobs in the American textile and clothing sectors, which were already in decline, decreased steeply. However, many manufacturing jobs that have left the U.S. have moved to countries other than Mexico or Canada.

On the positive side, trade-in agricultural products especially-has increased dramatically with the elimination of nearly all trade barriers. Between 1993 and 2002, United States exports to Mexico rose from \($ 41\) billion to \($ 135\) billion.

While NAFTA affects only trade with Canada and Mexico, it provides a model for freer trade between the United States and other countries. The United States has signed similar treaties with many other countries in Latin America and Asia involving much smaller trade flows.

\section*{International Organizations}

The United States employs the tools of protectionism to support industries and workers at home. It also uses them to enlarge economic opportunities, strengthen international ties, and open new markets abroad. It often does this through membership in free trade agreements and international alliances and organizations.

Protecting the Global Economy The World Trade Organization (WTO) was created in 1995 to help carry out and extend the goals of a 1948 treaty, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) intended to increase trade. With 151 members, the WTO provides a set of rules for international commerce, a forum for the creation of new trade agreements, and an arena in which to resolve trade issues.

The United States is also a member of, and the largest shareholder in, the World Bank. The goal of this institution is to reduce poverty and raise the standard of living around the world by making loans to poor nations to build infrastructure or reduce debt and by providing advice and training.

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) is, like the World Bank, headquartered in \section*{facet}

n. aspect, piece, side

\section*{NTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Tell students that in this activity they will take on the role of reporters for a fictitious economics television network. They will work in groups to plan a program that includes at least three reports on the U.S. government activities that affect the global or domestic economy. Their reports will be brief summaries of the news items they brought to class.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Divide the class into small groups and distribute one copy of the Chapter 23 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 86) to each group. Tell students that the worksheet has two parts. The first part consists of step-by-step guidelines to help them create their program. The second part is a programming schedule where they will list and briefly describe each news report they plan to give during their group's program. To begin each presentation, one student will serve as the news anchor and read the schedule. Then individual members will present their reports to the class in the style of television news reporters.

\section*{Background}
the case for free trade support for free trade rests on the economic principle of comparative advantage: Nations benefit from producing what they do best and trading for products that other countries do best. For example, coffee grows very well in Brazil. It makes no economic sense for the United States to restrict imports of coffee from Brazil and try to grow it ourselves. American resources can be employed more efficiently to produce, say, software and financial services. Free trade increases competition, which lowers prices for consumers. Competition also forces producers to become more efficient and improve their products to attract buyers. Competition from Japanese cars prompted U.S. automakers to produce better cars at lower prices. Statistics support the case for free trade. As tariffs fell after World War II, world economic growth rose sharply, leading to higher living standards for many nations.

Differentiate As an alternate approach, organize students into groups well before class. Assign each group a broad topic or theme, such as protectionism, consumer and worker protection, international trade alliances and organizations, the domestic economy and government, U.S. trade partners, or U.S. economic policy and foreign relations. Have each group search for news items related to their topic to summarize for their news program.

L3
Differentiate If a video camera is available, you may wish to have students tape their reports.

ELL Differentiate If students have difficulty with English language skills or writing, suggest that they research or create supporting visuals for their group's reports.

\section*{WRITE A FOLLOW-UP JOURNAL ENTRY}

After all groups have presented their programs, have students write a journal entry describing one thing they learned from the reports and one thing about which they would like to know more. Encourage students to research that topic and write about what they learned in their journals or in the form of a short report.
to promote a healthy global economy and to prevent crises in the international monetary and financial systems. While the World Bank lends money to developing countries to build bridges, dams, and other tangible improvements, the IMF helps countries whose financial or banking systems are in trouble.

Another important group to which the United States belongs is the Group of 8, or "the G8," an annual meeting of the leaders of eight wealthy and industrialized nations: the United States, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Russia, and the United Kingdom. The group has no rigid structure and leaders meet as representatives of their governments to discuss world affairs and crises.

Other Trade Alliances The European Union (EU) is the most successful of the world's free trade organizations. It is also responsible for setting policies in other areas of common concern to its members, including social issues and security. The evolution of the EU began in 1957, when six European nations established the European Common Market to coordinate economic policies and trade. Over time, most Western European nations joined the group, and in 1986, agreed to eliminate all tariffs on exports between member nations, creating the European Economic Community (EEC).

In 1993, the organization went even further to blur international boundaries by forming the European Union. The EU operates much like a weak federal government, with its own parliament, its own flag, and even an anthem. Citizens of most member nations can now travel as tourists or workers across national borders freely, without a passport. In 2002, twelve of the member nations gave up their individual currencies and replaced them with the euro, which is the EU's currency. The EU is now comprised of 27 nations, including many former Soviet republics.

Inspired by the success of the EU, other nations have formed mostly regional trade alliances. One of the largest is the AsianPacific Economic Cooperation (APEC). Its 21 members include nations on the Pacific Rim, such as the United States, Japan, Canada, Chile, and China. The Southern Common Market, or MERCOSUR, is a regional trade bloc established by Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay, and Uruguay.

\section*{Top U.S. Trade Partners}

The United States trades most heavily with countries in North America, East Asia, and Europe. However, we import more from each of our six largest trade partners than we export to them, leading to trade deficits. With which country does the United States have the largest trade deficit?

EXPORTS to U.S. and IMPORTS from U.S. in billions of dollars
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|}
\hline 4 ¢ Canada & *: China & - Mexico & Japan \\
\hline EXPORTS to U.S. 313.1 & EXPORTS to U.S. 321.5 & EXPORTS to U.S. 210.8 & EXPORTS to U.S. 145.5 \\
\hline IMPORTS from U.S. 248.9 & IMPORTS from U.S. 65.2 & IMPORTS from U.S. 136.5 & IMPORTS from U.S. 62.7 \\
\hline \[
18.0 \%
\] & \[
12.4 \%
\] & \[
1.10
\] & \[
6.7 \%
\] \\
\hline TOTAL U.S. TRADE & TOTAL U.S. TRADE & TOTAL U.S. TRADE & TOTAL U.S. TRADE \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

SOURCE: U.S. Census, 2007 data

698 Comparative Economic Systems

693_mag09se_Ch23_s3.indd 698

\section*{Background}
the Case against free trade The U.S. government sets standards to protect its citizens and the environment. For example, the government requires safety equipment for workers, sets a minimum wage, and requires companies to practice pollution control. These protective measures often raise the costs of production. Some other nations do not have strict standards. These nations can produce less expensively by paying low wages, allowing unsafe working conditions, and polluting the environment. Without tariffs, these exports will sell at lower prices in the U.S. than will the American-made versions, depressing U.S. industry and costing jobs. Free trade agreements have encouraged U.S. manufacturers to relocate abroad, where they can avoid the costs of meeting U.S. standards. The result is millions of American jobs lost, eroding U.S. wages, exploited foreign workers, and environmental damage.

\author{
Answers \\ Top U.S. Trading Partners China
}

\section*{Impact of Trade}

For the most part, a global economy seems to be a positive development. It means that more goods are available to more consumers, and that there are more markets in which producers can sell goods. Globalization and international partnerships also help developing nations to expand their economies and raise their standards of living by enabling them to sell goods to more affluent countries.

And, clearly, competition in a global market lowers the price of goods. Goods made overseas, unblocked by tariffs, are less expensive and become more affordable for Americans. Increases in jobs and higher wages, in turn, allow consumers in developing nations to buy American goods and services, and this helps to increase or at least maintain American jobs. Additionally, new, creative approaches to outsourcing may actually create new American jobs by lowering costs so that corporations are able to use the savings to grow and develop innovative products and services. Importantly, increased economic interdependence may lead to more political cooperation and so to fewer conflicts.

However, with interdependence comes risk. A crisis in another nation on which Americans depend for an important commodity can have quick, profound, and direct economic effects. Thus, in recent years, war in Iraq and instability in Nigeria-both major oil-producing nations-contributed to higher oil and gas prices in the United States.

Some people worry that international trade agreements may affect a nation's sovereignty if they have to get "permission" from partner nations to make decisions about such matters as civil rights, defense, or the environment. With instantaneous communications, economic downturns or market fluctuations in one part of the world now cause instability in other markets within hours.

The United States is also moving from a manufacturing economy to a service economy, in large part because American workers cannot compete with workers in other nations who are paid much less. The loss of high-paying manufacturing jobs is painful to the individuals involved, and if these workers are not retrained to begin new jobs with comparable wages, the transition will also hurt both the local and the national economy. In addition, the growth of the service sector has created many new, highpaying jobs that did not exist a decade ago, but often in different locations from where workers live.

The United States is also adversely affected by trade deficits. For example, the United States buys much more from China than China buys from the United States, and so an enormous trade deficit has developed. China has financed the deficit by lending the United States government money and by buying American assets. This means that China, along with Japan and many oil-exporting countries, owns a portion of the American economy, with implications for the economic health and future of this nation.

\section*{Tomorrow's Marketplace}

As you have seen, the trend today in the world economy is toward greater interdependence among nations\(\checkmark\) checkpoint What is the purpose of the European Union?
instantaneous adj. happening in an adj. hap instant

\section*{Debate}

Free trade is a contentious issue. The economic gains do not benefit everyone equally: some individuals may rise from poverty, while others lose their jobs. Organize the class into teams to debate this issue. Ask: Is the growth of free trade a positive or negative development? Assign each team to debate from one of these points of view: U.S. auto workers facing plant closings; U.S. farmers receiving government subsidies; top managers of a U.S. factory that makes weapons for the military; freemarket economists; entrepreneurs in Africa; workers in U.S. textile factories operating in Mexico; or owners of U.S. textile factories operating in Mexico. Have students do research to prepare their case. Ask them to conduct the debate in character.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of Top U.S. Trade Partners.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3Differentiate Have students work in pairs or small groups to create an informational poster or brochure about one of the international organizations to which the United States belongs, such as the World Trade Organization or the World Bank. Have students present their work to the class.
L3 Differentiate Ask students to do research and create a circle graph showing on which nations the United States is most dependent for petroleum and the percentages Americans import from each nation. Have students write a summary about how this dependency might affect U.S. relations and policy with these nations.

\section*{L3}

ELL Differentiate Tell students to draw a political cartoon about some aspect of the U.S. government's role in the economy and explain it in annotations or in a summarizing caption.
L2 ELL Differentiate Give students an outline map of the world. Have them color in the six top trade partners of the United States and label each nation.
L4 Differentiate Ask students to research and write a report on the subject of the U.S. trade imbalance. Tell students to focus on the causes and effects of large trade imbalances-for example, the trade imbalance with China-on the American economy.
L4 Differentiate Instruct students to hold a mock trial of NAFTA. The goal is to determine if the agreement is guilty or not guilty of being bad for the American economy. Students may take the roles of defense attorney, prosecuting attorney, judge, witnesses, and jury. Tell students that the jury must weigh the evidence presented by both sides and reach a verdict with which a majority agrees.

> Government
> All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint The European Union is a free trade organization that sets policies in other areas of common concern to its members.

\section*{Assess and Remediate} dents' work, using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 103). Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions. L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 92) L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 6 All-in-One, p. 93) Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The role of the U.S. \\ government in the \\ domestic and global \\ economy (Questions 1, \\ \(3,5)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Draw a two-column chart on the board to \\ list the activities of the U.S. government \\ in the economy "At Home" and "Glob- \\ allly." "ave students offer details from \\ their reading and class work to complete \\ the chart.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The structure and \\ function of the Federal \\ Reserve (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Draw a pyramid on the board to show \\ the structure of the Fed, with the Chair- \\ man of the Board of Governors at the top. \\ Then ask students to help you list the \\ main ways in which the Fed regulates \\ the U.S. economy.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The goals and effects of \\ NAFTA (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students draw a simple cause-and- \\ effect diagram. Ask them to complete \\ the chart by listing the goals of NAFTA as \\ causes and its effects.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Charts These jobs require either college degrees or training beyond high school to meet the qualifications.

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a }\end{aligned}\) Journal Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: How does the Federal Government support economic growth at home and abroad?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What is the basic structure and role of the Federal Reserve System?
3. Briefly identify and define the three main protectionist tools available to a national government.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Summarize (a) What are the goals of NAFTA? (b) How has NAFTA affected different people in different ways?
5. Draw Inferences How might the U.S. benefit from participating in the World Bank, the G8, and the WTO?

\section*{Quick Write}

Expository Writing: Create an Outline To help you structure a compare-and-contrast essay on two different economic systems, create an outline in which you identify each an out area of comparison and contrast in a single phrase. When you are ready to write your essay, you can use the outline as a guide. Or, you may create a flowchart to help you organize and order your ideas

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Through various departments and agencies, the U.S. government regulates the economy. For example, the Federal Reserve uses monetary policy to promote price stability, full employment, and economic growth. The Securities and Exchange Commission oversees stock markets. The Department of Labor ensures workplace fairness and safety. The Federal Government uses tariffs and quotas to protect domestic industry. It also works through free trade agreements and membership in several international organizations, such as the World Bank, to expand global trade to strengthen the U.S. economy.
2. The Federal Reserve is run by a board of governors appointed by the President, one of whom is the chairperson. It consists of 12 regional banks and many other member banks. Its main role is to promote price stability, full employment, economic growth, and other national economic goals.
3. tariff: a tax on imported goods; import quota: a limit on the amount of a commodity that may be imported; trade embargo: a ban on trade with one or more countries
4. (a) to create a free-trade zone in North America (b) It was good for trade and investment, but not positive for many American workers, especially in manufacturing, although trade in agricultural products increased.

5. The U.S. can benefit by having a say in important international activities and agreements regulating or increasing global trade, which will keep its economy strong QUICK WRITE Outlines should be in correct outline form and cover the comparisons and contrasts between the two economic systems appropriately and logically.

\section*{Political Dictionary} capitalism \(p\). 678 factors of production p. 678 capital p. 678 entrepreneur p. 679
free enterprise system \(p .679\) free market \(p .679\) laws of supply and demand p. 681 monopoly p. 681 laissez-faire theory p. 682 The Communist Manifesto p. 685 socialism \(p .686\) communism p. 686 welfare state p. 687 command economy \(p .687\) five-year plan p. 689 collectivization p. 689 privatization \(p .690\) Great Leap Forward p. 690 globalization p. 695 protectionism p. 696 tariff \(p .696\) import quota \(p .696\) trade embargo p. 697 NAFTA p. 697 World Trade Organization (WTO) p. 697

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about comparative economic systems, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 Jarnow, Jesse. Socialism: A Primary Source Analysis. Rosen Publishing Group, 2004.
L2 Kowalski, Kathiann M. Free Trade (Open for Debate). Marshall Cavendish Children's Books, 2007.
L3 Marx, Karl, Friedrich Engels, and Gareth Stedman Jones, ed. The Communist Manifesto. Penguin Classics, 2002.
L4 Gregory, Paul R. The Political Economy of Stalinism: Evidence from the Soviet Secret Archives. Cambridge University Press, 2003.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Consistent Notebook Organization An organized notebook is an important study tool. Suggest that students consider using one large notebook with dividers. The advantage of this approach is less time spent searching for the right notebook or discovering that students have left the notebook they need at home, at school, or in their lockers. Many find that a three-ring binder works best, because pages can easily be added or removed, and homework papers and tests can be punched for inclusion. Make sure students use the tab dividers in the notebook so they can easily find the subject they need; organizing the sections in order of their schedule is one option. Recommend that students include a separate section for listing homework assignments, so they don't have to page through each subject to find their assignments. A front pocket is handy for keeping homework assignments. Have students go through their notebooks weekly to discard old papers and make sure the pages are in the right sections.

\section*{ASSESSMENT AT A GLANCE}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 6 All-in-One Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 6 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Debates, pp. 687, 699
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

\section*{COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING}

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) land, labor, and capital (b) The factors of production are the basic resources used to make all goods and services in any economic system.
2. (a) Competition keeps prices low and quality high. (b) A market may become a monopoly, which can lead to higher prices and less innovation. (c) It can regulate the market to prevent the formation of monopolies and price fixing.
3. (a) carry out foreign relations and defend the country; protect private property, public health, safety, and morals; carry out other tasks that private companies cannot carry out profitably (b) Answers will vary; students should support their opinions with reasoned arguments and details from the text.

\section*{SECTION 2}
4. (a) Under capitalism, the proletariat-workers-are oppressed by the bourgeoi-sie-those who own the capital. Capitalists maintain their power and privilege through the state, its government, and social institutions. (b) Both systems seek to redistribute weal th that, in capitalism, is concentrated in one group, establish economic equality, and see to it that all citizens have their basic needs met.
5. (a) Answers include: nationalization of industries, a welfare state, high tax rates, and central planning. (b) a strong Communist Party, central planning, collective agriculture, and state ownership of industry and property (c) In a Communist country, government does not just participate, it controls the economy to a much greater degree than in a socialist country.
6. (a) Possible response: Yes. Profit motivates individuals to show initiative, risks, and work hard. Under communism and, to a lesser extent socialism, people keep little of what they earn and their basic needs are met without taking initiative, so they are less motivated to do so. (b) Answers will vary but might allude to social services, taxes, and the nature of business and degrees of freedom in the marketplace under each system.

\section*{SECTION 3}
7. (a) Through various departments and agencies, the U.S. government regulates

\section*{Comprehension and Critical Thinking}

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) What are the three factors of production? (b) What role do the factors of production play in the economy?
2. (a) Why is competition important in a free market economy? (b) What might happen in a market without competition? (c) How might government promote competition?
3. (a) According to laissez-faire theory, what are the three major concerns of government? (b) Do you think this amounts to too little, too much, or just about the right amount of involvement for government? Why?

\section*{Section 2}
4. (a) Briefly explain Karl Marx's basic ideas about capitalism. (b) In what sense are socialism and communism a response to capitalism?
5. (a) What are three characteristics of socialist countries? (b) What are four characteristics of communist countries? (c) How does government participation in the economy vary in the two systems?
6. (a) Many people say that socialism and communism discourage individuals from taking initiatives. Is this criticism valid? Why or why not? (b) How does capitalism differ from command economies in the treatment of the individual?

\section*{Section 3}
7. (a) Summarize the role of the Federal Government in the American economy. (b) Describe how three institutions of the Federal Government help carry out this role.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
10. Essential Question Activity In small groups, meet with a business owner in your community. Ask: (a) How do you think the American system of government supports or encourages economic freedom? (b) How does a free market help your business? (c) In what ways do you think your life and your business would be different in a socialist or communist system?
(d) Do you think that the Federal Government should be more or less involved in the economy, workers' rights, and social welfare?
8. Analyzing Cartoons Study the cartoon below about a Senate candidate and tariffs on steel. (a) Why would steel workers and auto workers have different views on steel tariffs? (b) What does this indicate about the effect of tariffs on jobs? (c) Is this cartoon in favor of free trade, opposed to free trade, or neutral? Explain.

\section*{WI WUTK STLE WHF D OVR.P TE STELVCCKITK}

\section*{Writing About Government}
9. Use your Quick Write exercises from the section assessments in this chapter to write an essay that compares and contrasts the two topics you selected. Make sure that the information is accurate and that comparisons are reasoned and relevant. End your essay with a summarizing conclusion. See pp. S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

Chapter 23 Assessment
the domestic marketplace to ensure fairness, workplace safety, a minimum wage, and fair hiring practices, and regulates prices and inflation via the Federal Reserve. It also works through its membership in several international organizations, such as the World Bank, to expand global trade to increase jobs and strengthen the U.S. economy. (b) Possible response: The Federal Reserve promotes price stability, full employment, and economic growth mainly through adjusting the federal funds rate. The Security and Exchange Commission oversees the stock markets to prevent abuses such as insider trading. The Department of Labor provides protections for the rights of workers and oversees fairness and safety in the workplace.
8. (a) The steel tariff is relatively high so that the U.S. steel industry and its workers are protected. However, a high steel tariff could lead to higher auto prices, which could hurt auto workers. (b) A tariff could have both positive and negative effects on jobs, depending on the industries involved. (c) Possible answer: The cartoon is neutral because it recognizes that free trade has both positive and negative effects.

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}

\section*{Government and the Economy}

As the United States approached its entry into World War II, President Franklin Roosevelt defined "four freedoms" government should protect, as shown in Document 1. While many question how far the government should intervene in the economy, the Federal Government often acts with the intent to influence business trends, as in Document 3.

\section*{Document 3}

In 2008, President Bush sought to boost the nation's flagging economy by sending each American tax payer a payment of several hundred dollars.

This growth package must be big enough to make a difference in an economy as large and dynamic as ours

This growth package must be built on broad-based tax relief that will directly affect economic growth - and not the kind of spending projects that would have little immediate impact on our economy. This growth package must be temporary and take effect right away-so we can get help to our economy when it needs it most. And this growth package must not include any tax increases. . . . We're in the midst of a challenging period, and I know Americans are concerned about our economic future. But our economy has seen challenging times before-and it is resilient. In a vibrant economy, markets rise and decline. We cannot change that fundamental dynamic. As a matter of fact, eliminating risk altogether would also eliminate the innovation and productivity that drives the creation of jobs and wealth in America.
-Presidential address, January 18, 2008
```

Use your knowledge of government's role in the economy and

```
Documents 1, 2, and 3 to answer Questions 1-3.
1. In his speech, Franklin Roosevelt expressed the idea that
A. all nations should govern their people in the same way as does the United States.
B. the most important long-term goal of all nations should be rearmament.
C. it is the responsibility of government to ensure the welfare of all of its citizens
D. the global political situation is very dangerous and no one is secure
2. How does President Bush characterize downturns in the American economy?
3. Pull It Together Do you think that Bush's economic growth plan fulfills the third freedom described by Roosevelt? Why or why not?

\section*{- GOVERNMENT ONLINE}

To find more primary sources about the economy, visit PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. C
2. He sees economic downturns as part of the rise and fall of markets in a vibrant economy, and believes that risk is necessary to achieve innovation and productivity.
3. Possible answer: I believe that Bush's plan is less far-reaching and temporary, compared to Roosevelt's idea that government has the responsibility to intervene in the economy in order to ensure citizens' welfare. on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
9. Essays should compare and contrast two economic systems and end with a summarizing conclusion.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
10. Responses should summarize the interviewee's answers.
11. Students' statements should include the views of the interviewee on economic freedom and the role of the government in the economy, as well as their own ideas about the connections between economic and political freedom.

\section*{ANSWERS TO ESSENTIAL QUESTION WARMUP}

Before assigning these questions, distribute the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 6 All-inOne, p. 102). Use the criteria and the guidelines below to grade students' answers to the Essential Question Warmup questions. Then send students to the Essential Questions Journal to answer the unit Essential Question.
1. A strong answer will give a coherent and wellconsidered definition of needs.
2. A strong answer will demonstrate the student's understanding of various political systems and historical events. It will also explain how specific leaders or nations approached the wellbeing of the people.
3. A good answer will state a position on whether a single person or party can understand and identify the needs of a people and why it would or would not. It will explain the reasons why such governments have often been unresponsive to people's needs in the past.
4. To answer this question successfully, students must identify the aspects of a free market system that address the collective needs. Further, students may find it necessary to address the definition of need in context.

\section*{Assessment Resources}

Unit 6 AYP Monitoring Assessment
ExamView Test Bank CD-ROM
SuccessTracker Assessment
Online Student Self-Tests
Chapter Tests
Section Quizzes
Chapter-level Document-Based Assessment

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions:}

\section*{UNIT 7}

What is the right balance of federal, State, and local government?

\section*{CHAPTER 24}

How much power should State government have?
activate prior knowledge have students examine the photo and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the photo and quotation suggest about the relationship between State governments and the Federal Government? (that strong State governments together create a strong Federal Government)In this chapter, students will learn about the elements of State governments. Then tell students to begin to further explore these topics by completing the Chapter 24 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses as a class.

\section*{BEFORE READING}

ELL Differentiate Chapter 24 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 11)

SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER
Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

You may wish to teach problem solving as a distinct skill within Section 3 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 24 Skills Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 37) to help students learn how to solve problems. The worksheet asks students to explore issues of public trust in State government. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 38).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online}

The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about State governments.

\section*{Block Scheduling}
bLock 1: Teach the Section 1, 2, and 3 lessons, omitting the Section 1 discussion of federalism and the Section 2 discussion of legislative and non-legislative powers. In Section 3, omit the mock executive meeting. Omit the Extend options for all sections. BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 4 and 5 lessons, omitting the Extend options for Section 4. Assign the Extend option for Section 5.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

To cover the chapter quickly, have students describe the basic structure and function of the Federal Government (the three branches, the executive leader, the courts, and so on). As they do so, create a concept web on the board. As you discuss each part of the structure, describe how that structure applies to State governments, including the fact that each is based on a written constitution. Explain the powers of each branch of State government. Ask students to recreate the concept web from the board in their notebooks, title it "State Governments," and add details to each part as they read Sections 2-5.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- examine the origins, features, and purposes of State constitutions through discussion of the six main principles of State constitutions.
- analyze their State constitution and complete a chart identifying areas for reform.
- discuss federalism and locate supporting information in the U.S. Constitution.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- compare and contrast features of State legislatures with those of the U.S. Congress.
- identify and rank the main powers of State legislatures and provide examples of each.
- discuss how State legislatures influence the lives of citizens and how citizens influence lawmaking.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- complete a chart to examine the powers of a State governor.
- complete a worksheet to compare and contrast State governorships with the U.S. presidency.
- participate in a mock meeting to investigate the roles and responsibilities of State executive officers.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- demonstrate knowledge of the five forms of law by completing a concept web.
- compare and contrast features of criminal versus civil law.
- analyze summaries of court cases.

\section*{SECTION 5}

Students will
- discuss the positive and negative aspects of electing or appointing judges.
- evaluate methods of judge selection by reading primary sources and through participation in a Socratic Dialogue.

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
\(\square 1\)
Special Needs
L2
Basic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4
Advanced Students

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

\section*{What are the defining features of State constitutions?}

\section*{I. The First State Constitutions}

A Independence
1. first modeled on colonial charters
2. most today became effective after popular vote
B. Principles of State constitutions
1. popular sovereignty; limited government
2. bill of rights; separation of powers; checks and balances; bicameral
II. State Constitutions Today
A. Basic Principles
1. popular sovereignty and limited government
2. separation of powers; checks and balances
B. Bill of rights
C. Structure of State and local government
D. Powers and processes
E. Process for constitutional change
F. Miscellaneous provisions
1. preamble-purpose
2. schedule for putting into effect
3. dead letter provisions-no current effect

\section*{III. Constitutional Change}
A. Procedures for Change
1. steps: proposal; then ratification
2. conventions for revision
3. amendment proposed by legislature or initiative
B. Ratification of Amendments-usually majority vote IV. Need for Reform

A many State constitutions are too long
B. fail to distinguish fundamental from statutory law
C. outdated

CONSTITUTION

\section*{State}

Constitutions

\section*{utions}

\section*{SECTION 1}

1

\section*{Guiding Question}

What are the defining features of State constitutions? Use an outline to take notes on the defining qualities of State constitutions.

\section*{I. The First State Constitutions}
A. Independence
1.
B. \({ }^{2}\)
B. \({ }^{\text {1. }}\) 2.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- popular & - fundamental \\ sovereignty & law \\
- limited & - initiative \\ government & - statutory law
\end{tabular}

Objectives
1. Examine the history, content, and significance of the first State constitutions.
2. Describe the basic principles common to all State constitutions today.
3. Explain the procedures used to change State constitutions.
4. Analyze why State constitutions are in need of reform.

Not very many people have ever seen a State constitution, let alone read one. Join a rather exclusive club and look at your State's document. This step should prove useful as you read this chapter.

A State constitution is that State's supreme law. It sets out the ways in which the government of the State is organized, and it distributes powers among the various branches of that government. It authorizes the exercise of power by government and, at the same time, puts limits on the exercise of power by government. Every State's constitution is superior to any and all other forms of State and local law within that State.

Recall, however: Each State's constitution is subordinate to the Constitution of the United States. No provision in any State's constitution may conflict with any form of federal law.

\section*{The First State Constitutions}

Each of the 50 States has a written constitution. From the beginning, government in this country has been based on written constitutions.

Our experience with such documents dates from 1606, when King James I granted a charter to the Virginia Company. That act led to the settlement at Jamestown in the following year and, with it, the first government in what would become British North America. Later, each of the other English colonies was also established and governed on the basis of a written charter.

Independence When the 13 colonies became independent, each faced the problem of establishing a new government. On May 15, 1776, the Second Continental Congress, meeting in Philadelphia, advised each of the new States to adopt "such governments as shall, in the opinion of the representatives of the people, best conduce to the happiness and safety of their constituents in particular, and America in general."
-Second Continental Congress

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

To help students learn to analyze sources, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S14, and use the information there to assist them in examining their State constitution for the Extend Worksheet activity.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: • The first State constitutions emerged from colonial charters and the revolutionary experience. - State constitutions outline the governments' basic principles, protect civil rights, define the structure of State government and its functions, and include procedures for amendment. • State constitutions can be changed by formal amendment or revision, usually with approval by popular vote.
CONCEPTS: constitutional government, fundamental law, initiative
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Every State has a unique written constitution that defines the State's government and values. - Many State constitutions need reform to remove outdated and confusing provisions.

Most of the colonial charters served as models for the first State constitutions. Indeed, in Connecticut and Rhode Island, the charters seemed so well suited to the needs of the day that they were carried over into statehood as constitutions almost without change. \({ }^{1}\)

The earliest State constitutions were adopted in a variety of ways. However, the people played no direct part in the process in any State.

Six of the revolutionary legislatures drew up new documents and proclaimed them in force in 1776. In none of those States-Maryland, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and Virginia-was the new constitution offered to the people for their judgment.

In Delaware and New Hampshire in 1776, and in Georgia and New York in 1777, the constitutions were prepared by conventions called by the legislature. In each case, the new document had to be approved by the legislature in order to become effective, but in none was popular approval required.

In 1780 , a popularly elected convention prepared a new constitution for Massachusetts. It was then ratified by a vote of the people. Thus, Massachusetts set the pattern of popular participation in the constitutionmaking process, a pattern generally followed among the States ever since. \({ }^{2}\)

Assemblies representing the people drafted all of the present State constitutions; most of them became effective only after a popular vote. Only the present-day documents of Delaware (1897), Mississippi (1890), South Carolina (1895), and Vermont (1793) came into force without popular ratification.

Principles of State Constitutions Because the first State constitutions came out of the same revolutionary ferment, they shared many basic features. Each proclaimed

\footnotetext{
1 Connecticut's legislature did not write a new document until 1818, and Rhode Island's waited until 1842.
}

2 As we noted in Chapter 2, with independence Massachusetts relied on the colonial charter in force there prior to 1691 as its first State constitution. When New Hampshire adopted its second and (present) constitution in 1784, it followed the Massachusetts model of popular convention and popular ratification.
the principles of popular sovereignty and limited government. That is, in each of them the people were recognized as the sole source of authority for government, and the powers given to the new government were closely limited. Seven documents began with a lengthy bill of rights. All of them made it clear that the sovereign people held "certain unalienable rights" that government must respect.

The doctrines of separation of powers and checks and balances were also built into each of the new constitutions. In practice, however, the memory of the hated royal governors was still fresh. Thus, most of the authority that each State government had was given to the legislature. For example, only New York, Massachusetts, and South Carolina allowed the governor to veto acts of the legislature. In all the States except Georgia (until 1789) and Pennsylvania (until 1790), the legislature was bicameral. \({ }^{3}\)

For their time, the early State constitutions were fairly democratic. Each however, contained several provisions (and some important omissions) that were quite undemocratic by today's standards. Thus, none of them provided for full religious freedom. Each one set rigid qualifications for voting and for officeholding, and all gave property owners a highly favored standing.

\section*{State Constitutions Today}

The present-day State constitutions are the direct descendants of those earlier documents. Only 17 of the current State constitutions were written after 1900, and nearly all have been amended dozens of times.

Subject only to the broad limitations set out in the Federal Constitution, the people of each State can create whatever kind of "Republican Form of 3 Vermont, which became the 14th State in 1791, had a unicameral legislature until 1836. Only Nebraska has a one-house legislative body today, and it has had one since 1937.

\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Who drafted the first State constitutions?
ferment
n. a state of great change

State constitutions
often specify designs
for State symbols, including the State including the State seal.

Chapter 24 • Section 1709

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 24, Section 1:
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 11)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 15)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 16)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 17)
L3 54 Extend Worksheet (p. 19)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 20)
L3 Quiz A (p. 21)
L2 Quiz B (p. 22)

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- examine the origins, features, and purposes of State constitutions through discussion of the six main principles of State constitutions.
- analyze their State constitution and complete a chart identifying areas for reform.
- discuss federalism and locate supporting information in the U.S. Constitution.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 15) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 16)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

In their notebooks, ask students to answer this question: Why do we have State constitutions as well as a U.S. Constitution?

\section*{L2 Differentiate Rephrase the directions. Ask:}

\section*{What does a State constitution do that the U.S.}

Constitution does not? Allow students to use their textbooks for ideas.
L2 ELL Differentiate Suggest that students create a concept web to record their ideas about why we have State constitutions.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Ask students to share their ideas from the Bellringer activity about why State constitutions are needed. Examples may include: to set up State government, regulate the safety and welfare of citizens at the State level, limit the power of the State government, and pass and execute laws at the local level. Display Transparency 24A, Six Principles of State Constitutions. Have students describe each principle and explain why it is important for each to operate at the State level.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Clarify that a principle is "an important basic belief or idea." Point out the difference in spelling between principle and principal.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Most were based on colonial charters and written by legislatures or conventions, without popular approval.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Divide the class into pairs. Distribute copies of your State's constitution to students. (You may obtain copies of the constitution from governmental offices, such as the secretary of state, or online.) Then distribute Chapter 24 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 17). Either assign different sections of the constitution to each pair, or have all pairs read the entire document. Explain that they will learn about the nature of State constitutions and why reforms are needed by analyzing the constitution or their assigned section and completing the chart in the Core Worksheet.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate You may wish to assign partners so that advanced or proficient students are paired with English language learners or less-proficient students. Check that students are sharing tasks fairly.
Differentiate Display Transparency 24B, The Appeals Process. Discuss with students how a State's constitution grants power to the courts and establishes processes. Ask students to speculate how the issue in the cartoon could be resolved by a constitution. (The constitution could set limits on appeals. )

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Charts They all include basic principles of popular sovereignty, separation of powers, checks and balances; a bill of rights; structure and processes of government; powers of each branch; amendment process; and a preamble.
Checkpoint Most were written before 1900 and are direct descendants of earlier documents.

Elements of State Constitutions

1) Analyzing Charts How are the several State constitutions similar to the federal Constitution?
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
When were most cur rent State constitutions adopted?

Government" they choose. Unique provisions can be found in each of the 50 presentday State constitutions. Still, all of them are quite similar in general outline.

Basic Principles Every State's constitution is built on the principles of popular sovereignty and limited government. Each of them recognizes that government exists only with the consent of the people, and that it must operate within certain, often closely defined, bounds. In every State, the powers of government are divided among executive, legislative, and judicial branches. Each branch has powers with which it can restrain the actions of the other two. That is, each of the 50 documents proclaims separation of powers and, with it, checks and balances. Each also provides, either expressly or by implication, for the power of judicial review.

Protections of Civil Rights Each document features a bill of rights, a listing of the rights that individuals hold against the State and its officers and agencies. Most constitutions set out guarantees much like those in the first ten amendments to the national Constitution. Several of them include a number of other guarantees as well-for example, the right to self-government, to be safe from imprisonment for debt, and to organize labor unions and bargain collectively.

Governmental Structure Every State constitution deals with the structure of government at both the State and the local levels, including all three branches of State government and the organization of counties and local governments. A few follow the national pattern, providing only a broad outline. Most, however, cover the subject in considerable and often quite specific detail.

Governmental Powers and Processes Each document lists, in detail, the powers vested in the executive branch (the governor and other executive officers), the legislature, the courts, and the units of local government. The powers to tax, spend, borrow, and provide for education are very prominent. So, too, are such processes as elections, legislation, judicial procedures, and intergovernmental (State-local) relations.

Constitutional Change Constitutions are the product of human effort. None are perfect. Sooner or later, changes become necessary, or at least desirable. So, each State constitution sets out the means by which it may be revised or amended. Constitutions are fundamental laws-laws of such basic and lasting importance they cannot be changed as ordinary law can be. Constitutional changes are more difficult to bring about, as you shall see.

\section*{Constitutional Principles}

LIMITED GOVERNMENT AND COLONIAL RULE The principle of limited government in American State and National constitutions can be traced back to oppressive policies of British colonial rule. For example, the British Parliament claimed the right to impose taxes on the colonists, despite the fact that the colonists could not elect officials to represent them in the British Parliament. Britain required the colonists to house British troops in their homes. When the assembly in New York refused to agree to follow through with this demand, Parliament threatened to dissolve the assembly. For many colonists, the main purpose of the struggle for independence was to free themselves from what they saw as illegal and unfair policies. As a result, the colonists wrote many limits into the State and National constitutions to make sure that their new governments could not encroach on their rights in these ways.

- Processes for amendment
- Empowers States to tax, spend, and borrow

Miscellaneous Provisions Every State constitution contains several sections of a miscellaneous character. Thus, most begin with a preamble, which has no legal force but does set out the purposes of those who drafted and adopted the document. Most also contain a schedule, a series of provisions for putting a new document into effect and for avoiding conflicts with its predecessor. And most include a number of "dead letter" provisions, items that have no current force or effect but nonetheless remain a part of the constitution.

Constitutional Change
Like the national Constitution, the State constitutions have been altered over time by formal amendment and by such other processes as court decisions and custom. However, those other processes have not been nearly so important at the State level as at the national level.

State constitutions are much less flexible, and much more detailed, than the national document. Constitutional change and development at the State level has come about mostly through formal amendment rather than by other means.

Two kinds of formal changes have been used: amendments, which usually deal with one or a few provisions in a constitution; and revisions, the term usually used to refer to changes of a broader scope. Revisions might include, for example, an entirely new document. Most of the formal changes made in State constitutions are made by amendment.

Procedures for Change The process of formal change involves two basic steps: proposal and then ratification. Proposals for change can be made by a constitutional convention, the legislature, or (in several States) by the voters themselves. Ratification is by popular vote in every State except Delaware.

The constitutional convention is the usual device by which new constitutions have been written and older ones revised. More than 200 such conventions have been held. In every State the legislature has the power to call a convention, and that call is generally subject to voter approval. In 14 States the question of calling a convention must be submitted to the voters at regular intervals. \({ }^{4}\) Conventions can also propose amendments. However, because they are both costly and time-consuming, conventions are most often used for the broader purpose of revision.

Most amendments are proposed by the legislature. The process is comparatively simple in some States, while it is quite difficult in others. In Massachusetts, an amendment must

4 Every 20 years in Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland, Missouri, Montana, New York, Ohio, and Oklahoma; every 16 years in Michigan; every 10 years in Alaska, lowa, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island; and every 9 years in Hawaii

DISCUSS FEDERALISM
Wrap up this activity by discussing federalism and the need for both State and National governments. Have students examine the U.S. Constitution to identify at least five areas that outline or support the federal system. They should look for articles and amendments that describe the powers granted and denied to the National Government and powers reserved to the State Governments.

EXTEND THE LESSON
L3 L4 Differentiate Have students work individually or with a partner to complete Chapter 24 Section 1 Extend Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 19).
L2 Differentiate Have students create a timeline that includes main events in the history and development of your State's constitution or the main events in the passage of a recent amendment. Timeline items might include the date when the constitution was ratified and the dates of major amendments or updates.
L2 ELL Differentiate Have visual learners or English language learners design a mural that illustrates all six principles of State constitutions. For "miscellaneous provisions," encourage students to study your State's constitution for ideas.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "Finding Information About Your State" (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 20), which has students research for data about their State.

Background
OLDEST AND NEWEST STATE CONSTITUTIONS The Massachusetts constitution of 1780 and New Hampshire's constitution of 1784 are the oldest State constitutions still in force. In fact, the constitutions of these two States are older than all other written constitutions in effect in the world today. At the other extreme, Louisiana has adopted a new constitution 11 times since statehood in 1812, most recently in 1974. Georgia adopted its tenth and current constitution in 1983.

Answers
Checkpoint basic principles of popular sovereignty and limited government; protections of civil rights; governmental structure; governmental powers and processes; constitutional change; miscellaneous provisions

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the "How Government Works: Amending State Constitutions" diagram.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess students' work using the Rubric for Assessing a Graph, Chart, or Table (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 124).

回
Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 21)Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 22)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Diagrams Amendments can be proposed by legislators, who are elected by the people, or by the people themselves. The people then vote on the proposed amendments.
Checkpoint Proposals for change can be made by a constitutional convention, the legislature, or an initiative of the people, with ratification by popular vote in every state except Delaware.

\section*{How Government Works}

Amending State Constitutions amendment on ballot.

on ballot.
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE Audio Tour Listen to a guided audio tour of this diagram at PearsonSuccessNet.com
1) Analyzing Diagrams How does the amendment process for State constitutions reflect the idea of popular sovereignty?
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) Describe the procedure for changing a State's constitution.

\section*{obsolete}
adj. out of date
be approved by the legislature at two successive annual sessions before it goes to the voters for approval or rejection. In California, a proposal must be approved by the legislature at a single session before being sent on to the voters. Not surprisingly, more amendments are proposed (and adopted) in those States with simpler processes, such as California, than in States such as Massachusetts.

In 18 States the voters themselves can propose constitutional amendments through the initiative, a process in which a certain number of qualified voters sign petitions in favor of a proposal. The proposal then goes directly to the ballot, for approval or rejection by the people.

Ratification of Amendments In every State except Delaware, an amendment must be approved by vote of the people in order to become part of the constitution. The ratification process, like the proposal process, varies among the States. \({ }^{5}\)

In Delaware, if an amendment is approved by a two-thirds vote in each house of the legislature at two successive sessions, becomes effective. In South Carolina, final ratification, after a favorable vote by the people, depends on a majority vote in both houses of the legislature. Both the Alabama and South Carolina constitutions provide that amendments of local, as opposed to Statewide, application need be approved only by the voters in the affected locale.

Typically, the approval of a majority of those voting on an amendment adds it to the State constitution, though some States require a majority of all who vote in an election. On many occasions, in several States, amendments have been defeated though they received more yes votes than no votes. Most often, this happens because many voters fail to vote on all or at least some ballot measures.

\section*{The Need for Reform}

Almost without exception, State constitutions are in urgent need of reform. The typical document is cluttered with unnecessary details, burdensome restrictions, and obsolete sections. It also carries much repetitious, even contradictory, material. Moreover, it fails to deal with many of the pressing problems that the States and their local governments currently face.

Even the newest and most recently rewritten constitutions tend to carry over a great deal of material from earlier documents and suffer from these same faults. The need for reform can be demonstrated in several ways. Looking at the documents from two standpoints, their lengths and their ages, can produce some useful insights.

The Problem of Length Length was not a problem for the first State constitutions. They were quite short, ranging from New Jersey's 1776 document ( 2,500 words) to the 1780 Massachusetts constitution (12,000 words). Those early constitutions were meant simply to be statements of basic principle and organization. Purposely, they left to the legislatureand to time and practice-the task of filling in the details as they became necessary.

Through the years, however, State constitutions have grown and grown. Most today are between 15,000 and 40,000 words. The shortest are those of Vermont (1793), with some 8,500 words and New Hampshire (1784), which totals about 9,200 words. At the other extreme, Alabama's 1901 constitution now runs to more than 300,000 words. A leading cause of this expansion is popular distrust of government, a historical and continuing fact of American political life. That distrust has often led to the insertion into State constitutions of detailed proposing a state constitutional amendment Have students apply the How Government Works diagram, "Amending State Constitutions," on this page to their own State. Working with the same partner, have student pairs select a proposed constitutional change they identified in their Core Worksheet. Ask them to write a description of the change in the form of proposed legislation. Then have them write a justification for the change that they would present to the voters to urge them to approve the amendment. For an interactive version of "Amending State Constitutions," go to PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{How Government Works}
provisions aimed at preventing the misuse of government power.

Many restrictions on that power, which could be set out in ordinary law, have been purposely written into the State constitution, where they cannot be easily ignored or readily, and quietly, changed. Special interest groups learned long ago that public policies of particular benefit to them are much more secure in the State constitution than in a mere statute.

There has been a marked failure in every State to distinguish fundamental law, that which is basic and of lasting importance and should be in the constitution, from statutory law, that which should be enacted as ordinary law by the legislature. The line separating fundamental and statutory law may be blurry in some cases. But who can seriously argue that fundamental law includes the regulation of the length of wrestling matches, as in California's constitution, or the problem of off-street parking in the city of Baltimore, as in Maryland's document?

Two other factors have contributed to the growth of State constitutions. First, the functions performed by the States, and by most of their local governments, have multiplied over recent decades. That development has prompted many new constitutional provisions. Second, the "people" have not been stingy in the use of the initiative in those States where it is available.

The Problem of Age Most State constitutions are severely outdated. They were written for another time and are in urgent need of revision. All too often, their many amendments have aggravated the problem, adding to the clutter of the document.

The Oregon constitution provides a typical example of the situation. It was written by delegates to a territorial convention in 1857 and became effective in 1859. It has been amended more than 240 times; it now contains more than 55,000 words and includes two Articles VII and nineteen Articles XI!

Like most of the other State charters, the Oregon document is overloaded with statutory material. One of those Article XIs devotes nearly 2,000 words to a closely detailed treatment of veterans' farm and home loans. The document also contains a number of obsolete provisions, including one that bars any person who has ever engaged in a duel from holding any public office in the State.

Some States' charters have proved to be more stable than others. The oldest of all the constitutions are those in Massachusetts (1780), New Hampshire (1784), and Vermont (1793). Nineteen States still have the constitutions with which they entered the Union and, all told, 35 have documents that are now more than 100 years old.

A number of States have had several constitutions. Louisiana holds the record, with eleven. Georgia's current charter, its tenth, is the most recently rewritten document; it was adopted in 1982 and became effective the following year.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the two main problems of State constitutions today?

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a }\end{aligned}\) Journal Essential Question, go to your}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: What are the defining features of State constitutions?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. Explain the concept of popula sovereignty as it applies to State governments
3. (a) List and explain three ways changes to State constitutions may be proposed. (b) How are proposed changes ratified?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Predict Consequences Would early State governments have developed differently if they had not grown out of the experiences of the American Revolution?
5. Draw Inferences Why do you think that many State constitutions remain so lengthy and unnecessarily detailed and have so many outdated provisions?

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Writing: Explore a Topic Based on your prior knowledge and what you have read in this section, write at least three questions that explore the ways in which State governments affect your life. (You may also want to preview Sections 2-5 for also want to preview Sections \(2-5\) fo additional questions.) For example, additional questions.) For example, you might ask: Which have the mos direct effect on individual citizens, direct effect on individual citital State laws or federal laws?

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint too long and out of date

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. popular sovereignty and limited government; protection of civil rights; governmental structure; governmental powers and processes; process for constitutional change; miscellaneous provisions
2. The people of the State are the source of authority for the State's government.
3. (a) By convention: The legislature calls a constitutional convention to write a new State constitution or revise the existing one. By a legislature: The State legislature proposes amendments. By initiative: A specified number of voters signs a petition to put a proposal on the ballot, and voters either accept or reject it. (b) by voters in every State except Delaware
4. Students may suggest that the struggle to win freedom from an oppressive British government led States to establish many limits on government power and protect civil liberties and popular sovereignty.
5. The constitutional change process is cumbersome; the changes are often not a high priority for either government officials or the public.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{l}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The defining features \\ of State constitutions \\
(Questions 1, 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Display Transparency 24A, Six Principles of \\ State Constitutions. Have students copy the \\ concept web in their notebooks and add \\ details from the textbook.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Methods for changing \\
State constitutions \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Tell students to review the How Government \\ Works diagram on page 712, "Amending \\ State Constitutions." Ask them to summarize \\ in their own words what the diagram shows. \\ Atternatively, students may draw a flowchart \\ with labels in their notebooks.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The basis of early \\ State constitutions \\ and governments \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Describe some events and feelings that led \\ to the American Revolution-the resentment \\ over taxation without representation and \\ other forced measures of the British govern- \\ ment -and how those events affected those \\ who wrote the new constitutions.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Need for reform in \\ State constitutions \\
(Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students review the material under \\ "The Need for Reform" and write a main \\ idea for each paragraph.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

QUICK WRITE A strong answer will relate questions to the content of the sections and to students' lives.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What are the defining traits and purpose of State legislatures?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline Purpose/Structure & Powers & Organization \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- Purpose is to make the law \\
- 49 are bicameral \\
-30-50 members in most upper houses \\
-100-150 members in most lower houses \\
- elected from districts
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- all those not granted to executive, courts, or local government \\
- all those not denied by State or U.S. constitutions \\
- tax, spend, borrow, establish courts/jurisdiction, define crimes/punishment, regulate commerce, maintain schools \\
- police power \\
- approve or reject appointments \\
- discipline and impeach \\
- constituent power
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- speaker presides \\
in lower house \\
- president of senate is lieutenant governor in 23 States \\
- president pro tempore serves in lieutenant governor's absence \\
- standing committee of each house organized by subject \\
- bills introduced by legislators, but may come from agencies, local governments, interest groups, public \end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- compare and contrast features of State legislatures with those of the U.S. Congress.
- identify and rank the main powers of State legislatures and provide examples of each.
- discuss how State legislatures influence the lives of citizens and how citizens influence lawmaking.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS}

To help students learn to analyze political cartoons, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S22, and use the steps explained there to complete the Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{State \\ Legislatures}

Guiding Question
What are the defining traits and purpose of State legislatures? Use a table similar to the one below to record the main facts about State legislatures.

Political Dictionary
- police power
- constituent power
- referendum

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe State legislatures.
2. Explain the election, terms, and compensation of legislators.
3. Examine the powers and organization of State legislatures.
4. Describe how voters may write and pass laws through direct legislation.

Image Above: Virginia's House of Delegates

1n every State, the legislature, whatever it is called, is the lawmaking branch of State government. So, its basic function goes to the very heart of democratic government: It is charged with translating the public will into the public policy of the State.

\section*{The Legislature}

Several features of their lawmaking bodies vary among the 50 States. This is notably true with regard to both name and size.

Name and Structure Just over half the States call their lawmaking body, officially, the "legislature." In 19 States it is known as the "General Assembly," in two States, the "Legislative Assembly", and in two other States, the "General Court."

All but one of the 50 State legislatures are bicameral, having two chambers. The upper house is known everywhere as "the Senate." The lower house is most commonly titled "the House of Representatives," but may also be "the Assembly," "the General Assembly," or "the House of Delegates." Nebraska, the only State with a one-house legislature, calls it "the Legislature."

As with Congress, bicameralism came to America's legislative bodies out of the colonial experience. Unicameralism is regularly cited as one of the most significant steps that could be taken to improve State legislatures. Despite its apparent successes in Nebraska, efforts to accomplish it elsewhere have been notably unsuccessful. Those who defend bicameralism usually claim that one house can and does act as a check on the other, and so prevent the passage of unwise legislation. Whether that widely held view is justified or not, it has proved a major barrier to the spread of one-chamber lawmaking bodies.

Size There may be no ideal size for a legislative body, but two basic considerations are important. First, a legislature, and each of its houses, should not be so large as to hamper the orderly conduct of the people's business. Second, it should not be so small that the many views and interests within the State cannot be adequately represented.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: • State laws may not conflict with the U.S. Constitution. • Like Congress, nearly all legislatures are bicameral and have presiding officers and committees. - The 50 State constitutions set very different qualifications, terms, pay, and work calendars for their legislators. - In some States, voters can propose bills through initiatives or approve or defeat legislative bills through a referendum vote.
CONCEPTS: representative government, legislative branch, initiative and referendum ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - State constitutions set up their legislatures according to citizens' views on the relative power of government. - The initiative and referendum give voters a role in lawmaking.

The upper house in most States has from 30 to 50 members, with as few as 20 senators in Alaska and as many as 67 in Minnesota. The lower house usually ranges between 100 and 150 members. However, there are only 40 seats in Alaska's lower chamber, and New Hampshire's has a whopping 400!

\section*{State Legislators}

Today, there are 7,382 State legislators-5,411 representatives and 1,971 senators-among the 50 States. Nearly all of them are Republicans or Democrats; fewer than 20 belong to a minor party or are independents.

Qualifications Every State's constitution sets out formal requirements of age, citizenship, and residence for legislators. Most everywhere, a representative must be at least 21 years old and senators must be at least 25 . The realities of the politics of the State add informal qualifications far more difficult to meet. They have to do with a candidate's votegetting abilities, and are based on such things as occupation, name recognition, party, race, religion, national origin, and the like.

Election Everywhere, legislators are chosen by popular vote and, almost everywhere, candidates for the legislature are nominated at party primaries. Nominees are picked by conventions in only a few States. In Nebraska, the unicameral legislature is organized on a nonpartisan basis. Candidates are nominated at nonpartisan primaries, and they are not identified by party in the general election.

In most States, the lawmakers are elected in November of even-numbered years. In four States, however-Mississippi, New Jersey, Virginia, and Louisiana-lawmakers are chosen in the odd-numbered years, in the hope of separating State and local issues from national politics.

Districts Every State's constitution requires that legislators be chosen from districts within the State, and nearly all are now elected from single-member districts. Those districts are drawn by the legislature itself in most States, and they are redrawn (reapportioned) every ten years, in line with the federal census. Gerrymandering is quite common.

Most State legislatures were long dominated by the rural, less-populated areas of the State. In Baker v. Carr, 1962, however, the United States Supreme Court held the unfair, unequal distribution of State legislative seats to be a violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the 14 th Amendment. That historic \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the qualifications for State legislators?

\section*{nonpartisan}
adj. not belonging to or favoring any political party

State representatives Alisha Thomas Morgan of Georgia (left) and Justin Davis of South Dakota (right) were in their early 20s when first elected. What valuable perspectives might young legislators bring to State government?

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 24, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 23)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 25)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 27)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 28)
L3 Quiz A (p. 29)
L2 Quiz B (p. 30)

BEFORE CLASS
Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 23) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 25)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: How are State legislatures similar to the U.S. Congress? How are they different? Answer in your notebook.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{COMPARE AND CONTRAST}

Distribute the Chapter 24 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 27). Draw a large Venn diagram on the board-or display the Venn Diagram graphic organizer transparency-and label it in the same way as the one on the Core Worksheet. With students, analyze features of State legislatures by comparing and contrasting them with the U.S. Congress. Have students complete their Venn diagram on the Core Worksheet as you discuss each feature. You may want to compare and contrast the following topics:
- Purpose
- Structure
- Member qualifications
- Election process
- Terms
- Compensation
- Powers

L3 Differentiate Refer students to the chapter on the U.S. Congress if they need help recalling its features.
L2 Differentiate Remind students to use the headings in the section to locate information they may need to fill in the Venn diagram.
\(\square 1\)
ELL Differentiate Check that students understand the meanings of the key terms before you begin. Pronounce the more challenging terms, such as constituent. Suggest that students add their own phonetic respellings to the definitions they record in their notebooks.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Representatives must be at least 21 and senators at least 25 . There are usually other formal requirements of age, citizenship, and residence.
Caption Young legislators can represent views of younger constituents and might bring fresh ways of approaching problems.

\section*{IDENTIFY AND ORDER}

Have students identify the legislative and nonlegislative powers of the State legislatures. With students, list the powers on the board. Have volunteers offer an example of an application of each power. Then ask: Which power do you think is the most important and why? Have the class rank the powers in order of importance by voting on each one. Some students may identify police power as the most important. Explain that although the U.S. Congress has taken on some police power over time, this power is still largely reserved to the States.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Clarify that police in police power does not mean the same as "the police." The meaning here is more closely related to the term policy, which is "a plan or set of laws designed to solve a problem. "

\(L 2\)
Differentiate Have students rank the powers on their own and use the Think-Pair-Share strategy (p. T22) to let them explain their answers to a partner before sharing with the class.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible response: so that regulations can meet local conditions and needs (For example, States that have difficulty filling entry-level jobs may choose to pay a higher minimum wage.)
Checkpoint either two- or four-year terms; 15 States have term limits

\section*{Background}

NEBRASKA'S UNIQUE LEGISLATURE Nebraska's unicameral, nonpartisan legislature resulted largely from the reform efforts of George Norris, who represented Nebraska in the U.S. Congress for more than 40 years. "[T]here is no sense or reason in having the same thing done twice, especially if it is to be done by two bodies of men elected in the same way and having the same jurisdiction," he insisted. Norris argued that the State supreme court and the governor would provide sufficient checks and balances. Also, unlike the closed-door secrecy of bicameral conference committees, the unicameral legislature would conduct all activities in open forum. In this way, the press and public opinion could check possible abuses. When Nebraska's unicameral amendment took effect in 1937, it abolished one house, reducing the number of legislators on the payroll from 133 to 43-a cost savings of nearly 70 percent.
State law governs many areas of daily life, including, for example, the regulation of drivers' licenses and minimum wage rates above the federal level. Why are these policies determined at the State level?
\(\checkmark\) chookpoint
How long do legislators serve?

\section*{turnover}
n. rate at which people
enter and leave a group decision was soon followed by Reynolds v . Sims in 1964. There, the Court held that the Equal Protection Clause requires every State to draw its legislative districts on the basis of population equality.

Terms Legislators are elected to either twoyear or four-year terms. Representatives serve two-year terms in 44 States and four-year terms in Alabama, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, and North Dakota. Senators win fouryear terms in 38 States (including Nebraska), and only two- year stints in the other 12 .

Fifteen States now limit the number of terms any person can serve. In most, the limit is placed on service in each chamber, separately. In a few, the restriction is applied to total legislative service in either house.

The rate of turnover in legislative seats is fairly high, although it tends to vary from State to State and time to time. In a given year, some 20 percent of all lawmakers around the country are serving their first term in office. The major reasons for that turnover appear to be low pay, political instability, and term limits. Lawmakers tend to remain in office longer in those States that pay higher salaries and where one party regularly wins elections.

Compensation Far too often, capable men and women refuse to run for seats in the legislature because of the financial sacrifices that service usually entails. Legislative pay varies considerably and so the situation is more trying in some States than others. California now pays lawmakers \($ 116,208\) per year, plus benefits. Oregon provides a more typical example of the compensation package. There, the total compensation per member comes to just about \($ 30,000\) per year.

Clearly, decent salaries in line with the responsibilities of the job will not automatically bring the most able men and women into State legislatures. Certainly, better salaries can make public service much more appealing to qualified people.

Sessions Little more than a generation ago, only a handful of State legislatures met in regular sessions each year, and then usually for only a few months or so. Most met only every other year. It has long since become apparent that the legislature's workload cannot be properly handled on so limited a basis.

Today, 44 State lawmaking bodies hold their regular sessions annually, and most of those sessions run for three to five months or more. Several legislatures are now in session nearly year-round.

In every State, the governor, and in three fourths of them the legislature itself, can call the body into special session. Those meetings, most common in States where legislators meet infrequently, allow lawmakers to take up urgent matters between their regularly scheduled sessions.

\section*{Powers of the Legislature}

No State's constitution lists all of the powers vested in the legislature-nor could it. In each State, the legislature has all of those powers that (1) the State constitution does not grant exclusively to the executive or judicial branches or to local governments, and (2) neither the State constitution nor the United States Constitution denies to it. In effect, most of the powers held by a State are vested in its legislature.

Lawmaking Powers The fact that the legislature can enact any law that does not conflict with any provision in federal law or in the State constitution means that there can be no all-inclusive list of the legislature's powers. Its more important powers are usually set out in the State constitution, however. Those most often mentioned include the powers to tax, spend, borrow, establish courts and fix their jurisdiction, define crimes and provide for their punishment, regulate commercial activities, and maintain public schools.

Every State's legislature possesses the police power-the State's hugely important power to protect and promote the public health, public safety, public morals, and the general welfare. Recall, most of what government does in this country today is done by the States (and their local governments), and most of what they do is done through the exercise of the police power. In short, that extraordinarily broad authority is the power to safeguard the welfare of the people of the State, and it is the basis for much of what State legislatures do Nonlawmaking Powers All 50 State legislatures possess certain nonlegislative powers, in addition to those they exercise when they make a law.

In the separation of powers and checks and balances scheme, the legislature exercises some executive powers. It has the power to approve or reject the governor's appointment of a number of officials. In some States, the legislature itself appoints various executive officers.

The legislature also has certain judicial powers, capped by the power of impeachment. In every State except Oregon, the legislature can remove any State officer in the executive or judicial branch through that process. Each chamber also has the power to discipline and even expel one of its own members.

Recall that the legislature plays a significant role in both constitution-making and the constitutional amendment process. When, for example, it proposes an amendment to the State's constitution, it is not making law. It is, instead, exercising a nonlegislative power: the constituent power.

\section*{Organization and Lawmaking}

Both the organization and the procedures of State legislatures are similar to those found in Congress. Much of what legislatures do centers around presiding officers and a committee system.

Presiding Officers Those who preside over the sessions of the States' lawmaking chambers are almost always powerful political figures, not only in the legislature itself but elsewhere in State politics.

The lower house in each of the 49 bicameral bodies elects its own presiding officer, known everywhere as the speaker. The senate chooses its own presiding officer in 27 States; in the other 23, including Nebraska, the lieutenant governor serves as president of the senate. Where the lieutenant governor does preside, the senate selects a president pro tem pore to serve in the lieutenant governor's absence.

Except for the lieutenant governors, each of these presiding officers is chosen by a vote on the floor of his or her chamber. In fact, the majority party's caucus usually picks those who fill the leadership posts, just before the legislature begins a new term.

The chief duties of these presiding officers revolve around the conduct of the legislature's floor business. They refer bills to committee, recognize members who seek the floor, and interpret and apply the rules of their chamber to its proceedings.

Unlike the Speaker of the House in Congress, the speaker in nearly every State appoints the chair and other members of each house committee. The senate's president or president pro tem has that same power in just over half the States. The presiding officers

\section*{DISCUSS THE ESSENTIAL QUESTION}

Write the Unit 7 Essential Question on the board: What level of government has the greatest impact on your life? Discuss students' ideas about how the State and the National governments affect their lives directly and which level affects them more. Tell students to recall that the police power is reserved to State governments. Ask: How does the police power affect the lives of the State's citizens? (gives State legislatures broad control over local issues of safety and public welfare, giving them great influence over citizens' lives) On what level of government do you think most citizens have the greatest impact? (Most students will say State and local government.) Do citizens have the most control where government has the greatest impact on their lives? Discuss the importance in a democracy of this relationship between citizens and government.

\section*{DISCUSS CITIZEN PARTICIPATION}

Discuss the voters' direct role in the legislative process at the State level. Have volunteers name the two types of initiatives (direct and indirect) and the three types of referenda (mandatory, optional, and popular) as you write them on the board. (Point out the plural, referenda.) Ask: What types of laws do voters usually want to change? Why do you think this is? Ask students what types of laws they would like to add or change in their State.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Define referendum (a process in which a legislature refers a measure to voters for final approval or rejection) and initiative (a process in which voters sign petitions to begin a law) for the class.
L3 L4 Differentiate Ask students to write a journal entry that examines the reasons why the initiative and referendum are not used at the national level.

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display the political cartoon Transparency 24C, Ballot Initiatives, when you discuss direct participation of voters in the lawmaking process. This cartoon illustrates why government officials might be less than thrilled with the initiative process. Ask: Whom do the people in the cartoon represent? (a king and queen or, more broadly, powerful government officials) What is happening to these people? (They are imprisoned in shackles.) What does the cartoon suggest about why government officials might oppose ballot initiatives? (Through initiatives, voters can restrain the government's power.)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint It is the broad authority reserved to the States that has the greatest effect on the daily lives of citizens because it involves issues of public health, safety, morals, and general welfare.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}Have students make a fact sheet about their State's legislature, including its origins, official name, structure, qualifications and election of members, terms, and compensation.
L3 Differentiate Display Transparency 24D, Factors Influencing State Legislators, and discuss key influencing factors regarding an issue. Ask: Which major factor shown here influences decisions State legislators must make about issues? (responsibility to many [five] groups)
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students to draw a concept web titled "Sources of Bills" using the information under that heading in the text.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "The State Legislature and You" (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 28), which asks students to write to their State legislators about issues important to them.
L2 L3 Differentiate Have students work in pairs to design and create a graphic representation of the powers of State legislatures.
L4 Differentiate Instruct students to research the origins, provisions, and status of a bill currently active in their State legislature and report their findings to the class. Ask them to include the source of the bill and who is sponsoring it.
L4 Differentiate Tell students to review the material on the police power in their textbook. Explain that since the New Deal, the U.S. Congress has taken on the police power in certain circumstances. Have students do research and write a short report on one example of when Congress has exercised the police power.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the How Government Works diagram, "Initiative and Referendum."

\section*{Answers}

Initiative and Referendum Legislators may view initiatives as intruding on their power or as interference by people who do not understand the full consequences of their proposals.
Checkpoint refer bills to committee, recognize members who seek the floor, interpret and apply rules of chamber and its proceedings, appoint committee members and chairs

\section*{718}

Governing the States
regularly use this power much as they do their other powers: to reward their friends, punish their enemies, and otherwise work their influence on the legislature and its product.

Committees Several hundred or, in many larger States, several thousand measures are introduced at each session of the legislature. That flood of bills makes the committee system as practical and necessary at the State level as it is in Congress. Much of the work of the legislature is done in committee, where members sift through that pile of proposed legislation, deciding which bills will go on to floor consideration and which will fall by the wayside.

The standing committees of each house are regularly organized on a subject-matter basis-as committees on finance, education, highways, and so on. A bill referred to one of these committees may be amended or even largely rewritten there. Or, as frequently happens, it may be ignored altogether.
"Pigeonholing" occurs in the States as in Congress. In fact, in most States one of the standing committees in each house is usually the "graveyard committee." Bills are sent there to be buried. The judiciary committee, to which bills may be referred "on grounds of doubtful constitutionality," often fills this role. \({ }^{6}\)

Sources of Bills Legally, only a member may introduce a bill in either house in any State's legislature. So, in the strictest sense, legislators themselves are the source of all measures the legislature considers. In broader terms, however, the lawmakers are the authors of only a handful of bills.

A large number of measures come from public sources, from officers and agencies in the State executive branch, and from local governments. Every State governor has a legislative program, often extensive and bold.

Many bills come from the private sector. Indeed, interest groups appear to be the

\footnotetext{
6 A striking illustration of a graveyard committee existed for several years in landlocked Oklahoma: the Committee on Deep Sea Navigation.
}

718 Governing the States

\section*{How Government Works}
initiatives Have students apply the How Government Works diagram, "Initiative and Referendum," on this page to your State or another specific State. Have students identify a State in which voters may propose constitutional amendments or legislation through the initiative process. Ask them to write a brief description of a specific initiative proposed by the people of the State, and answer these questions: How many supporting signatures were required? Did the initiative go directly to the ballot or to the legislature? Would you support or oppose this initiative? Why? What was the outcome? For an audio tour of the "Initiative and Referendum" diagram, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com. largest single source of proposed legislation. Remember, those groups and the lobbyists who represent them exist for one overriding purpose: to influence public policy to the benefit of their own particular interests. Of course, some measures do originate with private individuals-business owners, farmers, union members, and other citizens-who, for one reason or another, think, "There ought to be a law. . .."

\section*{Direct Legislation}

In several States, voters themselves can take a direct part in the lawmaking process. The main vehicles for that participation are the initiative and the referendum.

Initiative Through the initiative process, voters in 18 States can propose amendments to the State's constitution. In those States and six others, they can also use that process to propose ordinary statutes. The initiative takes two quite different forms: the more common direct initiative and the little-used indirect initiative.

In both forms, a certain number of qualified voters (which varies from State to State) must sign petitions to initiate a law. Where the direct initiative is in place, a measure with sufficient signatures goes directly to the ballot, usually in the next general election. If voters approve the measure, it becomes law. If not, it dies. Where the indirect form is found, a proposed measure goes first to the legislature. If that body approves the measure, it becomes law. If the legislature fails to pass it, the measure then goes to the voters.

Referendum A referendum is a process in which the legislature refers a measure to the voters for final approval or rejection. The referendum takes three different forms: mandatory, optional, and popular.

A mandator y re frendum occurs in those situations in which the legislature must send a measure to the voters. Recall, in every State except Delaware, a proposed constitutional amendment must be submitted to the electorate. In several States some other measures, such as providing for the borrowing of funds, must also go to the voters.

An optional referendum involves a measure that the legislature has referred to the voters voluntarily. Such measures are rare. They usually involve "hot potato" issues: issues that lawmakers would prefer not to take direct responsibility for deciding themselves.

Under the popular refrendum, a group of citizens may demand by petition that a measure passed by the legislature be referred to the voters for final action. Most attempts to use this form of the referendum fail. Most often, the opponents of a particular measure simply cannot gather the required number of signatures to force a popular vote on the target of their ire \(\sqrt{ }\) Checkpoint What is direct legislation?

\section*{initiate}
v. to begin, launch, set in motion
ire
\(n\). anger, outrage

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}

To continue to build a response to the chapter Essential Question, go to your
1. Guiding Question Use your completed table to answer this question: What are the defining traits and purpose of State legislatures?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What are the purposes of the police power?
3. What three nonlegislative powers does a State legislature have?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment Do you think that State legislators should be paid a generous salary? Why or why not?
5. Analyze Information Would you support an amendment to your State's constitution that would provide for a unicameral legislature? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Writing: Organize Your Ideas Review your list of questions and loosely categorize them under various topics, such as "State Legislatures" or "Powers of the Executive." Select two or three categories that relate most closely to the concept of the effects of State governments of the lives of citizens. Use your on the lives of citizens. Use your textbook or other resources to take notes to answer each of the questions under your selected categories.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Check students' work on the Core Worksheet. (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 27)
L3 Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 29)
Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 30)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The defining traits \\ and purposes of State \\ legislatures (Questions \\
\(1,2,3,5)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} On the board, draw a table similar to the \\ one in the section opener. Review with \\ students the information they recorded on \\ State legislatures about their structure, \\ powers, and features. Tell students to add \\ any information they did not already have in \\ their own charts.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Compensation of State \\
legislators (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have groups find out how much the \\ legislators are paid in their State and then \\ compare the legislators' pay rates with \\ those of other jobs.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint the direct participation of voters in the lawmaking process

Congress is, with presiding officers and a committee system.
2. to protect and promote public heal th, safety, morals, and general welfare
3. executive powers, such as approval of governor's appointments; judicial powers, such as the power of impeachment; constituent powers, such as revising and amending the State's constitution
4. Answers will vary. Students may cite the need to attract the best candidates for these important positions with appropriate compensation.
5. Answers should consider the main argument on both sides: in a bicameral legislature, one house acts as a check on the other; in a unicameral legislature, lawmaking might be more efficient.
QUICK WRITE A strong assignment will include reasonable categories and answers relating State government actions to the lives of citizens.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

What are the roles and powers of a governor?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Roles and Responsibilities} \\
\hline Executive & Legislative & Judicial \\
\hline & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- carry out laws \\
- appoint/remove subordinates \\
- supervise executive branch \\
- prepare budget \\
- commander in chief of State's National Guard
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- recommend legislation \\
- call special sessions \\
- veto legislation
\end{tabular} & - powers of clemency: pardon, commute, reprieve, parole \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- complete a chart to examine the powers of a State governor.
- complete a worksheet to compare and contrast State governorships with the U.S. presidency.
- participate in a mock meeting to investigate the roles and responsibilities of State executive officers.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 31) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 33)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{PROBLEM SOLVING}

\section*{SECTION 3}

\section*{The Governor and State Administration}

\section*{Guiding Question}

What are the roles and powers of a governor? Use a chart to identify the roles and responsibilities of a governor.

Political Dictionary
- recall - commutation - item veto - reprieve
- clemency - parole
- pardon

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the main features of the office of governor.
2. Summarize a governor's roles, powers, duties, and the limitations of the office.
3. List and describe the other executive offices at the State level.

Image Above: Governor M. Jodi Rell, Republican of Connecticut, signs a bill into law.

The governor is the principal executive officer in each of the 50 States. He or she is always a central figure in State politics and is often a well-known national personality as well. Governors today occupy an office that is the direct descendant of the earliest public office in American politics, the colonial governorship, first established in Virginia in 1607.

\section*{The Governorship}

In colonial America, the actions of the royal governors inspired much of the resentment that fueled the Revolution. That attitude was carried over into the first State constitutions. Most of the powers of government were given to the legislatures; the new State governors, for the most part, had little real authority. In every State except Massachusetts and New York, the governor was chosen by the legislature, and in most of them only for a one-year term. And only in three States did the governor have a veto power.

That original separation of powers soon proved unsatisfactory. Many of the State legislatures abused their powers. Several fell prey to special interests, and the governors were unable to respond. So, as new constitutions were written, and the older ones revised, the powers of the legislatures were curbed and the powers of the governors generally increased.

Beginning with Illinois in 1917, most States have redesigned and strengthened the executive branch to make the governor the State's chief executive in more than name. Some States have gone further than others in this direction, but, overall, governors are much more powerful figures today than in decades past.

Qualifications Anyone who wants to become the governor of a State must be able to satisfy a set of formal qualifications. Typically, he or she must be an American citizen, of at least a certain age (usually 25 or 30 ), have lived in the State for a given period of time (most often for at least five years), and be a qualified voter. Clearly, these formal qualifications for office are not very difficult to meet. It is the informal qualifications that have real meaning. To become a governor, a person must have those characteristics that will first attract a party's nomination, and then attract the voters in the general election.

To practice problem solving in this section, use the Chapter 24 Skills Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 37). You may teach the skill explicitly before students begin studying about State governors. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 4 All-in-One, p. 38).

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - The governor leads the State's executive branch. - State constitutions have strengthened the job of governor over time. - In addition to executive powers, the governor has legislative and judicial powers. - In most States, the governor shares executive power with other elected officials, such as the lieutenant governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, and attorney general.
CONCEPTS: separation of powers, federalism, leadership ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: - The presidency and governorships have many similarities, but most governors share executive power with other elected officials.
- Governors possess some legislative and judicial powers.

Those characteristics vary from State to State, and even from election to election within a State. Race, sex, religion, name rec ognition, personality, party identification, experience, ideology, the ability to use television effectively-these and several other factors are all part of the mix.

Today, most governors are attorneys in their 40 s and 50 s . Nearly all of them were State legislators or held another elective office in the State, such as lieutenant governor, attorney general, or mayor of a large city. California's "governator," Arnold Schwarzenegger, is a leading illustration of the fact that someone who has never held public office does sometimes win a governorship.

The first gubernatorial elections occurred in 1775 and more than 2,500 persons have now served as governors of the various States. To this point (2009), only 30 of those governors have been women, and eight of those 30 are in office today.

Two women won governorships in 1924: Nellie Taylor Ross in Wyoming and Miriam "Ma" Ferguson in Texas. They were the first of several women to succeed their husbands as governors. Over the past 30 years, a growing number of women have won the office on their own. Eight women currently hold office, and recent woman governors have included Janet Napolitano (D., Arizona), Jennifer Granholm (D., Michigan), M. Jodi Rell (R., Connecticut), and Sarah Palin (R., Alaska).

Only two African Americans have ever won the office. These two governors were L. Douglas Wilder (D., Virginia) in 1989, and Deval Patrick (D., Massachusetts) in 2006.

Selection The governor is chosen by popular vote in every State. In all but five, only a plurality is needed for election. If no candidate wins a clear majority in Arizona, Georgia, or Louisiana, the two top vote-getters meet in a runoff election. If no one wins a majority in Mississippi, the lower house of the legislature picks the new governor. In Vermont, both houses make the choice.

The major parties' gubernatorial candidates are usually picked in primaries. In a few States, however, conventions choose the nominees. Nearly half the States now provide for the joint election of the governor and the lieutenant governor. In those States, each party's candidates for those offices run as a team, and the voter casts one vote to fill both posts.

Term The one-year gubernatorial term has long since disappeared. Governors are now chosen to four-year terms nearly everywhere. Thirty-six States limit the number of terms a governor may serve, usually to two terms.

Governors who do run for another term most often win. Five four-term governors hold the modern record for gubernatorial service-16 years. \({ }^{7}\)

Succession Governors are mortal. Occasionally, one of them dies in office. Many of them are also politically ambitious. Every so often, one resigns in midterm-to become a United States senator or to accept a presidential appointment, for example.

When a vacancy does occur, it sets off a game of political musical chairs in the State. The political plans and timetables of ambition of a number of public personalities are affected by the event. No matter what causes a vacancy, every State's constitution provides for a successor. In 44 States the lieutenant governor is first in line. In Maine, New Hampshire, and West Virginia, the president of the senate succeeds. In Arizona, Oregon, and Wyoming, the office passes to the secretary of state.

Removal The governor may be removed from office by impeachment in every State except Oregon. Only five governors have been impeached and removed since the turbulent Reconstruction years after the Civil War. Only one-Arizona's Evan Mecham in 1988-has suffered that fate in the past 70 years.

In 18 States, the governor may be recalled by the voters. \({ }^{8}\) The recall is a petition procedure by which voters may remove an elected

7 The all-time record for both gubernatorial service and electoral success belongs to George Clinton of New York. He sought and won seven three-year terms as governor and held the office from 1777 to 1795 and again from 1801 to 1804 . He was later Vice President of the United States, from 1805 to 1812.
8 Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Georgia, Idaho, Kansas, Lorisana, Mrigan, Minesota, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey \(\sqrt{ }\) Checkpoint What are common characteristics of governors? gubernatorial plurality
n. the largest total

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 24, Section 3:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 31)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 33)
L3 Core Worksheet A (p. 35)
L3 Core Worksheet B (p. 36)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 37)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 38)
L3 Quiz A (p. 39)
L2 Quiz B (p. 40)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint attorneys in their 40 s and 50 s, former State legislators or holders of other elective State offices, male, white

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET A}

Distribute Chapter 24 Section 3 Core Worksheet A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 35). Explain to students that they will use the worksheet to compare and contrast the job of a governor and that of the U.S. President. Students should complete the chart and formulate an answer to the worksheet question. If your classroom has Internet access, you may wish to have students complete the chart using specific information for your State.

Government
All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

D Analyzing Political Cartoons In 2003, California voters had to choose whether to recall the governor and which of 135 candidates should replace him in a special double election. Why did the cartoonist include a clown among the candidates?
intangible \(n\). something that is not concrete or easily defined fragmented
adj. split, separated into many pieces official from office before the completion of his or her regular term. The process generally works this way: If a certain number of qualified voters-usually 25 percent of the number who voted in the last election held for the office-sign recall petitions, a special election must be held in which the voters decide whether to remove or instead, retain, the officeholder.

To this point, only two governors have ever been recalled: Governor Lynn J. Frazier of North Dakota, a Republican, in 1921, and Governor Gray Davis of California, a Democrat, in 2003.

Compensation In many respects, a governor's job is not unlike that of the chief executive officer of one of the nation's larger corporations. Both administer hugely complex organizations, manage the work of thousands of employees, and oversee the spending of incredible amounts of money. Governors are not paid nearly so well as the CEOs of large companies, however. The latter make tens of millions of dollars per year in salary and benefits.

In contrast, most governors earn little more than \($ 100,000\) per year. Salaries now range from \($ 70,000\) per year in Maine and \($ 85,000\) in Tennessee to \($ 206,500\) in California. Most States provide their chief executive with an official residence, often called a governor's mansion, and money for travel and other expenses.

To the governor's salary and other material compensations must be added the intangibles of honor and prestige that go along with the office. It is this factor, and a sense of public duty, that often persuades many of our better citizens to seek the office. Several Presidents were governors before reaching the White House, including Bill Clinton and George W. Bush.

\section*{A Governor's Many Roles}

Much like the President, a governor plays a number of different roles. He or she is, simultaneously, an executive, an administrator, a legislator, a party leader, an opinion leader, and a ceremonial figure. What the office amounts to depends, in no small part, on how well the governor plays each-and all-of these roles. And that must depend, in turn, on his or her personality, political muscle, and overall abilities.

Many of a governor's formal powers are hedged with constitutional and other legal restrictions. Nonetheless, the powers a governor does have, together with the prestige of the office, make it quite possible for a capable, dynamic person to be a "strong" governor, one who can accomplish much for the State and for the public good.

\section*{Executive Powers}

The presidency and the governorships are similar in several ways, but the comparison can be pushed too far. Remember, the Constitution of the United States makes the President the executive in the National Government. State constitutions, on the other hand, regularly describe the governor as the chie fexecutive in the State's government. The distinction here, between the executive and the chiefexecutive, is a critical one. The executive authority is fragmented in most States, but it is not at the national level.

In nearly every State, the executive authority is shared by a number of "executive officers"-a secretary of state, an attorney general, a treasurer, and so on. Most of these executive officers are, like the governor,

\section*{Background}

SUCCESSION Before 2005, New Jersey had no lieutenant governor. A vacancy in the governorship was filled by the president of the senate, who continued to serve as senator-thus sidestepping the separation of powers. In those cases, the same person could sponsor a bill and then sign it into law. When Governor Christie Whitman stepped down early, the senate president served as acting governor until his term expired a week before newly elected Governor James McGreevey was sworn in. The new senate president should have filled the governor's role until McGreevey took office, but because the legislature was evenly divided between parties, the senate presidency was shared. The two men agreed to split the week, each serving as governor for three and a half days. Four governors in one week prompted officials to move toward creating the position of lieutenant governor.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Political Cartoons to emphasize the ridiculousness of having so many candidates and to poke fun at the politically ambitious pretenders largely beyond the governor's direct control. In short, most State constitutions so divide the executive authority that the governor can best be described as a "first among equals." Yet, whatever the realities of the distribution of power, the people look to the governor for leadership in State affairs. It is also the governor whom they hold responsible for the conduct of those affairs and for the overall condition of the State.

The governor's basic legal responsibility is regularly found in a constitutional provision that directs the chief executive to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." Though the executive power may be divided, the governor is given a number of specific powers with which to accomplish that task.

Appointment and Removal The governor can best execute the law with subordinates of his or her own choosing. Hence, the powers of appointment and removal are, or should be, among the most important.

A leading test of any administrator is his or her ability to select loyal and able assistants. Two major factors work against the governor's effectiveness here, however. First is the existence of those other elected executives; the people choose them and the governor cannot remove them. Second, the State's constitution and statutes place restrictions on the governor's power to hire and fire. Most State constitutions require that the majority of the governor's major appointees be confirmed by the State senate.

Moreover, the legislature often sets qualifications that must be met by the governor's appointees. In a vigorous two-party State, for example, the law often requires that not more than a certain number of the members of each board or commission be from the same political party. Thus, a governor must appoint some members of the opposing party to posts.

Administering the Executive Branch The governor is the State's chief administrator. Alone and unaided, he or she could not possibly "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." The day-to-day work of enforcing the State's laws, of performing its many functions, and of delivering its many services is done by the thousands of men and women in all of the agencies that make up the executive branch. The governor must supervise that work.

Here again, the constitution and statutes of the State often limit a governor's authority. Many agencies are subject to his or her direct control, but many are not. That situation puts a premium on the governor's powers of persuasion and on his or her ability to operate through such informal channels as party leadership and appeals to the public.

The Budget Always remember: A government's budget is much more than a mere bookkeeping exercise. It is a political document, a statement of public policy. Its numbers reflect the struggle over "who gets what" and who doesn't.

In most States the governor prepares the budget that goes to the legislature. The lawmakers can make changes in the governor's financial plan. Still, the governor's recommendations carry a great deal of weight.

\section*{Party Control of Governorships, 2009}

VCheckpoint
What are a governor's executive powers?

\section*{premium} \(n\). high value

- Analyzing Maps The two major parties compete in gubernatorial elections in every State. Which party did your State's governor belong to in this year?

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display the political cartoon Transparency 24E, Man in Charge, when you discuss the executive powers of the governor. This cartoon shows the massive Arnold Schwarzenegger facing a devastated California treasury. Ask: Who is the man in charge? (Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger of California) What major problem does he face? (The State treasury is in ruins, meaning that funds are short.) What executive power of the governor will this problem affect most? (budget preparation)

\section*{HOLD MOCK EXECUTIVE BRANCH MEETINGS}

Assemble the class into five groups, each representing one of the five State government executive officers mentioned in the text: governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, treasurer, and attorney general. Have students create a list of questions that will help them to define the role of their subject, such as:

\section*{- Does this executive office exist in your State?}
- Is the officer elected or appointed?
- How long is the term?
- What are the main duties and concerns of this officer?
- Which departments does the person oversee or interact with?
- What are the legislative involvements, if any?
Then distribute Chapter 24 Section 3 Core Worksheet B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 36) to all students. Assign one student from each group to a minimeeting of the executive branch. Tell students to suppose that this is the first meeting of a new administration. Have students role play, explaining their main responsibilities and at least one thing they want to accomplish or the main problem they want to solve while in office.
As students meet in their groups, circulate around the classroom to keep students on task and to ensure that each student in the group has a chance to present. Remind students that they must fill in their worksheet charts as each group member speaks.

\section*{eVALUATE THE MEETINGS}

When the mini-meetings are concluded, have each group name the three top projects or items they wanted to address first and list them on the board. Compare and discuss each group's items. Are there any similarities? Was it hard for group members to come to an agreement on which problems to address first? How did the roles and responsibilities of each member direct his or her priorities? Which officers were more likely to work together? Which were least likely?
Tell students to go to the Online Update for an update of party control of governorships.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint execute laws; appoint and remove subordinates; supervise executive branch; prepare the budget; commander in chief of State's National Guard Analyzing Maps Answers will vary.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Have students research to gather data about all the women who have ever served as a State governor. Then have students use that data to make a map titled "Women Governors in U.S. History." Students should also design a key for their maps.
L1 Differentiate Direct students to create a "My State's Governor" information sheet, in which they list the governor's name, party, date elected to office, length of term, number of terms so far, and at least three major initiatives or accomplishments. Have students complete the activity by answering these questions: Has this governor done a good job? Why or why not?
L2 ELL Differentiate Tell students to make a chart like the one on Core Worksheet A that compares the job of one of the State officers covered in this section to positions with parallel roles or titles in the federal government. For example, students might compare the roles of the U.S. Attorney General with the role of a State attorney general or lieutenant governor to Vice President.
L2 Differentiate Ask students to find a news story about your State's governor. Tell them to write a phrase or sentence identifying any powers mentioned in the article that they learned about in this section and tell how they are being applied.
L4 Differentiate Have students analyze the prior jobs of all U.S. Presidents and group them into categories. For example, which U.S. Presidents had been governors, Senators, military leaders, or "other"? Tell students to use the data to create a bar graph or circle graph, and write a summary to explain what it shows about who becomes a U.S. President. Encourage students to analyze their findings and explain any changes that may have occurred throughout U.S. history.

The governor's budget-making power can be a highly effective tool with which to control State administration. Although unable to appoint or remove the head of a particular agency, for example, the governor can use the budget-making power to affect that agency's programs and have a real impact on those who work in that agency.

Military Powers Every State's constitution makes the governor the commander in chief of the State militia-in effect, of the State's units of the National Guard. The National Guard is the organized part of the State militia. In a national emergency, the National Guard may be "called up," ordered into federal service by the President.

All of the States' National Guard units were federalized in 1940 and served as part of the nation's armed forces in World War II. Many units also saw combat duty in Korea, Vietnam, and the Persian Gulf War. Today, National Guard units are on duty in such farflung places as Bosnia, Kosovo, Afghanistan, and Iraq. Indeed, the Defense Department has relied very heavily on the Guard in the prosecution of recent wars.

When the State's Guard units are not in federal service (which is most of the time), they are commanded by the governor. On occasion, governors find it necessary to call out the Guard to deal with such emergencies as prison riots, to help fight a dangerous forest fire, to aid in relief and evacuation after a flood, to prevent looting during and after some other natural disaster, and so on.

\section*{Legislative Powers}

The State's principal executive officer exercises three significant legislative powers. Those powers, together with the chief executive's personality, popularity, and political muscle, can make the governor, in fact, the State's chief legislator.

The Message Power Essentially, the message power is the power to recommend legislation. Remember, much of what lawmakers do is prompted by what the governor has urged them to do. The most effective governors push their wish lists by combining their use of the formal message power with such informal tactics as close contacts with key legislators and appeals to the public.

Special Sessions The governor in every State has the power to call the legislature into special session. As you know, that power is meant to permit the State to meet extraordinary situations. It can also be an important part of the governor's legislative arsenal. On many occasions, governors have persuaded reluctant lawmakers to pass a particular bill by threatening to call them back in a special session if they adjourn their regular meeting without having approved that measure.

The Veto Power Every governor can veto measures enacted by the legislature. The veto power-including the timely use of threats to invoke the power-can be very useful to the governor as he or she tries to influence what the legislature does or doesn't do.

In most States, the governor has only a very few days in which to sign or veto a billmost often, five. If no action is taken within the prescribed period, the measure becomes law without his or her signature.

Only 11 States give the governor a pocket veto. \({ }^{9}\) So, in most States, those bills a governor neither signs nor vetoes become law. Fortyfour States give the governor the item vetothe power to eliminate one or more items from a bill without rejecting the entire measure. It is used most often on spending measures.

As in the Federal Government, the legislature may attempt to override a veto. In most States, a veto requires a two-thirds majority in both houses.

\section*{Judicial Powers}

In every State the chief executive has some authority of a judicial nature. Principally, the governor has various powers of executive clemency: powers of mercy that may be shown to persons convicted of crime.

With the power of pardon, the governor may relieve someone of the legal consequences of a crime. In most States, a pardon

9 Alabama, Delaware, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Vermont, Virginia

\section*{Background}
the wallaces of alabama Lurleen Wallace of Alabama was the third female governor ever elected in the United States. Oddly enough, her term fell between two of her husband's. George Wallace was governor of Alabama for two terms, including terms both before and after Mrs. Wallace's term. When he was elected, Alabama State law prohibited a governor from serving two consecutive terms in office. As a result, Mrs. Wallace ran for office as a representative of her husband, intending to carry out all his policies for him. Although she did accomplish this, she also pushed for several of her own programs, including more funding for State mental hospitals.

Many jobs that are filled by presidential appointment in the Federal Government are decided by elections at the State level. How does the direct election of executive officers empower voters in State government?

Federal Government

The President chooses the members of the Cabinet, usually from among his or her supporters.

Gabinet Members

governor may share the power to pardon with an appointed board of pardons.

Governors have not often abused their clemency powers, but in her first term (19251927), Governor Miriam "Ma" Ferguson of Texas pardoned 3,737 convicted felons, an average of more than five per day. \({ }^{10}\) The pardons came so thick and fast that several Texas

10 Governor James "Pa" Ferguson was impeached and removed by the Texas legislature in 1917. He was later pardoned by the legislature and soon announced that he would run for the governorship again. The State Supreme Court ruled the legislative pardon unconstitutional, however. All of that prompted "Ma" Ferguson to run for governor in 1924. She vented her anger over the treatment of her husband in other ways, too-for example, by refusing any and all extradition requests from other States. Mrs. Ferguson was defeated for reelection in 1926, but did win another two-year term in 1932.

\section*{commute \\ v. to reduce, make less \\ severe severe} ero be granted only after conviction. The power of commutation may be used to commute a sentence imposed by a court. Thus, a death sentence might be commuted to life in prison, or a sentence might be commuted to "time served," releasing a prisoner from custody.

The power to reprieve can be used to postpone the execution of a sentence. Reprieves are normally granted for very brief periods, for example, to allow time for an appeal or because of the late discovery of new evidence in a case. The power of parole permits the release of a prisoner short of the completion of a sentence.

The governor may have some or all of these powers of executive clemency. They are often shared, however. For example, the

\section*{Background}

ATTRACTING JOBS For governors, persuading corporations to locate in their State means jobs for their constituents and a boost for the State's economy. In recent years, Michigan has experienced one of the nation's highest unemployment rates. Governor Jennifer Granholm set her sights on easing this problem. In 2005, she traveled to Nagoya, Japan, to try to entice Toyota to build its planned new factory in Michigan, the heart of America's depressed auto industry. To sweeten the deal, the State legislature authorized \($ 50\) million in incentives. Granholm also used her influence to help Toyota obtain the land it wanted to expand its technical center in Ann Arbor. However, in late 2007, Toyota selected Mississippi for its new factory to open in 2010, lured by Governor Haley Barbour and incentives worth \($ 296\) million.

Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the How Government Works diagram, "Choosing Executive Officers."

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

3 Collect and grade students' work on Core Worksheets \(A\) and \(B\) using the Rubric for Assessing Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 125).

L3 Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 39)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 40)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Choosing Executive Officers Direct election makes top officials accountable to the voters. Appointees are more accountable to the executive who appointed them.
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Roles and responsibilities \\ of a governor (Questions \\ \(1,2,3)\)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a table on the board listing the roles \\ and powers-executive, legisistative, and \\ judicial -of a governor. Ask for examples \\ of gubernatorial actions under each.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Changes in the position \\ and power of the gover- \\ nor since the first State \\ constitutions were written \\
(Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students work with partners and \\ make a before//after chart. They should \\ scan the text under "The Governorship" \\ and record information in the chart \\ about changes in the roles and powers \\ of governors from the early history of \\ the nation.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Appointment of executive \\ officers (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students reread the text under the \\ heading "Appointment and Removal." \\
In small groups, have students odebate \\ whether or not executive officers should \\ be appointed or elected. As part of the \\ discussion, have groups make a pro/con \\
chart on the issue.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are a governor's judicial duties?
newspapers ran daily "pardon columns" rather than separate news stories.

\section*{Miscellaneous Duties}

In addition to the exercise of executive, legislative, and judicial powers, every chief executive must perform several other, often time-consuming duties. These duties are only hinted at by a listing of the powers of the office.

Among many other things, the governor receives official visitors and welcomes other distinguished personalities to the State, dedicates parks and public and private buildings, opens the State fair, and addresses countless organizations and public gatherings. Beyond those chores, he or she is often called upon to settle labor disputes, travel elsewhere in the country and sometimes abroad to promote the State and its trade interests, endorse any number of worthy causes, and on and on.

\section*{Other Executive Officers}

In every State, the governor must share control of the administration with a number of other executive officers. Most of those other officials are, like the governor, chosen by voters. The following four positions may be found in most, but not all, State governments.

The lieutenant governor must be ready to succeed to the governorship should a vacancy occur, and, in half the States, presides over the senate. The office can be a stepping-stone to the governorship by succession or by future elections. It remains, in many places, not much more than a part-time job.

The secretary of state serves as the State's chief clerk and records-keeper. He or she has charge of a great variety of public documents, records the official acts of the governor and the legislature, and usually administers the election laws.

The treasurer is the custodian of State funds, often the State's chief tax collector, and regularly the State's paymaster. Other names for this position include chief financial officer, director of finance, the commissioner of finance, and the comptroller of public accounts. The treasurer's major job is to make payments out of the State treasury to pay salaries and bills associated with State government.

The attorney general is the State's chief lawyer. He or she acts as the legal advisor to State officers and agencies as they perform their official functions, represents the State in court, and oversees the work of local prosecutors as they try cases on behalf of the State.

Much of the power of the office centers on the attorney general's formal written interpretations of constitutional and statutory law. These interpretations, called opinions, are issued to answer questions raised by officials regarding the lawfulness of their actions or proposed actions.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint grants pardons, commutes court sentences, grants reprieves, and paroles prisoners
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: What are the roles and powers of a governor?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What executive powers do most governors have?
3. Briefly explain each of a governor's judicial powers: clemency, pardon, commutation, reprieve, and parole.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Summarize How has the position and power of the governor relative to the legislature evolved since the first State constitutions were written?
5. Identify Central Issues Should the governor of your State be able to appoint the other executive officers now chosen by voters? Why or why not?

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Writing: Research for Examples and Details When writing an explanatory essay, you should include examples illustrating the concepts or processes you discuss. Use your textbook, the library, or reliable Internet sources to add details and examples to the notes you have made about each of your categories. As you about each of your categories. As you read each section of this chapter and learn new information, you may also want to add or replace questions.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Executive: carry out laws, appoint/remove subordinates, supervise executive branch, prepare budget, commander in chief of State's National Guard; Legislative: recommend legislation, call special sessions, veto; Judicial: grant clemency; Miscellaneous: receive visitors, dedicate public spaces, open State fair, give speeches, help settle labor disputes, represent State interests, endorse causes
2. appointment and removal, supervising the executive branch, budget-making, and being commander of the State's National Guard
3. Clemencyis mercy shown to a person convicted of a crime. Pardon is relieving a person of the legal consequences of a crime. Commutation is reducing a sentence imposed by a court. Reprieve is postponing the execution of a sentence. Parole is allowing the release of a prisoner short of completing a sentence.
4. Because the early State constitutions were based on events leading to the American Revolution, most governors had limited power and many were chosen by the legislature. This original separation of powers proved unsatisfactory, and as time passed, constitutions were changed to increase the power of the governors.
5. possible answers: no, because appointment by the governor would place too much control in the hands of the executive; yes, because authority would be less fragmented and the governor might be able to accomplish more working with people he or she had appointed QUICK WRITE A strong assignment will include many examples and details about the influence of the State government on the students' lives in support of their selected questions.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{In the Courtroom}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How do State and local courts apply different types of law? Use a flowchart similar to the one below to explain the significance of elements of the legal system.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
\begin{tabular}{ll}
- common law & - tort \\
- precedent & - contract \\
- criminal law & - jury \\
- felony & - information \\
- misdemeanor & - bench trial
\end{tabular}
- civil law

\section*{Objectives}
1. Identify and define the kinds of law applied in State courts.
2. Compare and contrast criminal law and civil law.
3. Describe the types and purposes of juries and juror selection.

The principal function of the State courts is to decide disputes between private parties and between private parties and government. In addition, because nearly all of these courts have the power of judicial review, they act as checks on the conduct of all other agencies of both State and local government.

\section*{Kinds of Law Applied in State Courts}

The law is the code of conduct by which society is governed. \({ }^{11}\) It is made up of several different forms, including constitutional law, statutory law, administrative law, common law, and equity.

The highest form of law in this country is constitutional law. It is based on the United States Constitution and the State constitutions and on judicial interpretations of those documents. Statutorylaw consists of the statutes (laws) enacted by legislative bodies, including the United States Congress, the State legislature, the people, and local governments. Administrative law is composed of the rules, orders, and regulations issued by federal, State, or local executive officers, acting under proper constitutional and/or statutory authority.

Common Law The common law makes up a large part of the law of each State except Louisiana. \({ }^{12}\) Common law is unwritten, judge-made law that has developed over centuries from those generally accepted ideas of right and wrong that have gained judicial recognition. It covers nearly all aspects of human conduct. State courts apply common law except when it is in conflict with written law.

The common law originated in England. It grew out of the decisions made by the king's judges on the basis of local customs. It developed as judges, coming upon situations similar to those found in earlier cases, applied and reapplied the rulings from those earlier cases. Thus, little by little, the law of those cases

\footnotetext{
11 In its overall sense, the term law may be defined as the whole body of "rules and principles of conduct which the governing power in a community recognizes as those which it will enforce or sanction, and according to which it will regulate, limit, or protect the conduct of its members"; Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 3rd revision, Vol. II. 12 Because of an early French influence, Louisiana's legal system is largely based on French legal concepts, derived from Roman law. Nevertheless, the common law has worked its way into Louisiana law.
}

GUIDING QUESTION
How do State and local courts apply different types of laws?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{State and Local Courts} \\
\hline / & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Kinds of Law \\
- constitutional \\
- statutorywritten laws \\
- administrativerules of government officials \\
- commonunwritten, judgemade laws \\
- equity-preventative; fairness
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Criminal and Civil Law \\
- felony-greater crime \\
- misdemeanorlesser crime \\
- tort-civil; injury to person, property, reputation \\
- contract-agreement to do something for another
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Jury System \\
jury-hears evidence; decides cases \\ grand jurydecides if evidence justifies trial \\
- petit jury-trial jury; civil and criminal \\ informationcharge filed by prosecutor \\
- bench trial-case heard by judge
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- demonstrate knowledge of the five forms of law by completing a concept web.
- compare and contrast features of criminal versus civil law.
- analyze summaries of court cases.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{DRAW INFERENCES AND CONCLUSIONS}

Before students work on the Core Worksheet in this lesson, you may want to review tips on drawing inferences and conclusions in the Skills Handbook, p. S19.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 41 ) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 42)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write the following on the board: Create a concept web titled "The Five Forms of Law," based on information from this section. Include words that describe the features of each form.
L1 L2 Differentiate Tell students that a concept web is built on details that support a main idea. Display the blank Concept Web transparency.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{DISCUSS THE FIVE FORMS OF LAW}

Draw a concept web on the board or display the Concept Web graphic organizer transparency to record information about the five forms of law as a class: constitutional, statutory, administrative, common, and equity.
Have students add their information from the Bellringer to the whole-class concept web. Tell students to record any new information from this discussion in their individual concept webs.
L2 Differentiate Display Transparency 24F, Five Forms of Law Applied in State Courts, for group discussion.

\section*{CONTRAST CIVIL AND CRIMINAL LAW}

Write the categories "Civil Law" and "Criminal Law" on the board. For each category, have students suggest reasons why people are taken to court. (civil: breach of contract, dispute over property ownership, divorce; criminal: murder, theft, trespassing, speeding) Ask students to explain how the two categories are different. (civil law-disputes between people and between people and the government not covered by criminal law; criminal law-felonies and misdemeanors—public wrong-doing prohibited by written law) Ask volunteers to categorize crimes into felonies and misdemeanors. (felonies: murder, theft, arson, manslaughter; misdemeanors: traffic violations, trespassing) L1 ELL Differentiate Pronounce and define misdemeanor and felony for students.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint constitutional, statutory, administrative, common, and equity became common throughout England and, in time, throughout the English-speaking world.

American courts generally follow that same rule. A decision, once made, becomes a precedent, a guide to be followed in all later, similar cases, unless compelling reasons call for either an exception or its abandonment and the setting of a new precedent.

The common law is extremely important. Statutory law does override common law, but many statutes are based on the common law. A great many statutes are, in effect, common law translated into written law.

Equity This branch of the law supplements common law. It developed in England to provide equity-"fairness, justice, and right"when remedies under the common law fell short of that goal.

The common law is mostly remedial, while equity is preventative. Thus, the common law applies to or provides a remedy for matters after they have happened; equity seeks to stop wrongs before they occur.

Suppose your neighbors plan to add a room to their house. You think that a part of the planned addition will be on your land and will destroy your rose garden. You can prevent the construction by getting an injunction, a court order prohibiting a specified action by the party named in the order.

A court is likely to grant the injunction for two reasons: (1) the immediacy of the threat to your property, and (2) the fact that the law can offer no fully satisfactory remedy once your garden has been destroyed. No money award can give back the pride or the pleasure your roses now give you.

At first, different courts administered equity and common law. In time, most States provided for the administration of both forms by the same courts, and the procedural differences between the two are disappearing.

\section*{Criminal and Civil Law}

The law as it is applied by courts in this country can also be described as either criminal or civil law. Criminal law is that branch of the law that regulates human conduct. It identifies and defines those actions that are crimes and provides for their punishment. A crime is a public wrong considered so damaging to society at large that it has been prohibited by law. The government (State or federal) is always a party to a criminal case, as prosecutor.

Crimes are of two kinds. A felony is the greater offense, punishable by a heavy fine, imprisonment, or even death-for example, murder, robbery, assault, or kidnapping. A misdemeanor is a lesser wrong and may be punished by a lighter fine and/or a shorter jail term-for example, a traffic violation, underage drinking, or disorderly conduct.

Civil law relates to that human conduct that is not criminal in nature, to those disputes between private persons and between private persons and government that are not covered by criminal law. Civil law involves a wide range of issues, including divorce and custody disputes, torts, and contracts.

Both tort law and contract law are major and often-used branches of civil law. A tort is a wrongful act that involves injury to one's person, property, or reputation in a situation not covered by the terms of a contract-for example, an automobile accident, product liability, or libel. A contract is a legally binding agreement in which one party agrees to do something with or for another party-for example, an agreement covering the sale of property or the terms of employment.

\section*{The Jury System}

A jury is a body of persons selected according to law to hear evidence and decide questions of fact in a court case. There are two basic types of juries in the American legal system: (1) the grand jury and (2) the petit jury.

The major function of the grand jury is to determine whether the evidence against a person charged with a crime is sufficient to justify a trial. The grand jury is used only in criminal proceedings. The petit jury is the trial jury, and it is used in both civil and criminal matters.

The Grand Jury The grand jury has from 6 to 23 persons, depending on the State. Where larger juries are used, generally at least 12 jurors must agree that an accused person is probably guilty before a formal accusation is made. Similarly, with smaller juries, an

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the AAll-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 24, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 41)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 42)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 43)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 46)
L3 Quiz A (p. 49)
L2 Quiz B (p. 50)
 which means to bring the formal charge.

When a grand jury is impaneled, the judge instructs the jurors to find a true bill of indictment against any and all persons whom the prosecuting attorney brings to their attention and whom they think are probably guilty The judge also instructs them to bring a presentment, an accusation, against any persons whom they, of their own knowledge, believe have violated the State's criminal laws.

The grand jury meets in secret. The prosecuting attorney presents witnesses and evidence against persons suspected of crime. The jurors may question those witnesses and may also summon others to testify against a suspect. After receiving the evidence and hearing witnesses, the grand jury deliberates alone and in secret. They then move to the courtroom where their report, including any indictments they may have returned, is read in their presence.

The grand jury is expensive and time consuming. Therefore, most of the States today depend more heavily on a much simpler process of accusation: the information.

The Information An information is a for mal charge filed by the prosecutor, without the action of a grand jury. It is used for most minor offenses and, in many States, for some serious cases. It is far less costly and timeconsuming than a grand jury. Also, since grand juries most often follow the prosecutor's impaneled v. enrolled; established summon
v. call

Chapter 24 • Section 4729

\section*{Teacher-to-Teacher Network}
alternate lesson plan Have students compare legal systems from other countries, possibly from countries represented in the makeup of the class. In this lesson plan, students will research and present the historical background or foundation of that particular legal system and explain how it is similar to or different from the system in the United States.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 24 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 43). Students will read summaries of State court cases and answer questions about each.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Distribute the adapted Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 46) to less proficient students and English language learners.

\section*{FOLLOW-UP DISCUSSION}

For each summary, ask volunteers to point out which words helped them identify the case as criminal or civil, and so on. Discuss with students why a jury was or was not present in each case. Ask: Why might a judge be preferable to a jury in certain types of trials? If you were in court, which would you prefer? Why?

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Display Transparency 24G, Jury Trial. Explain that a trial by jury is considered a trial by one's peers. Critics of the jury system question the competence and impartiality of juries. Have students find a newspaper or Internet report about a recent case at the State level where the jury played a major role in the outcome. Ask students to form small groups to discuss and compare the role of the jury in their cases and to evaluate how effective they feel juries are in today's court system. Students might evaluate the jury's decision in each case and decide if the jury made their decision based on the law or on a perceived sense of "fairness."

\section*{L3}

Differentiate Tell students to study their State's constitution to find information about the State's judiciary. Ask them to summarize the relevant passages.
L2 ELL Differentiate Ask students to watch the film "12 Angry Men." (The DVD comes with a Spanish language track.) Ask students to write an answer to this question: Based on the movie, do you think that juries work or do not work? Explain.
L4 Differentiate Have students do research and write a report on voir dire (to speak the truth), the process by which the jury is selected out of a pool of jurors. Ask them to include information on modern developments, such as the role of jury consultants.
Tell students to go to the Audio Tour to listen to a guided audio tour of the "How Government Works: Criminal and Civil Law" diagram.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint hears evidence and decides questions of fact in a court case Criminal and Civil Law Civil cases deal with disputes rather than crimes.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}Collect and grade students' work on the Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 43).Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions.
L3
Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 49)
\(L 2\)
Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 50)

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Types of laws and \\ juries in the States \\
(Questions 1, 2, 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Make a flowchart on the board similar to the \\ one in the Section Opener. Have students \\ provide information from their own flow- \\ charts to help complete this one. List the \\ five forms of law, differences and definitions \\ of criminal and civil law, and information on \\ the two types of juries. Have students secord \\ any new information in their own charts. As \\ you work, give students opportunities to ask \\ questions about anything they still do not \\ understand.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The secrecy of grand \\ juries (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Tell students to review the text under the \\ heading "The Grand Jury." Ask them to \\ record details about the grand jury process \\ in a concept web.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The purpose of an \\ injunction (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write the word injunction and its definition \\ on the board. Clarify that its purpose is \\ to stop activity that might cause damage \\ that cannot be repaired later. Point out the \\ example in the text Ask students to use \\ the Think-Pair-Share strategy to brainstorm \\ situations when an injinction might be \\ requested.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Checkpoint
What is the job of a grand jury? verdic
n. decision or judgment
recommendations, many argue that a grand jury is really unnecessary. Others feel that the grand jury prevents prosecutors from abusing their powers.

The Petit Jury The petit jury, or trial jury, hears the evidence in a case and decides the disputed facts. In very few instances, it may also have the power to interpret and apply the law. That, however, is usually the function of the judge.

The number of trial jurors may vary. As it developed in England, the jury consisted of " 12 men good and true." Although 12 is the usual total, a lesser number, often six, now fills jury boxes in several States.

In more than a third of the States, jury verdicts need not be unanimous in civil and minor criminal cases. Rather, some extraordinary majority is needed. If a jury cannot agree on a verdict (a so-called hung jury), either another trial with a new jury takes place or the matter is dropped.

Misdemeanor cases and civil proceedings in which only minor sums are involved are often heard without a jury, in a bench trial, by the judge alone. In several States, even the most serious crimes may be heard without a jury if the accused, fully informed of his or her rights, waives the right to trial by jury.

Selection of Jurors Jurors are picked in more or less the same way in most States. Periodically, a county official or special jury commissioners prepare a list of persons eligible for jury service, with names drawn from poll books, tax rolls, driver's license records, or other sources. \({ }^{13}\) The sheriff serves each person with a court order to appear. After eliminating those who, for good reason, cannot serve, the judge prepares a list of those who can. Persons under 18 and over 70 years of age, illiterates, the ill, and criminals are commonly excluded. Those in occupations vital to the public interest or for whom jury service would mean real hardship are often excused, too.

As with the grand jury, the States are moving away from the use of the trial jury. Leading reasons are the greater time and cost of jury trials. The competence of the average jury and the impulses that may lead it to a verdict are often questioned, as well. Much criticism of the jury system is directed not so much at the system itself as at its operation.

Several things should be said in favor of the jury system, however. It has a long and honorable place in the development of Anglo-American law. Its high purpose is to promote a fair trial, by providing an impartial body to hear the charges brought against the accused. A jury tends to bring the common sense of the community to bear on the law and its application. Finally, the jury system gives citizens a chance to take part in the administration of justice, and it fosters a greater confidence in the judicial system.

13 It may be the clerk of the court, the sheriff, the county governing body, or the presiding judge; in New England, it is officers of the town.

Answers
Checkpoint to decide if the evidence justifies a trial

Critical Thinking
4. Check Consistency Most government processes in this country must take place in public, but a grand jury does its work in secret. (a) Why do you think this is? (b) Is this secrecy a good idea? Why or why not?
5. Identify Alternatives Describe a situation in which someone might seek an injunction. Then write a brief argument in favor of granting the injunction and a brief argument against it.

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Writing: Write a Thesis Statement As in other types of essays or reports, you need to formulate a thesis statement to direct your thinking, research, and writing. Review your notes to find one main concept that connects your categories and questions. Write a thesis statement that expresses that concept.

730 Governing the States

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. They apply five types of law: constitutional, statutory, administrative, common, and equity. Laws are either criminal or civil. In serious cases, a grand jury decides whether to indict, sending the case to a petit jury trial. For minor and some serious offenses, the prosecutor files an information, without a grand jury. In cases involving misdemeanors or minor sums, a judge decides in a bench trial, without a petit jury.
2. Common law is unwritten, judge-made law, developed over centuries from generally accepted ideas of right and wrong. Criminal law defines those actions that are crimes and provides for their punishment. Civil law relates to disputes between private parties or private parties and government.
3. grand jury: determines whether evidence against a person charged with a crime is sufficient to justify a trial; petit jury: a trial jury that hears evidence and decides disputed facts
4. (a) Students may suggest that the jury hears much unsupported evidence that if false or misleading could ruin a person's reputation even without indictment or conviction. Secrecy also protects jurors from outside influences or retribution. (b) Answers should reflect sound reasoning.
5. Example answer: A woman seeks an injunction to stop a former boyfriend from following her. Argument for: The woman fears for her life. Argument against: The man has committed no crime at this point.
QUICK WRITE A strong thesis statement should be a complete sentence that expresses one clear goal for the explanatory essay.

\section*{CITIZENSHIP \\ 101 \\ Serving on a Jury}

\section*{Someday, you may have the chance to participate directly in the American justice system. The right to be tried by a jury of one's peers is one of the fundamental rights afforded to citizens of a democracy, and is guaranteed by the Constitution. As a juror, you will become a major participant in the American judicial system with a duty to ensure that a fellow citizen receives justice.}

How can you be selected as a potential juror? Most are chosen from voting lists, from State departments of motor vehicles, or tax rolls. How long your jury service may last can vary depending on the nature and complexity of the case involved or whether or not you are actually chosen to serve on a jury panel. Some people are excused from duty due to health issues or other hardships.

You may also be dismissed without having served at all. If you are chosen to move on to the jury selection phase, known as voir dire, lawyers on both sides will have questions for the potential jurors as they try to select a jury that they hope will be favorable to their case. You may be rejected.

If chosen, you and the other jurors will receive instructions prior to the beginning of the trial. These may include:
1. Do not be influenced by bias. Your decision in a case should not be affected by sympathies or antipathies you may have for the defendant, plaintiff, or their attorneys.
2. Follow the law exactly as it is explained to you. Your job as a juror is to determine whether or not someone broke the law, regardless of whether you approve of the law or not.
3. Remember that the defendent is presumed innocent. The government has the burden of proving a defendant guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt." If it fails to do so, the jury verdict must be "not guilty." If you feel that the government did make its case, then you must find the defendant "guilty."
4. Keep an open mind. Do not form or state any opinions about the case until you have heard all the evidence, the closing arguments of the lawyers, and the judge's instructions on the applicable law.
5. During the trial, do not discuss the case. Do not permit anyone to talk about the case with you or in your presence, except with the court's permission. Avoid media coverage of the case once the trial has begun.

\section*{D What do you think?}

What does the concept "reasonable doubt" mean to you?
2. Why do you think that jurors are instructed not to discuss the case and to avoid media coverage of it during the trial?
3. You Try It Create a jury simulation. Work in groups of six students to prepare a list of evidence related to a theoretical crime. After each team has completed its list, exchange lists. Following the instructions lists. Following the instructions above, each team will to reach a verdict in another team's case. Ask each jury to discuss its verdict with the team that created the evidence.
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

Citizenship Activity Pack For activities on serving on a jury, go to PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Citizenship Activity Pack}

L1 L2 If your students need extra support, use the Citizenship Activity Pack lesson How to Serve on a Jury. It includes a lesson plan for you, a poster outlining the development of the jury system, 28 character descriptions for prospective jurors, and case briefs containing scripts for the defendant's team and for the plaintiff's team. Students will hold a mock juror selection. Students may also access the Citizenship Activity Pack online for activities on How to Serve on a Jury at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will work in groups to take part in a jury simulation.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{REVIEW THE JURY INSTRUCTIONS}

Have students read aloud each instruction to the jury from the feature, as you write it on the board. Ask students if they have any questions about any of the instructions before they begin the simulation.

\section*{DEVELOP EVIDENCE LISTS}

Discuss the types of evidence that might be included in a particular trial, such as a criminal trial for robbery. For example, there may be witness or victim statements, videotape from surveillance cameras, a police report, DNA or other forensic evidence, and so on. Give groups time to determine the subjects of their cases and to develop their lists of evidence. Lists should be detailed and include at least five items, as well as a brief description of the case.

\section*{DECIDE A VERDICT AND DISCUSS IT}

You may want to assign groups for the exchange of evidence. In their groups, students should discuss the evidence and come to a verdict, which they should write on a piece of paper. Tell students that if their case is a murder, they must be unanimous in their decision. If their case is not a murder, a majority can decide the verdict. When verdicts and inter-group discussions are complete, ask students to each write a summary about their jury experience.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect students' evidence lists and summaries and grade them. You may also wish to have them answer the What Do You Think questions.

\section*{Answers}
1. Students should suggest that absolute certainty may not be possible but that if the prosecution makes its case, little doubt should remain as to the defendant's guilt.
2. Opinions of individuals and the media who are not privy to all the evidence could be inaccurate or biased; their ideas could sway a juror away from his or her true opinion.
3. A strong evidence list will include at least five relevant items and a description of the case. A strong summary will accurately present key points and explain the process that led to the verdict.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How are State and local courts organized and staffed?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline Municipal Courts & Juvenile Courts & Justices and Magistrates' Courts \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- citywide jurisdiction \\
- divisions: civil, criminal, small claims, traffic, probate
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- minors under age 18 \\
- rehabilitation \\
- may assign serious cases to adult court
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Justices: misdemeanors, small civil suits, warrants, preliminary hearings, marriages \\
- Magistrates: urban version of JPs \\
- both popularly elected
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- discuss the positive and negative aspects of electing or appointing judges.
- evaluate methods of judge selection by reading primary sources and through participation in a Socratic Dialogue.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 51) before class.
L2. Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 52)

\section*{Guiding Question}

How are State and local courts organized and staffed? Use a table similar to the one below to record information about the types of State and local courts.

Political Dictionary
- Justice of the hearing

Peace - magistrate
- warrant - appellate
- preliminary jurisdiction

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain how State courts are organized and describe the work that each type of court does.
2. Examine and evaluate the different methods by which judges are selected among the States. Supreme Court of Georgia

They deal with everything from traffic tickets to murder, from disputes over nickels and dimes to settlements involving millions. They are the State and local courts and the judges who sit in them. Here, you will look at the way these courts are organized and how they conduct their business.

\section*{Organization}

Each of the State constitutions creates a court system for that State. Some of the documents deal with the courts at great length, but most of them leave much of the detail of judicial organization and procedure to the legislature.

Justices of the Peace Justices of the Peace-JPs-stand on the lowest rung of the State judicial ladder. They preside over what are commonly called justice courts.

JPs were once found nearly everywhere in the country. In their day, they seemed well-suited to their purpose. In justice courts, people could obtain a hearing for minor offenses quickly. JPs and their justice courts have been done away with in several States. However, they can still be found in many smaller towns and rural areas.

JPs are usually popularly elected. For the most part, they try misdemeanors, which are cases involving such petty offenses as traffic violations, disturbing the peace, public drunkenness, and the like. JPs can almost never settle civil disputes involving more than a few hundred dollars. They do issue certain kinds of warrants, hold preliminary hearings, and often perform marriages.

A warrant is a court order authorizing, or making legal, some official action. Search warrants and arrest warrants are the most common of these documents. A preliminary hearing is generally the first step in a major criminal prosecution. There, the judge decides if the evidence is, in fact, enough to hold that per-son-bind that person over-for action by the grand jury or the prosecutor.

In some places, JPs are still paid out of the fines they take in. The more fines they impose, the higher their incomes. This "fee system" can lead to any number of abuses and raises serious questions about the fairness of the treatment a defendant can expect. \({ }^{14}\)

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

To teach the skill of comparing viewpoints, have students read Compare Viewpoints in the Skills Handbook, p. S15. Then have them read and evaluate the two editorials in this lesson's Core Worksheet.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - State courts are classified by location, the community they serve, and the types of cases they resolve. - Court cases can be appealed to appellate courts and to the State supreme court. • Most State and local judges are directly elected. • Others are named by legislatures, governors, or by a combination of elected officials and voters.
CONCEPTS: judicial branch
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Local courts serve a defined community and deal with a wide range of case types. - Cases involving difficult points of law rise to appellate courts or State supreme courts on appeal. - Any method of choosing judges raises questions about the independence and quality of the people selected.

Magistrates' Courts Magistrates are the city cousins of JPs. For the most part, magistrates handle those minor civil complaints and misdemeanor cases that arise in an urban setting. They preside over what often are called magistrates' courts or police courts. Magistrates, like JPs, are usually popularly elected for fairly short terms.

Municipal Courts Municipal courts were first established in Chicago in 1906. They are now found in most large cities and many smaller ones.

The jurisdiction of municipal courts is citywide. They can often hear civil cases involving several thousands of dollars as well as the usual run of misdemeanors. Many municipal courts are organized into divisions, which hear cases of a given kind-for example, civil, criminal, small claims, traffic, and probate divisions.

Consider the small claims division, often called the small claims court. Many people cannot afford the costs of suing for the collection of a small debt. A newspaper carrier, for example, can hardly afford a lawyer to collect a month's subscription from a customer. The owner of a two-family house may have the same problem with a tenant's back rent, and many merchants are forced to forget an overdue bill or sell it to a collection agency.

Small claims courts are designed for just such situations. There, a person can bring a claim for little or no cost. The proceedings are usually informal, and the judge often handles the matter without attorneys for either side.

Juvenile Courts Individuals under 18 years of age are generally not subject to the jurisdiction of the courts in which adults are tried. Minors who are arrested for some offense, or who otherwise come to the attention of the police or other authorities, may appear in juvenile courts.

14 Many insist that the fee system means that "JP" really stands for "judgment for the plaintiff." The practice also encourages "fee spliting"-an arrangement in which judges can increase the number of misdemeanors they hear by agreeing to share their fees with those arresting officers who bring such cases to them. The "speed trap" is probably the best known and most common result of a fee-spliting situation.

The juvenile justice system is designed to address the special needs and problems of young people. This system generally emphasizes rehabilitation more than punishment. However, under some circumstances, juvenile courts do refer certain offenders to a regular criminal court for trial.

Recently, most States have responded to juvenile crime with tougher criminal laws. Often these statutes make it easier to try juveniles as adults when they are charged with serious crimes. In 46 States, juvenile court judges may assign certain cases involving juveniles to adult courts. In several States, cases that meet certain standards must be tried in adult courts.

General Trial Courts Most of the more important civil and criminal cases are heard in the States' general trial courts. Every State is divided into a number of judicial districts, or circuits, each generally covering one or more counties. For each district there is a general trial court, which may be known as a district, circuit, chancery, county, or superior court, or as a court of common pleas.

These general trial courts are courts of "first instance." That is, they exercise original jurisdiction over most of the cases they hear. Most legal actions brought under State law begin in these courts. When cases do come to them on appeal from some lower court, a new trial is usually held.

The cases heard in trial courts are tried before a single judge. Most often a petit jury (the trial jury) hears and decides the facts at issue in a case, and the judge interprets and applies the law involved. Criminal cases are presented for trial either by a grand jury or, most often, on motion of the prosecuting attorney.

The trial court is seldom limited as to the kinds of cases it may hear. Although this court's decision on the facts in a case is usually final, disputes over questions of law may be carried to a higher court.

Chapter 24 • Section 5733

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 24, Section 5:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 51)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 52)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 53)
L3 Quiz A (p. 57)
L2 Quiz B (p. 58)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 59)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 62)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Write on the board: How are judges selected in our State? How fair and effective is this method? Answer in your notebook.

A municipal court might handle appeals of parking tickets..

\section*{rehabilitation} n. the act of restoring, useful, lawful life

\section*{probate}
adj. relating to a will or the distribution of property as described in a will \(\sqrt{ }\) Checkpoint What are the responsibilities of JPs, magistrates' courts, and municipal courts?

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute Chapter 24 Section 5 Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 53), which contains editorials written by retired U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and J. Karl Miller, a staff writer for the Columbia Missourian newspaper. Both editorials give opinions on how judges are selected. Have students read the selections and answer the questions that follow. Tell students that they will use the information and opinions in these selections to participate in a Socratic Dialogue.

L2 ELL Differentiate If students are having difficulty reading the primary sources on the Core Worksheet, pair them with a more proficient reader to help explain difficult words or concepts.

\section*{Answers}

Juvenile Justice Juveniles may lack adult judgment in determining right from wrong. Influence from adult inmates could turn juvenile offenders into hardened criminals or be dangerous. Juvenile justice should focus on rehabilitation.

\section*{Juvenile Justice}

Juvenile courts arose from decades of struggle at the State level to adapt and reform the criminal justice system. Why do you think reformers sought separate jails and prisons for young people?

> 1800 S common law preferred to have parents discipline children for most crimes. Young poople accused of serious crimes were jailed with adults, and those as young as seven could be tried and sentenced in criminal courts.
> 1899 cook County .llinois, creates the first juvenile curt on the erpinicile of "the state as parent." The court protects both public safety and the needs of the juveniles accused of crimes.

1974 Congress passes the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act requiring that young people be jailed separately from adults and encouraging states to develop alternatives to prisons.

Today While juvenile courts still flourish, States increasingly allow juveniles accused of serious crimes to be tried and sentenced in adult courts.

Intermediate Appellate Courts Most States now have one or more intermediate appellate courts. They are courts of appeal that stand between the trial courts and the State's supreme court. These appellate courts serve to ease the burden of the State's highest court.

The appellate courts have different names among the States, but they are most often called the court of appeals. \({ }^{15}\) Most of their work involves the review of cases decided in the trial courts. That is, these appeals courts exercise mostly appellate jurisdiction. Their original jurisdiction, where it exists, is limited to a few specific kinds of cases-election disputes, for example.

In exercising their appellate jurisdiction, these courts do not hold trials. Rather, they hear oral arguments from attorneys, study the briefs (written arguments) that attorneys submit, and review the record of the case in the lower court.

Ordinarily, an intermediate appellate court does not concern itself with the facts in a case. Rather, its decision turns on whether the law was correctly interpreted and applied in the court below. Its decision may be

\footnotetext{
\(\mathbf{5}\) In New York, the general trial court is called the supreme court or the county court, the intermediate appellate court is the appellate division of the supreme court, the State's highest court is known as the Court of Appeals.
}
reviewed by the State's high court; its disposition of a case is usually final, however.

The State Supreme Court The State's supreme court is the highest court in its judicial system. \({ }^{16}\) Its major function is to review the decisions of lower courts in those cases that are appealed to it.

The size of each State supreme court is fixed by that State's constitution, usually at five or seven justices. A chief justice presides over the sessions of each State's top court.

The governor appoints the justices in just over half of the States. The voters elect them elsewhere, except in two States where the legislature chooses.

The State supreme court is the court of last resort in the State's judicial system. It has the final say in all matters of State law. The United States Supreme Court may review some State supreme court decisions touching on federal law. But not very many State decisions actually go to the federal Supreme Court. \({ }^{17}\) Recall

\footnotetext{
16 The State's highest court is known as the Supreme Court in 45 States. But in Maine and Massachusetts it is called the Supreme Judicial Court, in Maryland and New York, the Court of Appeals; and in West Virginia, the Supreme Court of Appeals. Oklahoma and Texas have two high courts: the Supreme Court is the highest court in civil cases, and a separate Court of Criminal Appeals is the court of lastr resort tin criminal cases. 17 Many such cases involved the 14 th Amendment's Due Process and Equal Protection clauses.
}

\section*{Background}
juvenile court movement For over 100 years from its inception, the United States treated juvenile offenders no differently from adult offenders. In 1899, for example, 322 boys ages 9 to 16 were imprisoned in the city of Chicago for crimes ranging from assault with a deadly weapon to picking up coal on the railroad tracks. In prison, they shared cells with adult criminals. This raised an outcry for a new system, and the Illinois Juvenile Court Act of 1899 established the first separate, noncriminal court for the children of the State. The juvenile court movement spread rapidly, due largely to the influence and philosophy of Judge Ben Lindsey of Colorado, and by the 1920s every State had some legal provision for delinquent youth.
that an appeal from a State's high court will be heard in the federal Supreme Court only if (1) a "federal question"-some matter of federal law-is involved in the case and (2) the Supreme Court agrees to hear that appeal. In short, most State supreme court decisions are final. \({ }^{18}\)

Unified Court Systems The typical State court system is organized geographically rather than by types of cases. In these mapbased systems, a judge must hear cases in nearly all areas of the law. A backlog of cases can and often does build up in some courts while judges sit with little to do in others. Moreover, uneven interpretations and applications of the law may and sometimes do occur from one part of the State to another. To overcome these difficulties, a number of States have turned to a unified court sys-tem-one that is organized on a functional, or case-type, basis.

In a completely unified court system, there is technically only one court for the entire State. It is presided over by a chief judge or judicial council. There are a number of levels within the single court, such as supreme, intermediate appellate, and general trial sections. At each level within each section, divisions are established to hear cases in certain specialized or heavy-caseload areas of the law-criminal, juvenile, family relations, and other areas that need special attention.

In such an arrangement, a judge can be assigned to that section or division to which his or her talents and interests seem best suited. To relieve overcrowded dockets, judges may be moved from one division to another.

\section*{Selection of Judges}

Clearly, the quality of any court systemindeed, the quality of justice itself-depends in large measure on the selection of competent,

18 State law regularly gives its lower courts final jurisdiction over many types of minor cases. That is, review cannot be sought in a higher State court. In those cases, the lower court is the State's court of last resort. If any review is to be had, it can be only in the United States Supreme Court Such reviews are extremely rare.
19 Alabama, Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin.
well-trained judges. More than 15,000 judges now sit in the States' various trial and appellate courts. Nearly all of them came to office in one of three ways: (1) by popular election, (2) by appointment by the governor, or (3) by appointment by the legislature.

Popular election is by far the most widely used method of judicial selection. In fact, the only way to become a judge in 11 States is by popular election. \({ }^{19}\) Midterm vacancies, caused by death or resignation, provide the only exception to that blanket rule; those vacancies are usually filled by gubernatorial appointment. Roughly half of all judicial elections are nonpartisan contests today.

Selection by the legislature is the method least often used. The lawmakers now choose all or at least most judges in only two States: South Carolina and Virginia.

Governors now select nearly a fourth of all State judges. In five States, the chief executive appoints them all. In several others, the governor has the power to appoint all or at least many judges, but under a Missouri Plan arrangement, as you will see.

How Should Judges Be Selected? Most people believe that judges should be independent, that they should "stay out of politics."

- Analyzing Political Cartoons What does this cartoon suggest about electing judges based on their judicial philosophy?

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display the political cartoon Transparency 241, Justice for Sale, as an extension to the Core Worksheet activity. Point out that this cartoon appeared in the article by Sandra Day O'Connor in The Wall Street Journal. Ask: What does the scale represent? (the jidicial system) Why is the scale unbalanced? (because money weighs more-that is, has more influence-in the judicial system than the people do) What main point made by O'Connor does this cartoon illustrate? (Money from special interests is upsetting the balance, or integrity, of the judicial system, and eroding people's faith in judicial decisions.)

\section*{MAKE A DECISION USING A SOCRATIC DIALOGUE}

Discuss students' answers to the Bellringer questions. Then discuss their reactions to the primary source readings and ask whether either source changed their ideas about appointment versus election of judges. Ask: How does the election of judges help or hurt the judicial system? (More competent judges might be chosen through appointment, but election ensures accountability to the people.)
Selecting judges through popular election is more democratic, but does it create a stronger or weaker judicial system? Tell students that they will have 15 minutes to choose whether they think election or appointment is the best method. Remind them to consider the advantages and disadvantages of both. Have them use a Socratic Dialogue (p. T24) to decide.

\section*{FOLLOW UP THE DISCUSSION}

Give students a few minutes to reflect on the results of the Socratic Dialogue in a journal entry. If they agreed on a method, have students answer these questions: What criteria were important in your choice? Is one method overwhelmingly better than another? Is one method best for all cases? If they were unable to agree, have students answer these questions: Why were you not able to agree on a method? Do you think the class could have settled on a method for specific government levels or specific types of courts?

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

Have students investigate the types of courts in your State's judicial system. Ask them to use the information they find to create an informational poster that explains each type of court, each level of authority, and how each court's judges are selected.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to spread caseloads more evenly and to make interpretations and applications of law more uniform across the State
Analyzing Political Cartoons that the elected judge's judicial philosophy could be positive or negative

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

L3 Assess students' class participation using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 126). Assign the Section 5 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 57)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 58)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
The organization \\ of the State courts \\
(Questions 1, 2, 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
List the seven main types of courts at the \\ State level on the board. Ask students to \\ supply details about each type, including \\ their main functions and the kinds of cases \\ they hear.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} How judges are \\ selected (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Write the three methods of judge selection \\ on the board in the form of a pro/con chart. \\ Based on their reading and their own think- \\ ing, ask students to suggest the benefits and \\ drawbacks of each method.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Qualifications for \\ judges (Question 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students create a résume that repre- \\ sents someonet they would consider to be a \\ highly qualified judge. Tell students to work \\ in groups of three to compare the types of \\ experience they listed.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Whatever method of selection is used should be designed with that goal in mind.

Nearly all authorities agree that selection by the legislature is the most political of all the methods of choice. Few favor it. So, the question really becomes: Which is better, the popular election of judges or their appointment by the governor?

Those who favor popular election generally make the democratic argument. Because judges "say the law" (interpret and apply it), they should be chosen by and answer directly to the people. Some also argue that the separation of powers is undercut if the executive names the members of the judicial branch.

Those who favor appointment by the governor argue that the judicial function should be carried out only by those who are well qualified. The fact that a person has the support of a political party or is a good vote-getter does not mean that person has the capacity to be a good judge. Proponents of executive appointment insist that it is the best way to ensure that those persons who preside in courts will have the qualities most needed in that role: absolute honesty and integrity, fairness, and the necessary training and ability in the law.

Deciding between these two positions is difficult at best. The people have often made excellent choices, and governors have not always made wise and nonpolitical ones. Still, most authorities come down on the side of gubernatorial appointment-largely because those characteristics that make a good judge and those that make a good candidate are not too often found in the same person.

Popular election is both widely used and widely supported by citizens and party organizations. So, most moves to revise methods of judicial selection have kept at least some element of voter choice.

The Missouri Plan For most of the past century, the American Bar Association (ABA) has sponsored an approach that combines election and appointment. The method is often called "the Missouri Plan," and some form is now in place in just over half the States.

In Missouri's version of this method, the governor appoints the seven justices of the State supreme court, the 32 judges of the court of appeals, and all judges who sit in the trial courts in the most heavily populated parts of the State. The governor must make each appointment from a panel, or list, of three candidates recommended by a judicial nominating commission. The commission is made up of a sitting judge, several members of the bar, and private citizens.

Each judge named by the governor serves until the first general election after he or she has been in office for at least a year. The judge's name then appears on the ballot without opposition. The voters decide, in a retain-reject election, whether or not that judge should be kept in office. Should the voters reject a sitting judge, the process begins again.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a }\end{aligned}\) Journal Essential Question, go to your

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint by popular election or by gubernatorial appointment
1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: How are State and local courts organized and staffed?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. (a) What is appellate jurisdiction? (b) Which State courts have this jurisdiction?
3. Describe the work of the general trial courts.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Demonstrate Reasoned Judgment How do you think judges should be selected? Choose one method described in this section and create a strong, well-supported argument for that method.
5. Draw Inferences What qualifications do you think a good judge should have? Write a help-wanted advertisement for your ideal candidate.

\section*{Quick Write}

Explanatory Writing: Create an Outline To help you structure an explanatory essay on the differences in power between the national and State governments, create an outline in which you identify each topic and subtopic in a single phrase. When you are ready to write your essay, you can use the outline as a guide. Alternatively, you may create a flowchart to help you organize and order your ideas.

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. Main types of State courts: Justice of the Peace courts (misdemeanors, small civil suits, warrants, preliminary hearings, marriages); magistrates' courts (urban version of JPs); municipal courts (civil, criminal, small claims, traffic, probate); juvenile courts (minors under age 18); general trial courts (most of the more important civil and criminal cases); intermediate appellate courts (appeals from trial courts); supreme court (appeals from lower courts). Some States have a unified court system with a chief judge or council and several levels. Divisions within each level hear cases in specialized or heavy-caseload areas, such as criminal, juvenile, and family relations. Judges in the States may be elected, appointed by the governor, or appointed by the legislature. The Missouri Plan combines election and appointment.
2. (a) review of the interpretation and application of law in cases decided by lower courts
(b) intermediate appellate courts and the State supreme court
3. General trial courts exercise original jurisdiction, and hear both criminal and civil cases.
4. Strong answers should focus on the goal of keeping judges independent of politics as much as possible.
5. Answers will vary but might include knowledge of the law and judicial processes, good judgment, honesty, integrity, and fairness.
QUICK write Outlines should be presented in correct outline format and cover the topic of the differences in power between the State and national governments appropriately and logically.

Legal Terms
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{ Term } & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{ Purpose } \\
\hline Jury & To reach a just decision \\ \hline Common law & \begin{tabular}{l} To guide a judge's decisions \\ with past examples
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Equity & \begin{tabular}{l} To stop wrongs before \\ they occur
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Criminal law & To protect the public order \\
\hline Civil law & \begin{tabular}{l} To resolve disputes between \\ people and between people \\ and the government
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Political Dictionary} popular sovereignty p. 709 limited government p. 709 fundamental law p. 710 initiative \(p .712\) statutory law \(p .713\) police power p. 717 constituent power \(p .717\) referendum p. 719 recall p. 721
item veto p. 724
clemency p. 724 pardon p. 724
commutation p. 725 reprieve \(p .725\)
parole \(p .725\)
common law p. 727
precedent \(p .728\) criminal law p. 728
felony \(p .728\) misdemeanor p. 728
civil law \(p .728\)
tort p. 728
contract p. 728 jury p. 728
information p. 729
bench trial p. 730
Justice of the Peace p. 732 warrant \(p .732\)
preliminary hearing \(p .732\) magistrate p. 733
appellate jurisdiction p. 734

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about governing the states, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
L1 De Capua, Sarah. Being a Governor. Children's Press, 2004.
L2 Marvis, B., Austin Sarat, and Leslie Berger. Grand Jury. Chelsea House Publishers, 2000.
L3 Braunstein, Richard. Initiative and Referendum Voting: Governing Through Direct Democracy in the United States. LFB Scholarly Publishing LLC, 2004.
L4 Tarr, G. Alan. Understanding State Constitutions. Princeton University Press, 2000.

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

SQ3R SQ3R stands for "Survey, Question, Read, Recite, Review. " Explain to students that SQ3R is a reading method that will help them organize and remember information. When they sit down to read a section of their textbook using this method, students will first survey the section. This means skimming the headings, subheadings, and captions in the section, as well as introductory and concluding paragraphs. Students should then skim the section again, this time asking themselves questions such as "What is this section about?" and turning the headings and subheadings into questions. After considering these questions briefly, students should read the section, looking for the answers. While reading, students should also note key terms and review graphic organizers. When reading is complete, students recite information from the section. To do this, they can ask themselves questions aloud or summarize aloud what they've read or jot down key points in their own words. The review part of the method is ongoing over several days. To review what they have read, students can write questions about the content, skim the material, or create graphic organizers to summarize the material in the section. Students might also make flash cards of key points in the section that they can use while studying.

\section*{assessment at A glance}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 7 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 7 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank
Performance Assessment
Essential Questions Journal
Extend the Lesson, p. 711
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) popular sovereignty, limited government, separation of powers, checks and balances (b) The early constitutions arose from the experiences of the American Revolution and reflect the goals of the revolutionaries. After throwing off the tyranny of the British government, Americans wanted to set limits and checks within their constitutions to protect basic rights and ensure that the people remained the supreme authority and that their governments could not oppress them again.
2. (a) Amending State constitutions requires a proposal from a constitutional convention, the legislature, or popular initiative followed by ratification by popular vote, typically by a majority of those voting. Amending the U.S. Constitution is more difficult. There is no initiative process, and proposals and ratification require greater support than a majority vote. (b) The process of formal change for State constitutions involves proposal by the legislature, which can be simple in some States or difficult in others. In 18 States, the voters themselves can propose constitutional amendments through the initiative, a process in which voters sign petitions in favor of a proposal that goes on the ballot for approval or rejection by the people. Over the years, State constitutions have grown in size and complexity, with outdated provisions and unnecessary details.

\section*{SECTION 2}
3. (a) all powers not granted to another branch or denied by State or U.S. constitutions; pass laws that do not conflict with federal law or the State constitution; tax, spend, borrow, establish courts/jurisdiction, define crimes/punishment, regulate commerce, maintain schools; police power; approve appointments; impeach; propose State constitutional amendments (b) State legislatures basically have the same powers as Congress, but they also have the police power, which is reserved to them.
4. (a) Voters can propose and force a vote on an amendment or a law by initiative. In a referendum, the legislature decides to refer the measure to the voters. (b) Students should support their positions with details from the text.

Comprehension and Critical Thinking

Section 1
1. (a) What are the basic principles on which all State constitutions are based? (b) How do these basic principles reflect the origins of the first State constitutions?
2. (a) Explain how the process of amending a State constitution differs from amending the federal Constitution. (b) How might the two basic methods for changing State constitutions contribute to the need for reform?
Section 2
3. (a) What powers does a State legislature have? (b) How are those powers different from the powers of Congress?
4. (a) What is the difference between an initiative and a referendum? (b) Is the initiative process a reflection of the principle of representative government?
Section 3
5. (a) How does the governor's role as chief executive differ from the President's role as head of the executive branch? (b) Should the formal and informal qualifications for a governorship differ from those for the presidency? Why?
6. (a) Which of the governor's executive powers is most important? Explain. (b) Do the governor's judicial powers conflict with the principle of separation of powers? Why or why not?

\section*{Section 4}
7. (a) What is common law and what are its origins? (b) Why do you think that it remains important to our legal system?
8. (a) What does the use of juries tell you about traditional American views of the proper role of citizens and government officials in the judicial process? (b) What does the trend away from jury trials say about trends in the American system of justice?

Section 5
9. (a) What are the three ways by which State and local judges are selected today? (b) Do you or would you approve of the Missouri Plan as a fair and effective way to select judges in your State? Why or why not?
10. Analyzing Political Cartoons (a) What does "streamlining the judicial process" mean? (b) What are the benefits to States and individuals of streamlining? (c) What, according to this cartoon, is a disadvantage?

"In the interest of streamlining the judicial process, we'll skip the evidence and go directly to sentencing."

\section*{Writing About Government}
11. Use your Quick Write exercises from the section assessments to write an essay that explains the aspect of State government you selected. Make sure the body supports your thesis with accurate information and reasoned arguments. See pp. S3-S5 in the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
12. Essential Question Activity Speak with a State legislator, legislative aide, or employee of State government. Ask:
(a) How does State government most directly affect people's lives?
(b) Is State government as responsible to voters as it should be?
(c) If you could change the structure of State government, what would you do?
13. Essential Question Assessment Use the interview you conducted to write an editorial that helps you answer the Essential Question: How much power answer the Essential Question: How much power should State government have? In your editorial, propose what you think is the one most importan rial, propose what you think is the one most important reform that should be made to your State's government your interview to help persuade readers of the benefits of your suggested reform

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To respond to the chapter Essential } \\ & \text { Question, go to your Essential }\end{aligned}\) Journal Question, go to your Essentia Questions Journal.

738 Chapter 24 Assessment

\section*{SECTION 3}
5. (a) A governor shares power with other State executives. The President is alone at the top. (b) Some students may feel that since both positions require similar responsibilities, the qualifications should be the same. Others may feel that President is a broader and more crucial job requiring more experience and greater qualifications.
6. (a) Students should choose one of the executive powers and support their choice. (b) The governor can alter judicial decisions, thereby checking the power of the judicial branch, by using the powers of pardon, commutation, reprieve, and parole. The governor cannot remove a judge or jury or decide a case, but only change a decision and probably would not do this lightly because of public opinion.

\section*{SECTION 4}
7. (a) The common law is unwritten, judgemade law developed over centuries from generally accepted ideas of right and wrong that have gained judicial recognition. It originated in England. (b) Possible answer: It is important because it is

\section*{Document-Based Assessment}
1. \(D\)
2. Reforms will result in so many candidates and initiatives that the ballot will become too long and complicated for ordinary citizens to understand
3. Essays should reflect an understanding of the need to give reasonable voice to ordinary citizens without overcomplicating elections. Students should recognize that voters have an important role in a democracy, whether exercised indirectly through elected officials or directly through initiative and referendum.
L2. Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.

L3
Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Use your knowledge of the police power and Documents 1 and 2 to answer Questions 1-3.
1. Through the initiative and referendum, the Populist Party hoped to
A. redistribute money and land so that all Americans would be economically equal.
B. create long and confusing ballots designed to trick voters.
C. give Americans more faith in the powerful and wealthy leaders.
D. take power away from the wealthy and special interests and restore it to the common people.
2. What concern about ballot reforms is the cartoonist expressing in Document 2? Explain.
3. Pull It Together Do you think that initiatives and referenda are still effective ways for voters to influence or control government in the States? Explain.
(1) GOVERNMENT ONLINE Go Online head To find more primary sources about direct democracy, visi PearsonSuccessNet.com

Go Online to PearsonSuccessNet.com
for a student rubric and extra documents.
tradition on which many written laws and judicial decisions today are based.
8. (a) possible answer: faith in ordinary citizens and suspicion of government (b) Possible answer: It may indicate a desire for fast, inexpensive results and more efficient government; less confidence in the motivation and competence of jurors and more confidence in professional jurists.

\section*{SECTION 5}
9. (a) popular election, appointment by governor, appointment by legislature (b) Students should support their opinion.
10. (a) simplifying the trial process (b) a quicker, less costly resolution of a trial (c) the possibility that critical evidence would not be heard and a fair judgment might not be reached

\section*{WRITING ABOUT GOVERNMENT}
11. Essays should be well-organized and clearly explain the concept or process students worked to develop throughout the chapter.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
12. Responses should summarize the interviewee's answers.
13. Students' editorials should contain wellorganized, informative details presented in an effective, persuasive style.

\section*{Introduce the Chapter}

\section*{Essential Questions: \\ UNIT 7}

What is the right balance of federal, State, and local government?

\section*{CHAPTER 25}

How local should government be?

\section*{ACTIVATE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE}

Have students examine the photo and quotation on these pages. Ask: What do the photo and quotation suggest about the importance of local governments in citizens' lives? (Local governments can be agents of change for their citizens.) In this chapter, students will learn how State and local governments serve citizens. Tell students to further explore local governments by completing the Chapter 25 Essential Question Warmup activity in their Essential Questions Journal. Discuss their responses.

\section*{before reading}

L2 ELL Differentiate Chapter 25 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 74)

\section*{SUCCESSNET STUDENT AND TEACHER CENTER}

Visit PearsonSuccessNet.com for downloadable resources that allow students and teachers to connect with government "on the go."

\section*{DIGITAL LESSON PRESENTATION}

The digital lesson presentation supports the print lesson with activities and summaries of key concepts. Activities for this chapter include:
- Municipalities and Townships
- State and Local Spending

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE CAUSE AND EFFECT}

You may wish to teach analyzing cause and effect as a distinct skill within Section 2 of this chapter. Use the Chapter 25 Skills Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 94) to help students learn how to analyze cause and effect. The worksheet asks students to read an excerpt and then explain how highway construction is described as both a cause and an effect. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 95).

\section*{WebQuest \\ online The chapter WebQuest challenges} students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about local government.

\section*{Block Scheduling}
bLock 1: Teach the Section 1 lesson and assign the L3 Extend option. Teach the Section 2 lesson, omitting the city planning activity and the Extend options.
BLOCK 2: Teach the Section 3 and 4 lessons, omitting the Extend options.

\section*{Pressed for Time}

To cover the chapter quickly, have students complete the Reading Comprehension worksheets for Section 1 and Section 2. Write each type of local governmentcounties, towns, townships, and cities-on the board and ask students to volunteer features of each. Clarify the type of local government in your community. Define and describe the structure of the types of local government. Ask students to suggest the types of services that each needs to provide. Discuss how local governments raise money to pay for these services. Conclude by emphasizing this importance of local government and have students write a journal entry to answer this question: Would it be possible for a nation as large as the United States to meet the needs of its citizens without local governments? Have students provide reasoned arguments and details to support their positions.

\section*{Lesson Goals}

\section*{SECTION 1}

Students will
- use a transparency to discuss the typical structure and variations in county governments.
- work with a partner to debate the need for county government.
- investigate their own local government structure to complete an informational diagram.

\section*{SECTION 2}

Students will
- compare and contrast the three basic forms of city government using a transparency.
- experience the planning function of city government by planning a city square.

\section*{SECTION 3}

Students will
- list and categorize services that they receive from State and local governments.
- role play to complete a worksheet ranking the importance of State and local services from various perspectives.
- compare their rankings of State services against actual State and local spending.

\section*{SECTION 4}

Students will
- list and categorize taxes as progressive or regressive.
- use a bar graph to discuss sources of State and local revenue.
- evaluate different types of State and local taxes based on four criteria describing "a good tax."

\section*{DIFFERENTIATED INSTRUCTION KEY}

Look for these symbols to help you adjust steps in each lesson to meet your students' needs.
L1
Special Needs
L2
Basic
ELL English Language Learners
LPR Less Proficient Readers
L3
All Students
L4 Advanced Students

What are the similarities and differences of local governments, special districts, and tribal governments?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Types of Local Government} \\
\hline & & \\
\hline nties & Towns & Townships \\
\hline & & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- New England: serve as judicial districts \\
- South and West main unit in rural areas \\
- Elements: governing body, several boards or commissions, appointed bureaucrats, elected officials \\
- Governing body usually has executive and legislative powers \\
- Boards of commissioners: include fair board, planning commission, board of health \\
- Administer State and county laws; keep peace; maintain jails; assess property for taxes; collect taxes; spend county funds; maintain roads, bridges, schools; record deeds, marriage licenses, other documents; issue licenses; administer elections; care for poor; safeguard health
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Found in New England \\
- Major unit of Iocal government in New England \\
- Include rural and urban areas \\
- Deliver services provided by cities and counties elsewhere \\
- Town meeting open to all eligible vot-ers-levies taxes, makes spending and policy decisions, elects officials \\
- Board of selectmen/selectwomen manages town business \\
- Direct democracy replaced by representative government in larger towns
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
- Mid-Atantic and Midwest: share government with counties \\
- About half have annual township meetings \\
- Others have elected board of trustees or supervisors \\
- Municipalityseparate urban unit within township \\
- Townships tend to be rural
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

SKILLS DEVELOPMENT
ANALYZE POLITICAL CARTOONS

\section*{Counties, Towns, and Townships}

Guiding Question
What are the similarities and differences of local governments, special districts, and tribal governments? Use a chart similar to the one below to record facts about local governments.

Political Dictionary
- county • municipality
- township - special district

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the typical county, its governmental structure, and functions.
2. Analyze the need for reform in county government.
3. Identify the responsibilities of tribal governments.
4. Examine the governments of towns, townships, and special districts.

You know that the Census Bureau is in the people-counting business. Do you know that it also counts a great many other things-including units of government? The Bureau's Census of Governments found an astounding 89,527 governments in the United States. In 2007, it counted the Federal Government, 50 States, and 89,476 local governments across the country.

Those local units come in many different shapes and sizes. Some have only a handful of employees and operate with only meager budgets. Others have tens of thousands of employees and budgets of a billion dollars or more. Many perform only a single public function, such as providing fire protection or water service. Others, including nearly all cities and most urban counties, deliver a long list of services, limited only by budgetary and legal restraints.

The Constitution of the United States says nothing about local governments. So, cities, towns, counties, school districts, and all other local governments, unlike the Federal Government and the 50 States, have no independent constitutional standing. They are, instead, creatures of the States.

Recall that each of the 50 States is a unitary government. Each one of them has the reserved power to create local governments and structure them in whatever ways it chooses-and also to abolish them, if it chooses to do so. \({ }^{1}\) Whether they are providing services, regulating activities, collecting taxes, or doing anything else, local governments can only act because the State that established them has given them the power to do so.

\section*{Counties}

A county is a major unit of local government in most States. Like all local governments, it is created by the State. There are 3,033 county governments in the United States today. No close relationship exists between the size of any given State and the number of counties in that State. The number of county governments per State ranges from none in Connecticut and Rhode Island and three in Delaware to as many as 254 in Texas.

The Census Bureau found 116,756 local units in its first Census of Governments, in 1952. The States, then, have abolished more than 31,000 units of local government over the past half century. The Bureau conducts the Census of Governments in every fifth year ending in 2 or 7 .

Image Above: Local governments provide fire protection and many other essential services.

To help students analyze the political cartoon used in this lesson, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S22, and use the steps explained there.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: • Counties exist in most States. - County responsibilities may include building and maintaining roads, sewers, and other public works; operating jails; keeping public records; and safeguarding health. - Towns and townships are found in the Northeast and Midwest. - Special districts serve specific functions at the local level.
CONCEPTS: types of governments, role of government ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • Local governments supply basic services of daily life.
- County, town, and township governments offer many of the same services. - Special districts are created where other boundaries don't correspond with the area in need of services. - Federally recognized Native American tribal governments are sovereign.

In Louisiana, units of government known elsewhere as counties are called parishes. In Alaska, they are known as boroughs. In addition to Connecticut and Rhode Island, several other places across the country have no organized county government. About 10 percent of the nation's population lives in those areas today.

The functions of counties vary from region to region. They serve almost solely as judicial districts in some New England States. There, towns carry out most of the functions undertaken by counties elsewhere. In many mid-Atlantic and Midwestern States, counties are divided into subdivisions called townships. In those States, counties and townships share the functions of rural local government. In the South and the West, counties are the major governing unit in rural areas.

In terms of area, San Bernardino County in California is the largest in the continental United States; it spreads across 20,105 square miles. Kalawao County in Hawaii is the smallest; it covers just 13 square miles. Counties within each State often vary widely in area.

Counties also differ greatly in terms of population. More than 10 million people now live in Los Angeles County in California, but census-takers could find only 67 residents of Loving County, Texas, in 2000. Most counties serve populations of fewer than 50,000 .

\section*{County Government Structure}

The structures of county government differ, too, and often considerably. Even so, a county typically has four major elements: a governing body, a number of boards or commissions, appointed bureaucrats, and a variety of elected officials.

The Governing Body The county's governing body is frequently called the county board. It is also known as the board of commissioners, board of supervisors, police jury, assembly, legislature, and board of chosen freeholders, among other names.

The members of this governing body are almost always popularly elected. Terms of office run from two to six years, but four-year terms are the most common. Board members are usually chosen from districts within the county rather than on an at-large basis.

Generally, county boards can be grouped into two types: boards of commissioners and boards of supervisors. The board of commissioners is the smaller, more common type. It is found everywhere in the South and West, and it is also common elsewhere. A board of commissioners most often has three or five members, but some have seven or more.

The board of supervisors is typically a much larger body. It averages about 15 members but can run to 80 or more. The supervisors are elected from single-member districts in the county. Each supervisor may be an officer of his or her township, as well as a member of the countywide governing body.

The State constitution and acts of the State legislature spell out the powers held by county governing bodies. Those powers are usually both executive and legislative, despite the American tradition of separation of powers.

County governments' most important legislative powers deal with finance. Everywhere, county boards levy taxes, appropriate funds, and incur limited debts. They also have a number of other legislative powersfor example, in the fields of public health and corrections.

\(\underline{\text { incur }}\)
v. bring about, gain

\section*{The county court house is often the center of county government, as in Sevier County, Tennessee. \\ -}
\(\sqrt{ }\) Checkpoint
In what ways do counties vary across the country?

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- use a transparency to discuss the typical structure and variations in county governments.
- work with a partner to debate the need for county government.
- investigate their own local government structure to complete an informational diagram.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 77) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 79)

\section*{bellringer}

Write on the board: What types of local government exist in our area? What are the names of the governmental units that apply to you? Write your answers in your notebooks.
L2 ELL Differentiate Suggest that students create a concept web to record the information.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 25, Section 1 :
L2 Prereading and Vocabulary Worksheet (p. 74)
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 77)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 79)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 81)
L2 Core Worksheet (p. 82)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 84)
L3 Quiz A (p. 85)
L2 Quiz B (p. 86)

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Counties vary in size and number, with some States having none. Counties serve almost solely as judicial districts in New England. In MidAtlantic and Midwestern States, counties share rural government with townships. In the South and West, counties are the main rural government.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Explain to students that this lesson is about the forms of local government in the United States. Draw a simple flowchart on the board to show the levels of government in a typical State: State, county, town/ township. Include tribal government if applicable.

Discuss aspects of each specific form of local government in your State and have students use the information from the Bellringer activity to fill in details on the flowchart for the area in which they live. Students may come from different towns or counties, which can all be listed on the flowchart. It may be helpful to display a map showing towns and counties in your State. Help students identify your county on the map.
L2 ELL Differentiate Clarify that the word county is different from country, and make sure that students understand that a county is an area within a State. You may wish to show an outline map of the United States to clarify country and a map of your region with county boundaries to clarify county.

\section*{Answers}

County Government Structure Students will likely note that the school superintendent has the greatest impact on their lives.

\section*{How Government Works}

\section*{County Government Structure}

A typical county government is made up of a governing body, often known as a county board, and several appointed and elected officials with assigned responsibilities. Which local government officials have the greatest impact on your daily life?
 holds broad powers over budgets and programs. Specialized officials like the county assessor (left) may be elected or appointed.

County Official Duties
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline County Board & \begin{tabular}{l} Levies taxes and sets spending \\ Administers roads, county buildings, \\ and programs \\
Appoints boards and officials
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Sheriff & \begin{tabular}{l} Runs county jail \\
Provides rural police protection \\
Carries out court orders \\
May collect taxes
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Clerk & \begin{tabular}{l} Registers and records documents for \\ property, birth, and death \\ Runs county elections
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Assessor & \begin{tabular}{l} Sets the value of taxable property \\
Collects property taxes
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Treasurer & Keeps county funds \\
\hline Auditor & Keeps financial records \\ \hline District Attorney & \begin{tabular}{l} Conducts criminal investigations \\
Prosecutes criminal cases
\end{tabular} \\
\hline School Superintendent & Administers public schools \\
\hline Coroner & \begin{tabular}{l} Investigates violent deaths \\
Certifies causes of death
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Most boards also carry out a number of administrative functions. They supervise the county road program and manage county property, including the courthouse, jails, hospitals, and parks. They are often responsible for the administration of welfare (cash assistance) programs and the conduct of elections. They are also responsible for the hiring of most county employees-from a few dozen or so in many rural places to several thousand in most metropolitan areas. And, importantly, they determine the pay of nearly all of the people who work for the county.

Other Elements In addition to its governing body, the typical county's government regularly includes a number of other elected officials-as you can see in the chart on this page.

Then, too, county governments usually feature several boards and commissions, whose members are also sometimes elected. Those agencies frequently include a fair board, a planning commission, a board of health, a library board, and a board of road viewers. Altogether, the nation's 3,033 counties now employ some three million men and women who do the day-to-day work of those units of local government.

\section*{Functions of Counties}

Because counties are creations of the State, they are responsible for the administration of State laws. They also administer such county laws as the State's constitution and legislature allow their governing bodies to make.

Historically, nearly all counties have been institutions of rural government. Most remain rurally oriented today. Although there are some differences from State to State, the major functions of counties still reflect their rural character.

Their most common functions are to keep the peace and maintain jails and other

744 Local Government and Finance

\section*{Background}

SOCIOECONOMIC INTEGRATION Inequality among school districts remains a problem. With forced racial integration meeting increased opposition, schools are trying new approaches. One approach, called "socioeconomic integration," assigns children to schools based on income level rather than on race. In this way, students from lower income areas have access to the educational opportunities found in schools in higher income areas. In the early 1990s, the La Crosse, Wisconsin, school district became the first in the nation to integrate students from different economic groups. Since then, test scores in La Crosse have risen and dropout rates have fallen. Observing this success in La Crosse, other schools began similar plans. According to researcher Richard Kalenberg, socioeconomic integration works because, "the obstacles to good schooling . . . track much more closely along economic lines than racial lines. " correctional facilities; assess property for tax purposes; collect taxes and spend county funds; build and repair roads, bridges, drains, and other public works; and maintain schools. Counties record deeds, mortgages, marriage licenses, and other documents; issue licenses for such things as hunting, fishing, and marriage; administer elections; care for the poor; and work to safeguard the health of the people who live in the county.

Many counties have taken on other functions as they have become more urban. Several of these more heavily populated counties now offer many of the public services and facilities that are usually found in cities. They provide water and sewer service; have professionally trained police, fire, and medical units; and operate airports and mass transit systems. Some also enforce zoning and other land-use regulations. Many have built and now operate auditoriums, stadiums, golf courses, and other recreational facilities.

\section*{The Need for Reform}

County organization is often chaotic. In the typical county, no single official can really be called the chief administrator. Rather, authority is divided among a number of elected boards and officials, each largely independent of the others. Too often, it is impossible to identify who is responsible for inefficiency or inaction (or worse) in the conduct of county affairs.

The large number of popularly elected officials adds to the chaos. Faced with the typical county's long ballot, voters are often hard-pressed to make informed choices. Also, many of those elected officials have no basic public policy-making responsibilities. Many people are convinced that popular election is not the best way to fill those offices.

The size and the number of counties in most States are another source of weakness. Nearly every county now in existence was laid out in the days of the horse and the stagecoach. Then, it made good sense to draw county lines so that no one lived more than a dozen miles or so from the county seat. Today, however, most counties are geographically ill-suited to the realities of the modern world.

One way in which many States have attempted to reform county government is through county home rule. That is, those 37 States allow some or all of their counties, subject to approval by the local voters, to decide the details of their own governmental structure.

Another approach to reform seeks to deal with the fragmented authority of counties. It does so by creating the position of county manager, modeled along the lines of the council-manager form of city government. Still another approach is county-city consolidation-where a major city and the county around it join into a single unit of government. San Francisco, California, and Nashville, Tennessee are leading examples.

\section*{Tribal Governments}

Tribal governments exist as a distinct form of government. Unlike State, county, or community governments, however, the governments of recognized Native American nations have a unique "government-togovernment" relationship with the United States. These Native American tribes are considered sovereign nations, with the right to govern their own people on their own territories unless otherwise specified by treaty or acts of Congress.

Official recognition by the Federal Government is crucial for tribal governments because it establishes their sovereignty and exempts them from State or local control. For example, some tribes have established gambling casinos on their reservations even though the territory lies within States that do not allow that type of gambling. Because the officially recognized tribes are sovereign, they are not subject to State laws and regulations. Also, recognized tribes are eligible to receive federal funds that can be used to provide local services. Today, there are some 560 federally recognized tribal governments in this country, with authority over the lives of some 1.7 million people.

Typically, a tribal government has an elected leader called a chief or chairman. Most tribes also have a council, which can vary in size from only two or three to almost 100 members. Other than these common

\section*{Background}

TOWN MEETING DAY The first Tuesday of March is Town Meeting Day in Vermont. It is a holiday for State government employees. Almost all Vermont towns practice direct democracy-all eligible voters may attend town meetings and vote. At least 30 days before the meeting, the "warning" is posted, which gives the time and place and lists the "articles" (topics) to be discussed. First the meeting elects a moderator, who calls the meeting to order and reads the first article. Following Robert's Rules of Order, participants raise their hands to present their views. The vote is taken by voice ("yea" or "nay") or hand-raising. However, if seven voters move to "divide the assembly," the vote proceeds by paper ballot. The town clerk records the results, and the moderator moves to the next article. Town meetings also serve a social function; they strengthen community ties as people work together to solve problems.

\section*{DISCUSS THE ROLE OF COUNTY GOVERNMENT}

Display Transparency 25A, Typical County Government Structure. Have students compare and contrast the information on the transparency with information about your area. For example, does your county have a county board? Which officials are elected and which are appointed? Ask: Which officials do voters elect in the county government shown in this transparency? (members of the county board and officials such as the sheriff, district attorney, clerk, school superintendent, and coroner) Who selects the members of the planning commission and budget committee? (county board) Discuss why certain officials might be appointed, while others are elected.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Explain that the county is a very old government unit. It dates back to Anglo-Saxon times in England, where it was first called a shire. (You may want to share the fact that the word sheriff is derived from shire-reeve, the main official of the shire.) In some cases, counties were established in the United States largely because they were a traditional and familiar unit of government to settlers from England. As students have read, county government today is often chaotic, outdated, overlaps with town and city governments, or has a very narrow jurisdiction. In some States, county government has been abolished altogether.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint Most counties have no chief administrator and fragmented authority, creating unclear accountability. The large number of elected officials overwhelms voters. Also, counties are geographically ill-suited to today's world.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE THE CORE WORKSHEET}

Divide the class into pairs and distribute the Chapter 25 Section 1 Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 81 ). Tell students they will use the worksheet to formulate their arguments for a written debate with their partner on whether or not county government is useful in your State-or in cases where it has been abolished, if it should be re-established to perform some particular purposes.
L1 L2 Differentiate Go through the worksheet as a class, rather than letting students work on their own, outlining the arguments on the board. Be sure to give students a few minutes to think about it on their own before you begin.

\section*{Answers}

Analyzing Maps because each tribe is sovereign and may set up its government as it chooses Checkpoint Tribal governments are usually exempt from State laws and regulations.

Native American Reservations

1) Analyzing Maps Native American governments enjoy a sovereign status and a special relationship with the federal and State governments. Why are reservations organized differently from other forms of local government?

Checkpoint How do tribal governments relate to State governments?
vehicle
n. agent through which something is accomplished constable
n. local police officer features, tribal governments vary widely in size and structure. Some, such as the Cherokee and Navajo, have a written code or constitution that provides for a Statelike government with executive, legislative, and judicial branches. Others are small and loosely organized.

Like State and county governments, tribal governments use federal funds and tax revenue to provide services. These services depend on the size, history, and needs of the tribe. Many tribes have executive officers or departments that oversee policy and manage funds to provide health care, education, and welfare to tribe members. They also oversee cultural events and sites as well as distribute information about the tribe. Even smaller tribal governments provide some services, especially housing and health and education information and support.

\section*{Towns and Townships}

Towns and townships exist in nearly half the States. They are little known in the South or West but are commonly found from New England to the Midwest. \({ }^{2}\)

The New England Town In New England, the town is a major unit of local government. Except for a few major cities, each of the six States in the region is divided into towns. Each town generally includes all of the rural and the urban areas within its boundaries. The town delivers most of the services that are the responsibility of cities and counties elsewhere around the country.

The roots of the New England town reach back to colonial times. The Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock in 1620 as an organized congregation. They quickly set up a close-knit community in which their church and their government were almost one. Other Puritan congregations followed the Pilgrims' pattern.

At least in form, much of town government today is little changed from colonial times. The main feature is a town meeting, long praised as the ideal vehicle of direct democracy. The town meeting is an assembly open to all the town's eligible voters. It meets yearly, and sometimes more often, to levy taxes, make spending and other policy decisions, and elect officers for the next year.

Between town meetings, the board of selectmen/selectwomen chosen at the annual meeting manages the town's business. Typically, the board is a three-member body and has responsibilities for such things as roads, schools, care of the poor, and sanitation. Other officers regularly selected at the annual meeting include the town clerk, a tax assessor, a tax collector, a constable, road commissioners, and school board members.

The ideal of direct democracy is still alive in many smaller New England towns. It has given way, however, to the pressures

2 The term town is used in some States as the legal designation for smaller urban places; it is also sometimes used as another word for township. Township is also a federal public lands survey term, used to identify geographic units (often called ongressional ownships), each having exactly 36 square mile ( 36 sections).

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 25B, Local Government, when you discuss local government officials. This cartoon shows a student saying that he would rather be a mayor or an alderman than the President. Ask: Why might the teacher mistake the student's ambitions? (She probably doesn't consider mayor or alderman an important office.) What important statement about local government is the cartoon making? (Local government is very important in our lives, maybe even more important than the National Government.)
of time, population, and the complexities of public problems in many of the larger towns. There, representative government has largely replaced it. Town officers are often elected before the yearly gathering. Many of the decisions once made by the assembled voters are now made by the selectmen and selectwomen. In recent years, several towns have gone to a town manager system for the day-to-day administration of local affairs.

Townships Townships are units of local government found principally in the Northeast and the Midwest. Nowhere do townships blanket an entire State, however.

In New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, townships were formed as areas were settled and the people needed the services of local government. Consequently, the township maps of those States often resemble crazy quilts. From Ohio westward, they mostly follow the regular lines drawn in federal public land surveys. Many are perfect squares.

About half of these States provide for annual township meetings, like those held in New England towns. Otherwise, the governing body is usually a three- or five-member board, generally called the board of trustees or board of supervisors. Its members are elected for fixed terms or serve because they hold other elected township offices. Township offices often include a supervisor, a clerk, a treasurer, an assessor, a constable, a justice of the peace, and a body of road commissioners.

A municipality is an urban political unit within a township that usually exists as a separate governmental entity. As a result, township functions tend to be rural. They regularly involve such matters as roads, cemeteries, drainage, and minor law enforcement. In some States, however, the township is also the basic unit of public school administration.

Many people believe that townships have outlived their usefulness. More than half the States get along without them. Many rural townships have been abolished as a result

\section*{\(\underline{\text { entity }}\)} n. unit, thing, element

Chapter 25 • Section 1747

\section*{Background}

CITY OF MIAMI Government at the county level can sometimes seem like an attractive option. With 375,000 residents, Miami, Florida, came dangerously close to disappearing in September 1997. The city faced \($ 68\) million in debt, and top officials were serving sentences in federal prison for corruption. Angry Miamians launched a ballot initiative to dissolve Miami's city government and pass all responsibilities and authority to Dade County. However, on Election Day, voters chose by a landslide to keep Miami intact.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3
Differentiate Have students work in small groups to create an informational diagram showing the major elements of your county or local government. The chart should include information about the governing body, boards and commissions, appointed bureaucrats, and elected officials. Encourage students to include the real names of each official and details about his or her roles and responsibilities.
L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity "Write a Letter to a Local Official" (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 84), which has students contact local government to suggest improvements for their community.
L4 Differentiate Tell students that the variations in the structure and power of local government exist due to each region's history. Have students do research and write a report or create an informational pamphlet that compares and contrasts the origins and development of government structure below the State level in the Northeast, the South, the Midwest, and the West.

\section*{Government online All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.}

Tell students to go to the Interactivity for more information about municipalities and townships.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' debates, using the Rubric for Assessing a Debate (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 127).
L3 Assign the Section 1 Assessment questions.
L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 85)
L2 Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 86)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{Answers}

Municipalities and Townships A municipal government might be more urban-oriented, while township functions tend to be rural.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Roles and functions \\ of local governments \\
(Questions 1, 2, 4, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
On the board, draw a chart like the one \\ in the section opener. Add municipalities \\ and special districts to it WWith students, \\ fill in the chart with details from students" \\ original charts and from the text
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding the \\ weaknesses of county \\
government \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students re-read the text under the \\ heading "The Need for Reform,", and write \\ a main idea for each paragraph.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What is the purpose of a municipality?
sidestep
\(v\). avoid, get around of declining populations, improvements in transportation, and other factors.

Some of the more densely populated townships appear to have brighter futures than their country cousins, however. This seems especially true in the suburban areas around some larger cities. Some States, such as Pennsylvania, now allow townships to exercise many of the powers and furnish many of the services once reserved for cities.

\section*{Special Districts}

There are now tens of thousands of special districts across the country. A special district is an independent unit created to perform one or more related governmental functions at the local level. These districts are found in mind-boggling variety and in every State. School districts-some 13,500 of them-are by far the most common example. More than 35,000 other special districts also blanket the country, and their numbers are growing.

Special districts are found most often, but not always, in rural and suburban areas. Many have been created to provide water, sewage, or electrical service; to furnish fire or police protection; and to build and maintain bridges, airports, swimming pools, libraries, or parks. Others have been created for such purposes as soil conservation, housing, public transportation, irrigation, or reforestation. There are even, in many places, special districts for dog or mosquito control purposes.

A leading reason for the creation of special districts has been the need to provide a particular service in a wider or a smaller area than that covered by a county or a city. For example, a special district might be needed to handle pollution in the several counties through which a river flows. On the other hand, a special district might be set up to provide fire protection in some out-of-theway locale.

In many cases, special districts have been formed because other local governments could not, or would not, provide the services desired. Others have been created to sidestep constitutional limits on the size of a city's or a county's debt; to finance a public service out of users' fees instead of general tax revenue; and to take advantage of some federal grant program.

The governing body for a special district is almost always an elected board. It has the power to lay taxes (usually on property) or charge fees, as well as the powers to spend and to carry out the function(s) for which it was created.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint A municipality serves the urban population within a township.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed chart to answer this question: What are the similarities and differences of local governments, special districts, and tribal governments?

Key Terms and Comprehension
2. What is the main purpose of (a) a township? (b) a special district?
3. What factors generally make county governments inefficient?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Identifying Assumptions Consider the concept of the New England town meeting. What does this form of ocal government assume about the citizens of the town?
5. Drawing Inferences Review the functions of county and town or township government. List and describe at least three examples that show how these governing bodies affect the day-today lives of people in your community.

Essential Questions \(\begin{aligned} & \text { To continue to build a } \\ & \text { response to the chapter }\end{aligned}\)
Journal Essential Question, go to your

\section*{SECTION 1 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Quick Write}

Writing for Assessment: Develop the Main Points When writing for assessment, carefully plot your response before you begin writing Select one of the questions below. In a chart or outline, develop at least three major points that you might cover to answer that question (a) How do county and township governments differ from one another? (b) What are the strengths and weak nesses of the different forms of city government?

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. A county is a unit of local government below the State and consisting of several towns or townships. County organization is often chaotic because no single official can be called the chief administrator. Towns are smaller units of local government. In New England they are the major form of local government and are governed by a board of selectpersons and through town meetings of all voters. Townships are the major form of local government in New York, New Jersey, and in the Midwestern States. They are also generally administrated by an elected board. A special district is an independent unit of government created for a particular governmental function. Tribal governments are sovereign, if federally recognized, and may operate like small nations outside the control of federal and State governments.
2. (a) to provide rural areas with local services such as roads, cemeteries, drainage, and minor law enforcement; basic unit of public school administration in some States (b) to perform governmental functions at the local level, such as to administer school districts or provide water, sewage, or electrical service
3. chaotic organization; no single chief administrator; authority divided among boards and officials; difficult to identify accountability; geographically ill-suited to today's realities
4. It assumes that they are informed and interested in participating in town issues.
5. possible response: provide essential services, such as water and sewer; administer schools; provide protective services
QUICK WRITE Students should write three important points related to answering their question.

\section*{SECTION 2}

\section*{Cities and Metropolitan Areas}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How do city governments serve the needs of residents and other Americans? Use an outline to take notes about the ways in which city governments serve people.
I. America's Rural-Urban Shift
I. Incorporation and Charters
A. Mayor-Council Form

Mayor-Council Form
1.
2.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- incorporation - commission - charter government - mayor-council - council-
- strong-mayor government - zoning weak-mayo government

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain the process of incorporation and the function of city charters.
2. Contrast the major forms of city government.
3. Evaluate the need for city planning and list some major municipal functions.
4. Outline the challenges that face suburbs and metropolitan areas

Image Above: City of Rochester, New York

We are fast becoming a nation of city dwellers. Where once our population was small, mostly rural, and agricultural, it is now large, mostly urban, and dominated by technology, manufacturing, and service industries. In 1790, a mere 5 percent of the population lived in the nation's few cities. Today, more than 240 million people-more than 80 percent of the population-live in the nation's cities and their surrounding suburbs. \({ }^{3}\) For local governments, that change has had dramatic consequences.

The larger the number of people living in close contact with one another, the greater the strains on local governments. The larger the population, the greater the problems in providing water, police and fire protection, sewers, waste removal, streets and traffic regulation, public health services, schools, recreational facilities, and more. The larger the population, the more exten-sive-and expensive-all of this becomes.

\section*{Incorporation and Charters}

Remember, each of the 50 States is a unitary government. That means that each State has complete control over all of the units of local government within its borders. All those units, including cities, were created by the State, received their powers from the State, and are subject to a variety of limitations imposed by the State.

The process by which a State establishes a city as a legal body is called incorporation. \({ }^{4}\) Each State sets out in its constitution, or by statute, the conditions and the procedures under which a community may become an incorporated municipality. Typically, a State requires that a minimum number of persons live within a given area before incorporation can take place.

The fact that cities are incorporated highlights an important difference between city and county government. Cities are created largely at the request of their residents, because residents want certain public services. Counties,

\footnotetext{
3 Depending on local custom and State law, municipalities may be known as cities, towns, boroughs, or villages. The use and meaning of these terms vary among the States. The larger municipalities are known everywhere as cities, and the usual practice is to use that titte only for those communities with significant populations.
4 The term incorporation comes from the Latin words in (into) and corpus (body).
}

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How do city governments serve the needs of residents and other Americans?
I. America's Rural-Urban Shift
II. Incorporation and Charters

A Cities incorporated to provide public services to residents
B. Charter sets out city's form of government and powers
III. Forms of City Government
A. Mayor-Council Form
1. Council: elected legislature, often nonpartisan
2. Mayor: elected or chosen by council
B. Commission Form
1. Elected commissioners carry out legislative and executive functions
2. Each commissioner heads department, one serves as mayor with no extra power
C. Council-Manager Form
1. Strong council, weak mayor
2. Council chooses professionally trained manager to be chief administrator
3. Council makes policy; manager carries out

\section*{IV. City Planning}

A Planning commission to manage growth
B. Zoning (residential, commercial, industrial) sets rules for land use

\section*{V. Municipal Functions}

A Police and fire protection
B. Build and maintain streets, sidewalks, bridges, street lights, parks, libraries, hospitals, schools, jails, sports arenas
C. Furnish public health and sanitation services
D. Operate water, gas, electric, transportation systems
E. Regulate traffic, building codes, pollution, public utilities
VI. Metropolitan Areas

A Movement to suburbs removing resources from cities while creating greater need for city services
B. Metropolitan districts cut across county and city lines to provide specific services

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE CAUSE AND EFFECT}

To practice analyzing cause and effect in this section, use the Chapter 25 Skills Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 94). You may teach the skill explicitly either before or after teaching the lesson. For L2 and L1 students, assign the adapted Skill Activity (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 95).

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will . .
- compare and contrast the three basic forms of city government using a transparency.
- experience the planning function of city government by planning a city square.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 87) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 89)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Display Transparency 25C, City Government. Write on the board: List five characteristics that make [insert name of your city] a "city." If the school is not located in a city, insert the name of the city nearest you.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How are cities established?
\(v\). place in the contro of
- Analyzing Tables Why is the power to write the budget impor tant to mayors?
on the other hand, exist largely to serve the administrative needs of the State. Cities do act as agents of the State, of course - for example, in law enforcement and public health. But the principal reason for the existence of a city is for the convenience of those who live there.

The charter is a city's basic law, its constitution. Its contents may vary from city to city, but commonly the charter names the city, describes its boundaries, and declares it to be a municipal corporation. As a municipal corporation, a city has the right to sue and be sued in the courts; to have a corporate seal; to make contracts; and to acquire, own, manage, and dispose of property.

Generally, the charter sets out the other powers vested in the city and outlines its form of government. It also provides how and for what terms its officers are to be chosen, outlines their duties, and deals with finances and other matters.

\section*{Forms of City Government}

Although variations can and do exist, each city has one of three basic forms of government. A city has either (1) a mayor-council, 2) a commission, or (3) a council-manager form of government.

The Mayor-Council Form The mayorcouncil government is the oldest and still the most widely used type of city government. It features an elected mayor as the chief executive and an elected council as its legislative body.

The council. The council is almost always unicameral and typically has five, seven, or nine members. Some larger cities have more. New York City has the largest council, with 51 members. Members of the council are popularly elected, almost always from districts (wards) within the city. Terms of office vary from one to six years. Four-year terms are the most common.

A move to nonpartisan city government began in the early 1900s. Its champions believed that (1) political parties were a major source of corruption in city government, and (2) partisan contests at the State and national levels have little to do with municipal problems and local issues. Today, less than one third of all cities still run their elections on a partisan basis.

The mayor. Generally, the voters elect the mayor. In some places, however, the council chooses one of its members to serve as mayor. The mayor presides at council meetings, usually may vote only to break a tie, and may recom-mend-and often veto-ordinances. In most cities, the council can override the veto.

Mayor-council governments are often described as either of the strong-mayor or the weak-mayor type, depending on the powers given to the mayor. This classification is useful for purposes of description. It blurs the importance of informal power in city politics, however.

In a strong-mayor government, the mayor heads the city's administration, usually has the veto power, can hire and fire employees, and prepares the budget. Typically, the mayor is able to exercise strong leadership in making city policy and running the city's affairs.

In a weak-mayor government, the mayor has much less formal power. Executive duties are shared with other elected officials-for example, a clerk, treasurer, city engineer, police chief, and even council members.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 25, Section 2:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 87)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 89)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 91)
L2 Extend Activity (p. 96)
L3 Skills Worksheet (p. 94)
L2 Skill Activity (p. 95)
L3 Quiz A (p. 97)
L2 Quiz B (p. 98)

Powers of appointment, removal, and budget are shared with the council or exercised by that body alone. The mayor seldom has a veto power.

Most mayor-council cities operate under the weak-mayor rather than the strong-mayor plan. The strong-mayor form is most often found in larger cities.

The success of the mayor-council form depends in very large measure on the power, ability, and influence of the mayor. In weakmayor cities, responsibility for action or inaction is hard to assign. The strong-mayor plan helps to solve the problems of leadership and responsibility. Still, the mayor-council form has three large defects:
1. It depends heavily on the capacities of the mayor.
2. A major dispute between the mayor and the council can stall the workings of city government.
3. It is quite complicated and, so, is often little understood by the average citizen.

The Commission Form The commission government is simple in structure. Three to nine, but usually five, commissioners are popularly elected. Together, they form the city council, pass ordinances, and control the purse strings. Individually, they head the different departments of city government: police, fire, public works, finance, parks, and so on. Thus, both legislative and executive powers are centered in one body.

The commission form was born in Galveston, Texas, in 1901, after a tidal surge had devastated the city. When the existing mayorcouncil government proved unequal to the task, the Texas legislature gave Galveston a new charter, providing for five commissioners to make and enforce law in the stricken city. Intended to be temporary, the arrangement proved so effective that it soon spread to other communities across the country.

Depending on the city, either the voters or the commissioners themselves choose one of the commissioners to serve as the mayor. Like the other commissioners, the mayor heads one or more of the city's departments. He or she also presides at council meetings and represents the city for ceremonial purposes.

The mayor generally has no more authority than the other commissioners and rarely has a veto power.

Although many reformers supported the commission form at first, experience pointed up serious defects in the system, and its popularity fell off rapidly. Only a very few American cities have a commission form of government today.

The commission form has three chief defects:
1. The lack of a single chief executive makes it difficult to assign responsibility. This can also mean that the city has no effective political leadership.
2. A built-in tendency toward "empire building" often surfaces. Each commissioner tries to draw as much of the city's money and influence as possible to his or her own department.
3. A lack of coordination plagues the topmost levels of policymaking and administration. Each commissioner is likely to equate the citywide public good with the particular interests and functions of his or her department.

The Council-Manager Form The councilmanager government is a modification of the mayor-council form. Its main features are (1) a strong council of usually five or seven members elected at-large on a nonpartisan ballot; (2) a weak mayor chosen by the voters; and (3) a manager, the city's chief administrative officer, named by the council.

The form first appeared in Ukiah, California. In 1904, that city's council appointed an "executive officer" to direct the work of city government. The first charter expressly providing for the council-manager form was granted to the city of Sumter, South Carolina, in 1912.

The council is the city's policymaking body. The manager carries out the policies the council makes. He or she is directly responsible to that body for the efficient administration of the city. The manager serves at the council's pleasure and may be dismissed at any time and for any reason.

Today, most city managers are professionally trained career administrators. As chief administrator, the manager directs the

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{UNDERSTAND FORMS OF CITY GOVERNMENT}

Have students read their list of characteristics from the Bellringer activity. Discuss what a city is and how it is different from a town or township. Work with the class to agree on a definition of a city. (Sample answer: A city is a community where a large number of people live, which is incorporated and has a charter from the State.)
Display Transparency 25D, Three Forms of City Government. Use the diagrams to compare and contrast the three forms. Ask: In which form of government do the voters directly elect the department heads? (commission form) How is the council-manager form the same as and different from the strong mayor form? (The voters elect the council and the mayor in both, but in the councilmanager form, the manager-not the mayor-is the chief administrator.)
12 ELL Differentiate Clarify that municipality, urban area, and municipal area generally have the same meaning as city. You may also want to clarify the meanings of the terms council, mayor, and manager, to be sure that students understand the roles of each in the various types of city governments.

\section*{EVALUATE THE FORMS AND VOTE}

Discuss the three forms of city government. Have students work with a partner or work as a whole class to create a list of advantages and disadvantages of each form, based on students' reading. Then ask:
What form of city government do you think would be the most effective for our community? Why? Ask students to vote by a show of hands. Have volunteers explain why they voted the way that they did. Ask them to write a journal entry that predicts what might happen if a city has an ineffective government.

\section*{Myths and Misperceptions}
the land of cities Which State has the most cities? Asked this question, Americans are likely to name the largest or most populous States: New York, California, Texas, Florida, or even Alaska. The surprising answer to the question is-illinois. With nearly 1,300 incorporated municipalities, the "Land of Lincoln" is also the land of cities-about 1 out of every 14 cities in the entire United States is located in Illinois. However, this count is based on the fact that what constitutes a "city" differs from State to State. For example, Illinois counts many small municipalities as cities, while Juneau, Alaska, could be considered the largest city in the nation because it includes an area of several hundred square miles.

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Ask students to suppose that a main square in a city has become run down, with several vacant and dilapidated buildings, and therefore needs to be redeveloped. Ask: What needs must a city square meet to be a successful space? (ways for people to get there, attractions to draw people there, and basic needs such as food, water, and restrooms) What types of buildings and other features would help provide these needs? (Students might suggest popular restaurants and shops, hotels, attractive landscaping, benches or picnic tables, parking spaces, bike lanes, water fountains, and restrooms.)

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 25 Section 2 Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 91). Explain that students will work in small groups and use this worksheet to develop a plan for a city square. Review the steps listed on the worksheet. Remind them that in brainstorming, they should record all ideas. They will evaluate these ideas and select the best ones in the next step.

expendable adji disposable replaceable 者 work of all city departments and has the power to hire and fire all city employees. The manager also prepares the budget for council consideration and controls the spending of the funds the council appropriates.

The council-manager plan has the backing of nearly every expert on municipal affairs, and its use has spread widely. It is now found in more than 8,000 communities, including most of those cities with populations between 25,000 and 250,000 .

The council-manager plan has three major advantages over other forms of city government:
1. It is simple in form.
2. It is fairly clear who is responsible for policy, on the one hand, and for its application, on the other.
3. It relies on highly trained experts who are skilled in modern techniques of budgeting, planning, computerization, and other administrative tools.

In theory, the nonpolitical manager carries out the policies enacted by the council. Yet, in practice, sharp distinctions between policymaking and policy-application seldom exist. The manager is very often the chief source for new ideas and fresh approaches to the city's problems. On the other hand, the city council often finds it politically useful to share the responsibility for controversial decisions with the "expendable" city manager.

Some critics of the council-manager form hold that it is undemocratic because its chief executive is not popularly elected. Others say that it lacks strong political leadership. This is a particular shortcoming, they argue, in larger cities, where the population is often quite diverse and there can be many competing interests. Support for this view can be seen in the fact that only a handful of cities with more than a half a \section*{7) GOVERNMENT ONLINE \\ Interactive \\ For an interactive exp city government, visit \\ PearsonSuccessNet.com}

\section*{Alternate Forms of City Government}

The commission (left) and council-manager (right) forms of city government provide alternatives to the traditional roles of the mayor and city council.
How does each form of government divide executive power?

752 Local Government and Finance

\section*{Background}

SPRAWL While the media and city planners have often lamented sprawl, it is sometimes hard for the average person to see the overall problems that result from a lack of city planning and zoning. A Field Guide to Sprawl, by Dolores Hayden (with photographs by Jim Wark), remedies this situation. In a series of photographs and simple explanations, Hayden shows examples of how sprawl affects the environment and reveals names given to various types of land-use practices. Terms such as "snout house" (a house where a garage is dominant and projecting) and "zoomburb" demonstrate why city planning is so important in today's growing communities. Ms. Hayden's Web site provides a Sprawl Quiz based on the book, which students may enjoy.
million residents have a council-manager government in place today.

\section*{City Planning}

With few exceptions, most American cities developed haphazardly, without a plan, and with no eye to the future. The results of this shortsightedness can be seen in what is often called the core area or the inner city. These are the older and usually overcrowded central sections of larger cities.

Industrial plants were placed anywhere their owners chose to build them. Rail lines were run through the heart of the community. Towering buildings shut out the sunlight from the narrow streets below. Main roads were laid out too close together and sometimes too far apart. Schools, police and fire stations, and other public buildings were squeezed onto cheap land or put where the political organization could make a profit. Examples are endless.

Planning Growth Fortunately, many cities have seen the need to create order out of their random growth. Most have established some sort of planning agency. It usually consists of a planning commission, supported by a trained professional staff.

A number of factors have prompted this step. The need to correct past mistakes has often been a compelling reason, of course. Also, many cities have recognized both the advantages that can result, and the pitfalls that can be avoided, through well-planned and orderly development. Importantly, the Federal Government has spurred cities on. Most federal grant and loan programs require that cities that seek aid must first have a master plan as a guide to future growth.

City Zoning The practice of dividing a city into a number of districts, or zones, and regulating the uses to which property in each of them may be put is called zoning. Generally, a zoning ordinance places each parcel of land in the city into one of three spheres: residential, commercial, or industrial zones.

Each of these zones is then divided into subzones. For example, each of several residential zones may be broken down into several areas. One may be reserved for singlefamily residences, another may allow onefamily and two-family dwellings, and a third, large apartment buildings.

Most zoning ordinances also prescribe limits on the height and area of buildings, determine how much of a lot may be occupied by a structure, and set out several other such restrictions on land use. They often have "setback" requirements, providing that structures must be placed at least a certain distance from the street and from other property lines.

Zoning still meets opposition from many who object to this interference with their right to use their property as they choose. Even so, nearly every city of any size in the United States is zoned today. The city of Houston, where zoning was turned down three times by popular vote, remains the only major exception.

Zoning ordinances must be reasonable. Remember that the 14th Amendment prohibits any State, and thus its cities, from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Each of the 50 State constitutions contains a similar provision.

Clearly, zoning does deprive a person of the right to use his or her property for certain purposes. Thus, if an area is zoned for sin-gle-family dwellings only, one cannot build an apartment house or a service station on property in that zone. Zoning can also reduce the value of a particular piece of property. A choice corner lot, for example, may be much more valuable with a drive-through restaurant or gas station on the property rather than a house. \({ }^{5}\)

While zoning may at times deprive a person of liberty or property, the key question is always this: Does it do so without due process? That is, does it do so unreasonably?

The question of reasonableness is one for the courts to decide. The Supreme Court first upheld zoning as a proper use of the police power in Euclid v. Amber Realty Co., 1926, a case involving an ordinance enacted by the city council of Euclid, Ohio.

\footnotetext{
5 Nonconforming uses in existence before a zoning ordinance is passed are almost always allowed to continue. Most ordinances give the city council the right to grant exceptions, called variances, in cases where property owners might suffer undue hardships.
}

\section*{prescribe}
v. order, set down, specify

\section*{FOLLOW UP AND VOTE}

Have the groups present their finished plans to the class. Then have the class vote by secret ballot to select the overall best plan. Discuss with the class what was so attractive about the winning design. Ask: Does the winning design best meet the city manager's goal? Why or why not? If not, what other features should it have?
3 Differentiate Post the groups' plans around the room with a blank piece of paper next to each one. Allow time for students to look at other groups' work and comment on it in a Conversation Wall (p. T27). After students have commented, give groups time to read the comments on their work, respond, and make improvements to their plans.

\section*{MAKE A JOURNAL ENTRY}

Have students complete the activity by writing a journal entry about the process of their city square planning. Ask them to consider the following questions: Did the group work well together? Did all members contribute? Were the priorities the same for everyone? Were you satisfied with the final plan? Why or why not? What comments by other students did you find helpful? What changes, if any, did you make to your group's plan based on peer feedback?

\section*{Background}

MODERN-DAY CITY PLANNING Modern-day city planning has reached its boldest extreme in fast-growing Portland, Oregon. In 1995, regional leaders adopted the 2040 Growth Concept to curb traffic and preserve Portland's natural beauty and neighborhoods. The 2040 Growth Concept focuses development on urban centers inside a line called the Urban Growth Boundary. Houses and apartments are built close to one another and to commercial buildings. Inside the line, public transportation, walking, and bicycling are attractive alternatives to driving. Outside the line, development is strictly limited.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint They establish some sort of planning agency and zoning ordinances.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Tell students to research and write a report on the development of a planned city of the past, such as Washington, D.C., or a modern planned community, such as Celebration, Florida. Reports should focus on the goals of the designers and whether or not students think those goals were achieved.

L2ELL Differentiate Have students use mapping and satellite photography software, such as Google Maps, to analyze your community. Ask them to print out their neighborhoods and label different zones: residential, commercial, and industrial.
L2 Differentiate Have students research and report on one zoning law in your community. Students should summarize for the class the purpose of the zoning law and what it allows, establishes, or restricts.

\section*{L2 Differentiate Distribute the Extend Activity} "Your City Government" (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 96), which has students attend a local government meeting and report on it to the class.
L4 Differentiate Remind students that American cities have been the breeding ground for powerful political machines. Ask students to report on the history and influence of political machines such as the Tammany Hall machine in New York City or the Daley machine in Chicago. Students should investigate the means by which these machines obtained and retained power over city government and beyond. Encourage students to research the events that brought about the decline of the machines' power. Allow students to present their findings in a variety of ways.
L4 Differentiate Have students work in pairs or small groups to research and report to the class on an area that has been a target of community planning in the last five years in their own, or in a nearby, community. (To avoid duplication, pre-approve topics before work begins.) Reports should include the project's history and current status. Students should analyze it from start to finish and evaluate its success. Alternatively, you may ask students to create annotated timelines giving details of the project. Encourage students to interview participants and to include maps and images of the project-before and after.

\section*{Answers}

Farms, Cities, Suburbs rural settlement: people largely self-sufficient, with local government providing few services to widely dispersed population; urban settlement: local government provides wide range of services to large, densely packed population; suburban settlement: city, county, and special district governments provide services to broad metropolitan areas
Checkpoint to set rules for land use

\section*{Farms, Gfiles, Suburbs}

The United States began as a rural nation, but factories and new opportunities drew millions to cities in the 1800s and early 1900 s. Today, about half of all Americans live in suburbs that bridge the gap between country and city. How do different forms of settlement affect the responsibilities of local government?

\section*{Checkpoint What is the purpose of zoning?}

\section*{Municipal Functions}

The services a city provides day in and day out are so extensive that it is almost impossible to catalog them. Most larger cities, and many smaller ones, issue annual reports on the city's condition. These are often booklength publications.

Consider just a few of the many things that most or all cities do. They provide police and fire protection. They build and maintain streets, sidewalks, bridges, street lights, parks and playgrounds, swimming pools, golf courses, libraries, hospitals, schools, correctional institutions, day-care centers, airports, public markets, parking facilities, auditoriums, and sports arenas. They furnish public health and sanitation services, including sewers and wastewater treatment, garbage collection and disposal, and disease prevention programs.

Cities operate water, gas, electrical, and transportation systems. They regulate traffic, building codes, pollution, and public utilities. Many cities also build and manage public housing projects, provide summer youth camps, build and operate docks and other harbor facilities, and maintain tourist attractions.

\section*{Metropolitan Areas}

The growth of urban areas has raised many problems for city dwellers. Urban growth also affects residents of nearby suburbs.

The Suburban Boom About half of all Americans now live in suburbs. The nation's suburbs first began to grow rapidly in the years after World War II, and that growth has continued. As suburban populations have mushroomed, many of the nation's larger cities have actually lost residents.

These dramatic population shifts stemmed, in large part, from peoples' desire for more room, cheaper land, greater privacy, and less smoke, dirt, noise, and congestion. Many have also sought less crime, newer and better schools, safer streets and playing conditions, lower taxes, and higher social status. The car and the freeway turned millions of rooted city dwellers into mobile suburbanites.

Businesses followed customers to the suburbs, often clustering in shopping centers or malls instead of traditional downtowns. Many industries moved from the central city in search of cheaper land, lower taxes, and a more stable labor supply. Industries also

754 Local Government and Finance

\section*{Teacher to Teacher Network}

ALTERNATE LESSON PLAN Mayors sometimes take on politically controversial issues, such as the environment, climate change, and gun control. Have students research initiatives that a mayor in their area is working on and select one to look into further. They should describe the issue, explain the mayor's plan for addressing it, present the arguments for and against the plan, and assess the success of the plan to date. Student groups could focus on different initiatives.

To see this lesson plan, go to sought an escape from city building codes, health inspectors, and other regulations.

This "suburbanitis" has added to citydwellers' woes. As high-income families have moved out, they have taken their civic, financial, and social resources with them. They have left behind center cities with high percentages of older people, low-income families, and minorities. Both the need for, and the stress on, city services have multiplied.

Metropolitan Areas Suburbanites face their share of problems, too, including the need for water supplies, sewage disposal, police and fire protection, transportation, and traffic control. Duplication of such functions by city and suburb or by city and county can be wasteful, even dangerous. More than one fire has raged while neighboring fire departments quibbled over the responsibility for fighting it.

Attempts to meet the needs of the nation's metropolitan areas-cities and the areas around them-have taken several forms. Over the years, annexation has been the standard means. Outlying areas have simply been brought within a city's boundaries. Many suburbanites resist annexation, however, and many cities have been hesitant to take on the burdens involved

Another approach has been to create special districts designed to meet the problems of heavily populated urban areas. Their boundaries frequently cut across county and city lines to include an entire metropolitan area. They often are called metropolitan districts and can serve one purpose (for example, maintaining parks) or many.

In Oregon, a regional agency known as Metro manages several activities in an area that includes Portland, the State's largest city, and 23 other municipalities. Within this region, Metro is responsible for land-use and transportation planning, solid-waste disposal programs, and the operation of the Oregon Convention Center, the Oregon Zoo, and other facilities.

Yet another approach to the challenges facing metropolitan areas is increasing the authority of counties. Among local governments around the country, counties are generally the largest in area and are most likely to include those places demanding new and increased services. In Miami-Dade County, Florida, a countywide metropolitan government took responsibility for areawide functions following a 1957 charter. Responsibilities include fire and police protection; an integrated water, sewer, and drainage system; zoning; and expressway construction. Miami and the county's other 34 municipalities continue to perform strictly local functions and services.

\section*{SECTION 2 ASSESSMENT}
1. Guiding Question Use your completed outline to answer this question: How do city governments serve the needs of residents and other Americans?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What are the key differences between a strong-mayor and a weak-mayor government?
3. List at least five functions of municipal government.

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Comparing Points of View Zoning may be used to exclude businesse popular with young people from residential neighborhoods. (a) Why do you think this is so? (b) Is this a fair use of a local government's police power? Why or why not?
5. Determining Cause and Effect How have shifts in the American population led to changes in the responsibilities and organization of local government?

\section*{Quick Write}

Writing for Assessment: Gather
Details Reread the question you have chosen and the main points you developed in Section 1. Gather details from the text that support each of the main points to answer the question. Briefly check your final list to delete unnecessary details.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

\section*{woe}

\section*{duplication}
n. doubling

Portland's metropolitan government operates a popular regional transit system. -

Essential Questions re continue to build a Journal Essential Question, go to your Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.

L3 Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' plans, using the Rubric for Assessing the Performance of an Entire Group (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 125).
\(\stackrel{\text { L3 }}{\square}\)
Assign the Section 2 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 97)
2 Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 98)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

REMEDIATION
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Roles and responsibilities \\ of city government \\
(Questions 1, 3, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Draw a concept web on the board. With \\ students fill in the web with details from \\ their section outines on the roles and \\ responsibilities of city government.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Differences between the \\ two types of mayoral \\ government (Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Display Transparency 25D and have \\ students work in pairs to quiz each \\ other about the structure of types of city \\
government.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Functions of zoning and \\ city planning (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students re-read the text under \\ the heading "City Planning," and write a \\ summary of the purpose of zoning.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. City governments manage growth through zoning, create and manage the budget, and provide important public services. City governments also make and enforce regulations (such as traffic laws, building codes, and pollution laws).
2. A strong mayor can exercise strong leadership in making city policy and running the city's affairs. A weak mayor has much less formal power and shares executive duties with other elected officials.
3. provide police and fire protection; build and maintain streets, bridges, and libraries; furnish public health and sanitation facilities; operate water, gas, electric, and transportation systems; build and maintain public housing
4. (a) Local government makes rules based on the interests of the entire neighborhood, not just a segment of it. (b) Yes. The interests of different segments of a community often conflict, and it is an appropriate role of local government to settle such conflicts with rules that benefit the community as a whole.
5. Possible answer: The population shift from farms to cities created a need for city governments to provide a wide range of services and plan for orderly growth. The movement to the suburbs gave rise to special districts and broader county authority to provide essential services to wider metropolitan areas.
Quick write Students should list details that support the main idea in the answer to their question. For example, students addressing the second question should provide specific details about the benefits and drawbacks of each form of city government.

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will. .
- list and categorize services that they receive from State and local governments.
- role play to complete a worksheet ranking the importance of State and local services from various perspectives.
- compare their rankings of State services against actual State and local spending.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 99) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 100)

\section*{SECTION 3}

Providing Vital Services

Guiding Question
What services do State and local governments provide? Use a concept web similar to the one below to record information about State and local government services.

Political Dictionary
- Medicaid - entitlement - welfare

\section*{Objectives}
1. Explain why State and local governments have a major role in providing important services.
2. Identify State and local services in the fields of education, public welfare, public safety, and highways.

Image Above: Educational spending includes computers, books, and salaries.

The 50 State governments and their tens of thousands of local governments are principally responsible for many of the public services with which most Americans are familiar. The many differences among States means that there can be variations in both the quantity and the quality of those public services, but they include, especially, those in the areas of education, public safety, welfare, streets and highways, and public health. The several States deliver services to their residents in two ways: (1) directly, through State agencies conducting State-operated programs, and (2) through the many local governments the States have created.

\section*{Education}

Public education is among the oldest of all State responsibilities. Boston Latin School, in Massachusetts, is the oldest public school in continuous existence in the United States; it opened its doors in 1635. The State of New York created the first school districts in 1812. Today, public education is also among the most important of all State responsibilities. This is reflected in the fact that education is the most expensive item in every State's budget, accounting for about 30 percent of all State spending.

Funding for public education has risen sharply over recent decades. Rising costs and mounting pressures for better schools have led to increased spending. The amount of money spent per pupil in public schools has nearly doubled over the past 25 years.

Primary and secondary public education is largely the responsibility of local governments. Local taxes, especially property taxes, provide much of the funding for schools.

Of course, the States do provide some financial assistance to their local governments for education. The level of that aid varies, however. Some States contribute well over half the cost of primary and secondary education. Others provide only a minor fraction of the cost.

In addition, States set guidelines in order to promote quality in the schools. For example, State laws establish teacher qualifications, curricula, quality standards for educational materials, and the length of the school year.

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{COMPARE VIEWPOINTS}

Before students complete the Core Worksheet in this section, you may want to review tips on comparing viewpoints in the Skills Handbook, p. S15.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - Under the federal system, States and local governments provide many important services. - State and local governments provide education, help ensure public welfare and safety, and build and maintain highways. - State and local governments vary widely in the number, extent, and types of services they provide.
CONCEPTS: types of governments, purpose of government, federalism
ENDURING UNDERSTANDINGS: • The U.S. Constitution reserves to the States all powers not delegated to the Federal Government or not denied to the States. - Education is the largest spending category for State and local governments.

State interest and involvement in those matters have intensified in recent years. Most States have established "curriculum frameworks" or "content standards" outlining the material that must be covered in core subjects. Every State now has an extensive Statewide testing program, fueled by the No Child Left Behind Act signed by President Bush in 2002.

At the college and university levels, the States also play a major role. States understand that, in order for businesses to succeed in the State, a ready supply of highly trained college graduates is key. Every State has a public higher education system, which may include universities, technical schools, and community colleges. Education at State universities and colleges is generally much less expensive than at private institutions. On average, tuition at four-year public colleges and universities is about one fourth that of private four-year schools. Nevertheless, many public institutions-for example, the University of California at Berkeley-are ranked among the world's finest schools.

\section*{Public Welfare}

States take an active role in promoting the health and welfare of their residents. They pursue that goal by a variety of means.

Public Health Most States fund ambitious public health programs. States operate public hospitals and offer direct care to millions of citizens. They immunize children against dangerous childhood diseases, such as measles and mumps. With the Federal Government, they administer such programs as Medicaid, which provides medical care and some other health services to low-income families. Recent soaring costs in the healthcare industry have placed a great strain on many States' budgets.

Cash Assistance Another major area in which States contribute to the well-being of their citizens is cash assistance to the poor, commonly called welfare. States now take a leading role in this area.
tuition n. fee paid for schooling

Public schools account for nearly three in ten dollars spent by State and local governments. How are the different responsibilities of State and local versus the Federal Government reflected in these catego-

Chapter 25 • Section 3757

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 25, Section 3:Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 99)Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 100)Core Worksheet (p. 101)
L3 Quiz A (p. 102)
L2 Quiz B (p. 103)

\section*{beLLRINGER}

Write on the board: List ten services that State and local governments provide that directly affect your life.
L1 Differentiate Ask students to provide five, instead of ten, services.ELL Differentiate Tell students to review the main headings/topics in the section, to help generate items for their lists.

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{CATEGORIZE THE BELLRINGER RESPONSES}

Write these headings on the board: Education, Public Welfare, Public Safety, Public Health, Roads. Have students read the services they listed in the Bellringer activity and sort them under the appropriate category. Also, ask students to identify which level of government provides each service. Ask: Why are these services provided at the State or local level and not by the National Government? (Local governments have better knowledge about how to meet the needs of their citizens.)

\section*{RANK THE IMPORTANCE OF SERVICES}

Divide the class into seven groups. Assign each group one of the following roles: (1) student in the local high school; (2) parent of three school-age children; (3) police officer; (4) taxi driver; (5) carpenter; (6) elderly resident; (7) worker who lives outside the community. Tell students that they will complete a worksheet from the perspective of their assigned role by ranking various services provided by State and local governments. They will also explain their reasoning based on the role they are playing.
L3 Differentiate Students may work individually or in their role groups to complete the worksheet.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate You may want to assign these students more straightforward or familiar roles, such as the student or parent.
Tell students to go to the Online Update for current information on State and local spending.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to help fund schools and to set guidelines to promote quality education; to help support a system of State colleges and universities
State and Local Spending Federal spending focuses on programs benefiting the nation as a whole, such as the military, whereas State and local spending supports programs for the local community, such as schools, assistance to needy citizens, and police and fire protection.

\section*{DISTRIBUTE CORE WORKSHEET}

Distribute the Chapter 25 Section 3 Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 101). Give students time to complete the first column on their own.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Before beginning, review the service categories on the worksheet and offer examples of each to clarify.

\section*{FOLLOW-UP-COMPARE PERSPECTIVES}

After students complete their own ranking, have them work in groups of students assigned to the same role to reach a consensus on the rankings. Then ask them to post their rankings around the room, as well as to explain their choice for their number one ranking. Discuss any differences in the rankings from group to group. Then ask students to vote to create a class ranking. Have students record class rankings on the Core Worksheet.

\section*{L3 D}

Differentiate Have students write a journal entry explaining why they agree or disagree with the class ranking.
Display Transparency 25E, State and Local Spending. Ask: How closely do State and local spending align with your rankings? For example, did most students feel that education was the most important service? Were parks and recreation the least important?

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 Differentiate Have students find one or two recent articles that describe a difference of opinion on how to fund public schools. Ask them to summarize in a bulleted list the main arguments from the different viewpoints. Then ask them to take a position and write a paragraph supporting their position.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Possible response: Local governments are best able to judge where roads in their jurisdiction are most needed.
Checkpoint to provide cash assistance to needy citizens for up to five years while they work or receive training to become self-sufficient

The Federal Government shares the cost of highway projects like Boston's Big Dig with the States and counties where they are built. Why do local governments make most decisions about road building?
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\)
What is the purpose of public welfare spending? entitled adj eligible for by right recipient
\(n\). one who receives

Between 1936 and 1996, the Federal Government provided cash assistance to needy families through the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program. \({ }^{6}\) AFDC was an entitlement program, which means that anyone who met the eligibility requirements was entitled to receive benefits. The Federal Government and the States shared the costs of providing AFDC benefits.

Critics of AFDC pointed to soaring costs, expanding caseloads, and the absence of time limits on benefits as serious problems with the program. Because of these issues, critics argued that the program encouraged people to depend on government assistance rather than become self-supporting.

In 1996, AFDC was replaced with a new and strikingly different program, Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF). Unlike AFDC, TANF is a block grant program: The Federal Government gives States a fixed amount of money each year, regardless of whether the number of TANF recipients rises or falls. The States are then free to

\footnotetext{
6 AFDC was authorized by Tite IV of the Social Security Act of 1935. Until 1962, the program was named Aid to Dependent Chidren, as the 1935 act was aimed simply at needy dependent children.
}
use the federal grant, plus the State funds that they are obliged to contribute, to design and implement their own welfare programs. TANF limits recipients to a total of five years of assistance during the course of their lifetimes, and recipients must work or participate in some form of vocational training or community service.

The number of families on welfare has plunged since the mid-1990s. Many who remain on welfare must overcome a number of barriers, such as physical or mental disabilities or substance abuse, in order to obtain and hold jobs. Now that States have the primary responsibility for welfare, it is their task to find ways to help these families.

Other Efforts States do much more to promote their citizens' health and welfare. They make and enforce antipollution laws to protect the environment; they inspect factories and other workplaces to protect worker safety; they license healthcare practitioners to ensure quality care; and the list goes on and on.

\section*{Public Safety}

One of the oldest law-enforcement groups, the legendary Texas Rangers, was established in 1835. Today, a variety of police forces, from the local sheriff to academy-trained State police, operate in every State to preserve law and order.

The State police are perhaps the most visible group, since they patrol the State's roads and highways. State law-enforcement forces perform other vital services, as well. They may function as the primary police force in rural communities, investigate crimes, provide centralized files for fingerprints and other information, and provide training and many other services to support local lawenforcement agencies.

Each State has its own corrections system for those convicted of dealing with State crimes. States operate prisons, penitentiaries, and other correctional facilities, including those for juvenile offenders.

Operating these disciplinary systems is a growing burden for States. Today, more than 2.5 million people are incarcerated, more than half of them in State prisons.

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 25F, Another Real Estate Foreclosure, when you discuss the responsibility of States to help local governments pay for public education. This cartoon predicts possible consequences if California chooses to cut school funding. The reference to foreclosure relates to the foreclosure and credit crisis in 2008, when many people lost their homes due to increases in their mortgage rates. Ask: What does the building represent? (schools and California's future) What option is California considering to help balance its budget? (making large cuts to school funding) Does the cartoonist support this proposal? How do you know? (No. He depicts the proposed cuts as a wrecking ball about to demolish the California school system and, with it, the State's future. The dark cloud above the school contributes to this gloomy forecast.)

Two leading causes of booming prison populations are (1) increases in the number of people sentenced for violent crimes and (2) the increasing length of the average prison sentence. One result is prison overcrowding. Another result is rising State corrections spending, which has more than doubled over the past 20 years. The States now spend more than \($ 40\) billion each year to build, staff, and maintain prisons and to house prisoners.

In an effort to expand their prison capacity more affordably, many States have hired private contractors to operate some of their prisons. More than 5 percent of all State prisoners are now held in private facilities.

\section*{Highways and Other Services}

Building and maintaining roads and highways is an enormous job. It regularly ranks among the most expensive of all the many items in State budgets.

Again, the Federal Government is a partner with the States in funding highways. The most impressive example is the Interstate Highway System, a network of high-speed roadways that spans the length and breadth of the continental United States. Construction of the system began with the 1956 Federal-Aid Highway Act and continues to this day.

The Interstate Highway System, now officially known as the Dwight D. Eisenhower System of Interstate and Defense Highways, is 99 percent finished. When finally complete, it will total some 45,000 miles. The Federal Government has paid roughly 90 percent of its total cost.

While the interstate system is a magnificent achievement, it constitutes only a tiny fraction of the nation's more than 4 million miles of roads. Many roadways are built with State, not federal, funds; and the States maintain those roads, as well.

State and local governments must also look after the physical safety of drivers on the roads. Besides patrolling the roads, State and local governments set speed limits. The States license drivers to ensure their competence, and many States require periodic safety inspections of vehicles.

As indicated earlier, the many services the States and their local units provide are really far too numerous to be recounted here. That these services are not detailed here does not discount the importance of such functions as the setting aside of public lands for purposes such as conservation and recreation, the regulation of business practices, and the protection of consumers from a variety of dangers and inconveniences.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) How do State and local governments ensure the safety of the people?

\section*{capacity}
\(n\). ability to hold

\section*{SECTION 3 ASSESSMENT}

\section*{Essential Questions To continue to build a}

Journal response to the chapter Essential Question, go to your Essential Questions Journal.
1. Guiding Question Use your completed concept web to answer this question: What services do State and local governments provide?

\section*{Key Terms and Comprehension}
2. What are the three largest spending categories in State and local budgets?
3. How is an entitlement program different from other spending programs?

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Drawing Inferences Why do you think that many States asked the Federal Government to give them block grants to create their own welfare programs?
5. Expressing Problems Clearly What challenges do State and local governments face in providing for public welfare and safety? How are governments meeting these challenges?

\section*{Quick Write}

Writing for Assessment: Write a Strong Opening Statement When writing for assessment, the opening statement should set forth the main idea of your response in an interesting and clear manner. Review your question and list of main points from Sections 1 and 2 and write an opening statement. Check it against your ing statement. Check it against your main idea and main points to be sur that all parts of your response are closely related.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' class participation, using the Rubric for Assessing Individual Performance in a Group (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 126).

Assign the Section 3 Assessment questions.
Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 102)
L2
Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 103)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Services provided by State \\ and local governments \\
(Questions 1, 2, 3, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Draw a concept web on the board like the \\ one in the first page of the section. With \\ students, fill in the web with details about \\ State and local government services. Tell \\ students to add any additional details they \\ did not have to their own concept webs.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Understanding block \\ grants (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Direct students to re-read the text about \\ TANF and federal block grants and sum- \\ marize that paragraph.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint by maintaining police forces and corrections systems, inspecting workplaces for safety, and licensing health-care providers

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. State and local governments provide services such as education, public health programs (including Medicaid), and welfare. They promote public safety by maintaining police forces and correctional institutions, making antipollution laws, inspecting factories, licensing health-care providers, setting speed limits, licensing drivers, and requiring vehicle inspections. They build and maintain roads, set aside public lands, regulate businesses, and protect consumers from dangerous products.
2. education, other, public welfare
3. An entitlement program provides benefits to everyone who meets the eligibility requirements, and it is a form of social welfare.
4. possible response: so that the States could design welfare programs according to the needs and wishes of their own citizens
5. Possible response: The main challenge is lack of funds. In the case of the corrections system, many States have hired private contractors to operate some prisons. Also, TANF limits welfare recipients to five years of assistance during their lifetimes.

QuICK WRITE Students should write an opening statement containing the main idea in their response to the question they selected. Sample opening statement: Each form of city government has its strengths and weaknesses based on the relationship between the executive and the other parts of the government.

\section*{LESSON GOAL}
- Students will examine issues surrounding State budgets by balancing a sample budget.

\section*{Teach}

\section*{INTRODUCE THE TOPIC}

Tell students that a major challenge facing State leaders is to balance the budget. The main issue is how to pay for all the State's services while keeping taxes, fees, and debt low. Elected officials know that voters do not want services cut, but neither do they want higher taxes. Have students read the feature and answer the questions.

L2
ELL Differentiate Explain that a loophole is a feature in the tax code that allows some people or businesses to pay less tax.

\section*{BALANCE A SAMPLE STATE BUDGET}

Distribute the worksheet for this feature (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 104). Tell students that they will work in pairs to balance a simplified sample State budget. If possible, furnish calculators.

\section*{FOLLOW UP}

When students have completed their worksheets, have them share their outcomes. Ask: Were you able to balance the budget? Why or why not? What did you find most challenging about the activity? Explain that a negative ending balance in the worksheet represents a negative deficit-in other words, a surplus. A surplus is extra money that can be saved for future spending.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Have students write a main idea sentence for each quotation and then explain which one they agree with most, and why.

\section*{Answers}
1. (a) possible answer: because governments provide more services to more people than ever before (b) Possible answer: People want services, but no tax increases to pay for them. Therefore, officials risk losing reelection if they either cut services or raise taxes.
2. (a) cut spending (b) levy a one-year tax increase to cover the shortfall and then save to cover future deficits (c) Answers will vary.

\section*{State Taxation and Spending}

\section*{Track the Issue}

The United States was founded, in part, on opposition to taxes. Nonetheless, governments have found many ways to raise money.

The Massachusetts Bay Colony establishes the first property tax in the colonies.

Prompted by the Stamp Act, the colonists declare "taxation without representation" to be illegal.

The Federal Government provides for a temporary income tax to fund the Civil War.

Wisconsin establishes the first State income tax.

New Hampshire institutes the first modern-day State lottery to pay for programs.

Voters in several States rebel against rising property taxes with laws limiting tax increases

Governor Arnold
Schwarzenegger (R., California)

\section*{Perspectives}

Many Americans complain that the government takes too much money out of their pockets. However, limits on taxes have contributed to deficit spending or cuts in services in the States. What issues do State government officials and taxpaying citizens need to consider when trying to balance budgets?
"With California facing a possible \($ 14\) billion budget deficit, it is not surprising that legislators and the governor are considering tax increases.
. The potential economic harm and unpopularity of tax increases should put spending increases on the back burner. . . . After all, it is spending increases, not tax breaks that got the State in a financial mess. State taxes take a larger share of personal income than ever before."
-Editorial, Oakland Tribune,
January 2008
"The governor's] budget all butignores options for increasing revenues. . legislative leaders should adjourn and lock the doors for two weeks. That way, GOP lawmakers could go back to their districts and explain to voters why closing parks and plundering schools is preferable to closing tax loopholes. . . . Farsighted Republicans could agree to a one-year hike in taxes as part of a universal deal for long-term reform."
-Editorial, Sacramento Bee,
January 2008

\section*{1) Connect to Your World}
1. Understand (a) Why do you think that taxes have increased in number and percentage since independence? (b) What is the central conflict in the relationship between taxation and government services?
2. Compare and Contrast (a) How does the editor of the Oakland Tribune suggest that California balance its budget? (b) How does the editor of the Sacramento Bee think that goal should be accomplished? (c) With which viewpoint do you agree? Why?
(.) GOVERNMENT ONLINE

In the News
To find out about how State budgets affect you, visit
PearsonSuccessNet.com

\section*{Background}

TAX REVOLT IN ARIZONA The economic downturn in 2008 strained the budgets of families and States. In Arizona, Governor Janet Napolitano vetoed a proposed law that would reduce property taxes. Outraged citizens decided to bypass the legislative process and fight for tax relief directly through the ballot. Citizen organizations, such as The Sun City Taxpayers Association, began gathering signatures to put initiatives on the ballot. These initiatives would limit the amount of property taxes the State could impose. Property taxes hit retirement communities, such as Sun City, especially hard. Most retirees are living on fixed incomes-their incomes do not rise to cover tax increases. If these initiatives pass, however, Arizona could sink deeper into its budget deficit.

\section*{SECTION 4}

\section*{Financing state and Local Government}

\section*{Guiding Question}

How do State governments raise money to pay for services? Use a chart similar to the one below to record information about the sources of State revenue.

\section*{Political Dictionary}
- sales tax - assessment - regressive tax - inheritance tax - income tax - estate tax - progressive tax - budget - property tax

\section*{Objectives}
1. Describe the major Federal and State limits on raising revenue.
2. List the four principles of sound taxation.
3. Identify major tax and nontax sources of State and local revenue.
4. Explain the State budget process.

Image Above: Sales taxes are a major source of revenue for State and local governments.

Altogether, the 50 States and their thousands of local governments now take in and spend well over \($ 2\) trillion per year. If you were to place 2 trillion dollar bills end to end, they would extend more than 185 million miles-farther than the distance from Earth to the planet Venus. Where do those governments get all that money, and what do they do with it?

\section*{Limits on Raising Revenue}

The States now take in well over \($ 750\) billion in taxes every year. Their local governments collect some 625 billion tax dollars every year. Those two basic levels of government also receive nearly \($ 1\) trillion from several nontax sources, too-much of it from the Federal Government.

The power to tax is one of the major powers of the States in the federal system. In a strictly legal sense, then, their taxing power is limited only by the restrictions imposed by the Federal Constitution and those imposed by a State's own fundamental law. \({ }^{7}\)

Federal Limitations The Federal Constitution does place some restrictions on the taxing abilities of State and local government. Although few in number, those limits do have a major impact.

The Constitution prohibits the States from taxing interstate and foreign trade. Remember, the Supreme Court's decision in McCulloch v. Maryland, in 1819, bars States from taxing the Federal Government or any of its agencies or functions.

The 14th Amendment's Due Process and Equal Protection clauses place important limits on the power to tax at the State and local levels. Essentially, the Due Process Clause requires that taxes be (1) imposed and administered fairly, (2) not so heavy as to actually confiscate property, and (3) imposed only for public purposes.

The Equal Protection Clause forbids the making of unreasonable classifications for the purpose of taxation. The clause thus forbids tax classifications

7 Remember, the power to tax is also limited by any number of practical considerations-including, especially, economic and political factors.

\section*{Focus on the Basics}

Here is the information that your students need to learn in this section.
FACTS: - The federal Constitution and State constitutions restrict State and local taxing powers. - Adam Smith identified four principles of sound taxation: equality, certainty, convenience, and economy. - The Due Process clause requires taxes to be imposed fairly, in reasonable amounts, and only for public purposes.
CONCEPTS: taxation, Due Process Clause, Equal Protection Clause, budget enduring understandings: - Progressive taxes rise along with ability to pay, while regressive taxes fall most heavily on low-income individuals. - Sources of State and local funding include taxes, nontax sources (especially federal grants), and borrowing. - The State budget is the plan for the control and use of public money.

\section*{GUIDING QUESTION}

How do State governments raise money to pay for services?
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline \multicolumn{3}{|c|}{Sources of State Revenue} \\
\hline 7 & & , \\
\hline Taxes & Nontax Sources & Borrowing \\ \hline - sales & - Federal & - bonds \\
\hline - income & Government & \\
\hline - property & grants & \\
\hline - inheritance & - business & \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
- estate \\
- severance
\end{tabular} & enterprise and user fees & \\
\hline - license & - court fines & \\ \hline (business) & - sales and & \\ \hline - documentary & lease of public & \\ \hline and stock & lands & \\
\hline transfer & - interest & \\
\hline - capital stock & from loans, & \\ \hline - payroll & investments, & \\
\hline - license (non- & and late tax & \\ \hline - license (nonbusiness) & \begin{tabular}{l} payments \\
- Iotteries
\end{tabular} & \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\section*{Get Started}

\section*{LESSON GOALS}

Students will
- list and categorize taxes as progressive or regressive.
- use a bar graph to discuss sources of State and local revenue.
- evaluate different types of State and local taxes based on four criteria describing "a good tax."

\section*{SKILLS DEVELOPMENT}

\section*{ANALYZE SOURCES}

To help students learn to analyze sources, have them turn to the Skills Handbook, p. S1 4 and use the steps explained there to complete the Extend Worksheet.

\section*{BEFORE CLASS}

Assign the section, the graphic organizer in the text, and the Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 105) before class.
L2 Differentiate Reading Comprehension Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 107)

\section*{BELLRINGER}

Create a two-column chart on the board, with the headings "Progressive" and "Regressive. " Write on the board: Categorize these taxes: sales tax, income tax, property tax, tax on movie tickets, and tax on drivers' licenses.
L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Remind students that a progressive tax requires people with higher incomes to pay more than those with lower incomes. A regressive tax is not based on ability to pay.
\(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the constitutional limits on State taxes?

\section*{arbitrary} adj. determined by chance contrived
adj. planned, designed exemption
n. something freed from a duty
based on race, religion, nationality, political party membership, or any other factors beyond what is reasonable.

Most tax laws do involve some form of classification, however. Thus, a cigarette tax is collected only from those who buy cigarettes, as this is a reasonable classification.

State Limitations Each State's constitution limits a State's taxing powers. State constitutions also limit the taxing powers of their local governments, often in great detail.

Most State constitutions create tax exemptions for religious and other nonprofit groups. State codes often set maximum rates for levies such as sales taxes or local property taxes. Some States prohibit certain taxes-for example, a general sales tax or a personal income tax.

Since local governments have no independent powers, the only taxes they can impose are those that the State allows them to levy. States have been restrictive in the matter. Even local units with home-rule charters are closely limited as to what and how they can tax.

\section*{Principles of Sound Taxation}

Any tax, if taken by itself, can be shown to be unfair. If a government's total revenues were to come from one tax-say, a sales, an income, or a property tax-its tax system would be very unfair. Some people would bear a much greater burden than others, and some would bear little or none. Each tax should thus be defensible as part of a tax system.

In his classic 1776 book The Wealth of Nations, Scottish economist Adam Smith laid out four principles of a sound tax system, which tax experts still cite today:

\section*{PRIMARY SOURCE}
1. The subjects of every state ought to contribute towards the support of the government as nearly as possible, in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the state.
2. The tax which each individual is bound to pay ought to be certain, and not arbitrary.
3. Every tax ought to be levied at the time, or in the manner, in which it is most likely to be convenient for the contributor to pay it.
4. Every tax ought to be so contrived as to both take out and to keep out of the pockets of the people as little as possible over and above what it brings into the public treasury. ...
\(-T h e\) Wealth of Nations
Shaping a tax system that meets those standards of equality, certainty, convenience, and economy is just about impossible. Still, that goal should be pursued.

\section*{Sources of Revenue}

Beyond the limits noted, a State can levy taxes as it chooses. The legislature decides what taxes the State will impose, and at what rates. It decides, too, what taxes localities can levy. \({ }^{8}\)

The Sales Tax The sales tax is the most productive source of State income today. It accounts for about one third of all tax monies the several States now collect.

A sales tax is a tax placed on the sale of various commodities; the purchaser pays it. It may be either general or selective in form. A general sales tax is one applied to the sale of most commodities. A selective sales tax is one placed on the sale of only certain commodities.

In 1932, Mississippi became the first State to levy a sales tax. Today, 45 States do so. \({ }^{9}\) The rates range from 2.9 percent in Colorado to as much as 7.25 percent in California; most States now peg the rate at 5 or 6 percent. Some things are exempted from the tax almost everywhere-most commonly, food, medicine, and newspapers. A growing number of 8 Some State constitutions do grant certain taxing powers directly to some local governments, but this is not common practice.

9 Only Alaska, Delaware, Montana, New Hampshire, and Oregon do not levy general sales taxes, but each does impose various selective sales taxes.

\section*{Differentiated Resources}

The following resources are located in the All-in-One, Unit 7, Chapter 25, Section 4:
L3 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 105)
L2 Reading Comprehension Worksheet (p. 107)
L3 Core Worksheet (p. 109)
L3 L4 Extend Worksheet (p. 112)
L3 Quiz A (p. 115)
L2 Quiz B (p. 116)
L3 Chapter Test A (p. 117)
L2 Chapter Test B (p. 120)

cities, and some urban counties, also levy sales taxes today-a "piggy-back tax," added on to and collected with the State tax.

All 50 States impose a selective sales tax on gasoline, alcoholic beverages, cigarettes, and insurance policies. Many of them also place selective sales taxes on such things as hotel and motel accommodations, restaurant meals, and theater and other amusement admissions.

Sales taxes are widely used for two major reasons: They are easy to collect, and they are dependable revenue producers. Yet a sales tax is a regressive tax-that is, it is not levied according to a person's ability to pay. The tax falls most heavily on those least able to pay it.

States are prohibited from collecting the sales taxes on most Internet purchases. That is because products made in one State are sold online to customers across the country. As more and more people shop via the Internet, the States complain that the drain on their sales tax receipts could very well lead to a reduction of public services and/or an increase in their sales tax and other tax rates Congress, acting under its commerce power, put a temporary moratorium on State taxation of e-commerce in 1998 and renewed it most recently in 2007.

The Income Tax The income tax, which is levied on the income of individuals and/ or corporations, yields another one third of State tax revenues today. Wisconsin enacted the first State income tax in 1911. Today, 43 States levy an individual income tax; 46 have some form of corporate income tax. \({ }^{\mathbf{1 0}}\)

The individual income tax is usually a progressive tax-that is, the higher your income, the more tax you pay. Income tax rates vary among the States, from 1 or 2 percent on lower incomes in most States to 9 \(\sqrt{\text { Checkpoint }}\) What are the benefits and drawbacks of the sales tax?
oratorium n. freeze, suspension

\section*{Teach}

To present this topic using online resources, use the lesson presentations at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{REVIEW THE TWO TYPES OF TAXES}

Ask students to share their lists from the Bellringer activity and record their responses on the board in the two-column chart. (regressive: sales tax, property tax, tax on movie tickets, tax on drivers' licenses; progressive: income tax) Discuss why States levy different kinds of taxes. (Any individual tax places a larger burden on some people than on others. A variety of taxes spreads the burden, making the tax system as a whole more fair.) Ask: Do you think progressive or regressive taxes are fairest? What are the benefits and drawbacks of each type? (Some students may feel that progressive taxes are fairer because they are based on ability to pay, while others may feel that regressive taxes are fair because they affect only those who use the taxed items.)

\section*{DISCUSS STATE AND LOCAL REVENUE SOURCES}

Point out that State and local governments do not rely solely on taxes for revenue. Display Transparency 25G, State and Local Revenue, and discuss the data. Ask:
Which sources produced the most and the least revenue for State and local governments? (most: Charges and Misc.; least: Utilities) About how much did the Federal Government provide to State and local governments? (about \($ 438\) billion) Tell students to raise their hands when you name each revenue source if they have ever contributed to that source directly. If your State has a sales tax, most students will have paid that. Some students with jobs may also pay a State income tax, and they may have paid fees for the use of parks. Ask students if they feel that the taxes they pay are fair and ask them to explain their opinions.
Tell students to go to the Interactivity to explore how different States raise money.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint benefits: easy to collect, dependable source of revenue; drawbacks: regressive, difficult to apply to Internet sales
State and Local Revenues sales tax and personal income tax if the young person has a job

\section*{INTRODUCE THE ACTIVITY}

Distribute the Chapter 25 Section 4 Core Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 109). Refer students to Adam Smith's four criteria on the worksheet or in the textbook. Tell students that they will work in pairs to evaluate different State and local taxes based on these criteria.

L1 L2 ELL Differentiate Before beginning this portion of the lesson, have students read aloud each criterion and then restate it in their own words.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint a tax levied based on the income of individuals and sometimes on corporations beneficiary
n. one who benefits graduated adj scaled

\section*{enterprise}
n. initiative, drive, determination percent or more on the highest incomes in a few States. Those who pay the tax receive various exemptions and deductions in calculating their taxable income.

Corporate income tax rates are usually a uniform (fixed) percentage of income. Only a few States set the rates on a graduated basis.

The progressive income tax is held by many to be the fairest-or the least unfairform of taxation, because it can be geared to a person's ability to pay. If the rates are too high, however, the tax can discourage individual enterprise.

The Property Tax Property taxes have been a major source of governmental revenue since the early colonial period. Once the major source of State revenue, they are now levied almost exclusively at the local level. They provide roughly three fourths of all local governmental income today.

A property tax is a levy on (1) real property, such as land, buildings, and improvements that go with the property if sold; or (2) personal property, either tangible or intangible. Tangible personal property is movable wealth that is visible and the value of which can be easily assessed-for example, computers, cars, and books. Intangible personal property includes such things as stocks, bonds, mortgages, and bank accounts.

The process of determining the value of the property to be taxed is known as assessment. An elected county, township, or city assessor usually carries out the task.

Supporters of the property tax argue that, because government protects property and often enhances its value, property owners can logically be required to contribute to the support of government. They note that the rate at which the tax is levied can be readily adjusted to meet governmental needs.

Critics insist that the property tax is not progressive, not geared to one's ability to pay. They also argue that it is all but impossible to set the value of all property on a fair and equal basis. They also note that personal property is easily hidden from assessors.

Inheritance or Estate Taxes Every State has some form of inheritance or estate tax, sometimes called the "death tax." An inheritance tax is levied on the beneficiary's (heir's) share of an estate. An estate tax is one levied directly on the full estate itself.

Business Taxes A variety of business taxes, in addition to the corporate income tax, are important sources of revenue in most States. More than half the States impose severance taxes, levies on the removal of natural resources such as timber, oil, minerals, and fish from the land or water.

Every State has various license taxes that permit people to engage in certain businesses, occupations, or activities. For example, all States require that corporations be licensed to do business in the State. Certain kinds of businesses-chain stores, amusement parks, taverns, and transportation lines-must have an additional operating license. Most States also require the licensing of doctors, lawyers, hairdressers, plumbers, electricians, insurance agents, and a host of others.

Many States have levies known as documentary and stock transfer taxes. These are charges made on the recording, registering, and transfer (sale) of such documents as mortgages, deeds, and securities. Some States also impose capital stock taxes, which are levied on the total assessed value of the shares of stock issued by a business.

Other Taxes A variety of other taxes are imposed by the States and their local governments in order to raise revenues. As a leading example, payroll taxes produce huge sums; the monies generated by those taxes are held in trust funds to pay the benefits provided by unemployment assistance, accident insurance, and retirement programs. Most States levy amusement taxes for admission to theaters, sports events, circuses, and the like. Every State imposes license taxes for various nonbusiness purposes-notably, on motor vehicles and drivers, and for such things as hunting, fishing, and marriage.

Nontax Sources Taxes have never been very popular, and so State and local officials have long looked for nontax revenue sources. Today, the States and their many local governments take in more than a trillion dollars a year from these sources. Much

\section*{Background}

VALUING PROPERTY FOR TAXES Outdated property taxes drove Nassau County, New York, into bankruptcy in 2000. The county valued each house according to the cost of building that house-in 1938, when a movie ticket cost 20 cents and a nickel bought a hotdog. Another problem was that a house in a desirable town could sell for twice or three times as much as a house in a distressed town, but both owners paid property taxes at the same rate. As long as some voters benefited from the system, the county refused to update assessments, which led to bankruptcy. Nassau County has since gone through a reassessment that brought property taxes in line with current market values.

Property taxes may be charged on real estate, such as houses (left), and on personal property, which includes cars (right). Why do you think real estate is easier for governments to value and tax than purchases or income?
of that huge amount comes as grants from the Federal Government.

Business enterprises and user fes. State and local governments also make money from a variety of publicly operated business enterprises. Toll roads and bridges are especially popular in the East. Several States, notably Washington, are in the ferry business. North Dakota markets a baking flour, sold under the brand name "Dakota Maid," and is also in the commercial banking business. Eighteen States are in the liquor business, selling alcohol in State-operated stores. \({ }^{11}\)

Many cities own and operate their water, electric power, and bus transportation systems. Some cities operate farmers' markets; rent space in their office buildings, warehouses, and housing projects; and operate dams and wharves. Receipts from such businesses support the local governments that own them. Other nontax sources include court fines, sales and lease of public lands, and interest from loans, investments, and late tax payments. Among the many public services for which those who use them must now pay a fee are hospitals, airports, parks, water, sewers, and garbage disposal.

Lotteries. For many years, nearly all forms of gambling were outlawed in every State except Nevada. Most States have relaxed their anti-gambling laws, hoping to attract dollars, jobs, and tourists. Today, only Hawaii and Utah do not permit any kind of gambling.

11 Those states are Aabama, Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, WestVirginia, and Wyoming. North Carolina's stores are operated by the counties; Wyoming's liquor monopoly operates only at the wholesale level.

State-run lotteries net some \($ 17\) billion per year for 42 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands. \({ }^{12}\) Lotteries provide revenue without raising taxes Supporters note that they are popular, voluntary, and offer an alternative to illegal gambling. Opponents say that lotteries prey on the poor and encourage compulsive gambling. Lottery proceeds are used for a number of purposes among the States. About half of States with lotteries earmark all or most of their revenue for education. Some channel the money directly to the State's general fund, while others dedicate most of it to economic development.

Borrowing The States and many of their local governments regularly borrow money to pay for such large undertakings as the construction of schools, highways, hospitals, sports facilities, and college dormitories. Much of that borrowing is done by issuing bonds, much as the Federal Government does. Generally, State and local bonds are fairly easy to market because the interest paid on them is not subject to State or federal income taxes.

\footnotetext{
12 Eight States do not operate Iotteries: Alabama, Alaska, Arkan} sas, Hawaii, Mississippi, Nevada, Utah, and Wyoming.

\section*{Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson}

Display Transparency 25H, The Shortfall, when you discuss State budgets. This cartoon depicts a budget crisis. Ask: Whom do the people represent? (the citizens of the State) What are they doing? (waiting to be fed) How does the cartoonist depict revenues? (as the promise of food to feed the citizens) What problem does the State have? (Its revenues are much smaller than its overall budget and insufficient to support the citizens of the State.) How does the dining scene contribute to the meaning of the cartoon? (The dining scene makes the point that revenues are a necessity of life for the State-like food.)

\section*{FOLLOW UP THE ACTIVITY}

Discuss students' evaluations of the taxes. Ask students to raise their hands for "best" or "worst" as you name each tax on the worksheet, and record the vote on the board. Is there a general agreement on these designations? If so, have volunteers explain why they selected the tax they did for the best and worst. If there was no consensus, discuss with students why there is so much difference of opinion among the class on what is a good tax. Ask students to explain what so many differences of opinion in your classroom might indicate about the difficulties of establishing tax policies in the larger world.
L3 Differentiate Tell students that some people believe that there should be few or no federal taxes-only State or only local taxes. Have students write a journal entry that uses what they have learned about State and local taxes to address the Chapter Essential Question: How local should government be? Students should explore whether they think federal taxes are "fair," if people in one State pay for services or expenditures in another State.

\section*{Government \\ online}

All print resources are available on the Teacher's Resource Library CD-ROM and online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.

\section*{EXTEND THE LESSON}

L3 L4 Differentiate Have students read "Estates of Pain" in the Extend Worksheet (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 112) and answer the questions.

L3 Differentiate Have students do research to identify a State with a tax initiative on the ballot in 2008. Have them summarize the purpose of the initiative and provide the results of the vote.
L1 L2 Differentiate Ask students to create a concept web to show the various sources of State and local revenue, including the different types of taxes, borrowing, and other means of generating income.
L4 Differentiate Separate students into groups of three or four. Have them research to find State and community government resources that provide information about specific revenue sources. Ask each group to create circle graphs illustrating (1) the sources of your State's revenues and (2) how those revenues are distributed to and spent in your community. Tell students to include a summary explaining each graph.

\section*{Answers}

Caption Real estate transactions are public, recorded, and visible, and therefore easier to access.

\section*{Assess and Remediate}

Collect the Core Worksheets and assess the students' work.Assign the Section 4 Assessment questions. L3 Section Quiz A (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 115)

L2Section Quiz B (Unit 7 All-in-One, p. 116)
Have students complete the review activities in the digital lesson presentation and continue their work in the Essential Questions Journal.

\section*{REMEDIATION}
\begin{tabular}{|l|l|}
\hline \multicolumn{1}{|c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
If Your Students \\
Have Trouble With
\end{tabular}} & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
Strategies \\
For Remediation
\end{tabular}} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
State revenues \\
(Questions 1, 5)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l} Display Transparency 25G. Review with \\ students each bar on the graph and check \\ understanding by asking them to make one \\ true statement about the graph.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Progressive and \\ regressive taxes \\
(Question 2)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Tell students to make a Venn diagram \\ to compare and contrast features of \\ progressive and regressive taxes, including \\ examples of each.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l}
Limits on State taxes \\
(Question 3)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students work with a partner to make \\ an outine of the text under the heading \\ "Limits on Raising Revenue."
\end{tabular} \\
\hline \begin{tabular}{l} Adam Smith's four \\ principles of sound \\
taxation (Question 4)
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{l}
Have students rewrite each of Smith's prin- \\ ciples in their own words in their notebooks.
\end{tabular} \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

At various times in the past, many State and local governments defaulted on their debts. Thus, most State constitutions now place quite detailed limits on the power to borrow. Altogether, the 50 States' debts now total about \($ 900\) billion, and local governments owe more than a trillion dollars.

\section*{State Budgets}

A public budget is much more than bookkeeping entries and dollar signs. It is a financial plan, a plan for the control and use of public money, public personnel, and public property. It is also a political document, a highly significant statement of public policy. Here, in its budget, the State establishes its priorities and decides who gets what, and who doesn't.

For more than 150 years, State budgets were the product of haphazard and uncoordinated steps centered in the legislature. Various State agencies appeared before legislative committees, each seeking its own funding, often in fierce competition with one another. Their chances of success depended far less on need or merit than on whatever political muscle they could bring to bear. When the legislature adjourned, no one had any real idea of how much had been appropriated or for what. Inevitably, extravagance and waste, unresolved problems, debt, favoritism, and graft were all parts of the process.

State budgets are strikingly different things today. They remain highly charged political documents, but they are the end products of what is, by and large, an orderly and systematic process.

All but three States have now adopted the executive budget, which gives the governor two vital powers: (1) to prepare the State's budget, and, after the legislature has acted upon his or her recommendations, (2) to manage the spending of the monies set aside by the legislature. \({ }^{13}\) The basic steps in the budget process are much the same at the State, local, and federal levels:
1. Each agency prepares estimates of its needs and proposed expenditures in the upcoming fiscal period.
2. Those estimates are reviewed by an executive budget agency.
3. Revised estimates, with supporting information, are brought together in a consolidated financial plan, the budget, which the governor presents to the legislature for its consideration.
4. The legislature reacts to the proposed budget, part by part, appropriates the funds it deems necessary, and enacts whatever revenue measures may be needed.
5. The governor supervises the execution of the budget-the actual spending of the funds provided by the legislature.
6. The execution of the budget is subject to an independent check-a postaudit.

13 In Mississippi, South Carolina, and Texas, budget making is shared by the governor and the legislature.
shared by the governor and the legislature.

\section*{Answers}

Checkpoint to pay for large undertakings, such as the construction of schools, highways, hospitals, and sports facilities

\section*{Critical Thinking}
4. Determining Relevance (a) What are Adam Smith's four principles of sound taxation? (b) What do you think makes each principle important?
5. Identifying Alternatives What might be the advantages and disadvantages of raising revenue through (a) A Staterun lottery? (b) A State-run business? (c) A State-wide property tax?

\section*{Quick Write}

Writing for Assessment: Write a Summation Assessment essays often end with a summation. The summation should restate, briefly, your main points and echo the open ing statement. Write a summation for the question you chose in Section 1. Check your summation against your main points to be sure that all are closely related

766 Local Government and Finance

\section*{Assessment Answers}
1. State governments raise money through a variety of taxes, such as sales, income, property, inheritance, estate, and various business taxes. Nontax sources include Federal Government grants, court fines, sales and lease of public lands, interest, and lotteries. States borrow funds by issuing bonds.
2. Income taxes are progressive because they are levied according to a person's ability to pay. The higher the income, the more tax is paid.
3. States cannot tax interstate or foreign trade, or tax the Federal Government or any of its agencies or functions. Taxes must be fair, not so heavy as to confiscate property, and imposed only for public purposes. States may not make unreasonable classifications for tax purposes.
4. (a) (1) Citizens should contribute to government revenues in proportion to their income.
(2) The tax amount should be clear. (3) Paying taxes should be convenient. (4) The tax amount should not exceed what is necessary to run the government. (b) People are more likely to accept taxes that are fair, clear, convenient, and not excessive.
5. (a) Lotteries raise money without raising taxes, but people who participate are often those least able to afford to do so. (b) Staterun businesses raise money without raising taxes, but government monopolies on certain businesses can lead to higher prices. (c) Property taxes can be fair because the people with the most highly valued property pay the most taxes. However, high property taxes can make home ownership unaffordable.
QUICK WRITE Students should write a summation that concludes their response to the question.

\section*{Local government responsibilities}

Provide essential services including education, security, road upkeep, and public records
```

Conduct elections

```
Administer justice
Plan for future growth and development
Collect taxes for local services

\section*{Political Dictionary} county p. 742
township p. 743 municipality p. 747 special district p. 748 incorporation p. 749 charter p. 750
mayor-council government p. 750 strong-mayor government p. 750 weak-mayor government p. 750 commission government p. 751 council-manager government p. 751 metropolitan area p. 755
Medicaid p. 757 welfare \(p .757\)
entitiement \(p .758\)
sales tax p. 762 regressive tax p. 763 income tax p. 763 progressive tax \(p .763\) property tax p. 764 assessment p. 764 inheritance tax p. 764 estate tax \(p .764\)
budget \(p .766\)

Revenues and Expenditures

Have students download the digital resources available at Government on the Go for review and remediation.

\section*{STUDY TIPS}

Learning Styles Explain that figuring out their particular way of absorbing information can go a long way toward helping students study more effectively. The simplest and most useful grouping of learning styles divides people into visual, auditory, and kinesthetic/tactile learners. Have students consider the following questions to help them recognize their preferred learning style: Do they remember information best when they read it, hear it, or take notes about it? When learning new vocabulary, do they tend to visualize the word, sound out the word, or write the word down? Are they likely to forget names but remember faces? Remember names but forget faces? Remember what they were doing or where they were when meeting someone new? These examples illustrate visual, auditory, and kinesthetic learners, in that order. Visual learners need quiet study time and learn well using outlines. Auditory learners do well with group discussions and audiotapes. Kinesthetic learners benefit from short study sessions and role playing.

\section*{assessment at A glance}

\section*{Tests and Quizzes}

Section Assessments
Section Quizzes A and B, Unit 7 All-in-One
Chapter Assessment
Chapter Tests A and B, Unit 7 All-in-One
Document-Based Assessment
Progress Monitoring Online
ExamView Test Bank

\section*{Performance Assessment}

Essential Questions Journal
Presentation of Small-Group Plans, p. 752
Assessment Rubrics, All-in-One

\section*{For More Information}

To learn more about local governments, refer to these sources or assign them to students:
51 Silate, Jennifer. Your Mayor: Local Government in Action. The Rosen Publishing Group, Inc., 2004.

Snedden, Robert. Growth of Cities (Earth's Changing Landscape). Franklin Watts Ltd, 2007.
L3 Duany, Andres, Elizabeth Plater-Zyberk, and Jeff Speck. Suburban Nation: The Rise of Sprawl and the Decline of the American Dream. North Point Press, 2001.
L4 Morgan, David R., Robert E. England, and John P. Pelissero. Managing Urban America. CQ Press, 2006.

\section*{Chapter Assessment}

COMPREHENSION AND CRITICAL THINKING

\section*{SECTION 1}
1. (a) A county is a unit of local government that consists of several towns or townships. Counties, unlike towns or townships, tend to have larger groups of administrators, with no chief administrator. Towns are smaller units. In New England they are the major form of local government, and are governed by a board of select persons and through town meetings. Townships are the major form of local government in New York, New Jersey, and in the Midwestern States. They are also generally administrated by an elected board. (b) Like the Federal Government, recognized tribal governments are sovereign and may operate like small nations outside of the control of Federal and State governments. Unlike the Federal Government, tribes require federal recognition for sovereign status. (c) Like State governments, tribal governments are subordinate to the Federal Government in some ways. Tribal governments use federal funds and tax revenues to provide services. Also, they are responsible for geographic units within the U.S. However, tribal governments have more autonomy than do State governments.
2. (a) to include all the town's eligible voters in decisions that affect the town (b) One benefit is that town meetings are a form of direct democracy, where all voters have a say in how the town is run. It is a very fair and open form of government. A drawback is that as populations grow and problems become more complex, it can be difficult to make decisions in such a wideopen forum with so many people involved. (c) Possible responses: Yes. Our community is small enough that direct citizen participation is practical. OR: No. Our city is too large for all citizens to meet at once. Also, the problems are too complex for many people to solve efficiently.

\section*{SECTION 2}
3. (a) City governments provide police and fire protection, sewer and water, sanitation, public health, planning, and zoning. They maintain schools, libraries, roads, bridges, and parks. (b) City leaders deal with issues that come with large populations that might not occur in more rural or suburban areas. These include issues of higher crime, traffic management, public

Comprehension and Critical Thinking

\section*{Section 1}
1. (a) How do counties differ from towns or townships? (b) What similarities and differences are there between the Federal Government and a tribal government? (c) What similarities and differences are there between tribal and State governments?
2. (a) What is the purpose of a New England town meeting? (b) What are its benefits and limitations? (c) Would it be a good form of government for your community? Why or why not?

\section*{Section 2}
3. Think about large cities as opposed to less populous communities. (a) What types of services do city governments provide? (b) What types of special issues or problems do city leaders deal with?
4. Voters in a few cities have rejected zoning with noticeable results. (a) What do you think those results are? (b) How might a lack of zoning affect your quality of life?

\section*{Section 3}
5. (a) What powers are delegated to the States that are denied to the federal government? (b) Does this division of powers make public services less efficient or more efficient, in your opinion?
6. (a) In what ways do States try to ensure the public safety of their citizens? (b) What challenges do States face in ensuring public safety?

\section*{Section 4}
7. Some States are turning increasingly to nontax revenue sources. (a) Why do you think States prefer nontax revenues to taxes? (b) Some people are critical of using a lottery as a method for raising State revenue. Why do you think this is the case? Do you agree or disagree?
8. Analyzing Political Cartoons Study the cartoon below about a man making a purchase over the Internet with his personal digital assistant. (a) Why must he pay a sales tax? (b) What does this cartoon imply about the sales tax as a State, not federal, source of revenue?

\section*{Writing About Government}
9. Use your Quick Write exercises from the section assessments in this chapter to write a three-paragraph essay that answers your question about local government and finance. The question should be answered in at least three paragraphs - one for each of your main points-including a strong opening statement and a clear summation. Make sure that your essay is concise, correctly spelled, and demonstrates an understanding of correct grammar. See pp. S11-S12 of the Skills Handbook.

\section*{Apply What You've Learned}
10. Essential Question Activity Research your local community or county government structure and budget. Answer the following questions:
(a) What positions in local government are elected and what positions are appointed?
(b) What are the most costly programs in the local government budget?
(c) Which officials have the greatest authority over the budget?
(d) What responsibilities does the State require of local government?
11. Essential Question Assessment Use the results of your research to prepare an election brochure that helps you answer the Essential Question: How local should government be? Create a brochure for a fictional candidate for local office explaining the responsibilities of the office and including specific promises to the voters, the office and including specific promises to the voters, a description of the goals of local government, and how a description of the goals of local government, and h the candidate hopes to work with State government and appointed local officials.

\section*{Essential Questions To respond to the chapter Essential Journal Question, go to your}

\author{
768 Chapter 25 Assessment
}
transportation, over-crowding and housing, pollution, and disease prevention.
4. (a) various kinds of homes and businesses in the same areas; lack of open space
(b) Unplanned growth could create parking problems, traffic congestion, and lack of green space for residents to enjoy.

\section*{SECTION 3}
5. (a) all powers not expressly delegated to the National Government in the Constitution (b) Possible response: More efficient. The United States is too large and diverse for one huge government to provide all services. Local governments understand the needs of their communities and can focus their funds on the services their citizens need most.
6. (a) State police and law-enforcement services; State corrections systems (b) booming prison populations and insufficient funds

\section*{SECTION 4}
7. (a) possible answer: because tax increases tend to be unpopular, and officials who propose them risk losing the next election (b) Possible response: Some people are against lotteries on moral grounds,

\section*{DOCUMENT-BASED ASSESSMENT}
1. C
2. The cartoon implies that with no seat belt law, the driver is at least free of one State regulation under the police power.
3. Some students might say that as long as society must pay the price of a citizen's poor choices, government has a right to legislate public safety. Other students might say that such legislation can go too far and must be assessed on a case-by-case basis. Too much government control can turn our society into a police state.
L2 Differentiate Students use all the documents on the page to support their thesis.
L3 Differentiate Students include additional information available online at PearsonSuccessNet.com.
L4 Differentiate Students use materials from the textbook, the online information at PearsonSuccess Net.com, and do additional research to support their views.

Use your knowledge of the police power and Documents 1 and 2 to answer Questions 1-3.
1. What is the main point of Document 1?
A. Seat-belt laws are unconstitutional because they interfere with the right to privacy and equal protection.
B. Seat-belt laws are inconvenient and the State has no right to impose safety laws on individuals.
C. Seat-belt laws are reasonable because the government bears costs incurred by injured people who were not wearing belts.
D. Seat-belt laws are necessary to prevent accidents on public roads and to promote public safety.
2. What ideas about State regulations does Document 2 express?
3. Pull It Together Do you think that seat-belt laws and other public safety laws are a reasonable use of a State's police power? Do they intrude on individual rights? Why or why not?

because they believe that gambling is just wrong; others think it is wrong because usually those who play are the people who can least afford to, so it becomes an unfair tax. I do not agree. I think lotteries are great ways for States to raise large sums of money to pay for important services or to lower taxes. People who buy into lotteries do it based on their own free will.
8. (a) The cartoon implies that the man must pay a sales tax if he makes an online purchase. (b) Internet sales cross State lines. If sales taxes were federal, then taxes on Internet sales would be easy to collect.

However, because sales taxes are imposed by States, and they vary from State to State, it is confusing and hard to apply the taxes to Internet sales.

\section*{writing about government}
9. Responses should be well-organized, demonstrate attention to grammar, spelling, and style, and address the question students selected and worked to answer throughout the chapter.

\section*{APPLY WHAT YOU'VE LEARNED}
10. Students should adequately research their selected government structure and budget in order to answer the questions in the activity.
11. Students' brochures should be detailed enough to cover the responsibilities of the office, should describe the goals of local government, and should realistically explain how their candidates will work with State and local officials.

\section*{ANSWERS TO ESSENTIAL QUESTION WARMUP}

Before assigning these questions, distribute the Rubric for Assessing a Writing Assignment (Unit 7 All-inOne, p. 128). Use the criteria and the guidelines below to grade students' answers to the Essential Question Warmup questions. Then send students to the Essential Questions Journal to answer the unit Essential Question.
1. Students should present a list of issues that reflect the current division of responsibilities for services among the three levels. A strong answer will provide reasons why each level of government is best suited to handle certain responsibilities.
2. A strong answer will recognize that revenues and responsibilities are shared among different levels of government so they must work together to provide efficient taxation and services and prevent conflicts between governments.
3. Students should state a position on whether one level of government is more responsive than others and support that position with facts and examples.
4. To answer this question successfully, students should explain several advantages and disadvantages of centralizing power. The explanations should demonstrate that students understand the challenges of balancing local, State, and federal governments.

\section*{Assessment Resources}

Unit 7 AYP Monitoring Assessment
ExamView Test Bank CD-ROM
SuccessTracker Assessment
Online Student Self-Tests
Chapter Tests
Section Quizzes
Chapter-level Document-Based Assessment

\section*{Reference}
Databank
Statistical Profile of the United States ..... 772
Political Map of the United States ..... 774
Presidents of the United States ..... 776
Political Map of the World ..... 778
Historical Documents
The Code of Hammurabi ..... 780
Magna Carta ..... 781
Mayflower Compact ..... 782
English Bill of Rights ..... 783
Second Treatise on Government ..... 784
Virginia Declaration of Rights. ..... 785
Articles of Confederation ..... 786
The Federalist No. 10. ..... 791
The Federalist No. 51 ..... 794
The Federalist No. 78 ..... 797
The Emancipation Proclamation ..... 800
Declaration of Sentiments ..... 802
Universal Declaration of Human Rights ..... 804
Supreme Court Glossary ..... 805
English/Spanish Glossary ..... 815
Index ..... 836
Acknowledgments ..... 861

The United States: A Statistical Profile

\section*{Population (in thousands)}
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|c|c|c|c|c|}
\hline \multirow[b]{2}{}{State} & \multirow[b]{2}{}{Capital} & \multicolumn{5}{|c|}{Population (in thousands)} & \multirow[b]{2}{}{Land Area in Sq. Mi.} & \multirow[b]{2}{}{Population per Sq. Mi} \\
\hline & & Year 2000 & \[
\begin{gathered} \text { \% } \\ \text { Urban } \end{gathered}
\] & African American & Hispanic Origin & \% Foriegn & & \\
\hline United States & Washington, D.C. & 281,422 & 80.1 & 34,862 & 31,337 & 7.9 & 3,536,278 & 79.6 \\
\hline Alabama & Montgomery & 4,447 & 70.1 & 1,139 & 45 & 1.1 & 50,750 & 87.6 \\
\hline Alaska & Juneau & 627 & 41.5 & 24 & 25 & 4.5 & 570,374 & 1.1 \\
\hline Arizona & Phoenix & 5,131 & 87.8 & 176 & 1,084 & 7.6 & 113,642 & 45.2 \\
\hline Arkansas & Little Rock & 2,673 & 48.6 & 411 & 54 & 1.1 & 52,075 & 51.3 \\
\hline California & Sacramento & 33,872 & 96.7 & 2,487 & 10,460 & 21.7 & 155,973 & 217.2 \\
\hline Colorado & Denver & 4,301 & 84.0 & 176 & 604 & 4.3 & 103,729 & 41.5 \\
\hline Connecticut & Hartford & 3,406 & 95.6 & 309 & 279 & 8.5 & 4,845 & 703.0 \\
\hline Delaware & Dover & 784 & 81.6 & 149 & 28 & 3.3 & 1,955 & 401.0 \\
\hline Florida & Tallahassee & 15,982 & 93.0 & 2,333 & 2,334 & 12.9 & 53,937 & 296.3 \\
\hline Georgia & Atlanta & 8,186 & 68.9 & 2,236 & 240 & 2.7 & 57,919 & 141.3 \\
\hline Hawaii & Honolulu & 1,212 & 73.1 & 34 & 95 & 14.7 & 6,423 & 188.7 \\
\hline Idaho & Boise & 1,294 & 38.3 & 8 & 93 & 2.9 & 82,751 & 15.6 \\
\hline Illinois & Springfield & 12,419 & 84.5 & 1,854 & 1,276 & 8.3 & 55,593 & 223.4 \\
\hline Indiana & Indianapolis & 6,080 & 71.7 & 498 & 154 & 1.7 & 35,870 & 169.5 \\
\hline lowa & Des Moines & 2,926 & 44.6 & 58 & 62 & 1.6 & 55,875 & 52.4 \\
\hline Kansas & Topeka & 2,688 & 56.4 & 157 & 148 & 2.5 & 81,823 & 32.9 \\
\hline Kentucky & Frankfort & 4,042 & 48.3 & 288 & 35 & 0.9 & 39,732 & 101.7 \\
\hline Louisiana & Baton Rouge & 4,469 & 75.2 & 1,415 & 119 & 2.1 & 43,566 & 102.6 \\
\hline Maine & Augusta & 1,275 & 35.8 & 6 & 9 & 3.0 & 30,865 & 41.3 \\
\hline Maryland & Annapolis & 5,296 & 92.7 & 1,454 & 199 & 6.6 & 9,775 & 541.8 \\
\hline Massachusetts & Boston & 6,349 & 96.1 & 405 & 391 & 9.5 & 7,838 & 810.0 \\
\hline Michigan & Lansing & 9,938 & 82.6 & 1,415 & 276 & 3.8 & 56,809 & 174.9 \\
\hline Minnesota & St. Paul & 4,919 & 70.1 & 149 & 93 & 2.6 & 79,617 & 61.8 \\
\hline Mississippi & Jackson & 2,845 & 35.9 & 1,010 & 24 & 0.8 & 46,914 & 60.6 \\
\hline Missouri & Jefferson City & 5,595 & 68.0 & 617 & 91 & 1.6 & 68,898 & 81.2 \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

Databank

Population (in thousands)
\begin{tabular}{l|l|r|r|r|r|r|r|r}
State & Capital & Year 2000 & \multicolumn{1}{c|}{\begin{tabular}{c}
\% \\
Urban
\end{tabular}} & \begin{tabular}{c} African \\ American
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{c} Hispanic \\
Origin
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{c} Foriegn \\
Born
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{c} Land Area \\
in Sq. Mi.
\end{tabular} & \begin{tabular}{c} Population \\ per Sq. Mi
\end{tabular} \\
\hline Montana & Helena & 902 & 33.4 & 3 & 16 & 1.7 & 145,556 & 6.2 \\
\hline Nebraska & Lincoln & 1,711 & 51.8 & 68 & 77 & 1.8 & 76,878 & 22.3 \\
\hline Nevada & Carson City & 1,998 & 86.1 & 140 & 304 & 8.7 & 109,806 & 18.2 \\
\hline New Hampshire & Concord & 1,236 & 60.2 & 9 & 20 & 3.7 & 8,969 & 137.8 \\
\hline New Jersey & Trenton & 8,414 & 100.0 & 1,197 & 1,027 & 12.5 & 7,419 & \(1,134.1\) \\
\hline New Mexico & Santa Fe & 1,819 & 57.0 & 46 & 708 & 5.3 & 121,364 & 15.0 \\
\hline New York & Albany & 18,976 & 91.9 & 3,222 & 2,661 & 15.9 & 47,224 & 401.8 \\
\hline North Carolina & Raleigh & 8,049 & 67.1 & 1,686 & 176 & 1.7 & 48,718 & 165.2 \\
\hline North Dakota & Bismarck & 642 & 43.1 & 4 & 7 & 1.5 & 68,994 & 9.3 \\
\hline Ohio & Columbus & 11,353 & 81.0 & 1,304 & 185 & 2.4 & 40,953 & 277.2 \\
\hline Oklahoma & Oklahoma City & 3,451 & 60.5 & 262 & 137 & 2.1 & 68,679 & 50.2 \\
\hline Oregon & Salem & 3,421 & 72.7 & 62 & 213 & 4.9 & 96,002 & 35.6 \\
\hline Pennsylvania & Harrisburg & 12,281 & 84.5 & 1,170 & 326 & 3.1 & 44,820 & 274.0 \\
\hline Rhode Island & Providence & 1,048 & 93.8 & 50 & 69 & 9.5 & 1,045 & \(1,002.9\) \\
\hline South Carolina & Columbia & 4,012 & 70.0 & 1,157 & 54 & 1.4 & 30,111 & 133.2 \\
\hline South Dakota & Pierre & 755 & 34.0 & 5 & 9 & 1.1 & 75,896 & 9.9 \\
\hline Tennessee & Nashville & 5,689 & 67.8 & 913 & 67 & 1.2 & 41,219 & 138.0 \\
\hline Texas & Austin & 20,852 & 84.5 & 2,470 & 6,045 & 9.0 & 261,914 & 79.6 \\
\hline Utah & Salt Lake City & 2,233 & 76.7 & 19 & 151 & 3.4 & 82,168 & 27.2 \\
\hline Vermont & Montpelier & 609 & 27.9 & 3 & 5 & 3.1 & 9,249 & 65.8 \\
\hline Virginia & Richmond & 7,079 & 78.1 & 1,385 & 266 & 5.0 & 39,598 & 178.8 \\
\hline Washington & Olympia & 5,894 & 82.9 & 204 & 377 & 6.6 & 66,581 & 88.5 \\
\hline West Virgina & Charleston & 1,808 & 41.9 & 56 & 10 & 0.9 & 4,087 & 75.1 \\
\hline Wisconsin & Madison & 5,364 & 67.8 & 293 & 140 & 2.5 & 54,314 & 98.8 \\
\hline Wyoming & Cheyenne & 494 & 29.6 & 4 & 29 & 1.7 & 97,105 & 5.1 \\
\hline Washington, D.C. & & 572 & 100 & 319 & 38 & 9.7 & 61 & \(9,377.0\) \\
\hline & & & & & & & &
\end{tabular}

Presidents of the United States
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|c|c|}
\hline Name & Party & State \({ }^{\text {a }}\) & Entered Office & Age On Taking Office & Vice President(s) \\
\hline George Washington (1732-1799) & Federalist & Virginia & 1789 & 57 & John Adams \\
\hline John Adams (1735-1826) & Federalist & Massachusetts & 1797 & 61 & Thomas Jefferson \\
\hline Thomas Jefferson (1743-1826) & Dem-Rep & Virginia & 1801 & 57 & Aaron Burr/George Clinton \\
\hline James Madison (1751-1836) & Dem-Rep & Virginia & 1809 & 57 & George Clinton/Elbridge Gerry \\ \hline James Monroe (1758-1831) & Dem-Rep & Virginia & 1817 & 58 & Daniel D. Tompkins \\
\hline John Q. Adams (1767-1848) & Dem-Rep & Massachusetts & 1825 & 57 & John C. Calhoun \\
\hline Andrew Jackson (1767-1845) & Democrat & Tennessee (SC) & 1829 & 61 & John C. Calhoun/Martin Van Buren \\
\hline Martin Van Buren (1782-1862) & Democrat & New York & 1837 & 54 & Richard M. Johnson \\
\hline William H. Harrison (1773-1841) & Whig & Ohio (VA) & 1841 & 68 & John Tyler \\
\hline John Tyler (1790-1862) & Democrat & Virginia & 1841 & 51 & none \\
\hline James K. Polk (1795-1849) & Democrat & Tennessee (NC) & 1845 & 49 & George M. Dallas \\
\hline Zachary Taylor (1784-1850) & Whig & Louisiana (VA) & 1849 & 64 & Millard Fillmore \\
\hline Millard Fillmore (1800-1874) & Whig & New York & 1850 & 50 & none \\
\hline Franklin Pierce (1804-1869) & Democrat & New Hampshire & 1853 & 48 & William R. King \\
\hline James Buchanan (1791-1868) & Democrat & Pennsylvania & 1857 & 65 & John C. Breckinridge \\
\hline Abraham Lincoln (1809-1865) & Republican & Illinois (KY) & 1861 & 52 & Hannibal Hamlin/Andrew Johnson \\
\hline Andrew Johnson (1808-1875) & Democrat & Tennessee (NC) & 1865 & 56 & none \\
\hline Ulysses S. Grant (1822-1885) & Republican & Illinois (OH) & 1869 & 46 & Schuyler ColfaxHenry Wilson \\
\hline Rutherford B. Hayes (1822-1893) & Republican & Ohio & 1877 & 54 & William A Wheeler \\
\hline James A. Garfield (1831-1881) & Republican & Ohio & 1881 & 49 & Chester A Arthur \\
\hline Chester A. Arthur (1829-1896) & Republican & New York (VT) & 1881 & 51 & none \\
\hline Grover Cleveland (1837-1908) & Democrat & New York (NJ) & 1885 & 47 & Thomas A Hendricks \\
\hline Benjamin Harrison (1833-1901) & Republican & Indiana (0H) & 1889 & 55 & Levi P. Morton \\
\hline Grover Cleveland (1837-1908) & Democrat & New York (NJ) & 1893 & 55 & Adlai E. Stevenson \\
\hline
\end{tabular}

\footnotetext{
\({ }^{\text {a }}\) State of residence when elected; if born in another State, that State in parentheses.
- Democratic-Republican
c Johnson, a War Democrat, was elected Vice-President on the coalition Union Party ticket \({ }^{d}\) Resigned October 10, 1973.
\({ }^{\text {e }}\) Nominated by Nixon, confirmed by Congress on December 6, 1973 fominated by Ford, confirmed by Congress on December 19, 1974.
}

\section*{Political Map of the United States}

\section*{CANADA}

\section*{Political Map of the World}

778 Databank

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. crime, unfair business practices, debt, marriage, and punishment
2. The laws were written down and codified to ensure that judgments were consistent throughout the land and that all citizens were aware of the laws and the punishments associated with them.

\section*{The Code of Hammurabi}

The Code of Hammurabi, believed to date before 1750 b.c., is a series of laws decreed by Hammurabi, the ruler of Babylon when that ancient city was at the peak of its power. Inscribed on stone columns over seven feet high, the Code consisted of 280 sections. Selected sections are excerpted below:
- If a man practice (robbery) and be captured, that man shall be put to death...
- If a man has come forward in a lawsuit for the witnessing of false things, and has not proved the thing that he said, if that lawsuit is a capital case, that man shall be put to death. If he came forward for witnessing about corn or silver, he shall bear the penalty (which applies to) that case.
- If a man has concealed in his house a lost slave or slave-girl belonging to the Palace or to a subject, and has not brought him (or her) out at the proclamation of the Crier, the owner of the house shall be put to death.
- If a fire has broken out in a man's house, and a man who has gone to extinguish it has cast his eye on the property of the owner of the house and has taken the property of the owner of the house, that man shall be thrown into the fire.
- If a man is subject to a debt bearing interest, and Adad (the Weather-god) has saturated his field or a high flood has carried (its crop) away, or because of lack of water he has not produced corn in that field, in that year he shall not return any corn to (his) creditor. He shall . . . not pay interest for that year.
- If a man has donated field, orchard or house to his favourite heir and has written a sealed document for him (confirming this), after the father has gone to his doom, when the brothers share he (the favorite heir) shall take the gift that his father gave him, and apart from that they shall share equally in the property of the paternal estate.
- If an artisan has taken a child for bringing up, and has taught him his manual skill, (the child) shall not be (re)claimed. If he has not taught him his manual skill, that pupil may return to his father's house.
- If a man aid a male or female slave... to escape from the city gates, he shall be put to death. . .

Stone pililar with Hammurabi's Cod
- If a man be in debt and sell his wife, son, or daughter, or bind them over to service, for three years they shall work in the house of the purchaser or master; in the fourth year they shall be given their freedom. . .
- If a builder has made a house for a man but has not made his work strong, so that the house he made falls down and causes the death of the owner of the house, that builder shall be put to death. If it causes the death of the son of the owner of the house, they shall kill the son of the builder.
- If a man would put away [divorce] his wife who has not borne him children, he shall give her money to the amount of her marriage settlement and he shall make good to her the dowry which she brought from her father's house and then he may put her away.
- If a son has struck his father, they shall cut off his hand.
- If a man has destroyed the eye of a man of the "gentleman" class, they shall destroy his eye. If he has broken a gentleman's bone, they shall break his bone. If he has destroyed the eye of a commoner or broken a bone of a commoner, he shall pay one mina [about \($ 300\) ] of silver. If he has destroyed the eye of a gentleman's slave, he shall pay half the slave's price.
- If a gentleman's slave strikes the cheek of a man of the "gentleman" class, they shall cut off (the slave's) ear.
- If a gentleman strikes a gentleman in a free fight and inflicts an injury on him, that man shall swear "I did not strike him deliberately," and he shall pay the surgeon.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on this page to answer the following questions.
1. With what general topics is the Code concerned? 2. Why do you suppose the laws were written down and codified?

\section*{Magna Carta}

Signed by England's King John in 1215, the Magna Carta (Great Charter) was the first document to limit the power of England's monarchs. The Magna Carta established the principle that rulers are subject to law-a major step toward constitutional government.

We . . . by this our present Charter have confirmed, for us and our heirs forever-
1. That the English Church shall be free and shall have her whole rights and her liberties inviolable. . .
9. Neither we nor our bailiffs shall seize any land or rent for any debt while the chattels [possessions] of the debtor are sufficient for the payment of the debt. .
12. No scutage [tax] or aid [subsidy] shall be imposed in our kingdom, unless by the common counsel of our kingdom. . .
14. And also to have the common council of the kingdom to assess and aid, . . . and for the assessing of scutages, we will cause to be summoned the archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and great barons,... And besides, we will cause to be summoned . . . all those who hold of us in chief, at a certain day ... and to a certain place; and in all the letters of summons, we will express the cause of the summons; and the summons being thus made, the business shall proceed on the day appointed, according to the counsel of those who shall be present, although all who have been summoned have not come.
39. No free-man shall be seized, or imprisoned, or dispossessed, or outlawed, or in any way destroyed; nor will we condemn him, nor will we commit him to prison, excepting by the legal judgment of his peers, or by the laws of the land.
40. To none will we sell, to none will we deny, to none will we delay right or justice.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. The basic American right that has its origins in Article 39 of the Magna Carta is found in the 5th Amendment: criminal proceedings, including the right to be tried in court by an impartial jury.
2. Article 52
3. A tax will not be imposed unless decided by the "common counsel" (the people).

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. to enact fair and equal laws that would be followed by all the settlers to ensure the settlement's survival
2. The document was necessary because it provided the settlers with an agreed-upon governmental authority that they consented to obey; the settlers would not have been able to survive if they had not banded together in an orderly manner.
3. Sample answer: Without the compact, it is possible that there would be strife between settlers and discord about who or what had the authority to make laws for the colony, which may eventually have led to the settlement's failure.

\section*{> Mayflower Compact}

The Mayfbwer landed in present-day Cape Cod in November, 1620. The document that became know as the Mayflower Compact contained the first written laws for the new land and established a government created by those who were to be governed. It was signed by 41 adult men.

In the name of God, Amen. We, whose names are n the name of God, Amen. We, whose underwritten, the Loyal Subjects of our dread Sovereign Lord, King James, by the Grace of God, of England, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, e&. Having undertaken for the Glory of God, and Advancement of the Christian Faith, and the Honour of our King and Country, a voyage to plant the first colony in the northern parts of Virginia; do by these presents, solemnly and mutually in the Presence of God and one of another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil Body Politick, for our better Ordering and Preservation, and Furtherance of the Ends aforesaid; And by Virtue hereof to enact, constitute, and frame, such just and equal Laws, Ordinances, Acts, Constitutions and Offices, from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the General good of the Colony; unto which we promise all due submission and obedience.

In Witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names at Cape Cod the eleventh of November, in the Reign of our Sovereign Lord, King James of England, France and Ireland, the eighteenth, and of Scotland the fifty-fourth. Anno Domini, 1620.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on this page to answer the following questions.
1. What goals are laid out in this document?
2. Why was this document necessary?
3. What might have happened if the Mayflower Compact had not be written?

\(\Delta\) Selected signatures on the Mayflower Compact

Signing the Mayflower Compact aboard ship

\section*{English Bill of Rights}

When the Catholic king, James II, was forced from the English throne in 1688, Parliament offered the crown to his Protestant daughter Mary and her husband, William of Orange. Parliament, however, insisted that William and Mary submit to a bill of rights. This document sums up the powers that Parliament had been seeking since the Petition of Right in 1628.

Whereas, the late King James II . . . did endeavor to subvert and exirpate [eliminate] the Protestant religion and the laws and libertyies of this kingdom. and whereas the said late king James II having abdicated the government, and the throne being vacant. .
The said Lords [Parliament] . . . being now assembled in a full and free representative [body] of this nation.. do in the first place . . . declare - That the pretended [untruthfully claimed] power of suspending the laws or the execution of laws by regal authority without consent of Parliament is illegal;
- That the pretended power of dispensing with laws or the execution of laws by regal authority, as it hath been assumed and exercised of late, is illegal; .
- That levying money for or to the use of the Crown by pretence of prerogative, without grant of Parliament, for longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal;
- That it is the right of the subjects to petition the king, and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal;
- That the raising or keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of Parliament, is against law;
- That the subjects which are Protestants may have arms for their defence suitable to their conditions and as allowed by law;
- That election of members of Parliament ought to be free;
- That the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament;
- That excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted;
- That jurors ought to be duly impanelled and returned, and jurors which pass upon men in trials for high treason ought to be freeholders [property owners with unconditional rights];

Mary and William
- That all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons before conviction are illegal and void;
- And that for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening and preserving of the laws, Parliaments ought to be held frequently.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on this page to answer the following questions.
1. Which rights and freedoms listed above do you think are most important? Explain your choices.
2. Review the American Declaration of Independence. What similarities do you see between the two documents?
3. What is the importance of this document for American government?

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. Accept any response that is backed by logical reasoning. Sample answer: I think "That excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted . . ." is the most important right because otherwise, judges could hand down unfair or disproportionate punishments based on revenge or their own personal convictions.
2. Similarities include the sovereignty of the people and the importance of representative, freely elected government.
3. The importance of this document is that much of American government and politics today is based on these early English ideas.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. the freedom to be absolutely in charge of their lives and possessions without answering to anyone
2. With all people living in perfect freedom, an individual's rights and property are at risk for destruction and seizure by others.
3. Governments are formed by the consent of individuals as a community to willingly give up their perfect freedoms and place themselves under a government to preserve their life, liberty, and property.
4. In order to preserve life, liberty, and property, governments require individuals to submit to the power of someone other than themselves; the governed must bear the responsibility of the community as a whole.

\section*{Second Treatise on Government}

In 1690, English philosopher John Locke (1632-1704) produced two treatises (essays) on government. In his second treatise, he discussed the responsibilities of a government and claimed that the people have the right to overthrow an unjust government. Locke's ideas greatly influenced Thomas Jefferson and other supporters of the American Revolution. In this selection, Locke explains why people form governments.

To understand political power aright. . . we must consider what estate all men are naturally in, and that is, a state of perfect freedom to order their actions, and dispose of their possessions and persons as they think fit, within the bounds of the law of nature, without asking leave or depending upon the will of any other man. .
Men being . . . by nature, all free, equal and independent, no one can be put out of this estate and subjected to the political power of another without his own consent, which is done by agreeing with other men, to join and unite into a community for their comfortable, safe and peaceable living, one amongst another, in a secure enjoyment of their properties, and a greater security against any that are not of it. .

When any number of men have, by the consent of every individual, made a community, they have thereby made that community one body, with a power to act as one body, which is only by the will and determination of the majority. .... And thus every man, by consenting with others to make one body politic under one govern ment, puts himself under an obligation to every one in that society to submit to the determination of the majority, and to be concluded by it. ...

If man in the state of nature... be absolute lord of his own person and possessions, equal to the greatest and
- John Locke

by the general name-property.
subject to nobody, why will he part with his freedom, this empire, and subject himself to the dominion and control of any other power? . . . It is obvious to answer that though in the state of nature he hath such a right, yet the enjoyment of it is very uncertain and constantly exposed to the invasion of others; for all being kings as much as he, every man his equal,
.. the enjoyment of the property he has in this state is very unsafe, very insecure. This makes him willing to quit this condition which, however free, is full of fears and continual dangers; and it is not without reason that he seeks out and is willing to join in society with others ... for the mutual preservation of their lives, liberties and estates, which I call

The great and chief end, therefore, of men uniting into commonwealths, and putting themselves under government, is the preservation of their property. . .

\section*{Analyzing Documents \\ Use the passage on this page to answer the following questions. \\ 1. According to Locke, what freedoms did people have before the founding of governments? \\ 2. What are the potential dangers of a person living in what Locke called "perfect freedom"? \\ 3. According to Locke, how are governments formed? \\ 4. What trade-off does Locke say occurs when people live under government?}

\section*{Virginia Declaration of Rights}

The Virginia Declaration of Rights was largely the work of George Mason（1725－1792），one of Virginia＇s wealthiest planters and a neighbor and friend of George Washington．The Declaration was adopted unanimously by the Virginia Convention of Delegates on June 12，1776，and was later incorporated within the Virginia State Constitution．It influenced a number of later documents，including the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights．

A
declaration of rights made by the representatives of the good people of Virginia，assembled in full and free convention；which rights do pertain to them and their posterity，as the basis and foundation of government． I That all men are by nature equally free and indepen－ dent，and have certain inherent rights，of which，when they enter into a state of society，they cannot，by any compact，deprive or divest their posterity；namely， the enjoyment of life and liberty，with the means of acquiring and possessing prop－ erty，and pursuing and obtaining happi－ ness and safety．
II That all power is vested in，and consequently derived from，the people；that magistrates are their trustees and servants，and at all times amenable to them．
III That government is，or ought to be，instituted for the common benefit，protection，and security of the people，nation or community； of all the various modes and forms of government that is best，which is capable of producing the greatest de－ gree of happiness and safety and is most effectually secured against the danger of maladministration；and that，whenever any government shall be found inadequate or contrary to these purposes，a majority of the com－ munity hath an indubitable，unalienable，and indefea－ sible right to reform，alter or abolish it，in such manner as shall be judged most conducive to the public weal． IV That no man，or set of men，are entitled to exclusive or separate emoluments or privileges from the commu－ nity，but in consideration of public services；which，not being descendible，neither ought the offices of magistrate， legislator，or judge be hereditary． V That the legislative and executive powers of the state should be separate and distinct from the judicative；and， that the members of the two first may be restrained from oppression by feeling and participating the burthens of the people，they should，at fixed periods，be reduced to a private station，return into that body from which they were originally taken，and the vacancies be supplied by frequent，certain，and regular elections in which all，or any part of the former members，to be again eligible，or ineligible，as the laws shall direct．
VI That elections of members to serve as representatives of the people in assembly ought to be free；and that all men，having sufficient evidence of perma－ nent common interest with，and attachment to，the community have the right of suf－ frage and cannot be taxed or deprived of their property for public uses without their own consent or that of their representatives so elected，nor bound by any law to which they have not，in like manner，assented， for the public good．
VII That all power of suspending laws，or the execution of laws，by any authority without consent of the representatives of the people is injurious to their rights and ought not to be exercised．
VIII That in all capital or criminal pros ecutions a man hath a right to demand the cause and nature of his accusation to be confronted with the accusers and witnesses，to call for evidence in his favor，and to a speedy trial by an impartial jury of his vicinage，without whose unanimous consent he cannot be found guilty，nor can he be compelled to give evidence against himself，that no man be deprived of his liberty except by the law of the land or the judgement of his peers．
IX That excessive bail ought not to be required，nor excessive fines imposed；nor cruel and unusual punish－ ments inflicted． X That general warrants，whereby any officer or mes－ senger may be commanded to search suspected places without evidence of a fact committed，or to seize any person or persons not named，or whose offense is not

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. The Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights echo several phrases and sentiments contained in the Virginia Declarations of Rights, such as "That all men are by nature equally free and independent, and have certain inherent rights"; "That all power is vested in, and consequently derived from, the people"; "That a well regulated militia, composed of the body of the people, trained to arms, is the proper, natural and safe defense of a free state"; and "That excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed; nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted. " They both delineate such basic rights as freedom of the press and freedom of religion.
2. Accept any answers that are supported with solid reasoning. Sample answer: I feel that the rights of the accused, which are described in Articles VIII and IX, are extremely important civil rights. The legal system at certain times in history has been such that the accused was not innocent until proven guilty and punished without just cause or due process. Defining these rights prevents judicial abuses and unfair trials. Delineated by the Bill of Rights and clarified by decisions handed down by the Supreme Court, the rights of the accused remain an important part of the American judicial system and our democratic society.
particularly described and supported by evidence, are grievous and oppressive and ought not to be granted. XI That in controversies respecting property and in suits between man and man, the ancient trial by jury is preferable to any other and ought to be held sacred.
XII That the freedom of the press is one of the greatest bulwarks of liberty and can never be restrained but by despotic governments.
XIII That a well regulated militia, composed of the body of the people, trained to arms, is the proper, natural, and safe defense of a free state; that standing armies, in time of peace, should be avoided as dangerous to liberty; and that, in all cases, the military should be under strict subordination to, and be governed by, the civil power.
XIV That the people have a right to uniform government; and therefore, that no government separate from, or independent of, the government of Virginia, ought to be erected or established within the limits thereof.
XV That no free government, or the blessings of liberty, can be preserved to any people but by a firm adherence to justice, moderation, temperance, frugality, and virtue and by frequent recurrence to fundamental principles.

XVI That religion, or the duty which we owe to our Cre ator and the manner of discharging it, can be directed by reason and conviction, not by force or violence; and therefore, all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience; and that it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love, and charity towards each other.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on these pages to answer the following questions.
1. What similarities do you see in language and ideas between the Virginia Declaration of Rights and the Declaration of Independence? Between the Virginia Declaration of Rights and the Bill of Rights?
2. Choose one of the articles from the Virginia Declaration and explain the importance of the right that it describes using examples from your reading and general knowledge.

\section*{Articles of Confederation}

The Articles of Confederation were approved on November 15, 1777, and were in effect from March 1, 1781, when they were finally ratified by all 13 States, until March 4, 1789. They established a weak central government, which led to conflicts among the States. Demand soon grew for a stronger central government, leading to the creation of the United States Constitution.

T o all to whom these Presents shall come, we the undersigned Delegates of the States affixed to our Names send greeting. Whereas the Delegates of the United States of America in Congress assembled did on the fifteenth day of November in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy seven, and in the Second Year of the Independence of America agree to certain articles of Confederation and perpetual Union between the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia in the Words following, viz. "Articles of Confederation and perpetual Union between the states of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia.
[ART. I.] The Stile of this confederacy shall be "The United States of America."
[ART. II.] Each state retains its sovereignty, freedom and independence, and every Power, Jurisdiction and right, which is not by this confederation expressly delegated to the United States, in Congress assembled.
[ART. III.] The said states hereby severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other, for their common defence, the security of their Liberties, and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other, against all force offered to, or attacks made upon them, or any of them, on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, or any other pretence whatever.
[ART. IV.] The better to secure and perpetuate mutual friendship and intercourse among the people of the different states in this union, the free inhabitants of each of these states, paupers, vagabonds and fugitives from Justice excepted, shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of free citizens in the several states; and the people of each state shall have free ingress and regress to and from any other state, and shall enjoy therein all the privileges of trade and commerce, subject to the same duties, impositions and restrictions as the inhabitants thereof respectively, provided that such restriction shall not extend so far as to prevent the removal of property imported into any state, to any other state of which the Owner is an inhabitant; provided also that no imposition, duties or restriction shall be laid by any state, on the property of the united states, or either of them.

If any Person guilty of, or charged with treason, felony, or other high misdemeanor in any state, shall flee from Justice, and be found in any of the united states, he shall upon demand of the Governor or executive power, of the state from which he fled, be delivered up and removed to the state having jurisdiction of his offence.
Full faith and credit shall be given in each of these states to the records, acts and judicial proceedings of the courts and magistrates of every other state.
[ART. V.] For the more convenient management of the general interests of the united states, delegates shall be annually appointed in such manner as the legislature of each state shall direct, to meet in Congress on the first Monday in November, in every year, with a power reserved to each state, to recall its delegates, or any of them, at any time within the year, and to send others in their stead, for the remainder of the Year
No state shall be represented in Congress by less than two, nor by more than seven Members; and no person shall be capable of being a delegate for more than three years in any term of six years; nor shall any person, being a delegate, be capable of holding any office under the united states, for which he, or another for his benefit receives any salary, fees or emolument of any kind.
Each state shall maintain its own delegates in a meeting of the states, and while they act as members of the committee of the states.
In determining questions in the united states, in Congress assembled, each state shall have one vote.
Freedom of speech and debate in Congress shall not be impeached or questioned in any Court, or place out of Congress, and the members of congress shall be protected in their persons from arrests and imprisonments, during the time of their going to and from, and attendance on congress, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace.
[ART. VI.] No state without the Consent of the united states in congress assembled, shall send any embassy to, or receive any embassy from, or enter into any conference, agreement, or alliance or treaty with any King, prince or state; nor shall any person holding any office of profit or trust under the united states, or any of them, accept of any present, emolument, office or title of any kind whatever from any king, prince or foreign state; nor shall the united states in congress assembled, or any of them, grant any title of nobility.

No two or more states shall enter into any treaty, confederation or alliance whatever between them, without the consent of the united states in congress assembled, specifying accurately the purposes for which the same is to be entered into, and how long it shall continue.
No state shall lay any imposts or duties, which may interfere with any stipulations in treaties, entered into by the united states in congress assembled, with any king, prince or state, in pursuance of any treaties already proposed by congress, to the courts of France and Spain.
No vessels of war shall be kept up in time of peace by any state, except such number only, as shall be deemed necessary by the united states in congress assembled, for the defence of such state, or its trade; nor shall any body of forces be kept up by any state, in time of peace, except such number only, as in the judgment of the united states, in congress assembled, shall be deemed requisite to garrison the forts necessary for the defence of such state; but every state shall always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accounted, and shall provide and constantly have ready for use, in public stores, a due number of field pieces and tents, and a proper quantity of arms, ammunition and camp equipage.
No state shall engage in any war without the consent of the united states in congress assembled, unless such state be actually invaded by enemies, or shall have received certain advice of a resolution being formed by some nation of Indians to invade such state and the danger is so imminent as not to admit of a delay, till the united states in congress assembled can be consulted: nor shall any state grant commissions to any ships or vessels of war, nor letters of marque or reprisal, except it be after a declaration of war by the united states in congress assembled, and then only against the kingdom or state and the subjects thereof, against which war has been so declared, and under such regulations as shall be established by the united states in congress assembled, unless such state be infested by pirates, in which case vessels of war may be fitted out for that occasion, and kept so long as the danger shall continue, or until the united states in congress assembled shall determine otherwise.
[ART. VII.] When land-forces are raised by any state for the common defence, all officers of or under the rank of colonel, shall be appointed by the legislature of each state respectively by whom such forces shall be raised, or in such manner as such state shall direct, and all vacancies shall be filled up by the state which first made the appointment.
[ART. VIII.] All charges of war, and all other expences that shall be incurred for the common defence or general welfare, and allowed by the united states in congress assembled, shall be defrayed out of a common treasury, which shall be supplied by the several states, in proportion to the value of all land within each state, granted to or surveyed for any Person, as such land and the buildings and improvements thereon shall be estimated according to such mode as the united states in congress assembled, shall from time to time direct and appoint. The taxes for paying that proportion shall be laid and levied by the authority and direction of the legislatures of the several states within the time agreed upon by the united states in congress assembled.
[ART. IX.] The united states in congress assembled, shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war, except in the cases mentioned in the sixth article-of sending and receiving ambassadors-entering into treaties and alliances, provided that no treaty of commerce shall be made whereby the legislative power of the respective states shall be restrained from imposing such imposts and duties on foreigners, as their own people are subjected to, or from prohibiting the exportation or importation of any species of goods or commodities whatsoever-of establishing rules for deciding in all cases, what captures on land or water shall be legal, and in what manner prizes taken by land or naval forces in the service of the united states shall be divided or appropriated-of granting letters of marque and reprisal in times of peace-appointing courts for the trial of piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and establishing courts for receiving and determining finally appeals in all cases of captures, provided that no member of congress shall be appointed a judge of any of the said courts.
The united states in congress assembled shall also be the last resort on appeal in all disputes and differences now subsisting or that hereafter may arise between two or more states concerning boundary, jurisdiction or any other cause whatever; which authority shall always be exercised in the manner following. Whenever the legislative or executive authority or lawful agent [of any] state in controversy with another shall present a petition to congress stating the matter in question and praying for a hearing, notice thereof shall be given by order of congress to the legislative or executive authority of the other state in controversy, and a day assigned for the appearance of the parties by their lawful agents, who shall then be directed to appoint by joint consent, commissioners or judges to constitute a court for hearing and determining the matter in question; but if they cannot agree, congress shall name three persons out of each of the united states, and from the list of such persons each party shall alternately strike out one, the petitioners beginning, until the number shall be reduced to thirteen; and from that number not less than seven, nor more than nine names as congress shall direct, shall in the presence of congress be drawn out by lot, and the persons whose names shall be so drawn or any five of them, shall be commissioners or judges, to hear and finally determine the controversy, so always as a major part of the judges who shall hear the cause shall agree in the determination: and if either party shal neglect to attend at the day appointed, without shewing reasons, which congress shall judge sufficient, or being present shall refuse to strike, the congress shall proceed to nominate three persons out of each state, and the secretary of congress shall strike in behalf of such party absent or refusing; and the judgment and sentence of the court to be appointed, in the manner before prescribed, shall be final and conclusive; and if any of the parties shall refuse to submit to the authority of such court, or to appear to defend their claim or cause, the court shall nevertheless proceed to pronounce sentence, or judgment, which shall in like manner be final and decisive, the judgment or sentence and other proceedings being in either case transmitted to congress, and lodged among the acts of congress for the security of the parties concerned: provided that every commissioner, before he sits in judgment, shall take an oath to be administered by one of the judges of the supreme or superior court of the state, where the cause shall be tried, "well and truly to hear and determine the matter in question, according to the best of his judgment, without favour, affection or hope of reward;" provided also that no state shall be deprived of territory for the benefit of the united states.

Cover of the Articles of Confederation
All controversies concerning the private right of soil claimed under different grants of two or more states, whose jurisdictions as they may respect such lands, and the states which passed such grants are adjusted, the said grants or either of them being at the same time claimed to have originated antecedent to such settlement of jurisdiction, shall on the petition of either party to the congress of the united states, be finally determined as near as may be in the same manner as is before prescribed for deciding disputes respecting territorial jurisdiction between different states
The united states in congress assembled shall also have the sole and exclusive right and power of regulating the alloy and value of coin struck by their own authority, or by that of the respective states-fixing the standard of weights and measures throughout the united statesregulating the trade and managing all affairs with the Indians, not members of any of the states, provided that the legislative right of any state within its own limits be not infringed or violated-establishing and regulating post-offices from one state to another, throughout all the united states, and exacting such postage on the papers passing thro' the same as may be requisite to defray the expences of the said office-appointing all officers of the land forces, in the service of the united states, excepting regimental officers-appointing all the officers of the naval forces, and commissioning all officers whatever in the service of the united states-making rules for the government and regulation of the said land and naval forces, and directing their operations.
The united states in congress assembled shall have authority to appoint a committee, to sit in the recess of congress, to be denominated "A Committee of the States," and to consist of one delegate from each state; and to appoint such other committees and civil officers as may be necessary for managing the general affairs of the united states under their direction-to appoint one of their number to preside, provided that no person be allowed to serve in the office of president more than one year in any term of three years; to ascertain the necessary sums of Money to be raised for the service of the united states, and to appropriate and apply the same for defraying the public expences-to borrow money, or emit bills on the credit of the united states, transmitting every half year to the respective states an account of the sums of money so borrowed or emitted-to build and equip a navy-to agree upon the number of land forces, and to make requisitions from each state for its quota, in proportion to the number of white inhabitants in such state; which requisition shall be binding, and thereupon the legislature of each state shall appoint the regimental officers, raise the men and clothe, arm and equip them in a soldier like manner, at the expence of the united states, and the officers and men so clothed, armed and equipped shall march to the place appointed, and within the time agreed on by the united states in congress assembled. But if the united states in congress assembled shall, on consideration of circumstances judge proper that any state should not raise men, or should raise a smaller number than its quota, and that any other state should raise a greater number of men than the quota thereof, such extra number shall be raised, officered, clothed, armed and equipped in the same manner as the quota of such state, unless the legislature of such state shall judge that such extra number cannot be safely spared out of the same, in which case they shall raise, of ficer, clothe, arm and equip as many of such extra number as they judge can be safely spared. And the officers and men so clothed, armed and equipped, shall march to the place appointed, and within the time agreed on by the united states in congress assembled.
The united states in congress assembled shall never engage in a war, nor grant letters of marque and reprisal in time of peace, nor enter into any treaties or alliances, nor coin money, nor regulate the value thereof, nor ascertain the sums and expences necessary for the defence and welfare of the united states, or any of them, nor emit bills, nor borrow money on the credit of the united states, nor appropriate money, nor agree upon the number of vessels of war, to be built or purchased, or the number of land or sea forces to be raised, nor appoint a commander in chief of the army or navy, unless nine states assent to the same: nor shall a question on any other point, except for adjourning from day to day be determined, unless by the votes of a majority of the united states in congress assembled.
The congress of the united states shall have power to adjourn to any time within the year, and to any place within the united states, so that no period of adjournment be for a longer duration than the space of six Months, and shall publish the Journal of their proceedings monthly, except such parts thereof relating to treaties, alliances or military operations as in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the delegates of each state on any question shall be entered on the Journal, when it is desired by any delegate; and the delegates of a state, or any of them, at his or their request shall be furnished with a transcript of the said Journal, except such parts as are above excepted, to lay before the legislatures of the several states.
[ART. X.] The committee of the states, or any nine of them, shall be authorised to execute, in the recess of congress, such of the powers of congress as the united states in congress assembled, by the consent of nine states, shall from time to time think expedient to vest them with; provided that no power be delegated to the said committee, for the exercise of which, by the articles of confederation, the voice of nine states in the congress of the united states assembled is requisite.
[ART. XI.] Canada acceding to this confederation, and joining in the measures of the united states, shall be admitted into, and entitled to all the advantages of this union: but no other colony shall be admitted into the same, unless such admission be agreed to by nine states.
[ART. XII.] All bills of credit emitted, monies borrowed and debts contracted by, or under the authority of congress, before the assembling of the united states, in pursuance of the present confederation, shall be deemed and considered as a charge against the united states, for payment and satisfaction whereof the said united states, and the public faith are hereby solemnly pledged.
[ART. XIII.] Every state shall abide by the determinations of the united states in congress assembled, on all questions which by this confederation are submitted to them. And the Articles of this confederation shall be inviolably observed by every state, and the union shall be perpetual; nor shall any alteration at any time hereafter be made in any of them; unless such alteration be agreed to in a congress of the united states, and be afterwards confirmed by the legislatures of every state.
And whereas it hath pleased the Great Governor of the World to incline the hearts of the legislatures we respectively represent in congress, to approve of, and to authorize us to ratify the said articles of confederation and perpetual union. Know ye that we the undersigned delegates, by virtue of the power and authority to us given for that purpose, do by these presents, in the name and in behalf of our respective constituents, fully and entirely ratify and confirm each and every of the said articles of

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. Contributing factors to the establishment of a loose confederation include the desire not to have a powerful central authority like the government from which the colonists had just gained their independence; the need to provide a central authority without undermining the authority and sovereignty of each State; and the necessity of meeting the demands of the ideological differences of each State.
2. Any three of the following is acceptable: each State no matter its size had only one vote; Congress could not levy or collect taxes; Congress was not able to regulate foreign or interstate commerce; there was no executive in place to enforce the acts of Congress; there was no national court system; amending the Articles of Confederation could occur only with the consent of all States; a 9/1 3 majority was required to pass laws; and the Articles were only "firm league of friendship."
3. Accept any answers that are supported with solid reasoning. Sample answer: The subservient nature of Congress to the States seems to be the greatest flaw in the Articles of Confederation. In order for the 13 colonies to work together as a nation, instead of 13 individual nations, there needed to be a central authority that was charged with the responsibility of looking out for the country as a whole without deference to the particular needs of a given State. A central government would have the authority to create and implement national laws, levy taxes to pay for government and governmental programs, and provide for the defense of the nation. Without a powerful central government, the confederation would eventually become weakened by in-fighting and dissent so that nothing would be accomplished and the "united states" would ultimately divide and become individual nations. the matters and things therein contained: And we do further solemnly plight and engage the faith of our respective constituents, that they shall abide by the determinations of the united states in congress assembled, on all questions, which by the said confederation are submitted to them. And that the articles thereof shall be inviolably observed by the states we respectively represent, and that the union shall be perpetual. In Witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands in Congress. Done at Philadelphia in the state of Pennsylvania the ninth Day of July in the Year of our Lord one Thousand seven Hundred and Seventy-eight, and in the third year of the independence of America.

\section*{osiah Bartlett} John Wentworth Junr August 8th 1778
On The Part & Behalf Of
The State Of New Hampshire
John Hancock
Samuel Adams
Elbridge Gerry
Francis Dana
\(\boldsymbol{\infty}\) James Lovell
\(\underset{\boldsymbol{Z}}{\boldsymbol{z}} \quad\) Samuel Holten
On The Part And Behalf Of
The State Of Massachusetts Bay
William Ellery
Henry Marchant
John Collins
On The Part And Behalf Of The State Of Rhode Island And Providence Plantations

Roger Sherman
Samuel Huntington
Oliver Wolcott
Titus Hosmer
Andrew Adams
On The Part And Behalf Of
The State Of Connecticut
Jas Duane
Fras Lewis
Wm Duer.
Gouv Morris
On The Part And Behalf Of
The State Of New York
Jno Witherspoon
Nathl Scudder
On The Part And In Behalf Of The State Of New Jersey.
Novr 26, 1778.-

Robt Morris Daniel Roberdeau Jona Bayard Smith. William Clingan Joseph Reed 22D JULY 1778
On The Part And Behalf Of The State Of Pennsylvania

Tho Mckean
Feby 121779 John Dickinson
MAY 5 TH 1779
Nicholas Van Dyke,
On The Part & Behalf Of The State Of Delaware
John Hanson
March 11781
Daniel Carroll Do
On The Part And Behalf Of The State Of Maryland
Richard Henry Lee
John Banister
Thomas Adams
Jno Harvie
Francis Lightfoot Lee
On The Part And Behalf Of
The State Of Virginia

John Penn
JULY 21 ST 1778
Corns Harnett
Jno Williams
On The Part And Behalf Of The State Of No Carolina
Henry Laurens
William Henry Drayton
Jno Mathews
Richd Hutson
Thos Heyward Junr
On The Part & Behalf Of
The State Of South Carolina
Jno Walton
24TH JULY 1778
Edwd Telfair.
Edwd Langworthy
On The Part And Behalf Of
The State Of Georgia

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on these pages to answer the following questions.
1. What factors explain why the first government of the United States was a loose confederation of individual States?
2. List three reasons why the Articles of Confederation failed to establish a lasting government.
3. What do you think was the greatest flaw in the Articles? Why?

\section*{The Federalist No. 10}

One of the 29 essays believed to have been written by James Madison, the tenth of The Federalist papers presents Madison's observations on dealing with the "mischiefs of faction" and the advantages of a republican (representative) form of government over that of a pure democracy. This essay was first published on November 23, 1787.

A mong the numerous advantages promised by a wellconstructed Union, none deserves to be more accurately developed than its tendency to break and control the violence of faction. The friend of popular governments never finds himself so much alarmed for their character and fate as when he contemplates their propensity to this dangerous vice. He will not fail, therefore, to set a due value on any plan which, without violating the principles to which he is attached, provides a proper cure for it. The instability, injustice, and confusion introduced into the public councils have, in truth, been the mortal diseases under which popular governments have everywhere perished; as they continue to be the favorite and fruitful topics from which the adversaries to liberty derive their most specious declamations.
The valuable improvements made by the American constitutions on the popular models, both ancient and modern, cannot certainly be too much admired; but it would be an unwarrantable partiality to contend that they have as effectually obviated the danger on this side, as was wished and expected. Complaints are everywhere heard from our most considerate and virtuous citizens, equally the friends of public and private faith, and of public and personal liberty, that our governments are too unstable, that the public good is disregarded in the conflicts of rival parties, and that measures are too often decided, not according to the rules of justice and the rights of the minor party, but by the superior force of an interested and overbearing majority. However anxiously we may wish that these complaints had no foundation, the evidence of known facts will not permit us to deny that they are in some degree true.
It will be found, indeed, on a candid review of our situation, that some of the distresses under which we labor have been erroneously charged on the operation of our governments; but it will be found, at the same time, that other causes will not alone account for many of our heaviest misfortunes; and, particularly, for that prevailing and increasing distrust of public engagements, and alarm for private rights, which are echoed from one end of the continent to the other. These must be chiefly, if not wholly, effects of the unsteadiness and injustice with which a factious spirit has tainted our public administrations.
By a faction, I understand a number of citizens, whether amounting to a majority or minority of the whole, who are united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, adversed to the rights of other citizens, or to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community. There are two methods of curing the mischiefs of faction: the one, by removing its causes; the other, by controlling its effects.
There are again two methods of removing the causes of faction: the one, by destroying the liberty which is essential to its existence; the other, by giving to every citizen the same opinions, the same passions, and the same interests.
It could never be more truly said than of the first remedy that it was worse than the disease. Liberty is to faction what air is to fire, an ailment without which it instantly expires. But it could not be less folly to abolish liberty, which is essential to political life, because it nourishes faction, than it would be to wish the annihilation of air,

Madison warned of "factions" leading to violence which is essential to animal life, because it imparts to fire its destructive agency.
The second expedient is as impracticable as the first would be unwise. As long as the reason of man continues fallible, and he is at liberty to exercise it, different opinions will be formed. As long as the connection subsists between his reason and his self-love, his opinions and his passions will have a reciprocal influence on each other; and the former will be objects to which the latter will attach themselves. The diversity in the faculties of men, from which the rights of property originate, is not less an insuperable obstacle to a uniformity of interests. The protection of these faculties is the first object of government. From the protection of different and unequal faculties of acquiring property, the possession of different degrees and kinds of property immediately results; and from the influence of these on the sentiments and views of the respective proprietors ensues a division of the society into different interests and parties.
The latent causes of faction are thus sown in the nature of man; and we see them everywhere brought into different degrees of activity, according to the different circumstances of civil society. A zeal for different opinions concerning religion, concerning government, and many other points, as well of speculation as of practice; an attachment of different leaders ambitiously contending for preeminence and power; or to persons of other descriptions whose fortunes have been interesting to the human passions, have, in turn, divided mankind into parties, inflamed them with mutual animosity, and rendered them much more disposed to vex and oppress each other than to cooperate for their common good. So strong is this propensity of mankind to fall into mutual animosities that, where no substantial occasion presents itself, the most frivolous and fanciful distinctions have been sufficient to kindle their unfriendly passions and excite their most violent conflicts. But the most common and durable source of factions has been the various and unequal distribution of property.
Those who hold and those who are without property have ever formed distinct interests in society. Those who are creditors and those who are debtors fall under a like discrimination. A landed interest, a manufacturing interest, a mercantile interest, a moneyed interest, with many lesser interests, grow up of necessity in civilized nations and divide them into different classes, actuated by different sentiments and views. The regulation of these various and interfering interests forms the principal task of modern legislation and involves the spirit of party and faction in the necessary and ordinary operations of the government. No man is allowed to be a judge in his own cause, because his interest would certainly bias his judgment and, not improbably, corrupt his integrity. With equal, nay, with greater reason, a body of men are unfit to be both judges and parties at the same time; yet what are many of the most important acts of legislation but so many judicial determinations, not indeed concerning the rights of single persons, but concerning the rights of large bodies of citizens? And what are the different classes of legislators but advocates and parties to the causes which they determine? Is a law proposed concerning private debts? It is a question to which the creditors are parties on one side and the debtors on the other. Justice ought to hold the balance between them. Yet the parties are, and must be, themselves the judges; and the most numerous party or, in other words, the most powerful faction must be expected to prevail.
Shall domestic manufactures be encouraged, and in what degree, by restrictions on foreign manufactures? [These] are questions which would be differently decided by the landed and the manufacturing classes, and probably by neither with a sole regard to justice and the public good. The apportionment of taxes on the various descriptions of property is an act which seems to require the most exact impartiality; yet there is, perhaps, no legislative act in which greater opportunity and temptation are given to a predominant party to trample on the rules of justice. Every shilling with which they overburden the inferior number is a shilling saved to their own pockets. It is in vain to say that enlightened statesmen will be able to adjust these clashing interests and render them all subservient to the public good. Enlightened statesmen will not always be at the helm. Nor, in many cases, can such an adjustment be made at all without taking into view indirect and remote considerations, which will rarely prevail over the immediate interest which one party may find in disregarding the rights of another or the good of the whole. The inference to which we are brought is that the causes of faction cannot be removed and that relief is only to be sought in the means of controlling its effects.
If a faction consists of less than a majority, relief is supplied by the republican principle, which enables the majority to defeat its sinister views by regular vote. It may clog the administration, it may convulse the society; but it will be unable to execute and mask its violence under the forms of the Constitution. When a majority is included in a faction, the form of popular government, on the other hand, enables it to sacrifice to its ruling passion or interest both the public good and the rights of other citizens. To secure the public good and private rights against the danger of such a faction, and at the same time to preserve the spirit and the form of popular government, is then the great object to which our inquiries are directed. Let me add that it is the great desideratum by which this form of government can be rescued from the opprobrium under which it has so long labored and be recommended to the esteem and adoption of mankind. By what means is this object attainable? Evidently by one of two only. Either the existence of the same passion or interest in a majority at the same time must be prevented, or the majority, having such coexistent passion or interest, must be rendered, by their number and local situation, unable to concert and carry into effect schemes of oppression. If the impulse and the opportunity be suffered to coincide, we well know that neither moral nor religious motives can be relied on as an adequate control. They are not found to be such on the injustice and violence of individuals and lose their efficacy in proportion to the number combined together, that is, in proportion as their efficacy becomes needful.
From this view of the subject it may be concluded that a pure democracy, by which I mean a society consist ing of a small number of citizens who assemble and administer the government in person, can admit of no cure for the mischiefs of faction. A common passion or interest will, in almost every case, be felt by a majority of the whole; a communication and concert result from the form of government itself, and there is nothing to check the inducements to sacrifice the weaker party or an obnoxious individual. Hence it is that such democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention; have ever been found incompatible with personal security or the rights of property; and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths. Theoretic politicians, who have patronized this species of government, have erroneously supposed that by reducing mankind to a perfect equality in their political rights, they would, at the same time, be perfectly equalized and assimilated in their possessions, their opinions, and their passions
A republic, by which I mean a government in which the scheme of representation takes place, opens a different prospect and promises the cure for which we are seeking. Let us examine the points in which it varies from pure democracy, and we shall comprehend both the nature of the cure and the efficacy which it must derive from the Union. The two great points of difference between a democracy and a republic are: first, the delegation of the government, in the latter, to a small number of citizens elected by the rest; secondly, the greater number of citizens, and greater sphere of country, over which the latter may be extended. The effect of the first difference is, on the one hand, to refine and enlarge the public views by passing them through the medium of a chosen body of citizens, whose wisdom may best discern the true interest of their country, and whose patriotism and love of justice will be least likely to sacrifice it to temporary or partial considerations. Under such a regulation, it may well happen that the public voice, pronounced by the representatives of the people, will be more consonant to the public good than if pronounced by the people themselves, convened for the purpose. On the other hand, the effect may be inverted. Men of factious tempers, of local prejudices, or of sinister designs may, by intrigue, by corruption, or by other means, first obtain the suffrages, and then betray the interests of the people. The question resulting is, whether small or extensive republics are more favorable to the election of proper guardians of the public weal; and it is clearly decided in favor of the latter by two obvious considerations:

In the first place, it is to be remarked that, however small the republic may be, the representatives must be raised to a certain number, in order to guard against the cabals of a few; and that, however large it may be, they must be limited to a certain number, in order to guard against the confusion of a multitude. Hence, the number of representatives in the two cases not being in proportion to that of the two constituents, and being proportionally greater in the small republic, it follows that, if the proportion of fit characters be not less in the large than in the small republic, the former will present a greater option, and consequently a greater probability of a fit choice.
In the next place, as each representative will be chosen by a greater number of citizens in the large than in the small republic, it will be more difficult for unworthy candidates to practice with success the vicious arts by which elections are too often carried; and the suffrages of the people being more free, will be more likely to center in men who possess the most attractive merit and the most diffusive and established character.
It must be confessed that in this, as in most other cases, there is a mean, on both sides of which inconveniences will be found to lie. By enlarging too much the number of electors, you render the representative too little acquainted with all their local circumstances and lesser interests; as by reducing it too much, you render him unduly attached to these and too little fit to comprehend and pursue great and national objects. The federal Constitution forms a happy combination in this respect. the great and aggregate interests being referred to the national, the local and particular to the state legislatures. The other point of difference is the greater number of citizens and extent of territory which may be brought within the compass of republican than of democratic government; and it is this circumstance principally which renders factious combinations less to be dreaded in the former than in the latter. The smaller the society, the fewer probably will be the distinct parties and interests composing it; the fewer the distinct parties and interests, the more frequently will a majority be found of the same party; and the smaller the number of individuals composing a majority, and the smaller the compass within which they are placed, the more easily will they concert and execute their plans of oppression. Extend the sphere and you take in a greater variety of parties and interests; you make it less probable that a majority of the whole will have a common motive to invade the rights of other citizens; or if such a common motive exists, it will be more difficult for all who feel it to discover their own strength and to act in unison with each other. Besides other impediments, it may be remarked that, where there is a consciousness of unjust or dishonorable purposes, communication is always checked by distrust in proportion to the number whose concurrence is necessary.
Hence, it clearly appears that the same advantage which a republic has over a democracy, in controlling the effects of factions, is enjoyed by a large over a small republic-is

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. The number of factions, or groups, was causing instability, in justice, and confusion.
2. Madison supports a republican form of government over a pure democracy because in a pure democracy, "measures are too often decided, not according to the rules of justice and the rights of the minor party, but by the superior force of an interested and overbearing majority. " In other words, factions and individuals will tyrannize minorities.
3. Sample answer: Yes, because when there are too many groups with differing opinions, it is difficult to arrive at an equitable consensus. In addition, majority rule is inherently unrepresentative if one party is able to outnumber and oppress the rest.
enjoyed by the Union over the States composing it. Does the advantage consist in the substitution of representatives whose enlightened views and virtuous sentiments render them superior to local prejudices and to schemes of injustice? It will not be denied that the representation of the Union will be most likely to possess these requisite endowments. Does it consist in the greater security afforded by a greater variety of parties, against the event of any one party being able to outnumber and oppress the rest? In an equal degree does the increased variety of parties comprised within the Union increase this security? Does it, in fine, consist in the greater obstacles opposed to the concert and accomplishment of the secret wishes of an unjust and interested majority? Here, again, the extent of the Union gives it the most palpable advantage. The influence of factious leaders may kindle a flame within their particular States but will be unable to spread a general conflagration through the other States.... A rage for paper money, for an abolition of debts, for an equal division of property, or for any other improper or wicked project will be less apt to pervade the whole body of the Union than a particular member of it; in the same proportion as such a malady is more likely to taint a particular county or district than an entire State. In the extent, and proper structure of the Union, therefore, we behold a republican remedy for the diseases most incident to republican government. And according to the degree of pleasure and pride we feel in being republicans, ought to be our zeal in cherishing the spirit and supporting the character of Federalists.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on these pages to answer the following questions.
1. What does Madison mean by "the mischief of faction"?
2. Why does Madison support a republican form of government over a pure democracy?
3. Do you agree with Madison's point of view? Explain your answer.

\section*{The Federalist No. 51}

In the passage below, first published on February 8, 1788, Madison discusses the need for a system of checks and balances to guard against "a gradual concentration of the same powers [of the new government] in the same department."

T o what expedient, then, shall we finally resort, for maintaining in practice the necessary partition of power among the several departments as laid down in the Constitution? The only answer that can be given is that as all these exterior provisions are found to be inadequate the defect must be supplied, by so contriving the interior structure of the government as that its several constituent parts may, by their mutual relations, be the means of keeping each other in their proper places. Without presuming to undertake a full development of this important idea, I will hazard a few general observations which may perhaps place it in a clearer light, and enable us to form a more correct judgment of the principles and structure of the government planned by the convention.
In order to lay a due foundation for that separate and distinct exercise of the different powers of government, which to a certain extent is admitted on all hands to be essential to the preservation of liberty, it is evident that each department should have a will of its own; and consequently should be so constituted that the members of each should have as little agency as possible in the appointment of the members of the others. Were this principle rigorously adhered to, it would require that all the appointments for the supreme executive, legislative, and judiciary magistracies should be drawn from the same fountain of authority, the people, through channels having no communication whatever with one another. Perhaps such a plan of constructing the several departments would be less difficult in practice than it may in contemplation appear. Some difficulties, however, and some additional expense would attend the execution of

it. Some deviations, therefore, from the principle must be admitted. In the constitution of the judiciary department in particular, it might be inexpedient to insist rigorously on the principle; first, because peculiar qualifications being essential in the members, the primary consideration ought to be to select that mode of choice which best secures these qualifications; secondly, because the permanent tenure by which the appointments are held in that department must soon destroy all sense of dependence on the authority conferring them.
It is equally evident that the members of each department should be as little dependent as possible on those of the others for the emoluments annexed to their offices. Were the executive magistrate, or the judges, not independent of the legislature in this particular, their independence in every other would be merely nominal.
But the great security against a gradual concentration of the several powers in the same department consists in giving to those who administer each department the necessary constitutional means and personal motives to resist encroachments of the others. The provision for defense must in this, as in all other cases, be made commensurate to the danger of attack. Ambition must be made to counteract ambition. The interest of the man must be connected with the constitutional rights of the place. It may be a reflection on human nature that such devices should be necessary to control the abuses of government. But what is government itself but the greatest of all reflections on human nature? If men were angels, no government would be necessary. If angels were to govern men, neither external nor internal controls on government would be necessary. In framing a government which is to be administered by men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: You must first enable the government to control the governed; and in the next place, oblige it to control itself. A dependence on the people is, no doubt, the primary control on the government; but experience has taught mankind the necessity of auxiliary precautions.
This policy of supplying, by opposite and rival interests, the defect of better motives might be traced through the whole system of human affairs, private as well as public. We see it particularly displayed in all the subordinate distributions of power; where the constant aim is to divide and arrange the several offices in such a manner as that each may be a check on the other-that the private interest of every individual may be a sentinel over the public rights. These inventions of prudence cannot be less requisite in the distribution of the supreme powers of the State. But it is not possible to give to each department an equal power of self-defense. In republican government, the legislative authority necessarily predominates. The remedy for this inconveniency is to divide the legislature into different branches; and to render them, by different modes of election, and different principles of action, as little connected with each other as the nature of their common functions and their common dependence on the society will admit. It may even be necessary to guard against dangerous encroachments by still further precautions. As the weight of the legislative authority requires that it should be thus divided, the weakness of the executive may require, on the other hand, that it should be fortified. An absolute negative on the legislature appears, at first view, to be the natural defense with which the executive magistrate should be armed. But perhaps it would be neither alto gether safe nor alone sufficient. On ordinary occasions it might not be exerted with the requisite firmness, and on extraordinary occasions it might be perfidiously abused. May not this defect of an absolute negative be supplied by some qualified connection between this weaker department and the weaker branch of the stronger department, by which the latter may be led to support the constitutional rights of the former, without being too much detached from the rights of its own department?
If the principles on which these observations are founded be just, as I persuade myself they are, and they be applied as a criterion to the several State constitutions, and to the federal Constitution, it will be found that if the latter does not perfectly correspond with them, the former are infinitely less able to bear such a test.
There are, moreover, two considerations particularly applicable to the federal system of America, which place that system in a very interesting point of view.
First. In a single republic, all the power surrendered by the people is submitted to the administration of a single government; and the usurpations are guarded against by a division of the government into distinct and separate departments. In the compound republic of America, the power surrendered by the people is first divided between two distinct governments, and then the portion allotted to each subdivided among distinct and separate departments. Hence a double security arises to the rights of the people. The different governments will control each other, at the same time that each will be controlled by itself.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. through a system of checks and balances
2. The government will be divided into different branches that will be independent of one another.
3. "Double security" refers to first, the power of the people being divided between two distinct governments (State and federal), and second, subdividing that power among distinct and separate departments.

Second. It is of great importance in a republic not only to guard the society against the oppression of its rulers, but to guard one part of the society against the injustice of the other part. Different interests necessarily exist in different classes of citizens. If a majority be united by a common interest, the rights of the minority will be insecure. There are but two methods of providing against this evil: The one by creating a will in the community independent of the majority-that is, of the society itself; the other, by comprehending in the society so many separate descriptions of citizens as will render an unjust combination of a majority of the whole very improbable, if not impracticable. The first method prevails in all governments possessing an hereditary or self appointed authority. This, at best, is but a precarious security; because a power independent of the society may as well espouse the unjust views of the major as the rightful interests of the minor party, and may possibly be turned against both parties. The second method will be exemplified in the federal republic of the United States. Whilst all authority in it will be derived from and dependent on the society, the society itself will be broken into so many parts, interests, and classes of citizens, that the rights of individuals, or of the minority, will be in little danger from interested combinations of the majority. In a free government the security for civil rights must be the same as that for religious rights. It consists in the one case in the multiplicity of interests, and in the other in the multiplicity of sects. The degree of security in both cases will depend on the number of interests and sects; and this may be presumed to depend on the extent of country and number of people comprehended under the same government. This view of the subject must particularly recommend a proper federal system to all the sincere and considerate friends of republican government, since it shows that in exact proportion as the territory of the Union may be formed into more circumscribed Confederacies, or States, oppressive combinations of a majority will be facilitated: the best security, under the republican forms, for the rights of every class of citizens, will be diminished; and consequently, the stability and independence of some member of the government, the only other security, must be proportionally increased. Justice is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been and ever will be pursued until it be obtained, or until liberty be lost in the pursuit. In a society under the forms of which the stronger faction can readily unite and oppress the weaker, anarchy may as truly be said to reign as in a state of nature, where the weaker individual is not secured against the violence of the stronger: And as, in the latter state, even the stronger individuals are prompted by the uncertainty of their condition to submit to a government which may protect the weak as well as themselves. So, in the former state, will the more powerful factions or parties be gradually induced, by a like motive, to wish for a government which will protect all parties, the weaker as well as the more powerful. It can be little doubted that if the State of Rhode Island was separated from the Confederacy and left to itself, the insecurity of rights under the popular form of government within such narrow limits would be displayed by such reiterated oppressions of factious majorities that some power altogether independent of the people would soon be called for by the voice of the very factions whose misrule had proved the necessity of it. In the extended republic of the United States, and among the great variety of interests, parties, and sects which it embraces, a coalition of a majority of the whole society could seldom take place on any other principles than those of justice and the general good; whilst there being thus less danger to a minor from the will of the major party, there must be less pretext, also, to provide for the security of the former, by introducing into the government a will not dependent on the latter; or, in other words, a will independent of the society itself. It is no less certain that it is important, notwithstanding the contrary opinions which have been entertained, that the larger the society, provided it lie within a practicable sphere, the more duly capable it will be of self-government. And happily for the republican cause, the practicable sphere may be carried to a very great extent by a judicious modification and mixture of the fderal principle.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on these pages to answer the following questions.
1. How will the new government guard against placing too much power in the hands of one individual or government body?
2. How will checks and balances be achieved in the new government?
3. What is the "double security" that Madison refers to in this passage?

\section*{The Federalist No. 78}

The Federalist papers were the brainchild of Alexander Hamilton, who conceived them and recruited James Madison and John Jay to the project. Hamilton is usually credited as the author of 51 of the 85 essays in the collection. Here, he discusses the national judiciary to be established by Article III in the proposed Constitution. He emphasizes the vital need for an independent judiciary and its role in the interpretation of laws and the determination of their constitutionality. First published April 11, 1788

We proceed now to an examination of the judiciary department of the proposed government. In unfolding the defects of the existing Confederation, the utility and necessity of a federal judicature have been clearly pointed out. It is the less necessary to recapitulate the considerations there urged as the propriety of the institution in the abstract is not disputed; the only questions which have been raised being relative to the manner of constituting it, and to its extent. To these points, therefore, our observations shall be confined.
The manner of constituting it seems to embrace these several objects: 1 st. The mode of appointing the judges. 2nd. The tenure by which they are to hold their places. 3rd. The partition of the judiciary authority between different courts and their relations to each other
First. As to the mode of appointing the judges: this is the same with that of appointing the officers of the Union in general and has been so fully discussed in the two last numbers that nothing can be said here which would not be useless repetition.
Second. As to the tenure by which the judges are to hold their places: this chiefly concerns their duration in office, the provisions for their support, the precautions for their responsibility
According to the plan of the convention, all judges who may be appointed by the United States are to hold their offices during good behavior; which is conformable to the most approved of the State constitutions, and among the rest, to that of this State. Its propriety having been drawn into question by the adversaries of that plan is no light symptom of the rage for objection which disorders their imaginations and judgments. The standard of good behavior for the continuance in office of the judicial magistracy is certainly one of the most valuable of the modern improvements in the practice of government. In a monarchy it is an excellent barrier to the despotism of the prince; in a republic it is a no less excellent barrier to the encroachments and oppressions of the representative body. And it is the best expedient which can be devised in any government to secure a steady, upright, and impartial administration of the laws.

Whoever attentively considers the different departments of power must perceive that, in a government in which they are separated from each other, the judiciary from the nature of its functions, will always be the least dangerous to the political rights of the Constitution; because it will be least in a capacity to annoy or injure them. The executive not only dispenses the honors but holds the sword of the community. The legislature not only commands the purse but prescribes the rules by which the duties and rights of every citizen are to be regulated. The judiciary, on the contrary, has no influence over either the sword or the purse; no direction either of the strength or of the wealth of the society, and can take no active resolution whatever.
This simple view of the matter suggests several important consequences. It proves incontestably that the judiciary is beyond comparison the weakest of the three departments of power; that it can never attack with success either of the other two; and that all possible care is requisite to enable it to defend itself against their attacks. It equally proves that though individual oppression may now and then proceed from the courts of justice, the general liberty of the people can never be endangered from that quarter; I mean so long as the judiciary remains truly distinct from both the legislature and the executive. For I agree that "there is no liberty if the power of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers." And it proves, in the last place, that as liberty can have nothing to fear from the judiciary alone, but would have everything to fear from its union with either of the other departments; that as all the effects of such a union must ensue from a dependence of the former on the latter, notwithstanding a nominal and apparent separation; that as, from the natural feebleness of the judiciary, it is in continual jeopardy of being overpowered, awed, or influenced by its coordinate branches; and that as nothing can contribute so much to its firmness and independence as permanency in office, this quality may therefore be justly regarded as an indispensable ingredient in its constitution, and, in a great measure, as the citadel of the public justice and the public security.

The complete independence of the courts of justice is peculiarly essential in a limited Constitution. By a limited Constitution, I understand one which contains certain specified exceptions to the legislative authority; such, for instance, as that it shall pass no bills of attainder, no ex post facto laws, and the like. Limitations of this kind can be preserved in practice no other way than through the medium of courts of justice, whose duty it must be to declare all acts contrary to the manifest tenor of the Constitution void. Without this, all the reservations of particular rights or privileges would amount to nothing.
Some perplexity respecting the rights of the courts to pronounce legislative acts void, because contrary to the Constitution, has arisen from an imagination that the doctrine would imply a superiority of the judiciary to the legislative power. It is urged that the authority which can declare the acts of another void must necessarily be superior to the one whose acts may be declared void. As this doctrine is of great importance in all the American constitutions, a brief discussion of the grounds on which it rests cannot be unacceptable.
There is no position which depends on clearer principles than that every act of a delegated authority, contrary to the tenor of the commission under which it is exercised, is void. No legislative act, therefore, contrary to the Constitution, can be valid. To deny this would be to affirm that the deputy is greater than his principal; that the servant is above his master; that the representatives of the people are superior to the people themselves; that men acting by virtue of powers may do not only what their powers do not authorize, but what they forbid.
If it be said that the legislative body are themselves the constitutional judges of their own powers and that the construction they put upon them is conclusive upon the other departments, it may be answered that this cannot be the natural presumption where it is not to be collected from any particular provisions in the Constitution. It is not otherwise to be supposed that the Constitution could intend to enable the representatives of the people to substitute their will to that of their constituents. It is far more rational to suppose that the courts were designed to be an intermediate body between the people and the legislature in order, among other things, to keep the latter within the limits assigned to their authority. The interpretation of the laws is the proper and peculiar province of the courts. A constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges as, a fundamental law. It therefore belongs to them to ascertain its meaning as well as the meaning of any particular act proceeding from the legislative body. If there should happen to be an irreconcilable variance between the two, that which has the superior obligation and validity ought, of course, to be preferred; or, in other words, the Constitution ought to be preferred to the statute, the intention of the people to the intention of their agents.
Nor does this conclusion by any means suppose a superiority of the judicial to the legislative power. It only supposes that the power of the people is superior to both, and that where the will of the legislature, declared in its statutes, stands in opposition to that of the people, declared in the Constitution, the judges ought to be governed by the latter rather than the former. They ought to regulate their decisions by the fundamental laws rather than by those which are not fundamental. This exercise of judicial discretion in determining between two contradictory laws is exemplified in a familiar instance. It not uncommonly happens that there are two statutes existing at one time, clashing in whole or in part with each other and neither of them containing any repealing clause or expression. In such a case, it is the province of the courts to liquidate and fix their meaning and operation. So far as they can, by any fair construction, be reconciled to each other, reason and law conspire to dictate that this should be done; where this is impracticable, it becomes a matter of necessity to give effect to one in exclusion of the other. The rule which has obtained in the courts for determining their relative validity is that the last in order of time shall be preferred to the first. But this is a mere rule of construction, not derived from any positive law but from the nature and reason of the thing. It is a rule not enjoined upon the courts by legislative provision but adopted by themselves, as consonant to truth and propriety, for the direction of their conduct as interpreters of the law. They thought it reasonable that between the interfering acts of an equal authority that which was the last indication of its will should have the preference.
But in regard to the interfering acts of a superior and subordinate authority of an original and derivative power, the nature and reason of the thing indicate the converse of that rule as proper to be followed. They teach us that the prior act of a superior ought to be preferred to the subsequent act of an inferior and subordinate authority; and that accordingly, whenever a particular statute contravenes the Constitution, it will be the duty of the judicial tribunals to adhere to the latter and disregard the former. It can be of no weight to say that the courts, on the pretense of a repugnancy, may substitute their own pleasure to the constitutional intentions of the legislature. This might as well happen in the case of two contradictory statutes; or it might as well happen in every adjudication upon any single statute. The courts must declare the sense of the law; and if they should be disposed to exercise will instead of judgment, the consequence would equally be the substitution of their pleasure to that of the legislative body. The observation, if it prove anything, would prove that there ought to be no judges distinct from that body.
If, then, the courts of justice are to be considered as the bulwarks of a limited Constitution against legislative encroachments, this consideration will afford a strong argument for the permanent tenure of judicial offices, since nothing will contribute so much as this to that independent spirit in the judges which must be essential to the faithful performance of so arduous a duty.
This independence of the judges is equally requisite to guard the Constitution and the rights of individuals from the effects of those ill humors which the arts of designing men, or the influence of particular conjunctures, sometimes disseminate among the people themselves, and which, though they speedily give place to better information, and more deliberate reflection, have a tendency, in the meantime, to occasion dangerous innovations in the government, and serious oppressions of the minor party in the community. Though I trust the friends of the proposed Constitution will never concur with its enemies in questioning that fundamental principle of Republican government which admits the right of the people to alter or abolish the established Constitution whenever they find it inconsistent with their happiness; yet it is not to be inferred from this principle that the representatives of the people, whenever a momentary inclination happens to lay hold of a majority of their constituents incompatible with the provisions in the existing Constitution would, on that account, be justifiable in a violation of those provisions; or that the courts would be under a greater obligation to connive at infractions in this shape than when they had proceeded wholly from the cabals of the representative body. Until the people have, by some solemn and authoritative act, annulled or changed the established form, it is binding upon themselves collectively, as well as individually; and no presumption, or even knowledge of their sentiments, can warrant their representatives in a departure from it prior to such an act. But it is easy to see that it would require an uncommon portion of fortitude in the judges to do their duty as faithful guardians of the Constitution, where legislative invasions of it had been instigated by the major voice of the community.
But it is not with a view to infractions of the Constitution only that the independence of the judges may be an essential safeguard against the effects of occasional ill humors in the society. These sometimes extend no farther than to the injury of the private rights of particular classes of citizens, by unjust and partial laws. Here also the firmness of the judicial magistracy is of vast importance in mitigating the severity and confining the operation of such laws. It not only serves to moderate the immediate mischiefs of those which may have been passed but it operates as a check upon the legislative body in passing them; who, perceiving that obstacles to the success of iniquitous intention are to be expected from the scruples of the courts, are in a manner compelled, by the very motives of the injustice they mediate, to qualify their attempts. This is a circumstance calculated to have more influence upon the character of our governments than but few may be aware of. The benefits of the integrity and moderation of the judiciary have already been felt in more States than one; and though they may have displeased those whose sinister expectations they may have disappointed, they must have commanded the esteem and applause of all the virtuous and disinterested. Considerate men of every description ought to prize whatever will tend to beget or fortify that temper in the courts; as no man can be sure that he may not be tomorrow the victim of a spirit of injustice, by which he may be a gainer today. And every man must now feel that the inevitable tendency of such a spirit is to sap the foundations of public and private confidence and to introduce in its stead universal distrust and distress.
That inflexible and uniform adherence to the rights of the Constitution, and of individuals, which we perceive to be indispensable in the courts of justice, can certainly not be expected from judges who hold their offices by a temporary commission. Periodical appointments, however regulated, or by whomsoever made, would, in some way or other, be fatal to their necessary independence. If the power of making them was committed either to the executive or legislature there would be danger of an improper complaisance to the branch which possessed it; if to both, there would be an unwillingness to hazard the displeasure of either; if to the people, or to persons chosen by them for the special purpose, there would be too great a disposition to consult popularity to justify a reliance that nothing would be consulted but the Constitution and the laws. There is yet a further and a weighty reason for the permanency of the judicial offices which is deducible from the nature of the qualifications they require. It has been frequently remarked with great propriety that a voluminous code of laws is one of the inconveniences necessarily connected with the advantages of a free government. To avoid an arbitrary discretion in the courts, it is indispensable that they should be bound down by strict rules and precedents which serve to define and point out their duty in every particular case that comes before them; and it will readily be conceived from the variety of controversies which grow out of the folly and wickedness of mankind that the records of those precedents must unavoidably swell to a very considerable bulk and must demand long and laborious study to acquire a competent knowledge of them. Hence it is that there can be but few men in the society who will have suf-

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. According to Hamilton, the term of a judge should be the length of the judge's lifetime as long as he exhibits good behavior.
2. Judges are to be an intermediary between the people and the legislature, checking the legislature when it oversteps its bounds. They should remain independent of the other branches of government with regard to decision making, and should regard the Constitution as the nation's fundamental law, deferring to it when making decisions.
3. Sample answer: I believe Hamilton would be generally pleased with the judicial system as it exists today. Many of the fundamental principles he puts forth in The Federalist No. 78 are visible in our judiciary. Hamilton might frown on the election of judges and those who are seen as "activist. " However, he would probably approve of the idea that many judges are free of political constraints and that they still hold the Constitution as the fundamental law of the land.
ficient skill in the laws to qualify them for the stations of judges. And making the proper deductions for the ordinary depravity of human nature, the number must be still smaller of those who unite the requisite integrity with the requisite knowledge. These considerations apprise us that the government can have no great option between fit characters; and that a temporary duration in office which would naturally discourage such characters from quitting a lucrative line of practice to accept a seat on the bench would have a tendency to throw the administration of justice into hands less able and less well qualified to conduct it with utility and dignity. In the present circumstances of this country and in those in which it is likely to be for a long time to come, the disadvantages on this score would be greater than they may at first sight appear; but it must be confessed that they are far inferior to those which present themselves under the other aspects of the subject.
Upon the whole, there can be no room to doubt that the convention acted wisely in copying from the models of those constitutions which have established good behavior as the tenure of their judicial offices, in point of duration; and that so far from being blamable on this account, their plan would have been inexcusably defective if it had wanted this important feature of good government. The experience of Great Britain affords an illustrious comment on the excellence of the institution.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on these pages to answer the following questions.
1. According to Hamilton, how long should judges stay in office?
2. What does Hamilton say is the role of judges? 3. What might Hamilton say about the judicial system as it exists today?

\title{
The Emancipation Proclamation
}

President Abraham Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation on January 1,1863, at the beginning of the third year of the bloody Civil War. The proclamation declared "that all persons held as slaves" within the rebellious states "are, and henceforward shall be free." Although the Emancipation Proclamation applied to a limited geographical area, it fundamentally changed the nature of the war to a conflict focused on freedom for all.

\(\mathbf{W}^{2}\)hereas on the 22 d day of September, A.D. 1862, a proclamation was issued by the President of the United States, containing, among other things, the following, to wit:
"That on the 1 st day of January, A.D. 1863, all persons held as slaves within any State or designated part of a State the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States shall be then, thenceforward, and forever free; and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom.
"That the executive will on the 1 st day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof, respectively, shall then be in rebellion against the United States; and the fact that any State or the people thereof shall on that day be in good faith represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such States shall have participated shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State and the people thereof are not then in rebellion against the United States."
Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, by virtue of the power in me vested as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States in time of actual armed rebellion against the authority and government of the United States, and as a fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion, do, on this 1 st day of January, A.D. 1863, and in accordance with my purpose so to do, publicly proclaimed for the full period of one hundred days from the first day above mentioned, order and designate as the States and parts of States wherein the people thereof, respectively, are this day in rebellion against the United States the following, to wit:

Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana (except the parishes of St. Bernard, Plaquemines, Jefferson, St. John, St. Charles, St. James, Ascension, Assumption, Terrebonne, Lafourche, St. Mary, St. Martin, and Orleans, including the city of New Orleans), Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia (except the forty-eight counties designated as West Virginia, and also the counties of Berkeley, Accomac, Northhampton, Elizabeth City, York, Princess Anne, and Norfolk, including the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth), and which excepted parts are for the present left precisely as if this proclamation were not issued.
And by virtue of the power and for the purpose aforesaid, I do order and declare that all persons held as slaves within said designated States and parts of States are, and henceforward shall be, free; and that the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons.
And I hereby enjoin upon the people so declared to be free to abstain from all violence, unless in necessary self-defense; and I recommend to them that, in all cases when allowed, they labor faithfully for reasonable wages.

And I further declare and make known that such persons of suitable condition will be received into the armed service of the United States to garrison forts, positions, stations, and other places, and to man vessels of all sorts in said service. And upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the Constitution upon military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on these pages to answer the following questions.
1. Recall the eight roles and the powers of the President. Which role and which power allow Lincoln to proclaim freedom for slaves?
2. In addition to proclaiming an end to slavery, what other action does the Proclamation declare? Why is this action significant?
3. Why was the Proclamation important even though no slaves were freed immediately?

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. role: chief executive; power: ordinance power
2. In addition to ending slavery, the Proclamation declares that "military and naval authorities will recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons."
3. It changed the nature of the Civil War to a conflict focused on freedom for all, instead of a war about slavery.

\section*{Declaration of Sentiments}

Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott, two activists in the movement to abolish slavery, called together the first conference to address women's rights and issues in Seneca Falls, New York, in 1848. Using the Declaration of Independence as a model, the Declaration of Sentiments demanded that the rights of women be acknowledged and respected.

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one portion of the family of man to assume among the people of the earth a position different from that which they have hitherto occupied, but one to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes that impel them to such a course.
We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men and women are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. Whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of those who suffer from it to refuse allegiance to it, and to insist upon the institution of a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer. while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their duty to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of the women under this government, and such is now the necessity which constrains them to demand the equal station to which they are entitled. The history of mankind is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations on the part of man toward woman, having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over her. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world.
- He has never permitted her to exercise her inalienable right to the elective franchise.
- He has compelled her to submit to laws, in the formation of which she had no voice.
- He has withheld from her rights which are given to the most ignorant and degraded men-both natives and foreigners.
- Having deprived her of this first right of a citizen, the elective franchise, thereby leaving her without representation in the halls of legislation, he has oppressed her on all sides.
- He has made her, if married, in the eye of the law, civilly dead.
- He has taken from her all right in property, even to the wages she earns.
- He has made her, morally, an irresponsible being, as she can commit many crimes with impunity, provided they be done in the presence of her husband. In the covenant of marriage, she is compelled to promise obedience to her husband, he becoming, to all intents and purposes, her master-the law giving him power to deprive her of her liberty, and to administer chastisement.
- He has so framed the laws of divorce, as to what shall be the proper causes, and in case of separation, to whom the guardianship of the children shall be given, as to be wholly regardless of the happiness of women-the law, in all cases, going upon a false supposition of the supremacy of man, and giving all power into his hands.
- After depriving her of all rights as a married woman, if single, and the owner of property, he has taxed her to support a government which recognizes her only when her property can be made profitable to it.
- He has monopolized nearly all the profitable employments, and from those she is permitted to follow, she receives but a scanty remuneration.
- He closes against her all the avenues to wealth and distinction which he considers most honorable to himself. As a teacher of theology, medicine, or law, she is not known.
- He has denied her the facilities for obtaining a thorough education, all colleges being closed against her.
- He allows her in church, as well as state, but a subordinate position, claiming apostolic authority for her exclusion from the ministry, and, with some exceptions, from any public participation in the affairs of the church.

- He has created a false public sentiment by giving to the world a different code of morals for men and women, by which moral delinquencies which exclude women from society, are not only tolerated, but deemed of little account in man.
- He has usurped the prerogative of Jehovah himself, claiming it as his right to assign for her a sphere of action, when that belongs to her conscience and to her God.
- He has endeavored, in every way that he could, to destroy her confidence in her own powers, to lessen her self-respect, and to make her willing to lead a dependent and abject life.
Now, in view of this entire disfranchisement of one-half the people of this country, their social and religious degra-dation-in view of the unjust laws above mentioned, and because women do feel themselves aggrieved, oppressed, and fraudulently deprived of their most sacred rights, we insist that they have immediate admission to all the rights and privileges which belong to them as citizens of the United States.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on these pages to answer the following questions.
1. Why did Mott and Stanton base their Declaration on the Declaration of Independence? What additional goals does the Declaration of Sentiments include?
2. The Declaration of Sentiments attracted much controversy when it was first published? Why might this have been so?
3. Why is the Declaration of Sentiments an important document in the history of securing rights for all Americans?

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. Sample answer: Mott and Stanton based their declaration on the Declaration of Independence to show the omission of "women" alongside "men are created equal" in the Declaration of Independence. That document also lent their declaration weightiness and authority. Additional goals included a desire for an equal station in government, a voice in the formation of laws, and a thorough education. They wanted immediate admission to all the rights and privileges that belonged to them as citizens.
2. Sample answer: At the time, it was a radical idea to think of women having an equal place in society and enjoying the full rights of citizenship.
3. The Declaration of Sentiments demands equality regardless of gender, and the same could be said for other groups who have experienced discrimination.

\section*{Analyzing Documents}
1. The following rights are also reflected in the Bill of Rights: prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment, freedom of religion, freedom of opinion and expression, and freedom of peaceful assembly and association.
2. Additional rights that are not included in the U.S. Constitution include free choice of employment, the right to an adequate standard of living, and the right to education. Sample answer: These rights are most likely not spelled out in the Constitution because they are inherent to our democratic system of government.
3. Sample answer: The existence of this declaration would put pressure on oppressive regimes to provide basic liberties and freedoms.

\section*{UUniversal Declaration of Human Rights}

The General Assembly of the United Nations adopted this declaration on December 10, 1948. The document sets forth the basic liberties and freedoms to which all people are entitled.

Article 1 All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act toward one another in a spirit of brotherhood.
Article 2 Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.
Article 3 Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person.

Article 5 No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
Article 9 No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.
Article 13 Everyone has the right to freedom of movement. .
Article 18 Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. .
Article 19 Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression. .
Article 20 Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association. .
Article 23 Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favourable condi tions of work and to protection against unemployment. .
Article 25 Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services, and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age or other lack of livelihood in circumstanc es beyond his control.

Article 26 Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages. .

\section*{Analyzing Documents}

Use the passage on this page to answer the following questions.
1. Which of the above rights are reflected in the Bill of Rights in the U.S. Constitution?
2. What additional rights are included in these excerpts? Why do you think these rights are not spelled out in the U.S. Constitution?
3. In what ways might the existence of this declaration benefit people living under an oppressive regime?

\section*{Supreme Court Glossary}

\section*{Abrams v. United States (1919)}

Decision: The Court ruled 7-2 that Congress could make it illegal to criticize the United States government and to encourage others not to obey the laws. When the defendants were convicted of distributing pamphlets that opposed certain U.S. military policies during World War I and urging people not to participate in the war effort, they were sentenced to 20 years imprisonment. The Court upheld their convictions. In his dissent, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes argued that "the surreptitious publishing of a silly leaflet by an unknown man" did not create a clear and imminent danger to the United States and therefore should be protected by the First Amendment. The case was essentially overruled 50 years later in Brandenburg v. Ohio, which held that "mere advocacy" is constitutionally protected unless it is actually likely to produce imminent lawless action.

\section*{Agostini v. Felton (1997)}

Decision: The Court decided that it was appropriate to reconsider Aguilar v. Felton as subsequent cases had undermined several of the assumptions, for example that public employees placed at parochial schools would "inevitably inculcate religion," upon which the decision was based. The Court then found that New York City's Title I Program did not violate any of the criteria used "to evaluate whether government aid has the effect of advancing religion: it does not result in governmental indoctrination; define its recipients by reference to religion; or create an excessive entanglement." As a result, the Court concluded that "a federally funded program providing supplemental, remedial instruction to disadvantaged children on a neutral basis is not invalid under the Establishment Clause when such instruction is given on the premises of sectarian schools by government employees pursuant to a program containing safeguards" against excessive entanglement between government and religion.

\section*{Alden v. Maine (1999)}

Decision: In a 5-4 decision, the Court held that Congress does not have the power to force States to submit to being sued in their own courts without their consent. The structure of the Constitution and the Eleventh Amendment give the States "sovereign immunity" that allows the States to prevent people from suing them in their own courts, and Congress does not have the power to override this immunity.

\section*{American Insurance Association v. Garamendi (2003)}

Decision: California's Holocaust Victim Insurance Relief Act interferes with the President's conduct of the nation's foreign policy and is therefore unconstitutional. Although the executive agreements do not specifically prohibit State action, they do pre-empt (override) the State's authority to act on the same subject matter, even in the absence of any direct conflict.

\section*{Baker v. Carr (1962)}

Decision: Although in past decisions, the Court had called apportionment cases a "political thicket" and declined to intervene, in Baker, the Court held that it was within the scope of the judicial branch of government to rule on matters of legislative apportionment. The Court further ruled that Baker and other Tennessee citizens were entitled to a trial deciding whether their constitutionally guaranteed right to equal protection of the law (14th Amendment) had been denied. Baker opened the door to later cases on apportionment which led to the eventual reapportioning of nearly every State legislature according to population.

\section*{Board of Estimate of City of New York v. Morris (1989)}

Decision: The reapportionment requirement of "oneperson, one-vote" applies to the Board of Estimate. The Board has sufficient legislative functions that its composition must fairly represent city voters on an approximately equal basis. The fact that some members are elected citywide is one factor to be considered in evaluating the fairness of the electoral structure, but it is not determinative. The City's expressed interests-that the Board be effective and that it accommodate natural and political boundaries as well as local interests-does not justify the size of the deviation from the "one-person, one-vote" ideal. The City could structure the Board in other ways that would further these interests while minimizing the discrimination in voting power.

\section*{Bob Jones University v. United States (1983)}
(14th Amendment in conflict with 1st Amendment) Bob Jones University, a private school, denied admission to applicants in an interracial marriage or who "espouse" interracial marriage or dating. The Internal Revenue Service then denied tax exempt status to the school because of racial discrimination. The university appealed, claiming their policy was based on the Bible. The Court upheld the IRS ruling, stating that ". . . Government has a fundamental overriding interest in eradicating racial discrimination in education."

\section*{Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969)}

Decision: The Court ruled unanimously that advocacy is protected under the First Amendment "except where such advocacy is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action." Therefore a Ku Klux Klan leader could not be convicted under an Ohio statute that prohibited advocating violence. The opinion effectively overruled prior Supreme Court cases such as Whitney v. California and Abrams v. United States that had allowed criminal convictions merely for urging violence or other unlawful acts.

\section*{Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka (1954)}
(14th Amendment, Equal Protection Clause) Probably no twentieth century Supreme Court decision so deeply stirred and changed life in the United States as Brown. A 10 -year-old Topeka girl, Linda Brown, was not permitted to attend her neighborhood school because she was an African American. The Court heard arguments about whether segregation itself was a violation of the Equal Protection Clause and found that it was, commenting that "in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. . . . Segregation is a denial of the equal protection of the laws." The decision overturned Plessy v. Ferguson, 1896.

\section*{City of Boerne, Texas v. Flores (1997)}

Decision: A 6-3 majority ruled that the Religious Freedom Restoration Act was unconstitutional. The majority concluded that the Act was not a legitimate attempt by Congress to implement the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment but was really an attempt to change constitutional law as previously determined by the Court. The Act therefore violated separation of powers.

\section*{The Civil Rights Cases (1883)}
(14th Amendment, Equal Protection Clause) The Civil Rights Act of 1875 included punishments of businesses that practiced discrimination. The Court ruled on a number of cases involving the Acts in 1883, finding that the Constitution, "while prohibiting discrimination by governments, made no provisions . . . for acts of racial discrimination by private individuals." The decision limited the impact of the Equal Protection Clause, giving tacit approval for segregation in the private sector.

\section*{Cruzan v. Missouri (1990)}
(14th Amendment, Due Process Clause) After Nancy Beth Cruzan was left in a "persistent vegetative state" by a car accident, Missouri officials refused to comply with her parents' request that the hospital terminate life-support. The Court upheld the State policy under which officials refused to withdraw treatment, rejecting the argument that the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment gave the parents the right to refuse treatment on their daughter's behalf. Although individuals have the right to refuse medical treatment, "incompetent" persons are not able to exercise this right; without "clear and convincing" evidence that Cruzan desired the withdrawal of treatment, the State could legally act to preserve her life.

\section*{Dennis v. United States (1951)}
(1 st Amendment, freedom of speech) The Smith Act of 1940 made it a crime for any person to work for the violent overthrow of the United States in peacetime or war. Eleven Communist party leaders, including Dennis, had been convicted of violating the Smith Act, and they appealed. The Court upheld the Act.

\section*{District of Columbia v. Heller (2008)}

Decision: The Court ruled 5 to 4 that Washington, D.C.'s gun law was unconstitutional. The majority concluded that the Second Amendment "right of the people to keep and bear Arms" meant that individuals could have weapons for self-defense. An outright ban on gun ownership was therefore unconstitutional. In addition, since dismantled or disabled weapons would not be useful for self-defense, the part of the law requiring that all guns, including shotguns and rifles, be kept unloaded and either taken apart or disabled by a trigger lock was also unconstitutional. In dissent, Justice Breyer suggested a balancing test, under which gun control laws could be constitutional when they supported a compelling governmental interest in preventing crime.

\section*{Dred Scott v. Sandford (1857)}
(5th Amendment, individual rights) This decision upheld property rights over human rights by saying that Dred Scott, a slave, could not become a free man just because he had traveled in "free soil" States with his master. A badly divided nation was further fragmented by the decision. "Free soil" federal laws and the Missouri Compromise line of 1820 were held unconstitutional because they deprived a slave owner of the right to his "property" without just compensation. This narrow reading of the Constitution, a landmark case of the Court, was most clearly stated by Chief Justice Roger B. Taney, a States' rights advocate.

\section*{Engel v. Vitale (1962)}
(1 st Amendment, Establishment Clause) The State Board of Regents of New York required the recitation of a 22word nonsectarian prayer at the beginning of each school day. A group of parents filed suit against the required prayer, claiming it violated their 1st Amendment rights. The Court found New York's action to be unconstitutional, observing, "There can be no doubt that. . . religious beliefs [are] embodied in the Regent's prayer."

\section*{Edwards v. South Carolina (1963)}
(1st Amendment, freedom of speech and assembly) A group of mostly African American civil rights activists held a rally at the South Carolina State Capitol, protesting segregation. A hostile crowd gathered and the rally leaders were arrested and convicted for "breach of the peace." The Court overturned the convictions, saying, "The Fourteenth Amendment does not permit a State to make criminal the peaceful expression of unpopular views."

\section*{Escobedo v．Illinois（1964）}
（6th Amendment，right to counsel）In a case involving a murder confession by a person known to Chicago－area police who was not afforded counsel while under inter－ rogation，the Court extended the＂exclusionary rule＂to illegal confessions in State court proceedings．Carefully defining an＂Escobedo Rule，＂the Court said，＂where．．． the investigation is no longer a general inquiry ．．．but has begun to focus on a particular suspect．．．（and where）the suspect has been taken into custody．．．the suspect has re－ quested ．．．his lawyer，and the police have not ．．．warned him of his right to remain silent，the accused has been de－ nied ．．．counsel in violation of the Sixth Amendment．＂

\section*{Ex parte Milligan（1866）}
（Article II，executive powers）An Indiana man was arrest－ ed，treated as a prisoner of war，and imprisoned by a mili－ tary court during the Civil War under presidential order． He claimed that his rights to a fair trial were interfered with and that military courts had no authority outside of ＂conquered territory．＂He was released because，＂the Con－ stitution．．．is a law for rulers and people，equally in war and peace，and covers ．．．all ．．．men，at all times，and under all circumstances．＂The Court held that presidential powers to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in time of war did not extend to creating another court system run by the military．

\section*{Flast v．Cohen（1968）}

Decision：The Supreme Court concluded that the rule an－ nounced in Frothingham v．Mellon expressed a practical policy of judicial self－restraint rather than an absolute constitutional limitation on the power of federal courts to hear taxpayer suits．While mere status as a federal tax－ payer ordinarily will not give sufficient＂standing＂to allow a person to challenge the constitutionality of a federal law， there may be times when taxpayers are appropriate plain－ tiffs．Flast v ．Cohen，in which plaintiffs argued that the First Amendment specifically prohibited taxing them in order to support religious activities，was one in which their role as taxpayers was well suited to the challenge they sought to assert．The Court ruled that they had standing to sue， and allowed them to proceed with their case．

\section*{Furman v．Georgia（1972）}
（8th Amendment，capital punishment）Three different death penalty cases，including Furman，raised the ques－ tion of racial imbalances in the use of death sentences by State courts．Furman had been convicted and sentenced to death in Georgia．In deciding to overturn existing State death－penalty laws，the Court noted that there was an＂ap－ parent arbitrariness of the use of the sentence．．．．＂Many States rewrote their death－penalty statutes and these were generally upheld in Gregg v．Georgia， 1976.

\section*{Gibbons v．Ogden（1824）}
（Supremacy Clause）This decision involved a careful ex－ amination of the power of Congress to＂regulate inter－ state commerce．＂Aaron Ogden＇s exclusive New York ferry license gave him the right to operate steamboats to and from New York．He said that Thomas Gibbons＇s federal ＂coasting license＂did not include＂landing rights＂in New York City．The Court invalidated the New York licensing regulations，holding that federal regulations should take precedence under the Supremacy Clause．The decision strengthened the power of the United States to regulate any interstate business relationship．Federal regulation of the broadcasting industry，oil pipelines，and banking are all based on Gibbons．

\section*{Gideon v．Wainwright（1963）}
（6th Amendment，right to counsel）In 1961 a Florida court found Clarence Earl Gideon guilty of breaking and entering and sentenced him to five years in prison．Gideon appealed his case to the Supreme Court on the basis that he had been unconstitutionally denied counsel during his trial due to Florida＇s policy of only providing appointed counsel in capital cases．The Court granted Gideon a new trial，and he was found not guilty with the help of a court－ appointed attorney．The＂Gideon Rule＂upheld the 6th Amendment＇s guarantee of counsel of all poor persons facing a felony charge，a further incorporation of Bill of Rights guarantees into State constitutions．

\section*{Gitlow v．New York（1925）}
（1 st Amendment，freedom of speech）A New York social－ ist，Gitlow，was convicted under a State law on＂criminal anarchy＂for distributing copies of a＂left－wing manifes－ to．＂For the first time，the Court considered whether the 1 st Amendment applied to State laws．The case helped to establish what came to be known as the＂incorporation＂ doctrine，under which，it was argued，the provisions of the 1 st Amendment were＂incorporated＂by the 14th Amend－ ment，thus applying to State as well as federal laws．Al－ though New York law was not overruled in this case，the decision clearly indicated that the Supreme Court could make such a ruling．See also Powell v．Alabama， 1932.

\section*{Goss v．Lopez（1975）}
（14th Amendment，Due Process Clause）Ten Ohio students were suspended from their schools without hearings．The students challenged the suspensions，claiming that the ab－ sence of a preliminary hearing violated their 14th Amend－ ment right to due process．The Court agreed，holding that ＂having chosen to extend the right to an education．．Ohio may not withdraw that right on grounds of misconduct，ab－ sent fundamentally fair procedures to determine whether the misconduct has occurred，and must recognize a student＇s legitimate entitlement to a public education as a property interest that is protected by the Due Process Clause．＂

\section*{Gregg v. Georgia (1976)}
(8th Amendment, cruel and unusual punishment) A Georgia jury sentenced Troy Gregg to death after finding him guilty on two counts each of murder and armed robbery. Gregg appealed the sentence, claiming that it violated the "cruel and unusual punishment" clause of the 8th Amendment and citing Furman v. Georgia, 1972, in which the court held that Georgia's application of the death penalty was unfair and arbitrary. However, the Court upheld Gregg's sentence, stating for the first time that "punishment of death does not invariably violate the Constitution."

\section*{Griswold v. Connecticut (1965)}
(14th Amendment, Due Process Clause) A Connecticut law forbade the use of "any drug, medicinal article, or instrument for the purpose of preventing conception." Griswold, director of Planned Parenthood in New Haven, was arrested for counseling married persons and, after conviction, appealed. The Court overturned the Connecticut law, saying that "various guarantees (of the Constitution) create zones of privacy. . ." and questioning, ". . . would we allow the police to search the sacred precincts of marital bedrooms. . . ?" The decision is significant for raising for more careful inspection the concept of "unenumerated rights" in the 9th Amendment, later central to Roe v. Wade, 1973.

\section*{Grutter v. Bollinger; Gratz v. Bollinger (2003)}

Decision: (Gratz) The policy of the University of Michigan, giving undergraduate applicants twenty points just for being a member of a racial or ethnic group, violates the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment. The policy discriminates on the basis of race, but is not narrowly tailored to create a diverse student body. (Grutter) The policy of the University of Michigan's law school, considering an applicant's racial or ethnic background as just one factor in attempting to admit a diverse student body, is constitutional. Because the law school considers each applicant individually, and does not assign an inflexible value for race, the policy creates a diverse student body without discriminating on the basis of race.

\section*{Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier (1988)}
(1 st Amendment, freedom of speech) In 1983, the principal of Hazelwood East High School in Missouri removed two articles from the upcoming issue of the student newspaper, deeming their content "inappropriate, personal, sensitive, and unsuitable for student readers." Several students sued, claiming that their right to freedom of expression had been violated. The Court upheld the principal's action: "a school need not tolerate student speech that is inconsistent with its basic educational mission, even though the government could not censor similar speech outside the school." School officials had full control over school-sponsored activities "so long as their actions are reasonably related to legitimate pedagogical concerns. . .."

\section*{Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States (1964)}

Decision: The Court ruled that Congress could outlaw racial segregation of private facilities that are engaged in interstate commerce. The Court's decision stated, "If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how 'local' the operation which applies the squeeze. . . . The power of Congress to promote interstate commerce also includes the power to regulate the local incidents thereof, including local activities. . . which have a substantial and harmful effect upon that commerce."

\section*{Hutchinson v. Proxmire (1979)}

Decision: The Court held that the Speech or Debate Clause gives members of Congress immunity from suit for defamatory statements made within the legislative chambers, but the privilege does not extend to comments made in other locations, even if they merely repeat what was said in Congress. The newsletters and press release were not within the deliberative process nor were they essential to the deliberation of the Senate. They also were not part of the "informing function" of members of Congress, since they were not a part of legislative function or process. The comments were merely designed to convey information on the Senator's individual positions and beliefs. Finally, although Hutchinson had received extensive attention in the media as a result of his receipt of the Golden Fleece Award, he was not a public figure prior to that controversy and thus is entitled to the greater protection against defamation that is extended to non-public figures. The fact that the public may have an interest in governmental expenditures does not make Hutchinson himself a public figure.

\section*{Illinois \(\mathbf{v}\). Wardlow (2000)}

Decision: The Supreme Court refused to say that flight from the police will always justify a stop or that it will never do so. Instead, the Court ruled that flight can be an important factor in determining whether police have "reasonable suspicion" to stop a suspect. The trial court will have to determine in each case whether the information available to the police officers, including the fact of a suspect's flight, was sufficient to support the stop.

\section*{In Re Gault (1966)}
(14th Amendment, Due Process Clause) Prior to the Gault case, proceedings against juvenile offenders were generally handled as "family law," not "criminal law" and provided few due process guarantees. Gerald Gault was assigned to six years in a State juvenile detention facility for an alleged obscene phone call. He was not provided counsel and not permitted to confront or cross-examine the principal witness. The Court overturned the juvenile proceedings and required that States provide juveniles "some of the due process guarantees of adults," including a right to a phone call, to counsel, to cross-examine, to confront their accuser, and to be advised of their right to silence.

\section*{Johnson v. Santa Clara Transportation Agency (1987)}
(Discrimination) Under their affirmative action plan, the Transportation Agency in Santa Clara, California, was authorized to "consider as one factor the sex of a qualified applicant" in an effort to combat the significant underrepresentation of women in certain job classifications. When the Agency promoted Diane Joyce, a qualified woman, over Paul Johnson, a qualified man, for the job of road dispatcher, Johnson sued, claiming that the Agency's consideration of the sex of the applicants violated Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The Court upheld the Agency's promotion policy, arguing that the affirmative action plan created no "absolute bar" to the advancement of men but rather represented "a moderate, flexible, case-by-case approach to effecting a gradual improvement in the representation of minorities and women . . . in the Agency's work force, and [was] fully consistent with Title VII."

\section*{Korematsu v. United States (1944)}

Decision: The Court upheld the military order in light of the circumstances presented by World War II. "Pressing public necessity may sometimes justify the existence of restrictions which curtail the civil rights of a single racial group." The Court noted, however, that racial antagonism itself could never form a legitimate basis for the restrictions.

\section*{Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971)}
(1st Amendment, Establishment Clause) In overturning State laws regarding aid to church-supported schools in this and a similar Rhode Island case, the Court created the Lemon test limiting ". . . excessive government entanglement with religion." The Court noted that any State law about aid to religion must meet three criteria: (1) purpose of the aid must be clearly secular, (2) its primary effect must neither advance nor inhibit religion, and (3) it must avoid "excessive entanglement of government with religion."

\section*{Mapp v. Ohio (1962)}
(4th and 14th Amendments, illegal evidence and Due Process Clause) Admitting evidence gained by illegal searches was permitted by some States before Mapp. Cleveland police raided Dollree Mapp's home without a warrant and found obscene materials. She appealed her conviction, saying that the 4th and 14th Amendments protected her against improper police behavior. The Court agreed, extending "exclusionary rule" protections to citizens in State courts, saying that the prohibition against unreasonable searches would be "meaningless" unless evidence gained in such searches was "excluded." Mappdeveloped the concept of "incorporation" begun in Gitlow v. New York, 1925.

\section*{Marbury v. Madison (1803)} (Article III, judicial powers) After defeat in the 1800 election, President Adams appointed many Federalists to the federal courts, but James Madison, the new secretary of state, refused to deliver the commissions. William Marbury, one of the appointees, asked the Supreme Court to enforce the delivery of his commission based on a provision of the Judiciary Act of 1789 that allowed the Court to hear such cases on original jurisdiction. The Court refused Marbury's request, finding that the relevant portion of the Judiciary Act was in conflict with the Constitution. This decision, written by Chief Justice Marshall, established the evaluation of federal laws' constitutionality, or "judicial review," as a power of the Supreme Court.

\section*{McCulloch v. Maryland (1819)}
(Article I, Section 8, Necessary and Proper Clause) Called the "Bank of the United States" case. A Maryland law required federally chartered banks to use only a special paper to print paper money, which amounted to a tax. James McCulloch, the cashier of the Baltimore branch of the bank, refused to use the paper, claiming that States could not tax the Federal Government. The Court declared the Maryland law unconstitutional, commenting ". . the power to tax implies the power to destroy."

\section*{Miranda v. Arizona (1966)}
(5th, 6th, and 14th Amendments, rights of the accused) Arrested for kidnapping and sexual assault, Ernesto Miranda signed a confession including a statement that he had "full knowledge of [his] legal rights. . . ." After conviction, he appealed, claiming that without counsel and without warnings, the confession was illegally gained. The Court agreed with Miranda that "he must be warned prior to any questioning that he has the right to remain silent, that anything he says can be used against him in a court of law, that he has the right to. . . an attorney and that if he cannot afford an attorney one will be appointed for him. ..." Although later modified by Nix v. Williams, 1984, and other cases, Miranda firmly upheld citizen rights to fair trials in State courts.

\section*{New Jersey v. T.L.O. (1985)}
(4th and 14th Amendments) After T.L.O., a New Jersey high school student, denied an accusation that she had been smoking in the school lavatory, a vice-principal searched her purse and found cigarettes, marijuana, and evidence that T.L.O. had been involved in marijuana dealing at the school. T.L.O. was then sentenced to probation by a juvenile court, but appealed on the grounds that the evidence against her had been obtained by an "unreasonable" search. The Court rejected T.L.O.'s arguments, stating that the school had a "legitimate need to maintain an environment in which learning can take place," and that to do this "requires some easing of the restrictions to which searches by public authorities are ordinarily subject. . ." The Court thus created a "reasonable suspicion" rule for school searches, a change from the "probable cause" requirement in the wider society.

\section*{New York Times v. United States (1971)}
(1st Amendment, freedom of the press) In 1971 The New York Times obtained copies of classified Defense Department documents, later known as the "Pentagon Papers," which revealed instances in which the Johnson Administration had deceived Congress and the American people regarding U.S. policies during the Vietnam War. A U.S. district court issued an injunction against the publication of the documents, claiming that it might endanger national security. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited the 1st Amendment guarantee of a free press and refused to uphold the injunction against publication, observing that it is the obligation of the government to prove that actual harm to the nation's security would be caused by the publication. The decision limited "prior restraint" of the press.

\section*{New York Times v. Sullivan (1964)}

Decision: A unanimous Court announced that a public official could not win a suit for defamation (false statement) unless the statement was made with "actual malice," meaning either with the knowledge that it was false or with "reckless disregard" of the truth. The Court found a national commitment to "uninhibited, robust, and wideopen" debate on issues of public concern-even when this included "vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks on government and public officials." Without an "actual malice" standard, citizens might be unwilling to criticize elected officials for fear of being sued if something they said turned out to be inaccurate.

\section*{Nixon v. Fitzgerald (1982)}

Decision: The Court ruled that a President or former President is entitled to absolute immunity from liability based on his official acts. The President must be able to act forcefully and independently, without fear of liability. Diverting the President's energies with concerns about private lawsuits could impair the effective functioning of government. The President's absolute immunity extends to all acts within the "outer perimeter" of his duties of office, since otherwise he would be required to litigate over the nature of the acts and the scope of his duties in each case. The remedy of impeachment, the vigilant scrutiny of the press, the Congress, and the public, and presidential desire to earn reelection and concern with historical legacy all protect against presidential wrongdoing.

\section*{Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC (2000)}

Decision: In Buckley v. Valeo, 1976, the Supreme Court had upheld a \($ 1000\) limit on contributions by individuals to candidates for federal office. In Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC, the Court concluded that large contributions will sometimes create actual corruption, and that voters will be suspicious of the fairness of a political process that allows wealthy donors to contribute large amounts. The Court concluded that the Missouri contribution limits were appropriate to correct this problem and did not impair the ability of candidates to communicate their messages to the voters and to mount an effective campaign.

\section*{Olmstead v. United States (1928)}
(4th Amendment, electronic surveillance) Olmstead was engaged in the illegal sale of alcohol. Much of the evidence against him was gained through a wiretap made without a warrant. Olmstead argued that he had "a reasonable expectation of privacy," and that the Weeks v. United States decision of 1914 should be applied to exclude the evidence gained by the wiretap. The Court disagreed, saying that Olmstead intended "to project his voice to those quite outside \(\ldots\) and that . . . nothing tangible was taken." Reversed by subsequent decisions, this case contains the first usage of the concept of "reasonable expectation of privacy" that would mark later 4th Amendment decisions.

\section*{Oregon v. Mitchell (1970)}

Decision: The Supreme Court was unable to issue a single opinion of the Court supported by a majority of the justices. However, in a series of separate opinions, differing majority groups agreed that (1) the 18 -year-old mini-mum-age requirement of the Voting Rights Act Amendments is valid for national elections but not for State and local elections; (2) the literacy test provision is valid in order to remedy discrimination against minorities; and (3) the residency and absentee balloting provisions are a valid congressional regulation of presidential elections.

\section*{Plessy v. Ferguson (1896)}
(14th Amendment, Equal Protection Clause) A Louisiana law required separate seating for white and African American citizens on public railroads, a form of segregation. Homer Plessy argued that his right to "equal protection of the laws" was violated. The Court held that segregation was permitted if facilities were equal. The Court interpreted the 14th Amendment as "not intended to give Negroes social equality but only political and civil equality. ..." The Louisiana law was seen as a "reasonable exercise of (State) police power. . ." Segregated public facilities were permitted until Plessy was overturned by the Brown v. Board of Education case of 1954.

\section*{Powell v. Alabama (1932)} (6th Amendment, right to counsel) The case involved the "Scottsboro boys," seven African American men accused of sexual assault. This case was a landmark in the development of a "fundamentals of fairness" doctrine of the Court over the next 40 years. The Scottsboro boys were quickly prosecuted without the benefit of counsel and sentenced to death. The Court overturned the decision, stating that poor people facing the death penalty in State courts must be provided counsel, and commenting, ". . . there are certain principles of Justice which adhere to the very idea of free government, which no [State] may disregard." The case was another step toward incorporation of the Bill of Rights into State constitutions.

\section*{Printz v. United States (1997)}

Decision: The Court ruled that the Brady Act's interim provision requiring certain State or local law enforcement agents to perform background checks on prospective handgun purchasers was unconstitutional. Although no provision of the Constitution deals explicitly with federal authority to compel State officials to execute federal law, a review of the Constitution's structure and of prior Supreme Court decisions leads to the conclusion that Congress does not have this power.

\section*{Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union (1997)}

Decision: The Supreme Court unanimously ruled that the anti-obscenity provisions of the Communications De cency Act (CDA) abridged the freedom of speech protected under the First Amendment. Those parts of the CDA were intended to keep minors from "patently offensive" or "indecent" communications on the Internet. While the Court recognized the importance of Congress's goal of protecting children, it concluded that the terms "patently offensive" and "indecent" were too vague to be enforceable, especially since information on the Internet is easily transmitted to many different parts of the country where community standards of decency may vary. The decision suggested that the Court saw the Internet as more like books or newspapers, which have high First Amendment protection, rather than like radio and television, where content can be more closely regulated by the government.

\section*{Reno v. Condon (2000)}

Decision: The Court upheld the federal law that forbids States from selling addresses, telephone numbers, and other information that drivers put on license applications. They agreed with the Federal Government that information, including motor vehicle license information, is an "article of commerce" in the interstate stream of business and therefore is subject to regulation by Congress. The Court emphasized that the statute did not impose on the States any obligation to pass particular laws or policies and thus did not interfere with the States' sovereign functions.

\section*{Republican Party of Minnesota v. White (2002)}

Decision: The Supreme Court decided that the State prohibition on "announcing" a judicial candidate's views violates the 1 st Amendment. It unduly restricts the candidates' rights of free speech without adequately furthering the expressed goal of improving judicial impartiality and the appearance of impartiality. The government may not restrict speech based on its content, as this rule does. In addition, the government may not restrict speech about candidates' qualifications for office, which the rule also does. In addition, the rule is not well designed to preserve impartiality, since it has no effect on the candidate's beliefs. Finally, the lack of any longstanding tradition of such a rule shows there is no historical presumption of constitutionality.

\section*{Roe v. Wade (1973)}
(9th Amendment, right to privacy) A Texas woman challenged a State law forbidding the artificial termination of a pregnancy, saying that she "had a fundamental right to privacy." The Court upheld a woman's right to choose in this case, noting that the State's "important and legitimate interest in protecting the potentiality of human life" became "compelling" at the end of the first trimester, and that before then, ". . . the attending physician, in consultation with his patient, is free to determine, without regulation by the State, that . . . the patient's pregnancy should be terminated." The decision struck down the State regulation of abortion in the first three months of pregnancy and was modified by Planned Parenthood ofSoutheastern PA v. Case y, 1992.

\section*{Rostker v. Goldberg (1981)}

Decision: The Court ruled that women did not have to be included in the draft registration. The purpose of having draft registration was to prepare for the actual draft of combat troops if they should be needed. Since Congress and the President had both consistently decided not to use women in combat positions, it was not necessary for women to register either. The Court also noted that the role of women in the armed services had been debated extensively in the Congress, and concluded that the legislature had reached a thoughtful, reasoned conclusion on this issue.

\section*{Roth v. United States (1951)}
(1 st Amendment, freedom of the press) A New York man named Roth operated a business that used the mail to invite people to buy materials considered obscene by postal inspectors. The Court, in its first consideration of censorship of obscenity, created the "prevailing community standards" rule, which required a consideration of the work as a whole. In its decision, the Court defined as obscene that which offended "the average person, applying contemporary community standards." In a case decided the same day, the Court applied the same "test" to State obscenity laws.

\section*{Rush Prudential HMO, Inc. v. Moran (2002)}

Decision: The Supreme Court decided that ERISA does not preempt the Illinois medical-review statute. The statute regulates insurance, which is one of the functions HMOs perform. Although HMOs provide healthcare as well as insurance, the statute does not require choosing a single or primary function of an HMO. Congress has long recognized that HMOs are risk-bearing organizations subject to state regulation. Finally, allowing States to regulate the insurance aspects of HMOs will not interfere with the desire of Congress for uniform national standards under ERISA.

\section*{Schenck v. United States (1919)}
(1 st Amendment, freedom of speech) Charles Schenck was an officer of an antiwar political group who was arrested for alleged violations of the Espionage Act of 1917, which made active opposition to the war a crime. He had urged thousands of young men called to service by the draft act to resist and to avoid induction. The Court limited free speech in time of war, stating that Schenck's words, under the circumstances, presented a "clear and present danger. . ." Although later decisions modified the decision, the Schenck case created a precedent that 1 st Amendment guarantees were not absolute.

\section*{School District of Abington Township, Pennsylvania v. Schempp (1963)}
(1st Amendment, Establishment Clause) A Pennsylvania State law required reading from the Bible each day at school as an all-school activity. Some parents objected and sought legal remedy. When the case reached the Court, the Court agreed with the parents, saying that the Establishment Clause and Free Exercise Clause both forbade States from engaging in religious activity. The Court created a rule holding that if the purpose and effect of a law "is the advancement or inhibition of religion," it "exceeds the scope of legal power."

\section*{Shelley v. Kraemer (1948)}

Decision: The Court ruled that "in granting judicial enforcement of the restrictive agreements . . . the States have denied petitioners the equal protection of the laws. . . ." No individual has the right under the Constitution to demand that a State take action that would result in the denial of equal protection to other individuals. The Court rejected the respondents' argument that, since State courts would also enforce restrictive covenants against white owners, enforcement of covenants against black owners did not constitute a denial of equal protection. "Equal protection of the laws is not achieved through indiscriminate imposition of inequalities."

\section*{Sheppard v. Maxwell (1966)}
(14th Amendment, Due Process Clause) Dr. Samuel Sheppard was convicted of murdering his wife in a trial widely covered by national news media. Sheppard appealed his conviction, claiming that the pretrial publicity had made it impossible to get a fair trial. The Court rejected the arguments about "press freedom," overturned his conviction, and ordered a new trial. As a result of the Sheppard decision, some judges have issued "gag" orders limiting pretrial publicity.

\section*{Tahoe-Sierra Preservation Council v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (2002)}

Decision: The 32 -month moratorium imposed by the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency on development in the Lake Tahoe Basin between Nevada and California is not a taking of property for which compensation is required. It is impossible in the abstract to say how long a restriction would be permissible. Although 32 months is a long moratorium, it is not unreasonable in this case and does not restrict the property owners' economic use of their property sufficiently to amount to a taking for which compensation must be paid.

\section*{Tennessee Valley Authority v. Hill (1978)}
(Article I, Section 8, Necessary and Proper Clause) In 1975 the secretary of the interior found that the Tennessee Valley Authority's work on the Tellico Dam would destroy the endangered snail darter's habitat in violation of the Endangered Species Act of 1975. When the TVA refused to stop work on the project, local residents sued and won an injunction against completion of the dam from the federal court of appeals. The TVA appealed, arguing that the project should be completed since it had already been underway when the Endangered Species Act had passed and, with full knowledge of the circumstances of the endangered fish, Congress had continued to appropriate money for the dam in every year since the Act's passage. However, the Supreme Court found the injunction against the TVA's completion of the dam to be proper, stating "examination of the language, history, and structure of the legislation ... indicates beyond doubt that Congress intended endangered species to be afforded the highest of priorities."

\section*{Texas v. White (1869)}

Decision: The Court held, in a 5-3 decision, that Texas had the right to bring suit as a "State" in the Supreme Court, even though it had claimed to secede from the United States in 1862 . Writing after the end of the Civil War, with military rule imposed in Texas under the Reconstruction Acts of 1867, the majority concluded that the United States was "an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States," so that Texas had never actually left the Union.

\section*{Tinker v. Des Moines School District (1969)}

Decision: The Court upheld the students' First Amendment rights. Because students do not "shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate," schools must show a possibility of "substantial disruption" before free speech can be limited at school. Students may express personal opinions as long as they do not materially disrupt classwork, create substantial disorder, or interfere with the rights of others. In this case, the wearing of black armbands was a "silent, passive expression of opinion" without these side effects and thus constitutionally could not be prohibited by the school.

\section*{U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton (1995)}

Decision: The Arkansas amendment preventing any person who had already served three terms as U.S. representative or two terms as U.S. senator from being listed on the ballot violates Article I, Section 2, Clause 2 and Section 3, Clause 3 of the Federal Constitution. The Arkansas law in effect established term limits for members of Congress, but the Constitution is the sole source of qualifications for membership. Such limits can only be set by an amendment to the Federal Constitution.

\section*{United States v. American Library Association (2003)}

Decision: Requiring public libraries to install filters to block obscene or pornographic Internet sites as a condition for obtaining federal funds for Internet access does not violate the 1 st Amendment. Congress's substantial interest in protecting children from harmful materials justifies the minimal interference with free speech caused when library users are forced to request access to a specific site.

\section*{United States v. Amistad (1841)}

In 1839 two Spaniards purchased a group of kidnapped Africans and put them aboard the schooner Amistad for a journey from Cuba to Principe. The Africans overpowered the ship's crew, killing two men, and ordered the Spaniards to steer towards Africa. The crew steered instead toward the United States coast, where the U.S. brig Washington seized the ship, freeing the Spaniards and imprisoning the Africans. A series of petitions to the courts ensued, in which the Spaniards claimed the Africans as their property, and the Americans who had seized the ship claimed a share of the cargo, including the Africans, as their lawful salvage. The Court, however, declared that the Africans were not property and issued a decree that the unlawfully kidnapped Africans "be and are hereby declared to be free."

\section*{United States v. Eichman (1990)}

Decision: The Court agreed with the trial courts' rulings that the Flag Protection Act violated the 1st Amendment. Flag-burning constitutes expressive conduct, and thus is entitled to constitutional protection. The Act prevents protesters from using the flag to express their opposition to governmental policies and activities. Although the protesters' ideas may be offensive or disagreeable to many people, the government may not prohibit them from expressing those ideas.

\section*{United States v. General Dynamics Corp. (1974)}

A deep-mining coal producer, General Dynamics Corp., acquired control of a strip-mining coal producer, United Electric Coal Companies. The Government filed suit against the company, claiming that the acquisition violated the Clayton Act by limiting competition in coal sales and production. The Court rejected the Government's argument, finding that, although the acquisition may have increased concentration of ownership, it did not threaten to substantially lessen competition and was therefore not in violation of the Clayton Act.

\section*{United States v. Leon (1984)}
(4th Amendment, exclusionary rule) Police in Burbank, California, gathered evidence in a drug-trafficking investigation using a search warrant issued by a State court judge. Later a District Court found that the warrant had been improperly issued and granted a motion to suppress the evidence gathered under the warrant. The Government appealed the decision, claiming that the exclusionary rule should not apply in cases where law enforcement officers acted in good faith, believing the warrant to be valid. The Court agreed and established the "good-faith exception" to the exclusionary rule, finding that the rule should not be applied to bar evidence "obtained by officers acting in reasonable reliance on a search warrant issued by a detached and neutral magistrate but ultimately found to be invalid."

\section*{United States v. Lopez (1990)}
(Article I, Section 8, Commerce Clause) Alfonzo Lopez, a Texas high school student, was convicted of carrying a weapon in a school zone under the Gun-Free School Zones Act of 1990. He appealed his conviction on the basis that the Act, which forbids "any individual knowingly to possess a firearm at a place that [he] knows ... is a school zone," exceeded Congress's legislative power under the Commerce Clause. The Court agreed that the Act was unconstitutional, stating that to uphold the legislation would "bid fair to convert congressional Commerce Clause authority to a general police power of the sort held only by the States."

\section*{United States v. Nixon (1974)}
(Separation of powers) During the investigation of the Watergate scandal, in which members of President Nixon's administration were accused of participating in various illegal activities, a special prosecutor subpoenaed tapes of conversations between Nixon and his advisors. Nixon refused to release the tapes but was overruled by the Court, which ordered him to surrender the tapes, rejecting his arguments that they were protected by "executive privilege." The President's "generalized interest in confidentiality" was subordinate to "the fundamental demands of due process of law in the fair administration of criminal justice."

\section*{Wallace v. Jaffree (1985)}
(1 st Amendment, Establishment Clause) An Alabama law authorized a one-minute period of silence in all public schools "for meditation or voluntary prayer." A group of parents, including Jaffree, challenged the constitutionality of the statute, claiming it violated the Establishment Clause of the 1 st Amendment. The Court agreed with Jaffree and struck down the Alabama law, determining that "the State's endorsement . . . of prayer activities at the beginning of each schoolday is not consistent with the established principle that the government must pursue a course of complete neutrality toward religion."

\section*{Walz v. Tax Commission of the City of New York (1970)}
(1st Amendment, Establishment Clause) State and local governments routinely exempt church property from taxes. Walz claimed that such exemptions were a "support of religion," a subsidy by government. The Court disagreed, noting that such exemptions were just an example of a "benevolent neutrality" between government and churches, not a support of religion. Governments must avoid taxing churches because taxation would give government a "control" over religion, prohibited by the "wall of separation of church and state" noted in Everson v. Board of \(E d u c a t i o n, 1947\).

\section*{Watchtower Bible & Tract Society v. Village of Stratton (2001)}

Decision: The Court ruled the Village's ordinance requiring canvassers to get a permit to be unconstitutional. Although a municipality may have a legitimate interest in regulating door-to-door solicitation, there must be a balance between furthering that interest and restricting 1st Amendment rights. The ordinance restricts religious or political speech, and thus needs strong justification to be valid. Because the ordinance is not restricted to commercial activities, it is broader than necessary to protect fraud. Residents have other ways to protect their privacy-they can post "no solicitation" signs or refuse to talk with unwelcome visitors. Finally, the 1 st Amendment protects the right to anonymous expressions of religious or political belief.

\section*{Watkins v. United States (1957)}

Decision: The Court held that Watkins was not given a fair opportunity to determine whether he was within his rights in refusing to answer the Committee's questions. Congress has no authority to expose the private affairs of individuals unless justified by a specific function of Congress. Congress's investigative powers are broad but not unlimited, and must not infringe on 1 st Amendment rights of speech, political belief, or association. When witnesses are forced by subpoena to testify, the subject of Congressional inquiry must be articulated in the Committee's charter or explained at the time of testimony if 1 st Amendment rights are in jeopardy.

\section*{West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (1943)}
(1st Amendment, freedom of religion) During World War II the West Virginia Board of Education required all students to take part in a daily flag-saluting ceremony or else face expulsion. Jehovah's Witnesses objected to the compulsory salute, which they felt would force them to break their religion's doctrine against the worship of any "graven image." The Court struck down the rule, agreeing that a compulsory flag salute violated the 1st Amendment's exercise of religion clause and stating that "No official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion. . . ."

\section*{Board of Education of Westside Community Schools v. Mergens (1990)}
(1st Amendment, Establishment Clause) A request by Bridget Mergens to form a student Christian religious group at school was denied by an Omaha high school principal. Mergens took legal action, claiming that a 1984 federal law required "equal access" for student religious groups. The Court ordered the school to permit the club, stating, "a high school does not have to permit any extracurricular activities, but when it does, the school is bound by the ... [Equal Access] Act of 1984. Allowing students to meet on campus and discuss religion is constitutional because it does not amount to 'State sponsorship of a religion.'"

\section*{Wisconsin v. Yoder (1972)}
(1st Amendment, Free Exercise Clause) Members of the Amish religious sect in Wisconsin objected to sending their children to public schools after the eighth grade, claiming that such exposure of the children to another culture would endanger the group's self-sufficient agrarian lifestyle essential to their religious faith. The Court agreed with the Amish, while noting that the Court must move carefully to weigh the State's "legitimate social concern when faced with religious claim for exemption from generally applicable educational requirements."

\section*{English and Spanish Glossary}

\section*{A}

Absentee voting provisions made for those unable to get to their regular polling places on election day ( \(p\). 195) Voto en ausencia medidas para que voten, el día de las elecciones, aquellas personas que no puedan hacerlo en su lugar habitual de votación
Acquit find not guilty of a charge (p. 319)
Absolver determinar que alguien no es culpable de un delito Act of admission congressional act admitting a new State to the Union (p. 106)
Decreto de admisión ley del Congreso mediante la cual se admite a un nuevo estado dentro de la Unión Adjourn suspend, as in a session of Congress (p. 271) Aplazamiento suspender, por ejemplo, una sesión del Congreso Administration the officials in the executive branch of a government and their policies and principles (p. 428)
Administración funcionarios del poder ejecutivo de un gobierno, así como sus políticas y sus directores Affirmative action a policy that requires most employers take positive steps to remedy the effects of past discriminations (p. 609)

Acción afirmativa política que exige que la mayoría de los empleados lleven a cabo ciertas acciones para remediar los efectos de la discriminaciónes en el pasado
Albany Plan of Union plan proposed by Benjamin Franklin in 1754 that aimed to unite the 13 colonies for trade, military, and other purposes; the plan was turned down by the colonies and the Crown (p. 37)
Plan de Unión Albany proyecto propuesto por Benjamín Franklin en 1754 cuyo objetivo era unir a las 13 colonias en cuanto a asuntos comerciales, militares, así como para otros propósitos; las colonias y la Corona rechazaron el plan
Alien foreign-born resident, or noncitizen (pp. 156, 548, 634)
Extranjero persona residente nacida en otro país o que no se ha nacionalizado
Ambassador an official representative of the United States appointed by the President to represent the nation in matters of diplomacy (p. 485)
Embajador funcionario oficial designado por el Presidente para representar a la nación en asuntos diplomáticos Amendment a change in, or addition to, a constitution or law (p. 78)

Enmienda cambio o adición a la Constitución o las leyes
Amnesty a blanket pardon offered to a group of law violators (p. 420)

Amnistía perdón general que se ofrece a un grupo de personas que han violado la ley
Anti-Federalists those persons who opposed the ratification of the Constitution in 1787-1788 (p. 59)
Anti-federalistas aquellas personas que se opusieron a la ratificación de la Constitución de 1787 a 1788
Appellate jurisdiction the authority of a court to review decisions of inferior (lower) courts; see original jurisdiction (pp. 523,734)
Tribunal de apelación autoridad de una corte para revisar decisiones de cortes inferiores; ver original jurisdiction/jurisdicción original

Apportion distribute, as in seats in a legislative body (p. 273) Prorrateo distribuir, como los escaños de un cuerpo legislativo
Appropriate assign to a particular use (p. 316)
Asignar destinar a un uso particular Articles of Confederation plan of government adopted by the Continental Congress after the American Revolution; established "a firm league of friendship" among the States, but allowed few important powers to the central government (p. 48)

Artículos de la Confederación plan de gobierno adoptado por el Congreso Continental, después de la Independencia de los Estados Unidos; se enunciaron como "un vínculo firme de amistad" entre los estados, pero le delegaron pocos poderes importantes al gobierno central Assemble to gather with one another in order to express views on public matters (p. 569)
Congregar reunirse con otras personas para expresar puntos de vista sobre asuntos públicos
Assessment the process of determining the value of property to be taxed (p. 764)
Valuación proceso para determinar el valor de una propiedad que será gravada
Assimilation the process by which people of one culture merge into, and become part of, another culture (p. 615)
Asimilación proceso mediante el cual las personas de una cultura se integran en otra cultura y se convierten en parte de ella
At-large election election of an officeholder by the voters of an entire governmental unit (e.g. a State or country) rather than by the voters of a district or subdivision (p. 275)
Elección general elección de un funcionario público por los votantes de una unidad gubernamental completa (por ejemplo, un estado o país), en vez de por los votantes de un distrito o subdivisión
Attorney General the head of the Department of Justice (p. 435)

Procurador general funcionario más alto del Departamento de Justicia Autocracy a form of government in which a single person holds unlimited political power (p. 14)
Autocracia forma de gobierno en la que una sola persona tiene un poder político ilimitado

\section*{B}

Bail a sum of money that the accused may be required to post (deposit with the court) as a guarantee that he or she will appear in court at the proper time (p. 602)
Fianza suma de dinero que se exige que el acusado pague (en la corte) como garantía de que se presentará en dicha corte en el momento apropiado
Balance the ticket when a presidential candidate chooses a running mate who can strengthen his chance of being elected by virtue of certain ideological, geographic, racial, ethnic, gender, or other characteristics (p. 373) Designar al compañero de fórmula acción que ejerce un candidato presidencial cuando elige al candidato a la vicepresidencia que refuerza sus oportunidades de ganar las elecciones, gracias a sus características ideológicas, geográficas, raciales, étnicas, de género, u otras virtudes Ballot the device voters use to register a choice in an election (p. 196)

Papeleta electoral medio que los votantes utilizan para indicar su preferencia en una elección
Ballot fatigue the phenomenon by which voters cast fewer votes for offices listed toward the bottom of the ballot (p. 171)

Fatiga al votar fenómeno que se presenta cuando los votantes marcan menos casillas hacia el final de la papeleta electoral Bankruptcy the legal proceeding by which a bankrupt person's assets are distributed among those to whom he or she owes debts (p. 302)
Bancarrota procedimiento legal mediante el cual los bienes de una persona se distribuyen entre las personas con las que tiene deudas
Battleground States States in which the outcome of an election is too close to call and either candidate could win (p. 387) Estados reñidos estados donde los resultados de las eleccio-nes indican que cualquier candidato podría ser el ganador Bench trial a trial in which the judge alone hears the case (pp. 597, 730)
Juicio ante judicatura proceso en en el cual sólo el juez escucha el caso
Bicameral an adjective describing a legislative body composed of two chambers (pp. 33, 268)
Bicameral adjetivo que describe un cuerpo legislativo formado por dos cámaras
Bill a proposed law presented to a legislative body for consideration (pp. 287, 343)
Proyecto de ley ley propuesta que se presenta ante un cuerpo legislativo para su consideración
Bill of Attainder a legislative act that inflicts punishment without a court trial (p. 593)
Escrito de proscripción y confiscación acto legislativo que inflige un castigo sin que haya un juicio ante un jurado
Bill of Rights the first ten amendments to the Constitution (pp. 82, 547)
Declaración de derechos las primeras diez enmiendas a la Constitución Bipartisan supported by two parties (p. 127)
Bipartidista apoyado por dos partidos Blanket primary a voting process in which voters receive a long ballot containing the names of all contenders, regardless of party, and can vote however they choose (p. 188)
Elecciones primarias generales proceso de elección en el que los votantes reciben una papeleta electoral grande que contiene los nombres de todos los candidatos, independientemente del partido, y en el cual pueden elegir como lo deseen
Block grant one type of federal grants-in-aid for some particular but broadly defined area of public policy; see grants-inaid (p. 109)
Subsidio en conjunto tipo de subsidio público federal que se ofrece para una área particular pero ampliamente definida; ver grants-in-aid program/programa de subvención de fondos públicos
Briefs detailed written statements filed with the Court before oral arguments are presented (p. 535)
Alegato reseña detallada presentada ante la Corte antes de dar un argumento oral

Budget a financial plan for the use of money, personnel, and property (p. 766)
Presupuesto plan financiero para el uso del dinero, el personal y la propiedad Bureaucracy a large, complex administrative structure that handles the everyday business of an organization (p. 426)
Burocracia estructura administrativa grande y compleja que gobierna los negocios cotidianos de una organización Bureaucrat a person who works for a bureaucratic organization; see bureaucracy (p. 426)
Burócrata persona que trabaja en una organización burocrática; ver bureaucracy/burocracia

\section*{C}

Cabinet presidential advisory body, traditionally made up of the heads of the executive departments and other officers (p. 87)

Gabinete cuerpo consultivo del Presidente que tradicionalmente está formado por los funcionarios más altos de los departamentos ejecutivos y otros funcionarios
Capital all the human-made resources that are used to produce goods and services (p. 678)
Capital todos los recursos creados por el hombre que se utilizan para producir bienes y servicios
Capital punishment the death penalty (p. 604)
Pena capital la pena de muerte
Capitalism economic system in which individuals are free to own the means of production and maximize profits (p. 678) Capitalismo sistema económico en el que individuos tienen la libertad de poseer los medios de producción y de aumentar sus ganancias
Categorical grant one type of federal grants-in-aid; made for some specific, closely defined, purpose; see grants-in-aid (p. 108)

Subsidio categórico tipo de subsidio público federal; proporcionado para algún propósito específico y rigurosamente definido; ver grants-in-aid program/programa de subvención de fondos públicos
Caucus as a nominating device, a group of like-minded people who meet to select the candidates they will support in an upcoming election (pp. 185, 380)
Junta de dirigentes en función de instrumento nominativo, grupo de personas que comparten la misma ideología y que se reúnen para seleccionar a los candidatos que apoyarán en una elección Censure issue a formal condemnation (p. 320)
Amonestación emitisión de una condena formal Certificate a method of putting a case before the Supreme Court; used when a lower court is not clear about the procedure or rule of law that should apply in a case and asks the Supreme Court to certify the answer to a specific question (p. 534)

Certificación método de remitir un caso a la Corte Suprema; se utiliza cuando una corte inferior no está segura de qué procedimiento o regla deberá aplicar en un caso y consulta a la Corte Suprema para que certifique una respuesta a una pregunta específica
Charter a city's basic law, its constitution; a written grant of authority from the king (pp. 33, 750)
Carta constitucional ley básica de una ciudad, su constitución; concesión de autoridad escrita otorgada por el rey Checks and balances system of overlapping the powers of the legislative，executive，and judicial branches to permit each branch to check the actions of the others；see separation of powers（p．72）
Sistema de frenos y contrapesos sistemo de equilibrio de poderes mecanismo mediante el cual se traslapa la autoridad del poder legislativo，el poder ejecutivo y el poder judicial para permitir que cada poder verifique las acciones de los otros dos；ver separation of powers／separación de poderes
Chief administrator term for the President as head of the administration of the Federal Government（p．365） Administrador en jefe nombre que se le da al Presidente por ser el jefe de la administración del gobierno federal Chief citizen term for the President as the representative of the people，working for the public interest（p．365）
Primer ciudadano nombre que se le da al Presidente por ser representante del pueblo y trabajar por el interés público
Chief diplomat term for the President as the main architect of foreign policy and spokesperson to other countries（p．365）
Diplomático titular nombre que se le da al Presidente por ser el arquitecto principal de la política exterior y un vocero ante otros países
Chief executive term for the President as vested with the executive power of the United States（p．364）
Primer mandatario nombre que se le da al Presidente porque está investido con el poder ejecutivo de los Estados Unidos
Chief legislator term for the President as architect of public policy and the one who sets the agenda for Congress（p．365）
Legislador en jefe nombre que se le da al Presidente por ser arquitecto de la política pública y por ser la persona que determina la agenda del Congreso
Chief of party term for the President as the leader of his or her political party（p．365）
Jefe del partido nombre que se le da al Presidente por ser el líder de su partido político
Chief of state term for the President as the ceremonial head of the United States，the symbol of all the people of the nation （p．364）
Jefe de estado nombre que se le da al Presidente por ser el funcionario ceremonial de los Estados Unidos，el símbolo de toda la gente de la nación Citizen a member of a state or nation who owes allegiance to it by birth or naturalization and is entitled to full civil rights （pp．23，632）
Ciudadano miembro de un estado o nación，que se beneficia de todos los derechos civiles y que le debe lealtad a ese estado o nación por nacimiento o naturalización
Civil case a case involving a noncriminal matter such as a con－ tract dispute or a claim of patent infringement（p．529）
Caso civil caso relacionado con un asunto no criminal，como un litigio por contrato o una demanda por violación de patentes
Civil disobedience a form of protest in which people deliber－ ately but non－violently violate the law，as a means of express－ ing their opposition to some particular law or public policy （p．569）
Resistencia pasiva forma de protesta en la cual las perso－ nas violan la ley de una manera no violenta，como método para expresar su oposición a una ley o política pública en particular
Civil law the portion of the law relating to human conduct，to dis－ putes between private parties，and to disputes between private parties and government not covered by criminal law（p．728）

Ley civil área de la ley que se relaciona con la conducta humana，con litigios entre partes privadas，así como entre partes privadas y el gobierno，que no están cubiertos bajo la ley penal Civil liberties the guarantees of the safety of persons，opinions， and property from the arbitrary acts of government，includ－ ing freedom of speech and freedom of religion（p．547）
Libertades civiles garantías que protegen la seguridad，las opiniones y la propiedad de las personas de actos arbitrarios del gobierno；entre ellas están la libertad de expresión y liber－ tad de religión
Civil rights a term used for those positive acts of government that seek to make constitutional guarantees a reality for all people，e．g．，prohibitions of discrimination（p．547）
Derechos civiles término que designa actos positivos del gobierno con el objetivo de hacer realidad las garantías con－ stitucionales para todo el pueblo，por ejemplo la prohibición de la discriminación
Civil service those civilian employees who perform the admin－ istrative work of government（p．443）
Servicio civil grupo de empleados civiles que desempeñan el trabajo administrativo del gobierno Civilian nonmilitary（p．435）
Civil que no es militar
Civilian tribunal a court operating as part of the judicial branch，entirely separate from the military establishment （p．539）
Tribunal civil corte que actúa como parte del poder judicial y que está separado por completo de la institución militar
Clemency mercy or leniency granted to an offender by a chief executive；see pardon and reprieve（pp．419，724）
Clemencia misericordia o piedad que dispensa el Presidente a un delincuente；ver pardon／perdón y reprieve／suspensión de la ejecución／suspensión de la pena
Closed primary a party nominating election in which only declared party members can vote（p．188）
Elección primaria cerrada elecciones para una nominación de un partido en la que sólo los miembros declarados del partido pueden votar
Cloture procedure that may be used to limit or end floor debate in a legislative body（p．353）
Limitación del debate procedimiento que puede utilizarse para restringir o terminar un debate verbal de un cuerpo legislativo Coalition a temporary alliance of several groups who come together to form a working majority and so to control a government（pp．128，667）
Coalición alianza temporal de varios grupos que se juntan para alcanzar el poder mayoritario y controlar el gobierno
Coattail effect the effect of a strong candidate running for an office at the top of a ballot helping to attract voters to other candidates on the party＇s ticket（p．195）
Efecto de refilón efecto que produce la presencia de un can－ didato fuerte en la parte superior de una papeleta electoral y que ayuda a atraer votantes hacia otros candidatos de su mismo partido
Cold war a period of more than 40 years during which rela－ tions between the two superpowers were at least tense，and often hostile．A time of threats and military build up（p．498） Guerra Fría período de más de 40 años en el que las relaciones entre las dos superpotencias fueron por lo menos tensas，y a menudo hostiles；época de amenazas y de desarrollo militares

Collective security the keeping of international peace and order (p. 498)
Seguridad colectiva conservación de la paz y el orden internacionales Collectivization collective or state ownership of the means of production (p. 689)
Colectivización hacer colectivos o propiedad del estado los medios de producción
Colonialism the control of one nation over foreign lands (p.650)

Colonialismo control que tiene una nación sobre tierras extranjeras Command economy system in which government bureaucrats plan and direct most economic activity (p. 687)
Economía dirigida sistema en el cual los burócratas del gobierno planean y dirigen la mayor parte de la actividad económica Commander in chief term for the President as commander of the nation's armed forces (p. 364) Comandante en jefe nombre que se le da al Presidente por ser el comandante de las Fuerzas Armadas de la nación Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise an agreement during the Constitutional Convention protecting slave holders; denied Congress the power to tax the export of goods from any State, and, for 20 years, the power to act on the slave trade (p. 56)
Avenencia de comercio y trata de esclavos acuerdo durante la Convención Constitucional que protegió los intereses de los dueños de esclavos, al negarle al Congreso el poder de gravar la exportación de bienes desde cualquier estado y el poder de actuar, durante 20 años, en contra de la trata de esclavos Commerce power exclusive power of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign trade (p. 297)
Poder mercantil poder exclusivo que tiene el Congreso para regular el comercio interestatal e internacional Commission government a government formed by commissioners, heads of different departments of city government, who are popularly elected to form the city council and thus center both legislative and executive powers in one body (p. 751)

Junta municipal gobierno formado por comisionados, funcionarios altos de distintos departamentos del gobierno de la ciudad, que se eligen por voto popular para formar el Consejo de la ciudad y, por consiguiente, reúnen los poderes legislativos y ejecutivos en un solo cuerpo
Committee chairman member who heads a standing committee in a legislative body (p. 336)
Presidente de comisión miembro que encabeza una comisión permanente en un cuerpo legislativo
Common law an unwritten law made by a judge that has developed over centuries from those generally accepted ideas of right and wrong that have gained judicial recognition (p. 727)

Derecho consuetudinario ley que no ha sido sancionada por un juez y se ha desarrollado a lo largo de los siglos con base en ideas generalmente aceptadas de lo bueno y lo malo que se han ganado un reconocimiento judicial Communism an ideology which calls for the collective, or state, ownership of land and other productive property (p. 686)
Comunismo ideología que exige la propiedad colectiva, o estatal, de la tierra y de otros medios de producción

Communist Manifesto, The a political document written by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels that urged workers to free themselves from "capitalist enslavement" (p. 685)
El manifiesto comunista documento político escrito por Karl Marx y Friederich Engels en el cual se urge a los trabajadores a que se liberen de ser esclavizados por el capitalismo
Commutation the power to reduce (commute) the length of a sentence or fine for a crime (pp. 420, 725)
Conmutación poder de reducir (conmutar) la duración de una sentencia o el monto de la multa por haber cometido un crimen Compromise an adjustment of opposing principles or systems by modifying some aspect of each (p. 22)
Transigencia acuerdo intermedio entre principios o sistemas opuestos, al que se llegua mediante la modificación de algún aspecto de cada uno de ellos
Concurrent jurisdiction power shared by federal and State courts to hear certain cases (p. 522)
Jurisdicción coincidente poder compartido por cortes federales y estatales para atender ciertos casos
Concurrent powers those powers that both the National Government and the States possess and exercise (p. 100)
Poderes concurrentes aquellos poderes que el gobierno nacional y los estados poseen y ejercen
Concurrent resolution a statement of position on an issue used by the House and Senate acting jointly; does not have the force of law and does not require the President's signature (p. 344)

Resolución conjunta enunciado de una posición sobre un asunto utilizado por la Cámara de Representantes y el Senado al actuar conjuntamente; no tiene el poder de la ley y no requiere la firma del Presidente
Concurring opinion written explanation of the views of one or more judges who support a decision reached by a majority of the court, but wish to add or emphasize a point that was not made in the majority decision (p. 537)
Opinion coincidente explicación escrita de los puntos de vista de uno o más jueces quienes apoyan una decisión alcanzada por una mayoría en la corte, pero desean añadir o recalcar un punto que no se remarcó en la decisión mayoritaria
Confederation a joining of several groups for a common purpose (pp. 16, 37)
Confederación unión de diversos grupos para un propósito común Conference committee temporary joint committee created to reconcile any differences between the two houses' versions of a bill (p. 342)
Comité de Consulta comité conjunto temporal formado para reconciliar cualquier diferencia entre las versiones de un proyecto de ley propuesto por las dos cámaras legislativas
Connecticut Compromise agreement during the Constitutional Convention that Congress should be composed of a Senate, in which States would be represented equally, and a House, in which representation would be based on a State's population (p. 56)
Acuerdo de Connecticut acuerdo alcanzado durante la Convención Constitucional que estableció que el Congreso debería estar integrado por un Senado donde cada estado estuviera representado de manera equitativa, y una Cámara de Representantes en la que la representación estuviera basada en la población de cada estado Consensus general agreement among various groups on fundamental matters；broad agreement on public questions
（pp．127，314）
Consenso acuerdo general entre diversos grupos sobre temas fundamentales；acuerdo amplio sobre temas varios
Constituency the people and interests that an elected official represents（p．283）
Circunscripción electoral las personas e intereses que un funcionario elegido representa Constituent power the non－legislative power of Constitution－ making and the constitutional amendment process（p．717） Poder constituyente poder no legislativo de la elaboración de la Constitución y del proceso de enmiendas constitucionales Constitution the body of fundamental laws setting out the principles，structures，and processes of a government（p．5） Constitución cuerpo de leyes fundamentales que definen los principios，las estructuras y los procesos de gobierno
Constitutionalism basic principle that government and those who govern must obey the law；the rule of law；see limited government（p．70）
Constitucionalismo principio básico que establece que el gobierno y los gobernantes deben obedecer la ley；el gobi－ erno de la ley；ver limited government／gobierno limitado
Content neutral the government may not regulate assemblies on the basis on what might be said（p．570）
Voto neutral el gobierno no regulará a las asambleas en lo concerniente a lo que se expresará en ellas
Continuing resolution a measure that allows agencies to con－ tinue working based on the previous year＇s appropriations （p．471）
Resolución ininterrumpida medida que permite que las agen－ cias continúen funcionando sobre la base de las asignaciones del año anterior
Continuous body governing unit（e．g．the United States Senate） whose seats are never all up for election at the same time （p．283）
Cuerpo legislativo ininterrumpido unidad gubernamental （por ejemplo，el Senado de los Estados Unidos）cuya totali－ dad de escaños nunca se elige al mismo tiempo Contract a legally binding agreement in which one party agrees to do something with or for another party（p．728）
Contrato acuerdo legal mediante el cual una parte se com－ promete a hacer algo con o por la otra parte
Controllable spending an amount decided upon by Congress and the President to determine how much will be spent each year on many individual government expenditures，including environment protection programs，aid to education，and so on（p．468）
Gasto controlable cantidad de dinero determinada por el Congreso y el Presidente，que indica el monto anual de muchos gastos gubernamentales individuales，como pro－ gramas para protección del ambiente，ayuda a la educación， entre otros
Convene to begin a new session of Congress（p．271）
Convocar empezar una nueva sesión del Congreso
Copyright the exclusive，legal right of a person to reproduce， publish，and sell his or her own literary，musical，or artistic creations（p．307）
Derechos de autor derechos legales y exclusivos de una per－ sona para reproducir，publicar y vender su trabajo creativo literario，artístico，o musical Council－manager government a modification of the mayor－ council government，it consists of a strong council of mem－ bers elected on a non－partisan ballot，a weak mayor，elected by the people，and a manager，named by the council；see mayor－council government；see also weak mayor government （p．751）
Gobierno de consejo－superintendente modificación del gobi－ erno de consejo－alcalde，que consiste en un vigoroso consejo de miembros elegidos mediante un sufragio no partidista； un alcalde débil，elegido por el pueblo y un superintendente nombrado por el consejo；ver mayor－council government／ gobierno de consejo－alcalde；ver también weak－mayor gov－ ernment／gobierno de alcalde débil County a major unit of local government in most States （p．742）
Condado unidad importante de gobierno local en la gran parte de los estados Court－martial a court composed of military personnel，for the trial of those accused of violating military law（p．538）
Corte marcial corte integrada por personal militar para juzgar a quienes han sido acusados de violar la ley militar
Criminal case a case in which a defendant is tried for commit－ ting a crime as defined by the law（p．529）
Caso criminal caso en el que se juzga al acusado por cometer un crimen，tal y como éste se define en la ley
Criminal law the portion of the law that defines public wrongs and provides for their punishment（p．728）
Derecho penal área de la ley que define los agravios públicos y que establece su castigo
Custom duty a tax laid on goods brought into the United States from abroad，also known as tariffs，import duties，or imposts （p．462）
Derecho de aduana impuesto sobre los bienes traídos a los Estados Unidos desde el exterior，también se conoce como arancel，impuesto sobre importaciones o tasa sobre importaciones

\section*{D}

De facto segregation segregation even if no law requires it，e．g．， housing patterns（p．621） Discriminación de facto o de hecho segregación，incluso si la ley no lo exige，por ejemplo en la asignación de vivienda
De jure segregation segregation by law，with legal sanction （p．621） Discriminación de jure o de ley segregación con base en la ley，que implica una sanción legal Defendant in a civil suit，the person against whom a court action is brought by the plaintiff；in a criminal case，the per－ son charged with the crime（p．523）
Acusado en un juicio civil，es la persona en contra de quien el demandante pide ejecutar una acción judicial；en un caso criminal，es la persona acusada de un crimen Deficit the yearly shortfall between revenue and spending （p．463）
Déficit diferencia anual entre los ingresos y los egresos
Deficit financing practice of funding government by borrowing to make up the difference between government spending and revenue（p．301）
Financiamiento del déficit práctica que consiste en subven－ cionar al gobierno mediante préstamos，a fin de compensar la diferencia entre los gastos \(y\) los ingresos gubernamentales
Deflation a general decrease in prices（p．474）
Deflación disminución general de los precios Delegated powers those powers，expressed，implied，or inher－ ent, granted to the National Government by the Constitution (p. 96)

Poderes delegados poderes explícitos, implícitos o inherentes que la Constitución transfiere al gobierno nacional Delegates representatives; members of Congress who cast votes based on the wishes of their constituents (pp. 37, 287) Delegados representantes; miembros del Congreso que votan según los deseos de sus constituyentes
Demand-side economics the theory that the higher employment that results from government borrowing will produce higher tax revenues (p. 464)
Economía de demanda teoría que establece que un alza de los empleos debido a préstamos del gobierno producirá un incremento en los ingresos tributarios
Democracy a form of government in which the supreme authority rests with the people (p. 5)
Democracia forma de gobierno en la cual la autoridad suprema reside en el pueblo Democratic consolidation the process of establishing the factors considered necessary for a democracy to succeed (p. 663)

Consolidación democrática proceso mediante el cual se establecen los factores necesarios para el éxito de una democracia
Democratization the change from dictatorship to democracy, marked by the holding of free and fair elections (p.663) Democratización cambio de dictadura a democracia mediante elecciones libres y justas
Denaturalization the process through which naturalized citizens may involuntarily lose their citizenship (p. 635)
Desnaturalización proceso mediante el cual los ciudadanos naturalizados pueden perder su ciudadanía de manera involuntaria
Deportation a legal process in which aliens are legally required to leave the United States (p. 637)
Deportación proceso legal mediante el cual se les exige a los extranjeros que abandonen los Estados Unidos
Détente a relaxation of tensions (p. 500)
Relajamiento disminución de las tensiones
Deterrence the policy of making America and its allies so militarily strong that their very strength will discourage, or prevent, any attack (p. 498)
Disuasión política que consiste en convertir a los Estados Unidos y sus aliados en una fuerza militar tan poderosa que su fortaleza desaliente, o prevenga, cualquier ataque
Devolution the delegation of authority from the central government to regional governments (p. 670)
Delegación transferencia de la autoridad del gobierno central a los gobiernos regionales
Dictatorship a form of government in which the leader has absolute power and authority (p. 5)
Dictadura forma de gobierno en la que el líder ejerce poder y autoridad absolutos
Diplomatic immunity when an ambassador is not subject to the laws of the state to which they are accredited (p. 486)
Inmunidad diplomática condición en la que un embajador no está sujeto a las leyes de un estado Direct popular election proposal to do away with the electoral college and allow the people to vote directly for President and Vice President (p. 393)
Elección popular directa propuesta para abolir el colegio electoral y permitir que la gente elija de manera directa al

Presidente y al Vicepresidente
Direct primary an election held within a party to pick that party's candidates for the general election (p. 188)
Elecciones primarias directas elecciones realizadas dentro de un partido para escoger a los candidatos del partido para las elecciones generales Discharge petition a procedure enabling members to force a bill that has been pigeonholed in committee onto the floor for consideration (p. 345)
Petición de exoneración procedimiento que permite a los miembros reiniciar la discusión para considerar una propuesta de ley que se había suspendido en una comisión de debate
Discount rate the rate of interest a bank must pay when it borrows money from a Federal Reserve Bank (p. 476)
Tasa de descuento tasa de interés que debe pagar un banco que toma un préstamo del Banco de la Reserva Federal Discrimination bias, unfairness (p. 584)
Discriminación prejuicio, injusticia
Disenfranchised denied the right to vote (p.153)
Privación del derecho al voto acción que consiste en negarle a alguien el derecho de votar
Dissenting opinion written explanation of the views of one or more judges who disagree with (dissent from) a decision reached by a majority of the court; see majority opinion (p. 537)

Opinión disidente explicación escrita de los puntos de vista de uno o más jueces que está( n ) en desacuerdo con una decisión tomada por la mayoría de la corte; ver majority opinion/opinión mayoritaria
District plan proposal for choosing presidential electors by which two electors would be selected in each State according to the Statewide popular vote and the other electors would be selected separately in each of the State's congressional districts (p. 392)
Plan de Distrito propuesta para elegir a los electores presidenciales, mediante la cual se seleccionarían dos electores en cada estado, de acuerdo con el voto popular de todo ese estado, y los otros electores se elegirían de manera separada en cada uno de los distritos del Congreso de ese estado Divine right the belief that God grants authority to a government (p. 650)
Derecho divino creencia de que Dios le concede autoridad a un gobierno Division of powers basic principle of federalism; the constitutional provisions by which governmental powers are divided on a geographic basis (in the United States, between the National Government and the States) (p. 95)
División de poderes principio básico del federalismo; estipulaciones constitucionales que establecen que los poderes gubernamentales están separados según la ubicación geográfica (en los Estados Unidos, se dividen entre el gobierno nacional y los estados)
Docket a court's list of cases to be heard (p. 530)
Agenda lista de casos por atender en una corte
Domestic affairs all matters not directly connected to the realm of foreign affairs (pp. 434, 482)
Asuntos internos todas cuestiones no relacionadas con el campo de los asuntos exteriores Double jeopardy part of the 5th Amendment which says that no person can be put in jeopardy of life or limb twice. Once a person has been tried for a crime, he or she cannot be tried again for the same crime (p. 595)

Doble juicio parte de la \(5^{\text {a }}\) enmienda que establece que no se puede poner en riesgo la vida de una persona o su integridad física dos veces．Una vez que se ha juzgado por un crimen a una persona，no puede volvérsele a juzgar por el mismo delito Draft conscription，or compulsory military service（p．445）
Reclutamiento conscripción o servicio militar obligatorio
Due process the government must act fairly and in accord with established rules in all that it does（p．31，578）
Proceso legal establecido el gobierno debe actuar con jus－ ticia y de acuerdo con las reglas establecidas en todo lo que hace
Due Process Clause part of the 14th Amendment which guar－ antees that no state deny basic rights to its people（p．549） Cláusula del proceso parte de la \(14^{a}\) enmienda que garantiza que ningún estado negará los derechos básicos a su pueblo

\section*{E}

Economic protest parties parties rooted in poor economic times，lacking a clear ideological base，dissatisfied with cur－ rent conditions and demanding better times（p．138）
Partidos de protesta económica partidos surgidos en tiem－ pos de descontento económico，que carecen de una base ideológica bien definida，están insatisfechos por las condicio－ nes presentes y exigen mejores épocas
Electoral college group of persons chosen in each State and the District of Columbia every four years who make a formal selection of the President and Vice President（pp．87，375）
Colegio electoral grupo de personas（electores presidencia－ les）elegidos cada cuatro años en todos los estados y en el Distrito de Columbia a fin de hacer una elección formal del Presidente y Vicepresidente
Electoral votes votes cast by electors in the electoral college （p．375） Votos electorales votos emitidos por los electores en el Cole－ gio electoral Electorate all of the people entitled to vote in a given election （pp．132，152）
Electorado todas las personas que tienen derecho a votar en una elección determinada Eminent domain power of a government to take private prop－ erty for public use（p．308）
Dominio supremo poder de un gobierno de expropiar la propiedad privada para uso público Enabling act a congressional act directing the people of a United States territory to frame a proposed State constitution as a step towards admission to the Union（p．106）
Ley de habilitación ley del Congreso que orienta al pueblo de un territorio de los Estados Unidos para que redacte una propuesta de la constitución para el estado，como un paso hacia la admisión de dicho estado dentro de la Unión
Encomienda a system instituted by the Spanish crown in which the monarch granted control of Indians to settlers for forced labor for mining and agriculture（p．655）
Encomienda sistema instituido por la corona española en el que el monarca les otorga a los colonos el control de los indígenas quienes son forzados a trabajar en minas y en la agricultura English Bill of Rights document written by Parliament and agreed on by William and Mary of England in 1689， designed to prevent abuse of power by English monarchs； forms the basis for much in American government and politics today（p．31）
Declaración inglesa de los derechos documento redactado por el Parlamento y aceptado por William y Mary de Ingla－ terra en 1689，elaborado para evitar el abuso de poder por parte de los monarcas ingleses；constituye la base de muchos asuntos del gobierno y la política estadounidenses actuales
Engross to print a bill in its final form（p．349）
Transcribir imprimir un proyecto de ley en su forma final Entitlement a benefit that federal law says must be paid to all those who meet the eligibility requirements，e．g．，Medicare， food stamps，and veterans＇pension（pp．467，758）
Derecho beneficio que la ley federal establece que se debe pagar a todos los que cumplan los requisitos para ser elegibles，por ejemplo：el seguro médico，bonos de comida y pensión para los veteranos Entrepreneur an individual with the drive and ambition to combine land，labor，and capital resources to produce goods or offer services（p．679）
Empresario individuo con el impulso y la ambición de com－ binar los recursos de la tierra，la mano de obra y el capital para producir bienes \(u\) ofrecer servicios
Espionage spying（p．492）
Espionaje acto de espiar
Establishment Clause separates church and state（p．551）
Cláusula del establecimiento separa a la iglesia del estado Estate tax a levy imposed on the assets of one who dies （pp．461，764）
Impuesto testamentario gravamen sobre los bienes de una persona que muere
Ex post facto law a law applied to an act committed before its passage（p．593）
Ley ex post facto ley que se aplica a un acto cometido con anterioridad a la aprobación de la ley Excise tax a tax laid on the manufacture，sale，or consumption of goods and／or the performance of services（p．461）
Impuesto al consumo gravamen sobre la manufactura，venta o consumo de bienes y／o al suministro de servicios
Exclusionary rule evidence gained as the result of an illegal act by police cannot be used against the person from whom it was seized（p．588）
Regla de exclusión evidencia obtenida como resultado de una acción ilegal de la policía y que no puede utilizarse con－ tra la persona arrestada
Exclusive powers those powers that can be exercised by the National Government alone（p．99）
Poderes exclusivos poderes que sólo el gobierno nacional puede ejercer
Executive agreement a pact made by the President directly with the head of a foreign state；a binding international agreement with the force of law but which（unlike a treaty） does not require Senate consent（pp．87，413）
Acuerdo ejecutivo pacto establecido de manera directa entre el Presidente y otro jefe de un estado extranjero；pacto internacio－ nal obligatorio que tiene el poder de una ley pero que no requi－ ere，a diferencia de un tratado，de la aprobación del Senado Executive Article Article II of the Constitution．Establishes the presidency and gives the executive power of the Federal Government to the President（p．400）
Artículo del ejecutivo el segundo artículo de la Constitución． Define la presidencia y le otorga el poder ejecutivo del gobi－ erno federal al Presidente Executive departments often called the Cabinet departments， they are the traditional units of federal administration (p. 435)

Oficinas del poder ejecutivo a menudo llamadas oficinas del gabinete; son las unidades tradicionales de la administración federal Executive Office of the President an organization of several agencies staffed by the President's closest advisors (p. 431) Oficina ejecutiva del Presidente organización compleja, que abarca diversas oficinas separadas, cuyo personal está integrado por los consejeros y asistentes más cercanos al Presidente
Executive order directive, rule, or regulation issued by a chief executive or subordinates, based upon constitutional or statutory authority and having the force of law (p. 406)
Orden ejecutiva directiva, regla o reglamento expedido por un primer mandatario o sus subordinados, con base en su autoridad estatutaria o constitucional, y que tiene el poder de una ley
Executive power the power to execute, enforce, and administer law (p. 5)
Poder ejecutivo poder para ejecutar, administrar y obligar al cumplimiento de la ley Executive privilege the President's power to refuse to disclose information (p. 409)
Privilegio ejecutivo poder que tiene el Presidente para rehusarse a revelar información Expatriation the legal process by which a loss of citizenship occurs (p. 635)
Expatriación proceso legal mediante el cual ocurre la pérdida de ciudadanía Expressed powers those delegated powers of the National Government that are spelled out, expressly, in the Constitution; also called the "enumerated powers" (pp. 96, 296)
Poderes explicitos aquellos poderes delegados del gobierno nacional que se señalan explícitamente en la Constitución; también se conocen como los "poderes ennumerados"
Extradition the legal process by which a fugitive from justice in one State is returned to that State (p. 113)
Extradición proceso legal a través del cual un fugitivo de la justicia en un estado se envía a ese estado

\section*{\(F\)}

Faction a conflicting group (p. 131)
Facción un grupo disidente
Factors of production basic resources which are used to make all goods and services (p. 678)
Factores de producción recursos básicos que se utilizan para elaborar todos los bienes y servicios
Federal budget a detailed financial document containing estimates of federal income and spending during the coming fiscal year (p. 433)
Presupuesto federal documento financiero detallado que contienen las estimaciones de las recaudaciones y gastos que anticipan los ingresos y egresos federales durante el año fiscal venidero
Federal government a form of government in which powers are divided between a central government and several local governments (p. 16)
Gobierno federal forma de gobierno en la que los poderes están divididos entre un gobierno central y diversos gobiernos locales Federalism a system of government in which a written constitution divides power between a central, or national, government and several regional governments (pp. 75, 94)
Federalismo sistema de gobierno en el que una constitución escrita divide los poderes del gobierno, sobre una base territorial, entre un gobierno central (o nacional) y diversos gobiernos regionales
Federalists those persons who supported the ratification of the Constitution in 1787-1788 (p. 59)
Federalistas personas que apoyaron la ratificación de la Constitución en 1787-1788
Felony a serious crime which may be punished by a heavy fine and/or imprisonment or even death (p. 728)
Felonía un crimen grave que puede castigarse con una gran multa, la prisión o incluso la muerte
Feudalism a loosely organized system in which powerful lords divided their lands among other, lesser lords (p. 647)
Feudalismo sistema relativamente organizado en el cual los grandes señores les concedían sus tierras a otros señores de menor autoridad Filibuster various tactics (usually long speeches) aimed at defeating a bill in a legislative body by preventing a final vote; associated with the U.S. Senate; see cloture (p. 352)
Obstrucción tácticas diversas (por lo general, prolongar el debate verbal) con el objetivo de derrotar una propuesta de ley en un cuerpo legislativo, evitando que se tenga un voto final; a menudo se asocia con el Senado de los Estados Unidos; ver cloture/limitación del debate
Fiscal year the 12 -month period used by a government and the business world for its record-keeping, budgeting, rev-enue-collecting, and other financial management purposes (p. 433)

Año fiscal período de 12 meses utilizado por el gobierno y el mundo de los negocios para su contabilidad, presupuesto, recaudación de ingresos y otros propósitos financieros
Fiscal policy the various means the government uses to raise and spend money (p. 456)
Politica económica métodos varios que usa el gobierno para obtener y gastar dinero
Five-year plan a plan which projects economic development over the next five years (p. 689)
Plan quinquenal plan que hace proyecciones sobre el desarrollo económico durante los siguientes cinco años
Floor consideration the process by which proposed laws are considered and acted upon by the full membership of the House or Senate (p. 287)
Consideración de la sala proceso mediante el cual la Cámara de Representantes o el Senado consideran y reaccionan a las leyes propuestas Floor leaders members of the House and Senate picked by their parties to carry out party decisions and steer legislative action to meet party goals (p. 336)
Líderes de fracciones partidistas miembros de la Cámara de Representantes y del Senado elegidos por sus partidos con el objeto de llevar a cabo las decisiones partidistas e impulsar la acción legislativa a fin de que cumplan con los propósitos partidistas
Foreign affairs a nation's relationships with other countries (p. 482)

Asuntos exteriores relaciones de una nación con otros países
Foreign aid economic and military aid to other countries (p. 505)

Ayuda extranjera auxilio militar y económico a otros países

Foreign policy a group of policies made up of all the stands and actions that a nation takes in every aspect of its relationships with other countries; everything a nation's government says and does in world affairs (p. 483)
Política exterior conjunto de políticas conformado por todas las posturas y acciones que una nación asume en cada uno de los aspectos de sus relaciones con otros países; todo lo que el gobierno de una nación expresa y hace respecto a los asuntos mundiales Formal amendment change or addition that becomes part of the written language of the Constitution itself through one of four methods set forth in the Constitution (p. 79)
Enmienda formal cambio o adición que se convierte en parte del lenguaje escrito de la Constitución misma, mediante uno de los cuatro métodos enunciados de la Constitución
Framers group of delegates who drafted the United States Constitution at the Philadelphia Convention in 1787 (p. 52) Redactores grupo de delegados que esbozaron la Constitución de los Estados Unidos en la Convención de Filadelfia en 1787
Franchise the right to vote (p. 152)
Sufragio derecho a votar
Franking privilege benefit allowing members of Congress to mail letters and other materials postage-free (p. 289)
Exención de franquicia beneficio otorgado a los miembros del Congreso que les permite enviar por correo cartas y otros materiales sin pagar los derechos del correo
Free enterprise system an economic system characterized by private or corporate ownership of capital goods; investments that are determined by private decision rather than by state control, and determined in a free market (pp. 23, 679)
Sistema de libre empresa sistema económico caracterizado por la propiedad privada o corporativa de los bienes de capital; inversiones que están determinadas por una decisión privada, en vez del control estatal, y están sujetas a un mercado libre
Free Exercise Clause the second part of the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom, which guarantees to each person the right to believe whatever he or she chooses to believe in matters of religion (p. 551)
Cláusula de la libertad de cultos segunda parte de la garantía constitucional de libertad religiosa, que garantiza a todo mundo el derecho de creer en lo que ella escoja en materia de religión
Free Market a market in which buyers and sellers are free to buy and sell as they wish (p. 679)
Mercado libre mercado en el cual los compradores y vendedores tienen la libertad de comprar y vender como deseen
Full Faith and Credit Clause Constitution's requirement that each State accept the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State (p. 112)
Cláusula de fe y crédito cabal requisito constitucional (Artículo IV, Sección 1) según el cual cada estado acepta (da "fe y crédito cabal") los actos públicos, documentos y procedimientos judiciales de cualquier otro estado Fundamental law laws of basic and lasting importance which may not easily be changed (p. 710)
Ley fundamental leyes de importancia primordial y duradera que no se cambiarán con facilidad

\section*{G}

Gender gap measurable differences between the partisan choices of men and women today (p. 175)

Brecha de género diferencias medibles entre las elecciones partidistas actuales de hombres y mujeres
General election the regularly scheduled election at which voters make a final selection of officeholders (p. 185)
Elecciones generales elecciones programadas regularmente en la que los votantes hacen una selección final de los funcionarios públicos Genocide the attempted extermination of a cultural, racial, or national group (p. 664)
Genocidio intento de aniquilar a un grupo cultural, racial o nacional Gerrymandering the drawing of electoral district lines to the advantage of a party or group (pp. 165, 277)
Demarcación arbitraria establecimiento de los límites de los distritos electorales de modo que den ventaja a un partido
Gift tax a tax on a gift by a living person (p. 461)
Impuesto a los regalos gravamen sobre los regalos que una persona viva otorga
Globalization economic interdependence among nations of the world (p. 695)
Globalización interdependencia económica entre naciones del mundo Government the institution through which a society makes and enforces its public policies (p. 4)
Gobierno institución mediante la cual una sociedad lleva a cabo y hace cumplir sus políticas públicas Government corporation corporations within the executive branch subject to the President's direction and control, set up by Congress to carry out certain business-like activities (p. 448)

Corporación gubernamental instituciones del poder ejecutivo que están sujetas a la dirección y el control del Presidente, formadas por el Congreso para que realicen determinadas actividades de tipo empresarial
Grand jury the formal device by which a person can be accused of a serious crime (p. 577)
Gran Jurado dispositivo formal a través del cual puede acusarse a una persona de un crimen serio Grants-in-aid program grants of federal money or other resources to States, cities, counties, and other local units (p. 107)

Programa de subvención de fondos públicos subvenciones de dinero o de otros recursos federales para los estados, sus ciudades, condados y otras unidades locales Grass-roots pressures pressures on public oficials from members of an interest group or the people at large (p. 257)
Presión popular presión que los miembros de un grupo de interés o la población en general ejercen sobre funcionarios públicos
Great Leap Forward the five-year plan for 1958 which was an attempt to quickly modernize China (p. 690)
Gran salto hacia adelante plan quinquenal de 1958 que fue un intento de modernizar rápidamente a China
Gross domestic product (GDP) the total amount of goods and services produced in a country each year (p. 473)
Producto interno bruto (PIB) cantidad total de bienes y servicios producidos por un país cada año
Guerilla warfare fighting carried out by small groups in hit-and-run raids (p. 657)
Conflicto guerrillero armado lucha de golpe y fuga entre grupos pequeños

Hard money campaign money that is subject to regulations by the FEC (p. 208)
Fondos fiscalizados dinero de campaña que está sujeto a las regulaciones de la FEC
Hardliners those who fight to maintain the status quo (p. 661 )
Radical los que luchan por mantener el status quo
Heterogeneous of another or different race, family or kind; composed of a mix of elements (p. 612)
Hetereogéneo de diferente raza, familia o especie; compuesto por una mezcla de elementos

\section*{I}

Ideological parties parties based on a particular set of beliefs, a comprehensive view of social, economic, and political matters (p. 137)
Partidos ideológicos partidos que se basan en un conjunto determinado de creencias, un punto de vista comprehensivo sobre asuntos sociales, económicos y políticos
Immigrant those people legally admitted as permanent residents of a country (p. 612)
Inmigrante persona que es admitida legalmente en calidad de residente permanente de un país
Impeach to bring formal charges against a public official; the House of Representatives has the sole power to impeach civil officers of the United States (p. 319)
Impugnar fincar cargos formales en contra de un funcionario público; la Cámara de Representantes tienen el exclusivo poder de impugnar a los funcionarios públicos de los Estados Unidos
Imperial presidency term used to describe a President as an "emperor" who acts without consulting Congress or acts in secrecy to evade or deceive Congress; often used in reference to Richard Nixon's presidency (p. 403)
Presidencia imperial término utilizado para describir a un Presidente como "emperador", quien actúa sin consultar al Congreso o de manera secreta para evadirlo o engañarlo
Implied powers those delegated powers of the National Government that are suggested by the expressed powers set out in the Constitution; those "necessary and proper" to carry out the expressed powers; see delegated powers, expressed powers (pp. 96, 296)
Poderes implícitos aquellos poderes delegados del gobierno nacional que se sugieren o están implícitos por los poderes explícitos; aquellos que son "necesarios y apropiados" para realizar los poderes explícitos; ver delegated powers/poderes delegados, expressed powers/poderes explícitos
Import quota a limit put on the amount of a commodity that can be imported into a country (p. 696)
Cuota de importación límite sobre la cantidad de un producto que se puede importar a un país
Income tax a tax levied on the income of individuals and/or corporations (p. 763) Impuesto sobre la renta gravamen sobre el ingreso de los individuos y/o corporaciones Incorporation the process by which a State establishes a city as a legal body (p. 749) Incorporación proceso mediante el cual un estado establece a una ciudad como un cuerpo legal Incumbent the current officeholder (pp. 131, 280)
Titular funcionario público actual

Independent agencies additional agencies created by Congress located outside the Cabinet departments (p. 441)
Oficinas independientes agencias adicionales creadas por el Congreso y que se ubican fuera de los departamentos del Gabinete
Independent executive agencies agencies headed by a single administrator with regional subunits, but lacking Cabinet status (p. 442)
Oficinas ejecutivas independientes agencias dirigidas por un solo administrador que tiene subunidades operativas regionales pero que carece del estatus del Gabinete
Independent regulatory commissions independent agencies created by Congress, designed to regulate important aspects of the nation's economy, largely beyond the reach of presidential control (p. 445)
Comisiones regulatorias independientes agencias independientes cuya función es regular aspectos importantes de la economía de la nación, en su mayoría fuera del control y dirección del Presidente Independents a term used to describe people who have no party affiliation (p. 177)
Independientes término usado para describir a las personas que no están afiliadas a un partido Indictment a formal complaint before a grand jury which charges the accused with one or more crimes (p. 594)
Denuncia queja formal que el fiscal expone ante un gran jurado, que incluye cargos al acusado por uno o más crímenes Inferior courts the lower federal courts, beneath the Supreme Court (p. 521)
Cortes inferiores las cortes federales menores, que están por debajo de la Corte Suprema Inflation a general increase in prices throughout the economy (474)

Inflación incremento general de precios en la economía
Information a formal charge filed by a prosecutor without the action of a grand jury (pp. 595, 729)
Información acusación oficial presentada por un acusador sin acción de parte del jurado Inherent powers powers the Constitution is presumed to have delegated to the National Government because it is the government of a sovereign state within the world community (pp. 97, 296)
Poderes inherentes aquellos poderes delegados del gobierno nacional que le pertenecen de manera inherente, debido a que es el gobierno de un estado soberano de la comunidad mundial Inheritance tax a tax levied on the beneficiary's share of an estate (p. 764)
Impuesto sobre la herencia gravamen sobre lo que hereda un beneficiario Initiative a process in which a certain number of qualified voters sign petitions in favor of a proposed statute or constitutional amendment, which then goes directly to the ballot (p. 712)

Iniciativa proceso en el que determinado número de votantes calificados firman peticiones a favor de una propuesta que se pasa después directamente a la papeleta electoral Injunction a court order that forces or limits the performance of some act by a private individual or by a public official (pp. 165,562 ) Mandato orden judicial que fuerza o limita el desempeño de determinado acto, mediante la intervención de un individuo privado o un funcionario público Integration the process of bringing a group into equal membership in society (p. 620)
Integración proceso mediante el cual se ofrece a un grupo participación igualitaria dentro de la sociedad Interest a charge for borrowed money, generally a percentage of the amount borrowed (p. 462)
Interés cargo que se hace por el dinero prestado, por lo general es un porcentaje de la cantidad prestada
Interest group private organizations whose members share certain views and work to shape public policy (pp. 221, 242) Grupo de interés organizaciones privadas cuyos miembros comparten determinados puntos de vista y trabajan para dar forma a las políticas públicas
Interstate compact formal agreement entered into with the consent of Congress, between or among States, or between a State and a foreign state (p. 111)
Pacto interestatal acuerdo formal suscrito con el consentimiento del Congreso, entre dos estados o entre un estado y un estado extranjero, el cual está autorizado por la Constitución (Artículo I, Sección 10)
Involuntary servitude forced labor (p. 583)
Servidumbre involuntaria trabajo forzado
Isolationism a purposeful refusal to become generally involved in the affairs of the rest of the world (p. 482)
Aislacionismo rechazo voluntario a verse involucrado, de manera general, en los asuntos del resto del mundo
Item veto a governor may veto one or more items in a bill without rejecting the entire measure ( p .724 )
Veto de artículo un gobernador puede vetar uno o más artículos de una propuesta de ley, sin rechazar toda la medida

\section*{J}

Jim Crow law a law that separates people on the basis of race, aimed primarily at African Americans (p. 619)
Ley Jim Crow ley que separa a un grupo de personas del resto de la gente con base en la raza, dirigido principalmente a los afroamericanos
Joint committee legislative committee composed of members of both houses (p. 341)
Comité conjunto comité legislativo compuesto por miembros de ambas cámaras
Joint resolution a proposal for action that has the force of law when passed; usually deals with special circumstances or temporary matters (p. 344)
Resolución conjunta propuesta de acción que tiene el poder de una ley cuando se aprueba; a menudo tiene que ver con circunstancias especiales o asuntos temporales Judicial activism a judicial philosophy in which supporters believe that judges should interpret and apply provisions in the Constitution and in statute law in the light of ongoing changes in conditions and values (p. 524)
Activismo judicial filosofía judicial que argumenta que los jueces deberían interpretar y aplicar las condiciones de la Constitución y del derecho escrito considerando los cambios progresivos de condiciones y valores Judicial power the power to interpret laws, to determine their meaning, and to settle disputes within the society (p. 5) Poder judicial poder para interpretar las leyes, determinar su significado y resolver las disputas que surgen dentro de la sociedad

Judicial restraint a judicial philosophy in which supporters believe that judges should decide cases based on the original intent of the Framers or those who enacted the statute(s) involved in a case, or on precedent (p.524)
Restricción judicial filosofía judicial que argumenta que los jueces deberían tomar decisiones sobre sus casos basándose en la intención original de los creadores de la Declaración de Derechos o los que promulgan los estatutos del caso, o en el precedente
Judicial review the power of a court to determine the constitutionality of a governmental action (p. 73)
Revisión judicial poder de una corte para determinar la constitucionalidad de una acción gubernamental Jurisdiction the authority of a court to hear a case (p. 522)
Jurisdicción autoridad de una corte para atender (juzgar y decidir) un caso Jury a body of persons selected according to law who hear evidence and decide questions of fact in a court case (p. 728)
Jurado conjunto de personas seleccionadas de acuerdo con la ley para que escuchan la evidencia y deciden cuestiones de hechos en un caso de la corte
Jus sanguinis the law of blood, which determines citizenship based on one's parents' citizenship (p. 633)
Jus sanguinis ley de la sangre que define la ciudadanía con base en la ciudadanía de los padres Jus soli the law of soil, which determines citizenship based on where a person is born (p. 633)
Jus soli ley del territorio que determina la ciudadanía con base en el lugar de nacimiento de la persona
Justice of the Peace a judge who stands on the lowest level of the State judicial system and presides over justice courts (p. 732)

Juez de paz juez que está en el nivel inferior del sistema judicial estatal y preside las cortes de justicia.

\section*{K}

Keynote address speech given at a party convention to set the tone for the convention and the campaign to come (p. 873)
Discurso de apertura alocución dada en una convención de partido para establecer el tono de la convención y de la futura campaña

\section*{L}

Labor union an organization of workers who share the same type of job, or who work in the same industry, and press for government policies that will benefit their members (p. 248) Sindicato laboral organización de trabajadores que comparten el mismo tipo de trabajo, o que laboran en la misma industria y que presiona por lograr políticas gubernamentales que beneficien a sus miembros
Laissez-faire theory a theory which suggests that government should play a very limited role in society (p. 682) Teoría del dejar hacer teoría que sugiere que el gobierno debería desempeñar un papel limitado dentro de la sociedad Law of supply and demand a law which states that when supplies of goods and services become plentiful, prices tend to drop. When supplies become scarcer, prices tend to rise (p. 681)
Ley de la oferta y la demanda ley que establece que cuando los suministros de bienes y servicios son abundantes, los precios tienden a bajar. Cuando los suministros escasean, los precios tienden a subir

Legal tender any kind of money that a creditor must, by law, accept in payment for debts (p. 303)
Moneda de curso legal cualquier moneda que un acreedor debe aceptar, por ley, como pago de una deuda
Legislative power the power to make a law and to frame public policies (p. 5)
Poder legislativo poder para hacer una ley y redactar políticas públicas Legitimacy the belief of the people that a government has the right to make public policy (p. 650)
Legitimidad creecia que un gobierno tiene el derecho de crear políticas públicas Libel false and malicious use of printed words (p. 559)
Libelo utilización falsa y maliciosa de las palabras impresas Liberal constructionist one who argues a broad interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution, particularly those granting powers to the Federal Government (p. 314) Construccionista liberal aquel que argumenta una amplia interpretación de las estipulaciones de la Constitución, en particular las que otorgan poderes al gobierno federal Limited government basic principle of American government which states that government is restricted in what it may do, and each individual has rights that government cannot take away; see constitutionalism, popular sovereignty (pp. 31, 69, 709)

Gobierno limitado principio básico del sistema estadounidense de gobierno que establece que el gobierno tiene restricciones en cuanto a lo que puede hacer, y en el cual cada individuo tiene ciertos derechos que el gobierno no puede enajenar; ver constitutionalism / constitucionalismo, popular sovereignty/soberanía popular
Line agency an agency which performs the tasks for which the organization exists (p. 430)
Agencia del ramo oficina que desempeña las tareas para las que la organización existe Line-item veto a President's cancellation of specific dollar amounts (line items) from a congressional spending bill; instituted by a 1996 congressional act, but struck down by a 1998 Supreme Court decision (p. 418)
Veto de partida cancelación presidencial de ciertas cantidades de dólares (partidas) de una cuenta de gastos del Congreso; este veto se instituyó en 1996 mediante una ley del Congreso, pero la Suprema Corte lo derogó en 1998
Literacy a person's ability to read or write (p. 161)
Alfabetismo capacidad de una persona para leer o escribir
Lobbying activities by which group pressures are brought to bear on legislators, the legislative process, and all aspects of the public-policy-making process (p. 254)
Cabildeo actividades mediante las que las presiones de un grupo se aplican a los legisladores y al proceso legislativo, incluyendo todos los métodos utilizados por el grupo para dirigir las presiones hacia todos los aspectos del proceso de creación de políticas públicas Lobbyist a person who tries to persuade public officials to do those things that interest groups want them to do (p. 254)
Cabildero persona que intenta persuadir a funcionarios para realizar cosas que ciertos grupos de interés quieren que se lleven a cabo

\section*{\(M\)}

Magistrate a justice who handles minor civil complaints and misdemeanor cases that arise in an urban setting (p. 733)

Magistrado juez que atiende a demandas civiles menores y casos de faltas leves que surgen en un contexto urbano
Magna Carta Great Charter forced upon King John of England by his barons in 1215 ; established that the power of the monarchy was not absolute and guaranteed trial by jury and due process of law to the nobility (p. 31)
Carta Magna constitución que los barones impusieron al rey John de Inglaterra en 1215; estableció el principio de que el poder del monarca no era absoluto y garantizó los derechos fundamentales, como el de un juicio con jurado y procesos establecidos legales para la nobleza Majority leader the floor leader of the party that holds the majority of seats in each house of Congress (p. 336)
Líder mayoritario portavoz del partido político que posee la mayor cantidad de escaños en cada cámara del Congreso Majority opinion officially called the Opinion of the Court; announces the Court's decision in a case and sets out the reasoning upon which it is based (p. 537)
Opinión mayoritaria llamada oficialmente Opinión de la Corte; anuncia la decisión de la Corte sobre el caso y describe el razonamiento sobre el que ésta se basa
Majority rule in a democracy, the majority of the people will be right more often than they will be wrong, and will be right more often than will any one person or small group (p. 21)
Gobierno por mayoría en una democracia, la mayoría de personas estarán en lo correcto con más frecuencia, y estarán en lo correcto con más frecuencia que una sola persona o un grupo pequeño
Mandate the instructions or commands a constituency gives to its elected officials (p. 220)
Mandato las intrucciones \(u\) órdenes que un grupo de votantnes da a sus funcionarios electos
Mass media those means of communication that reach large audiences, especially television, radio, printed publications, and the Internet (p. 218)
Medios masivos de comunicación aquellos medios de comunicación que llegan a grandes audiencias, sobre todo la radio, televisión, publicaciones impresas e Internet
Mayor-council government the oldest and most widely used type of city government-an elected mayor as the chief executive and an elected council as its legislative body (p. 750)
Gobierno de consejo-alcalde el más antiguo y más utilizado tipo de gobierno municipal: un alcalde electo como Presidente y un consejo electo como su cuerpo legislativo
Medicaid a program administered by the State to provide medical insurance to low-income families (p. 757)
Medicaid programa administrado por el Senado para proporcionar seguro médico a las familias de bajos ingresos
Medium a means of communication; something that transmits information (p. 228)
Medio un medio de comunicación; algo que transmite información
Mercantilism an economic and political theory emphasizing money as the chief source of wealth to increase the absolute power of the monarchy and the nation (p. 650)
Mercantilismo teoría económica y política que destaca el dinero como la fuente primaria de riqueza para incrementar el poder absoluto de la monarquía y de la nación
Metropolitan area a city and the area around it (p. 755)
Área metropolitana la ciudad y el área que le circunda Minister cabinet members, most commonly of the House of Commons (p. 667)

Ministro miembro del gabinete，y más frecuentemente de la Cámara de los Comunes Minority leader the floor leader of the party that holds the minority of seats in each house of Congress（p．336）
Líder minoritario portavoz del partido político que posee la menor cantidad de escaños en cada cámara del Congreso
Miranda Rule the constitutional rights which police must read to a suspect before questioning can occur（p．599）
Ley Miranda derechos constitucionales que la policía debe especificar a un sospechoso antes de que se le pueda interrogar
Misdemeanor a lesser offense，punishable by a small fine and／ or a short jail term（p．728）
Falta leve delito menor que se castiga mediante una pequeña multa o un breve período de encarcelamiento
Monopoly a firm that is the only source of a product or service （p．681）
Monopolio empresa que es la única fuente de un producto o servicio
Municipality an urban political unit within a township that usually exists as a separate government entity（p．747）
Municipalidad unidad política urbana dentro de un muni－ cipio que por lo general existe como una entidad guberna－ mental independiente

\section*{N}

National convention meeting at which a party＇s delegates vote to pick their presidential and vice－presidential candidates （p．380）
Convención nacional Reunión en la que los delegados de un partido votan para elegir a sus candidatos a la presidencia y vicepresidencia
National popular vote plan proposal for electing the President whereby each State＇s election laws would provide for all of the State＇s electoral votes to be awarded to the winner of the national popular vote and enter into an interstate compact agreeing to elect the President by national popular vote （p．394）
Plan para el voto nacional popular propuesta para elegir al Presidente de la nación mediante la cual las leyes electora－ les de cada Estado decretan que los votos electorales sean otorgados al ganador del voto popular nacional y que de esta manera se llegue a un acuerdo interestatal donde se elija al presidente por voto popular NATO（North American Treaty Organization）an alliance formed to protect the freedom and security of its members through political and military action（p．506）
OTAN（Organización del Tratado del Atlántico Norte）alianza formada para proteger la libertad y seguridad de sus miem－ bros a través de medidas políticas y militares Naturalization the legal process by which citizens of one coun－ try become citizens of another（pp．309，633）
Naturalización proceso legal mediante el cual los ciudadanos de un país se convierten en ciudadanos de otro Necessary and Proper Clause constitutional clause that gives Congress the power to make all laws＂necessary and proper＂ for executing its powers；see implied powers（p．312）
Cláusula de necesidad y conveniencia cláusula constitu－ cional que otorga al Congreso el poder de expedir leyes ＂necesarias y convenientes＂para el ejercicio de sus poderes； ver implied powers／poderes implícitos
New Jersey Plan plan presented as an alternative to the Virginia Plan at the Constitutional Convention；called for a unicameral legislature in which each State would be equally represented（p．55）

Plan Nueva Jersey plan presentado en la Convención Con－ stitucional como una alternativa al Plan Virginia；proponía una legislatura unicameral en la que cada estado estuviera representado de forma equitativa Nomination the process of candidate selection in an electoral system（p．184）
Nominación proceso de selección de candidatos en una democracia
Nonpartisan election election in which candidates are not identified by party labels（p．190）
Elección no partidista elección en la que los candidatos no están identificados por membretes de partidos
North American Free Trade Agreement an agreement which removed trade restrictions among the United States，Canada， and Mexico，thus increasing cross－border trade（p．697）
Tratado de Libre Comercio de Norteamérica acuerdo que elimina las restricciones comerciales entre los Estados Uni－ dos，Canadá y México，con lo cual se incrementa el comercio transfronterizo

\section*{（0）}

Off－year election congressional election that occurs between presidential election years（pp．170，275）
Elección intermedia elección del Congreso que ocurre entre las elecciones presidenciales Oligarchy a form of government in which the power to rule is held by a small，usually self－appointed elite（p．14）
Oligarquía forma de gobierno en la que el poder de gobernar lo ejerce una elite pequeña y por lo general autonombrada
Open market operations the processes by which the Federal Reserve buys or sells government securities from and to the nation＇s banks in order to alter the money supply（p．476）
Operaciones de mercado abierto proceso por el cual la Reserva Federal compra y vende valores del Estado a los bancos del país para controlar la cantidad de dinero en circulación
Open primary a party－nominating election in which any quali－ fied voter can take part（p．188）
Elección primaria abierta elección partidista de nominación en la que cualquier votante calificado puede tomar parte Opinion leader any person who，for any reason，has an unusu－ ally strong influence on the views of others（p．218）
Líder de opinión cualquier persona que por alguna razón tiene una poderosa influencia en los puntos de vista de otras Ordinance power power of the President to issue executive orders；originates from the Constitution and acts of Congress （p．406）
Poder de decreto poder del Presidente de emitir órdenes ejecutivas；se fundamenta en la Constitución y en los actos del Congreso
Original jurisdiction the power of a court to hear a case first， before any other court（p．523）
Jurisdicción original poder de una corte de atender un caso antes que otra corte
Oversight function review by legislative committees of the poli－ cies and programs of the executive branch（p．288）
Función de vigilancia revisión de las políticas y los pro－ gramas de la rama ejecutiva por parte de los comités legislativos

P
Pardon release from the punishment or legal consequences of a crime, by the President (in a federal case) or a governor (in a State case) (pp. 419, 724)
Perdón exoneración del castigo o de las consecuencias legales de un crimen que lleva a cabo el Presidente (en el caso federal) o el gobernador (en el caso estatal)
Parliamentary government a form of government in which the executive branch is made up of the prime minister, or premier, and that official's cabinet (p. 18)
Gobierno parlamentario forma de gobierno en la que la rama ejecutiva está conformada por el primer ministro, o premier, y el gabinete oficial
Parochial church-related, as in a parochial school (p. 552) Parroquial relacionado con la iglesia, como las escuelas parroquiales
Parole the release of a prisoner short of the complete term of the original sentence (p. 725)
Liberación bajo palabra libertad condicional de un prisionero poco antes de que termine el lapso de su sentencia original Partisan lawmaker who owes his/her first allegiance to his/her political party and votes according to the party line (p. 287)
Partidista legislador que le debe fidelidad, en primer lugar, a su partido político, por lo que vota de acuerdo con la línea del partido
Partisanship government action based on firm allegiance to a political party (p. 124)
Partidarismo acción gubernamental basada en la vigorosa fidelidad a un partido político Party caucus a closed meeting of a party's House or Senate members; also called a party conference (p. 335)
Junta de dirigentes de partido reunión cerrada de los miembros de la Cámara de Representantes o del Senado; también se conoce como Conferencia de partido Party identification loyalty of people to a political party (p. 177)

Identificación con el partido lealtad de la gente hacia un partido político
Patent a license issued to an inventor granting the exclusive right to manufacture, use, or sell his or her invention for a limited period of time (p. 307)
Patente licencia expedida a un inventor para garantizar el derecho exclusivo de manufactura, uso o venta de su invento, durante un tiempo limitado Patronage the practice of giving jobs to supporters and friends (p. 443)

Patrocinio práctica de dar trabajo a los simpatizantes y amigos
Payroll tax a tax imposed on nearly all employers and their employees, and on self-employed persons-the amounts owed by employees withheld from their paychecks (p. 460)
Impuesto sobre la nómina gravamen tasado a casi todos los empleadores y sus empleados, así como a las personas autoempleadas; cantidad debida por los empleados que se les descuenta de su salario
Peer group people with whom one regularly associates, including friends, classmates, neighbors, and co-workers (p. 218)
Grupo de camaradas gente con la que uno se asocia regularmente y que incluye a socios, amigos, compañeros de clase, vecinos y compañeros de trabajo
Perjury the act of lying under oath (p. 320)

Perjurio el hecho de mentir bajo juramento
Persona non grata an unwelcome person; used to describe recalled diplomatic officials (p. 414)
Persona non grata una persona que no es bienvenida; se utiliza para describir a los funcionarios diplomáticos destituidos Petition of Right document prepared by Parliament and signed by King Charles I of England in 1628; challenged the idea of the divine right of kings and declared that even the monarch was subject to the laws of the land (p. 31)
Solicitud de Derecho documento preparado por el Parlamento y firmado por el rey Charles I de Inglaterra en 1628; cuestionó la idea del derecho divino de los reyes y declaró que incluso el monarca está sujeto a las leyes de la tierra Picketing patrolling of a business site by workers who are on strike (p. 565)
Vigilancia manifestación de los trabajadores en el sitio donde están en huelga
Pigeon-holed expression describing how most bills introduced in each session of Congress are buried, put away, or never acted upon (p. 345)
Dar carpetazo expresión que describe cómo proyectos de ley que se presentan ante el Congreso se olvidan, se ponen a un lado o nunca se llevan a cabo
Plaintiff in civil law, the party who brings a suit or some other legal action against another (the defendant) in court (p. 523) Demandante en el derecho civil, la parte que entabla un juicio \(u\) otra acción legal contra otra (el demandado) en una corte
Platform a political party's formal statement of basic principles, stands on major issues, and objectives (p. 382)
Plataforma un enunciado formal por parte de un partido político respecto a sus principios básicos, opiniones sobre cuestiones políticas importantes y objetivos
Plebeians the common folk in the Roman Republic (p. 647) Plebeyos personas que pertenecían a la plebe en la República Romana
Plurality in an election, the number of votes that the leading candidate obtains over the next highest candidate ( p . 127)
Mayoría en una elección, el número de votos que el candidato que va a la punta tiene de ventaja sobre su competidor más cercano
Pocket veto type of veto a chief executive may use after a legislature has adjourned; when the chief executive does not sign or reject a bill within the time allowed to do so; see veto (pp. 356, 418)
Veto indirecto tipo de veto que el Presidente puede utilizar después de que una legislatura se suspende; se aplica cuando un Presidente no firma formalmente o rechaza una propuesta de ley, dentro del tiempo comprendido para eso; ver Veto
Police power the authority of each State to act to protect and promote the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare of its people (pp. 580, 717)
Facultad policial autoridad de cada estado para proteger y promover la salud pública, la seguridad, la moral y el bienestar general de su pueblo Political Action Committee the political extension of specialinterest groups which have a major stake in public policy (p. 202)

Comité de acción política extensión política de grupos de interés especiales, los cuales tienen un gran interés en la política pública

Political efficacy one＇s own influence or effectiveness on poli－ tics（p．172）
Eficacia política la influencia o eficacia individual en la política Political party a group of persons who seek to control govern－ ment through the winning of elections and the holding of public office（p．122）
Partido político grupo de personas que buscan controlar el gobierno mediante el triunfo en las elecciones y la conserva－ ción de los puestos públicos
Political socialization the process by which people gain their political attitudes and opinions（p．173）
Socialización política proceso mediante el que la gente obtiene sus actitudes y opiniones políticas Political spectrum the range of political views（ p .123 ）
Espectro político gama de visiones políticas
Politico lawmaker who attempts to balance the basic elements of the trustee，delegate，and partisan roles；see trustee，del－ egate，partisan（p．287）
Político legislador que intenta equilibrar los elementos bási－ cos de los miembros del directorio，los delegados y los roles partidistas；ver trustee／independiente，delegate／delegado， partisan／partidista
Poll book list of all registered voters in each precinct（p．160） Padrón electoral lista de todos los votantes registrados en cada distrito Poll tax a special tax，demanded by States，as a condition of voting（p．154） Impuesto sobre el padrón electoral gravamen especial， exigido por los estados como una condición para votar
Polling place the place where the voters who live in a certain precinct go to vote（p．195）
Casilla electoral lugar donde los votantes que viven en cierto distrito acuden a votar
Popular sovereignty basic principle of the American system of government which asserts that the people are the source of any and all governmental power，and government can exist only with the consent of the governed（pp．41，69，709）
Soberanía popular principio básico del sistema estadoun－ idense de gobierno que establece que el pueblo es la fuente de todos los poderes gubernamentales，y que el gobierno sólo puede existir con el consentimiento de los gobernados Precedent court decision that stands as an example to be fol－ lowed in future，similar cases（pp．524，728）
Precedente decisión judicial que se toma como un ejemplo a seguir en el futuro para casos similares
Precinct the smallest unit of election administration；a voting district（pp．146，195）
Distrito unidad mínima de la administración electoral；dis－ trito de votación Preclearance mandated by the Voting Rights Act of 1965，the prior approval by the Justice Department of changes to or new election laws by certain States（p．167）
Preautorización ordenada por la Ley de Derechos de Votos de 1965，respecto a la aprobación anterior，por parte del Departamento de Justicia，de los cambios en las leyes electo－ rales existentes o nuevas en ciertos estados
Preliminary hearing the first step in a major criminal prosecu－ tion where the judge decides if the evidence is enough to hold the person for action by the grand jury or the prosecu－ tor（p．732） Audiencia preliminar el primer paso del procesamiento de un crimen mayor，en el que el juez decide si la evidencia basta para que la persona comparezca ante el gran jurado o ante el fiscal para ser sujeto de una acción
Presentment a formal accusation brought by the grand jury on its own motion，rather than that of the prosecutor（p．594）
Declaración del Jurado una acusación formal traída por el jurado de acusación en vez del acusador
President of the Senate the presiding officer of a senate；in Congress，the Vice President of the United States；in a State＇s legislature，either the lieutenant governor or a senator （p．333）
Presidente del Senado funcionario que preside un Senado； en el Congreso es el Vicepresidente de los Estados Unidos；en la legislatura estatal，cualquier vicegobernador o un senador
President pro tempore the member of the United States Senate， or of the upper house of a State＇s legislature，chosen to pre－ side in the absence of the president of the Senate（p．334）
Presidente pro tempore miembro del Senado de Estados Unidos，o de la cámara superior de la legislatura estatal， elegido para ser Presidente，en caso de ausencia del Presi－ dente del Senado Presidential elector a person elected by the voters to represent them in making a formal selection of the Vice President and President（p．374）
Elector presidencial persona elegida por los votantes para representarlos en la selección formal del Presidente y Vicepresidente
Presidential government a form of government in which the executive and legislative branches of the government are separate，independent，and coequal（p．17）
Gobierno presidencial forma de gobierno en la que las ramas ejecutivas y legislativas del gobierno están separadas，son independientes y están en la misma jerarquía
Presidential primary an election in which a party＇s voters（1） choose State party organization＇s delegates to their party＇s national convention，and／or（2）express a preference for their party＇s presidential nomination（p．378）
Elección presidencial primaria elección en la que los votantes de un partido：（1）eligen a varios o a todos los delegados de la organización partidista estatal para la convención nacional de su partido，y／o（2）expresan una preferencia por alguno de los distintos contendientes para la nominación presidencial de su partido Presidential succession scheme by which a presidential vacancy is filled（p．370）
Sucesión presidencial plan mediante el cual se resuelve la vacante presidencial Presidential Succession Act of 1947 law specifying the order of presidential succession following the Vice President（p．370） Ley para la sucesión presidencial de 1947 ley que espe－ cifica el orden para la sucesión presidencial，después del Vicepresidente
Preventive detention a law which allows federal judges to order that an accused felon be held，without bail，when there is good reason to believe that he or she will commit yet another serious crime before trial（p．603）
Arresto preventivo ley que permite a los jueces federales ordenar que un acusado de felonía sea arrestado，sin derecho a fianza，cuando existen buenas razones para creer que com－ eterá otro crimen grave antes del juicio
Prior restraint the government cannot curb ideas before they are expressed（p．562）

Prohibición anticipada el gobierno no puede reprimir las ideas antes de que se expresen
Privatization the process of returning national enterprises to private ownership (p. 690)
Privatización regresar las empresas nacionales a la iniciativa privada Privileges and Immunities Clause constitution's stipulation (Article IV, Section 2) that all citizens are entitled to certain "privileges and immunities," regardless of their State of residence; no State can draw unreasonable distinctions between its own residents and those persons who happen to live in other States (p. 114)
Cláusula de privilegios e inmunidades estipulación constitucional (Artículo IV, Sección 2), en que se conceden ciertos "privilegios e inmunidades" a los ciudadanos, sin importar su estado de residencia; ningún estado puede hacer distinciones no razonables entre sus propios residentes y aquellas personas que vivan en otros estados Probable Cause reasonable grounds, a reasonable suspicion of crime (p. 586)
Causa probable fundamentos razonables, sospecha razonable de un crimen
Procedural due process the government must employ fair procedures and methods (p. 578)
Procesos legales establecidos el gobierno debe emplear procedimientos y métodos justos Process of incorporation the process of incorporating, or including, most of the guarantees in the Bill of Rights into the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause (p. 549)
Proceso de incorporación proceso de integrar, o incluir, la mayor parte de las garantías de la Declaración de los derechos en la Cláusula de proceso legal establecido de la 14a enmienda
Progressive tax a type of tax proportionate to income (p. 459) Impuesto progresivo tipo de impuesto que es proporcional con el ingreso
Project grant one type of federal grants-in-aid; made for specific projects to States, localities, and private agencies who apply for them (p. 109)
Subvención de proyecto tipo de subvención de fondos públicos; proporcionada para proyectos específicos de los estados, las localidades y las oficinas privadas que la solicitan Property tax a tax levied on real and personal property (p. 764) Impuesto a la propiedad gravamen sobre los bienes raíces y la propiedad personal Proportional plan proposal by which each presidential candidate would receive the same share of a State's electoral vote as he or she received in the State's popular vote (p. 392)
Plan proporcional propuesta para seleccionar electores presidenciales, mediante la cual cada candidato recibiría la misma cantidad de votos electorales de un estado que recibió durante la votación popular del estado Proportional representation rule applied in Democratic primaries whereby any candidate who wins at least 15 percent of the votes gets the number of State Democratic convention delegates based on his or her share of that primary vote (p. 37)

Regla de la representación proporcional procedimiento aplicado en las elecciones primarias del partido Demócrata, en el cual cualquier candidato que gane al menos el \(15 \%\) de los votos emitidos en una elección primaria, obtienen el número de delegados a la convención estatal demócrata, que le corresponda a esa proporción de las primarias Proprietary organized by a proprietor (a person to whom the king had made a grant of land) (p. 33)
Propiedad organizada por un dueño (persona a quien el rey le ha otorgado tierras)
Prorogue adjourn, as in a legislative session (p. 271)
Prórroga aplazamiento, como en la sesión legislativa
Protectionism the practice of national governments trying to control imports to protect native industries from foreign competition (p. 696)
Proteccionismo práctica en la que gobiernos nacionales tratan de controlar las importaciones para proteger a sus industrias de la competencia extranjera
Public affairs those events and issues that concern the people at large; e.g., politics, public issues, and the making of public policies (pp. 215, 245)
Asuntos públicos aquellos acontecimientos y asuntos que importan al público en general, por ejemplo: la política, los temas públicos y la determinación de las políticas públicas
Public agenda the public issues on which the people's attention is focused (p. 234)
Agenda pública asuntos públicos sobre los cuales está enfocada la atención de las personas Public debt all of the money borrowed by the government and not yet repaid, plus the accrued interest on that money; also called the national debt or federal debt (pp. 301, 466)
Deuda pública todo el dinero que ha pedido prestado el gobierno a lo largo de los años y que todavía no paga, además del interés acumulado sobre ese capital; también se conoce como deuda nacional o deuda federal Public-interest group an interest group that seeks to institute certain public policies of benefit to all or most people in this country, whether or not they belong to or support that organization (p. 252)
Grupo de interés público grupo de interés que busca instituir determinadas políticas públicas de beneficio para la mayoría de las personas de su país, sin importar si pertenecen o apoyan a la organización
Public opinion the complex collection of the opinions of many different people; the sum of all their views (p. 215)
Opinión pública colección compleja de opiniones de diversas personas; la suma de todos sus puntos de vista Public opinion poll device that attempts to collect information by asking people questions (p. 222)
Encuestas de opinión pública dispositivos que intentan recolectar información al hacerle preguntas a las personas
Public policy all of the many goals that a government pursues in all of the many areas of human affairs in which it is involved (pp. 4, 242)
Politicas públicas todas las metas que un gobierno se fija, así como los distintos cursos de acción que toma en sus intentos por llevar a cabo esos objetivos
Purge the process of reviewing lists of registered voters and removing the names of those no longer eligible to vote; a purification (p. 160)
Purga proceso de revisión de las listas de los votantes registrados y de la eliminación de los nombres que ya no son elegibles para votar; una depuración

\section*{a}

Quorum least number of members who must be present for a legislative body to conduct business; majority (p. 348)

Quórum mínimo número de miembros que debe estar presente para que un cuerpo legislativo funcione; mayoría
Quota a rule requiring certain numbers of jobs or promotions for members of certain groups (p. 628)
Cuota regla que requiere que determinado número de trabajos o ascensos se den en miembros de ciertos grupos Quota sample a sample deliberately constructed to reflect several of the major characteristics of a given population (p. 224)

Muestra de cuota muestra deliberadamente hecha para reflejar ciertas características importantes de una determinada población

\section*{R}

Random sample a certain number of randomly selected people who live in a certain number of randomly selected places (p. 224)

Muestra aleatoria determinado número de gente seleccionada al azar y que vive en ciertos lugares seleccionados de manera aleatoria
Ratification formal approval, final consent to the effectiveness of a constitution, constitutional amendment, or treaty (pp. 48, 79)

Ratificación aprobación formal, consentimiento definitivo de la eficacia de una constitución, de una enmienda constitucional o de un tratado
Reapportion redistribute, as in seats in a legislative body (p. 274)

Reasignación redistribución, como los escaños en un cuerpo legislativo
Recall a petition procedure by which voters may remove an elected official from office before the completion of his or her regular term (p. 721)
Retirada inesperada procedimiento de petición por el que los votantes puedan destituir a un funcionario oficial antes de terminar su mandato Recess a time when both houses of Congress temporarily suspend business (p. 271)
Receso período en que ambas cámaras del Congreso suspenden actividades temporalmente Recession an absence of economic growth (p. 474)
Recesión ausencia de crecimiento económico Recognition the exclusive power of a President to legally recognize (establish formal diplomatic relations with) foreign states (p. 414 )
Reconocimiento el poder exclusivo de un Presidente para reconocer (establecer relaciones diplomáticas) a estados extranjeros Record a transcript of proceedings made in trial court (p. 531) Registro trasunto de los procesos llevados a cabo en una corte tribunal Redress satisfaction of a claim payment (p. 540)
Resarcir satisfacer una queja, por lo general mediante un pago
Referendum a process by which a legislative measure is referred to the State's voters for final approval or rejection (p. 719)

Referendo proceso mediante el cual una medida legislativa se consulta con los votantes de los estados para su aprobación o rechazo final Refugee one who leaves his or her homeland to seek protection from war, persecution, or some other danger (p. 615)

Refugiado persona que abandona su hogar para buscar protección contra la guerra, la persecución o algún otro peligro
Regional security alliances treaties in which the U.S. and other countries involved have agreed to take collective action to meet aggression in a particular part of the world (p. 506)
Alianzas regionales de seguridad tratados mediante los cuales los Estados Unidos y otros países han acordado actuar colectivamente para enfrentar una agresión en una determinada parte del mundo Registration a procedure of voter identification intended to prevent fraudulent voting (p. 159)
Registro procedimiento de identificación del voto pensado para evitar votaciones fraudulentas Regressive tax a tax levied at a flat rate, without regard to the level of a taxpayer's income or ability to pay (pp. 461, 763)
Impuesto regresivo gravamen con una tasa semejante, sin considerar el nivel de ingreso de los contribuyentes o su capacidad para pagarlo Representative government system of government in which public policies are made by officials selected by the voters and held accountable in periodic elections; see democracy (p. 31)

Gobierno representativo sistema de gobierno en el que las políticas públicas están elaboradas por funcionarios elegidos por los votantes y que rinden cuentas en elecciones periódicas; ver democracy/democracia
Reprieve an official postponement of the execution of a sentence; see pardon (pp. 419, 725)
Suspensión un aplazamiento oficial de la ejecución de una sentencia; ver pardon/perdón Reservation public land set aside by a government for use by Native American tribes (p. 614)
Reservación terrenos públicos que un gobierno reserva para el uso de las tribus nativas estadounidenses
Reserved powers those powers that the Constitution does not grant to the National Government and does not deny to the States (p. 99)
Poderes reservados aquellos poderes que la Constitución no otorga al gobierno nacional, pero que tampoco niega, al mismo tiempo a los estados Reserve requirement the amount of money the Federal Reserve determines banks must keep in reserve with one of the Federal Reserve Banks (p. 476)
Reserva obligatoria cantidad de dinero que la Reserva Federal determina que los bancos deben mantener en reserva con uno de los Bancos de la Reserva Federal Resolution a measure relating to the business of either house or expressing an opinion; does not have the force of law and does not require the President's signature (p. 344)
Resolución medida relativa al funcionamiento de cualquier Cámara, o una expresión de opinión sobre un asunto; no tiene la fuerza de una ley y no requiere la firma del Presidente Reverse discrimination discrimination against the majority group (p. 628)
Discriminación inversa segregación en contra del grupo mayoritario Rider unpopular provision added to an important bill certain to pass so that it will "ride" through the legislative process (p. 344)

Cláusula adicional provisión poco probable de ser aprobada por méritos propios, que se agrega a un proyecto de ley importante que se tiene la seguridad que será aprobado，así que dicha cláusula＂cabalga＂por todo ese proceso legislativo Right of association the right to associate with others to pro－ mote political，economic，and other social causes（p．572） Derecho de asociación derecho de asociarse con otros para promover causas políticas，sociales，económicas y de otra índole Right of legation the right to send and receive diplomatic representatives（p．485）
Derecho de legación derecho a enviar y recibir represent－ antes diplomáticos Rule of law concept that government and its officers are always subject to the law（p．70）
Gobierno de la ley el concepto en que el gobierno y sus ofi－ ciales estan sujeto a la ley Runoff primary a primary in which the top two vote－getters in the first direct primary face one another（p．190）
Elección primaria complementaria elección primaria en la que los dos candidatos con más votos en la elección primaria directa se enfrentan；el ganador de esa votación se convierte en el nominado

\section*{S}

Sales tax a tax placed on the sale of various commodities，paid by the purchaser（p．762）
Impuesto a las ventas gravamen sobre las ventas de distintos bienes，el cual paga el comprador
Sample a representative slice of the public（p．224）
Muestra una porción representativa del público Search warrant a court order authorizing a search（p．581）
Orden de allanamiento autorización judicial para hacer registros
Secretary an official in charge of a department of government （p．435）
Secretario funcionario a cargo de un departamento de gobierno
Sectionalism a narrow－minded concern for，or devotion to，the interests of one section of a country（p．133）
Regionalismo preocupación estrecha，o devoción por los intereses de una región del país
Sedition the crime of attempting to overthrow the government by force，or to disrupt its lawful activities by violent acts（p．560） Sedición crimen de intentar derrocar al gobierno mediante la fuerza，o de interrumpir las actividades legales por medio de actos violentos
Seditious speech the advocating，or urging，of an attempt to overthrow the government by force，or to disrupt its lawful activities with violence（p．560）
Discurso sedicioso el llamado o el apoyo a un intento de derrocar al gobierno mediante la fuerza，o a la interrupción de actividades legales por medio de la violencia
Segregation the separation of one group from another（p．619）
Segregación separación de un grupo respecto a otro
Select committee legislative committee created for a limited time and for some specific purpose；also known as a special committee（p．340）
Comité selecto comité legislativo creado por un tiempo lim－ itado y para algún propósito específico；también se conoce como comité especial Senatorial courtesy custom that the Senate will not approve a presidential appointment opposed by a majority－party sena－ tor from the State in which the appointee would serve（ p .88 ）

Cortesía senatorial costumbre de que el Senado no aprobará una nominación presidencial，si esa designación no es apro－ bada por el senador del partido mayoritario de ese estado，en donde la persona designada habría de servir
Seniority rule unwritten rule in both houses of Congress reserving the top posts in each chamber，particularly com－ mittee chairmanships，for members with the longest records of service（p．337）
Regla de antigüedad regla no escrita de ambas Cámaras del Congreso，de acuerdo con la cual，los puestos más altos de cada una de ellas los ocuparán aquellos miembros que ten－ gan un historial de servicio más antiguo；se aplica de forma más estricta a las presidencias de los comités Separate－but－equal doctrine a constitutional basis for laws that separate one group from another on the basis of race（Jim Crow Laws）（p．619）
Doctrina de iguales pero separados base constitucional para leyes que segregan a un grupo respecto a otro，con base en la raza（Leyes Jim Crow）
Separation of powers basic principle of American system of government that the executive，legislative，and judicial powers are divided among three independent and coequal branches of government；see checks and balances（p．70）
Separación de poderes principio básico del sistema de gobierno estadounidense，según el cual los poderes ejecutivo， legislativo y judicial están divididos en tres ramas independi－ entes e iguales；ver checks and balances／pesos y contrapesos
Session period of time during which，each year，Congress assembles and conducts business（p．270）
Sesión período regular durante el cual reune el Congreso para atender a asuntos oficiales Shadow cabinet members of opposition parties who watch， or shadow，particular Cabinet members，and who would be ready to run the government（p．668）
Gabinete alterno miembros de los partidos de oposición que vigilan，o supervisan，a un miembro particular del gabinete，y que estarían listos para ejercer el gobierno
Shield law a law which gives reporters some protection against having to disclose their sources or reveal other confidential information in legal proceedings（p．563）
Ley Escudo ley que ofrece a los reporteros cierta protección contra la revelación de sus fuentes o la publicación de otra información confidencial durante los procedimientos legales
Single－issue parties parties that concentrate on only one pub－ lic policy matter（p．137）
Partidos de un único asunto partidos que se concentran en un solo aspecto de la política pública
Single－member district electoral district from which one per－ son is chosen by the voters for each elected office （pp．127，275）
Distrito de un solo miembro distrito electoral en donde los votantes eligen，en la papeleta electoral，una sola persona para cada cargo Slander false and malicious use of spoken words（p．559）
Calumnia utilización falsa y maliciosa del discurso hablado
Socialism a philosophy based on the idea that the benefits of economic activity should be fairly distributed（p．686）
Socialismo filosofía basada en la idea de que los beneficios de la actividad económica deben distribuirse de manera equitativa a toda la sociedad
Soft－liners those who want to reform governmental policies or procedures（p． 661 ）

Blandos quienes quieren reformar las políticas o procesos gubernamentales
Soft money money given to State and local party organizations for voting－related activities（p．208）
Fondos no fiscalizados fondos otorgados al estado y a organizaciones partidistas locales para actividades relaciona－ das con el voto，por ejemplo：registro de votantes，envío de propaganda por correo，anuncios
Sound bite short，sharply focused report that can be aired in 30 or 45 seconds（p．235）
Informe sucinto informaciones breves y concisas que pueden despacharse en 30 ó 45 segundos
Sovereign having supreme power within one＇s own territory； neither subordinate nor responsible to any other authority （pp．7，649）
Soberano tener poder supremo y absoluto dentro de su pro－ pio territorio；no estar subordinado ni ser responsable ante ninguna otra autoridad
Speaker of the House the presiding officer of the House of Representatives，chosen by and from the majority party in the House（p．332）
Vocero de la Cámara funcionario que preside la Cámara de Representantes y que es electo por el partido mayoritario en la Cámara，al cual pertenece
Special district an independent unit created to perform one or more related governmental functions at the local level （p．748）
Distrito especial unidad independiente creada para llevar a cabo una o más funciones gubernamentales relacionadas a nivel local Special session an extraordinary session of a legislative body， called to deal with an emergency situation（p．271）
Sesión especial sesión extraordinaria de un cuerpo legisla－ tivo，convocada para tratar una situación de emergencia
Splinter parties parties that have split away from one of the major parties（p．138）
Partidos de escisión partidos formados por la fractura de uno de los principales partidos；la mayor parte de los parti－ dos pequeños importantes en el ámbito político estadoun－ idense son partidos de escisión
Split－ticket voting voting for candidates of different parties for different offices at the same election（p．177）
Voto diferenciado votar，en la misma elección，por candida－ tos de distintos partidos para puestos diferentes
Spoils system the practice of giving offices and other favors of government to political supporters and friends（pp．132，443）
Sistema de prebendas práctica de ofrecer cargos y otros favores gubernamentales a los simpatizantes y amigos políticos
Staff agency an agency that supports the chief executive and other administrators by offering advice and other assistance in the management of the organization（p．430）
Oficina de apoyo tipo de agencia cuya función es dar res－ paldo al Presidente y a otros administradores，ofreciendo consejos y otro tipo de asistencia en la administración de la organización
Standing committee permanent committee in a legislative body to which bills of a specified subject matter are referred； see select committee（p．338）
Comisión permanente comité permanente de un cuerpo legislativo a quien se presentan las propuestas de ley sobre una materia específica；ver comité selecto

State a body of people living in a defined territory who have a government with the power to make and enforce law without the consent of any higher authority（p．6）
Estado conjunto de personas que viven en un territorio definido y que tienen un gobierno con el poder de legislar y de hacer cumplir la ley，sin tener el consentimiento de una autoridad superior Statutory law a law passed by the legislature（p．713）
Ley estatuida ley aprobada por los legisladores
Straight－ticket voting the practice of voting for candidates of only one party in an election（p．177）
Voto duro práctica de votar en una elección por los candida－ tos de un solo partido
Straw vote poll that seeks to read the public＇s mind by asking the same question of a large number of people（p．222）
Encuesta pre－electoral encuestas que pretenden conocer la opinión de la gente haciendo simplemente la misma pre－ gunta a una gran cantidad de personas Strict constructionist one who argues a narrow interpretation of the Constitution＇s provisions，in particular those granting powers to the Federal Government（p．313）
Construccionista estricto persona que defiende una inter－ pretación estrecha de las estipulaciones de la Constitución， en particular las referentes al otorgamiento de poderes al gobierno federal Strict scrutiny test a higher standard than the rational basis test a law must meet in equal protection cases（p．619）
Examen judicial riguroso estándar más alto que la prueba de fundamento razonable que una ley debe honrar en casos de protección equitativa Strong－mayor government a type of government in which the mayor heads the city＇s administration（p．750）
Gobierno de alcalde vigoroso tipo de gobierno en el que el alcalde encabeza la administración de la ciudad Subcommittee division of existing committee that is formed to address specific issues（pp．340，346）
Subcomité división de un comité existente que se forma para atender asuntos específicos Subpoena an order for a person to appear and to produce documents or other requested materials（p．322）
Citación orden para que se presente una persona o para que se elaboren documentos u otros materiales solicitados Subsidy a grant of money，usually from a government（p．203） Subsidio una subvención de dinero，por lo general por un gobierno Substantive due process the government must create fair poli－ cies and laws（p．578） Proceso legal duradero el gobierno debe crear políticas y leyes justas
Successor a person who inherits a title or office（p．319）
Sucesor persona que hereda un título o un cargo Suffrage the right to vote（p．152）
Sufragio el derecho de votar
Supply－side economics the assumption that tax cuts increase the supply of money in private hands and stimulate the economy（p．465）
Economía de oferta idea que supone que la reducción de impuestos aumenta el dinero de entidades privadas y estimula la economía
Surplus more income than spending（p．463）
Superávit cuando hay más ingresos que gastos Swing voters members of the electorate who have not made up their minds at the start of a campaign and are open to persuasion by either side (p. 386)
Votantes indecisos miembros del electorado que no han tomado una decisión al comienzo de una campaña y están dispuestos a inclinarse hacia cualquiera de los candidatos
Symbolic speech expression by conduct; communicating ideas through facial expressions, with body language, or by carrying a sign or wearing an armband (p. 565)
Discurso simbólico expresión mediante la conducta; comunicación de ideas a través de expresiones faciales, lenguaje corporal o mediante el uso de un signo o portando una banda en el brazo

\section*{T}

Tariff a tax on imported goods (p. 696)
Arancel impuesto que se aplica a las importaciones
Tax a charge levied by government on persons or property to meet public needs (p. 300)
Impuesto cargo gravado por el gobierno a las personas o propiedades, con el objeto de satisfacer las necesidades públicas Term two-year period of time during which Congress meets \section*{(p. 270)}

Término lapso especificado durante el cual se desempeñará en el cargo un funcionario elegido Territory part of the United States that is not admitted as a State and has its own government (p. 308)
Territorio no incorporado territorio de los Estados Unidos que no tiene calidad de estado y que tiene su propio gobierno Terrorism the use of violence to intimidate a government or society (p. 492)
Terrorismo el uso de violencia para intimidar a un gobierno o sociedad
Three-Fifths Compromise an agreement at the Constitutional Convention to count a slave as three-fifths of a person when determining the population of a State (p. 56)
Avenencia de las tres quintas partes acuerdo logrado en la Convención Constitucional respecto a que un esclavo debería contarse como tres quintas partes de una persona, para propósitos de determinar la población de un estado Tort a wrongful act that involves injury to one's person, property, or reputation in a situation not covered by the terms of a contract (p. 728)
Entuerto acto injusto que incluye daño a la propiedad de una persona, su reputación o a la persona en sí en una situación que no está cubierta por un contrato
Township a subdivision of a county (p. 743)
Municipio división de un condado
Trade association interest group within the business community (p. 248)
Asociación comercial grupos de interés dentro de la comunidad de los negocios
Trade embargo a ban on trade with a particular country or particular countries (p. 697) Embargo comercial prohibición de comerciar con un país o varios países en particular Transient person living in a State for only a short time, without legal residence ( p .157 )
Transeúnte persona que vive en un estado sólo por un breve tiempo, sin residencia legal Treason betrayal of one's country; in the Constitution, by "levying war against the United States or offering comfort or aid to its enemies" (p. 606)

Alta traición deslealtad hacia el país propio; en la Constitución, librar una guerra en contra de los Estados Unidos, proporcionar aliento \(u\) ofrecer ayuda a sus enemigos Treaty a formal agreement between two or more sovereign states (pp. 87, 412)
Tratado acuerdo formal entre dos o más estados soberanos
Trustee lawmaker who votes based on his or her conscience and judgment, not the views of his or her constituents (p. 287)

Independiente legislador que vota en cada asunto de acuerdo con su conciencia y su juicio independiente, sin considerar las opiniones de sus electores o de otros grupos
\(U\)
UN Security Council a 15 -member panel that bears the UN's major responsibility for keeping international peace (p. 509) Consejo de Seguridad de la ONU panel de 15 miembros que tiene la máxima responsabilidad de la ONU para la conservación de la paz internacional Unconstitutional contrary to constitutional provision and so illegal, null and void, of no force and effect (p. 73)
Inconstitucional contrario a las estipulaciones constitucionales y, por lo tanto, ilegal, nulo e inválido, que no tiene fuerza ni efecto
Uncontrollable spending spending that Congress and the President have no power to change directly (p. 468)
Gasto incontrolable gastos que ni el Congreso ni el Presidente tienen el poder de cambiar de manera directa, incluyendo los intereses de la deuda
Unicameral an adjective describing a legislative body with one chamber; see bicameral (p. 34)
Unicameral adjetivo que describe un cuerpo legislativo con una sola Cámara; ver bicameral Unitary government a centralized government in which all government powers belong to a single, central agency (p. 14) Gobierno unitario gobierno centralizado en el que los poderes ejercidos por el gobierno pertenecen a una única oficina central United Nations a league of nations, with 192 members, that accepts the obligations of the United Nations Charter, a treaty drafted in 1945 (p. 508)
Naciones Unidas grupo de naciones compuesto por 192 miembros, que acepta las obligaciones de la Carta de las Naciones Unidas, tratado redactado en el año 1945

\section*{V}

Veto chief executive's power to reject a bill passed by a legislature; literally (Latin) "I forbid"; see pocket veto (pp. 72, 356) Veto poder del Presidente para rechazar un proyecto de ley aprobado por una legislatura; literalmente (latín) "Prohíbo"; ver pocket veto/veto indirecto
Virginia Plan plan presented by delegates from Virginia at the Constitutional Convention; called for a three-branch government with a bicameral legislature in which each State's membership would be determined by its population or its financial support for the central government (p. 54)
Plan Virginia proyecto presentado por los delegados de Virginia en la Convención Constitucional; proponía un gobierno con tres poderes y una legislatura bicameral en la que la representación de cada estado estuviera determinada por su población o por su apoyo financiero al gobierno central

Visa a permit to enter another country, obtained from the country one wishes to enter (p. 486)
Visa permiso para entrar a otro país, otorgado por el país al cual se desea entrar

\section*{W}

Ward a unit into which cities are often divided for the election of city council members (p. 146)
Distrito unidad en la que suelen dividirse las ciudades para la elección de los miembros del consejo municipal Warrant a court order authorizing, or making legal, some official action, such as a search or an arrest (p. 732)
Mandamiento orden judicial que autoriza o hace legal alguna acción oficial, como la orden de allanamiento o la orden de arresto
Weak-mayor government a type of government in which the mayor shares his or her executive duties with other elected officials (p. 750)
Gobierno de alcalde débil tipo de gobierno en el que el alcalde comparte las obligaciones ejecutivas con otros funcionarios electos
Weblogs (blogs) Web site postings usually devoted to a specific subject, often allowing visitors to post comments (p. 233)
Blogs listados en un sitio web que por lo general se enfocan en un tema en específico y que muchas veces permite a los visitantes poner sus comentarios
Welfare cash assistance to the poor (p. 757)
Beneficencia ayuda en efectivo a los pobres
Welfare state country that provides extensive social services at little or no cost to the users (p. 687)
Estado benefactor países que ofrecen una amplia gama de servicios sociales a un bajo costo o de manera gratuita para los usuarios
Whips assistants to the floor leaders in the House and Senate, responsible for monitoring and marshaling votes (p. 336)
Whips auxiliares de los líderes de las fracciones partidistas en la Cámara de Representantes y el Senado que son responsables de vigilar y ordenar los votos Winner-take-all an almost obsolete system whereby a presidential aspirant who won the preference vote in a primary automatically won all the delegates chosen in the primary (p. 379)

El ganador se lleva todo sistema casi obsoleto en donde un aspirante presidencial que ganaba la preferencia del voto en las elecciones primarias, automáticamente obtenía el apoyo de todos los delegados elegidos en dichas elecciones World Trade Organization (WTO) organization created in 1995 to increase trade (p. 697) Organización Mundial del Comercio (OMC) organización creada en 1995 para aumentar el comercio Writ of assistance blanket search warrant with which British custom officials had invaded private homes to search for smuggled goods (p. 585)
Auto de ayuda orden general de allanamiento con la que los funcionarios aduanales británicos invadían los hogares privados en busca de bienes de contrabando
Writ of certiorari an order by a higher court directing a lower court to send up the record in a given case for review; from the Latin meaning "to be more certain" (p. 534)
Auto de avocación ocertiorari orden emitida por una corte superior dirigida a una corte inferior para que remita el expediente de un determinado caso para su revisión; el significado en latín de la expresión es "tener mayor certeza"
Writ of habeas corpus a court order which prevents unjust arrests and imprisonments (p. 592)
Auto de habeas corpus orden judicial que evita arrestos y encarcelamientos injustos

\section*{2}

Zoning the practice of dividing a city into a number of districts and regulating the uses to which property in each of them may be put (p. 753)
Zonificación práctica de dividir a una ciudad en determinado número de distritos y de regular los usos que se dará a la propiedad en cada uno de ellos

\section*{Index}

\section*{A}

Abington School District v. Schempp (1963), 552 abortion, 137, 251, 581-582
Abramoff, Jack, 246, 255, 341
Abrams v. United States (1919), 807 absentee voting, 194, 195 absolute monarch, 655
absolute power, 31 accused, rights of the, 600-601, 600p, \(601 p\) act of admission, 106
ADA. See Americans With Disabilities Act
Adams, Abigail, 65, 65p
Adams, John, 39, 46, 53, 65, 372, 774 c
Alien and Sedition Acts and, 560
as commander-in-chief, 415
Declaration of Independence and, 40
election of 1800, 375-376, 376c, 376m Marbury v. Madison and, 76, 81 nominating process, \(185 q\)
political parties and, 131
Supreme Court and, 533
as Vice President, 62
Adams, John Quincy, 186, 319, 774c
Adams, Samuel, 38, 39, 53, 59
Adarand Constructors v. Pena (1995), 629
administration, 428
Administration, Office of, 434 administrative law, 727 admiralty law, 522
advertising, 236, 567
AFDC. See Aid to Families with Dependent Children affirmative action, 627-630, 627p, 628p-629p Afghanistan, 501, 502-503, 502p, 507, 539, 665, 724
AFL-CIO, 205, 249, \(254 p\)
Africa, 30, 502, 658-659, 658p, 688
African Americans
ambassadors, 486
in Cabinet, 438, 439, 439p, 484, 485
capital punishment and, 604 in Congress, 166, 166p, 167, 273p, 278, 282p 285, 715 p discrimination against, 613
education and, 21 p, 257, 584
freedom of assembly and petition, 570-571, 572 governors, 721
interest groups and, 252
Jim Crow laws, 619
political parties and, 132, 145
population of, 612, 613
in presidential campaign, 167, 385 separate-but-equal doctrine and, 619-620, 619p on Supreme Court, 524
Thirteenth Amendment and, 584-585
voter behavior of, 174, 176
voting rights of, \(150 p-151 p, 153,161,162-163\), 164-167, 164p, 166p-167p
agency, 428, 436. See also independent agencies; line agencies; staff agencies
Agnew, Spiro, 373
Agostini v. Felton (1997), 807
agriculture, 250, 435p
Agriculture, Department of, 436, 449
Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), 96, 758
Air Force, Department of the, 491c, 491-492 Alabama, \(706 p, 776 m-777 m\) congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\) congressional delegations from, 335 m constitution of, 712
courts in, 529m, 531, 735
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 553, 565-566
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, \(723 \mathrm{~m}, 724\)
immigrants in, 636 m
state legislature of, 716
statistical profile, \(772 c\)

Supreme Court cases in, 619, 623
voting rights in, \(154 \mathrm{~m}, 157,165,167\)
Alaska, 494p, \(776 m-777 m\)
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 711
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 188, 189, 191m, 388m, 390, 391 m
first amendment rights in, 548
gains statehood, 105m, 106, 107, 274
governors of, 720p, 721, 723m
House of Representatives and, 273
immigrants in, 636 m
local government in, 743
state legislature of, 96, 715
statistical profile, 772c
Supreme Court cases in, 114
voting rights in, 154m, 158, 162, 168
Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation v. EPA (2004), 110
Albany Plan of Union, 37-38
Albright, Madeleine, 413p, 439, 484 alcohol, 80, 81, 83, 99
Alden v. Maine (1999), 807
Alexander v. Holmes County Board of Education (1969), 620
Alexandria, Virginia, 50
Ali, Muhammad, 259p
Alien and Sedition Acts (1798), 117, 560, 561 aliens, 97, 156, 548, 634 excludable, 636
undocumented, 637-638
Alien Terrorist Removal Court, 529
Alito, Samuel A., Jr., 323, 536c, 536p
AI Odah v. United States (2008), 593 al-Qaddafi, Muammar, 14
al Qaeda, 492, 502, 503, 665
ambassadors, 407, 414, 485-486, 522, 534
amendments, \(82 c, 318\) formal process, 78-83, 79 c state constitutions and, 709-713, 712c
See also Constitution, U.S.; individual amendments
American Anti-Slavery Society, 244
American Association of Retired Persons, 252, 257
American Bar Association, 736
American Civil Liberties Union, 251, 257, 258, 609
American Continental Army, 490
American Insurance Association v. Garamendi (2003), 807
American Independent Party, 134, 138, 185
American Legion, 252
American Medical Association, 250, 259, 259p
American Party, 137, 139c
American Samoa, 143, 273, 343
Americans with Disabilities Act (1990), 299p, 629
amicus curiae briefs, 257, 535-536 Amish people, 558 amnesty, power of, 420
Amtrak, 448 amusement tax, 764
anarchy, 9-10, 21
Anderson, Eugenie, 486
Anderson, John, 135, 185
Andrade, Leonard, 604
Annapolis Convention, 50m, 50-51
Anti-Federalist Party, 59-62, 125, 131, 313, 800-801
Anti-Mason Party, 138, 187
Anti-Peonage Act (1867), 583
Antiquities Act (1906), 407 antitrust laws, 24
ANZUS Pact (1951), 507
APEC. See Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation appeals courts, 521,521c, 523, 530c, 530-531 734-735
appellate jurisdiction, 523, 534, 734
Apply What You've Learned civil liberties, 608
civil rights, 640
congressional legislation, 326, 358 constitutional amendments, 90, 116
constitutions, 64
earmarks, 292
economics, 702
election process, 210
federal agencies, 452
federal court system, 542
foreign policy, 514
Fourteenth Amendment, 574
freedom of assembly, 574 government revenues, 478 governments, 674
interest groups, 262
local government, 768
media, 238
political parties, 148
presidential elections, 396 presidential powers, 422 principles of government, 26 state government, 738
voting rights, 180
appointment power, 405-408, 407c, 408p
apportionment, 807
Arab Americans, 252
Arab-Israeli conflict, 482, 502
Aristide, Jean-Bertrand, 663-664
Aristotle, 5, 27
Arizona, \(111 \mathrm{p}, 776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191 m, 199, \(388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 555
gains statehood, 105m, 107, 274
governors of, 721, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m
Mexican Americans in, 614
presidential candidates from, 385
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 77, 599, 600-601
600 p, 601 p, 605
undocumented aliens in, 637
voting rights in, \(154 \mathrm{~m}, 157,162,168\)
Arkansas, \(21 \mathrm{p}, 776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191 m , 388m, 391 m
first amendment rights in, 554
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
presidential candidates from, 385
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
voting rights in, 154 m armed forces, \(407,414-416,414 p, 421\). See also military; specific branches arms, 32c, 299, 585, 585p
Army, Department of the, 490, 491, 491 c
Army National Reserve, 490
Army of the Potomac, 415
Arouet, Françoise-Marie, 653
ARPANET, 232
arsenal, 50
Arthur, Chester A., 444, 774c, \(774 p\)
Articles of Confederation, 9, 17, 40, 48-51, 787-790

\section*{changes to, 59} constitutional Convention and, 54
foreign policy and, 484
grants-in-aid programs, 107
national judiciary and, 520 weaknesses of, 49-50, 94
ashcan socialism, 682
Ashcraft v. Tennessee (1944), 599
Asia, 30, 658-659
Asian Americans in Cabinet, 438-439
in Congress, 285
discrimination against, 615-616
population of, 612
segregation of, 619
voting rights of, 168
See also specific nationalities
Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC), 698 assassinations, 87, 319, 444 assemblies, 41, 743
Assembly (Athenian democracy), 647
Assessment, 26, 64, 90, 116, 180, 210, 238, 262, 292, 326, 358, 396, 422, 452, 478, 514, 542, 574 608, 640, 674, 702, 738, 768. See also Document-Based Assessment
assessment, property, 764 assessment writing, S11-S12 assessor, 744c
assimilation, 615
Athens, 649
Atkins v. Virginia (2002), 604
at-large seats, 275-276
Attorney, U.S., 526
attorney general, 435, 726
Attorney General, U.S., 524, 529 auditor, \(744 c\)
Australia, 16, 507
Australian ballot, 160, 196 authoritarian government, 14 authority, 428 autocracy, 14, \(15 c\) automated voting, 197-198
automobiles, 587
Aviles, Pedro Menéndez de, 32

\section*{B}

Background
Adams, John, 46
African American voting rights, 162 allocation of electoral votes, 388
American Cincinnatus, 648
Americans with disabilities, 629
antislavery and women's rights, 616 attacking terrorist communications, 591 attracting jobs, 725
Australian ballot, 160, 196
bilingual voting, 197
Blackstone, William, 56 blanket primary, 379
Bolivar, Simon, 656
Boston Massacre, 41
British constitution, 668
Buckley v. Valeo, 565 bureaucratic red tape, 429
butterfly ballot, 393
Cabinet succession, 372
California versus the EPA, 110 campaign contributions, 565 campaign finance as "speech," 565 campaign misinformation, 230 case against free trade, 698 case for free trade, 697 celebrity endorsements, 218
Chinese Exclusion Act, 615 city of Miami, 747 civil rights and the Commerce Clause, 298 civil rights and the NAACP, 251 coalition for reform, 655
Colorado electoral reform, 390
commercial speech, 566 congressional page program, 287
congressional staff, 348 consequences of bankruptcy, 302 controlling monopolies, 682 cost of national defense, 490 countering terrorism with aid, 508 democracy in America, 245 Democratic Party symbol, 133
democratization, 663
diplomatic recognition, 414
divine right of kings, 8
DNA and Due Process, 581
Doctors Without Borders, 511 doll test, 625
dual citizenship, 636
Due Process Clause, 548 early colonial governments, 32 early lobbying efforts, 253 early primaries, 383
earmarks, 288
election of Washington as president, 127 electrocution, 604 eminent domain, 308
equality, 45
European Union constitution, 35
evaluating web pages, 231 evolution of primary system, 189 exit polls, 222
expatriation, 634
ex post facto laws, 594
faithless electors, 391
federal crimes, 522
Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, 448
Federal Election Commission, 204
Framers and voting rights, 154
Federalism, 15
foreign policy turning points, 499
Fourth Amendment protections, 589
General Strike of 1926, 688
gerrymandering, 276 getting on the ballot, 186 government's role in education, 450 governorship succession, 722
Grand Staircase monument, 407
Granger movement, 250 history of religious liberty, 555 humanitarian aid, 504
Indian Education Act, 614
inflation and fiscal policy, 475 influence of Karl Marx, 689 integrating Central High, 621
Internet fundraising, 259
Iraq War funding, 317
issue advertising, 200
Jim Crow laws, 620
juvenile court movement, 734 labor rules for teens, 439 laboratory of government, 98 legal literacy test, 161
Locke, John, 33
low turnout in primaries, 191
Luther v. Borden, 527
Magna Carta, 580
Marshall Plan, 507
media influence, 233
Mexican democracy, 671 modern-day city planning, 753
Monroe Doctrine, 497
Montesquieu, Baron de, 40
Mussolini, Benito, 659
Nebraska's legislature, 716
Nixon and the Solid South, 176 nomination at national convention, 187 nuclear proliferation, 502 oldest and newest state constitutions, 711 origin of the National Security Act, 491 origin of states, 7 oversight of regulatory agencies, 446
pigeonholing, 346
political machines, 145
political party rivalry, 124
protective tariff, 299
Puerto Rico Democracy Act, 105 recess appointment, 402 red states and blue states, 335
regressive tax, 763 regulation of immigration, 63
right of association cases, 57
Rousseau, Jean-Jacques, 54 sampling, 224
Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America, 692
seditious speech, 561
Senate representation, 283
separation of church and state, 553 socioeconomic integration, 744

Speaker of the House, 334
special congressional sessions, 270 spending worries, 469 state income taxes, 460
straight-ticket voting, 177
supply and demand, 683
swing vote, 524 tax revolt in Arizona, 760
theocracy, 649
Title IX, 87
town meeting, 745
Truman-Dewey election, 223
Twenty-seventh Amendment, 82
UN at work, 510
uncounted votes, 173
urban sprawl, 752
valuing property for taxes, 764
Voltaire, 50
voting day, 380
Voting Rights Act extension, 167 warrantless wiretapping, 404
Wallaces of Alabama, 724
Watergate and campaign finance laws, 205
Ways and Means Committee, 341
"white primaries," 188
World Trade Organization, 696
writs of assistance, 585
Badnarik, Michael, 127 bail, 32c, 602-603
Baker, Howard, 336
Baker v. Carr (1962), 715-716, 807
Bakke, Allan, 628-629
ballot fatigue, 171, 197
ballots, 194, 194p, 196-197, 197p, 275, 393
Baltimore v. Dawson (1955), 622 bandwagon approach, 226, 260
Bank of the United States, First, 310-311, 310p-311p Bank of the United States, Second, 101-102, 310-311, \(310 p-311 p\) bankruptcy, 302, 302c, 526 banks and banking
Federal Reserve System, 693-694, 694m panics and, 475-476
regulations, 140
Barak, Ehud, \(413 p\)
Barker v. Wingo (1972), 596
Barkley, Alben, 334, 372
Barnette, Walter, 546
Barr, Bob, 189 p
Barron v. Baltimore (1833), 548
Barry, Maryanne Trump, 520p
Batista, Fulgencio, 655
battleground states, 386, 389
Baze v. Rees (2008), 605
BCRA. See Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act (2002) bed-sheet ballots, 191, 197
Begala, Paul, 473
bench trial, 597, 730
Benton v. Maryland (1969), 595
Benton v. Mary
Berger,
Berlin, 500, 500p
Bernanke, Ben S., 473p, \(692 q\) bicameral legislature, 33, 34, 54, 268-270, 269p
291c, 709, 714
Biden, Joe, 322p, 387
Big Dig, \(758 p\)
Bigelow v. Virginia (1975), 567
bill of attainder, 593
bill of rights, 42
Bill of Rights (English), 31-32, 32c, 654, 666, 782-783
Bill of Rights (U.S.), C17-C18, 60, 80, 81, 82, 82c, 549 c added to Constitution, 547 creation of, 546-547, 546p
federalism and, 548-550

\section*{Bill of Rights (Virginia), 32c} bills become laws, 287-288, 338-342, 354-355, 418,
718c, 718-719
Cloture Rule, 352-353
in committee, 345-346, 353-356 debating, 348, 351-353
filibusters and, 352-353 floor debates and, 346-347
pigeonholing, 345
President and, 356, 356p
reading of, 344-345
types of, 343-344
voting on, 348-349
bin Laden, Osama, 502, 503, 665
bioterrorism, 494
Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act (2002), 200, 203, 208 bipartisanship, 127
Black, Hugo, \(162 q\)
Black Americans. See African Americans
Black Plague, 649
Blackstone, William, 55p, 56
Blair, Tony, 667, 669
blanket primary, 188-189, 379 block grants, 96, 109
blogs, 233
Blount, William, 284
blue collar workers, 249
Blunt, Roy, 333p
Boardman, Michelle E., 423 board of chosen freeholders, 743 board of commissioners, 743
Board of Education of Kiryas Joel v. Grumet (1994), 554-555
Board of Education of Pottowatomie County v. Earls (2002), 588

Board of Education of Westside Community Schools v. Mergens (1990), 816
Board of Estimate of City of New York v. Morris (1989), 807 board of supervisors, 743, 747 Board of Trade, London, 36, 37 board of trustees, 747
Bob Jones University v. United States (1983), 807
Boehner, John, 330p, 333p
Bolivar, Simón, 656
Bolton, John, 402
bonding agent function, 124
Border Patrol, 312p, 493p, 638 boroughs, 743
borrowing, 463-466
Bosnia, 416, 507, 724
Bosnia-Herzegovina, 665
Boston, 42p, 531
Boston Massacre, 38, 38p, 41
Boston News Letter, 229
Boston Tea Party, 38-39, 39p
Boumediene v. Bush (2008), 593
boycott, 38
Boy Scouts of America v. Dale (2000), 572
Bradley, Joseph P., \(622 q\)
Bradwell v. Illinois (1873), 622
Brady Act, 813
Brain Trust, 440
Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969), 575, 807
Branzburg v. Hayes (1972), 563
Brendlin v. California (2007), 587
Brennan, William J., Jr., 525p, 566-567, 605, \(623 q\)
Breyer, Stephen, 536c, 536p
Brezhnev, Leonid, 501
briefs, 535-536
Brooke, Edward W., 167
Brown, Gordon, 667, 669
Brown, John, 606
Brown, Linda, 624, 624p
Brown, Ron, 145
Brown v. Board of Education (1954), 21p, 77, 251, 257, 527, 620, 624-625, 624p, 625p, 628, 808
Brown v. Socialist Workers 74 Campaign Committee (1982), 572

Brutus, 61
Bryan, William Jennings, 132-133
Bryce, James, \(20 q\)
Bryce, Lord, 226
Buchanan, James, 774 C
Buckley v. Valeo (1976), 203, 206, 565, 566 budget deficit, 463, 464g, 465
federal, 433, 433p, 469, 470-471
Keynesian economics, 464-465
public debt, 465 g , 466
spending, 467-469, 468c
state, 723-724, 766
surplus, \(464 \mathrm{~g}, 466\)
Bull Moose Party, 133, 138, 139c, 140, 140p
Bunn v. North Carolina (1949), 557
Burdick, George, 420
Burdick v. United States (1915), 420 bureau, 428
bureaucracy benefits of, 427
definition of, 426
executive branch and, 429, 431-440 features of, 426-427 federal, 427-430
titles in, 428-430
See also federal government
Burger, Warren, 527
Burma, 15c
Burns, James M., 286
Burstyn v. Wilson (1952), 563
Bush, George H.W., 211, 373, 775 c
Cabinet of, 438
as commander-in-chief, 416
election of, 135, 473
foreign policy and, 485
Kuwait and, 415
as Vice President, 370, 371-372
voter behavior and, 174
Bush, George W., 88p, 98p, 356p, 372, 373, 402, 417 p, \(431 p, 474 p, 703 q, 775 c\)
Cabinet of, 323, 439, 439p
Congress and, 73
education and, 450, 450p
election of, 127, 135-136, 178, 389, 390
foreign policy and, \(484,515 q\)
as governor, 722
Guantanamo Bay prisoners and, 402
Iraq War and, 136, 275, 415, 415p, 416, 503, 512
539, 539p
military commissions and, 539
National Security Agency and, 589 Patriot Act and, 609 presidential powers and, 404, 404p September 11 th and, 275, 404
signing statements, 423
Supreme Court and, 402
taxes and, 460, 464, 475
USA Freedom Corps and, 19 veto power and, 418, 419c
voter behavior and, 175
Bush v. Gore (2000), 390, 390p, 393
Bush v. Vera (1996), 278
businesses, 248, 648-649, 683-684, 764
Business-Industry Political Action Committee, 205 butterfly ballot, 393
by-election, 669
Byrd, Robert, 283, 333p, 334, 350, 350p

\section*{C}

Cabinet members, 87-88, 322-323, 407, 435-440, 439p
Calderón, Felipe, 672
California, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\) affirmative action in, 628
agricultural groups in, 250
congressional apportionment and, 270, 270c, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 712
courts in, 523c, 529 m elections in, 185, 188, 189, 191m, 198, 379, 388m, 389-390, 391 m
first amendment rights in, 561,575
gains statehood, 105m, 106
governors of, 721, 722, 722p, 723m
immigrants in, 636m
local government in, 743, 745, 751
Mexican Americans in, 614
Mexico and, 106 minority population in, 612, 616
population of, 270, 270c
presidential candidates from, 385
same-sex marriage in, 113
state legislature in, 716
statistical profile, 772 c
Supreme Court cases in, 114, 189, 550, 575, 579
585, 587, 599, 603, 604, 619, 628-629
taxes in, 762
undocumented aliens in, 637
voting rights in, 154m, 162, 168
welfare in, 96
California Democratic Party v. Jones (2000), 189
California v. Acevedo (1991), 587 campaign finance law, 200, 203-207, 346 campaigns, \(120 p-121 p, 141\) congressional, 280
donations to, 206, 565, 566, 812 fundraising for, 202-203, 203p, 206-207, 208 presidential, 386-387, 386p spending in, 201-202, 202c, 204p, 206
Camp David Accords (1979), 502
Canada, 16, 128c, 637, 695, 697, 698 c
Cantwell, Maria, 282p
Cantwell v. Connecticut (1940), 550, 558
capital, 678-679, 684
capitalism, \(23,678 p, 679 p, 681 p, 682 p, 683 p, 691\) business organizations and, 683-684 entrereneurs and, 679
factors of production, 678-679, 679c free enterprise system, 679-682, 680p labor and, 679
Laissez-faire theory, 682
land and, 678
mixed economy and, 682-683
capital punishment, 604-606, 809 capital stock tax, 764
capitation tax, 458
Capitol Building, The, 269p, 618, 618p
Carmell v. Texas (2000), 594
Carroll v. United States (1925), 587
Carson, Rachel, 453
Carter, Jimmy, 135, 195, 412p, 775c amnesty and, 420
election of, 380, 385, 387
foreign policy and, 502
Selective Service System and, 445
cartogram, 388 m
Carville, James, 473
casinos, 341
Castro, Fidel, 615, 655, 690 categorical grants, 108-109
Cato Institute, 252 caucus, 185-187, 186p, 188, 381
Cavazos, Lauro F., 438
ccc. See Commodity Credit Corporation censorship, 562, 563, 564, 815 censure, 321
Census, U.S., 250, 274, 275, 742
gerrymandering and, 276-278, 276p-277p, 278p
House of Representatives and, 274
See also population
Census of Governments, 742
Central America, 497
Central Americans, 615
Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), 492, 562 central planning, 689
certificate process, 534
Chae Chan Ping v. United States (1889), 635
Chandler v. Florida (1981), 597 change of venue, 597
Change to Win Coalition, 250
Chao, Elaine, 439
Chaplinksky v. New Hampshire (1942), 562
Charles I, King of England, 31, 31 p, 654 charter colonies, \(33 \mathrm{~m}, 34\) charters, 33, 709, 750
Chase, Salmon P., 706p
Chávez, Hugo, 502, 688
checks and balances, \(57,71 p, 72-73,73 c, 417\), 794-796
Ex Parte Milligan and, 22, 22p, 809
interest groups and, 245
in state government, 41, 42, 709, 710, 717
Cheney, Richard B., 317q, 372-373

Cheney v. U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia (2004) 411

Chertoff, Michael, 404p Chicanos, 614
chief executive, 364-365. See President, U.S.
Chief Justice, 532, 532p,536,536c,536p,537 chief military aids, 490 chief of state, 364 child labor, 81
Children's Internet Protection Act (2002), 565 China
communism in, 690, 690 p diplomatic relations with, 507 government in, 14, 15c immigrants from, 615-616
Nixon in, 501, \(501 p\)
Open Door Policy, 497-498
population of, 6, \(7 p\)
trade with, 695, 698c
See also People's Republic of China
Chinese Americans, 439, 615-616
Chinese Exclusion Act (1882), 615-616, 633, 635
Chisholm v. Georgia (1793), 82-83
Christian Coalition, 252
Christmas trees, 344
Churchill, Winston, 20q, 499, 512, 644q, 667 cigarettes, 567
CIPA. See Children's Internet Protection Act (2002) citizenship, 80, 83, 548
by birth, 633, 634
constitutional amendments and, 8
Constitution and, 632-633
dual citizenship, 636
loss of, 634-635
by naturalization, 632p,633-634, 633g
naturalization and, 309
responsibilities and duties of, 23, 23c, 156, 169 169p

\section*{Citizenship 101} debates, 568, \(568 p\)
evaluating leadership, 369 juries, 731
letters to the editor, 631 political campaigns, 141 political roots and attitudes, \(84,84 p\) polls, 227 television news programs, 472 using the Internet, 652
volunteering, \(19,19 p\)
voting, 169, \(169 p\)
writing to public officials, 272
Citizenship and Immigration Services, U.S., 406, 494 citizen-soldier, 585 city government
charters, 750
forms of, 750-753, 752p functions of, 754
incorporation, 747, 749-750
planning, 753
city managers, 751-753, \(752 p\)
City of Boerne, Texas v. Flores (1997), 808 city-states, 646, 647
Civil Aeronautics Board, 448 civil cases, 529, 530, 597, 728, 729c, 737 civil disobedience, 569-570 civilian tribunals, 539
civil liberties bail, 602-603
bill of attainder, 593
capital punishment, 604-606
definition of, 547
double jeopardy, 595-596
due process of law, 578-582
exclusionary rule, 587-590
ex post facto law, 593
grand jury, 594-595
involuntary servitude, 583-585 preventive detention, 603 privacy and, 581-582
probable cause, 586-587
punishment and, 602, 603-604
quartering of soldiers, 585 right to bear arms, 585, 585p
search warrants, 585-586
self-incrimination, 598-599, 598p
slavery, 583-585
treason and, 606
trials, 596-598
writ of habeas corpus, 592-593, 593p
See also freedom of assembly and petition; freedom of press; freedom of religion; freedom of speech
civil rights, 524
definition of, 547
early legislation, 165-166
Lyndon Johnson and, 181
state constitutions and, 41, 42, 710
Civil Rights, U.S. Commission on, 441, 442
Civil Rights Act (1866), 584
Civil Rights Act (1957), 165, 352, 352p
Civil Rights Act (1960), 165
Civil Rights Act (1964), 165-166, 298, 314, 314p, 528, \(547,584,613,617,620,626-627,628\)

\section*{Civil Rights Act (1965), 613}

Civil Rights Act (1968), 626
Civil Rights Cases (1883), 584-585, 808
civil service, 407, 443-445
civil unions, 113
Civil War, 103-104
conscription in, 445
Ex Parte Milligan and, 22, 22p, 809
income tax during, 760 Lincoln and, 415
political parties and, 132
voting during the, 195 writ of habeas corpus in, 592
Clay, Henry, 132, 186
Clayton Act, 815
Clean Air Act (1970), 110
Clean Water Act (1948), 110 clemency, 419-420, 724
clerk, 744 C
Clermont (steamboat), 297
Cleveland, Grover, 104, 132, 363q, 366, \(774 c\)
Climate Change, Intergovernmental Panel on, 512
Clinton, Bill, 72, 365p, 384p, 406p, 407, 692p, 775c
Cabinet of, 438-439
as commander-in-chief, 416
economy under, 301-302
election of, 135, 379, 385, 390, 473
foreign policy and, 484, 501p
as governor, 722 impeachment of, 319-321, 320p
voter behavior and, 174
Clinton, George, 62, 721
Clinton, Hillary, 123p, 385
Clinton v. New York City (1998), 356, 419 closed primary, 188, 189-190, 191 m
Cloture Rule, 352-353, 626
Clyburn, James, 266p, 333p coalition, 128, 129, 667
Coast Guard, 10 p, 493p, 494
Coates v. Cincinnati (1971), 570
coattail effects, 136, 195
Cobb, David, 127, 138
Code of Hammurabi, 604, 780
Coker v. Georgia (1977), 604
Cold War, 498-499, 499m, 501-502, 593, 658 collective naturalization, 634 collective security, 498
collectivization, 689
Colombia, 497
colonial charters, 709 colonialism, 651, 658, 710 colonies, \(32-34,33 \mathrm{~m}\)
Colorado, \(111 \mathrm{p}, 776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional representation and, \(274 m\)
courts in, 529 m
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 571
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636m
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 629
taxes in, 762
voting rights in, \(154 m\)
command economy, 687, 691
commander-in-chief, 365. See President, U.S.
Commentaries on the Laws of England (Blackstone), 56 commerce, 86, 99, 297-299
Commerce, Department of, 307, 308, 436, 437, 696
Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise, 56, 56m
Commerce Clause, 297-299, 298p, 299p, 315-316 commerce power, 315-316 commercial revolution, 648-649
commercial speech, 566, 567
commission, 428 commission government, 751, 752p committee chairmen, 336-337
Committee for Public Education and Religious Liberty v.
Nyquist (1973), 555
Committee for Public Education and Religious Liberty v.
Regan (1980), 555
Committee of Stile and Arrangement, 58
Committee on Political Education, 205
Committees of Correspondence, 38 Committee to Re-Elect the President (CREEP), 410 commodities, 686
Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC), 449
Commodity Futures Trading Commission, 447
Common Cause, 25
common law, 727-728, 734, 737
Communications Decency Act (1996), 565, 813 communism, 659-660, 659p, 675, 685-686, 689-691 characteristics of, 688c, 689
China and, 690, 690p
Soviet Union and, 689-690
The Communist Manifesto (Marx and Engels), 685-686, Communist Party, 137, 689
commutation, power of, 420, 725
Compact for the Supervision of Parolees and Probationers, 111 Compact on Juveniles, 111 compact territory, 276
Company of London. See London Company competition, 681, \(681 p\) compromise, 21
concurrent jurisdiction, 522, 523c concurrent powers, 100, 100 concurrent resolutions, 344
concurring opinion, 537
confederate government, 16c, 16-17
Confederate States of America, 17 confederation, 37 conference committees, 342, 353, 356
Conference of Berlin, 658
Congress, First Federal, 281
Congress, U.S., \(5 p\) act of admission, 106
adjournment of, 271, 419
African Americans in, 273p, 278, 282p, 285
Articles of Confederation and, 48-49
Asian Americans in, 285 background of members, 285-286, \(286 c\) bankruptcy and, 302, 302c bicameral legislature, 268-270, 269p, 291c borrowing power of, 301-302, 465 campaign committees, 144 g , 145
campaign finance law, 203-207
checks and balances and, \(72-73,73 c\)
Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise and, 56 Commerce Clause, 297-299, 298p, 299p, 315-316 committees of, 287-288, 336-337, 340-341 compensation of members, 81, 288-290, 289p conference committees, 342, 353, 356
Connecticut Compromise and, 56
constitutional amendments and, 78-83, 318
convening of, 271, 330-332
copyrights and patents, 306-307, 306p-307p courts of appeals and, 530 currency power of, 302-303 debt limit, 301
delegated powers, 296-297
district courts and, 528
divided government, 359
domestic powers of, 306-309 education and, \(314-315,314 p, 315 p\) electoral duties of, 193-194, 195, 318-319, 319c eminent domain, 309 enabling act, 106
executive agreements and, 413
executive departments and, 435-437 executive powers of, 322-323
executive privilege and, 409 expressed powers of, 296-309, 305c federal budget and, 469, 470-471
filibusters, 350, 352-353
floor leaders, 336
foreign policy and, 304
franking privilege, 289
fringe benefits, 289
government corporations, 448-449 impeachment process and, 319-322, 320p, \(321 p\) mplied powers of, 296, 297c, 310-311, 312-316
\(313 c\)
inherent powers of, 296, 297c investigative power of, 323-324
jobs of members, 286-288
joint committees, 341-342, 342c judicial power of, 309, 520-521, 522, 525-526 atinos in, 278, 285, 288 p lawmaking function of, 286-288, 287 c leadership in, 332-334, 333c lobbying, 255-256
majority leader, 336
military and, 304-306
minority leader, 336, 350 money and, 299-303, 300p, 301c, 302c, 315 Native Americans in, 285
naturalization and, 309
Necessary and Proper Clause, 312-315
New Jersey Plan and, 55 nonlegislative powers of, 318-324 ordinance powers, 406 oversight functions of, 288, 324 page program, 287
party officers in, 334c, 334-336, 335m postal powers, 307-308
President and, 365, 368
presidential powers and, 401-402, 418-419, 419c, 419p privileges of members, 290
public opinion and, 222
recesses of, 271
regulation of immigration, 635-636
removal power, 408
representation in, 269-270, 270c schedule of, 270-271, 330-331
seniority rule, 336, 337, 339
separation of powers and, 70-72
special courts and, 521-522, 538
special sessions of, 270, 271, 419
spending and, 315
staff, 348
standing committees, 338-340, 340c, 341 c statehood and, 106-107, 309 structure of, 57 taxes and, 299-301, 300p, 315
Tenure of Office Act, 408
terms of, 270
territories and, 308-309 treaties and, \(323,323 p, 413\)
Virginia Plan and, 54
voting in, 287, 287c, 293
war powers of, 304-306, 315, 316, 317, 317 p, 414-415, 416
weights and measures, 308
women in, 279p, 285, 285p, 286c, 617 writing to, 272 See also Constitution, U.S.; House of Representa tives, U.S.; Senate, U.S
Congressional Budget Office, 324, 470-471 congressional campaign committee, 144c, 145 congressional districts, \(145 c, 146\) congressional elections, \(275-278,276 p-277 p, 280\)
congressional page program, 287
Congressional Record, 344
Congressional Research Service, 324 Congress of the Confederation, 59

Connecticut, 776m-777m
colonial, 33m, 34, 37, 39
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\) congressional delegations from, 335 m constitution of, 709, 711
courts in, 529 m
Declaration of Independence and, 47
elections in, 187, 191m, \(376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 558
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 721, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m
local government in, 742, 743
ratification of the Constitution and, 61c, \(61 p\)
slavery and, 56 m
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 581
voting rights in, 154m, 161
Connecticut Compromise, 56, \(57 p\)
conscience fund, 462
conscription, 445
consensus, 127, 129, 314
conservatives, 126 constituencies, 283, 288
constituent power, 717
constitution, 5
Constitution, U.S., 16
amendments to the, C17-C24, 82c, 82-83
Article I, C3-C10, 69, 69c, 102, 268, 271, 273, 274, 275, 290, 297, 298, 299, 300, 302, 310-311
\(310 p-311 p, 343,427-428,456,457,458,463\),
469, 520, 521, 524, 538, 547, 592, 593, 811, 814, 815
Article II, C10-C12, 69, 69c, 85, 87, 96, 271, 400-401, 404, 405, 406, 417, 419, 809
Article III, C12-C13, 69, 69c, 85, 520, 521, 522, 525, 532, 534, 538, 543, 547, 597, 606, 811
Article IV, C14, 69, 69c, 104
Article V, C15, 69, 690
Article VI, C15, 69, 69c, 412
Article VII, 59, 69, 69c
Article VIII, C15
Bill of Rights, C17-C18, 60, 80, 81, 82, 82c,
546-547, 546p
changes to the, 85-88, \(86 p, 88 p\)
checks and balances, \(71 p, 72-73,73 c\)
Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise, 56, 56 m compromises and, 55-58
Congress and, 85-86, 318
Connecticut Compromise, 56, 57p
Contract Clause, 102 court decisions and, 87
custom and usage, 87-88
division of powers, 95
Enlightenment and, 55, 55p
executive action, 86-87, 86p
Executive Article, 400-401, 404
federal court system and, 85
federalism, \(71 p, 74 c, 74-75,80\)
federal judges and, 523-526, \(525 p\) formal amendment process, 78-83, 79c framers of, 52-54, 52p, 53p
Full Faith and Credit Clause, 112-113
interpretations of, 297 judicial review, 71p, 73-74
limited government, 69-70,70p
Necessary and Proper Clause, 96-97, 310-311,
310p-311p, 312-315
New Jersey Plan, 55
ordinance powers, 406
outline of, 68-69, 69c
political parties and, 68, 87, 125-126
popular sovereignty, 68p, 69, 70p, 80 power to tax, 456-458
Preamble, C3, 9-10, 68, 69, 69c
principles of, 68-75
proposed amendments, 80-82
Quick Study Guide, C1-C2
ratification of, C15-C16, 59-62, 59p, 60p, 61c, \(61 p\) separation of powers, \(70-72,70 p\) silence of, 98
State of the Union message and, 86
strict v. liberal construction, 313-315, 327

Supremacy Clause, 10
Three-fifths Compromise, 56
Virginia Plan, 54-55
See also constitutions; state constitutions; individual amendments Constitutional Convention, 50-51, 248 assembling the, \(51,51 p\) compromises at, 55-58 delegates at, 52-54, 52p, 53p
constitutional convention, 666, 711 constitutional courts, 521,521c,531,541 constitutional government, 226 constitutionalism, 70 constitutional law, 727
constitutional monarchy, 654, 666-670, 667p, 668m Constitutional Principles Enlightenment, 9
federalism, 244
federalism and implied powers, 314 federalism and states' rights, 61 government by the people, 71
judicial review, 549, 563
limited government, 97 limited government and a free press, 232 limited government and colonial rule, 710
separation of powers, 523
Constitution Party, 127, 139c, 140
constitutions, 5
amending, 709-713, \(712 c\)
civil rights, 710
first, 708-709, 712, 713
governmental structure, 709, 710 limited government and, 709, 710 popular sovereignty and, 709, 710
preamble, 711
principles of, 709, 710
ratification of, 712
state, 708-713, 709p, 710p, 711p, \(712 c\)
See also Constitution, U.S consuls, 534
Consumer Price Index (CPI), 474
Consumer Product Safety Commission, 447 containment policy, 500, 505
content neutral, 570 content standards, 757
contiguous territory, 276
Continental Congress, First, 39, 50m, 317
Continental Congress, Second, 36, 39-40, 50m, 302-303, 708
Articles of Confederation and, 48-51
military and, 490, 491
Continental Navy, 490
continuing resolution, 471
continuous body, 283
Contract Clause, 102 contract law, 728
conventions, \(381 p\)
constitutional amendments and, 79
nominating process, 186p, 187 political, 143, 145, 146 political parties and, 377-378, 377p, 381-384, \(381 p\)
Conyers, John, \(273 p\)
Coolidge, Calvin, 86, 133, 367, 775c copyright, 306-307, 306p-307p, 522, 531, 700
Copyright Office, 307 coroner, 744c
corporations, 428, 459c, 460, 684 correctional facilities, 745, 757c, 758-759 council-manager government, 751-753, 752p Council of Five Hundred, 647 councils, 750 counterfeiting, 309 country, 6
county government, 31, 196, 742-745, 743p, 744c, 749-750 county home rule, 745
Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, 521, 530c, 539
Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, 530c, 531 , 539, 540
Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, 521, 530c, 531 539 Court of Federal Claims, 530c, 531, 539-540, 540 court officers, 526
Court of International Trade, 521, 521c, 529, 530c, 53 court packing, 533p courts. See appeals courts; constitutional courts; Court of International Trade; court system; district courts; federal court system; inferior courts; special courts; state court system; Supreme Court, U.S. courts martial, 538-539
court system
judicial review and, 73-74
lobbying and the, 257
of United Kingdom, 668m, 668-669
Cox v. Louisiana (1965), 570
Cox v. New Hampshire (1941), 557, 570
Coyle v. Smith (1911), 107
CPI. See Consumer Price Index cracking, political parties and, 277
Craig v. Boren (1976), 623
Crawford, William H., 186-187
Crawford v. Marion County Election Board (2008), 161 creation science, 554 CREEP. See Committee to Re-Elect the Presiden crime. See criminal cases; criminal justice; police force Crime Control and Safe Street Act (1968), 589 criminal cases, 522,529,530, 728, 729c, 737 grand jury, 594-595 trials, 596-598
criminal justice
bill of attainder, 593
double jeopardy, 595-596
ex post facto law, 593
self-incrimination, 598-599, 598p system of, 594-595, 594p, 595p
trials, 596-598
writ of habeas corpus, 592-593, 593p
critical thinking active listening, S20 analyze cause and effect, S16 analyze graphic data, S26 analyze images, S28
analyze maps, S27
analyze political cartoons, S22 analyze sources, S14 analyze timelines, S29
compare viewpoints, S15 decision making, S18
digital age literacy, S24-S25 draw inferences and conclusions, S19 give presentations, S21 innovative thinking, S23 notetaking, S20
problem solving, S17
Croatia, 665
Crockett, Davy, 293
Cronies, 440
crossover primary, 188-190, 191 m cruel and unusual punishment, 810 Cruzan v. Missouri (1990), 808
Cuba, 317
communism in, 690
Cuban missile crisis, 500
diplomatic relations with, 414
government in, 655
Guantanamo Bay, 593
Maine, U.S.S., \(496 p\)
Revolution in, 657 trade embargo on, 414, 697
Cuban Americans, 176, 615
Cunningham, Randy "Duke," 280 currency, 457 curriculum frameworks, 757 custom duties, 457, 459c, 462
Czechoslovakia, 661
Czech Republic, 661

\section*{D}

Daley, Richard, 750p
Darfur, 251 p, 507
Darrow, Clarence, 10
Davidson v. New Orleans (1878), 579
Davis, Gray, 185, 722
Davis, Justin, 715p

Davis v. Bandemer (2003), 27
Dayton, Jonathan, 53 dead letter provisions, 711
Dean, Howard, 142p, 203p
Dean of the House, 331 death penalty, 603-606 death tax, 462, 764
Debate abolition of electoral college, 392 balance the budget, 300 choosing a chief executive, 16 citizenship requirement for presidency, 366 Clinton impeachment, 320 congressional seniority, 336 disenfranchisement of convicted felons, 158 divided government, 134
exclusion of elected representative, 279 expanding rights of the accused, 596 factors that influence public opinion, 217 Federal power versus states' rights, 99 flag burning, 81 growth of free trade, 699 impact of political parties, 381 influence of foreign aid, 509 Iraq War and U.S. security, 500 local nature of politics, 144 loss of citizenship, 635 mandatory national service, 445 merits of taxation, 461
national security versus personal liberty, 493
No Child Left Behind Act (2002), 108 online elections, 23 origin of the state, 6
party of principle, 126 patriots versus loyalists on independence, 38 peaceful revolution, 658
pigeonholing, 347
presidential power to deploy troops, 415
redistricting, 277
regulation versus deregulation, 447 role of diplomacy in foreign policy, 485 silent prayer and the Establishment Clause, 554 socialist senator, 687
special interest groups, 258
"suspicionless" drug tests, 588 third-party candidates, 139 to vote or not vote, 174
Virginia Plan versus New Jersey Plan, 55 voting in primaries, 190
voting inconveniences, 198
debates, 387, 568, 568p, 605
Debs, Eugene, 139 p
Declaration of Independence, \(9,36,39,43 p, 45 p, 47 p\), 53 individual rights and the, 546-547, 546p
Jefferson and, 400
Locke and, 653
text of, 43-47
writing of the, 40-41, 41p
Declaration of Rights and Grievances, 38, 39, 641, 785-786 Declaration of Sentiments (1848), 616q, 803-804 de facto segregation, 621 defendants, 523,530
defense, military, 10, 10p defense attorneys, 597-598, 600
Defense Department, 436, 437, 488-490, 489p
Internet and, 232
spending by, 468, 468c, 490
Defense of Marriage Act (1996), 113 deficits, 464 g financing, 301-302 spending, 463-464

\section*{deflation, 474}
deism, 50
DeJonge v. Oregon (1937), 550, 569 de jure segregation, 621, \(621 p, 641,641 p\)
Delaware, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
Articles of Confederation and, 48, 50 colonial, \(33 \mathrm{~m}, 34\)
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
Constitutional Convention and, 51, 55
constitution of, 709, 711, 712
courts in, 529 m
Declaration of Independence and, 47
desegregation in, 624
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, \(723 \mathrm{~m}, 724\)
House of Representatives and, 273
immigrants in, 636m
ocal government in, 742
ratification of the Constitution and, 61, 61c, 61 p
slavery and, 56 m
state government in, 96, 719
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
voting rights in, 154 m
delegated powers, 296-297
delegates, 287, 287c demand-side economics, 464
democracy, 661
in Athens, 647 concepts of, 20-23
definition of, 5
difference between dictatorships and, 547 essentials of, 663, 663c free enterprise system and, 23-24 government and, 13-14, 15c indirect, 13-14
political parties and, 122-123, 124
roots of, 27, 650
See also direct democracy
Democracy in America (De Tocqueville), 244q, 245q, 55 democratic consolidation, 663, 663c
Democratic National Committee (DNC), 144-145
Democratic-Republican Party, 131, 186-187, 375-376, 376c, 376 m
democratization, 66
definition of, 663
failures of, 664-665 of Haiti, 663-664
of Iraq, 664, 664m
of Soviet Union, 662-663, 662p Democrat Party, 187
apportioned delegates, 378
civil rights and, 165
in Congress, 334c, 334-336, 335m
domination by, 129, 131-134
election of 2008, 206-208, \(377 p\) fundraising by, 207-208
governors and, 723 m
history of, 131
minor parties and, 138-140
organization of, 142-145, 142p, 143p policy position of, 126, 128
political spectrum and, 126
primary elections, 378-381, 379c, 380p
symbols of, 133, 133p
two-party system and, 124-128, 125p, 128c
voter behavior and, 174-178
See also elections; political parties demonstrations, 258
denaturalization, 635
Deng Xiaoping, 690
Dennis v. United States (1951), 561, 808
department, 428
deportation, 97, 637, 638
destroyers-for-bases deal, 413-414
détente, 501
deterrence, 498, 502, 515
De Tocqueville, Alexis, 244q, 245, 245q, 247, 55
devolution, 670
Dewey, Thomas E., 13
Díaz, Porfirio, 657
Dickerson v. United States (2000), 601
Dickinson, John, 39 dictatorships, 14, 15c, 129, 185, 547, 659-660, 659p, 661
digital age literacy, S24-S25
Dillon v. Gloss (1921), 82
diplomatic immunity, 486-487, 486p diplomatic powers, \(97,412-414,412 p, 413 p, 421\) diplomats, 407, 414, 486
direct democracy, 13-14, 739, 746-747 direct initiative, 719
direct legislation, 719
Director of National Intelligence (DNI), 492 direct popular election, 392-393 direct primary, 186p, 187-192, 191 m direct response electronic voting machines (DREs), 198 direct tax, 300-301, 458 disabled Americans, 299p, 315p, 629 discharge petition, 345-346
discount rate, 476
discretionary spending, 468 discrimination. See age discrimination; racial discrimination; religious discrimination; reverse discrimination; sex discrimination disenfranchised citizens, 153, 153p, 158, 164, 165 dissenting opinion, 537 district attorney, 744c district courts, 521, 521 c, 526, 528-530, 529m, 530c districting, congressional, 528, 715-716
District of Columbia. See Washington, D.C.
District of Columbia v. Heller (2008), 585, 808
district plan, 391-392
divided government, 134, 359
divine right of kings, 8,650 divine right theory of the state, \(8,8 \mathrm{c}, 41\) division of powers, \(16,16 c, 17 c, 17-18\) divorce laws, 112
Dixiecrat Party, 138
DNI. See Director of National Intelligence dockets, 530
Doctors Without Borders, 511
documentary tax, 764
Document-Based Assessment
American electorate, 181 civil rights, 641, \(641 p\)
Congress, 359
congressional voting, 293
Constitution, U.S., 65
democracy, 27
direct democracy, 739
division of powers, 117
entitlement programs, 479
environmental protection, 453
fascism and communism, 675 federal judges, 543
foreign policy, 515
freedom of speech and assembly, 575 government and the economy, 703 mpact of television, 239 lobbyists, 263
nominating process, 211
Patriot Act, 609
police power, 769
political parties, 149
presidential signing statements, 423 presidential term of office, 397 strict v. liberal construction of the Constitution, 327
Twenty-third Amendment, 91, 91 m, 91 p
Dole, Bob, 135, 385, 387 domestic policy, 434, 482 domestic violence, 104
Dominican Republic, 615
Dorr, Thomas W., 103
Dorr's Rebellion, 103
Dothard v. Rawlinson (1977), 623
double jeopardy, 595-596
Douglas, William 0., \(163 q\)
Douglass, Frederick, \(244 p\) draft, military, 316, 445, 583, 813
Drake, Thelma, 343p
Dred Scott v. Sandford (1857), 808
DREs. See direct response electronic voting machines drivers' licenses, \(716 p\)
Drug Enforcement Agency, 492 drug testing programs, 588 drunk driving, 599
dual court system, 521
due process, \(31,32 c, 80\)
definition of, 578-579
examples of, 579
privacy and, 581-582
Roe v. Wade, 581-582, 813
Due Process Clause, 548, 549c, 549-550, 557-558, 569, 581, 618, 761-762, 808, 809, 810, 811, 814

Dukakis, Michael, 135
Duncan, John J., Jr., \(504 q\)
Duncan v. Kahanamoku (1946), 593
Duncan v. Louisiana (1968), 597
Dunham, Frank, \(519 p\)
Dunn v. Blumstein (1972), 157
Durbin, Dick, 333p
Durenberger, David, 284
Dwight D. Eisenhower System of Interstate and Defense Highways, 759
Dyer Act (1925), 520

\section*{E}
earmarks, 288
Eckford, Elizabeth, \(21 p\) e-commerce, 316, 763 Economic Advisors, Council of, 434
Economic and Social Council (UN), 509-511, 510p economic protest parties, 138 economics and economic systems capitalism, 678-684, 678p, 679p, 680p, 681p, 682p, 683p command economy, 687
communism, 685-686, 688c, 689-691, 690p demand-side, 464
Federal Reserve System, 693-694, 694m
fiscal policy, 474-475
global economy and, 693-700, 693p, 694m, 696c, 698c-699c, 700c
international organizations, 697-698
Labor Department and, 694-695
mercantilism and, 651
monetary policy, 475-476
Securities and Exchange Commission, 694 socialism, 685-688, 687c supply-side, 464
trade policies, 696c, 696-697, 698c
economy
borrowing, 463-466
deflation, 474
domestic economy, 693-695
employment and, 473-474
foreign affairs and, 483 gross domestic product, 473-474
inflation, 474, 475
recession, 474
spending, 467-469, 468c
taxes and, 456-462
Edison, Thomas, 198

\section*{education}

African Americans and, 21p, 257, 584
Brown v. Board of Education, 21p, 77, 257, 527, 620,
624-625, 624p, 625p, 628, 808
Congress and, \(314-315,314 p, 315 p\) creation science, 554 freedom of speech and, 814
local government and, 756-757, 756p, 757c
Pierce v. Society of Sisters (1925), 552
public opinion and, 215-217, 217p religion and, 552-555, 553p,554p school choice, 555 segregation in, 620-622, \(621 p\)
voter behavior and, 174
See also schools
Education, Department of, 437, 450
Education Amendments (1972), 626, 627, 629
Edwards, John, 390, 6929
Edwards v. Aguillard (1987), 554
Edwards v. South Carolina (1963), 808
EEC. See European Economic Community
EEOC. See Equal Employment Opportunity Commission
Egypt, 5, 485, 502
Eighteenth Amendment, C21, 80, 82, 83
Eighth Amendment, C18, 82c,549c, 602-603, 607, 809
Eisenhower, Dwight D., 134, 183q, 366, 367, 371, 397, 404, 416, \(775 c\)
election of, 384
foreign policy and, 500
Elastic Clause. See Necessary and Proper Clause electioneering, 260 election law, 127
elections
in 1796, 131
in 1800, 131, 134p, 375-376, 376c, 376m, 389, 53
in 1824, 186, 321, 389, 390
in \(1828,134 p\)
in 1832, 377
in 1836, 135
in 1840, 132
in 1848, 132
in \(1854,134 p\)
in 1856, 132
in 1860, 132, 134p
in 1864, 195
in 1876, 389
in 1884, 131, 132
in 1888, 389
in 1892, 131, 132, 198
in 1896, 132
in 1912, 131, 133, 136, 138, 140
in 1916, 131, 133
in 1920, 133
in 1924, 133, 138
in 1928, 133
in 1932, 133, 135p, 136, 464
in 1936, 133, 222-223, 224
in 1940, 133
in 1944, 133
in 1948, 133-134, 138
in 1952, 134
in 1956, 134
in 1960, 134, 239, 387, 392
in 1964, 134, 195
in 1968, 131, 134, 135p, 136, 138, 185, 390
in 1972, 134, 195
in 1976, 134-135, 185, 380, 387, 392
in 1980, 135, 185, 195, 380
in 1984, 135, 391 c
in 1988, 135
in 1992, 135, 185, 202, 207, 211, 379, 390, 473
in 1996, 135, 207, 390
in 2000, 135-136, 138, 140, 194, 198, 199, 389, 390, 393, 394
in 2002, 136, 275
in 2003, 185
in 2004, 127, 136, 138, 140, 178, 199, 390
in 2006, 136, 275
in 2008, C19p, 123p, 136, 138, 140, 142p, 170, 171, 171 g, 174, 178, 195, 204p, 206-207, 206p, 208, 215g, 384, 387, 391m, 393p absentee voting in, 194, 195
automated voting, 197-198
ballots, 194, 194p, 196-197, 197 p campaign funding, 202-203, 203p
coattail effects, 195 congressional, 275-278, 276p-277p
cost of, 201
electronic vote counting, 198, 198p
Federal Election Commission, 204-207 federal election law, 193-194 general, 185
of governors, 720, 721, 725c
hard money, 207-208
of judges, 735-736, 735p mandates, 220
nominating process, 184-192, 185p, 186p, 189p, \(191 m, 211,377-378,377 p, 381-384,381 p\) nonpartisan, 123
off-year, 170, 275
online voting, 23, 199
polling places, 195-196
presidential campaigns, 386-387, 386p primary, 186p,187-192, 191m, 378-381, 379c, \(380 p\)
public opinion and, 220-221 regulating financing of, 203-207
soft money, 203, 207-208
state government and, 194-195 to state legislatures, 715
in United Kingdom, 669
of Vice President, 374-375
vote-by-mail, 198-199
voter behavior and, 174-176
winner-take-all, 127
See also electoral college; political parties; presidential elections; voting
electoral college, \(80,83,87,186,318-319,319 c\), 387-389, 388m, 393p, 394 political parties and, 375-376, 376c, 376m politics, 235
problems with, 389-391 reforms to, 390, 391-394
system, 126-127
votes, \(374-375,376,388 \mathrm{~m}\) electorate, 132, 152-153, 181 electors, 387-389, 388m, 391
Eleventh Amendment, C19, 80, 82-83, 807
Elizabeth II, queen of England, 666, 667 p
Ellsworth, Oliver, 57
email, S24
Emancipation Proclamation, 801-802
Emanuel, Rahm, 267 p embassies, 485p, 486
EMILY's List, 205
eminent domain, 308, 309
employment, 443-445, 444p, 473-474 Employment Standards Administration (ESA), 695 enabling act, 106
encomienda system, 655
Energy Department, 437
Engels, Friedrich, 685-686
Engel v. Vitale (1962), 552, 808
England, 668, 668m
American independence and, 40-42, \(41 p\) colonies of, 32-34, 33m, 36-40, 656-657 documents from, 31-32
Enlightenment in, 653
Glorious Revolution, 31, 654 government in, 30-32, 30p, 654-655 popular sovereignty in, 654-655 women in, 655
See also Great Britain
Enlightenment, 9, 55, 55p, 653-654 entitlement programs, 467-468, 468c, 479, 758 entrepreneurs, 679
environmental protection, 110, 251, 512
Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), 110, 430, 438, 442, 453
Environmental Quality, Council on, 434
EPA. See Environmental Protection Agency
Epperson v. Arkansas (1968), 554
Equal Access Act (1984), 553
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), 447, 447p equality, 20
Equal Pay Act (1963), 617
equal protection, 80
Equal Protection Clause, 155, 157, 161, 163, 390,
618-620, 619p, 622, 629, 630, 715-716, 761-762 808, 810, 812
Equal Rights Amendment, 80, 81, 82, 527p, 617, 628 equity, 728, 737
ERA. See Equal Rights Amendment
Era of Good Feeling, 131
ERISA, 813
Ervin, Sam, 341
Escobedo, Danny, 598
Escobedo v. Illinois (1964), 598, 809
espionage, 492, 606
Espionage Act (1917), 560-561, 560 p
Essay on Man (Pope), 12q Establishment Clause, 551-552, 554-556, 555p, \(556 p\) 807, 808, 811, 814, 816 estate tax, 459c, 461-462, 764
Estes v. Texas (1965), 596
Estonia, 662
ethnic cleansing, 416
EU. See European Union
Euclid v. Amber Realty Co. (1926), 753
Europe, 506m, 506-507, 647-651
European Common Market, 698
European Economic Community (EEC), 698
European Union, 17, 35, 698, 700
Everson v. Board of Education (1947), 552 evolution theory, \(7-8,8 c, 554\)
e-voting, 199 excise tax, 459c, 46
excludable aliens, 636
exclusionary rule, 587-590, 815
exclusive powers, 99-100
executive action, \(86-87,86 p\) executive agencies, 409
executive agreement, 87
Executive Article, 400-401, 404 executive branch, \(\mathrm{C} 10-\mathrm{C} 12,17-18,17 \mathrm{C}\) agencies of, 429
bureaucracy of, 429, 431-440
checks and balances and, 72-73, 73c chief administrator of, 365
lobbying and the, 256
postal service and, 308
separation of powers and, 70-72
state, 42, 720-726, 720p, 722p, 723m, \(725 c\) See also President, U.S.
executive departments, 429, 435-437
Executive Office of the President (EOP), 429, 430
Council of Economic Advisors, 434
National Drug Control Policy Office, 434
National Security Council, 432-433
Office of Management and Budget, 433, 433p
White House Office, 431-432
See also President, U.S. executive power, \(5,5 p\)
executive privilege, 409-411, \(410 p, 411 p\)
exit polls, \(220 p, 222\)
Expansion Era, 436
expansionism, 105m, 105-106
Ex parte Merryman (1861), 592
Ex parte Milligan (1866), 22, 22p, 592, 809
expatriation, 634
Export-Import Bank of the United States, 448 exports, 457, 696, 696c, 698c-699c, 700 expository essay, S3-S5
ex post facto law, 593, 594
expressed powers, 96, \(97 p\), 296-309, 305c
extradition, 113-114

\section*{F} factions, 131
factors of production, 678-679, 679c failed states, 665
fair trial, right to a, 548 Fair Use Doctrine, 307
faithless electors, 391
Farm Bill (2007), 339, 340
Farm Bureau, 250 farms and farming. See agriculture Farm Service Agency, 449 fascism, 14, 659-660, 659p, 675
Fast Facts
African Americans in Congress, 166 party control of governorships, 135 c party control of state legislatures, 135c FBI. See Federal Bureau of Investigation
FCC. See Federal Communications Commission
FCC v. Pacifica Foundation (1978), 564
FDIC. See Federal Deposit Insurance Commission FECA. See Federal Election Campaign Act federal aid, 109
Federal-Aid Highway Act (1956), 758
Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), 492, 526, 591
Federal Communications Act (1934), 563-564 Federal Communications Commission (FCC), 447, 563-564
federal court system, 85
appeals courts, 521c, 530c, 530-531 court officers, 526
Court of International Trade, 521c, 529, 531 district courts, 302, 302c, 521c, 528-530, 529m inferior courts, \(521 c, 528-531,529 m\) judges of, 523-526, 525p jurisdictions of, 522-523, 523c national judiciary, 521c, 529-526
special courts, \(521 c, 538-540,538 p, 539 p\) See also Supreme Court, U.S.
Federal Deposit Insurance Commission (FDIC), 448
Federal Election Campaign Act (FECA), 203
Federal Election Commission, 161, 200, 204-207, 441 federal election law, 193-194
Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), 494 Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 447

The Federal Farmer, 61 federal government, 16, 16c
concurrent powers, 100, 100 p
Constitutional Convention and, 57
economy and, 682
employment with the, 443-445, 444p
exclusive powers, 99-100
executive departments in, 435-437, 435p, 436p, \(437 p\)
expressed powers, 96, \(97 p\)
grants-in-aid programs, 107-108 implied powers, 96-97, \(97 p\) inherent powers, 97 lobbying, 253, \(253 p\)
powers denied to the, 98
shared powers, 107-109, 108p
Supremacy Clause, 101
See also bureaucracy; federalism; national government federal grants, 108-109, 108p
federalism, \(71 p, 74 c, 74-75,80\)
bicameralism and, 269
definition of, 94-96
dual court system and, 522
individual rights and, 548-550 political parties and, 143 presidential elections and, 378 purpose of, 94
Supreme Court and, 101-102
The Federalist, 243-244, 269, 417, 427, 520, 543
Hamilton, 3q, 74, 75q, 93q, 244, 314, 482 Madison, 10, 71, 74, 244, 305q
no. 9, 244
no. 10, 244, 791-794
no. 51, 794-796
no. 78, 523, 796-799
term limits, 397
The Federalist: A Commentary on the Constitution of the United States, 61
Federalist Era, 436
Federalist Party, 59-62, 125, 130-131, 186-187, 313, 375-376, 376c, 376m, 533
Federal Maritime Commission, 447
Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (1946), 253
Federal Reserve Act (1913), \(311 p\)
Federal Reserve Banks, 476
Federal Reserve Board (the Fed), 475-476
Federal Reserve System, 311 p, 447, 447p, 462,
693-694, 694m, 695
Federal Trade Commission (FTC), 409, 447, 531
Feingold, Russell D., 317q
Feinstein, Diane, 322p felony, 309, 728
FEMA. See Federal Emergency Management Agency
Ferdinand, king of Spain, 650p, 656
Ferguson, Miriam, 721, 725-726
feudalism, 648, 649
Fifteenth Amendment, C21, 80, 83, 103, 153, 153p, 155, 161, 164-165, 166, 278
Fifth Amendment, C17, 82c, 309, 420, 548-549, 549c, 578, 594, 595, 618, 808, 811 self-incrimination and, 598-599
filibusters, 350, 352-353, 626
Fillmore, Millard, 774c
fingerprints, \(598 p, 599\)
First Amendment, C17, 70, 82c, 189, 230, 242, 244p, 549c, 559
commercial speech, 567
Establishment Clause, 551-552
Free Exercise Clause, 557-558
Lemon test, 554-555, 555p
lobbying and, 253 media and the, 563-565, 564p-565p shield laws, 563
in Supreme Court cases, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812. 813, 814, 816
symbolic speech, 565-567, 566p
See also civil liberties; freedom of assembly and petition; freedom of press; freedom of religion; freedom of speech fiscal policy, 456, 474-475 borrowing and, 463-466
Keynesian economics, 464-465
public debt, 465, 467 fiscal year, 433
Fiske v. Kansas (1927), 550
flag, 260
burning, 81, 566-567, 815
salute to the, 546,558
Flag Protection Act (1989), 567, 815
Flast v. Cohen (1968), 809
Fletcher v. Peck (1810), 76, 102 floor consideration, 287
floor leaders, 336
Florida, \(776 m-777 m\) agricultural groups in, 250
in Civil War, 284
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529m, 531
Cuban Americans in, 615
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 198,388 \mathrm{~m}, 389-390,391 \mathrm{~m}\)
English settlement in, 32
first amendment rights in, 546, 558, 571, 572
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
ocal government in, 755
statistical profile, 772 c
Supreme Court cases in, 586, 597, 622, 623
undocumented aliens in, 637
voting rights in, \(154 \mathrm{~m}, 162,168\)
Florida Purchase, 496
Florida v. J.L. (2000), 586
Fong Yue Ting v. United States (1893), 637
Food and Agriculture Organization (UN), 510, \(510 p\) forced labor. See involuntary servitude; slavery force theory of the state, \(7,8 \mathrm{c}\)
Ford, Gerald R., 134-135, 319, \(321 p, 327 q, 373,380\), \(419 c, 419 p, 420,775 c\)
election of, 387
foreign policy and, 485
Ford, Henry, 130, 495
foreign affairs, 482
Foreign Affairs, Department of, 484 foreign aid programs, 504, 505-506, 505 p
Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (1978), 404, 591
Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, 528-529
foreign policy, 304, 499
in Afghanistan, 502-503, 502p
Cold War, 498-499, 499m, 501-502
collective security, 498
containment, 500, 505
definition of, 483
détente, 501
deterrence, 498, 502, 515
Good Neighbor Policy, 497
implementing, 484
internationalism, 498, 507
isolationism, 495-496, 498
Israel and, 502
manifest destiny, 496-497
in Middle East, 502
Monroe Doctrine, 496, 497
North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 506m, 506-507
Open Door Policy, 497-498
President and, 365
right of legation, 485
Truman Doctrine, 499-500
World War II, 498
oreign Service, 486
foreign trade, 56, 696c, 696-697, 698c
Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement (1992), 570
Four Corners, \(111 p\)
Four Freedoms (Roosevelt), 805
Fourteenth Amendment, C20-C21, 80, 83, 103, 155, 157, 161, 163, 189, 390, 547, 549c, 549-550, 557-559, 569, 578, 598, 603, 604, 607, 622, 628 630, 632, 633, 684, 715-716, 753, 761, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 814 . See also due process
Fourth Amendment, C17, 82c, 83p, 549c, 585-587,
\(586 p, 587,589,591,607,618-619,811,812,815\)
Fox, Michael J., 259p
Fox, Vincente, 672
France, 37, 106, 653, 654p, 655
franchise, 152

Franco, Francisco, 660
Frank, Barney, 280
Frankfurter, Felix, \(579 q\)
franking privilege, 289
Franklin, Benjamin, 10
Albany Plan of Union and, 37-38
as ambassador, 485
at Constitutional Convention, \(53,53 p, 56,57,58\)
Declaration of Independence and, 40
media and, 232
postal system and, 308
at Second Continental Congress, \(36,36 p, 36 q, 40\) on taxes, 456 on voting rights, 152
Frazier, Lynn J., 722
Freedman v. Maryland (1965), 563
freedom of assembly and petition, 569, 575 civil disobedience and, 569-570 private property and, \(571-572,571 p\) public property and, \(570-571,571 p\) right of association, 572 time-place-manner rules, 570 freedom of press, \(32 c, 60,232,548,550,564,812\) freedom of religion, \(32 c, 60,551-558,551 p\), 553 , \(553 p, 554 p, 555,555 p, 556 p, 816\)
freedom of speech, \(32 c, 60,547-548,550,562,564\), \(575,808,809,810,813,814\) commercial speech, 566,567
libel, 559
media and, 563-565, 564p-565p
obscenity, 561
prior restraint, 561-563
seditious speech, 560-561
slander, 559
symbolic speech, 565-567, 566p
free enterprise system, 23-24, 679-682, 680p
Free Exercise Clause, 551, 556, 557-558, 808, 814, 816 free market economy, 464, 681, 691 Free Soil Party, 137, 139c, 139p free trade, 692, 697-699, 700
Frémont, John C., 132
French and Indian War, 37
French Revolution, 654p, 655, 660 Friedman, Milton, \(677 q\)
fringe benefits, 289
Frist, Bill, 350
From the Constitution
Article I, 96, 108, 268, 271, 275, 299, 300, 306, 312, 456, 469
Article II, 400, 405, 406, 417, 419, 524
Article III, 332, 520
Article IV, 104, 112, 113, 114
Article VI, 101
Commerce Clause, 298
Connecticut Compromise, 57
Eighth Amendment, 602
Fifth Amendment, 594
First Amendment, 553
Fourteenth Amendment, 549, 632
Fourth Amendment, 586, 586p
Full Faith and Credit Clause, 112
Ninth Amendment, 550
Preamble, 9-10
Privileges and Immunities Clause, 114
reserved powers, 95
Second Amendment, 585
Sixteenth Amendment, 300, 458
Sixth Amendment, 596
State of the Union, 86
Supremacy Clause, 101
Twentieth Amendment, 271
Twenty-fifth Amendment, 373
Twenty-second Amendment, 367
Twenty-sixth Amendment, 158
Frontiero v. Richardson (1973), 623
FTC. See Federal Trade Commission
Full Faith and Credit Clause, 112-113
Fulton, Robert, 297 Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, 32 fundamental laws, \(31,710,713\). See also constitutions Furman v. Georgia (1972), 604, 809

G8. See Group of 8
Gaines, Lloyd, 620
Galloway, Joseph, 39
Gallup, George, 223
gambling, 745-746, 765
Garfield, James, 366, 371, 774 c
Garner, John Nance, 372
GATT. See General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade
Gayle v. Browder (1956), 622
GDP. See gross domestic product gender gap, 174
General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), 697
General Assembly. See state legislatures
General Assembly (UN), 509
General Court. See state legislatures general elections, 185
General Services Administration (GSA), 441, 442
General Strike of 1926, 688
general ticket system, 275, 276
general trial courts, 733 Geneva Conventions (1949), 402 genocide, 507, 665
George III, king of England, 9, 37, 39
Georgia, \(776 m-777 m\)
colonial, 32, 33, 33m, 38
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m at Constitutional Convention, 51
constitution of, 709, 713
courts in, 529m, 531, 732p
Declaration of Independence and, 47
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 570
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 721, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m presidential candidates from, 385 ratification of the Constitution and, \(61 c, 61 p\) slavery and, 56 m state legislature in, 269, 709, 715p
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 82-83, 102, 581, 604, 605
voting rights in, 154m, 158, 161, 167, 168
Germany, 14, 16, 498, 500, 500p, 660, 699c
Gerry, Elbridge, \(278 p\) gerrymandering, 165, 276-278, 276p-277p, 278p, 715 Gerson, Michael, \(431 p\) get-out-the-vote drive, 208 Gettysburg Address, 13, 802-803
Gibbons, Thomas, 297-298
Gibbons v. Ogden (1824), 297-298, 315, 809
Gibson v. Florida (1966), 572
Gideon, Clarence Earl, 546, 597-598, 597p
Gideon v. Wainw right (1963), 597-598, 597p, 809 gift tax, 459c, 461-462
Gingrich, Newt, 332
Ginsburg, Ruth Bader, 524, 536c, 536p
Gitlow, Benjamin, 550
Gitlow v. New York (1925), 549, 550, 809
Gladstone, William E., 53, 667
glasnost, 662, 689
glass ceiling, 617
global economy, 693-700, 693p, 694m, 696c 698c-699c, 700c
globalization, 692, 695, 699, 700
Glorious Revolution, 31, \(654 p\) Gobitis, Walter, 558
golden age of parties, 124
Goldman v. Weinberger (1986), 557
Goldwater, Barry, 134, 195
Gomillion v. Lightfoot (1960), 165, 278
Gonzales, Alberto, 404
Gonzales v. Carhart (2007), 582
Good Neighbor Policy, 497
Good News Club v. Milford Central School (2001), 553
GOP. See Republican Party
Gorbachev, Mikhail, 501, 662, 689
Gore, Al, 136, 175, 334, 389, 406 p
Goss v. Lopez (1975), 809

\section*{governmen} in ancient Greece, 646-647 basic concepts of, 30-3 capitalism and, 678-684
central planning, 689
as characteristic of the state, \(7,8 c, 8-9\)
colonial, 32-34, 33m, 651 command economy, 687 communist, 659-660, 659p, 685-686, 688c, 688-691, 690p content neutral, 570
definition of, 4-5
democracy and, 13-14, 15c
dictatorships, 14, 15c distribution of power in, 14, 16c, 16-17
divine right of kings, 650 division of powers of, 94, 117 in the Enlightenment, 653-654
fascism, 14, 659-660, 659p, 675
feudalism, 648, 649
forms of, 12-18
Laissez-faire theory and, 682
legitimacy, 650-651
mercantilism, 651
of Mexico, 666p, 670m, 670-672, 671p
mixed economy and, 682-683
overthrowing the, 97, 561 participation in, 12-14
political parties and, 124
popular sovereignty, 654-655 powers of, \(5,5 p\)
purpose of, 9-11
republican form of, 103-104
Roman Catholic Church and, 648 in Roman Republic, 647-648, 647 p, 649 Second Continental Congress and, 40 size of, 450, \(450 p\) socialist, 685-688, 687c sovereign state, 648-650, 649p of United Kingdom, 667-669
See also limited government
Government Accountability Office, 324
government corporations, 448-449
Government Online Interactive
amending the Constitution, 79 c
The Capitol, 269p
checks and balances, 73 c
confirmation process, \(407 c\)
Congressional committee staffers, \(347 p\) Constitution, \(53 p, 70 p-71 p\) court jurisdictions, 523c Enlightenment, 55p executive powers, 415
federal budget, 470
Fourteenth Amendment, 549
gerrymandering, 276-278, 276p-277p labor unions, 249 political parties, \(134 p-135 p\) political spectrum, 126 presidential veto power, 419 c ratification of the Constitution, \(60 p\) state constitutions, \(712 c\)
Supreme Court justices, 536, 536c, 536p territorial expansion, 105m governors, \(722 p, 723 m\)
African Americans, 721
compensation of, 722
election of, 720, 721, 725 c
executive powers of, 722-724
judicial powers of, 724-726 legislative powers of, 724 message power, 724
military powers of, 724
party control of, 135 c as presidential candidates, 384-385 qualifications of, 720 removal of, 721-722, 723
special sessions and, 716, 724 succession of, 721, 722 veto power, 724
women, 720p, 721
grand juries, 31, 530, 594-595, 728-729, 730
Grand Rapids School District v. Ball (1985), 554 Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, 407 The Grange, 244, 250

Granholm, Jennifer, 721
Grant, Ulysses S., 366, 418, 774c, 774p
grants-in-aid programs, 107-108
grass-roots lobbying, 257-258, 258p
Gratz, Jennifer, 630
Gratz v. Bollinger (2003), 257, 629, 630, 810 graveyard committee, 718
Grayned v. City of Rockford (1972), 570
Great Britain
American independence and, 40-42, \(41 p\) colonies of, 36-40
common law, 727-728
democracy in, 654-655, 668
destroyers-for-bases deal, 413-414
government in, 14, 16
jury trials, 730
Parliament in, 269
See also England
Great Charter. See Magna Carta
Great Depression, 301, 693, 694 deficit spending and, 463-464 fiscal policy during, 474-475
government corporations during, 448 political parties in, 133, 135p public opinion during, 219, \(219 p\)
Greater New Orleans Broadcasting Association v. United States (1999), 567 Great Leap Forward, 690
Great White Fleet, 415
Greece, 5, 27, 646-647
Greenback Party, 138, 139c greenbacks (money), 303, 457
Green Libertarian Party, 140
Green Party, 127, 138, 140
Greenspan, Alan, 682p
Greer v. Spock (1976), 562
Gregg v. Georgia (1976), 604, 605, 810
Gregoire, Christine, 183p
Gregory, Dick, 570-571
Gregory v. Chicago (1969), 570-571
Grenada, 416
Griswold v. Connecticut (1965), 581, 810 gross domestic product (GDP), 473-474
Group of 8, 98p, 698
Grutter, Barbara, 630
Grutter v. Bollinger (2003), 257, 629, 630, 810
GSA. See General Services Administration Guam, 309
citizenship and, 633
district courts, 528, 529m, 540
House of Representatives and, 273, 343
political parties and, 143
Guantanamo Bay, 402, 539, 539p, 593 guerilla warfare, 657
Guinn v. United States (1915), 161, 166
Guiteau, Charles J., 444
Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, 414, \(414 p\)
Gulf War, 503
gun control, 251, 255, 259, 585, 808, 815
Gun-Free School Zone Act (1990), 299, 815

\section*{H}

Habeas Corpus Act (1863), 592
haciendas, 655-656, 657
The Hague, 511
Haiti, 663-664
Halberstam, David, 231 q
Hamdan v. Rumsfeld (2006), 402, 539
Hamilton, Alexander, \(3 q, 51,93 q, 130 p\), \(310 p, 374\)
at Constitutional Convention, 53, 53p, 59 election of 1800, 375-376, 376m federalism and, \(75 q\)
Federalist Party and, 125, 130-131
foreign affairs and, 482
judicial review and, 74
on the judiciary, 796-799 liberal constructionists and, 314
national judiciary and, 520, 523
Presidential term and, 366 ratification of the Constitution and, 60p, 61, 62 as Secretary of Treasury, 438 term limits for judges, 543

Hamilton, Lee, 266p, 293
Hammurabi, 780
Hancock, John, 40, 47p, 53, 59 hanging chads, 198, 390p
Hanoi, 500
Harding, Warren, 133, \(775 c\) hardliners, 661
hard money, 207-208
Harlan, John Marshall, \(611 q\)
Harpers Ferry, Virginia, 606
Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections (1966), 163, 166
Harrington, James, 8
Harris, Patricia, 486
Harrison, Benjamin, 420, 774
Harrison, William Henry, 132, 370, 774 c
Hastert, Dennis, 332
Havel, Vaclav, 661
Hawaii, \(776 m-777 m\)
annexation of, 413
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 711
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191m, 193, 388m, 391 m, 393
gains statehood, 105m, 106, 274
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
local government in, 743
minority population in, 612
Pearl Harbor, 498, 592-593, 593p
revenues in, 765
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 593
voting rights in, 154m, 158
Hay, John, 497
Hayes, Rutherford B., 774C
Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier (1988), 563, 810
The Head Money Cases (1884), 413 health and healthcare, \(98,479,511-512,687,687 p\) 757, 757c Health and Human Services Department, 437, 467-468, 468c
Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States (1964), 810
Help America Vote Act (2002), 194, 198
Henry, Patrick, 29q, 39, 53
at Constitutional Convention, 59
ratification of the Constitution and, 60-61, 60p, 62 slavery and, 65
Hepburn v. Griswold (1870), 303
Heritage Foundation, 252
Hess, Stephen, 234
heterogeneous society, 612
Hicklin v. Orbeck (1978), 114 hidden taxes, 461 higher education, 107, 757
highways, 757c, 758p, 759
Hill v. Colorado (2000), 571
Hill v. Stone (1975), 155
Hine, Lewis, 244p
Hispanics. See Latinos; specific nationalities
Historical Documents, 780-806
History of U.S. Decision-Making Process on Viet Nam Policy. See Pentagon Papers Hitler, Adolf, 659p, 660
Hobbes, Thomas, 7, 8, 653
Ho Chi Minh, 500
Hodgson v. Minnesota (1990), 582
Holmes, Oliver Wendell, 21, 102q, 459, 548, 559, 560
Homeland Security, Department of, 406, 437, 492-494,
493p, 494p
Homeland Security Act (2002), 492 homeless people, \(163 p\)
Hones Leadership and Open Government Act (2007), 253
Hoover, Herbert, 133, 366, 408-409, 464, 775c Hopkins, Stephen, 39
hopper, 343
House of Commons, 667, 669
House of Delegates, \(714 p\)
House of Lords, 667
House of Representatives, U.S. apportionment and, 273, 274 m bills become laws, 343-349, 345c, 347 p, 348p calendars, 346-347
committee actions, 346
Committee of the Whole, 348
compensation of members, 288-290, 289p
conference committees, 342, 353, 356
constitutional amendments and, 81
convening of, 330-332
districts, 275-276
elections to, 275-278
electoral duties of, 318-319, 319c expulsion from, 279, 280
floor leaders, 336
gerrymandering and, 276-278, 276p-277p, 278p impeachment process and, 319-322, 320p, \(321 p\) obs of members, 286-288
joint committees, 341-342, 342c
Latinos in, 288p
party officers in, 334c, 334-336, 335m
political campaigns for, 201 presidential elections and, 389, 390, 392, 394 privileges of members, 290
qualifications for, 279-280
reapportionment of, 274m, 274-275 Rules Committee, 340, 347
select committees, 340-341
Senate and, \(291 c\)
size of, 273
Speaker of the House, 334
special sessions of, 271
standing committees, 338-340, 340c, 341c
State of the Union Message, 331-332 subcommittees, 346
terms of, 273
types of bills, 343-344
Virginia Plan and, 54
voting in, 287, 287 c
Ways and Means Committee, 315, 341
women in, 266p, 279p
See also Congress, U.S.; Speaker of the House ousing, 437, 613, 626
Housing and Urban Development, 437
How Government Works acquiring citizenship, 634
amending the Constitution, 79 c appeals courts, 530 c appeals process, 535 ballots, 194
bills become laws, 354-355 building support, 355
checks and balances, \(73,73 c\) city government forms, \(752 p\)
confirmation process, 407c
Congress and education, \(314-315,314 p, 315 p\) congressional influence, 322-323, 322p,323p copyrights and patents, \(306-307,306 p-307 p\) county government structure, 744c, 744p criminal and civil law, 729c criminal justice system, 594-595, 594p, 595p
Department of Homeland Security, 493
electoral college, 319c, 321
Executive Branch, 429
executive departments, 436-437 executive officers, \(725 c\) fair use, 307
Farm Bill, 339, 340
federal budget, 433 federal courts, 521 c
federal grants, \(108 p\)
Federal Reserve System, 694, 694m freedom of speech and press, 564-565 gerrymandering, 276-278, 276p-277p, 278p grass-roots lobbying, 258, 258p identify government departments, 437 impeachment process, 320, 320p nitiative and referendum processes, 718,718 Lemon Test, 555 Louisiana gains statehood, 106p military, 489p
minor parties, 139c, 139p municipalities and townships, 747 m nomination process, \(186 p\) paths to statehood, 106 political parties, \(125,125 p\) prepare a budget, 433
public opinion, 221
regulatory commissions, 447 state and local revenues, 763, 763c, 763p state and local spending, 757c state constitutional amendments, 712
State Department, 484
Supreme Court, 535c
using public opinion, 225
voter registration, 159, 159p
Hoyer, Steny, 333p
Hoyt v. Florida (1961), 622
Hudson v. Michigan (2006), 587
Hughes, Charles Evan, 527, 537 human rights, 251 p, 512
Human Rights Watch, \(251 p\)
Humphrey, Hubert, 134, 334
Humphrey's Executor v. United States (1935), 408-409 hung jury, 596, 730
Huntington, Samuel, 661, 663
Hunt v. Cromartie (2001), 278
Hussein, Saddam, 416, 664
Hutchinson v. Proxmire (1979), 810
Hutus, 658
I
Idaho, 776m-777m
congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional representation and, \(274 m\)
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191m, 388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 622-623
voting rights in, 154m, 168
IDEA. See Individuals with Disabilities Education Act ideological parties, 137, 139p
IIIegal Immigration Restrictions Act (1996), 638
Illinois, 751, 776m-777m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
congressional representation and, 274 m
constitution of, 711
courts in, 529m, 733, 734c, 735 elections in, 187, 191m, 388m, \(391 \mathrm{~m}, 393\)
first amendment rights in, 552, 570-571
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, \(720,723 m\)
immigrants in, 636m
presidential candidates from, 385
statistical profile, 772c
Supreme Court cases in, 586-587, 598, 599, 622
voting rights in, 154 m
Illinois v. Caballes (2005), 587
Illinois v. Perkins (1990), 599
Illinois v. Wardlow (2000), 587, 810 immigrants and immigration, 97, 137, 406, 637 naturalization and, 634 policies of, 616 population of, 612, 635, 635m quotas and, 635-636
regulation of, 635-636,637
See also aliens; excludable aliens
Immigration Acts, 635, 636, 636m
Immigration and Customs Enforcement, U.S., 494
Immigration and Nationality Act (1952), 636
Immigration Reform and Control Act (1986), 637-638

\section*{immunity, 290} impeachment process, \(72,319-322,320 p, 321\) p, 408 of governors, 721-722 judges and, 525
imperial presidency, 403, 404
implied powers, 96-97, 97 p, 296, 297c, 310-311, 312-316, 313c imports, 457, 459c, 462, 696c, 696-697, 698c-699c Inauguration Day, 389, 390 income tax, 80, 96, 300, 458, 459c, 459-460, 760, 763c, 763-764, 763p
incorporation, 749-750
incumbents, 131, 280
independent agencies, 407, 429
government corporations, 448-449
independent executive agencies, 442-445, 443p, \(444 p\) independent regulatory commissions, 445-448, \(447 p\)
purpose of, 441-442
independent candidates, 189
independent executive agencies, 442-445, 443p, 444p
Independent Party, 127
independent regulatory commissions, 445-448, \(447 p\) independent voters, 177-178
India, 16, 502
Indiana, 776m-777m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
congressional representation and, 274 m
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191m, 388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
voting rights in, \(154 \mathrm{~m}, 160,161\)
Indiana ballot, 196, \(197 p\)
Indian Education Act (1972), 614
Indians. See Native Americans indictments, 594, 729 indirect democracy, 13-14
indirect initiative, 719 indirect tax, 301 individual initiative, 680-681
individual rights, 9, 21
Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), 315p, 629
Industrial Era, 436 inferior courts, 521, 521c, 541 appeals courts, 530-531
Court of International Trade, 531 district courts, 528-530, 529m
inflation, 474, 475
information affidavit, 595
information charge, 729-730 inherent powers, 97, 296, 297 c inheritance tax, 764 initiative process, 718c, 719, 739 initiatives, 712, 717-718 injunction, 165, 562
Innocence Protection Act (2001), 681 innocent, presumption of, 595
In re Debs (1895), 104
In re Gault (1966), 810
In re Kemmler (1890), 603
In re Oliver (1948), 596
Institutional Revolutionary Party, 657 insurrections, 104
integration, 620, 621
Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (1947), 497, 507 interest, 462
interest groups, 221, 249
agricultural groups, 250 business groups, 248
critiscism of, 245-246
definition of, 242
direct approach, 254-257, 254p, 255p, 256c early, \(244 p\)
electioneering and, 260
indirect approach, 257-260, 258p Internet and, 257-258, 258p issue-oriented groups, 251-252 labor groups, 248-250, 249p lobbying and, 256
merit of, 243-245
political parties and, 243
professional associations, 250-251 propaganda and, 259-260
public interest groups and, 252
public opinion and, 258-259
public policy and, 242-243 religious organizations, 252 role of, 242-243, 245
types of, 247-252
See also lobbyists
Interior, Department of, 436
Internal Revenue Service (IRS), 425p-426p, 460

International Court of Justice (UN), 511
internationalism, 498, 507
international law, 309
International Monetary Fund, 510, 510p, 511, 697-698
international organizations, 697-698
International Security Assistance Force, 507
International Trade Commission, 696 Internet, 229c, 230, 232-233, 233p digital age literacy, S24
evaluating web pages, 231
fundraising on the, 203p, 259 interest groups and, 257-258, 258p as news source, 652 obscenity and the, 561,565
politics and, 235
taxes and, 316, 763
voting and, 199
interstate commerce, 56, 86, 99, 448 Interstate Commerce Commission, 448
interstate compacts, 111
Interstate Highway System, 758
Intolerable Acts, 39 involuntary servitude, 583-585. See also slavery Iowa, 145, 776m-777m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
congressional representation and, 274 m
constitution of, 711
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191m, 381, 388m, 391 m first amendment rights in, 566, 566p
gains statehood, 105m
governors of, 723m, 724
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 769
voting rights in, 154 m
Iran, 502
Iran-Contra Scandal, 341, 433
Iran Hostage Crisis, 486p, 487
Iraq, 35, 35p, 502, 503, 664, 664m
Iraq Resolution, 415
Iraq War, 136, 275, 306, 317, 415, 415p, 416, 500
503, 512, 539, 539p, 724
iron curtain, 499
Isabella, queen of Spain, 650p
isolationism, 482, 495-496, 498
Israel, 414, 502
issue advertising, 200
Issues of Our Time
adopting a constitution, 35,35p
campaign finance, 200 congressional war powers, 317, 317p environment and states' rights, 110
filibusters, 350
foreign aid programs, 504
globalization, 692, 692p judicial restraint and activism, 527
lobbying, 253, 253p
presidential powers, \(404,404 p\) size of government, 450, 450p state taxation and spending, \(760,760 p\) terrorism and national security, 591 Italy, 14, 660 item veto, 724
Iturbide, Agustín de, 656

\section*{J}

Jackson, Andrew, 72, 186, 200, \(311 p, 774 c\)
Cabinet of, 440
election of, \(134 p\)
political parties and, 131, 132
signing statements, 418
spoils system and, 443-444
Jackson, Robert H., 547, 558
Jacksonian democracy, 132
Jacobellis v. Ohio (1964), 561
Jacobson v. Massachusetts (1905), 557 jails, 744
James I, king of England, 8, 708
James II, king of England, 782
Jamestown, 36, 38, 708
Japan, 8, 616, 698c

Japanese Americans, 252, 546, 548, 616
Japanese Pact (1951), 507
Jay, John, 39, 61, 796
Jefferson, Thomas, 53, 67q, 117, 319, 391, 774c
Alien and Sedition Acts and, 560
bicameralism and, 269
Declaration of Independence and, 9, 40, 43p, 45p 400
election of, 134p
election of 1800, 375-376, 376c, 376m
on equality, 20 freedom of religion and, 551-552
freedom of speech and, 575 on justice, 9
on liberty, 10
Louisiana Purchase, 106
Marbury v. Madison, 76-77, 811
on patriotism, 11
political parties and, 130-131
Presidency of, 83, 86
presidential powers and, 405, 431
on the press, 230, 230q
ratification of the Constitution and, 62
at Second Continental Congress, 40 as Secretary of State, 438, 484 strict constructionists and, 313-314
Supreme Court and, 533
Jeffersonian Democrats, 131
Jehovah's Witnesses, 546, 558
Jim Crow laws, 619, 620
John, king of England, 31, 781
Johnson, Andrew, 319, 321, 408, 418, 774 c
Johnson, Lyndon B., 104, 134, 207-208, 366
398p-399p, 775c, 775p
Cabinet of, 438
civil rights and, 166, 181
as commander-in-chief, 416
foreign policy and, 486, 500
in Senate, 334
succession to Presidency, 87
Vietnam and, 306, 414, 416
Johnson, Richard M., 319
Johnson, Stephen L., 110p, 110q
Johnson, William Samuel, 57
Johnson v. Transportation Agency of Santa Clara County (1987), 629, 811 joint chiefs of staff, 489p, 490
joint committees, 341-342, 342c
joint resolutions, 344
Jones v. Mayer (1968), 584
Joseph I of Spain, 656
Journal (House), 344
Judaism, 555, 557
Judea, 648
judges, federal, 407, 523-526
African American, 524
appellate court, 531
decison making of, 525 p district court, 528-530 impeachment of, 525
special courts and, 538
Supreme Court, 536p term limits for, 543
women, 524
judges, state, \(732 p, 735-736,735 p\)
election of, 190, 192
selection of, 735-736, 735p
women, \(732 p\) judicial activism, 524-525, 527 judicial branch, C12-C13 checks and balances and, 72-73, 73
judicial review and, 73-74
separation of powers and, 70-72
state court system, 42, 727-730, 729c, 732-736, \(732 p, 734 p, 735 p\), \(737 p\)
See also Supreme Court, U.S. judicial philosophy, 524-525 judicial power, \(5,5 p\) judicial restraint, 524,527 judicial review, 71p,73-74, 76-77, 76p, 77p, 87, 532, 534, 549, 563, 710
Judiciary Act (1789), 77, 85, 524, 528, 533, 533p
Judiciary Committee, 524

Juliard v. Greenman (1884), 303 junkets, 346
junta, 15 c jurisdictions
appellate court, 531, 534, 734-735
district courts, 529-530
federal court, 522-523,523 state court, 522
Supreme Court, 534
types of, 522-523, 523c jury system, 597, 727p, 728-731, 731p, 737
ius sanguinis, 633, 634
ius soli, 633, 634
justice, concept of, 9
Justice, Department of, 435, 436, 536, 609 justice of the peace, 31, 732
juvenile courts, 733, 734, 734p
Juvenile Justice and Deliquency Prevention Act (1974), 734

\section*{K}

Kahn v. Shevin (1974), 623
Kansas, 776m-777m
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191 m, 388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723m, 724
immigrants in, 636 m
presidential candidates from, 385
statistical profile, 772 C
Supreme Court cases in, 596, 620, 624-625, 624p, \(625 p\)
voting rights in, 154m, 176
Kansas v. Hendrick (1987), 596
Katz v. United States (1967), 589
Kelly, Oliver Hudson, 244p
Kelly, Robert, 495
Kelo v. City of New London (2005), 308
Kennedy, Anthony M., 536c, 536p
Kennedy, Edward, 281 p, 380
Kennedy, John F., 366, 412, 775
assassination of, 87
Cabinet of, 439
election of, 134, 225, 239, 385, 387, 392
foreign policy and, 500
on individual freedom, 21 on lobbying, \(255 q\)
Kentucky, 776m-777m congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional representation and, 274 m
courts in, 529m, 735
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 553, 556-557
gains statehood, 105m, 106
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, 772 C
Supreme Court cases in, 113-114, 630
voting rights in, 154m, 158
Kentucky v. Dennison (1861), 113-114
Kerry, John, 127, 136, 175, 178, 385, 390
Keynes, John Maynard, 464-465, 475
Keynesian economics, 464-465
kidnapping, 277
Kilpatrick, Carroll, 410
Kimble v. Swackhamer (1978), 80
Kim Jong-II, 691
King, Martin Luther, Jr., 9, 104, 164p, 165-166, 613, 622 civil rights and, 626, 626p, 641, \(641 q\)
King Caucus, 186-187
Kitchen Cabinet, 440
Klopfer v. North Carolina (1967), 596
Know Nothing Party, 137
Knox, Henry, 438
Korea, 509
Korean Pact (1953), 507
Korean War, 402, 414, 416, 500, 724
Korematsu, Toyosaburo, 546
Korematsu v. United States (1944), 548, 811

Kosovo, 416, 507, 724
Kuperus, Charles, 435
Kuwait, 415
Kyl, Jon, 333p

\section*{L}

Labor, Department of, 436, 439, 694-695 labor and labor unions, 248-250, 249p, 464, 679, 688
Labor Day, 240p-241p
La Follette, Robert, 138, 139p
Laissez-faire theory, 680-681, 682 land, 678
and grant colleges, 107
Landmark Decisions of the Supreme Court
Brown v. Board of Education, 624-625, 624p, 625p, 808 judicial review, 76-77, 76p, 77p
Marbury v. Madison (1 803), 76-77, 76p, 77p, 811
McCulloch v. Maryland (1819), 310-311, 310p-311p 811
Miranda v. Arizona (1966), 600-601, 600p, 601p, 811
United States v. Nixon, 410-411, 410p, 411p, 815
Landon, Alf, 222-223, 224
Landrum-Griffin Act (1959), 593
Landsgemeinde, 13
Lansing, John, 62
Laos, 690-691
Lasswell, Harold D., 25
Latin America, 688 colonies in, 655-658, 656m
Good Neighbor Policy, 497 government in, 655-658, 656m
Monroe Doctrine, 496
Rio Pact, 507
Latinos
as Cabinet members, 438, 439
in Congress, 278, 285, 288p discrimination against, 614-615 population of, \(612,614-615,614 \mathrm{~g}, 615 \mathrm{~g}\)
voter behavior of, 176
voting rights of, 168
women, 439, 439p
See also specific nationalities
Latvia, 662
law enforcement, 757c, 758-759
FBI, 529
Miranda rule, 599, 600-601, 600p, \(601 p\)
National Security Agency, 529
See also criminal justice; police force law of the constitution, 666 laws, bills become, 287-288, 338-342, 354-355, 418,
718c, 718-719
League of Nations, 413, 507, 51
League of Women Voters, 251, 253
Leahy, Patrick, 268p, 423
Lee, Richard Henry, 39, 40, 48, 53, 59, 61, 62, 800-801
Lee v. Washington (1968), 622
Lee v. Weisman (1992), 553
legal tender, 303
Legal Tender Cases (1871), 303
Legislative Assembly. See state legislatures legislative branch, C3-C10, 17-18, 17c, 266-293 bicameralism, 709
checks and balances and, 72-73, 73c
separation of powers and, 70-72
state, 42, 714-719, 714p, 715p, 716p, 718c
See also Congress, U.S.; House of Representatives U.S.; Senate, U.S. legislative courts. See special courts egislative debate, 290 legislative power, \(5,5 p\) legislature, state. See state legislatures
legitimacy, 650-651
Lemon test, 554-555, 555p
Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971), 554, 81
Lend-Lease Program, 505
Lenin, V.I., 689
Leno, Jay, 268
Letters from the Federal Farmer (Lee), 800-801 Lexington and Concord, Battle at, 28p-29p, 39 ibel, 559
liberal constructionists, 314-315, 327 liberals, 126
Libertarian Party, 127, 137
Library of Congress, 307, 324
Libya, 14
licenses, 764
license tax, 764
Lidster v. Illinois (2004), 586-587
Lieberman, Joe, 353
lieutenant governor, 721, 726
limited government, 9, 31, 57, 69-70, 70p, 94, 232, 296, 583, 680 constitutions and, 709, 710
individual rights and, 547-548
state constitutions and, 41, 42
Lincoln, Abraham, 321, 401, 774c, 774p
assassination of, 319
Cabinet of, 440
Civil War and, 317, 592
as commander-in-chief, 415
on democracy, \(23 q\)
election of, 132, 134p
Emancipation Proclamation, 801-802
Ex Parte Milligan and, 22, 22p
Gettysburg Address, 13, 802-803, 802p on government, 249
line agencies, 430, 449
line-item veto, 356, 418-419
Line Item Veto Act (1996), 356, 419
Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island (1996), 567 literacy requirements, 161-162, 162p, 166, 168, 406 Lithuania, 662
litigants, 529
Little Rock Nine, \(21 p\)
Livingston, Philip, 39
Livingston, Robert, 40
Lobbying Disclosure Act (1995), 253 lobbyists, 253, 253p, 254-257, 254p, 255p, 263, 331, 341, 470. See also interest groups local government, 30-31, 713, 746 borrowing by, 765-766
economy and, 682
education and, 756-757, 756p, 757c elections and, 192, 197
federalism and, 98
highways and, \(757 c, 758 p, 759\)
in Mexico, 672
nontax revenues, 764-765
public health and, \(757,757 \mathrm{c}\) public safety and, 757c, 758-759 public welfare and, \(757 c, 757-758\)
spending by, 756-759, 757c
state government and, 100 taxes and, 761-764, 761p,763c, 763p
in United Kingdom, 669-670
See also city government; county government;
state government; town government; townships;
tribal government
Locke, John, 8, 9, 33, 38, 55p, 653, 784, 784p
Locke v. Davey (2004), 556
Lockyer v. Andrade (2003), 604
Lombardi, Vince, 122
London Company, 32
Long, Huey, 352
Long, Russell, 288
López Obrador, Andrés Manuel, 672 lotteries, 760, 765
Louisiana, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
in Civil War, 284
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 713 courts in, \(529 \mathrm{~m}, 727\)
elections in, 189, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 195,388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 554, 567, 570 gains statehood, 105m, 106p
governors of, 721, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m
local government in, 743
state government in, 715,716
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 579, 597, 603, 623
voting rights in, 154m, 157, 161, 167, 168
Louisiana Purchase, 87, 106, 496

Louisiana v. Resweber (1947), 603
Louis XIV, king of France, 655
Loving, Richard and Mary, 113p
Loving v. Virginia (1967), 622
Lugar, Richard, 322p
Lukimi Babalu Aye v. City of Hialeah (1993), 558
Iulu payments, 109
Luther v. Borden (1849), 103, 527
luxury tax, 461
Lynch v. Donnelly (1984), 555
Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association (1988), 557

\section*{M}

Madison, James, 51, 76-77, 77p, 130p, 546p, 774c, 796
bicameralism and, 269
on checks and balances, 417, 794-796 on Congress, 268, 281, 305q
at Constitutional Convention, 53, 53p,58,59
expressed powers of Congress, \(305 q\) on interest groups, 243-244
judicial review, 74
at Philadelphia Convention, 401
political parties and, 131
ratification of the Constitution and, 61
on republican government, 791-794 on separation of powers, 71
Supreme Court and, 533
Twenty-seventh Amendment, 83
Madrazo, Roberto, 672
Madsen v. Women's Health Services, Inc. (1994), 571 magazines, 229c, 232 magistrates, 526
magistrates' courts, 733
Magna Carta, 31, 32c, 580, 654, 666, 781, 781p
Maine, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191 m, \(376 \mathrm{~m}, 388,388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}, 392\)
gains statehood, 105m, 106
governors of, 721, 722, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, 772 c
voting rights in, 154m, 159, 176
Maine, U.S.S. (battleship), 496p
majority leader, 336 majority-minority districts, 278 majority opinion, 537 majority rule, 20-21
Malloy v. Hogan (1964), 598
Management and Budget, Office of, 433, 433p, 438 mandate, 220
mandatory referendum, 719
manifest destiny, 496-497
Mao Zedong, 690
Mapp, Dollree, 546, 588, \(588 p\)
Mapp v. Ohio (1961), 588, 588p, 811
Marbury, William, 76-77, 77 p, 533
Marbury v. Madison (1803), 76-77, 76p, 77p, 87, 97,
519p, 533-534, 811
March on Washington, 610p-611p
Marcy, William Learned, 443-444
Marine Corps, 491, 491 c maritime law, 522 market-based system. See free enterprise system marriage laws, 112
Marshall, George C., 505
Marshall, John, 62, 76-77, 77p, 96-97, 101-102, 117, 298q, 310, 311, 519p, 532p, 533-534
Marshall, Thurgood, 21 p, 251, 524, 625p
Marshall, U.S., 407, 526
Marshall Plan, 505, 505p, 507
Marsh v. Chambers (1983), 556
martial law, 22
Marx, Karl, 657, 660, 685-686, 688c, 689
Marxism, 137, 657
Maryland, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
Articles of Confederation and, 48,50,50m
colonial, 33m, 33-34
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
Constitutional Convention and, 55
constitution of, 709, 711, 713
courts in, 529 m
Declaration of Independence and, 47
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}, 393\)
first amendment rights in, 552-553, 557, 563
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
ratification of the Constitution and, 61c, \(61 p\)
slavery and, 56 m
state legislature in, 716
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 101-102, 310-311
\(310 p-311 p, 314,315,458,595\)
voting rights in, 161
Mason, George, 53p, 62, 374, 785
Massachusetts, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
colonial, 32-33, 33m, 37, 39, 40
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
at Constitutional Convention, 51
constitution of, 41, 70-71, 708p, 709, 711-712 713
courts in, 529 m
driving licenses in, 95
education in, 756
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 557, 567
gains statehood, 105m
gerrymandering and, \(278 p\)
governors of, 709, 720, 721, 723m, 724
immigrants in, 636 m
ratification of the Constitution and, 60, 61c, \(61 p\)
same-sex marriage in, 113
Shays' Rebellion, 48p, 50
slavery and, 56 m
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
voting rights in, 154m, 161
Massachusetts Bay Colony, 33m, 34, 37, 47, 308, 649, 760
Maximillian, prince of Austria, 496
Mayflower (ship), 782
Mayflower Compact, 32, 38, 782, 782 p mayor, \(750,750 p\)
mayor-council government, 750
McCain, John, 93p, 282p, 384p, 385
campaign finance law, 200 election of 2008, 178, 203p, 204p, 206-207, 208, 384, 387
voter behavior and, 174
McCain-Feingold Law, 208
McCarthy, Eugene, 185
McCollum v. Board of Education (1948), 552
McConnell, Mitch, 200, 333p
McConnell v. FEC (2003), 203, 207
McCreary County v. ACLU of Kentucky (2005), 556-557
McCulloch, James, 101, 310
McCulloch v. Maryland (1819), 96, 101-102, 310-311,
\(310 p-311\) p, 314, 315, 458, 527, 761, 811
McGovern, George, 134, 195
McGowan v. Maryland (1961), 557
McKinley, William, 132, 413, 775 c
McLaurin v. Oklahoma (1950), 620
Mecham, Evan, 721
media
confidentiality and the, 563
First Amendment and, 563-565, 564p-565p limits on, 235-236
politics and, 233-235, 239 presidency and, 401
propaganda and, 259-260
public opinion and, 217-218, 218p, 221
public trials and, 596-597
role of, 228-233
Senate and, 283
See also Internet; magazines; motion pictures;
newspapers; radio; television
Medicaid, 467-468, 468c, 757
Medicare, 289, 460-461, 467-468, 468 c
mercantilism, 651
MERCOSUR, 698

Meredith v. Jefferson County Board of Education (2007), 629, 630
Merit Systems Protection Board, 445 Merkel, Angela, 98p
message power, 417, 724
mestizos, 614
metric system, 308
metropolitan areas, 754-755
Mexican Americans, 614-615, 619
Mexican Revolution, 657
Mexico, 16, 106, 695, 697, 698c borders with, 637
government of, 666p, 670m, 670-672, 671p independence in, 656m, 656-657
Monroe Doctrine and, 496
Michael M. v. Superior Court (1981), 619
Michigan, 776m-777m
affirmative action in, 628
congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional representation and, 274 m constitution of, 711 court systems, 523c, 529m, 735
elections in, 187, 188, 191 m, 199, 388m, 391 m
first amendment rights in, 554
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 721, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 630
voting rights in, 154m, 168
welfare in, 96
Mid-Atlantic states, 743
Middle Ages, 648
Midwestern states, 743

\section*{mikado, 8}
military civilian control of, 488-489, 489p Congress and, 304-306
courts, 530c, 538-539 departments, 490-492, 491c draft, 316, 445, 583, 813
President and, \(489 p\)
Selective Service System, 445
voting rights of, 156p
See also armed forces
Military Commissions Act (2006), 539 military law, 539
military tribunals, 539
militias, 724
Miller, Clem, 338
Miller-El v. Dretke (2005), 597
Miller v. California (1973), 561, 585
Millionaires' Club. See Senate, U.S.
Milosevic, Slobodan, 416, 507
Minersville School District v. Gobitis (1940), 558
Mineta, Norman, 439 minimum wage, \(716 p\) ministers, 667-668
Minnesota, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\) congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional representation and, 274 m courts in, 529m, 735 elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}\), 391 m
first amendment rights in, 555, 562
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
state legislature of, 715
statistical profile, 772c
Supreme Court cases in, 582, 586
voting rights in, 154m, 156, 157
Minnesota v. Carter (1999), 586
minority leader, 336 minority parties, 394 minority rights, 21
minor parties, \(137 p, 140 p\) history of, 139c, 139p importance of, 138-140
types of, 137-138
Mint, U.S., 453p-454p
Miranda, Ernesto, 599, 600, 600p
Miranda rule, 598, 599, 600-601, 600p, \(601 p\)

Miranda v. Arizona (1966), 77, 598, 599, 600-601
600p, 601p, 811
Mir (space station), 199
misdemeanor, 728, 730
Mississippi, 776m-777m
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 709
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191 m, 195, 388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 721, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
state legislature in, 715, 716
statistical profile, \(772 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 620
taxes in, 762
voting rights in, \(154 m, 157,161,162,167,168\)
Missouri, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 711
courts in, 529 m
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}, \mathrm{~S} 27 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 563
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, 772c
Supreme Court cases in, 413, 581-582, 620
voting rights in, 154 m
Missouri Plan, 735, 736
Missouri v. Holland (1920), 413
Missouri v. Seibert (2004), 60 mixed economy, 682-683
moderates, 126
Moley, Robert, \(440 p\)
Mommy track, 617
monarchy, 15c, 646, 650, 651, 653-65 Mondale, Walter, 135, 334, 387, 391 c monetary policy, 475-476 money colonies and, 37
Congress and, 299-303, 300 p, 301 c, 302c
discount rate, 476
mercantilism and, 651
open market operations, 476 paper, 457
reserve requirements, 476
See also Federal Reserve System; monetary policy monopolies, 681-682
Monroe, James, 62, 496, \(774 c\)
Monroe Doctrine, 496, 497
Montana, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 711
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191m,388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
House of Representatives and, 273
immigrants in, 636m
state government in, 96
statistical profile, 773c
voting rights in, 154 m
Montesquieu, Baron de, 40, 55p, 653
Morgan, Alisha Thomas, 715p
Mormons, 420, 557
Morrill Act (1862), 107
Morris, Gouverneur, 53, 53p
Morse v. Frederick (2007), 548
motion pictures, 563
Motor Voter Law, 16
Mott, Lucretia, 803-804, 803p
Mount Vernon, 50
MoveOn.org, 257-258, 258p
muckrakers, 232
Mueller v. Allen (1983), 555
Mugabe, Robert, 14
Mugwumps, 196
Muhlenburg, Frederick A.C., 332
mulattos, 614
multi-party system, 128c, 128-129 municipal courts, 733 municipalities, 747m, 747-748
Munn v. Illinois (1876), 250
Murray v. Curlett (1963), 552-553
Muslims, 548
Mussolini, Benito, 659, 660, 675
Mutual Film Corporation v. Ohio (1915), 563
Myanmar, 15c
Myers, Frank, 408
Myers, Michael, 280
Myers v. United States (1926), 408
Myths and Misconceptions advancement of judges, 536
ambassadors, 486
executive privilege, 408
judicial review, 534
National Guard, 492
popular sovereignty, 70
public voting, 195
reverse delegation, 101
state with the most cities, 751 tax brackets, 458
urnout among young voters, 175
two heads of government, 670
U.S.-Soviet hot line, 501 voting rights in Ancient Greece, 159
Washington bureaucrats, 428

\section*{N}

IAACP. See National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Nader, Ralph, 127, 138, 140, 175
Napoleon III, 496, 655, 656
Napolitano, Janet, 721
Napster, Inc., 528p
narrative essay, S1-S2
NASA. See National Aeronautics and Space Administration Nast, Thomas, 132-133, 133p, \(181 p\) nation, 6
National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), 441, 442-443, 443p national anthem, 552
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), 251, 252, 257, 572, 624
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People v. Alabama (1958), 572
National Association of Colored Women, 244
National Banking Act (1863), \(311 p\)
National Broadcasting Co. v. United States (1943), 564 National Bureau of Standards, 308
National Child Labor Committee, 244
National Counterterrorism Center, 492
National Drug Control Policy, Office of, 434, 438
National Education Association, 250
National Firearms Act (1934), 585 national government, 16, 71
concurrent powers, 100, 100p
Constitutional Convention and, 57
exclusive powers, 99-100
expressed powers, 96, 97p mplied powers, 96-97, 97p
individual rights and, 549
inherent powers, 97
egislative branch, 266-293
powers denied to the 98
Second Continental Congress and, 40
shared powers, 107-109, 108p
See also federal government; federalism
National Grange, 250
National Guard, 104, 107, 488, 490, 492, 724
National Institute of Standards and Technology, 308
National Intelligence Director, 492
ationalization, 686-687
national judiciary, 520-526, 521c
National Labor Relations Board (NLRB), 447, 447 p, 53
National Origins Act (1929), 635
national popular vote, 393-394
National Railroad Passenger Corporation, 448 National Republican Party, 131, 138, 187
ational security
Defense Department, 488-490, 489p

Homeland Security Department, 492-494, 493p,
494p military departments, 490-492, 491c
National Intelligence Director, 492
National Security Act (1947), 488, 489, 491, 591
National Security Agency (NSA), 404, 492, 529, 589
National Security Council (NSC), 432-433, 490
National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB), 442
National Treasury Employees Union v. Von Raab (1989), 588

\section*{Native Americans}

Albany Plan of Union and, 37 casinos and, 341
in Congress, 285
discrimination against, 613-614, 619
encomienda system and, 655 first amendment rights of, 557 interest groups, \(244 p\)
population of, 613-614
system of government and, 32
tribal government, 745-746, 746m voting rights of, 168 NATO. See North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) natural disasters, 104 naturalization, 109, 156, 309, 632p, 633-634, 633g Navy, U.S., 415, 488, 490-491, \(491 c\) nazism, 14, 660
Near v. Minnesota (1931), 550, 562
Nebraska, 776m-777m
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529 m
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 380,388,388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}, 392\)
first amendment rights in, 553, 556, 562
gains statehood, 105m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636m
state government in, 95-96, 269, 714, 715, 716, 717
statistical profile, \(773 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 582
voting rights in, 154m, 158-159, 176
Nebraska Press Association v. Stuart (1976), 562
Necessary and Proper Clause, 96-97, 310-311,
\(310 p-311 p, 312-315,811,814\)
Negroponte, John, 492 networks, 229
Nevada, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
congressional representation and, 274 m
courts in, 529m, 735
elections in, 191 m, 388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
revenues in, 765
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 112
voting rights in, 154 m
New Deal, 107, 464
New England Confederation, 37
New England states, 743, 746-747
New Hampshire, 776m-777m
colonial, 33, 33m, 38
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
at Constitutional Convention, 51
constitution of, 41, 709, 711, 712, 713
courts in, 529 m
Declaration of Independence and, 47
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 379,381,388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 557, 570
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 721, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
ratification of the Constitution and, 61, 61c, 61p
slavery and, 56 m
state government in, 96, 715
state lottery in, 760
statistical profile, 773 c
voting rights in, \(154 \mathrm{~m}, 162,168,176\)
New Jersey, 776m-777m agriculture in, \(435 p\)

Articles of Confederation and, 50 colonial, 33, 33m, 36
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
Constitutional Convention and, 51, 55
constitution of, 709, 712
courts in, 529 m
Declaration of Independence and, 47
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 195,376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}, 393\)
first amendment rights in, 552, 572
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 722, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
interstate compacts, 111
local government in, 747
minority population in, 615
ratification of the Constitution and, \(61 c, 61 p\)
slavery and, 56 m
state government in, 95, 715
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 297-298, 811
voting rights in, 154 m
New Jersey Plan, 55, 269
New Jersey v. T.L.O. (1985), 811
New Mexico, \(111 p, 776 m-777 m\)
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529m, 735
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}\), 391 m
gains statehood, 105m, 274
governors of, 723m, 724
immigrants in, 636 m
Mexican Americans in, 614
minority population in, 612
statistical profile, 773 c
voting rights in, 154m, 168
New Orleans, 531
newspapers, 229c, 229-231, 230p, 233, 236,
562-562, \(562 p\)
New York, \(776 m-777 m\)
Articles of Confederation and, 50
colonial, 33, 33m, 39
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
Constitutional Convention and, 54-55
constitution of, 709, 711
courts in, 528, 529m, 734
Declaration of Independence and, 47
education in, 756
elections in, 191 m, 198, 376m, 388m, 391 m
first amendment rights in, 552, 553, 554-555
gains statehood, 105m
governors of, 709, 720, 721, 723m, 724
immigrants in, 636 m
interstate compacts, 111
local government in, 747, 749p
minority population in, 615, 616
presidential candidates from, 385
ratification of the Constitution and, 61, 61c, \(61 p\) 62
slavery and, 56 m
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 297-298, 356, 603
voting rights in, 154m, 162, 168
New York City, 212p-213p, 240p-241p
city government, 750
courts in, 53
as nation's capital, 62
UN in, 509
New York Times (newspaper), 77
New York Times v. United States (1971), 562, 812
New York Times v. Sullivan (1964), 812
New Zealand, 507
Ney, Robert, 341
NGOs. See non-governmental organizations Nineteenth Amendment, C21, 80, 153, 153p, 154m, 155
Ninth Amendment, C18, 82c, 550, 813
Nixon, Richard M., 77, 373, 392, 775c
as commander-in-chief, 416
election of, 134, 136, 239, 387
foreign policy and, 485,500,501, \(501 p\) pardon of, 420
Pentagon Papers and, 562
resignation of, 219, 321-322, 341, 372, 409, 410-411, 410p, 411p
in Senate, 334
and the Solid South, 176
Vietnam and, 306, 416
Watergate scandal, 134, 203, 205, 321-322, 341,
\(366,410-411,410\) p, 411 p, 420
Nixon v. Fitzgerald (1982), 812
Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC (2000), 812
noble experiment, 83
No Child Left Behind Act (2002), 107-108, 450, 450p, 757 nomination process, 123, 143, 184-192, 211, 376, 384-385 non-governmental organizations (NGOs), 512 nonpartisan primary, 190
nontax revenues, 462
no-party system, 129
Noriega, Manuel, 416
Norman Conquest, 649p
Norris, George, 356, 716
North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), 323p, 672, 692, 695, 697, 700
North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), 416, 486, 506m, 506-507
North Carolina, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\) colonial, \(33,33 \mathrm{~m}, 38\)
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional elections in, 278
at Constitutional Convention, 51
constitution of, 709
courts in, 529m, 735
Declaration of Independence and, 47
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 557
gains statehood, 105m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
ratification of the Constitution and, 62
slavery and, 56 m
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 112, 596, 604, 621
voting rights in, 154m, 161, 167, 168
North Dakota, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529m, 735
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}\), 391 m
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 722, 723m
House of Representatives and, 273
immigrants in, 636 m
revenues in, 765
state government in, 95, 716
statistical profile, 773c
voting rights in, 154m, 159, 161, 176
Northern Ireland, 668, 668m
Northern Mariana Islands, 528, 529m, 540, 633, 634
North Korea, 500, 502, 691
North Vietnam, 500
Northwest Ordinance of 1787, 105, 107
Northwest Territory, 105
NRC. See Nuclear Regulatory Commission
NSA. See National Security Agency (NSA)
NTSB. See National Transportation Safety Board
Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (1970), 502 Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC), 447, \(447 p\) nuclear weapons, 502, 515
Nutter, Michael, 740p, \(741 q\)

OASDI. See Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Obama, Barack, \(92 p, 123 p, 167,211 q, 282 p, 285\) election of 2008, 178, 203p, 204p, 206-207, 208, 384, 385, 387
voter behavior and, 174
obscenity, 548, 560, 561, 565
Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), 695 occupations, 700 C

0'Connor, Sandra Day, 524, 591, 591 p, 605, 630 office-group ballot, 196, \(197 p\)
Office of Management and Budget (OMB), 469-470 Office of United States Trade Representative, 488 off-year elections, 170
Ogden, Aaron, 297
Ohio, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
congressional representation and, 274 m
constitution of, 711
court systems, \(523 \mathrm{c}, 529 \mathrm{~m}\)
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 546,548,554,555,558, 563, 570, 575
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723m, 724
immigrants in, 636m
local government in, 747
presidential candidates from, 385
statistical profile, 773 c
Supreme Court cases in, 582, 587, 588, 588p, 753
voting rights in, 154 m
Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health (1990), 582 oil supply, 502
Oklahoma, 323p, 776m-777m
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 711
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191m, 388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105m, 107
governors of, \(723 \mathrm{~m}, 724\)
immigrants in, 636m
statistical profile, 773 c
Supreme Court cases in, 588, 620, 623
voting rights in, 154m, 161, 166
Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (OASDI), 460-461, 467-468, 468c
oligarchy, 14, \(15 c\)
Olmstead v. United States (1928), 589, 812
one-party system, 129
online voting, 199
Open Door Policy, 497-498
open-election law, 189
Open Housing Act (1968), 626
open market operations, 476
open primary, 188-190, 191 m
Operation Iraqi Freedom, 416 OPM. See Personnel Management, Office of optional referendum, 719 ordered government, 30-31
Ordinance of 1785, 105
ordinance power, 406
Oregon, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
congressional representation and, 274 m
constitution of, 713
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 191m, 193, 196-197, 198, 199, 378, 379, 388m, 391 m
first amendment rights in, 552, 569
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 721, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m
local government in, 755, 755 p
state government in, 95, 96, 716, 717
statistical profile, 773 c
Supreme Court cases in, 408, 579, 588
voting rights in, 154m, 162, 168
Oregon v. Mitchell (1970), 162, 168, 812
Oregon v. Smith (1990), 556 organized interests. See interest groups original jurisdiction, 523,534, 541
Orr v. Orr (1979), 619
Orwell, George, 612
OSHA. See Occupational Safety and Health Administration
Oslo Accords (1993), 502
Oswald, Lee Harvey, 134
outsourcing, 700
Oval Office, 431, 432p
oversight functions, 288
P. Lorillard Co. v. Reilly (2001), 567 packing, 276
Packwood, Bob, 284
PACs. See political action committees
Paine, Thomas, 53
Pakistan, 502
Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), 502
Palin, Sarah, 387, 720p, 721
Panama, 323p, 414, 416, 497 panics, economic, 475-476, 693 paper ballot, 194, 196
pardons, 419-420, 724-725
Parents Involved v. Seattle School District (2007), 629, 630 parishes, 743
Parliament, British, 14, 15c, 31-32, 269, 655 parliamentary government, 18, 70, 666-670, 667p 668 m parliamentary practice, 345 parole, 725
Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act (2003), 582 partisans, 287, 287 c partisanship, 124 partnerships, business, 683-684 party caucus, 335-336 party-column ballot, 196, \(197 p\) party identification, 177-178
The Passenger Cases (1849), 635
passport, 487, 487p patents, 306-307, 306p-307p, 522, 53
Paterson, William, 55
Patraeus, David, \(317 p\)
patricians, 647
Patrick, Deval, 721
Patrick, Luther, 288
Patriot Act (2001), 588-589, 591, 609 patriotism, 11, 558 patronage, 443
Patterson, Thomas E., \(613 q\)
Patterson v. McLean Credit Union (1989), 584 payroll tax, 459c, 460-461, 764
Peace Corps, 442
Pearl Harbor, 497, 498, 548, 592-593, 593p
Peloponnesian War, 647
Pelosi, Nancy, 266p, 285, 330p, 332, 333p
Pendleton Act (1883), 444
Penn, William, 37, 308
Penn Post, 308
Pennsylvania, 776m-777m
Articles of Confederation and, 50
colonial, 33m, 34, 39, 40
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
at Constitutional Convention, 51
constitution of, 709
courts in, 529m, 735
Declaration of Independence and, 47
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 552-553, 554, 555-556 558
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m
local government in, 747, 748
ratification of the Constitution and, 61, 61c, 61p
slavery and, 56 m
state legislature in, 269, 709
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 582
voting rights in, 154m, 156
Whiskey Rebellion, 415
Pennsylvania Evening Post, 230
Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, 448
Pentagon, 490
Pentagon Papers, 562
People's Republic of China, 414, 416. See also China perestroika, 662, 689 periodicals. See magazines perjury, 321
Perkins, Frances T. "Ma," 438
Perot, H. Ross, 135, 139, 185, 185p, 202, 207

Peroutka, Michael, 127
Perry, Matthew, 497
Persian Gulf War, 135, 724
persona non grata, 414, 487
Personnel Management, Office of (OPM), 443 persuasive writing, S9-S10 petition, right to, 32 c petition nominations, \(186 p, 192\) Petition of Right, 31, 32c, 654 petit jury, 530, 597, 730, 733
Pew Research Center for People and the Press, 223
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 51, 51 p
Philadelphia Convention (1787), 401
Philippines Pact (1951), 507
picketing, 565-566
Pierce, Franklin, 366, 774c
Pierce v. Society of Sisters (1925), 552, 554, 579
pigeonholing, 345, 346-347, 718
piggy-back tax, 763 Pilgrims, 38, 746
piracy, 309
Pittsburgh v. ACLU, 556
plain-folks approach, 260
plaintiffs, 523
Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v Casey (1992), 582
Plato, 27
plebeians, 647
Pledge of Allegiance, 546
Plessy v. Ferguson (1896), 77, 619-620, 619p, 624, 628, 812 pluralistic society, 127
plurality, 127
pocket veto, 356, 418, 724
Pointer v. Texas (1965), 598
Poland, 661
police courts, 733 police force, 769
arrests by, 587
Fourth Amendments and, 585-587
Miranda rule, 599, 600-601, 600p, \(601 p\) probable cause and, 585-587, 586p
search warrants, 585 police jury, 743
police power, 717
Policy Development, Office of, 434 political action committees (PACs), 202, 205-206, 259, 260, 812 Political Cartoon Mini-Lesson
American isolationism, 498 ballot initiatives, 717
battleground States, 389
British Labour Party, 669 budget deficits and public debt, 465
capital punishment, 605
checks and balances, 72
civil service system, 444
concurrent powers, 100 congressional appropriations, 315 constitutional conventions, 57 convention acceptance speeches, 38 debt limit, 301
democracy in Iraq, 664
dictatorship, 14
Equal Rights Amendment, 80, 628
equality, 22
executive powers of governors, 723
Federal Reserve, 695
filibusters, 350, 353
Fourth Amendment rights, 587 government and the free market, 68
Iraq War funding, 306
udicial nomination process, 323 justice for sale, 735
obbying and special interests, 256 ocal government officials, 746
Marxism, 657
media influence on voters, 234
No Child Left Behind Act (2002), 107
opposing interests, 249
political party rivalry, 125 political party symbols, 132 presidential term limits, 367
public opinion, 216
redistricting, 275
security, 10
selecting Cabinet members, 438 spending bill, 345
state budgets, 765
state funding for schools, 758
State of the Union message, 332
Supreme Court vacancy, 525 tax cuts, 459
political cartoons, analyzing, \(11 p\) Africa, 658p
bureaucracy, \(427 p\) congressional raises, \(289 p\) economy, 475p
Eighth Amendment, 603p elections, 185p foreign policy, 483p, 497p
Fourth Amendment, 83p governors, \(722 p\)
immigration, \(638 p\)
impeachment, \(101 p\)
Internal Revenue Service, 300p judges, \(735 p\) lawmaking process, \(348 p\) media influence, \(234 p\)
Medicare, S22
military tribunals, \(539 p\) older Americans, 243p
PACs, 260 p
political campaigns, \(284 p\) political parties, \(129 p, 131 p, 133 p, 143 p, 148 p, 149 p\) polls, \(222 p\) presidential appointees, \(408 p\) presidential elections, \(380 p\) presidential powers, \(402 p\)
red tape, \(448 p\)
taxes, \(457 p\) television, 218p
United Kingdom, 669p
Vice President, \(372 p\) voter behavior, \(172 p\), \(177 p\) war powers, \(316 p, 324 p\) political efficacy, 172
political machines, 145

\section*{political parties}
bonding agent function, 124
Cabinet members and, 438 campaigns and, \(120 p-121 p, 141\) chairpersons, 144-145
congressional campaign committee, 144c, 145 congressional voting and, 287, 287 c
Constitution and, 87
conventions, \(122 p, 143,145,146,207,377-378\), 377p, 381-384, \(381 p\)
definition of, 122-123
democracy and, 122-123, 124 election of 1800 and, \(375-376,376 c, 376 m\) electoral system and, 126-127, 211 era of divided government, 131, 134-136, 135p era of the Democrats, 131-132, 133-134,
134p-135p
era of the Republicans, 131, 132-133, 134p
federalism and, 143
first parties, 130-131, \(130 p\) fundraising and, \(144 g, 144 p\) gerrymandering and, 276-278, 276p-277p, 278p
in the Great Depression, 133 impact of, 381
interest groups and, 243
judgeships and, 524
in Mexico, 672
minor parties, 137-140, 137p, 139c, 139p, 140p, 147
multi-party system, 128c, 128-129 national committee, 143-144 nomination process and, 143, 184, 187, 189
one-party system, 129
in other countries, 128 platforms of, 382-383
President and, 365
rivalries, 124-125
role of, 123-124
role of presidency in, 142 slavery and, 132
state organizations and, 145c, 145-146, 146p symbols of, 132 timeline of, 134p-135p
two-party system, 121p, 124-128, 128c, 130-136, 130p, 133p, 134p-135p, 147
in United Kingdom, 669
voter behavior and, 177-178
watchdog function, 124
See also Democrat Party; names of other parties Republican Party
olitical platforms, 126 political socialization, 173, 216, 217p, 217q political spectrum, 123, 126
politicos, 287, 287 c
politics
Constitution and, 68
definition of, 5
local nature of, 144
media and, 233-235, 235
Politics (Aristotle), 27
Polk, James K., 366, 774c poll books, 160
polling places, 195-196
Pollock v. Farmers'Loan and Trust Co. (1895), 458

\section*{polls} evaluating, 225-226
exit polls, 220 p, 222 process of conducting, 223-225
scientific polling, 223
straw votes, 222-223
poll tax, \(81,154,162,164,166,300,458\) poll watchers, 196
Pope, Alexander, \(12 q\)
popular referendum, 719
popular sovereignty, \(9,41-42,57,68 p, 69,70,70 p, 80\), 654-656, 661, 675, 709, 710 population, 772c-773c
in 1789, 78
in 1790, 250, 612
of California, 270, 270c
as characteristic of the state, \(6,7 p, 8 c, 8-9\)
of cities, 749, 754p
Congressional representation and, 269-270
Connecticut Compromise and, 56
farming, \(754 p\)
House of Representatives and, 276-278
of immigrants, 635, 635m of suburbs, \(754 p\) of Washington, D.C., 91 of Wyoming, 270, 270 c
See also Census, U.S Populist Party, 132, 138, 139c, 739
Portugal, 657
Post Office, U.S., 304p, 308, 441 p, 448 post roads, 307
Postwar Era, 437
Powell, Colin, 88p, 439, 484, 484p
Powell v. Alabama (1932), 812
Powell v. McCormack (1969), 280 power brokers, 123
preamble, 711
Preamble to the Constitution, C3, 9-10, 68, 69, 69c
precedents, 524, 525, 728 precincts, \(145 c, 146,195-196\) preclearance, 167, 168
preconvention campaigns, 206 preliminary hearings, 732
presentments, 594
President, U.S., 5p, 774c-775c
appointment power, 88, 322-323, 402, 405-408, 407c, 408p bills and, 356, 356p bureaucracy and office of, 429, 431-440
Cabinet of, 87-88, 322-323, 407, 435-440, 439p
campaigns and, 386-387, 386p
checks and balances and, 72-73, 73c
as commander-in-chief, 305, 365, 414-416, 414p
415p, 488-489, 489p, 490
confirmation process, \(407 c\)
Congress and, 271, 365, 368, 418-419, 419, 419c
419p at convention, 383-384
court officers and, 526
diplomatic powers, 412-414, 412p, 413p, 421 disability of, 371-372 Economic Report of, 418
election of, \(17 c, 17-18,57,124,188,189,190\) \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 193,194,215 \mathrm{~g}, 374-376,376 \mathrm{~m}\) electoral college and, 87
executive action, 86-87, 86p executive agreements, 413-414
Executive Article, 400-401, 404
executive orders, 406 executive powers of, 405-411, 407c, 408p \(410 p-411\) p, 421
executive privilege, 408, 409-411, 410p, 411p
federal budget and, 417, 433, 469, 471 federal laws and, 405-406
foreign policy and, 483
immunity of, 812
impeachment of, 319-322, 320p, 321 p, 322 imperial presidency, 403, 404
judges and, 524
judicial powers, 419-420, 421 legislative powers, 417-419, 419c, 419p, 421 media and, 401 message power, 417
oath of office, 405
ordinance power, 406 pay and benefits, 368 , 368p
political parties and, 365 power of recognition, 414 powers of, 401-402, 402p, 404, 415-415, 415p, 427-428 power to prorogue, 271
qualifications of, 366 recess appointments, 407-408
removal power, 408-409
roles of, 364-366
separation of powers and, 70-72
signing statements, 418,423
State of the Union Message, 331-332, 417 successors to, 86, 333, 370-372 term of office, 81, 83, 88, 366-368, 367p, 397 treaties and the, 323, 323p, 412-413 veto power of, 72, 289, 356, 418-419, 419c views of, 402-403
See also executive branch; Executive Office of the President presidential debates, 387
Presidential Election Campaign Fund, 206, 207 presidential elections, \(17 c, 17-18,57,124,188,189\) 190, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 193,194,215 \mathrm{~g}, 374-376,376 \mathrm{~m}\) campaigns and, 386-387, 386p caucuses, 381
cost of, 201
direct popular election, 392-393
district plan, 391-392
fundraising for, 206-208
national popular vote, 393-394
nominating process, \(377-378,377\) p, 381-384,
381 p, 384-385
primaries, 378-381, 379c, 380p
proportional plan, 392
See also electoral college presidential electors, 374 presidential government, \(17 c, 17-18\) Presidential Succession Act (1947), 370, 389 presidential system, 70
President pro tem, 370 president pro tempore, 289, 334, 717
press. See media pressure groups. See interest groups Préval, René, 663-664
Préval, René, 663-664
PRI, 672 prices, 683c
price stability, 474
primaries, 186p, 187-192, 191m, 378-381, 379c, 380 p, 383
Primary Sources, S14
Adams, John, 185q
Articles of Confederation, 51
Black, Hugo L., 162, 552

Bradley, Joseph P., \(622 q\)
Brennan, William J., Jr., 566-567, 623q
Brown, Sherrod, 330
Civil Rights Act (1866), 584
The Communist Manifesto (Marx and Engels), 685
Declaration of Independence, 40,546
Declaration of Sentiments, \(616 q\)
De Tocqueville, Alexis, 244q, \(245 q\)
Douglas, William O., 163q
election process, 187
English Bill of Rights, 32
Federal Convention of 1787, 58
The Federalist, 75q, 269, 427
Fortas, Abe, 554
Franklin, Benjamin, \(10 q\)
Halberstam, David, \(231 q\)
Holmes, Oliver Wendell, 102q, 560
Jackson, Robert H., 558
Jefferson, Thomas, \(230 q\)
Kennedy, John F., 255q, 412
Lincoln, Abraham, 23q, \(24 q\)
Marshall, John, \(298 q\)
McCulloch v. Maryland, 102q, 811
Monroe, James, 496q
Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787, 401
Pope, Alexander, \(12 q\)
Potter Stewart, \(584 q\)
Randolph, Edmund, 54
Rollins, Ed, \(256 q\)
Schenck v. United States (1919), 548, 814
Taft, William Howard, 440
Truman, Harry S, \(499 q\)
UN Charter, 508
Vinson, Fred M., 56
Warren, Earl, \(620 q\)
The Wealth of Nations (Smith), 762
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (1943), 547, 816
We the People, \(216 q\)
prime minister, 666, 667, 669
Prince v. Massachusetts (1944), 557
Printz v. United States (1997), 813 prior restraint, 561-563. See also censorship prisoners of war, 402 privacy, right of, 581-582, 588-589, 813 private bills, 344
private enterprise system. See free enterprise system private ownership, 23, 680 private property, 32c, 309, 571-572, 571p privatization, 690
Privileges and Immunities Clause, 114 probability, law of, 224
probable cause, 586-587, 591
procedural due process, 578,579 process of incorporation, 549-550 profits, 681, 684
Progressive Party, 133, 138, 139c, 139p, 140, 140p Progressive reforms, 189, 739 progressive tax, 459, 461c, 763-764 Prohibition, 80, 81, 83 project grants, 109
propaganda, 259-260 property taxes, 162-163, 760, 763c, 764, 765p
proportional plan, 392
proportional representation, 379c, 379-380 proprietary colonies, 33m, 33-34
prorogue, power to, 271
prosecutors, 594, 595
Protect America Act (2008), 404, 591 protectionism, 696
protective tariff, 248
protest marches, 258 psychology, 174, 177-178, 177p public affairs, 215, 236, 245 public agenda, 234-235 public bills, 344
public debt, 301-302, 465, 465g, 466, 467, 468, 468c public demonstrations, 570-571, 571p public interest groups, 252

\section*{public opinion} on the death penalty, 605
definition of, 214-215
education and, 215-217, 217p
elections and, 220-221
family and, 215-216, 217p historic events and, 218-219
interest groups and, 258-259
limits on, 226
mass media and, 217-218, 218p, 221, 234 measuring, 220-226, 221c, 222p, 223c opinion leaders, 218
peer groups and, 218 polls, 222-226, 222p, 223c presidential elections and, 215 g voting behavior and, 221 public policy, 13, 401, 524, 719
federalism and, 96
government and, 4-5
interest groups and, 221, 242-243
public opinion and, 220
public property, 570-571, \(571 p\) public safety, 757c, 758-759
public voting, 195
public welfare, 687, 757c, 757-758
Publius, 61
Puerto Ricans, 176, 615
Puerto Rico, 309
citizenship and, 633 district courts, \(528,529 \mathrm{~m}\) elections in, 378
House of Representatives and, 273, 343
political parties and, 143
revenues in, 765
Puerto Rico Democracy Act (2007), 105
Puerto Rico v. Branstad (1987), 114
Pullman Strike, 104
punch-card ballots, 198 punishment, cruel and unusual, \(32 c\) pure democracy, 13
purging, 160
Puritans, 746
Putin, Vladimir, 662-663, 662p

\section*{Q}

Quayle, Dan, 334
Quick Study Guide
affirmative action, 639
civil liberties, 607
Congress, 357
congressional powers, 325
Constitution, C1-C2, 89 economic systems, 701
election process, 209
electoral college, 395 elements of government, 25
federalism, 115
foreign policy, 513
government, 673
lobbying, 261
local government, 767
media and public opinion, 237 revenues, 477
segregation, 639
voting rights, 179
quorum, 332, 348, 349 quotas, 628, 635-636 quota sample, 224

\section*{R} acial discrimination, 584-585, 613-616, 810. See also civil rights; segregation radicals, 126
radio, 229c, 230, 231, 232p, 233p, 236, 563-565 railroads, 140
Randolph, Edmund, 53, 54, 62, 438 random digit dialing, 225
random sample, 224
Rankin, Jeanette, 286c ratification, C15-C16, 48, 59-62, 59p, 60p, 61c, 79, 712 rational basis test, 619 Rayburn, Sam, 332, 334
reactionaries, 126
Reagan, Ronald, C11p,364p,366, 367, 371-372, 480p \(481 q, 577 q, 775 c, 775 p\)

Cabinet of, 438
as commander-in-chief, 416
election of, 135, 380, 391c
foreign policy and, 501, 502, 515q
Iran-Contra Scandal and, 341, 433
Iran Hostage Crisis, 487
public debt and, 466
taxes and, 464
voter behavior and, 174
Reaganomics, 464
reapportionment, 274m, 274-275, 276, 277, 807 Reapportionment Act (1929), 274-275, 276 recall petition, 721-722 recessions, 474, 693 record vote, 349
Red Cross, 512
Red Lion Broadcasting Co. v. FCC (1969), 564
red tape, \(448 p\)
Reed v. Reed (1971), 622-623 referendum process, \(718 c, 719,739\) refugees, 615
Regents of the University of California v. Bakke (1978), 628-629, 629 regimes, 14
regional government, 669-670, 672 regional security alliances, 506 regressive tax, 461, 763 regulation
commissions and, 409, 446-448, 531 of radio and television, 563-565
taxes and, 457
Reid, Harry, 333p released time programs, 552 religion education and, 552-555, 553p, 554p, 807
interest groups and, 252
emon test, 554-555, 555p presidential candidates and, 385 religious discrimination, 584
Religious Freedom Restoration Act, 556, 808 Rell, M. Jodi, 721 relocation camps, 616
removal power, 408-409
Reno, Janet, 439
Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union (1997), 565, 813
Reno v. Condon (2000), 813 representative democracy, 13 representative government, 31, 57, 103-104, 747 eprieves, 419, 725
republican government, 13, 103-104, 269, 647, 791-794 Republican National Committee (RNC), 143-145
Republican Party, 134p
African Americans and, 132
apportioned delegates, 378
in Congress, 334c, 334-336, 335m
domination by, 129, 131, 132-133
election of 2008, 206-207, 208
fundraising by, 207-208
governors and, 723 m
minor parties and, 138-140
organization of, 142-145
platform, 450
policy position of, 126, 128
political spectrum and, 126
primary elections, 378-381, 379c, 380p
symbols of, 133p
two-party system and, 124-128, 125p, 128c
voter behavior and, 174-178
See also elections; political parties
Republican Party of Minnesota v. White (2002), 813 Republic (Plato), 27
research writing, S6-S8
eservations, 613
eserved powers, 95, 99
reserve requirements, 476 residency, voting requirement, 156-158, 157p resolutions, 343-344
Revels, Hiram R., \(166 p\)
Revenue Act (1971), 206 revenues. See taxes
reverse discrimination, 628
Revolutionary War, 50, 65, 546

Revolution of 1789, 655
Reynolds v. Sims (1964), 716
Reynolds v. United States (1897), 557
Rhode Island, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
colonial, 33m, 34, 39
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
Constitutional Convention and, 51, 52
constitution of, 709, 711
courts in, 529 m
Declaration of Independence and, 47
Dorr's Rebellion, 103
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 553,555,567
gains statehood, 105m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
local government in, 742, 743
ratification of the Constitution and, 61c, 61p, 62
slavery and, 56 m
statistical profile, 773 c
voting rights in, 154 m
Rhodes v. Chapman (1980), 603
Ricardo, David, 653
Rice, Condoleeza, 322p, 439, 485, 504q Richmond v. Croson (1989), 629
riders, 344
right of association, 571, 572
right of legation, 485 right to counsel, 809, 812
Right to Life Party, 137
Riley, Bob, \(706 p\)
Ring v. Arizona (2002), 605
Rio Pact, 497, 507
Roberts, Brigham H., 279
Roberts, John, 527, 527p, 536c, 536p
Robinson v. California (1962), 603, 604
Rochin v. California (1952), 579
Rockefeller, Nelson, 319
Rock the Vote, 170, 170 p
Roe v. Wade (1973), 581-582, 813
Rogers, Will, 202q rogue states, 483
roll-call vote, 349
Rollins, Ed, \(256 q\)
Roman Catholic Church, 648, 657
Roman Empire, 647, 648
Roman Republic, 647-648, 647p, 649
Rome, ancient, 30
Romney, George, 104
Romney, Mitt, 206p
Roosevelt, Franklin D., 81 p, 365q, 372, 401, \(775 c\)
Cabinet of, 438, 440, 440p death of, \(370 p\)
elections of, 131, 133, 135p, 136, 222-223, 224, 464
Executive Office of the President and, 431
foreign policy and, 485, 499
Four Freedoms, 703q, 805, 805p
Good Neighbor Policy, 497
media and, 229, 231
military tribunals, 539
presidential powers and, 404
special congressional sessions, 270
Supreme Court and, 409, 533p terms of office, 83, 88, 367, \(367 p, 397\)
United Nations and, 512
World War II and, 498
Roosevelt, Theodore, 110, 366, 401, 403, 403p, \(775 c\) civil service and, 444
as commander-in-chief, 415
election of, 133
Panama and, 414
political parties and, 138, 139c, 140, 140p
Roosevelt's Corollary, 497
Roper, Elmo, 223
Roper v. Simmons (2005), 604-605
Ros-Lehtinen, Ileana, 279p
Ross, Nellie Taylor, 721
Rostker v. Goldberg (1981), 623, 813
Roth v. United States (1957), 561, 813
Rousseau, Jean Jacques, 8, 54, 55p, 785 royal colonies, \(33,33 \mathrm{~m}\) rubrics, writing, S13 rule of four, 534
rule of law, 30, 70, 651
Rumsfeld, Donald, \(88 p\), \(338 p\) runoff primary, 190
Runyon v. McCrary (1976), 584
Rush Prudential HMO, Inc. v. Moran (2002), 813
Russia, 7, 483
Russian Federation, 662
Rutledge, John, 39
Rwanda, 658

\section*{S}

Sabato, Larry J., 543
sabotage, 606
Saenz v. Roe (1999), 114
safety, public, 581 safety laws, 769
St. Augustine, Florida, 32
St. Francis College v. Al-Khazraji (1987), 584 sales tax, 96, 762-763, 763c
Salinas de Gortari, Carlos, 672
SALT I, 501 same-sex marriage, 113, 175 sample, polling, 224
sample ballots, 196-197
Sanders, Bernie, 353, 687
San Francisco, 531
San Francisco Conference (1945), 508
San Marino, 6, \(7 p\)
Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe (2000), 553
Scalia, Antonin, 536c, 536p
Schenck, Charles, 560
Schenck v. United States (1919), 548, 560, 814
Schmerber v. California (1966), 599
School District of Abington Township, Pennsylvania v. Schempp (1963), 814

\section*{schools} attendance and, 579-580
censorship in, 563
Civil Rights Act and, 314, 314p
freedom of speech and, 814 parochial, 552, 554, 554p
Pierce v. Society of Sisters (1925), 552 prayer in, 552-553, 553p, 807
special districts, 748
superintendent of, 744 c
Supreme Court cases and, 579-580
See also education
Schumer, Charles, 342p
Schumpeter, Joseph A., \(425 q\)
Schwarzenegger, Arnold, \(92 p, 110,185,721,760 p\)
Schwimmer v. United States (1929), 559
Science and Technology, Office of, 434
scientific polling, 223
Scotland, 668, 668m
Scott, Dred, 808
Scottsboro boys, 812
search and seizure, 32c,585-590, 591
search warrants, 581, 585-586
Sears, Leah, \(732 p\)
Sebelius, Kathleen, \(93 p\)
SEC. See Securities and Exchange Commission Second Amendment, C17, 82c, 549c, 585, 607, 808 secondary sources, S14
Second Treatise on Government (Locke), 784 The Secretariat (UN), 511
secretary, 435
Secretary of State, 484-485, 726
Secret Service, 493
sectionalism, 133
Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), 446, 447, 694 security alliances, 506m, 506-507 Sedition Act (1918), 561
seditious speech, 280, 560-561
segregated fund committees, 205 segregation, 619-622, \(621 p, 810\) seigniorage, 462
select committees, 340-341
Selective Service Acts (1917 and 1948), 316, 445
Selective Service System, 445, 583

Selective Training and Service Act (1940), 445 self-announcement process, 185, 185p, 186p
self-incrimination, 598-599, 598p
Seling v. Young (2001), 596
Senate, U.S.
African Americans in, \(282 p\)
bills become laws, \(351-356,352 p, 354 p\), 356p
Cloture Rule, 352-353
compensation of members, 288-290, 289p conference committees, 342, 353, 356 constituencies of the, 283
continuous body, 283 convening of, 331-332, \(331 p\)
court officers and, 526
election to, 282-283
electoral duties of, 318-319, 319c
Ethics Commission, 284
executive agreements and, 413
expulsion from, 284
filibusters, 350, 352-353
floor leaders, 336
House of Representatives and, 291 c jobs of members, 286-288
joint committees, 341-342, 342c judicial nomination process, 323
judges and, 524
media and, 283
minority leader, 350
party officers in, 334c, 334-336, 335m
political campaigns for, 201 presidential appointments and, 407-408 presidential elections and, 389
president of, 332-334, 339
president pro tempore, 289, 334
privileges of members, 290
qualifications for, 283-284
removal power, 408
resignations from, 284
select committees, 340-341
Seventeenth Amendment and, 282-283
size of, 281-282
special sessions of, 271
standing committees, 338-340, 340c, 341c
State of the Union Message, 331-332
terms of, 283
treaties and, 412, 413
two-speech rule, 352
Vice President and, 372
voting in, 287, 287c
women in, 282p
See also Congress, U.S.
senatorial courtesy, 88, 323, 407, 524
Seneca Falls, New York, 803
seniority rule, 337, 339
separate-but-equal doctrine, 619-620, 619p, 624
separation of church and state, 551-552, 553, 816
separation of powers, 57, 70-72, 70p,523, 653, 815
state constitutions and, 41, 42
state government and, 709, 710, 717
September 11th, 275, 317, 404, 490, 493, 499, 503, 665 Serbia, 665
serfs, 648, 649
Serrano, José, \(288 p\)
Seventeenth Amendment, C21, 80, 282-283
Seventh Amendment, C18, 82c,549c sex discrimination, 616-617, 616g, 622-623, 622p, 626, 630
Shaare Tefila Congregation v. Cobb (1987), 584 shadow cabinet, 668
Shakespeare, William, 130
Shays, Daniel, 50
Shays' Rebellion, 48p, 50
Shelley v. Kraemer (1948), 814
Sheppard, Samuel, 548
Sheppard v. Maxwell (1966), 548, 814
Sherbert v. Verner (1963), 558
sheriff, 31, 526, 744C
Sherman, Roger, 39, 40, 57, 401
Sherman Anti-Trust Act (1890), 681-682
shield laws, 563
shot heard round the world, 39
Shuler, Heath, 279p
signing statements, 418, 423
Silent Spring (Carson), 453 single-issue parties, 137-138, 139p single-member districts, 127, 129, 275, 276, 715
Singletary, Amos, 60
\(\boldsymbol{\operatorname { s i n }}\) tax, 461
Sioux Indians, 244p
Sixteenth Amendment, C21, 80, 96, 300, 458
Sixth Amendment, C18, 82c, 549c, 596-598, 809, 811, 812
Skills Development
active listening, 2, 20
analyze cause and effect, 410, 678, 740, 749 analyze graphic data, 454, 463, 520, 612, 666, 676, 693
analyze images, 220, 610, 626 analyze maps, 48, 182, 201, 374 analyze political cartoons, 12, 59, 120, 130, 156, \(242,310,362,386,400,538,602,653,714,742\) analyze sources, 4, 43, 66, 78, 296, 364, 405, 431, 505, 544, 546, 708, 761 analyze timelines, 164, 495, 618, 644, 646 compare viewpoints, 28, 36, 122, 214, 240, 247 330, 417, 624, 732, 756 decision making, \(85,266,281,312,338,370,424\), \(441,467,518,532,551,576,583,685\) digital age literacy, 212, 228 draw inferences and conclusions, 30, 76, 103, 150, 152, 193, 268, 294, 304, 377, 435, 473, 482, 569, 578, 632, 661, 727 give a multimedia presentation, \(52,273,318,328\), 351, 528, 559, 592 innovate and think creatively, 111, 137, 170, 184, 254, 285, 343, 426, 480, 488 notetaking, 2, 20 problem solving, 68, 92, 94, 142, 398, 412, 456 600, 706, 720
Skills Handbook, S1-S29
Skinner v. Federal Railway Labor Executives Association (1989), 588
slander, 559
slavery, 583-585, 815
abolishment of, 80, 83, 584, 613
Capitol Building and, 618
Commerce and Slave Trade Compromise, 56, 56m Constitution and, 65, 81 Equal Protection Clause and, 618
political parties and, 132
Three-fifths Compromise and, 56, 56m, 458 See also involuntary servitude; Thirteenth Amendment
Slave-Trade Compromise, 299
Small Business Administration, 442
small claims court, 733
Smith, Adam, 653, 680, 682, 762
Smith, Alfred E., 385
Smith, Mary Louise, 145
Smith Act (1940), 561, 808
Smith v. Allwright (1944), 165, 166, 188, 190
Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act (1930), 692
Snepp v. United States (1980), 562 social classes, 647, 686
The Social Contract (Rousseau), 54, 785 social contract theory of the state, \(8 c, 8-9,54\)
social insurance taxes, 460-461
socialism, 685-688, 687c
Socialist Labor Party, 137
Socialist Party, 137, 139c, 139p, 140, 560
Socialist Worker Party, 137
Social Security Act (1935), 460-46
Social Security Administration (SSA), 289, 441 Social Security program, 460-461, 469 social welfare, 524
sociology, 173, 174-177, 175c softliners, 661
soft money, 203, 207-208 soldiers, quartering of, 585 sole proprietorship, 683 solicitor general, 536
Somalia, 10, 665
sound bites, 235
Souter, David H., 536c, 536p
South America, 496, 497, 615

South Carolina, \(776 m-777 m\)
colonial, 33, 33m, 39
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
constitution of, 41, 709, 712
courts in \(529 \mathrm{~m}, 735\)
Declaration of Independence and, 47
desegregation in, 624 elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}\), 391 m
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 709, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m
ratification of the Constitution and, 61c, \(61 p\)
slavery and, 56 m
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 459, 615
taxes in, 459, 692
voting rights in, 154m, 157, 167, 168
South Carolina v. Katzenbach (1966), 167
South Carolina v. United States (1905), 459
South Dakota, \(776 m-777 m\)
congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\)
congressional delegations from, 335 m
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 187, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
House of Representatives and, 273
immigrants in, 636m
state legislature in, \(715 p\)
statistical profile, 773c
voting rights in, 154m, 168, 176
Southern Common Market, 698
South Korea, 500, 507
South Vietnam, 500
sovereign state, 648-650, 649p sovereignty, 650
as characteristic of the state, \(6,7 p, 8 c, 8-9\)
tribal government, 745-746
Soviet Union, 14, 689-690
Afghanistan and, 501, 665
Cold War and, 658
collapse of, 490, 498-499, 499m, 506, 662-663, \(662 p\)
Cuban missile crisis, 500
space exploration, 442-443, 443p
Spain, 655-657, 660
Spanish-American War, 496p
Speaker of the House, 266p, 285, 289, 330p, 331-333, 333p, 339, 340, 370, 389. See also House of Representatives, U.S.
special committees. See select committees special courts, \(521,521 c, 525,538 p, 539 p, 541\)
courts martial, 538-539
judges, 538
military courts, 538-539
territorial courts, 540
veterans claims, 539
special districts, 748, 755
special interest groups, 713. See also interest groups

\section*{special sessions} governors and, 724
state legislatures and, 716
Specter, Arlen, 268p
Speech or Debate Clause, 290
Speedy Trial Act (1974), 596
spending, 467-469, 468c, 474
splinter parties, 138, 139p split-ticket voting, 177 spoiler role, 140
spoils system, 132, 443
SPQR, \(647 p\)
Springer v. United States (1881), 458
SSA. See Social Security Administration
Stack v. Boyle (1951), 602
staff agencies, 430, 432
Stalin, Josef, 499, 659p, 689
Stamp Act (1765), 38-39, 760
Stamp Act Congress, 38
standing committees, 338-340, 340c, 341 c, 718
Stanley v. Georgia (1969), 581
Stanton, Edwin M., 408
Stanton, Elizabeth Cady, 803-804, 803p characteristics of, 6-7
Congress and, 106-107
definition of, 6
divine right theory, \(8,8 \mathrm{c}\) evolution theory, \(7-8,8 c\)
force theory, 7, 8 c social contract theory, \(8 c, 8-9\) state aid, 109
state constitutions, 41-42, 70, 71-72 state court system, 521, 729c, 737 p equity in, 728
general trial courts, 733
grand juries, 728-729, 730
intermediate appellate courts, 73 judges of, 732p, 735-736, 735p
jurisdictions of, 522, 523c
jury system, \(727 p, 728-731,731,731 p\) justices of the peace, 732
juvenile courts, \(733,734 p\)
magistrates' courts, 733 municipal courts, 733
organization of, 732-735
petit jury, 730, 733
preliminary hearings, 732
state supreme court, 572, 734-735 ypes of law, 727-728 unified court systems, 735
warrants, 732
State Department, 435, 436, 437, 482, 483-485
state government, C14, 16, 737
apportioned delegates, 377-378
Articles of Confederation and, 49,50 budgets, 756-759, 757c, 765, 766 checks and balances in, 709, 710, 717 commerce and, 297-299
concurrent powers, 100, 100p
constitutional amendments and, 80, 318
constitutions, 708-713, 709p, 710p, 711, 711p,
\(712 c, 718\)
courts, 521, 522, 727-730, 729c, 732-736, 732p \(734 p, 735\) p, \(737 p\)
due process clause, 549c, 549-550
economy and, 682
elections and, 194-195, 196 executive officers, 722-726
extradition, 113-114
ederalism and, 74c, 74-75, 95-9
Full Faith and Credit Clause, 112-113 governors and, 720-726, 720p, 722p, 723m, 725 ocal government and, 100, 743, 744, 749 powers denied to, 99 presidential elections and, \(378-381,379 c, 380 p\) 393
president pro tempore, 717
primary elections, 188-189, 190-191, 191 m
Privileges and Immunities Clause, 114 protection of, 104
public safety and, 757c, 758-759
reserved powers, 99
separation of powers, 709, 710, 717
shared powers, 107-109, 108p shield laws and, 563 taxes and, 460, 758, 760, 760p, 761-764, \(761 p\), 763c, 763p
Twenty-first Amendment and, 99
voting qualifications and, 154-155
See also state legislatures tatehood, 104-107, 105m, 106p, 309 state legislatures, \(714 p, 716 p\)
African Americans in, 715p committees, 718 compensation of members, 716
constituent power, 717
direct legislation, 719 districts of, 715-716
elections to, 715
executive powers of, 717
gerrymandering and, 276
governors and, 724
nitiative process, 718c, 719
judicial powers of, 717
lawmaking by, 717, 718c, 718-719 names of, 714
organization of, 717
party control of, 135c
police power, 717
powers of, 717
qualifications of members, 715
referendum process, 718c, 719
separation of powers and, 717
sessions of, 716
size of, 714-715
terms of, 716
women in, \(715 p\)
state militia, 724
State of Iowa v. John Hartog (1989), 769
State of the Union Message, 86, 331-332, 417
state ownership, 689
state police, 758
state seals, \(709 p\) states' rights, 110
States' Rights Party, 138
state supreme court, 572, 734-735 statutory law, 713, 727, 728
Stenberg v. Carhart (2000), 582
Stevens, John Paul, 536c, 536p
Stevens, Thaddeus, 295
Stevenson, Adlai, 134
Stewart, John, 268
Stewart, Potter, 561, 584q, 605 stock market, 694
stock transfer tax, 764
Stone v. Graham (1980), 553, 556
straight-ticket voting, 177
Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, 501 Strauder v. West Virginia (1880), 597
straw votes, 222-223 strict constructionists, 313-314, 327
strict scrutiny test, 619
Stromberg v. California (1931), 550 strong-mayor government, 750
subpoenas, 322, 598
subsidy, 202
substantive due process, 578, 579
suburbs, 754-755, 754p
Sudan, 251 p, 507, 665
suffrage, 80, 140, 616-617, 616
definition of, 152
timeline of, 153
See also voting rights
summons, 729
Super Tuesday, 379 supply and demand, law of, 681, 683, 683c supply-side economics, 464
Supremacy Clause, 101, 809
Supreme Court, U.S., 5p, 521, 521c, 530c, 532-537 African Americans on, 524 blanket primaries and, 189
briefs, 535-536
Bush, George W. and, 402
calendar of, 535
Constitution and, 87
court in conference, 536-537
executive privilege and, 409
federalism and, 101-102
how cases reach, 534-535, 535c, 541 inferior courts and, 541
Japanese Americans and, 548 judges, 524-525, 531, 536, 536c, 536p judicial review, 87, 532, 534
jurisdiction of, 534
Line-Item Veto Act, 419
lobbying and the, 257 operation of, 535-536
opinions of, 537
oral arguments, 535 presidential elections and, 390, 390p
rational basis test, 619
removal power, 408-409
Roosevelt and, 409, 533p
rule of four, 534
state supreme courts and, 734-735
strict scrutiny test, 619
treaties and, 413

Truman and, 402
See also judicial branch; specific cases
Supreme Court at a Glance
Bush v. Gore (2000), 390, 390p
Ex Parte Milligan, 22, \(22 p\)
Gideon v. Wainwright, 597, 597p
Mapp v. Ohio, 588, 588p
Near v. Minnesota, 562
Plessy v. Ferguson, 619, 619p

\section*{supreme Court Cases}

Abington School District v. Schempp, 552
Al Odah v. United States, 593
Ashcraft v. Tennessee, 599
Atkins v. Virginia, 604
Baker v. Carr, 715-716
Barker v. Wingo, 596
Barron v. Baltimore, 548
Baze v. Rees, 605
Benton v. Maryland, 595
Bigelow v. Virginia, 567
Board of Education of Kiryas Joel v. Grumet, 554-555
Board of Education of Pottowatomie County v. Earls, 588
Boumediene v. Bush, 593
Boy Scouts of America v. Dale, 572
Brandenburg v. Ohio, 575
Branzburg v. Hayes, 563
Brendlin v. California, 587
Brown v. Board of Education, 21p, 77, 251, 257, 527
Brown v. SocialistWorkers 74 Campaign Committee, 572
Buckley v. Valeo, 206, 565, 566
Bunn v. North Carolina, 557
Burdick v. United States, 420
Burstyn v. Wilson, 563
Bush v. Gore (2000), 390, 390p
Bush v. Vera, 278
California v. Acevedo, 587
Cantwell v. Connecticut, 550, 558
Carmell v. Texas, 594
Carroll v. United States, 587
Chandler v. Florida, 597
Chaplinksky v. New Hampshire, 562
Cheney v. U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, 411
Chisholm v. Georgia, 82-83
Clinton v. New York City, 356, 419
Coates v. Cincinnati, 570
Coker v. Georgia, 604
Committee for Public Education and Religious Liberty v.
Nyquist, 555
Committee for Public Education and Religious Liberty v.
Regan, 555
County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 555-556
Cox v. Louisiana, 570
Cox v. New Hampshire, 557, 570
Coyle v. Smith, 107
Crawford v. Marion County Election Board, 161
Davidson v. New Orleans, 579
Davis v. Bandemer, 278
DeJonge v. Oregon, 550, 569
Dennis v. United States, 561
Dickerson v. United States, 601
Dillon v. Gloss, 82
District of Columbia v. Heller, 585
Duncan v. Kahanamoku, 593
Duncan v. Louisiana, 597
Dunn v. Blumstein, 157
Edwards v. Aguillard, 554
Engel v. Vitale, 552
Epperson v. Arkansas, 554
Escobedo v. Illinois, 598
Estes v. Texas, 596
Euclid v. Amber Realty Co., 753
Everson v. Board of Education, 552
Ex Parte Milligan, 22, 22p, 809
FCC v. Pacifica Foundation, 564
Fiske v. Kansas, 550
Fletcher v. Peck, 76, 102
Florida v. J.L., 586
Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 570
Freedman v. Maryland, 563
Furman v. Georgia, 604
Gibbons v. Ogden, 297-298, 315
Gibson v. Florida, 572

Gideon v. Wainwright, 597-598, 597p, 809
Gitlow v. New York, 549, 550
Goldman v. Weinberger, 557
Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 165, 278
Gonzales v. Carhart, 582
Good News Club v. Milford Central School, 553
Grand Rapids School District v. Ball, 554
Grayned v. City of Rockford, 570
Greater New Orleans Broadcasting Association v. United States, 567
Greer v. Spock, 562
Gregg v. Georgia, 604, 605
Gregory v. Chicago, 570-571
Griswold v. Connecticut, 581
Guinn v. United States, 161, 166
Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 539
Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 163, 166
Hawke v. Smith, 80
Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier, 563
Hepburn v. Griswold, 303
Hicklin v. Orbeck, 114
Hill v. Colorado, 571
Hill v. Stone, 155
Hodgson v. Minnesota, 582
Hudson v. Michigan, 587
Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 408-409
Hunt v. Cromartie, 278
Illinois v. Caballes, 587
Illinois v. Perkins, 599
Illinois v. Wardlow, 587
Jacobellis v. Ohio, 561
Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 557
Jones v. Mayer, 584
Juliard v. Greenman, 303
Kansas v. Hendrick, 596
Katz v. United States, 589
Kelo v. City of New London, 308
Kentucky v. Dennison, 113-114
Kimble v. Swackhamer, 80
Klopfer v. North Carolina, 596
Korematsu v. United States, 548
Lee v. Weisman, 553
Legal Tender Cases, 303
Lemon test, 554-555, 555p
Lemon v. Kurtzman, 554
Lidster v. Illinois, 586-587
Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 567
Locke v. Davey, 556
Lockyer v. Andrade, 604
Louisiana v. Resweber, 603
Loving v. Virginia, 113
Lukimi Babalu Aye v. City of Hialeah, 558
Luther v. Borden, 527
Lynch v. Donnelly, 555
Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association, 557
Madsen v. Women's Health Services, Inc., 571
Malloy v. Hogan, 598
Mapp v. Ohio, 588, 588p, 811
Mapp v. Ohio, 588, 588p, 811
Marbury v. Madison, 76-77, 76p, 77p, 87, 97, 519p, 533-534
Marsh v. Chambers, 556
McCollum v. Board of Education, 552
McConnell v. FEC, 207
McCreary County v. ACLU of Kentucky, 556-557
McCulloch v. Maryland, 96, 101-102, 310-311,
310p-311p, 314, 315, 458, 527, 761
McGowan v. Maryland, 557
Miller-El v. Dretke, 597
Miller v. California, 561, 585
Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 558
Minnesota v. Carter, 586
Miranda v. Arizona, 77, 598, 599, 600-601, 600p, 601p
Missouri v. Holland, 413
Missouri v. Seibert, 601
Morse v. Frederick, 548
Mueller v. Allen, 555
Munn v. Illinois, 250
Murray v. Curlett, 552-553
Mutual Film Corporation v. Ohio, 563
Myers v. United States, 408
National Assoc. for the Advancement of Colored People v. Alabama, 572

National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 564 National Treasury Employees Union v. Von Raab, 588
Near v. Minnesota, 550, 562
Nebraska Press Association v. Stuart
New YorkTimes v. United States, 562
Nix v. Williams, 586
Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 582 Olmstead v. United States, 589
Oregon v. Mitchell, 162, 168
Oregon v. Smith, 556
P. Lorillard Co. v. Reilly, 567

Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, 584
Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 552, 554, 579
Pittsburgh v. ACLU, 556
Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey 582
Plessy v. Ferguson, 77, 619-620, 619p, 624, 628, 812
Pointer v. Texas, 598
Powell v. McCormack, 280
Prince v. Massachusetts, 557
Puerto Rico v. Branstad, 114
In re Debs, 104
Red Lion Broadcasting Co. v. FCC, 564
In re Kemmler, 603
Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union, 565
In re Oliver, 596
Reynolds v. Sims, 716
Reynolds v. United States, 557
Rhodes v. Chapman, 603
Ring v. Arizona, 605
Robinson v. California, 603, 604
Rochin v. California, 579
Roe v. Wade, 581-582
Roper v. Simmons, 604-605
Roth v. United States, 561
Runyon v. McCrary, 584
Saenz v. Roe, 114
Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe, 553
Schenck v. United States, 548, 560
Schmerber v. California, 599
Schwimmer v. United States, 559
Selective Draft Law Cases, 316
Seling v. Young, 596
Shaare Tefila Congregation v. Cobb, 584
Sheppard v. Maxwell, 548
Sherbert v. Verner, 558
Skinner v. Federal Railway Labor Executives Association, 588
Smith v. Alwright, 165, 166, 188, 190
Snepp v. United States, 562
South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 167
St. Francis College v. Al-Khazraj, 584
Stack v. Boyle, 602
Stanley v. Georgia, 581
Stenberg v. Carhart, 582
Stone v. Graham, 553, 556
Strauder v. West Virginia, 597
Stromberg v. California, 550
Taylor v. Louisiana, 597
Terry v. Ohio, 587
Texas v. Johnson, 566-567
Texas v. White, 706p
Thornburgh v. Abbott, 562
Thornhill v. Alabama, 565-566
Tinker v. Des Moines, 566, 566p
United Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 278
United States v. American Library Association, 565
United States v. Brown, 593
United States v. Curtis-Wright Export Corp., 304
United States v. Eichman, 567
United States v. Lee, 558
United States v. Lopez, 299
United States v. Lovett, 593
United States v. Nixon, 409, 410-411, 410p, 411p
United States v. 0 'Brien, 566
United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group, 564
United States v. Salerno, 603
Uttecht v. Brown, 605
Van Orden v. Perry, 556
Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 303
Vernonia School District v. Acton, 588
Virginia Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, 567

Virginia v. Black, 566
Wallace v. Jaffree, 553
Washington v. Texas, 598
Watchtower Bible and Tract Society v. Village of Stratton, 558
Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, 581-582
Weeks v. United States, 588
Weems v. United States, 604
Welsh v. United States, 557
Wesberry v. Sanders, 278
Westside Community Schools v. Mergens, 553
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette, 547, 558
Whitney v. California, 575
Wilkerson v. Utah, 603
Williams v. North Carolina, 112
Wisconsin v. Yoder, 558
Wolman v. Walter, 554
Woodson v. North Carolina, 604
Wooley v. Maynard, 566
Wood v. Broom, 276
Wyoming v. Houghton, 587
Yates v. United States, 561
Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Saw yer, 402
Zelman v. Simmons-Harris, 555
Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School District, 555
Zorach v. Clauson, 552

\section*{upreme Court Glossary}

Abrams v. United States (191 9), 807
Agostini v. Felton (1997), 807
Alden v. Maine (1 999), 807
American Insurance Association v. Garamendi (2003), 807
Baker v. Carr (1962), 807
Board of Education of Westside Community Schools v.
Mergens (1990), 816
Board of Estimate of City of New York v. Morris (1 989), 807
Bob Jones University v. United States (1983), 807
Bradenburg v. Ohio (1969), 807
Brown v. Board of Education (1954), 808
City of Boerne, Texas v. Flores (1 997), 808
Civil Rights Cases (1883), 808
Cruzan v. Missouri (1990), 808
Dennis v. United States (1951), 808
District of Columbia v. Heller (2008), 808
Dred Scott v. Sandford (1857), 808
Edwards v. South Carolina (1963), 808
Engel v. Vitale (1962), 808
Escobedo v. Illinois (1964), 809
Ex parte Milligan (1866), 809
Flast v. Cohen (1968), 809
Furman v. Georgia (1972), 809
Gibbons v. Ogden (1824), 809
Gideon v. Wainwright (1963), 809
Gitlow v. New York (1925), 809
Goss v. Lopez (1975), 809
Gregg v. Georgia (1976), 810
Griswold v. Connecticut (1965), 810
Gratz v. Bollinger (2003), 810
Grutter v. Bollinger (2003), 810
Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier (1988), 810
Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States (1964), 810
Hutchinson v. Proxmire (1979), 810
Illinois v. Wardlow (2000), 810
In re Gault (1966), 810
Johnson v. Santa Clara Transportation Agency (1987), 811
Korematsu v. United States (1944), 811
Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971), 811
Mapp v. Ohio (1961), 811
Marbury v. Madison (1803), 811
McCulloch v. Maryland (1819), 811
Miranda v. Arizona (1966), 811
New Jersey v. T.L.O. (1985), 811
New York Times v. United States (1971), 812
New YorkTimes v. Sullivan (1964), 812
Nixon v. Fitzgerald (1982), 812
Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC (2000), 812
Olmstead v. United States (1928), 812
Oregon v. Mitchell (1970), 812
Plessy v. Ferguson (1896), 812
Powell v. Alabama (1932), 812
Printz v. United States (1997), 813
Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union (1997), 813
Reno v. Condon (2000), 813
Republican Party of Minnesota v. White (2002), 813

Roe v. Wade (1973), 813
Rostker v. Goldberg (1981), 813
Roth v. United States (1957), 813
Rush Prudential HMO, Inc. v. Moran (2002), 813
Schenck v. United States (1919), 814
School District of Abington Township, Pennsylvania v.
Schempp (1963), 814
Shelley v. Kraemer (1948), 814
Sheppard v. Maxwell (1966), 814
Tahoe-Sierra Preservation Council v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (2002), 814
Tennessee Valley Authority v. Hill (1978), 814
Texas v. White (1869), 814
Tinker v. Des Moines (1969), 814
U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton (1995), 815

United States v. American Library Association (2003), 815
United States v. Amistad (1841), 815
United States v. Eichman (1990), 815
United States v. General Dynamics Corp. (1974), 815
United States v. Leon (1984), 815
United States v. Lopez (1995), 815
United States v. Nixon (1974), 815
Wallace v. Jaffree (1985), 816
Watchtower Bible and Tract Society v. Village of Stratton (2002), 816

Watkins v. United States (1957), 816
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (1943), 816
Wisconsin v. Yoder (1972), 816
Supreme Court Notes
Buckley v. Valeo, 206 connection to Plessy, 624 fighting words, 562
Fletcher v. Peck, 76
free exercise upheld, 557
gerrymandering is legal, 278 halting the interrogation, 600
impartial jury, 597
implied powers, 96
Judiciary Act of 1789, 77 limits on free exercise, 556
McConnell v. FEC, 207
Miranda v. Arizona, 598
Nix v. Williams, 586
on executing expressed powers, 311 on taxing the bank, 310 refining the Miranda rule, 601
Smith v. Alwright, 188, 190
Supreme Law of the Land, 68
surplus, \(463,464 \mathrm{~g}, 466\)
Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education (1971), 621

Sweatt v. Painter (1950), 620 swing voters, 386
Switzerland, 13, 16
symbolic speech, 565-567, 566p symbols, \(532,709 p\)

\section*{T}

Taft, William Howard, 107, 133, 140, 403, 403p, 408, 440, 454q, 775c, 775p
Taft-Hartley Act (1947), 200
Tahoe-Sierra Presenvation Council v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (2002), 814 Taiwan, 416
Taiwan Pact, 507
Taliban, 503, 507
talk radio, 231
Taney, Roger B., 592
TANF. See Temporary Assistance to Needy Families Tariff Act (1789), 692 tariffs, 299, 457, 696. See also taxes taxation without representation, 37, 38 Tax Court, U.S., 521-522, 530c, 531, 540 taxes
Articles of Confederation and, 49-50
in capitalism, 687
Congress and, 299-301, 300p
Constitution and, 456-458 county government and, 745 uts in, 459, 474
definition of, 299
English colonies and, 37, 37p,38-39 increases in, 474 on Internet purchases, 316, 763
limits on, 457-459
local government and, 761-764, 761p, 763c, 763p progressive income, 140 regulation and, 457 in socialism, 687
state government and, 760, 760p, 761-764, 761p
See also capitation tax; direct tax; income tax; indi rect tax; poll tax; tariffs; individually named taxes

\section*{tax return, 460}

Taylor, Anna Diggs, 404
Taylor, Zachary, 132, 774c, 774p
Taylor v. Louisiana (1975), 597, 623
T-bills, 465
Tea Act (1773), 39
Teacher-to-Teacher Network balance the federal budget, 470 classification of governments, 17 compare economic systems, 690 compare legal systems, 729 congressional representation, 289
Constitution game, 74
Department of State Web site, 48
Fifth Amendment, 595 freedom of speech and press, 564
impeachment process, 322 improve current events coverage, 235 independent government agencies, 443 interest groups, 257
interracial marriage, 113 laws affecting daily life, 354 legislative process, 419
Martin Luther King, Jr., writings, 622 mayoral initiatives, 754
mock election, 203
movie courtroom scenes, 530 political parties in other countries, 128 presidential election tableau, 382 Revolutionary War propaganda, 39 roots of democratic government, 650 voting requirements, 172 telecommunications, 231
telephone surveys, 225
television, 229, 229c, 230, 232p, 233, 233p, 236 freedom of speech and, \(559 p\)
interest groups and, 258
politics and, 235, 239
presidential elections and, 385
public opinion and, \(218,218 p\)
regulation of, 563-565
Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF), 758 Tennessee, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
in Civil War, 284
congressional delegations from, 335 m
congressional representation and, 274 m
courts in, 529 m
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\) gains statehood, \(105 \mathrm{~m}, 106\)
governors of, \(722,723 m\)
local government in, 743p, 745
statistical profile, 773 c
Supreme Court cases in, 599
voting rights in, 154m, 157
Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA), 448, 449
Tennessee Valley Authority v. Hill (1978), 814
Tenth Amendment, C18, 82c, 95
Tenure of Office Act (1867), 321, 408 term limits, 366-368, 367p, 397, 543, 667, 815
Terrell, Mary Church, 244p territorial courts, 522,530c, 531, 540 territories, 308-309 acquisition of, 97
as characteristic of the state, \(6-7,8 c, 8-9\)
The Terror, 655
terrorism, 275, 317, 402, 404, 490, 492, 493, 499, 503, 548, 591, 665
courts and, 529
Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, 528-529
See also Patriot Act (2001)
Terry v. Ohio (1968), 587 testimonials, 260

Texas, \(776 m-777 m\)
annexation of, 41
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional elections in, 278
courts in, 529 m
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 199,388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 553, 556, 566-567
gains statehood, 105m, 106
governors of, 723m, 725-726
local government in, 742, 743, 751
minority populations in, 612, 614, 636m, 637
presidential candidates from, 385
statistical profile, 773 c
Supreme Court cases in, 566-567, 596, 598, 706p
voting rights in, 154m, 155, 162, 165, 166, 168
Texas Rangers, 758
Texas v. Johnson (1989), 566-567, 814
Texas v. White (1869), 706p, , 814
Thatcher, Margaret, 481 p, 667
theocracy, 649
think tanks, 251-252
Third Amendment, C17, 82c, 549c, 585
Thirteenth Amendment, C19, 56, 80, 83, 103, 547, 583-585, 607, 613, 632
Thomas, Clarence, 524, 531, 536c, 536p
Thomas, Norman, 140
Thornburgh v. Abbott (1989), 562
Thornhill v. Alabama (1940), 565-566
Three-fifths Compromise, 56, 56m, 458 three strikes law, 604
Thurmond, Strom, 352, 352p timelines
affirmative action, 628-629
African Americans voting rights, 166-167 American independence, 38-39 analyzing, S29
constitutional amendments, 80-81
executive departments, 436-437 executive power, 414-415
foreign policy, 504
juvenile justice, 734
local government, 754
of political parties, 134-135
suffrage, 153
voting rights, S29
Tinker v. Des Moines (1969), 566, 566p, 814
Title IX, 87, 315p, 626, 627, 629
Titie VII, 629
tort law, 728
Tower, John, 438 town government, 745, 746-747, 747m town manager system, 747 town meeting, 13, 13p, 195, 745, 746 townships, 649-650, 743, 747m, 747-748
Articles of Confederation and, 49-50 associations, 248 barriers, 697
colonial, 37
deficits, 699, 700
embargo, 697
impact of, 699
international, 488
partners, 695
purpose of 695
Trade Adjustment Assistance, 700 Trade Court. See Court of International Trade trademarks, 531, 700
Traficant, James, 280 transients, 157-158
transportation
highways, 758p, 759
Interstate Commerce Commission, 448
Transportation Department, 437
Transportation Security Administration, 494 treason, 309, 606
treasurer, state, 726, 744c
Treasury bills, 301, 465
Treasury Department, 301, 435, 436, 465 treaties, 50, 87, 323, 323p, 412-413, 485
Treaty of Paris (1783), 50
Treaty of Versailles (1920), 413 trial by jury, 31, 32c, 596-597. See also court system tribal government, 745-746, 746m tribunals, 522, 539, 539p
Truman, Harry S, 133-134, 365q, 367, 372, 775c, 775p
Cabinet of, 440
Congress and, 271, 419
foreign policy and, 486, 498, 499-500, 499q, \(515 q\)
Israel and, 414
Korea and, 414
media and, 229
in Senate, 334
State of the Union message and, \(86,86 p\)
Supreme Court and, 402
Truman-Dewey election (1947), 223
Truman Doctrine, 499-500
trustees, 287, 287 c Trusteeship Council (UN), 510-511 trusts, 681-682
Tutsis, 658
TVA. See Tennessee Valley Authority
Twain, Mark, 268
Twelfth Amendment, C19, 80, 83, 318, 375, 376
Twentieth Amendment, C22, 81, 270, 271, 389
Twenty-fifth Amendment, C23-C24, 81, 86, 319, 370, 371, 373
Twenty-first Amendment, C22, 79, 81, 83, 99
Twenty-fourth Amendment, C23, 81, 155, 163, 300
Twenty-second Amendment, C23, 81, 83, 88, 367, 397
Twenty-seventh Amendment, C24, 81, 82, 83
Twenty-sixth Amendment, C24, 81, 83, 153p, 154, 155, 158-159
Twenty-third Amendment, C23, 81, 91, 91 m, 91 p, 154
two-party system, 121 p, 124-128, 128c, 130-136, \(130 p, 133 p, 134 p-135 p, 147\)
two-speech rule, 352
Tyler, John, 103, 370, 413, 774c
U undeclared wars, 415,416
unemployment compensation, 460-461, 474 unicameral legislature, 34, 40, 714, 715
UNICEF, 511
unified court systems, 735
Uniform Code of Military Justice, 402 unitary government, 14-16, 16c, 666-670, 667p, 668m, 742, 749 United Kingdom, 14, 15c, 699c government of, 666-670, 667p, 668m
See also England; Great Britain
United Latin American Citizens v. Perry (2006), 278
United Nations
collective security, 498
Korean War, 500
organization of, 507-511, 508g, 510c
Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 806 work of, 511-512
United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), 510 p United States Agency for International Development (USAID), 488, 505
United States Civil Rights Commission, 165
United States v. American Library Association (2003),
565, 815
United States v. Amistad (1841), 815
United States v. Brown (1965), 593
United States v. Curtis-Wright Export Corp. (1936), 304
United States v. Eichman (1990), 567, 815
United States v. General Dynamics Corp. (1974), 815
United States v. Lee (1982), 558
United States v. Leon (1984), 815
United States v. Lopez (1995), 299, 815
United States v. Lovett (1946), 593
United States v. Nixon (1974), 409, 410-411, 410p, 411p, 815
United States v. 0 'Brien (1968), 566
United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group (2000), 564
United States v. Salerno (1987), 603
U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton (1995), 815

United States v. Virginia (1996), 623
United States v. Wong Kim Ark (1898), 633
Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 512, 806 universe, 224
USA Freedom Corps, 19
USAID. See United States Agency for International Development USA Patriot Act (2001), 588-589, 591 user fees, 765
Utah, \(111 p, 145,776 m-777 m\)
congressional delegations from, 279, 335 m
congressional representation and, \(274 m\)
courts in, 529 m
elections in, 187, 191m, 388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105m, 107
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
national monuments, \(406 p\)
revenues in, 765
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 603
voting rights in, 154 m
Uttecht v. Brown (2007), 605

\section*{v}

Van Buren, Martin, 135, 139p, 774c
Van Orden v. Perry (2005), 556
vassals, 648
Veazie Bank v. Fenno (1869), 303, 457
Venezuela, 502, 688 verdicts, 730
Vermont, 776m-777m
in American Revolution, 50 civil unions in, 113 congressional apportionment and, \(274 m\) congressional delegations from, 335 m constitution of, 709, 712, 713
courts in, 529 m elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 390,391 \mathrm{~m}\) gains statehood, 105m, 106
governors of, 721, 723m, 724
House of Representatives and, 273
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, 773 c
voting rights in, 154m, 176
Vernonia School District v. Acton (1995), 588
Veterans Affairs, Department of, 437, 539
Veterans of Foreign Wars, 252 veto power, \(72,356,418-419,419 c\) of governors, 724
of President, 289
Vice President, U.S., 81, 289, 318, 434 appointment of, 406
as Cabinet member, 438
at convention, 383-384
election of, 374-375, 389, 390
as Senate president, 332-334 succession and, 87, 370-372
Twenty-fifth Amendment and, 86
Viet Cong, 500
Vietnam, 366, 658, 690-691
Vietnam War, 306, 317, 414, 416, 420, 445, 500-501, 724
Villa, Pancho, 657
Vinson, Fred M., 561
Virginia, \(776 m-777 m\)
Articles of Confederation and, 50,50m,51 Bill of Rights, 32c
colonial, 32, 33, 33m, 38, 39, 40
congressional apportionment and, 274 m
congressional delegations from, 335 m
Constitutional Convention and, 51
constitution of, 709
courts in, 529m, 735
Declaration of Independence and, 47
desegregation in, 624
elections in, 187, 191m, 195, 376m, 388m, \(391 m\) first amendment rights in, 567
gains statehood, 105 m
General Assembly, 50
governors of, 720, 721, 723m, 724
immigrants in, 636 m
Pentagon, 490
ratification of the Constitution and, 60-62, 61c, \(61 p\) slavery and, 56 m state legislature of, \(714 p, 715\)
statistical profile, 773 c
Supreme Court cases in, 566, 567, 604, 623, 629
voting rights in, \(154 \mathrm{~m}, 161,162,163,167,168\)
Virginia Company, 708
Virginia Convention, 29
Virginia Declaration of Rights, 785-786
Virginia Plan, 54-55, 269
Virginia State Board of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens
Consumer Council (1976), 567
Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom (1786), 551-552
Virginia v. Black (2003), 566
Virgin Islands, 309, 497
citizenship and, 633
district courts, 528, 529m, 540
House of Representatives and, 273, 343
political parties and, 143
revenues in, 765
visa, 487, \(487 p\)
viva voce, 196
Voltaire (Arouet, Francois-Marie), 50
volunteering, 19, 19, 19p
vote-by-mail, 198-199
voter behavior of African Americans, 174
ballot fatigue, 171
education and, 174 independent voters and, 177-178 media influence on, 235-236 nonvoting, 170-173, 171 g, 172p, 174 political efficacy and, 172
political parties and, 174-178, 177-178 political socialization, 173 psychology and, 174, 177-178, 177p
public opinion and, 221 sociology and, 173, 174-177, 175c
split-ticket voting, 177
straight-ticket voting, 177 turnout, \(171 \mathrm{~g}, 175\) voter-examiner, 166, 167, 168 voter identification, 160, 161
voter registration, 159-161, 159p, 164, 208 voting absentee, 194, 195
age, 81, 83
automated, 197-198, 197-199 bilingual, 197
electronic, 194, 198, 198p inconveniences, 198 machines, 275
methods of, 275
online, 199
in public, 195
rights, 80, 83, 140
vote-by-mail, 198-199
See also elections voting age, 153p, 154, 158-159
voting day, 380
voting referees, 165
voting rights
citizenship, 156
denial of, 163
history of, 152-154, 153p, 154m, 159, 164-168, 164p, 166p-167p
literacy and, 161-162, 162p, 166, 168 nomination process and, 184
qualifications, \(156-163,157 p, 159 p, 160 p, 162 p\), 163p, 172
residency, 156-158, 157p restrictions and, 153-154, 153p
taxes and, 162-163, 164, 166
See also African Americans; suffrage; women
Voting Rights Acts, 153p, 154, 157, 162, 166-167,
168, 197, 356p, 528, 626, 812

\section*{W}

Wales, 668, 668 m
Walesa, Lech, 661
Wallace, George, 134, 137p,138, 185, 724
Wallace, Henry, 138
Wallace v. Jaffree (1985), 553, 816
War Department, 435, 488
wards, 145c, 146
War Powers Resolution (1973), 306, 416
warrants, 732
Warren, Earl, 598, 600, 620q, 624-625
Washington, \(776 \mathrm{~m}-777 \mathrm{~m}\)
affirmative action in, 628
congressional delegations from, 335 m
congressional representation and, 274 m
courts in, 529m
elections in, 188, 189, 191m, 388m, 391 m
gains statehood, 105m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
revenues in, 765
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 598, 630
voting rights in, 154m, 162
Washington, D.C., 16, 776m-777m
citizenship and, 633 courts in, 522, 525, 528,530,530c, 540
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 378,388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\) gun control in, 585
House of Representatives and, 273, 343
immigrants in, 636 m as nation's capital, 62, 618, 618p
political parties and, 143
revenues in, 765
statistical profile, 773 C
Supreme Court cases in, 585
Twenty-third Amendment, 91, 91 m, 91 p
voting rights in, \(81-82,154,154 m\)
Washington, George, \(400 p, 648,774 c, 774 p\)
Articles of Confederation and, 50
bicameralism and, 269
Cabinet of, 438, 439p
as commander-in-chief, 40, 62, 415 at Constitutional Convention, 52p,53,53p election of, 127, 375 Farewell Address, 87, 149, 367
at First Continental Congress, 39
foreign policy and, 484, 495
political parties and, 125, 130, 149
public debt and, 466
State of the Union message and, 86 term of office, 367, 397
veto power and, 418
Washington v. Texas (1967), 598
watchdog function, 124
Watchtower Bible and Tract Society v. Village of Stratton (2002), 558, 816

Watergate scandal, 134, 203, 205, 321-322, 341, 366, 410-411, 410p, 411 p, 420
Watkins v. United States (1957), 816 weak-mayor government, 750-751
The Wealth of Nations (Smith), 680, 682, 762
Weaver, Robert C., 438
weblogs, 233
Webster, Daniel, 132
Webster v. Reproductive Health Services (1989), 581-582
Weeks v. United States (1914), 588
Weems v. United States (1910), 604
weights and measures, 308 welfare organizations, 96,124 . See also public welfare Welfare Reform Act (1996), 96 welfare state, 687
Welsh v. United States (1970), 557
Wesberry v. Sanders (1964), 278
Westside Community Schools v. Mergens (1990), 553
West Virginia, 776m-777m congressional apportionment and, 274 m congressional delegations from, 335 m courts in, 529 m elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 376 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 391 \mathrm{~m}\)
first amendment rights in, 546, 558
gains statehood, 105m, 106
governors of, 721, 723m
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, 773 c
Supreme Court cases in, 547, 558, 597
voting rights in, 154 m
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (1943), 547, 558, 816

West Wing, 431, 432p
Westwood, Jean, 145
We the People, 216q, \(217 q\)
Whig Party, 131, 132, 139c, 187
whips, \(333 p, 336\)
Whiskey Rebellion, 415
White House Office, 368, 431-432
"white primary," 188
Whitney v. California (1927), 575
WHO. See World Health Organization wide-open primary, 188-189
wikis, S25
Wilder, L. Douglas, 721
Wilkerson v. Utah (1879), 603
Wilkie, Wendell, 384
William and Mary of Orange, 31, 782, 782p
Williams v. North Carolina (1945), 112
Wilson, James, 374
Wilson, Woodrow, 133, 140, 338, 371, 775 c Cloture Rule and, 352-353 on Congress, 281-282
court decisions and, 87
election of, 136
foreign policy and, 485
lobbying and, 255
pardons and, 420
State of the Union message and, 86, 332
Treaty of Versailles, 413
winner-take-all elections, 127, 379c, 379-380 wiretapping, 404, 589
Wisconsin, 776m-777m
congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional representation and, 274m, 279-280
courts in, 529m, 735
elections in, 187-188, 191m, 378, 379, 388m, 391 m
first amendment rights in, 558
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 723 m
immigrants in, 636 m
statistical profile, \(773 c\)
Supreme Court cases in, 558
taxes in, 760, 763
voting rights in, 154m, 157, 159
welfare in, 96
Wisconsin v. Yoder (1972), 558, 816 withholding tax, 460
Wolf, David, 199
Wolman v. Walter (1977), 554
Wooley v. Maynard (1977), 566
women
ambassadors, 486
in Cabinet, 438, 439, 439p, 484, 485
in Congress, 279p, 282p, 285, 285p, 286c, 332,
333p, 715p
Constitution and, 65
discrimination against, 616-617, 616g, 622-623, \(622 p\) in England, 655
governors, 720 p, 721
in House of Representatives, 266p, 279p judges, \(520 p\), 524, \(732 p\) in military, 490, 491, 813
political parties and, 144, 145 presidential candidates, 385 in Senate, \(282 p\)
on Supreme Court, 524
voting rights of, 80, 153-154, 153p, 154m, 616-617, 616q
women's rights, 616-617, 616g, 803-804, 803p
Woodson v. North Carolina (1976), 604
Wood v. Broom (1932), 276 workforce, 435
affirmative action and, 627-630
Works Projects Administration (WPA), 463p world, 778m-779m
World Bank, 510, 511, 697, 698
World Health Organization (WHO), 510, 510p, 511
World Trade Organization, 692, 696, 697

\section*{World War I} government corporations during, 448
military draft and, 445
Treaty of Versailles (1920), 413

World War II, 445, 498, 72
isolationism and, 482
write-in candidates, 185
writing
assessment writing, S11-S12
expository essay, S3-S5
narrative essay, S1-S2
persuasive writing, S9-S10
research writing, S6-S8
rubrics, S13
writ of certiorari, 534, 541
writ of habeas corpus, 60,592-593, 593p writ of liberty. See writ of habeas corpus writ of mandamus, 77,533
writs of assistance, 585-587
WTO. See World Trade Organization
Wyoming, 776m-777m
congressional delegations from, 335 m congressional representation and, \(270,270 c\), \(274 m\)
courts in, 529 m
elections in, \(191 \mathrm{~m}, 388 \mathrm{~m}, 389-390,390,391 \mathrm{~m}\)
gains statehood, 105 m
governors of, 721, 723m
House of Representatives and, 273
immigrants in, 636 m
population of, 270,270c
statistical profile, 773c
Supreme Court cases in, 587
voting rights in, 153, 154m, 162
Wyoming v. Houghton (1990), 587

\section*{Y}

Yalta Conference, 499
Yates, Robert, 61, 62
Yates v. United States (1957), 56
Yellowstone National Park, 110
Yeltsin, Boris, 662
Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Saw yer (1952), 402
YouTube, 233p
Yugoslavia, 507, 665

\section*{Z}

Zapata, Emilio, 657
Zedillo, Ernesto, 672
Zelman v. Simmons-Harris (2002), 555
Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School District (1993), 555 zoning, 24, 753
Zorach v. Clauson (1952), 552

\section*{Acknowledgments}

The people who made up the Magruder's American Government team -representing design services, editorial, editorial services, education technology, fact-checking, library services, manufacturing and inventory planning, market research, marketing services, product management, production, planning and coordination, and technical operations-are listed below. Boldface type denotes the core team members.
Courtney Alexander, Alyssa Boehm, Kristen Braghi, Peter Brooks, Lynn Burke, Todd Christy, Marcia Ciro, Lori-Anne Cohen, Brett Creane, Kathy Dempsey, Michael Di Maria, James Doris, Laura Edgerton-Riser, Thomas Ferreira, Jim Fellows, Patricia Fromkin, Nancy Gilbert, Andrea Golden, Shelby Gragg, Thomas Guarino, Susan Hersch, Paul Hughes, Katharine Ingram, Gillian Kahn, Stephanie Krol, Courtney Markham, Dotti Marshall, Grace Massey, Laurie McKenna, Angelina Mendez, Jennifer Paley, Cyndy Patrick, Gabriela Perez Fiato, Judi Pinkham, Dorothy Preston, Charlene Rimsa, Rachel Schanck, Amanda Seldera, Alexandra Sherman, Mark Staloff, Kara Stokes, Erin Sunderland, Kristen VanEtten, Paula Wehde

\section*{Art Credits}

Maps: XNR Productions, Inc.

\section*{Cover Image}

Getty Images
Illustration
Kenneth Batelman, Kerry Cashman, Daniel Guidera, Gillian Kahn, Rich McMahon, Jen Paley, Cyndy Patrick, Ted Smykal, Robin Storesund

\section*{Picture Research}

Kara Stokes

\section*{Photography}

FRONT MATTER Page i, Getty Images; v, Catherine Karnow/Corbis; vi, REUTERS/Jason Reed; vii, DAVID NOBLE PHOTOGRAPHY / Alamy; viii, AP Photo/Doug Mills; ix, Catherine Karnow/Corbis; x, Zhukov Sergei/TARTASS/Corbis; xi, AP Photo/Toby Talbot; xiii, Danny Kerr; xiv T, Getty Images; xiv M and B, istockphoto; xvii, Flip Schulke/Black Star; xix, Corbis; S1, JUPITERIMAGES/ BananaStock / Alamy, S3, Grapheast / Alamy; S6, Tetra Images / Alamy; S13, Blend Images/Getty Images; S17, PHOVOIR / FCM Graphic / Alamy; S19, Digital Vision / Alamy; S20, Juliet Brauner / Alamy; S22, Ed Fischer, Rochester (MN) Post Bulletin; S24, Red Chopsticks/Getty Images; S25, www.wikipedia.org; S28 L, Public Domain; S28 R, David J. & Janice L. Frent Collection/Corbis.

UNIT 1 Page 1, Catherine Karnow/CORBIS; 2-3, Larry Chiger/ SuperStock; 4 TL, Klaus Hackenberg/zefa/Corbis; 4 TR, Romilly Lockyer/The Image Bank/Getty Images, Inc.; 5 T, REUTERS/Larry Downing Landov; 5 M, Brooks Kraft/Corbis; 5 B, SANDY SCHAEFFERMAI Landov; 7 REUTERS/ Victor Fraile Landov; 7 R, Atlantide Phototravel/Corbis; 8 T, Archive Photos/Getty Images; 8 TM, Bridgeman Art Library; 8 BM, Joseph Werner/ Bridgeman Art Library/Getty Images; 8 B, Library of Congress; 9, By permission of Johnny Hart and Craetors Syndicate, Inc.; 10, Mike LutzN.S Coast Guard via Getty Images; 11, Ed Fischer/CartoonStock; 12 both, Tim Graham/Getty Images; 13 T, AP Photo/Toby Talbot; 13 B, AP Photo/Harry Cabluck; 15 L, Christy Bowe/Corbis; 15 R, Alain Evrard / Impact Photos / Imagestate; 18, AP Photo/Benny Gool; 19, AP Photo/Mike Stone; 20 both, Richard B. Levine; \(\mathbf{2 1}\) both, Bettmann/Corbis; 26, Baloo -Rex May/Cartoon Stock 27 L, Bust of Aristotle ( \(\mathbf{3 8 4 - 3 2 2}\) BC) (marble) (b/w photo), Roman / Museo Nazionale Romano, Rome, Italy, Alinari / The Bridgeman Art Library International; 27 R, Bust of Plato (c. \(427-347 \mathrm{BC}\) ) (stone) (b/w photo), Greek Vatican Museums and Galleries, Vatican City, Italy, Alinari / The Bridgeman Art Library International; 28-29, The Battle of Lexington, 19th April 1775, 1910 (oil on canvas), Wollen, William Barnes (1857-1936) / National Army Museum, London, / The Bridgeman Art Library International; 30 L , Copy of the Magna Carta (detail), / Lincoln Cathedral, Lincolnshire, UK, / The Bridgeman Art Library International; \(\mathbf{3 0}\) R, The Granger Collection, New York; 31, British Museum / Art Resource, NY; 32, William Sumits//Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 35 TL, JEAN-PAUL PELISSIER/Reuters/Corbis; 35 TR, AP Photo/Massimo Sambucetti; 35 B, Peter Andrews/Reuters/Corbis; 36 L , The Drafting of the Declaration of Independence in 1776 (oil on canvas), Ferris, Jean Leon Jerome (1863-1930) / Private Collection, /

The Bridgeman Art Library International; 36 R, HIP / Art Resource, NY; 37 T, American Antiquarian Society, Worcester, Massachusetts, USA, /The Bridgeman Art Library International; 37 B , Library of Congress; 38 L , Sloane MS 1622 Map of Virginia, showing in upper left hand a picture of Chief Powhatan by John Smith (1580-1631) 1624 (hand-coloured engraving), Bry, Theodore de (1528-98) (after) / British Library, London, UK, (c) British Library Board. All Rights Reserved / The Bridgeman Art Library; 38 ML, The Granger Collection, New York; 38 MR, The Granger Collection, New York; 38 M, The Granger Collection, New York; 38-039 R, The Art Archive; 39 L, Photo Credit : HIP / Art Resource, NY; 39 M, Bunker's Hill, 1775, c. 1900 (w/c on paper), Simkin, Richard (1840-1926) / National Army Museum, London, / The Bridgeman Art Library; 39 R, The Granger Collection, New York; 41, Bettmann/Corbis; 42 L, English School/Bridgeman Art Library/Getty Images; 42 R, Bill Brooks / Alamy; 43, Thomas Jefferson Writing the Declaration of Independence, from 'The Story of the Revolution' by Henry Cabot Lodge (1850-1924), published in Scribner's Magazine, March 1898 (oil on canvas), Pyle, Howard (1853-1911) / Delaware Art Museum, Wilmington, USA, Howard Pyle Collection / The Bridgeman Art Library; 45 L, Bettmann/ Corbis; 45 R, Eric Van Den Brulle/Riser/Getty Images; 47 L, Todd Gipstein/ National Geographic/Getty Images; 47 R, Bettmann/Corbis; 48 L, Courtesy of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco; 48 R, The Granger Collection, New York; 49, The Granger Collection, New York; 51, R. Kord/Getty Images/ Retrofile; 52 both, The Granger Collection, New York; 53 L, Purestock/Getty Images; 53 ML, Bettmann/Corbis; 53 TM, The Granger Collection, New York; 53 BM, VisionsofAmerica/Joe Sohm; 53 TR, Burazin/Getty Images; 53 BR, Photo by George Skadding/Time & Life Pictures/Getty Images; 55 TL, John Locke (1632-1704) (plaster), English School, (19th century) / Yale Center for British Art, Paul Mellon Collection, USA, / The Bridgeman Art Library; 55 TR, Bust of Charles de Secondat (1689-1755) Baron de Montesquieu, 1767 (marble), Lemoyne, Jean Baptiste II (1704-78) / Musee des Arts Decoratifs, Bordeaux, France, Lauros / Giraudon / The Bridgeman Art Library; 55 BL, Bust of Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712-78) (terracotta), Houdon, JeanAntoine (1741-1828) / Musee des Beaux-Arts, Orleans, France, Giraudon / The Bridgeman Art Library; 55 BR, Library of Congress; 57, The Granger Collection, New York; 58, Independence National Historical Park Collection; 59 L, Garry BlackMasterfile; 59 R, Picture History; 60 L, Stock Montage/ Stock Montage/Getty Images; 60 R, The Granger Collection, New York; 61 , American Antiquarian Society; 64, Library of Congress; 65, Hulton Archive/ Getty Images; 66-67, age fotostock / SuperStock; 68 both, ROBERTO SCHMIDT/AFP/Getty Images; 69, Visions of America, LLC / Alamy; 70-71 all, Steve Artley; 76 BL, James Madison (oil on canvas), American School, (19th century) / Musee Franco-Americaine, Blerancourt, Chauny, France, Giraudon / The Bridgeman Art Library, 76 BM, The Granger Collection, New York; 76 BR, The Granger Collection, New York; 77 L, public domain; 77 M, Bettmann/Corbis; 77 R, New York Times Pictures; 78 L, Library of Congress 78 R, Bettmann/Corbis; 80 L, The Granger Collection, New York; 80 M, Smithsonian Institution/Corbis; 80 R, Bettmann/Corbis; 81 both, Bettmann/ Corbis; 83, OMark Parisi, reprint by permission; 84, image100/Corbis; 85 both, Tom Fox/Dallas Morning News/Corbis; 86, AP Photo; 88, JASON REED/Reuters/Corbis; 90, Baloo-Rex May/Cartoon Stock; 91 T, The New York Public Library / Art Resource, NY; 91 B, The Granger Collection, New York; 92-93, EMM ANUEL DUNAND/AFP/Getty Images; 92-93, UPI Photo/ Duncan McIntosh/Office of Governor Schwarzenegger; 94 both, © Richard B. Levine; 95, AP Photo/Chris Polk; 97 L, Richard Ellis / The Image Works; 97 R, Bettmann/CORBIS; 98, Image by © Michael Urban/POOL/epa/Corbis; 100 L, David R. Frazier / Photo Researchers, Inc.; 100 R, LUKE FRAZZA/ AFP/Getty Images; 101, The Granger Collection, New York; 103 both, AP PhotoNancy Bannick Collection, Hawaii State Archives; 106 L, Tony Freeman / Photo Edit, 106 R, Connie Ricca/Corbis; 108 L, Bob Daemmrich /Photo Edit; 108 M, Ric Dugan/Herald-Mail/AP Photo; 108 R, Richard T. Nowitz/Corbis; 110 TL, Mark Constantini/San Francisco Chronicle/Corbis; 110 TR, age fotostock / SuperStock; 110 B, AP Photo/Energy Star, John Harrington; 111 both, Corbis / SuperStock; 112, Russ Lappa; 113, Bettmann/Corbis; 116, public domain; 117 L, Stock Montage / SuperStock; 117 R, Getty Images; 118 L, Free Agents Limited/Corbis; 118 R, American Bar Association.

UNIT 2 Page 119, REUTERS/Jason Reed; Page 119, Ali Goldstein/NBC NewsWire; 120-121, depends on election; 122 both, AP Photo/Victoria Arocho; 123, AP Photo/Jae C. Hong; 125 BL, democrats.org; 125 TR, Carolyn Chappo; 125 Bkgrnd, Joshua Lott/Raleigh News & Observer/MCT; 125 BM, facebook.com; 129, J.B. Handelsman/The Cartoon Bank; 130 L, Library of Congress; \(\mathbf{1 3 0}\) M, Bridgeman Art Library; 130 R, Archivo Iconografico, S.A./Corbis; 131, Library of Congress; 133 L, The Granger Collection, New York; 133 inset L, Beathan/Corbis; 133 R, The Granger Collection, New York; 133 inset R, Beathan/Corbis; 134 L, The Granger Collection, New York; \(\mathbf{1 3 4}\) ML, Brooklyn Museum/Corbis; 134 M, Portrait of Andrew Jackson, 1858 (oil on canvas), Sully, Thomas (1783-1872) / Private

Collection, Photo (c) Christie's Images / The Bridgeman Art Library; 134 MR, Bridgeman Art Library; 134-135, Minnesota Historical Society/Corbis 135 BL, President Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882-1945) c. 1941 (photo), American Photographer, (20th century) / Private Collection, Peter Newark American Pictures / The Bridgeman Art Library; \(\mathbf{1 3 5}\) M, Bettmann/Corbis; 135 R, Jean-Pierre Lescourret/Corbis; 135 inset R, Getty Images; 137 L, Three Lions/Getty Images/Newscom; 137 R, Bettmann/Corbis; 139 TL, David J. & Janice L. Frent /Corbis; 139 BL, Time Inc./Time Life Pictures/ Getty Images; 139 TR, David J. & Janice L. Frent Collection/Corbis; 140, Underwood And Underwood/Underwood And Underwood/Time & Life Pictures/Getty Images; 141, AP Photo/Kevork Djansezian; 142 both, Chris Kleponis/Zuma/Corbis; 143, Copley News Service; 144 M, courtesy matt undh at kcgop.org; 144 TR, Image by (c) JASON REED/Reuters/Corbis; 144 BR, dnc.org; 144 Bkgrnd, Mediolmages/Corbis; 146, AP Photo/Kiichiro Sato; 148, Mischa Richter/Cartoon Bank, Inc.; 149, Harley Schwadron/ CartoonStock; 150-151, AP Photo/Springfield News-Leader, Christina Dicken; 152 both, LOU DEMATTEIS/Reuters/Corbis; 153 L, George Caleb Bingham/Bridgeman Art Library/Getty Images; 153 M, The Granger Collection, New York; 153 R, AP Photo;

155, Bettmann/Corbis; 156 both, Barbara Davidson/Dallas Morning News/Corbis; 157 L, AP Photo/Chuck Burton; 157 R, AP Photo/Khampha Bouaphanh; 158, Bettmann/CORBIS; 159 Bkgrnd, AP Photo/Ric Feld; 159 T, AP Photo/ Robert E. Klein; 159 M, AP Photo/Bill Waugh; 159 B, Jonathan Nourok / Photo Edit; 160 TR, AP Photo/Craig Fritz; 160 BL, AP Photo/Ric Feld; 162, Take Stock Images; 163, Spencer Platt/Getty Images; 164 both, Bettmann/Corbis; 166 L, The Granger Collection, New York; 166 M, Corbis; 166 R, AP Photo;167 L, AP Photo; 167 R, Jacques M. Chenet/Corbis; 168, AP Photo/Bizuayehu Tesfaye; 169, Jim West / Alamy; 170 both, Peter Turnley/Corbis; 172, ©2000 Mic Stevens from cartoonbank.com; 175 both, Kara Stokes; 176, Jeff Parker; 177, EMMANUEL DUNAND/AFP/Getty Images; 180, Marshall Ramsey/cnscartoons/Newscom; 181, Library of Congress; 182-183, Elaine Thompson/AP Images; 184 both, AP Photo/Janet Hostetter; 185, need credit and perm from paula; 186 T, David R. Frazier Photolibrary, Inc. / Alamy; 186 M, REUTERS/Eric Miller Landov; 186 B, AP Photo/Amy E. Powers; 188, JIM WATSON/AFP/Getty Images; 189 TR, AP Photo/Chris Carlson; 189 BL, AP Photo/J. Scott Applewhite; 193 both, Justin Sullivan/Getty Images; 194, AP Photo/Elaine Thompson; 196, Getty Images; 198, AP Photo/Jamie-Andrea Yanak; 200 TL, Getty Images; 200 TR AP Photo/David Crenshaw; 200 B, AP Photo/Lawrence Jackson; 201 both, AP Photo/Ben Margot; 203 L, Getty Images/Richard Ellis; 203 M, Jason Reed/Reuters/Corbis; 203 R, Jason Reed/Reuters/Corbis; 204 both, Joe Raedle/Getty Images; 206, AP Photo/Josh Reynolds; 207, Steve Artley; 210, Steve Kelley/Cartoonist Group; 212-213, Mario Tama/Getty Images; 214 both, Alex Wong/Getty Images for Meet the Press; 217 TR, Comstock Select/Corbis; 217 BL, Image Source/Corbis; 218, Dave Carpenter/Cartoon Stock; 219, Minnesota Historical Society/Corbis; 220 both, Billy E. Barnes / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 221, AP Photo/Shawn Patrick Ouellette; 222, By permission of Gary Varvel and Creators Syndicate, Inc.; 227, Tom Carter / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 228 both, Masterfile; 230, The Granger Collection, New York; 232 L, Bettmann/Corbis; 232 R, Yale Joel//Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 233, Matt Campbell/epa/ Corbis; \(\mathbf{2 3 4}\) L, Harley Schwadron/Cartoon Stock; 234 R, Leo Cullum/The Cartoon Bank; 238, Adey Bryant/Cartoon Stock; 239, Ray Jelliffe/Cartoon stock; 240-241, Frances Roberts/Levine Roberts; 242 both, Frances Roberts/Levine Roberts; 243, Dave Coverly/The Cartoonist Group; 244 TL, J. R. Eyerman//Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 244 TML, Library of Congress; 244 BML, New York Public Library; 244 BL, Minnesota Historica Society; 244 R, The Granger Collection, New York; 246, Norma Jean Garcasz/Courtesy Tuscon Citizen; 247 both, AP Photo/Mark Humphrey, 249 T, Bettmann/Corbis; 249 B, PRNewsFoto/Panasonic Corporation of North America; 251 T, Photo by Gary Dineen/NBAE via Getty Images; 251 B, Scott Nelson/Getty Images; 253 TL, Michael Geissinger / The Image Works; 253 BL, Ian Wagreich Photography / www.iwphoto.com; 253 TR, Catherine Karnow/Corbis; 254 both, Scott J. Ferrell/Newscom; 255, AP Photo/Charles Dharapak; 256 Bkgrnd, Justin Sullivan/Getty Images; 258 T, Jupiter Images; 258 M, www. avaaz.com; 258 BM, Alan Schein Photography/Corbis; 258 B, Polka Dot Images / SuperStock; 258 Bkgrnd, Momatiuk - Eastcott/Corbis; 258 TM, Getty Images; 259, Lynne Fernandes / The Image Works; 260, Mike Keefe/Courtesy Denver Post; 262, The Cartoon Bank; 263, Ann Telnaes/ The Cartoonist Group; 264 L, Free Agents Limited/Corbis; 264 R, Charles Barsotti/The Cartoon Bank.

UNIT 3 Page 265, Ron Sachs/Consolidated News Photos; 266-267, Shawn Thew/epa/Corbis; 268 both, AP Photo/Susan Walsh; 269, Brad Markel/ Getty Images; 272, Bonnie Kamin / Photo Edit; 273 both, Stefan Zaklin/ epa/Corbis; 278, Bettmann/Corbis; 279 L, courtesy Ileana Ros-Lehtinen; 279 R, AP Photo/Times-News, Mike Dirks; 281 both, UPI Photo/Kevin Dietsch; 282 L, AP Photo/Jackie Johnston; 282 TM, JASON REED/Reuters Landov; 282 BM, Pearson Education/PH School Division; 283, Matthew Cavanaugh/epa/Corbis; 284, Bernard Schoenbaum/The Cartoon Bank Inc.; 285 both, REUTERS/Jason Reed; 287, KEVIN LAMARQUE/Reuters Landov; 288 R, DON EMMERT/AFP/Getty Images; 289, © 2006 RJ Matson/ Cagle Cartooons. All rights reserved.; 292, Library of Congress; 294-295, Mark Wilson/Getty Images; 296 both, AP Photo/Roberto Borea; 298 L, Bill

Frymire/Masterfile; 298 R, Free Agents Limited/Corbis; 299 L, David Pollack/ Corbis; 299 MR, Photofusion Picture Library / Alamy; 299 R, Pearson Education/PH School Division; 300, Robert Weber/Cartoonbank; 304 both, Harris and Ewing/Corbis; 305, Ames Madison (1751-1836) published by Nathaniel Currier (1813-88) (colour litho), Stuart, Gilbert (1755-1828) (after) / Private Collection, Peter Newark American Pictures / The Bridgeman Art Library; 306 L, UpperCut Images/Getty Images; 306 R, DK Stock/Getty mages; 307 L, Corbis Premium RF / Alamy; 307 M, Getty Images; 307 R, Getty Images; 308 TL, David R. Frazier Photolibrary, Inc. / Alamy; 308 TR, Don Smetzer / Alamy; 308 B, Paul Springett / Alamy; 310 L, Purestock/Getty Images; 310 BL, Corbis Super RF / Alamy; 310 BM, Alexander Hamilton, c. 1804 (oil on canvas), Trumbull, John (1756-1843) / (c) Collection of the New-York Historical Society, USA, / The Bridgeman Art Library; 310 BR, American Numismatic Association Money Museum; 311 L, Portrait of Andrew Jackson, 1858 (oil on canvas), Sully, Thomas (1783-1872) / Private Collection, Photo (c) Christie's Images / The Bridgeman Art Library; 311 M, American Numismatic Association Money Museum; 311 R, Sandy Felsenthal/Corbis; 312 both, AP Photo/Khampha Bouaphanh; 314, A. Y. Owen/Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 315 L, AP Photo/Jason Hunt; 315 R, Jeff Greenberg/Jupiter images; 316, J.B. Handelsman/Cartoonbank; 317 TL, AP Photo; 317 TR, SHAMIL ZHUMATOV/Reuters/Corbis; 317 B, Chris Hondros/Getty Images; 318 L, AP Photo; 318 R, AP Photo/Joe Marquette; 320, AP Photo/File; 321 TL, Najlah Feanny/Corbis; 321 ML, Wally McNamee/Corbis; 321 BL, Mark Wilson/Getty Images; 321 M, AP Photo/Khue Bui; 321 TR, Najlah Feanny/CORBIS SABA; 321 MR, George Waldman/Getty Images; 322 TL, Scott J. Ferrell/Congressional Quarterly/ Getty Images; 322 TR, LUKE FRAZZA/AFP/Getty Images; 323 L, Brandi Simons/Getty Images; 323 R, Getty Images; 324, Ed Stein, reprinted with permission of Rocky Mountain News; 327, Bob Artley, Courtesy Washington (Minn) Daily Globe; 328-329, Scott J. Ferrell/Congressional Quarterly/Getty mages; 330 L, DOUG MILLS /The New York Times/Redux; 330 R Shawn Thew/epa/Corbis; 331, Corbis; 333 all, United States Government (public domain); 336, Harley Schwadron/Cartoonstock; 338 both, Ken Cedeno/ Corbis; 342, AP Photo/Lauren Victoria Burke; 343 L, Brooks Kraft/Corbis; 343 R, Scott J. Ferrell/Congressional Quarterly; 344, Mark Wilson/Getty Images; 347 L, Getty Images; 347 R, Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images; 348, Jack Ziegler/The Cartoon Bank, Inc.; 350 TL, Scott J. Ferrell/Congressional Quarterly/Getty Images; 350 TR, William Thomas Cain/Getty Images; 350 BL, United States Government (Publc Domain); 351 both, Scott J. Ferrell/ Congressional Quarterly/Newscom; 352, Newscom; 354, Mark Kauffman// Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 355 T, Scott J. Ferrell/Congressional Quarterly; 355 M, United States House of Representatives; 355 B, Scott J. Ferrell/Congressional Quarterly/Getty Images; 356, Brooks Kraft/Corbis; 358, John Cole, The Scranton Times-Tribune/politicalcartoons.com; 359, Bob Englehart/politicalcartoons.com; 360 L, Free Agents Limited/Corbis; 360 R, Nick Anderson/The Cartoonist Group.

UNIT 4 Page 361, AP Photo/Doug Mills; 362, REUTERS/Jim Young (OBAMA OPTION); 362, AP Photo/Charles Dharapak(McCain Option); 364 both, David Hume Kennerly/Getty Images; 365, Reuters/Corbis; 367 L, AP Photo; 367 TR, Pearson Education/PH School Division; 367 BR, Pearson Education/PH School Division; 368, Brooks Kraft/Corbis; 369, Michael Newman / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 370 both, Bettmann/Corbis; 371, National Archives/Handout/Getty Images; 372, Peter Steiner/The Cartoon Bank; 373, Ramin Talaie/Corbis (PALIN CHOICE); 373, AP Photo/ Terry Ashe (BIDEN CHOICE); 374 L, Bettmann/Corbis; 374 M, ©Private Collection/ Peter Newark American Pictures/ The Bridgeman Art Library; 374 R, ©Bristol City Museum and Art Gallery, UK/ The Bridgeman Art Library; 377 both, Spencer Platt/Getty Images; 380, Tribune Media Services, Inc. All Rights Reserved. Reprinted with permission.; 381, AP Photo/Chris Carlson; 384 L, AP Photo/Reed Saxon; 384 R, Paul Drinkwater/NBC via Getty Images; 386 both, Rock the Vote; 390 L, REUTERS/Colin Braley/ Corbis; 390 R, Robert King/Newsmakers; 391, DAEMMRICH BOB/CORBIS SYGMA; 393 L, David Granlund, Metrowest Daily News; 393 TR, JEFF HAYNES/AFP/Getty Images; 393 BR, AP Photo/Carolyn Kaster; 396, ©1986 The Philadelphia Inquirer. Reprinted with permission of Universal Press Syndicate.; 397, Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library, Princeton University 398-399, Bettmann/Corbis; 400 L, Paul Damien/NGS/Getty Images; 400 R, Christie's Images/Corbis; 402 L, Library of Congress; 402 R, Chicago Historical Society; 403, Harris & Ewing; Inc./Corbis; 404 TL, Brooks Kraft/ Corbis; 404 TR, NSA via Getty Images; 404 B, Brooks Kraft/Corbis; 405 both, AP Photo/Ron Edmonds; 406, Cynthia Johnson/Time Life Pictures/ Getty Images; 408, Dwayne Booth; 410 TL, Purestock/Getty Images; 410 BL, Joseph Sohm/Visions of America/Corbis; 410 BM, AP Photo/stf, 410 BR, AP Photo/The Herald-Sun, Christine T. Nguyen; 411 L, Owen Franken/ Corbis; 411 M, AP Photo/White House; 411 R, Bettmann/Corbis; 412 L, Dirck Halstead/ Getty Images; 412 R, Bettmann/Corbis; 413, LUKE FRAZZA/ AFP/Getty Images; 414, Bettmann/Corbis; 415, Kevin Lamarque/REUTERS/ Corbis; 417 all, Alex Wong/Getty Images; 419, Bettmann/CORBIS; 422, Rex Rabin, Sacramento Bee; 424-425, Melanie Steton Freeman/The Christian Science Monitor via Getty Images; 426 both, UPI Photo/Roger L. Wollenberg; 427, Clay Bennett/Christian Science Monitor; 429, Jon Arnold Images Ltd / Alamy; 431 both, Eric Draper/White House/Handout/Reuters/

Corbis; 432, Brooks Kraft/Corbis; 433, SAUL LOEB/AFP/Getty Images; 435 both, AP Photo/Tim Larsen; 436 L, Bettmann/Corbis; 436 M, Frank Greenaway © Dorling Kindersley; 436 R, H. Armstrong Roberts/Retrofile/ Getty Images; 437 L, Philip Nealey/Digital Vision/Getty Images; 437 R, C. Sherburne/PhotoLink/Getty Images; 439 T, AP Photo/White House, Paul Morse; 439 B, Bettmann/Corbis; 440, Bettmann/Corbis; 441 both, AP Photo/Diane Bondareff, Pool; 443 L, Helen Ashford/ Jupiter Images; 443 M, Popperfoto/ Getty Images; 443 TR, Heather Wright; 443 BR, AP Photo/ Eugene Hoshiko; 444 L, REUTERS/Jessie Cohen/Smithsonian's National Zoo Landov; 444 M, AP Photo/Rich Pedroncelli; 444 R, REUTERS/Bob Care/Florida Keys News Bureau/HO /Landov; 447 T, Comstock/Corbis; 447 B, AP Photo/Keith Srakocic; 447 L, Brooks Kraft/Sygma/Corbis; 447 R, David Frazier / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 448, Bob/Thom Thaves/Cartoonist Group; 450 TL, Walter Bibikow/Corbis; 450 TR, Chris Howes/Wild Places Photography / Alamy; 450 B, Cynthia Johnson/Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 452, Gary McCoy/Cagle Cartoons; 454-455, GREG DERR photos/The Patriot Ledger; 456 both, Monika Graff/Getty Images; 457, Harley Schwadron/Cartoon Stock; 459 image 1, Getty Images; 459 image 2, Getty Images; 459 image 3, Getty Images; 459 image 4, Getty Images; 459 image 5, Large blue and white Ming vase with the Hsuan Te mark, 1426-35 (porcelain), Chinese School, (15th century) / Private Collection, /The Bridgeman Art Library; 459 image 6, Getty Images; 463 both, Minnesota Historical Society/Corbis; 465, Bryan Mitchell/Getty Images; 467 both, Najlah Feanny/Corbis; 471, Paul Morigi/Wirelmage; 472, Getty Images; 473 both, Scott J. Ferrell/Congressional Quarterly/Getty Images; 474 L, Jeff Fusco/Getty Images; 474 R, AP Photo/Manuel Balce Ceneta; 475, David Horsey; 478, Steve Kelley/Cartoonist Group; 480-481, Bettmann/Corbis; 482 both, Howard Sochurek/Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 483, Jim Borgman/Courtesy Cincinatti Enquirer; 484 TL, Marwan Assaf/REUTERS/Corbis; 484 BL, Voice of America; 484 TR, Courtesy United States Government, State Department; 484 BR, Dimas Ardian/Getty Images; 485, Courtesy Skidmore, Owings & Merrill LLP; 486 T, MPI/Getty Images; 486 B, Library of Congress; 487 L, Sarah-Maria Vischer/The Image Works; 487 R, Breck P. Kent; 488 both, Shawn Thew/AFP/Getty Images; 491, Brad Loper/Dallas Morning News/Corbis; 493 T, Gerald French/Corbis; 493 BL, Tom Pennington/Fort Worth Star-Telegram/MCT/Newscom; 493 BM, Brooks Kraft/Corbis; 493 BR, NyxoLyno Cangemi/U.S. Coast Guard via Getty Images; 494, Momatiuk - Eastcott/Corbis; 495 both, Library of Congress; 496 L, Bettmann/Corbis; 496 R, The Art Archive / Culver Pictures; 497, Library of Congress; 500, Popperfoto/Getty Images; 501 T, Bettmann/ Corbis; 501 B, AP Photo/Joe Marquette; 502, Darren McCollester/Getty Images; 504 TL, ACOB J. KIRK/US NAVY NEWS PHOTO/Newscom; 504 TR, ROMEO RANOCO/Reuters /Landov; 504 B, Sgt Andres Alcaraz/epa/ Corbis; 505 both, Bettmann/Corbis; 508, REUTERS/Paco Sanseviero; 510 T, im Zuckerman/Corbis; 510 BL, Dung Vo Trung/Sygma/Corbis; 510 BM, Tetra Images/Corbis; 510 BR, Dimas Ardian/Getty Images; 514, Robert Mankoff/The Cartoon Bank; 516 L, Free Agents Limited/Corbis; 516 R, © John Deering.

UNIT 5 Page 517, Catherine Karnow/CORBIS; 518-519, AP Photo/Evan Vucci; 520 L, Gaetano/Corbis; 520 R, SCOTT J. FERREL/Congressiona Quarterly Inc. Newscom; 525, Corbis; 527 TL, Getty Images; 527 TR, Richard Cummins / SuperStock; 527 B, Image by © Ron Sachs/CNP/ Corbis; 528 both, Jerry Talfer/San Francisco Chronicle/Corbis; 532 L, Digital Vision / Alamy; 532 R, Stock Montage/Getty Images; 533, The Granger Collection, New York; 536, Brooks Kraft/Corbis; 538 both, AP Photo/U.S Army, Pvc Ben Brody; 539, © 2007 Paresh Nath /Cagle Cartooons. All rights reserved.; 542, Bettmann/Corbis; 543, picturehistory/Newscom; 544-545, Levine Roberts Photography; 546 both, AP Photo; 547, Michael Newman / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 551 both, JUPITERIMAGES/ Brand X / Alamy; 553, AP Photo/Douglas C. Pizac; 554, Peter Titmuss / Alamy; 556 L, AP Photo/Steve Yeater; 556 R, AP Photo/Mike Groll; 557, AP Photo/ The News-Tribune, Bob King; 559 both, New York Times Pictures; 560, Al Freni/Library Of Congress/Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 562 both, Minnesota Historical Society; 566, Bettmann/Corbis; 568, Tony Freeman / Photo Edit, Inc.; 569 both, AP Photo/Nick Ut; 571 L, Najlah Feanny/CORBIS SABA; 571 R, AP Photo/Ric Francis; 574, Steve Artley; 575, Doug Marlette, Tallahassee Democrat/TMS Reprints; 576-577, Steve Hamblin / Alamy; 578 L, Photo Researchers, Inc.; 578 R, Mark Harmel/Getty Images; 579 T, Jon Shireman/Getty Images; 579 B, Stockbyte/Getty Images; 580, The New Yorker Collection 1970, J.B. Handelsman from cartoonbank.com; 581 Gunter Marx / Alamy; 583 both, Masterfile; 584, New York Public Library; 585, Rolf Richardson / Alamy; 586, Susan Van Etten / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 588, AP Photo; 589, William Whitehurst/Corbis; 591 TL, William Foley//Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 591 TR, Ralf-Finn Hestoft/Corbis; 591 B, Reuters/Corbis; 592 both, Douglas C. Pizac-Pool/Getty Images; 593 T, American Stock/Getty Images; 593 B, AP Photo; 597, Flip Schulke/Black Star; 598 L, JUPITERIMAGES/ Thinkstock / Alamy; 598 R, David R. Frazier Photolibrary, Inc. / Alamy; 600 L, Getty Images; 600 BL, Bettmann/Corbis; 600 BR, John Loengard//Time Life Pictures/Getty Image; 601 BL, Michael Newman / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 601 BM, Getty Images; 601 BR, AP Photo/Robert Houston; 602 both, AP Photo/Nathan Martin; 603, Dave Parker/Cartoon Stock; 608, Mike Baldwin/Cartoonstock.com; 609, Clay Bennett/© 2005 The Christian Science Monitor. All rights reserved.; 610-611, Bruce Davidson/Magnum Photos; 612 both, Chuck Savage/Corbis; 613, Alison Wright/Corbis; 614, Getty Images; 615, Getty Images; 616, Clay Bennett, The Christian Science Monitor; 618 both, AP Photo/ Marcy Nighswander; 619, Library of Congress; 621 L, New York Times Co./Getty Images; 621 TR, Center for American History, UT-Austin; 621 BR, Hulton Archive/Getty Images; 622, Alex Wong/Getty Images; 624 L, Bettmann/Corbis; \(\mathbf{6 2 4}\) R, Carl Iwasaki/Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 625 L, AP Photo; 625 M, Bettmann/Corbis; 625 R, Bettman/Corbis; 626 both, AP Photo/File; 627, Bettmann/Corbis; 628, Jack Moebes/Corbis; 629, Doug Pensinger/Getty Images; 631, Newmann/zefa/Corbis; 632 both, Carlos Barria/Reuters/Corbis; 634 L, Bruce Forster/Getty Images; 634 R, Jeff Greenberg / Alamy; 638, Scott Stantis; 640, Steve Artley; 641, The Granger Collection, New York; 642 L, Free Agents Limited/Corbis; 642 R, Bob/Tom Thaves/ Cartoonist Group.

UNIT 6 Page 643, Zhukov Sergei/TAR-TASS/Corbis; 644-645, Lan Hongguang/Xinhua Press/Corbis; 646 both, Jon Arnold Images Ltd / Alamy; 647, Justin Kase zthreez / Alamy; 649, Getty Images; 650, MPI/Getty Images; 652, Picture Partners / Alamy; 653 both, The Granger Collection, New York; 654 L, The Art Archive / Musée Carnavalet Paris / Gianni Dag Orti; 654 R, Ceiling of the Painted Hall, detail of King William III (1650-1702) and Queen Mary II (1662-94) Enthroned, 1707-14 (see 208087), Thornhill, Sir James (1675-1734) / Royal Naval College, Greenwich, London, UK, Photo: James Brittain / The Bridgeman Art Library; 658, public domain; 659 L, Bettmann/Corbis; 659 TR, Stapleton Collection/Corbis; 659 BR, Bettmann/Corbis; 661 both, AP Photo/Lionel Cironneau; 662, AP Photo/ Dmitry Lovetsky; 666 both, Erich Schlegel/Dallas Morning; 667, RUSSELL BOYCE/Reuters/Corbis; 669, Yerbury Photography / Alamy; 671, AP Photo/Gregory Bull; 674, Ed Fischer, Courtesy Omaha World-Herald; 675, The Granger Collection, New York; 676-677, AP Photo/M. Spencer Green, file; 678 both, Don Mason/Corbis; 679 L, Sean Masterson/epa/Corbis; 679 M, Cultura/Corbis; 679 R, Rick Friedman/Corbis; 680 L, Tony Freeman Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; \(\mathbf{6 8 0} \mathbf{M}\), Getty Images; 680 R, Robin Nelson / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 681, STEPHEN HILGER/Bloomberg News /Landov; 682, AP Photo/George McLuskie/Fife College/PA; 683, Shutterstock; 685 both, Swim Ink 2, LLC/Corbis; 687 T, Bob Englehart, The Hartford Courant; 687 B, ©Bill Proud/Cartoonstock; 688, Gerd Schnuerer/ Getty Images; 690, Robert Van Der Hilst/Getty Images; 692 TL, Masterfile; 692 TR, Keith Dannemiller/Corbis; 692 B, AP Photo/Joe Marquette; 693 both, FRANK POLICH/Reuters /Landov; 696, Bobby Bank/Wirelmage/Getty Images; 700, Ed Kashi/Corbis; 702, Chip Bok/Cartoonist Group; 703, Bob Thaves/Cartoonist Group; 704, Free Agents Limited/Corbis.

UNIT 7 Page 705, AP Photo/Toby Talbot; 706-707, AP Photo/John David Mercer, Pool; 708 both, Kara Stokes; 709 both, public domain; 710 L, AP Photo/Eckehard Schulz; 710 M, AP Photo/Kevin P. Casey; 710 R, VisionsofAmerica/Joe Sohm; 711 L, Steven Puetzer/Getty Images; 711 M, Jeff Greenberg / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 711 R, capt.digby / Alamy; 714 both, AP Photo/Richmond Times-Dispatch, Bob Brown; 715 L, AP Photo/Ric Feld; 715 R, AP Photo/Doug Dreyer; 716 L, Somos Images/Corbis; 716 R, AP Photo/The Hawk Eye, John Lovretta; 720 both, AP Photo/Bob Child; 722, © 2003 Monte Wolverton/Cagle Cartooons. All rights reserved.; 727 both, Alan Klehr/Getty Images; 728 L, Ruaridh Stewart/ Ruaridh Stewart/ZUMA/Corbis; 728 R, David Young-Wolff / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 730, Michael Kelley/Getty Images; 732 L, AP Photo/Jim McKnight; 732 R, AP Photo/Ric Feld; 733, Pearson Education/PH School Division; 734, Corbis; 735, Leo Cullum/The Cartoon Bank, Inc.; 738, J.B. Handelsman/The Cartoon Bank, Inc.; 740-741, AP Photo/Matt Rourke; 742 both, First Light/Corbis;
743, Jeff Greenberg / Photo Edit -- All Rights Reserved.; 744 T, AP Photo/ Charles Rex Arbogast; 744 B, photocritic.org / Alamy; 747 both, Google;

749 both, Andre Jenny / Alamy; 750, Photo by Scott Olson/Getty Images; 754 L, Michael Freeman/Corbis; 754 M, Panoramic Images/Getty Images; 754 R, VisionsofAmerica/Joe Sohm/Getty Images; 755, Bruce Forster/ Newscom; 756 both, Thomas Barwick/Digital Vision/Getty Images; 757 TR, Beth A. Keiser/Beth A. Keiser/Corbis; 757 BL, Andersen Ross/Stockbyte/ Getty Images; 757 BR, Ed Kashi/Corbis; 758, AP Photo/Angela Rowlings; 760 TL, WoodyStock / Alamy; 760 TR, AP Photo/Paul Sakuma; 760 B, AP Photo/Steve Yeater; 761 both, AP Photo/The Tennessean, Sanford Myers; 763 TR, Wes Thompson/Corbis; 763 BL, Momentum Creative Group / Alamy; 763 BR, Ruaridh Stewart/ZUMA/Corbis; 765 L, Steve Dunwell/The Image Bank/Getty Images; 765 R, David Young-Wolff / Photo Edit -- All rights reserved.; 768, Chip Bok/Cartoonist Group; 769, Mike Marland, Concord Monitor; 770, Free Agents Limited/Corbis.

END MATTER 772-773, Jose Luis Pelaez, Inc./Corbis; 774 L, Christie's Images/Corbis; 774 ML, Bettmann/Corbis; \(\mathbf{7 7 4}\) M, Corbis; 774 MR, Corbis; 774 R, Bettmann/Corbis; 775 L, Bettmann/Corbis; 775 ML, Bettmann/ Corbis; 775 M, Corbis; 775 MR, Wally McNamee/Corbis; 775 R, Courtesy barackobama.com;780, Time Life Pictures/Mansell/Time Life Pictures/Getty Images; 781, King John signing the Magna Carta reluctantly (colour litho), Michael, A.C. (fl.1903-28) / Private Collection, The Stapleton Collection
/ The Bridgeman Art Library; \(\mathbf{7 8 2}\) L, Three Lions/Getty Images; 782 R, The Granger Collection, New York; 783, Ceiling of the Painted Hall, detail of King William III (1650-1702) and Queen Mary II (1662-94) Enthroned, 1707-14 (see 208087), Thornhill, Sir James (1675-1734) / Royal Naval College, Greenwich, London, UK, Photo: James Brittain / The Bridgeman Art Library; 784, The Granger Collection, New York; 785, The Bridgeman Art Library/Getty Images; 786, The Granger Collection, New York; 789, The Granger Collection, New York; 792, The Granger Collection, New York; 795, The Granger Collection, New York; 796, James Madison (1751-1836) (colour litho), American School, (19th century) / Private Collection, Peter Newark American Pictures / The Bridgeman Art Library; 799, Stock Montage/Stock Montage/Getty Images; 802, The Bridgeman Art Library/Getty Images; 804, MPI/Getty Images; 805, Stock Montage/Stock Montage/Getty Images; 807 L, National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution / Art Resource, NY; 807 R, The Granger Collection, New York; 808, Roosevelt (1882-1945) c. 1941 (photo), American Photographer, (20th century) / Private Collection, Peter Newark American Pictures / The Bridgeman Art Library; 809, Tai Power Seeff/The Image Bank/Getty Images.

\section*{Text Acknowledgments}

Grateful acknowledgment is made to the following for copyrighted material:
The Associated Press "Major Provisions of the Lobbying Bill" by The Associated Press from http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/ article/2006/03/29/AR2006032901950.html.
"School's Integration Legacy Looms Large" by Andrew DeMillo, The Associated Press from http://www.usatoday.com/news/nation/2007-09 22 -littlerock_N.htm. Copyright © 2008 The Associated Press. Used by permission.

League of Women Voters "Ethics and Lobbying Reform" from http://www. wv.org/AM/Template.cfm?Section=Lobby_Reform_and_Ethics. Copyright © 2008 The League of Women Voters of the United States. Used by permission

The Honorable Lee H. Hamilton "Whose Team Should a Member of Congress Be On?" by Lee H. Hamilton from http://www.centeroncongress org/radio_commentaries/whose_team.php. Copyright © Lee Hamilton. Used by permission.

The New York Times "Fewer Youths Jump Behind the Wheel at 16" by Mary M. Chapman and Micheline Maynard from The New York Times, February 25th, 2008. Copyright © 2008 by The New York Times. All rights reserved. Used by permission and protected by the Copyright Laws of the United States. The printing, copying, redistributing, or retransmission of the Material without express written permission is prohibited.
The Oakland Tribune "Don't Balance California's State Budget by Raising Taxes" from The Oakland Tribune, January 2nd, 2008. Copyright © The Oakland Tribune/Zuma Press. Used by permission.
The Sacramento Bee "A new Gl bill for a new generation of veterans" from The Sacramento Bee, May 26th, 2008. Copyright © The Sacramento Bee Used by permission conveyed through Copyright Clearance Center.
"If you're into pain, you'll love this state budget" from The Sacramento Bee, January 11, 2008. Copyright © The Sacramento Bee.

The San Francisco Chronicle "Homeless project's army of citizens calls year success" by Kevin Fagan from The San Francisco Chronicle, October 19th, 2005. Copyright © The San Francisco Chronicle. Used by permission.

Writers House "I have a dream" by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Copyright © 1963 Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.; copyright © renewed 1991 Coretta Scott King. Used by arrangement with The Heirs to the Estate of Martin Luther King Jr., c/o Writers House as agent for the proprietor New York, NY.

Note: Every effort has been made to locate the copyright owner of material reproduced on this component. Omissions brought to our attention will be corrected in subsequent editions.

\section*{Teacher's Edition Photo Acknowledgments}

Page TO, Hollingsworth/Photodisc/Getty Images, inc.; T2, Courtesy Dan M. Shea; T3, Tom Carter/PhotoEdit Inc.; T6 L, istockphoto.com; T6 R, Pearson Education, screenshot; T8, Courtesy Grant Wiggins; T10, L. Clarke/Corbis; T14, Neil Overy/Getty Images, Inc.; T16, istockphoto.com/René Mansi; T17, William Casey/Shutterstock, Inc.; T19, Michael Newman / PhotoEdit; T20, istockphoto.com; T21, Michael Newman / PhotoEdit; T23, istockphoto.com Chris Schmidt; T24, istockphoto.com/René Mansi; T26 L, istockphoto.com/ Joshua Blake; T26 M, istockphoto.com/Chris Schmid, T26R, istockphoto. com/Chris Schmidt; T33, Jose Luis Pelaez, Inc./Corbis.```

[^0]:    .2.
    The Supreme Court has ruled that "a police oflition," State of Arizona v. Camt,

[^1]:    Answers
    Analyzing Cartoons competing views and interests

[^2]:    WebQuest
    online The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking about the origins of American government.

[^3]:    11 Not enough States were represented on the date Congress had set, May 14, to begin the meeting. The delegates who wer hand.
    12 The Rhode Island legislature was controlled by the soft-money forces, mosty debtors and small farmers, who were helped by inflation and so were against a stronger central government The New Hampshire delegation,

[^4]:    14 The Virginia Plan's major support came from the three most populous States: Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts. New York was then only the fifth most populous State.

[^5]:    18 Neither North Carolina nor Rhode Island had ratified the new Constitution before it became effective. The Constitution failed in a first convention in North Carolina and was finaly approved by a second one in late Novmber 17 Mas. 1790 Tre Distict of lumbid 1
    cof Columbia did not become the nation's capital until 1800 .

[^6]:    WebQuest
    online The chapter WebQuest challenges students to answer the chapter Essential Question by asking them about the Constitution.

[^7]:    Answers
    Checkpoint by vetoing an act of Congress

